PS404

Organisational Social Psychology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tom Reader QUE.3.10 and Dr Lucia Garcia QUE.3.23

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Social Psychology and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course addresses both the social psychology of organisations and social psychological processes within organisations. It also provides multidisciplinary coverage of the organisational contexts in which social psychologists may work in a variety of professional domains. A basic familiarity with social psychological methods is assumed, but their application within organisational processes and contexts will be examined in detail within the course. Issues and techniques in organisational analysis, discourse, decision-making and change management are covered with emphasis on their social psychological aspects.

Lectures/seminars in the MT: These will cover key social psychological concepts and theories and their application to the understanding of organisations and the implementation of change processes. The specific topics covered include: 1) Introduction: critique of the tradition and logic underlying organisational psychology; history and frameworks in organisational analysis; "Scientific" management; Taylorism and Fordism; the Human Relations movement and the Socio-Technical approach; 2) Frameworks for analysis: for example, the cultural image of organisations; culture and identity in organisations; power, knowledge and organising; 3) People organising: for example, motivation; work groups and teams; decision-making; leadership, networking and collaborative work; 4) Implications for practice: for example, managing organisational change.

Professional Seminar Series in the MT: These will centre on discussion of practical and research applications in domains where organisational social psychological investigation and analysis may play a leading role. Each topic will be presented by an external expert working practically in the domain.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Students taking PS404 will also be required to attend PS443A lectures 10 x 120 minutes (MT) and seminars/discussion groups 9 x 60 minutes (MT).

Formative coursework: Formative essay to be submitted in MT.

Indicative reading: Reading lists on specific topics will be distributed during the course. Texts which are recommended for general use throughout the course are: S Clegg & C Handy, Studying Organisations: Theory and Method, Sage, 1998; E H Schein, Organisational Psychology (3rd edn), Prentice Hall, 1988; G Morgan, Images of Organisation (2nd edn), Sage, 1997; A Bryman (Ed), Doing Research in Organisations, Routledge, 1988; Hosking, D.-M., & Morley, I. Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students from all departments may attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the teacher responsible

Course content: The course demonstrates the importance of a Political Psychological perspective for the understanding of intercultural relations in general, with a particular focus on multiculturalism, politicised identities, ideologies of nationalism, racialised poverty, institutionalised discrimination and intercultural dialogue. The central issues we shall examine across an array of contexts are: what is the connection between politics and psychology within everyday encounters; what is the relevance of politics in intercultural relations and for systems of everyday knowledge about belonging, nationhood and cultural communities; what are the psychological consequences of exclusion, discrimination and inequality; what are the psychological processes involved in systems of social and political change? Theories of social representations, identity, discourse, contact, acculturation, community resilience and reconciliation shall be covered. Lecturers aim to achieve a balance between theoretical and applied issues, in the interests of critically investigating the ways in which conceptual tools can enhance our own understanding of intercultural relations and systems of inequality, and also contribute to broader social and political debates. We aim to establish an account of intercultural relations that connects the political (the ideological, the structural, the discursive) and the psychological (identity, representation and agency). We apply this critical political psychological account of production and consequences of cultural difference to the contexts of politics, community, education and everyday life in general, and examine the possibilities for productive intercultural contact, dialogue and engagement.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A written assignment (maximum 1000 words). This will consist of an outline and short section of the summative assignment.

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sandra Jovchelovitch QUE.3.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on social representation as a theory in social and cultural psychology and as phenomena in social life. It explores concepts, empirical studies and fields of application of social representations. The course aims to equip students with in-depth understanding of the production, transformation and contestation of representations in public spheres. Through an examination of concepts and key studies in the field, the course explores the dynamics of social thinking and the power of representations to construct meanings and social realities. It highlights process of communication and contestation between different knowledge systems and the dynamics of social change. The course covers: 1) origins and theoretical roots of social representations in the field of socio-cultural psychology and situated cognition; 2) processes and functions of social representation, including dialogicality, cognitive polyphasia, relating to the unfamiliar, semantic enablers and barriers, and the future of common sense vis-a-vis systemic encroachment and artificial intelligence; and 3) ongoing research on how communities think and the transformation of common sense in contemporary societies, in areas such as self and community, cultural encounters/cultural conflict, health, professional practices, urban transformations, social exclusion (these can vary depending on research at hand).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

PS418 Half Unit Health Communication

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Sheehy-Skeffington QUE.3.20

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender,

Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course centres on the application of social psychology to the challenge of health communication in a global context. While considering both health and communication in their widest sense, it focuses primarily on the practice of health promotion and its conceptual underpinnings. We will begin with an introduction to health psychology and expert-led approaches to health communication, before moving on to consider health and illness in their wider social and societal context. The final section of the course considers community development and social justice approaches that put empowerment and participation at their centre, enabling us to close with a critical yet hopeful appraisal of the future of health communication. Throughout, we will view the individual as a bio-psycho-social system, located within families, workplaces, communities, local and global cultures, unequal power hierarchies, and rapidly changing social settings. Through lectures, readings and seminar discussions, we will encounter theoretical debates about determinants of health and health-related behaviours, the nature of health communication, and the processes through which communication impacts on health. At the same time, we will consider the implications of these debates for health promotion campaigns and policies, learning about real-world examples through guest lectures, and gaining hands-on experience in designing and critiquing health communication campaigns through practical exercises.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Knowledge Processes in Organizations

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lucia Garcia-Lorenzo QUE.3.23

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course focuses on the processes of knowing and learning to examine the varied ways in which people work together in a number of contexts, from project teams within single organisations to inter-organisational partnerships, networks and alliances. It offers students' a theoretical and practical understanding about how organisations construct, disseminate and share knowledge in those settings.

Concretely, the course addresses the following questions: 1) What is organisational knowledge? Lectures will explore the differences and overlaps between personal, social/organisational and cultural knowledge and between the processes of learning and knowing. 2) How do we create new knowledge in organisations? To answer this question we will look into processes of learning, creativity, innovation and entrepreneurship. 3) How can we efficiently share/transmit knowledge in organisations? The course will address the challenges generated through the use of new technologies in the work place, the use of stories and narratives as a mode of knowledge transmission, the development of collaborative practices, power relations in organisations, etc. 4) How do we 'store' and use current organisational and personal knowledge? To answer this question lectures will address the uses of organisational history and memory as well as look into how we practice knowledge in every day organisational work.

The focus of the course is both theoretical and practical. Students' will be expected to engage with both current theoretical debates and emerging practical issues in organisational life.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Students will be expected to make extended use of the course intranet - for on-line discussions and group presentations.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Corporate Communications

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ben Shenoy, QUE.3.13.

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology, MSc in Social and Public Communication and MiM Exchange. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students from other programmes may access this course subject to availability.

Course content: The different activities encompassed by the concept of corporate communication affect each one of us in various guises: as employees, customers, citizens, investors or, more generally, as observers of today's world. It is therefore essential to develop a critical understanding of the different practices associated with corporate communication. Future practitioners also need this critical perspective so as to understand better the challenges involved in the development and implementation of corporate communication programmes. The objectives of the course are two-fold: 1) to provide an introduction to corporate communication, here understood as a set of activities undertaken by organisations in order to establish favourable corporate images and reputations with all of an organisation's stakeholder groups; and 2) to underline how a better understanding of key social psychological concepts can contribute to the overall management and effectiveness of organisations and corporate communication.

This course is designed to apply relevant social psychological theory to gain insight into the changing world of corporate communication.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

PS439 Half Unit

Science, Technology and Resistance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer QUE.3.17

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Tarde (1980) famously argued that creativity and invention have none or little regularity, while the diffusion of new ideas and practices follows the 'laws of imitation'. This idea remains very influential in the models of diffusion of innovation and the linear model of science translated into technical engineering and marketing. The course will examine critically how this model is only valid when there is no or little resistance in the process which, however, is rare. More common are efforts of techno-scientific mobilisations that encounter resistance, and resistance changes the process by focussing attention where needed; enhancing the 'collective we-image', evaluating on-going efforts of mobilisation and urging strategic adaptation and delays to the plan. We will explore various conceptions of 'resistance' across the social sciences and develop the functional analogue to 'pain' in relation to collective activity (Bauer, 1991, 1995 and 2015). In this light, we will examine public resistance, public engagement with science and its debates and impact on the developments of nuclear power, genetic engineering and information technology leading into current mobilisations for Nanotechnology, synthetic life forms, and robotic automation.

Students are expected to appreciate theory driven empirical research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

PS443 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17

Societal Psychology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Campbell QUE.3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is a compulsory component of courses: PS400 Contemporary Social and Cultural Psychology; PS404 Organisational and Social Psychology; and PS429 The Social Psychology of Communication.

Course content: What is the relevance of Societal Psychology for social science? How is it useful for the study of organisations, intercultural relations, health, community development and communication? Each week we tackle key debates for the social sciences through an examination of central theories in Societal Psychology. For example we ask: How is human consciousness possible? Is intergroup conflict inevitable? Are there cultural differences in how we think? Do we practice what we preach? Can a minority change the opinions of a majority? Do certain organisations produce good leaders? Would designing social spaces differently change social behaviour? These questions are addressed through the introduction of the main theories of Societal Psychology, theories on consciousness, social identity, intergroup relations, attitudes and behaviour, social representations, social influence, language, leadership and social design. The course is aimed at MSc students with little or no background in Societal Psychology but will also include advanced material and critiques for students who want to study topics in-depth.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars/discussion groups in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the MT.

This material is assessed wholly by MCQ which will count for 25% of the overall grades on these core courses; these courses also have their own, specific essay-based assessments which will count for 75% of their overall grades.

PS445 Half Unit

Organisational and Social Decision Making

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cormac Bryce QUE.3.13 and Dr Thomas Reader QUE.3.10

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology, MSc in Social and Public Communication and MiM Exchange. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible.

Course content: This course teaches on theory and research from the field of organisational and social decision-making. It is primarily focused on high-risk organisational settings, and explores contexts where there is uncertainty, high-consequences for failure, and complex social systems. PS445 provides a historical introduction to decision-making, and introduces the core concepts used by social psychologists to understand (and improve) decision-making processes in organisations. It draws upon the social, cognitive and organisational psychology literatures, and considers the core concepts and tools used to understand, research, and support decision-making in organisations. These theories and tools are contextualized through empirical and case study examples taken from domains such as finance, healthcare, the energy industry, government, and the military. Students will be encouraged to take a critical perspective, and to consider how the principles taught on the course can be applied to (and used to improve) a variety of social or organisational scenarios. The course will cover psychology (or 'Human Factors') concepts such as: intuitive and analytical forms of decision-making, individual traits and cognitive factors that influence decision-makers (e.g. biases and emotions), human error and decision-failures, rule breaking, and group decision-making processes (e.g. teamwork, leadership). It will teach on methods for analysing decision errors, identifying decision-making competencies, observing decision-making, and supporting group decision processes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

Issues in Organizational and Social Psychology: Organizational Life

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Barry Rogers, QUE.3.13 and Ms Elsbeth Johnson, QUE.3.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible. This course is capped at 25 students.

Course content: In recent years, much has been made of the demise of the traditional work organisation and with it, traditional organisational life. In popular rhetoric, globalisation, the rise of the knowledge economy, ICT and the credit crunch have all trumpeted the dawn of a very different world. The reality of the situation would seem to be far more complex.

So how do we understand and explain this complexity? This basic question has prompted huge soul searching within the social sciences as comfortable assumptions about the analysis of our world have been shown wanting. For many the current behavioural 'turn' throughout many of our disciplines act as an alternative lens for making sense of our reality - this has as its core the tools and approaches of social psychology.

The aim of the course is to give a social psychological perspective on the elements of continuity and change surrounding contemporary organisational life. It will focus in particular on the blurring of boundaries within our key organizational relationships: with employees, customers, clients, and stakeholders. Its primary objective is to facilitate students in developing a critical and reflective understanding of these emerging processes.

The course is informed throughout by a dual mandate. A rigorous approach to theory will be developed within the context of contemporary organisational issues, and current topics of debate. This essential relationship between theory and practice is a central feature of the course - outside speakers and practitioners are used throughout to supplement the learning for each topic and various forms of social media are employed to connect with an extended community of practice.

The course will address emerging organisational questions such as: Perspectives: how do we make sense of the complexity of organisational life?

Why do we work? How do different generations engage with work?

The rise of the BlackBerry: have we moved from the workplace to the 24/7 workspace?

Organisational time: is work life-balance a pipe dream?

After multiculturalism where now for organisational equality, diversity and inclusion?

Corporate Social Responsibility: how do organisations relate to wider stakeholders?

Customer, client or 'partner'? Co-creation as the dynamic for growth.

Beyond the 'ivory tower': how do we relate organisational theory to practice?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One formative piece of coursework to be submitted in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed references and class topics are distributed in the first lecture of the series. The following represents some key readings from the course:

Cognition and Culture

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bradley Franks QUE.3.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World), MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines recent directions in research relating to the relationships between mind and culture.

Specific content will include a variety of theoretical issues, for example: relationships between social facts and psychological facts; naturalistic and non-naturalistic concepts of culture; symbolic culture; cultural relativity and universals; evolutionary and developmental constraints on the relations between mind and culture; communication, cultural transmission and change. These issues will be discussed with reference to specific domains of investigation, such as: emotions, representations of religion, race and natural kinds; pragmatics and communication; and social divisions of labour in meaning and representation, including deference and expertise.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Will consist of a formative essay plan.

Indicative reading: Detailed references and a synopsis of lectures and class topics are distributed in the first lecture of the series, and are available in S315 and in Outlook/Public Folders/ Departments/Social Psychology. ## PS456 Half Unit Consumer Psychology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saadi Lahlou QUE.3.26

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped.

Course content: The objectives of the course are: 1) to provide students with an understanding of the social psychological and cognitive processes behind the consumption of goods and services; 2) to point at alternative modes of relationship with users/ consumers than the current ones which are based on market and competition; and 3) to prepare students to build better business models or the sustainable provision of goods and services. The course will address the social psychology of consumption at different levels of analysis: individual, group and societal. It will provide students with psycho-social theories which explain phenomena classically described in marketing and consumer science. It will also explore and present new and innovative research methods and business models.

This is not a standard marketing or consumer research course, it is oriented towards changing the world to a better place rather than moving brand territories and market shares. The students will learn how to analyse a consumption process and change the business models and providers' platforms to improve the world.

The narrative: the current consumer society and its Production Consumption System (PCS) are not sustainable. Happiness measures show that high happiness is not correlated with high GNP. There is a possibility for another PCS where happiness comes more from social factors and less from material consumption.

Changing the system is difficult because one must not only find new ways of consuming, but also a transition path which enables current suppliers to get to another regime.

There are however a series of emerging alternative models. The rise of multi-sided procurement platforms, especially using digital technologies, enables new models where sociability can be used to leverage schemes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Essay plan submitted in the LT.

Additional readings will be recommended throughout the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The assignment is understood as part of the learning, to provide the transferable skills of analysing a real case and making sound recommendations to make the world a better place. In the first part, 'memorandum' (1,000 words), you will be asked to prepare a memorandum to the head of an organisation of your choice, with recommendations that make the business of that organisation more sustainable. The recommendations must be realistic. In the second part of the essay, 'justification' (2,000 words), you will justify the specific recommendations presented in the memorandum with reference to social psychological and consumer psychology literature and concepts. You can read examples of previous years assignments at www.lse.ac.uk/DPBS/videos/PS456.aspx. The best essays are sent to the CEOs.

PS458 Half Unit Creativity and Innovation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alex Gillespie QU.3.05

Availability:

This course is available to any graduate student within the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students' on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: An undergraduate degree in a social science related discipline or equivalent.

Course content: This course examines creativity and innovation from a social psychological standpoint. The first lectures of the course examine creativity, focusing on the social conditions which lead to new ideas. Then we will examine the way in which new ideas and technologies are instituted and resisted. The role of play and materiality in creative production are discussed next, followed by creative problem solving and the societal transmission of innovation. The course will end with a focus on societal creativity, utopias and imagining the future. Guiding questions will be: How do new ideas and technologies come about? What social contexts are conducive to creativity and innovation? Can the resistance to innovation lead to innovation? What is the human imagination? Why do humans enjoy play, games and fiction? What leads to insightful problem solving? How does perspective-taking help us understand if something new is creative, productive or useful? The course will cover the social conditions (i.e., face-to-face or online, one-to-one or group, autocratic or democratic, specialisation or integration, etc.) conducive to creativity and innovation, including the social conditions for socialisation creative individuals and the social and institutional factors which enable productive novelty to be recognised and instituted. Specific topics will include: theories of creativity, play & imagination, insight and problem solving, identifying good ideas, materiality, cultural evolution, the resistance to innovation, user innovation, utopias and how people imagine the future.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

PS461 Not available in 2016/17 Health, Community and Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Campbell STC.303 and Dr Jenevieve Mannell STC.367

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Community and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the psycho-social determinants of community health and social development, in the context of health inequalities and social marginalisation in the global North and South. In particular it explores the role of participation, partnerships and collective action in facilitating health, well-being, the management of illness (including prevention, service access, care and treatment) and health-enabling social change. Attention is given to promoting behaviours that facilitate both physical and mental health and well-being more generally, viewing health as a phenomenon that spans the individual, community and social levels of analysis.

The challenges of facilitating health, and health-enhancing collective action, are explored with reference to social identities, social representations and local knowledge, dialogue, empowerment, critical thinking, gender, social capital and social change. All this material is contextualised within wider debates about the global nature of public health, mainstream vs. alternative development policy, the respective roles of local and global social movements, and the potential for participation to alleviate the negative health impacts of social inequalities. Particular attention is given to the links between health and inequalities related to poverty, gender and sexuality, ethnicity, age (children and the elderly) and disability.

The over-riding ethos of the course is an interest in the links between theory and practice. Attention is given to providing students with actionable conceptual tools for the challenges of designing and evaluating community-focused programmes in the fields of public health, health promotion and health-supporting social transformation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: A mini-essay submitted in MT.

PS462 Half Unit Theory and Practice of Organisational Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caryn Solomon QUE.3.13

Ajit Menon, QUE.3.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The organisation is a social system that is complex, dynamic and ever changing. This course attempts to explore the management of organisational change and development in a practical way. It does this by recognising that there are research-based methodologies for ensuring that the potential inherent in change is harnessed, and that the capacity and potential of the organisation, in the pursuit of a broad range of organisational objectives, are enabled. While it is informed by a number of key theoretical frameworks, Organisation Development comes into its own in application. The aim of the course, therefore, is two fold: first to explore the body of core theory underpinning the practice; second, to examine the practice of Organisation Development as a 'process' (not a 'product' or a 'programme') which fundamentally influences and is influenced by the specific organisational context within which it takes place. Drawing on key theoretical frameworks and the approaches of major practitioners, the course also examines a range of current, best practice socio-psychological interventions. Students will be actively encouraged to relate key theoretical perspectives to organisational challenges covering a range of contemporary issues and contexts.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: C Argyris, On Organisational Learning (Malden, Mass: Blackwell Business, 1999); Richard Beckhard, Organisational Development: Strategies and Models (Reading, Mass. Addison-Wesley Publishing Co, Inc, 1969); W Bennis, K Benne & R Chin, The Planning of Change, (New York: Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 4th edn, 1984); P Checkland, Systems Thinking, Systems Practice (Chichester: Wiley, 1981); W Isaacs, Dialogue and the Art of Thinking Together (New York: Doubleday 1999); P R Lawrence & J W Lorsch, Developing Organisations: Diagnosis and Action (Reading, Mass. Addison-Wesley Publishing Co, Inc, 1988); Edgar Schein, Organisational Culture and Leadership (San Francisco: Jossey Bass, 1992)

Assessment: Presentation (45%), essay (45%) and 10% class participation in the LT.

PS464 Half Unit Social Influence

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer QUE.3.17

This is taught jointly with Dr Gordon Sammut, Lecturer at University of Malta, and Visiting Fellow to the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health,

Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course is primarily intended for MSc and PhD students in Social Psychology, in particular those who follow PS429 Social Psychology of Communication or equivalent core modules in Social Psychology. But, conditional to available space, it will be open to any interested MSc or Research Student from across the school.

Course content: This course explores the many modes and modalities of social influence which social psychology has studied and developed concepts for. Modalities of social influence cover processes by which social groups and actors normalise, assimilate and accommodate private and public opinion, attitudes, social stereotypes, institute normative expectations and ways of life, and achieve recognition and social change. We will discuss the social psychological traditions such as rhetoric, crowd behaviour, public opinion, leadership, norms, opinion and attitude formation, majority and minority influence, resistance and obedience to authority, dual-processes of persuasion, mass media effect models; fait-accompli, inter-subjectivity and inter-objectivity. This discussion will unfold under three parallel perspectives: 1) the theoretical and empirical grounding of influence models; 2) the socio-historical context of their formulation, many models came out of WWII and Cold War; and 3) in the mirror of current formulations which often deploy new language without necessarily treading new ground. The course will discuss current ideas and models in comparison with canonical paradigms in order to assess 'real progress' of what often seems 'old wine in new bottles'. The course builds a theoretical integration of modalities of influence in the 'cycle of normativity and common sense' including the normalisation, assimilation and accommodation of social diversity (Sammut & Bauer, 2011). The moral ambiguity of social influence treads a fine line between promoting wellbeing and social recognition, and manipulating beliefs, opinion and attitudes. This raises ethical issues involved in the study and exercise of social influence in the modern public spheres.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Teaching arrangement: the course will be taught as a combination of weekly lecture and discussion seminar. Participants are expected to prepare at least one seminar discussion.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT. Participants will contribute to the reading seminars with a presentation, and they will be able to present an essay plan for formative feedback before the end of term.

Indicative reading: Some key references:

Each session will have its own particular readings, separated in essential texts and additional readings. This will be revised on an annual basis. No one book covers the entire syllabus; students' will be expected to read widely in appropriate journals, and a list of references will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in April.

PS465

Psychology of Economic Life

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saadi Lahlou QU 3.26

Additional teacher(s): Dr Frédéric Basso QU 3.1.4 and Dr Michael Muthukrishna QU 3.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Psychology of Economic Life. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Human activity is goal-oriented and social; it is evaluated at individual level in terms of emotions and well-being.–a heritage of our Primate nature. Humans have now grown outside of the initial "natural" ecological condition of small tribes of hunters-gatherers to which their body and psyche were adapted. They have socially constructed socio-economic systems ("Production-Consumption Systems" –PCS). In these PCS, individual satisfaction and resources are obtained through participating into a labor division following institutional rules. While this institutionalized system enables canalizing positively some explosive characteristics of humans (competition, hierarchy, preference for the present etc.), the growth of such PCS in a limited world poses urgent problems of sustainability.

Some of the most blatant limitations to the current system come from human drives (competition, aggression, desire for more, inter-group rivalry, short-termism, etc.).

The problem addressed by the Psychology of Economic Life is therefore to explore new ways of constructing sustainable PCS, and to manage the transition from the current state to a more sustainable one. This exploration must be informed by a realistic psychology, which is the object of this course.

Teaching: The course is delivered in Michaelmas Term over 10 lectures of 1.5h (2 per week, over weeks 1 to 5); 5 weekly seminar sessions of 1.5 hours (weekly over weeks 1 to 5) and three special seminar sessions of 3 hours (weeks 7, 8, 9). Students taking PS465 will also be required to attend PS443A lectures, 10 x 120 mins (MT), and 9 x 60 mins seminars/discussion groups (MT).

Lectures:

Week 1:

Lecture 1: Introductory lecture. Course narrative [SL]

Lecture 2: Societal psychology, economics and installation theory [SL]
Week 2

Lecture 3: Organisations and Markets [FB]

Lecture 4: The cognitive side of economic life (1): From procedural rationality to heuristics in decision-making [FB]

Week 3:

Lecture 5: Games and economic behaviour. [MM]

Lecture 6: Formal institutions, social institutions, norms, and rules. [MM]

Week 4

Lecture 7: Distributed cognition and activity theory [SL]

Lecture 8: The socio-cognitive side of economic life: Thinking about other individuals [FB]

Week 5:

Lecture 9: Transactions and platforms: what is exchanged in interaction? [SL]

Lecture 10: Change processes: principles, forms; theories and practice [SL]

The lectures will be delivered in weeks 1 to 5 so the weeks from 6 to 10 can be used to prepare the case that will be used for the essay.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 quiz and 1 mini-essay in the Michaelmas Term.

The Quiz will be a multiple choice question formative exam (based on content of PS443A).

Indicative reading: There is no single text for PS465 but one may find the following texts useful. Barkow, J., Cosmides, L., & Tooby, J. Assessment: Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour) in the LT week 0. Essay (75%, 5000 words) in the MT.

The exam is a seated Multiple Choice Question based on PS443A. The exam is individual.

The essay is written in groups.

Assessment is part of the learning process. Students must demonstrate their knowledge of theories learned in the course, and apply them to analyse a real case of economic phenomenon (business model, organization, public policy...) -and eventually propose realistic recommendations for an improvement of sustainability. The case must be different from cases studied in the option courses, and from the dissertation. This work is collective. The students will be assembled in groups and produce a case study collectively.

Both assessments are prepared by an unmarked formative.

PS497

Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Frederic Basso QUE.3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation is an empirical investigation, carried out by the student, under the supervision of a member of staff. Research topics and methodologies vary considerably, but they must relate to the student's MSc Programme. All dissertation topics will need to be approved by a supervisor who is a faculty member of the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science. By the end of the Michaelmas Term students will be introduced to the Dissertation module and members of staff will outline the research areas in which they would be keen to supervise projects. In the first instance students should approach the member of staff whom they would like to be supervised by. Students then submit a Dissertation Plan, outlining their project, and the supervisor who they have discussed the project with. Students are then allocated to supervisors. The supervisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography, and provide feedback on the research.

Teaching: 16 hours across LT and ST consisting of group supervision, workshops and related research activities.

Formative coursework: Students will receive formative feedback from their supervisor on the following coursework (1,000 words): 1) A Dissertation Plan 2) A Dissertation Progress Report

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

PS4A5

Methods for Social Psychology Research: Qualitative and Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bradley Franks QUE.3.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

All components of this course are compulsory for students' taking degree programmes in the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science.

Course content: This course is for all MSc students' in the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science. It will:

1) provide an overview of methodological issues for Social Psychological research; 2) cover core skills in research design in Social Psychology; and 3) provide training in core Social Psychological methods of analysing quantitative and qualitative data. By the end of the course as a whole, students' will be equipped with methodological skills that will enable them to conduct empirical research for their MSc dissertation and possibly research after the MSc.

Teaching: All teaching takes place in the MT. The course has three components: 1) PS4AA which consists of 10 hours of teaching on methodological issues and research design, including a new MY course on the designing of experiments and questionnaires; 2) MY421M Qualitative Research Methods; and 3) MY465 Intermediate Quantitative Course

Formative coursework: Students will follow the formative work requirements on the MY course(s) that they take under each stream.

Indicative reading: Bauer, M. and Gaskell, G. (2000) Qualitative researching with text, image and sound - a practical handbook London, Sage Breakwell, G. Foot, H. and Gilmour. (1988) Doing Social Psychology: Laboratory and Field Exercises. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. Miell, D. and Wetherwell, M. (1998) Doing Social Psychology. Milton Keynes: Open University Press.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the MT, LT and ST.

Students will be assessed according to the elements of teaching that they take on this course (see 'teaching' information provided).

The Psychology Department Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Sanjay Muthukrishna QUE.3.15 and Dr Jennifer Sheehy-Skeffington

Availability: Open to staff and graduate students in the Institute.

Course content: Papers will be presented by outside speakers, staff and PhD students.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT. 12 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: no assessment

SA403

Criminal Justice Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Newburn OLD.2.40A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will be capped at 30 students with preference given to MSc Criminal Justice Policy students and then those on other MSc programmes in the Department of Social Policy. Some places are available for those on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). Once core course allocations are made, the remaining places will be offered on a ballot basis.

Course content: The course provides a detailed and critical introduction to the study of criminal justice institutions, practices and participants. It begins with an introduction to the nature of crime and contemporary criminal justice policy. It then examines the main elements of modern criminal justice systems (police, courts, prisons, probation, the media, and private security). Special emphasis is given to current issues such as restorative justice and increasing rates of incarceration. The course combines up-to-date empirical work with theoretical perspectives and also emphasises the role of historical and comparative perspectives in understanding current trends.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Lectures: SA403.1 20 weekly one and a half hour lectures, MT and LT.

Seminars: SA403.2, 19 weekly one and a half hour seminars, MT and LT.

Workshop: SA403.3, 1 session of one and a half hours in MT

There will be a reading week in Weeks 6 of MT and LT.

There will be a revision session and mock exam in ST.

Formative coursework: Michaelmas Term – formative essay and one-to-one feedback. Summer term – mock exam (one question).

Indicative reading: There are two set texts for the course: M Maguire, R Morgan & R Reiner (eds.) (2012), The Oxford Handbook of Criminology, 5th edn; and T Newburn (2012), Criminology, 2nd edn.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

SA407 Half Unit Financing Health Care

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos COW.4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available on the MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a thorough grounding in health financing policy. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in European countries, but the general principles studied apply internationally. By the end of the course students will have:

- a grasp of the economic, political and philosophical concepts relevant to any discussion of health financing policy.
- a good understanding of how financing arrangements affect the achievement of key health financing policy goals such as financial protection, equity in financing and equity of access to health care, incentives for efficiency and quality in the organization and delivery of health services, administrative efficiency, transparency and accountability.
- the skills to critically assess current health financing arrangements and options for reform.
- an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. In addition there will be a two-hour revision session in the MT and a two-hour revision session in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will sit a one-hour progress test in the last seminar of term. This will involve writing an essay under exam conditions. Their seminar leader will mark the essay and provide a mark and written feedback by the beginning of the Lent Term.

Indicative reading: WHO, World Health Report 2010 - Health systems financing: the path to universal coverage (2010); E Mossialos, A Dixon, J Figueras & J Kutzin (eds), Funding health care: options for Europe, Open University Press (2002); J Kutzin, Health financing policy: a guide for decision-makers, World Health Organization (2008); T Rice, The economics of health reconsidered, Health Administration Press (3rd edn, 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA408 Half Unit Health Economics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Skellern OLD.2.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In allocating places in this course, students enrolled in the MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) have priority. Any remaining places are allocated on a first-come-first-served basis.

Course content: This course develops basic economic concepts as they are applied to the health sector, and provides for specialisation in health economics. Nature of health care as an economic commodity. How markets and insurance markets work, and how they can fail for health care and health care insurance. The economics of paying providers and different approaches taken by governments in different countries. Incentive mechanisms and Diagnostic Related Group payment schemes and yardstick competition. Labour markets in health care. Economic evaluation as a regulatory tool.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. Optional evening review classes in first half of MT. Revision session in the ST.

Formative coursework: In-class progress test in the MT.

Indicative reading: The course draws from a variety of textbooks and articles. A thorough reading list is provided at the start of term. The course makes repeated use of the following textbooks:

S Folland, A C Goodman & M Stano, The Economics of Health and Health Care (7th edn), Prentice Hall, 2012. J Bhattacharya, T Hyde & P Tu, Health Economics, Palgrave Macmillan, 2014. J Gruber, Public Finance and Public Policy (5th edn), Macmillan, 2016.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA409 Half Unit Social Security Policies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kitty Stewart OLD.2.36

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course analyses the purposes, design and impact of social security policies, meaning policies that protect and support household income at times when income from the labour market does not suffice. The need for social security arises both from demographic factors that affect nearly everyone during their life course – childhood, parenthood, old age – and from risk factors that will end up affecting only some – unemployment, sickness and disability. The course takes a comparative approach, examining differences in the design of social security policies across welfare regimes and drawing on examples from different countries. The focus is largely on industrialised countries, but the course also touches on issues arising in delivering social protection in other parts of the world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Seminar members will be expected to make one presentation to the seminar group and submit one written paper during the course of the term. Students will also be expected to come to seminars each week prepared to present on and debate the week's key readings.

Indicative reading: Basic reading for the course includes: R Walker, Social Security and Welfare: Concepts and Comparisons, Oxford University Press, 2005; J Millar (Ed), Understanding Social Security, 2nd ed. The Policy Press, 2009; J Dixon, Social Security in Global Perspective, Praeger, 1999; J Hills, Good Times, Bad Times: The Welfare Myth of Them and Us, Policy Press, 2014; ILO, World Social Protection Report 2014/15: Building Economic Recovery, Inclusive Development and Social Justice.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the LT.

SA427 Half Unit

Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have an understanding of basic Health Economics principles.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the economics of pharmaceutical markets and related policies that affect national and international markets broadly.

- To provide students with an understanding of basic features of pharmaceutical markets, how pharmaceutical markets work and how competition manifests itself in different parts of pharmaceutical markets.

- To illustrate to students how the pharmaceutical market is linked to the health care market, why it is often the focus of much regulation, and to help students understand the multidimensional goals of pharmaceutical policies.

- To introduce students to the economic and policy problems encountered in managing pharmaceutical markets and how to evaluate the impact of alternative policy approaches. The course will also give students some experience in critically evaluating the impact of policy on market outcomes.

- To facilitate consideration of various country-specific political, cultural and economic factors that may drive governments' approaches to pharmaceutical regulation. In this context, this course will help students consider the extent to which policies may be transferable.

- To enable students to analyse pharmaceutical markets from the perspectives of several main actors: governments, third party payers, the pharmaceutical industry, doctors, patients, pharmacists and wholesalers. Literature from Health Economics, Industrial Organisation and Health Policy will be incorporated into lectures, discussions and seminars.

- To introduce students to the economics of pricing and reimbursing pharmaceutical products, to explore different models of pricing and reimbursing medicines in OECD countries, including rate of return regulation, value-based pricing, cost-plus pricing, external price referencing and internal reference pricing, among others.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Plus scheduled revision session.

Formative coursework: A formative essay under exam conditions (1 question in 1 hour) will be a requirement and is to be submitted immediately after the revision session.

Understanding Social (Dis)advantage

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Emma Platt OLD 2.25

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is currently capped at 45 places. Offers of places will be made on the basis of applicants' statements. Initial priority for places is given to students on Social Policy MSc programmes. Students from departments other than the Department of Social Policy may be accepted onto a waiting list. Places remaining available three days before the start of the course will not be held back for late applicants from Social Policy programmes but offered to students from the waiting list.

Course content: This course focuses on the emergence of a range of concepts key to social policy relating to selective cumulative advantage and disadvantage in society, including concepts that supersede or complement classic concepts of poverty, such as social exclusion, capability deprivation, social immobility, social/cultural capital deficiency. It examines the uses of such concepts in both developing and industrialised countries. Topics addressed on the course may include - changes in inequality and their causes; the theoretical and empirical issues provoked by the 'underclass' debate; family change and disadvantage; long term unemployment and welfare-to-work; area segregation, housing and 'welfare ghettos'; ethnic division; disability; employment; education; crime; social exclusion and citizenship.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of submitting a formative essay.

Indicative reading: Basic reading list for the course includes: H

Dean & L Platt (eds), Social Advantage and Disadvantage, OUP, forthcoming; R Lister (Ed), Charles Murray and the Underclass: the developing debate, IEA, 1996; D Held and A Kaya (Eds), Global Inequality, Polity, 2007; J Hills et al (Eds), Understanding Social Exclusion, OUP, 2002; D. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA447 Half Unit Foundations of Health Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mrigesh Bhatia

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A comparative approach to the development of health and healthcare policies in high and low income countries, emphasising present and future policy options and problems. The course will examine the development and implementation of health policy. Theories of planning for setting priorities in health care are discussed and the politics and economics of health policy implementation are addressed. The course will also examine the changing role of the state and the role of international organisations in improving health status and influencing the policy agenda. The course concludes by examining some of the reforms currently taking place in the health sector.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Students will participate in presenting at least one seminar paper.

Formative coursework: Students will sit a mock written exam in the last seminar.

Indicative reading: L Berkman & I Kawachi (eds), Social Epidemiology, Oxford, OUP (2000); M Marmot & R Wilkinson (eds), Social Determinants of Health, New York, OUP (1999); D Leon & G Walt (eds), Poverty, Inequality and Health: An international perspective, OUP (2001); B Amick et al., Society and Health, OUP (1995); J Le Grand Motivation, Agency and Social Policy: Of Knights and Knaves, Pawns and Queens, OUP, (2006); K Sen (ed) Restructuring Health Services, Zed Books (2003); S Bennett, B McPake & A Mills (eds) Private Health Providers in Developing Countries: Serving the Public Interest, Zed Books (1997).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA451 Social Policy Research

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tania Burchardt 32LIF3.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped at 45 students. All students for whom the course is compulsory will be allocated a space. Any remaining places (of which there are usually several) will be allocated on the basis of the statements provided by students in their course choice form. This will be done on the Monday following the opening of the course choice system and every two days thereafter, until the course is full.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course equips students to critically assess the ways in which a wide range of research approaches are used in the study of social policy questions. This includes: an overview of the varied traditions and approaches to social policy research; Historical methods; Participatory research; Researching organisations; In depth interviews (especially with service users and clients); Evaluation of policy reform; Social experiments and pilots; Geographical methods; Social surveys and the analysis of large datasets; Longitudinal and life history analysis; Micro-simulation techniques; Systematic reviews and meta-analysis; and Comparative research. The relationship between research and policymaking is a theme that runs throughout the course.

Teaching: 12 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 12 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 15 minutes of help sessions in the LT. 2 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 15 minutes of help sessions in the ST.

The lectures will be given by a member of staff or external expert in that particular method or topic and are followed by a seminar examining research exemplifying the approach and the issues raised. The help sessions are one-to-one tutorial sessions with the seminar leader to discuss feedback on essays and progress on the course.

Formative coursework: Students will make at least one seminar presentation per term. There will be three compulsory formative coursework essays, and one optional assignment, designed to prepare students for both the summative coursework and the exam. Written and verbal feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: P Alcock et al (Eds) (2012), The Student's Companion to Social Policy, 4th edn; C Hakim (2000), Research Design: Strategies and choices in the design of social policy, 2nd edn; A Bryman (2012), Social Research Methods, 4th edn. Additional references will be supplied at the start of the course and in lectures.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. Essay (25%, 3000 words) in the ST.

For the summative coursework essay, students will be asked to design a research project to address a specified social policy research question, and provide a justification for their proposed design. The exam focuses on assessing students' abilities to critique social policy research approaches. Students will be asked to answer 3 out of a choice of 9 questions based on the research approaches we have studied during the course.

SA465 Criminal Justice Policy - Long Essay

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Newburn OLD.2.40A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy. This course is not available as an outside option. Those taking the course part-time must submit the dissertation in their second year.

Course content: The objective is to write an original dissertation on an approved topic in the field. The selection of the topic is a matter primarily for the student, though the approval of the supervisor is needed for topic registration.

Teaching: The designated supervisor should discuss the selection of the topic and its title with the student, advise about preliminary reading, methods and broad analytical approach; and comment on the draft version. At their discretion, supervisors may give additional advice and comments.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The dissertation must be submitted to the Course Administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September). Dissertations should be no more than 10,000 words in length, excluding notes and appendices and should be typed. Formal titles should be registered with the Course Director in early December.

SA466

European and Comparative Social Policy - Long Essay

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Mangen OLD 2.62

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to study a topic in depth by researching the literature and analysing a subject. Often these essays involve original perspectives or empirical research.

Teaching: An appropriate supervisor will be appointed to advise each candidate and comment on draft elements of the dissertation.

Selection of Topic

The dissertation should conform to one of the following formats

- a study of a single EU state (or region, city etc) and one or more policy areas focusing on the impact of EU level social policy. This state should not be the student's own country. Within this format the focus may also be at the sub-national level (regions, cities etc).
- a comparative study of two or more states (or their subnational levels) focusing on one or more policy areas. The sample may include the student's own country. The sample may include non-EU countries as well as the student's own country.
- a study of an element of EU-level social policy or EU processes of social policy making.

The general subject area of the dissertation should be approved by the MSc programme director and dissertation supervisor by the sixth week of the Michaelmas Term. This will facilitate a specific research topic for the dissertation to be subsequently formalised. This topic may only be changed by agreement with programme director and supervisor and, in any case, no later than the end of the Lent Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The completed dissertation, which should be typewritten, must be submitted on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September). It must not exceed 10,000 words, bibliography and tables will not be included in this total.

Dissertation - Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD1.13, Dr Timothy Hildebrandt, Prof Anthony Hall, Prof David Lewis, Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin and Dr Sunil Kumar

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The 10,000 word dissertation enables students to analyse in greater depth an issue relevant to social policy and development from a civil society-centred perspective.

Teaching: 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the MT. The advisor will provide regular supervision and feedback.

Formative coursework: The area of study is defined by the student, in consultation with their academic adviser. An outline proposal is developed on SA470 in Moodle and discussed with their adviser early in the Lent Term. Guidance is provided in dissertation writing and research skills.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. Dissertations should be no more than 10,000 words in length (100% of this unit), excluding the bibliography. The dissertation must be submitted to the Course Administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

SA471

Social Policy and Planning - Long Essay

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timo Fleckenstein OLD 1.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to study a topic in depth researching the literature and analysing a subject: often these dissertations involve original perspectives or research and some have been subsequently published.

Teaching: The general subject area of the dissertation should be approved by the tutor by the middle of the second term and the title should be submitted to the course convenor by the end of that term.

Arrangements for Supervision

An appropriate tutor will be appointed to advise each candidate and comment on the first draft of the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The completed dissertation, must be submitted to the course administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September) in the year of the examination. It must not exceed 10,000 words.

Dissertation - Social Policy and Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD1.13, Prof Anthony Hall, Dr Timothy Hildebrandt, Prof David Lewis and Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The 10,000 word dissertation enables students to analyse in greater depth an issue relevant to social policy and development from a government-centred perspective.

Selection of Topic

The area of study is defined by the student, in consultation with their academic adviser. An outline proposal is developed on SA472 in Moodle and discussed with their adviser early in the Lent Term. Guidance is provided in dissertation writing and research skills.

Arrangements for Supervision

The adviser will provide regular supervision and feedback.

Teaching: 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the MT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. Dissertations should be no more than 10,000 words in length (100% of this unit), excluding the bibliography. ### Social Policy (Research) - Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tania Burchardt 32L 3.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to apply the research design, methods and critical analysis skills they are acquiring through other courses to carry out their own study addressing a social policy research question. The expectation is that empirical work will be undertaken - for example interviews or secondary data analysis - as part of the study, although the precise design will be governed by the research question.

Teaching: 1 hour of help sessions in the MT. 1 hour of help sessions in the LT. 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

An appropriate supervisor will be appointed in the first half of Michaelmas Term to meet regularly, advise each student throughout the dissertation process, and to provide feedback on ideas and draft material. The number and content of meetings will be determined by agreement between the student and supervisor, but as a rough guide, students might expect two half-hour meetings each term. Students will also receive guidance through compulsory course MY400 Fundamentals of Research Design.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST.

The student and his/her supervisor will discuss the content and timing of formative work as appropriate to the individual dissertation.

Indicative reading: Robson, C (2011) Real World Research Bryman, A (2012) Social Research Methods

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

The completed dissertation must be submitted to the course administrator on or before 1st September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1st September) in the year of the examination. It must not exceed 10,000 words. Please see departmental webpage further guidance.

Population Analysis: Methods and Models

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Moshi Herman

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Statistics and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have basic numeracy, but the course does not require advanced mathematical knowledge. Some practical sessions will involve use of the spreadsheet EXCEL. IT Training provides numerous self-paced student supervised workshops on EXCEL and downloadable course guides. Students with no prior experience of EXCEL are advised to attend one of these workshops before the course.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the key concepts and methods required for population analysis. The course will explain the dynamics of population change and enable students to learn basic methods for measuring population structure and the determinants of population size and change (fertility, mortality and migration). The course will also provide an introduction to population projections and describe and evaluate how demographic data are collected and used. Emphasis is placed on the understanding and interpretation of demographic data, as well as methods of population analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete exercises, write one essay and complete one multiple choice questionnaire during the term.

Indicative reading: Demography: Measuring and Modeling Population Processes by S H Preston, P Heuveline and M Guillot, 2001. This will be used as a reference text in the course. Students may also find it helpful to consult some of the other standard, and slightly less advanced texts available including: Demographic Methods and Concepts by D Rowland, 2003; or, alternatively Methods and Models in Demography by C Newell, 1988 or Demographic Techniques by A H Pollard, F Yusuf & G N Pollard, 1990.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Planning for Population and Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. new MSc introduced

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with personal computers is required, but a high degree of technical proficiency is not required.

Course content: The course is practical in nature and overviews key methods used for planning in population and development. Key questions which will be answered in this course are: what is the future of the world population; What are the family planning needs of couples in low income countries; what will be the number of newly HIV infected in the next 15 years; what is a sustainable population growth. Relevance will be given to methods used for assessing the implications of high levels of mortality in developing countries with specific reference to the HIV/AIDS pandemic; as well as the assessment of high fertility levels due to low uptakes of family planning methods. The approach is practical and complements the more theoretical population courses giving additional skills such as an understanding of key international projections and estimates. Students will undertake a number of computer-based assignments (using either Excel or Spectrum) which will follow the topics highlighted during the lectures. The course covers concepts used for population analysis; the role of population projections in the population planning and development process; the basis of projections made by international agencies such as the UN Population Division; the formulation of projection assumptions and methods of making projections; methods for projecting and assessing the impact of HIV/AIDS and the use of software such as AIM (AIDS Impact Model). The course will also give an overview of projections for particular sub-groups such as households, families, urban, sub-national and labour force ones and of the implications of uncertainty for the planning process. Emphasis will be given to the learning of analytical skills which include data and information searching on the internet as well as presentation of the information.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay before the end of term

Indicative reading: Relevant documents will be provided at the start of the course, mainly in the form of electronic documents. Suggested reading are Lutz "The future population of the world; Cohen " How many people can the earth support"

Assessment: Coursework (50%) in the LT.

Coursework (50%) in the ST.

Assessment will be by two coursework assignments, each of a maximum of 10 A4 pages, which will involve the formulation, execution and writing up of a project concerned with a model for population planning, which has been agreed with the course teacher.

Sexual and Reproductive Health Programmes: Design, Implementation and Evaluation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ernestina Coast OLD2.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is deals with the effectiveness of sexual and reproductive health programmes, especially those that deliver services. The key issues addressed are the design of programmes, their effective implementation, and their evaluation, addressing questions such as:
What role can the mass media play in communicating reproductive health messages?
What special sexual and reproductive needs do adolescents have?
Should violence against women be considered a reproductive health issue?
How appropriate is social marketing as a means of increasing contraceptive use?
What are the main causes of maternal death?

The course covers a wide range of topics, including: the organisation of programmes; issues of strategic management; personnel training; logistics and commodity supply; the tools of management and evaluation, including management information systems; information, education and communication, including the role of the mass media; innovative approaches to reproductive health education, including an examination of the role of formal education and curriculum content; violence against women as a reproductive health issue; meeting the reproductive health needs of "special" groups, including adolescents and refugees; the use of social marketing; issues of quality in service delivery; techniques for evaluating programme effectiveness.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare a seminar presentation and an essay (circa 1,500 words) during the term.

Indicative reading: The course is supported by a VLE containing electronic reading lists. There is no single key text.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (50%) in the LT.

Coursework assignment to be a maximum of 10 A4 pages.

Demographic Change and Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone OLD 2.56

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides an up-to-date and comprehensive account of demographic change and population trends in lower income countries by looking at recent changes in fertility, mortality and migration. The course considers the implications of these trends and some of the key demographic issues in these countries.

Topics that are covered include:

- The impact of education on changes in mortality and fertility
- Demography and gender
- Infant, child and maternal mortality
- Urbanisation and urban growth
- Communicable diseases
- The effects of changing age structures

No previous demographic knowledge is required.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare a seminar presentation and a formative essay (circa 1,500 words) during the term.

Indicative reading: The course is supported by a VLE containing electronic reading lists. There is no single key text and a detailed electronic reading list will be provided.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (50%) in the ST.

Coursework assignment to be a maximum of 10 A4 pages.

Dissertation: Population and Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: MSc Programme Director and Academic Advisor.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Population and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to explore a particular research topic in depth.

Arrangements for Supervision

An Academic Advisor will be appointed to advise each student. Students should also attend SA4C1.

Selection of Topic

The topic of the dissertation is selected in consultation with the student's Academic Advisor.

Teaching: 3 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%) in September.

The completed dissertation must be submitted on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

The length of the dissertation should be 45 pages maximum.

Dissertation: MSc International Health Policy and MSc International Health Policy (Health Economics)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW.3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This is meant to be a seminar aiming to prepare students for the dissertation, which is a compulsory component of the degree.

Students of this programme undertake a summer placement during which they will be writing up their dissertation. The purpose of the dissertation is to allow students to explore a particular topic or a relevant policy issue in some depth. The dissertation may take the form of an empirical research conducted on a topic or issue of relevance to health/social policy; or may be a literature-based providing an analysis of a specific research question of relevance to health/social policy.

Teaching: 4 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. The course comprising a total of 3 2-hour lectures/seminars/coaching sessions (2 2-hour sessions in the LT term and 1 2-hour session in the ST) will require participation from the entire class in order to discuss issues pertaining to the dissertation (topic selection, structure, methods, result reporting, ethics approval, linkages with the summer placements among others) and the student summer placement process. The course will serve as a means to assist students with the preparation and finalisation of their dissertation proposals. In this context, students will also receive feedback and assistance from their supervisors, with whom they will need to meet on at least three occasions.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback and comments on a 1,000 word summary/outline of the proposed research proposal from their supervisors.

Indicative reading: May T. (1997). Social research: Issues, methods and processes, Open University Press. Robson C (1993). ## SA4B3

MSc Health, Population and Society Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca Old. M.2.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Population and Society. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to explore a particular research topic on issues related to health and population in depth.

Selection of topic

The topic of the dissertation is selected in consultation with the student's personal supervisor.

Supervision

An appropriate dissertation tutor will be appointed to advise each student as the work proceeds. In addition, students are given a class on research and dissertation writing, and another one on data sources and uses. Students are expected to make a non-assessed presentation of their proposed dissertation topics in LT.

Teaching: 3 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%) post-summer term.

The completed dissertation must be submitted on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

SA4B5 Half Unit

International Planning and Children's Rights

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eileen Munro OLD2.33 and Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD2.42

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is an interdisciplinary course that explores the links between child rights and child poverty at all levels of development in rich and poor countries. The social and economic as well as the civil and political rights of children, as defined in recent international laws, charters and Conventions, are examined in relation to the conditions, especially poverty and multiple deprivation, experienced by many children. Human rights theories as a basis for international and social policies will be a focus of attention. There has to be universal planning and not only specific proposals to deal with serious violations of rights. Issues of child labour, the violations of war, cultural discrimination against girl children and the right to a minimally adequate family income will be discussed in relation to the roles played by international agencies, Trans National Corporations, governments and NGOs.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

SA4C1 Long Essay and the Research Process

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eileen Munro OLD2.33

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is not available as an outside option. For all MSc Social Policy programmes involving a dissertation or long essay. Exemptions at the discretion of the course tutor. Lecture notes will be available electronically via Social Policy public folders (for part-time students)

Course content: The course aims to provide an understanding of issues associated with the research process in the context of MSc Social Policy long essays. It includes an examination of philosophical issues underpinning research methods in social policy, the place of different research methods (qualitative and quantitative) in social policy and the process of writing a long essay.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Three useful texts are: Alan Bryman (2012) Social Research Methods, 4th edition Oxford University Press; C Robson, Real world research: A resource for social scientists and practitioner-researchers, 3rd edition Oxford University Press, 2011; N

Basic Education for Social Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anthony Hall OLD2.28

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped at 30 students

Pre-requisites: Work experience in a developing country is highly desirable but not essential.

Course content: The course is designed to examine the role of basic education in developing countries as it relates to social development and social policy. Content of the course includes: the history of education and current problems in developing countries, links between basic education and socio-economic development, primary schooling, decentralization policies, non-formal and vocational education, adult literacy, popular education for grassroots development, environmental education, ICT, and foreign aid in supporting basic education.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: In addition to seminar presentations and the assessed essay, students are required to write an unassessed (formative) essay for the course.

Indicative reading: A Hall & J Midgley, Social Policy for Development, 2004, chapter 5; K Watkins, The Oxfam Education Report, 2000; UNICEF, The State of the World's Children: Education, 2006; UNESCO, Education For All Global Monitoring Report, 2010; K Tomasevski, Education Denied, 2003; L Kane, Popular Education and Social Change in Latin America, 2001; A Banerjee & E Duflo, Poor Economics, 2011 (chapter 5); S Graham-Brown, Education in the Developing World: Conflict and Crisis, 1991; M Todaro, Economics for a Developing World, 2000, chapter 9; H Patrinos & D Ariasingam, Decentralisation of Education: Demand-Side Funding, 1997; J Huckle & S Sterling (Eds), Education for Sustainability, 1996; L Pritchett The Rebirth of Education, 2013; N Selwyn, Education in a Digital World, 2013

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the ST.

Students are required to choose a topic of their own interest for the essay.

SA4C3 Half Unit

Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Skellern OLD.2.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: This course assumes knowledge of elementary mathematics and statistics. Students who wish to take SA4C3, but who have not taken an introductory university course in statistics or econometrics, may wish to consider auditing MY451 (Introduction to Quantitative Analysis) in Michaelmas Term in order to prepare themselves for this course. Students who are unsure whether they have the requisite background are encouraged to approach the Lecturer before the start of Lent Term.

This course is envisaged to be complementary to SA4C4 (Cost-Effectiveness Analysis in Health Care), which is offered in Michaelmas Term.

Course content: This course develops the statistical and modelling techniques necessary to apply economic evaluation to the health care sector. Introduction to random variables and probability distribution, linear regression analysis, logistic regression analysis, survival analysis for health outcomes, survival analysis for treatment costs, parametric and non-parametric approaches for missing data, economic evaluation and clinical trials. Estimation of confidence intervals for cost-effectiveness ratios. Transformation of ratios - net benefit approach. Presentation of results, acceptability curves.

This is the same course as SA4G4 Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (modular), but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: A full reading list is provided at the start of the course. The course makes use of selected parts of the following texts:

- M Drummond & A McGuire (eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, OUP, 2001.
- D Machin, YB Cheung & MKB Parmar, Survival analysis: a practical approach, 2nd edn, Wiley, 2006.
- J Klein & M Moeschberger, Survival Analysis: Techniques for Censored and Truncated Data, 2nd edn, Springer, 2005.
- M Cleves, W Gould, R Gutierrez & Y Marchenko, An Introduction to Survival Analysis Using Stata, 3rd edn, Stata, 2010.
- Drummond Scholpher Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes
- Siegel Weinstein Cost-Effectiveness in Health and Medicine OUP
- M Johannesson, Theory and Methods of Economic Evaluation of Health Care, Kluwer, 1996.
- Evaluating Health Risks: An Economic Approach

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the ST.

SA4C4 Half Unit

Cost-Effectiveness Analysis in Health Care

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mylene Lagarde

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Theoretical foundations of health care economic evaluation. The design of a cost-effectiveness analysis and interpretation of cost-effectiveness ratios. Evaluations based on primary studies and evaluations based on mathematical models. Methods for measuring the outcomes of health care interventions. Survival, quality of life assessment and preference elicitation techniques. Methods for calculating QALYs and DALYs. Sources of data for cost analysis. Methods for dealing with uncertainty in cost-effectiveness analysis. The impact of economic evaluation on decision making in health care.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: A piece of formative coursework will be set and feedback provided to students.

Indicative reading: The following are basic readings for the course:

M Drummond et al, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, Oxford, OUP, 2005; M Drummond & A McGuire (Eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, Oxford, OUP, 2002; Gray, A. Clarke, P.M, Wolstenholme, P., Wordsworth, S. Applied Methods of Cost-effectiveness Analysis in Healthcare (Handbooks in Health Economic Evaluation), Oxford, OUP, 2011.

Supplementary Reading List

This is made available on Moodle along with all other course materials, and includes references to specialised texts and articles on each subject covered within the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Assessment is through a project that students will undertake in small groups and write up individually (2,000 word paper), to be submitted at the end of the course.

SA4C6 Half Unit

International Housing and Human Settlements; Conflicts and Communities

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne Power OLDM2.21

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This is a capped course. If it is oversubscribed places will be allocated by random ballot, first amongst Social Policy students then amongst other students for any remaining places. The first ballot will be held on Tuesday of MT week 1.

Course content: The course is an introduction to the global housing challenges of a fast urbanising world in the context of rapidly growing cities worldwide. There are 5 key themes: the push and pull factors in urban growth; the key actors in housing provision; slums and self-help; the environmental impact of low income settlements; the problems of poverty and exclusion in low income and informal settlements. The course includes 10 lectures in LT and one in ST. The main topics of the lectures are: housing needs and demand; contrasting patterns of housing development; owner occupation, renting and self-help; government intervention and finance; planning and renewal; international agencies, aid and NGOs; bottom-up shelter models and community-led initiatives; social exclusion and urban pressures; basic services and public infrastructure; participation and women's roles in low income settlements; environment of cities; urban and housing design; theories and practice in upgrading urban settlements. Case studies are used to illustrate arguments, policies and practical responses.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Additional activity: occasional informal discussion sessions are organised at students' request.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in seminars and to complete one formative essay using case studies to illustrate their arguments.

SA4C8 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17

Globalisation and Social Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin OLD2.57

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: What do the, the Catholic Church, Bill and Melissa Gates, UNICEF and the World Bank have in common? They are in one way or another involved in social policy that goes beyond the nation state. Policy could be seen as the exercise of political power and this political power has often been concentrated within the nation state. Far from the traditional study of policy this includes the effect of globalization on a variety of actors in social policy. This course examines how globalization has changed the way we perceive areas such as health, education, social care and other areas that concern social citizenship. The course examines the international policy environment, particularly intergovernmental organisations; bilateral and multilateral aid agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), which influence the social policy environment in developing countries. The impact of the inter-governmental policy process on policy outcomes is examined. The same goes for religious groups, social movements and corporations that all play a role in global social policy. The main goal of the course is not only to open up the understanding of social policy and globalization but also to show the complexity of goals and actors of social policy. It is expected that the students will devote considerable time to reading and preparing for the seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. Revision session(s) will be scheduled in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write a long essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be presented at the beginning of the term. Some introductory texts include: B Deacon, M Hulse & P Stubbs, Global Social Policy: International Organisations and the Future of Welfare States in Transition: National Adaptations in Global Economics (1996); D Held et al, Global Transformations: Politics, Economics and Culture, Polity Press (1999); J Hills, J Le Grand & D Piachaud (Eds), Understanding Social Exclusion, OUP (2002); P Hirst & G Thomson (Eds), Globalisation in Question: The International Economy and the Possibilities of Governance, Polity Press (1996); F Jameson & M Miyoshi (Eds), The Cultures of Globalization, The Duke University Press (2001); J Midgley, Social Welfare in Global Context, Sage (1997); R Mishra, Globalisation and the Welfare State, Edward Elgar (1999); D Nayyar, Governing Globalization: Issues and Institutions, OUP (2002); V S Peterson & A S Runyan, Global Gender Issues, Westview Press 1993.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%) in the ST.

SA4D1 Half Unit Social Epidemiology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Population and Society. This course is available on the MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course brings together the main issues in health, population and society in high and middle income countries, including the role of social and biological factors in determining health and mortality. Course content includes the relationship between health and societal changes: family changes and their implications for population health; social support and health, health of older people and coping with ageing in the 21st century. Prospects for health and mortality in decades to come. Definition and use of measurements of health; self-reported, 'objective' measures and health service use indicators. Trends in inequalities in health and the explanations for these. Key issues in public health in developed countries especially in the light of expected demographic changes. Policy responses to health, population and societal changes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 1,500 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

SA4D2 Half Unit Global Health and Population Change

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca OLD.M2.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Population and Society. This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims at looking at the relationship of population change and global health. It follows a multidisciplinary approach by integrating demography, public health and epidemiology. A strong component of the course is the policies required to cope with these challenges for global health coming from population changes worldwide. The course does not only take a theoretical approach, but it is also evidence based. This relationship between population change and health will be analysed in its dynamic. Another important aspect of the course is that it will focus on what will happen in the future of global health as a result of anticipated population changes.

Some of the main topics covered are: Some of the main topics addressed in this course are the relationship between epidemiological transition and population change; the relationship between poverty, health and population change; the course of HIV/AIDS epidemic and demographic dynamics; health inequalities and urbanisation; nutrition and health; ageing and its effects on the burden of different chronic diseases. It also covers basic techniques and measurement of health, mortality and morbidity.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

SA4D3 Half Unit Valuing Health

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Oliver COW3.06

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, IMEX Exchange, MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MiM Exchange. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is of value to those wishing to work as health policy analysts or economists/behavioural economists after graduation, be that in academia, government, industry, or management and practice.

Course content: This course offers a thorough understanding of how economists tend to value health and explores some of the problems inherent in these valuations. As such, the course offers teaching in many aspects of behavioural economics, with specific health-related application.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be given a progress test at the end of MT--this will be a 50 minute test in which they answer one essay question from a choice of three. This is perfect practice for what the students might expect in the final exam.

Measuring Health System Performance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW G.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to present a framework to discuss the opportunities and challenges with performance measurement in health care, examine the various dimensions and levels of health system performance, identify the measurement instruments and analytic tools needed, and examine the implications of these issues for policy makers and regulators. Lectures generally focus on measuring health system performance in high-income countries but draw on the experience of other countries where relevant.

After taking this course students are expected to:

- understand the principles of performance measurement
- appreciate the challenges, approaches, and opportunities in performance measurement in four dimensions: population health, patient outcomes, equity, quality and appropriateness of care, and productivity
- understand the methodological issues facing performance measurement relating to risk adjustment, developing composite measures, and measuring attribution and causality
- identify key issues relevant to policy makers relating to: developing targets and reporting on progress to the public, and developing incentives to improve performance

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 24 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Papanicolas I, Smith P (Eds) Health System Performance Comparison: An Agenda for Policy, Information and Research. ### Social Rights and Human Welfare

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Hartley Dean OLD2.30

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is currently capped at 30 places. Offers of places will be made on the basis of applicants' statements. Initial priority for places is given to students on Social Policy MSc programmes and students on the MSc Human Rights. Other students may be accepted onto a waiting list. Places remaining available three days before the start of the course will not be held back for late applicants from the Department of Social Policy or the Human Rights programmes but offered to students from the waiting list.

Pre-requisites: none

Course content: The course will examine the basis of social or welfare rights as a component of human rights. It will situate social/welfare rights in an historical and comparative context and explore a range of debates concerning the relevance and effectiveness of a rights based approach to poverty alleviation and social welfare provision, both in the developed and the developing world. It will address the practical limitations of and the constraints upon social/welfare rights. Specifically, it will address: concepts of social rights and welfare citizenship; human needs and human rights; social/welfare rights in global context; critiques of social/welfare rights as human rights; the scope and substance of social/welfare rights; social/welfare rights and mechanisms of redress; rights based approaches to poverty alleviation; social development and social/welfare rights; constitutional instruments and social/welfare rights; human rights and the ethics of welfare.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of submitting a formative essay.

Indicative reading: H Dean, Social Rights and Human Welfare, Routledge, 2015. ### Health Systems and Policies in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mrigesh Bhatia OLD2.34

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Population and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course focuses on health system reforms. It aims to identify key health systems and policy issues in developing country context and understand why health sector reforms have become an important issue in the developing countries. It will examine the assumptions upon which health system reforms are based and the evidence to support these assumptions. After an introductory lecture on the history of the development of health systems and policies of the member nations of the World Health Organisation, the content of the course is divided into three components. These are financing health care, delivery of health care and stewardship. Because Primary Health Care is once again at the centre of the World Health Report (2003), these sections will focus on equity, participation and intersectoral collaboration. With respect to financing, the emphasis will be on options for financing health care in developing countries, examining the potential role of user charges, social health insurance and community financing schemes. Delivery will focus on social franchising, decentralisation and the role of the private/public mix. Under stewardship, the course will explore issues around human resources for health and capacity building. The course concludes with a session on the future of Health Sector Reforms in developing countries.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Advanced Health Economics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair McGuire COW.4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Health Economics (SA408).

Alternative introductory economics courses are acceptable.

Course content: The course will cover: international comparisons of health care expenditure, individual health-seeking behaviour, health care insurance, contract theory applied to the health care sector (including principal-agent theory and incentive payment mechanisms), and equity in health care.

Students may find material from the half unit SA4L5 Applied Health Econometrics, which will run in weeks 1 to 6 of LT (with lectures also in week 11), to be beneficial to studying this course. See the SA4L5 course guide for further detail. In particular, a knowledge of basic econometrics is assumed when taking SA4E9 which will be provided by SA4L5.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

All lectures and seminars will be taught by Professor Alistair McGuire. The lectures will be twice a week from weeks 6 through 10. The seminars will be twice a week from week 7 through 11.

Formative coursework: A piece of formative coursework will be set and students will receive feedback on their work.

SA4F1 Half Unit

Migration: Population Trends and Policies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ernestina Coast OLD M 2.24

Dr Ernestina Coast

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society and MSc in Population and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have basic numeracy, but the course does not require advanced mathematical knowledge. It assumes no previous knowledge of the subject.

Course content: The course deals with the inter-relationships between migration and its economic and social context. The causes of migration and its consequences are examined at national and international levels together with their policy implications. The approach of the course is comparative, both across time and between more developed and less developed societies. A wide range of topics is covered, including: sources and types of demographic data; techniques for the measurement of migration; main migration flows; macro- and microeconomic theories of migration; forced migration and migrants; demographic consequences of migration; and, international and national migration policies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to participate actively in seminars and to submit a formative essay.

Indicative reading: Readings are mainly in the form of on-line articles. Key overview texts include: The age of migration (Castles & Miller); Migration theory: talking across disciplines (Brettell & Hollifield); Worlds in motion: understanding international migration at the end of the millennium (Massey); The migration reader : exploring politics and policies, 2006 (Anthony & Lahav); International handbook on the economics of migration (Constant & Zimmermann); Global migration and the world economy (Hatton & Williamson); Dialogues on migration policy (Giugni & Passy); Migration, immigration and social policy (Jones-Finer); Migration and development : opportunities and challenges for policymakers (Farrant); Rural-urban migration in developing countries (Lall).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (25%) in the ST.

Coursework assignment maximum of 5 A4 pages.

SA4F3 Half Unit US Health Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Oliver COW 3.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is of value to those wishing to work as health policy analysts or health advocates after graduation, be that in academia, government, industry, or management and practice.

Course content: The course offers an understanding of the major issues in the United States health care policy debate, which is important given that the US health care system is the largest in the world, and that many of its policy innovations are exported abroad. The course is interdisciplinary in nature, covering historical, political, discursive economics and philosophical considerations, among others.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be given a progress test at the end of LT -- this will be a 50 minute test in which they answer one essay question from a choice of three. This is perfect practice for what the students might expect in the final exam.

Indicative reading: "The health care mess: how we got into it and what it will take to get out", by Julius Richmond and Rashi Fein (Harvard University Press, 2005); "The Politics of Medicare", Second Edition, by Theodore Marmor (Aldine de Gruyter, 2000); "The system: the American way of politics at the breaking point", by Haynes Johnson and David Broder (Little Brown, 1997); "The historical logic of national health insurance: structure and sequence in the development of British, Canadian and US Medical Policy", by Jacob Hacker, Studies in American Political Development (1998) 12: 57-130.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the LT.

The essay will be due for submission in Week 11 of LT.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. Students are required to register for this course on LSE for You and obtain permission from the European Institute to take this course.

Pre-requisites: Introductory economics is helpful.

Course content: This course attempts to apply economics to examine and evaluate social policies and problems in Europe. The course addresses the main goals for social intervention including poverty relief, inequality, efficiency and accountability. Students will acquire an understanding of the economic theory underpinning the analysis of social policy in the areas of health, education, long-term care, pension, housing, employment, family and housing policy. The course will provide an analysis of social and public insurance underpinning the financing of welfare states. Students will be asked to apply the economic principles to examples of cross-country reform in Europe. The course will address key questions on social policy intervention, inequality, poverty, tax financing v social insurance, longevity risks and pensions, long term care insurance, financing housing, family policy and wealth accumulation.

Teaching: 10 x 1 hour lectures and 10 x 1.5 hour seminars, LT. 1 x 1 hour revision lecture (ST).

Formative coursework: Two 2,000 word essays.

Indicative reading: P Pestieau (2006), The Welfare State in the European Union, OUP. N Barr (2004), The Economics of the Welfare State, 4th ed., OUP. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA4F8 Half Unit Behavioural Public Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Oliver COW 3.06

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. Places will be allocated to students on the basis of a short statement that is submitted during course choice, outlining the student's suitability for and interest in the course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to explore ways of changing behaviour to achieve the aims of public policy. One half of the course will be concerned with the behaviour of professionals who work in public services. How can doctors, teachers and social workers be motivated to provide the best possible care for their patients, pupils or clients? Should we rely upon professionalism and the public service ethos? Should we set up targets and league tables for performance, penalising those who fail to achieve the target or who drop down the table? Or should we rely upon patient or parental choice and competition to provide incentives to improve? The second half of the course explores ways of changing individuals' and households' behaviour in areas of policy concern such as smoking, obesity, and the environment. How can people be persuaded to stop smoking, to take more exercise, to eat less, to reduce their carbon emissions? Should we rely upon punitive measures such as bans, on positive incentives such as financial rewards, or on 'nudge' policies that change the choice architecture? Should government intervene at all, if the only people harmed by their own activities are themselves? In trying to answer these questions, the course will draw on recent developments in behavioural economics, motivational and behavioural studies in psychology, and the philosophy of paternalism, including libertarian paternalism and the 'nudge' agenda. It will discuss evidence from a wide range of areas of public policy, but especially health care, education and social care, using illustrations and evidence from Europe, North America and Australasia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Each student will write one non-assessed essay or mock exam question. There will be a revision session in the summer term, going through the mock exam questions and/or previous years' exam papers. Each student will make at least one seminar presentation during the term.

Housing, Neighbourhoods and Communities

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne Power OLDM2.21

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. If it is oversubscribed priority will be given to Social Policy Students with remaining places being allocated by random ballot. The first ballot will take place on Tuesday of MT week 1.

Course content: The course introduces MSc students to the links between housing, neighbourhoods and social policy, in urban areas of developed countries. It analyses how existing urban areas came to be developed and run. It explores housing systems in the UK, across Europe and North America, including home ownership, private renting and social renting, the role of government, housing providers and communities. In particular, the gap between neighbourhoods, the problems of housing costs and affordability, homelessness, and social exclusion. The course covers the management and maintenance of housing and neighbourhood services in cities, the impact of housing on social problems, on community relations, and on the environment. Case studies are used to examine how people relate to their neighbourhoods and to each other, particularly in low income, urban areas. How new communities are being developed, how existing areas can be adapted and how housing needs can be met are the big challenges this course addresses, using live case studies to illustrate the main themes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. In addition there is one lecture/seminar in the ST. There are also organised site/project visits in MT. The course provides many case study examples for students to draw on.

Formative coursework: Students participate actively in seminars, present their case studies and complete two formative essays drawing on case study evidence.

Students are invited to join site visits which illustrate key housing themes.

The Third Sector

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Lewis OLD 2.40

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and MSc in Social Policy and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped at a maximum of 30 places.

Pre-requisites: Academic and/or practical knowledge of the the 'nonprofit', 'NGO', or 'voluntary sector' (in any country) desirable but not essential.

Course content: The 'third sector' is conceived as including all non-state and non-market organisations - such as non-governmental organisations, voluntary organisations, and community groups - and their activities. The course provides a concise introduction to theory and evidence on the nature, past and present roles and potential capacity of third sector organisations in social policy in developed and developing countries. It aims to answer the key questions: what is the 'third sector'?; what roles does it or should it play in meeting welfare needs?; how are third sector organisations involved in shaping social policy; how are changes in funding and in the provision of services affecting organisations? What are the limits to the roles of third sector organisations? Are the answers affected by country, institutions, policy, period, areas of activity? The course covers theoretical arguments and models of the ideal and actual roles of third sector organisations, and the historical development of the sector in different contexts. It assesses boundaries and relationships between the third sector, the state and the market, and its relationship with different social groups, service users and communities. It describes and explains the size and the role the sector takes in different periods, countries and areas of activity, and evaluates its impact. It considers the independence, interdependence, accountability and probity of third sector organisations. The course draws on examples from a range of areas of activity (such as education, employment, international development, social care), and areas of activity with particular groups (such as migrants and refugees, women, children and older people), as well as a range of countries.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in seminars and to complete one piece of written formative coursework

Indicative reading: Anheier, H (2005) Nonprofit Organisations: Theory, Management, Policy; Billis, D (2010, ed.) Hybrid Organizations and the Third Sector: Challenges for Practice; Edwards, M (2009) Civil Society; Evers, A and Laville, J-L (eds) (2009) The Third Sector in Europe; Harris, M and Rochester, C (2001, eds.) Voluntary Organisations and Social Policy: Perspectives on Change and Choice; Ishkanian, A and Szreter, S (2012) The Big Society Debate: A New Agenda for Social Welfare?; Lewis, D. ### Dissertation for MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Currently Dr M Bhatia (LSE) and Dr N Spicer (LSHTM) as Programme Directors though the Programme Directorship sometimes varies from year to year.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide a foundation to students on dissertation-writing as well as to address queries students may have in relation to their dissertation topic, the methodology used, the likelihood of ethical approval, and data acquisition, among others.

The dissertation could be on any topic in the field of health policy, planning and/or financing. The main body of the dissertation should include the background to the research, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion and policy implications and recommendations.

Teaching: Teaching comprises two 2-hour seminars, one in the LT and one in the ST.

Students would find it of interest to attend the lectures of SA4C1 on SA4C1 Long Essay and the Research Process - 2 hours in the MT and 3 hours in the LT.

Finally, there is individual supervision for students on the dissertation.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write a summary of the proposed dissertation, outlining the title, background to the topic, methods to be employed, and likely expected results. A list of literature sources will be appended to this summary.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Dissertation due on 1st September.

Issues in Public Health

Students taking Linear Modules at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (LSHTM) are required to sit for this examination. Students taking just one linear module will be assessed by a one-and-a-half hour written examination in the ST. Students taking two linear modules will be assessed by a three-hour written examination in the ST. A maximum of two LSHTM linear modules may normally be taken subject to academic approval, although in exceptional circumstances three may be taken subject to academic approval.

London School of Hygiene & Tropical Medicine Study Modules (LT and ST)

For a detailed list of modules available and codes students are advised to refer to their LSHTM MSc handbook. HPPF students can take a maximum of two LSHTM study modules at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine subject to academic approval. These are mostly assessed by assignments and there are usually no examinations.

Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global South

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sunil Kumar 20KSW.4.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For postgraduate students interested in urban social policy in developing and transitional countries. The course is also open to students on other MSc Programmes dependent on spaces being available. Some knowledge and experience of urban issues is desirable. In applying for a place on this course, students will have to upload a statement on LFY explaining why they want to enrol.

Course content: The course examines the social, economic and political challenges in urban areas in developing and transitional countries from various conceptual perspectives, and the policies and planning practices aimed at addressing them. Some of the themes explored in the course are: theoretical perspectives on the city; urbanisation and social change; migration; the rural-urban interface; urban poverty and livelihoods; labour markets and housing; urban social movements; urban basic services; and urban management and governance.

Teaching: Lectures: 10 x 2-hours. Seminars: 9 x 1.5 hours (MT). Reading week (MT wk 6): Workshop 1 x 3 hrs; Revision (ST): 1 x 2 hours

Formative coursework: All students are expected to read widely, and take part in a range of activities in the seminar sessions. Students are required to contribute to the seminars on a weekly basis by undertaking an un-assessed activity called My-City. All written work should be related to urban issues in either developing or transitional countries.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided for each lecture and seminar. The following is an introductory list of books: Beall, J and S Fox (2009), Cities and Development, Routledge; Pieterse, E.A. (2008), City Futures: Confronting the Crisis of Urban Development, Zed Books;; Staples, J. (Ed) (2007), Livelihoods at the Margins: Surviving the City. Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (40%, 3000 words) in the LT.

All written work should be related to urban issues in either developing or transitional countries.

Pre-requisites: Students will preferably have some experience of work within NGOs and/or relevant government departments or donor agencies working with NGOs.

Course content: The course focuses on the specialised field of non-governmental organisations (NGOs) within the field of social policy and development, and considers theoretical and policy issues. Main topics include the history and theory of NGOs; the changing policy contexts in which NGOs operate; NGO service delivery and advocacy roles in policy; challenges of NGO accountability; NGO organisational growth and change; conceptual debates around civil society, social capital, social movements and globalisation; and NGO relationships with other institutional actors including government, donors and private sector.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will sit a mock exam held in LT. Students will receive feedback from their academic adviser on the mock exam. Weekly student led seminars which involve discussion of the assigned readings will also help to develop students' critical thinking, reading, and analytical skills

Dissertation in Global Health

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Huseyin Naci COW 3.01 and Mrs Clare Wenham COW 3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation could be on any topic in the field of global health and policy. It should attempt to integrate approaches and knowledge learned across courses and present results to address a health policy issue or a problem identified through the use of either primary or secondary data. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical and empirical literature in the field. In addition, careful analysis of the policy implications and formulation of policy recommendations is essential. The main body of the dissertation should, in principle, include the background to the research, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion and policy implications and recommendations.

Students will have the opportunity to attend Information Literacy sessions provided by the Social Policy Librarian.

Teaching: 4 hours of workshops in the LT. Two 2-hour dissertation workshop in LT. Three 1-hour sessions of individual supervision (one-hour per term).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Students will submit a dissertation proposal to their supervisors by the end of LT. This will be subject to peer review and course teachers will provide feedback by the end of May.

Social Policy and Development: Core Concepts

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD1.13, Dr Timothy Hildebrandt OLD2.55, Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin, Prof Anthony Hall and Prof David Lewis

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is not available as an outside option.

This core course is compulsory for the students registered for the MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development (Non-governmental Organisations) programmes. It is not available for students on other MSc programmes.

Pre-requisites: Students are expected to have a background in the social sciences and some practical work experience in developing countries.

Students will be required to take part in a three-day residential workshop at Cumberland Lodge in Windsor Great Park, during the Lent term. The cost is included in MSc SPD & NGOs student fees.

Course content: The course is designed to give students knowledge of core concepts within the theory and implementation of social policy in developing countries. Such an overview is essential for those focusing on mainstream social policy and development issues, and those choosing to specialise on non-governmental organisations. Main topics will include: Comparative social policy in north and south; social development and human development; conceptualizing the state, market and civil society as policy actors; citizenship, social justice, and rights; comparative approaches to the understanding of poverty, wellbeing and exclusion; welfare regime theory; concepts of sustainable livelihoods; global institutions and the international aid system; conceptualizing the policy process.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. The course consists of 10 lectures (90 minutes each) and 10 seminars (90 minutes each) held during the MT. There is also a compulsory residential workshop held in Cumberland Lodge, Windsor during a weekend in January (Lent Term).

Formative coursework: All students will write and receive feedback on two formative essays. The first formative essay consists of an article review (1000 words) and the second essay is based on a set question (1500 words). Also, the student-led weekly seminars will require all students to come prepared to discuss the required readings and link these to the learning outcomes. This process is designed to help students develop critical thinking, reading, and analytical skills.

States, Social Policy and Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD1.13, Prof Anthony Hall, Dr Timothy Hildebrandt, Prof David Lewis, Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin and Dr Sunil Kumar

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Lectures and seminars draw on both conceptual literature and discussion of the practical challenges of social policy interventions and projects in the developing world.

Course content: This course provides the analytical tools needed to understand and critically evaluate the key practical challenges of social development. A wide range of development contexts will be discussed using empirical research and case studies. Key themes include: linking social policy theory, implementation and practice; making social protection effective; managing sector reform processes; projects and programmes, including design and evaluation; participation and community development; gender analysis; the impact of corporate social responsibility and social enterprises on poverty reduction. Students have the option to write an assessed 'project essay' that will form the basis of their summative assessment for this course. Alternatively they may choose an essay topic from the predetermined list.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the Lent Term.

Formative coursework: The formative work on this course is a mock exam held in the Lent Term. Students will receive feedback on their mock exam from their academic advisers.

SA4K1 Half Unit

Global Health Policy: Institutions, Actors and Politics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mrs Clare Wenham

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Globalization has not only impacted on the nature of emerging global health but the policy responses to these challenges. This module critically examines the transnational institutions and actors involved in global health policy and the interplay between them. The governance of global health issues has traditionally been carried out by states and various United Nations agencies (namely, the World Health Organisation), but given the transboundary nature of many global health issues (e.g., AIDS, SARS), a diverse range of actors, including the private sector, civil society organizations and national governments, are now integrally involved. The funding of global health programmes and policies, for example, has shifted from primarily bi-/multilateral donors to include private and public sectors and philanthropists in a global health governance mosaic. The module will use a number of case studies to examine the organisation and role of global health institutions, the challenges and opportunities presented by these governance arrangements, and their (intended and unintended) impacts on global health policy and practice. In doing so, the module will draw on contributions from a range of social sciences including sociology, political science and health services research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Ten one hour lectures and five two hour seminars.

Formative coursework: One seminar presentation per student during MT on a topic as discussed with the convener to fit in with the seminar themes

Indicative reading: Global Politics of Health, S.E. Davies, 2009. Global Health and International Relations, C. McInnes and K. Lee, 2012. Global Health Governance, S. Harman, 2011. Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the MT. One extended essay (4000 words) will be due at the end of MT. Essay questions will be provided at the start of the course, or students are welcome to select an essay topic of their choice, with approval from the course convener.

Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hildebrandt OLD2.55

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 15 students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course aims to analyse and understand the way social policies deploy sexuality categories in regulating everyday life in developing countries, both in its public and private manifestations. It aims to consider social policy and particular interventions in their historical contexts, as a way of unpacking the construction of sexuality in the intersection of colonialism, gender, race, class and international policy frameworks in developing countries. The course also aims to interrogate the relationship between particular social policy prescriptions developed in most industrialized welfare societies and the way some of these are transferred to developing countries. The major concern of the analysis is to bring out the perceptions of sexuality that underwrite these policies and how these interact with existing perceptions of sexualities and their performances (identities, desires and bodily practices) in multiple developing country contexts. These policy areas include, among others, discussions of rights, entitlements, citizenship, same-sex marriage, sexually transmitted disease, HIV/AIDS, family policies, migration/border controls, criminality and employment-related policies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay (2,000 words), which is to be handed in by the end of week eight of Lent Term.

Indicative reading: Aggleton, P., Boyce, P. and Moore, H. (2012) Understanding Global Sexualities: New Frontiers. London: Routledge; Butler, J. ### MPA Capstone Project

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 6 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by an external organisation. Typical clients include public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations or think tanks and NGOs. The group will have from October to March to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of seminars in the LT.

Teaching comprises five 1.5 hour Capstone seminars in the MT and LT. These seminars provide guidance on planning, structuring and presenting the Capstone report and the usage of research methods. Students are asked to participate in the Capstone Professional Development exercises designed to support effective and fair group work. Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979; Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Howard White, Theory-based Impact Evaluation: Principles and Practice (3ie, 2011); Curtis Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, 'Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems', chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%, 15000 words) in the LT.

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances.

The group mark has three components:

- 1) 20% of the overall mark is assigned by the client organisation based on a group presentation and a submission of the project report.
- 2) 50% of the overall mark is given by two academic readers upon submission of the project report; and
- 3) the final 30% of the overall mark is allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties), (ii) group working and self-management as a team, and (iii) the overall output of the project (10% for each item).

Additionally, each group member must complete the Capstone evaluation and personal reflection exercise. This will be submitted individually and separately from the report.

MPA Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Policy Paper.

Course content: The aim of this course is to enable students to plan, design and conduct independent substantial research and/or analysis in an area of public policy. MPA students will write a dissertation of no more than 10,000 words on a topic of their choice to be agreed with their Academic Adviser. The dissertation must be concerned with the goal of policy improvement and, at the same time, it must contribute to a broader objective of knowledge- and theory-building. The main body of the dissertation should include literature review, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion of findings, conclusions and theoretical and policy implications. Dissertations can utilise quantitative and/or qualitative data and draw on primary and/or secondary research.

Teaching: 6 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars and 1 hour of seminars in the LT.

Teaching comprises six seminars in the MT and LT. These seminars provide academic and practical guidance on developing a research topic and question; designing an analytical framework; structuring and presenting policy analysis; and writing policy recommendations. The student's Academic Adviser will provide advice and guidance on this piece of work.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) in the ST. Other (10%) in the MT.

- 1) A 1,500 word dissertation proposal consisting of the title, abstract, research question and hypothesis, justification for research, feasibility of the dissertation topic, an explanation of sources, provisional structure and analytical framework will count for 10% of the overall dissertation mark. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their Academic Adviser. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.
- 2) The full dissertation of no more than 10,000 words will account for the remaining 90% of the overall mark.

The Governance of Welfare: The Nation State and the European Union

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Mangen OLD 2.62

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy). This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The initial lecture introduces the principal methods and analytic models of comparative social policy. This is followed by a review of the development of modern welfare states in Western Europe from the last quarter of the 19th century, when many of the key institutional features of European welfare were being created. Then a series of lectures provides analysis of contemporary welfare models as they have evolved in major EU member states since the end of the Second World War: Sweden (representing social democracy) France and Germany (representing two variants of 'conservative corporatism' as Esping-Andersen in the Three Worlds of Welfare Capitalism termed them), Italy and Spain (as representatives of the Mediterranean 'middle way') and welfare states of Transitional Economies in the new EU members. Discussion of the social policy competence of the European Union completes the teaching in the last three sessions.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit one formative essay of 1500 words by the end of week 6 of the Michaelmas Term.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. In teaching week 1 places will be allocated to students from the Department of Social Policy on a first come first served basis. At the start of week 2 any remaining places will be allocated to students from other departments, again on a first come first served basis.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to the main concepts and tools of the growing fields of behavioural science and the science of happiness. The course brings these fields together with a clear focus on social policy. To achieve this aim, the course is based around twenty lectures covering: 1) what is wellbeing?; 2) what is behavioural science?; 3) choices under risk and uncertainty; 4) intertemporal decisions; 5) social preferences; 6) distributional preferences; 7) the role of emotions in decision making; 8) compensating behaviours; 9) dual-process models of behaviour and the role of the unconscious mind; 10) dual processing into policy; 11) wellbeing in economics; 12) research on happiness; 13) the determinants of life satisfaction; 14) moment-to-moment assessments of happiness as an alternative; 15) the role of eudemonic accounts of subjective wellbeing (meaning, purpose, etc.); 16) why we are often not very good at predicting our happiness; 17) valuing non-market goods (health, environment, etc.) using preferences; 18) valuing non-market goods using happiness; 19) evidence-based policy; 20) Making better decisions – bringing behaviour and happiness together.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST. There are ten topics, and the seminars allow for in depth discussion and analysis of the issues raised in the lectures Formative coursework

Formative coursework: Two presentations, one in MT and one in LT.

Applied Health Econometrics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Grace Lordan OLDM2.26

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Health Economics (SA408).

Alternatively, students should have completed another foundation course in microeconomics. If this was completed outside of the LSE at an undergraduate level, please contact Dr. Lordan for further advice.

Course content: Most research questions, in health economics require students to apply econometric techniques. This course will introduce these techniques and students exiting the course can expect to have acquired a competency in econometrics as it is applied to health economics. The seminars- which are lab based- will allow students to apply these methods to practical problems using Stata and decipher the results.

This content of this course may be useful to those considering the half unit SA4E9 Advanced Health Economics which will run in weeks 6 to 11 of LT and week 1 of ST. See the SA4E9 course guide for further detail.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 22 hours of seminars in the LT. All lectures and seminars will be taught by Dr. Grace Lordan. The lectures will be twice a week from weeks 1 through 5. The seminars will be twice a week from week 1 through 6 (with the exception of week 1 where you will have 1 seminar). There will be a mock exam and a revision lecture in week 11.

Formative coursework: Two pieces: 1) A set of problems given in seminar 4, tackled without help during the seminar and submitted afterwards. This work will be read and feedback provided. 2) A mock exam in week 11. This work will be read and feedback provided by week 9.

Illegal Drugs and Their Control: Theory, Policy and Practice

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Shiner OLD2.49

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and Master of Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

If this course is oversubscribed places will be allocated firstly to MSc Criminal Justice Policy students, then other Social Policy students and then students from other departments on a first come first served basis.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with criminology or sociology is preferable but not essential

Course content: This multi-disciplinary course draws on sociology, psychology, criminology and law to examine the place and meaning of illegal drug use in late modern societies and associated policy responses. It begins by considering drug use and subcultural formations; the 'normalisation' of drug use; drug tourism; the role of addiction; and the organisation of drug markets. It then goes on to consider the making of drugs policy; drugs, policing and the law; treatment and harm reduction; drugs as a development and human rights issue; decriminalisation and alternatives to prohibition.

Teaching: 10 x 1.5 hours of lectures and 10 x 1.5 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay (2,000 words), which is to be handed in by the end of week eight of MT.

Indicative reading: Aldridge, J., Measham, F., and Williams, L. (2011) Illegal Leisure Revisited: Changing Patterns of Alcohol and Drug Use in Adolescents and Young Adults, London: Routledge. ### Politics of Social Policy: Welfare and Work in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timo Fleckenstein OLD1.17

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course explores the politics of social policy in advanced political economies. In the first part of the course, the main analytical approaches for the cross-national analysis of welfare states are introduced (such as the industrialism thesis, the power resources model, new institutionalism, feminist theory and the globalisation thesis). These will be examined in the context of the rise of modern welfare states and their transformations since the end of the 'Golden Age' in the mid-1970s. These analyses and the theoretical approaches to cross-national study of welfare states will be harnessed in the second part of the course when the focus shifts towards more recent policy developments since the 1990s. The empirical focus is on the welfare-and-work nexus. The course analyses the development of labour market and family policies in Nordic countries, Continental Europe, Anglo-phone countries and East Asia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Seminar members will be expected to make presentations to the seminar, and submit a formative essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Bonoli, Giuliano, and Natali, David, eds.

Economic Analysis for Health Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos COW.4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will serve as an introduction to major developments in the economics of health and health care. It will provide medical practitioners with a strong understanding of the role economics can play in health policy and health system administration. It will provide a framework with which to understand the changing nature of health care supply and delivery and the interactions between patients and health care systems. It will review major changes in the financing and delivery of health care and both domestic and international efforts to control health care costs and improve efficiency.

By the end of this course, students will:

- understand complex interactions between health care delivery, insurance markets, governments, business organizations, and then health of populations;
- be comfortable applying economic reasoning and models to analyse health care policies and markets;
- be familiar with the seminal and most recent literature and evidence in the health economics and health policy fields;
- obtain a deep understanding of a particular health policy problem through independent research;
- be familiar with the ongoing debates around the role of prices, markets, competition and the state in the financing and delivery of health care.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Ten one hour lectures and five two hour seminars, plus a three-hour revision seminar in the ST.

Formative coursework: 5 Response papers to each set of readings in preparation for each seminar

Social Policy and Global Health

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Justin Parkhurst COW.3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course introduces to the social determinants of health, and how global health issues are reliant on, and addressed by, social policy concerns and interventions. Following this, the course is organized in sessions addressing the health effects of a range of broad social and structural determinants and areas of social policy (e.g. education; childcare and/or early childhood; labour and employment; poverty; inequality; cash transfer programmes, etc.), along with example global health issues to explore the social and structural drivers of illness. The impact of social policies on health based on both country-specific and cross-national studies is critically assessed. The course further engages with the challenges of policymaking and forming policy responses to social and structural drivers of health, particularly at the global level. Specific methodological approaches and challenges are also discussed based on both conceptual and empirical studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Formative coursework: One non-assessed project report (2,000 words) in Week 5. Students are expected to deliver a research plan for a proposed project. It is expected that it will have a comparative character, comparing regions, countries or other geographic units that are of policy relevance. The research project will follow one of two structures:

- 1 Consider the specific hypotheses and evidence that might support a particular social policy intervention to impact on health; OR
- 2 Students will briefly summarize key literature, and identify the gaps in knowledge, and propose a concrete research question that can be addressed empirically and that contributes to filling a gap in the literature. Finally, they will outline an approach to address the proposed question, and discuss the potential strengths and limitations of their approach. Students will receive feedback on this proposal, which will serve as basis for the development of the final project paper.

Financing Health Care: Comparative Perspectives

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos COW.4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to a comparative approach to analysing the development of health care financing, both in theory and in practice, with an emphasis on critical assessment of current and future policy options and issues. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in both developed and low and middle income countries.

By the end of this course, students will have:

- a grasp of the economic, political and philosophical concepts relevant to any discussion of health financing policy;
- a good understanding of how financing arrangements affect the achievement of key health financing policy goals such as financial protection, equity in financing and equity of access to health care, incentives for efficiency and quality in the organisation and delivery of health services, administrative efficiency, transparency and accountability;
- the skills to critically assess current health financing arrangements and options for reform;
- an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 3 hours of help sessions in the MT. 3 hours of help sessions in the ST. Five 2-hour lectures and four 1-hour lectures in the MT. Five 2-hour seminars in the MT. One 3-hour revision lecture in the MT. One 3-hour revision seminar in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

One non-assessed essay (2,000 words) in week 6.

Global Ageing

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Emily Grundy OLD.1.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health. This course is available on the MSc in Population and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. A core course for students taking MSc Global Health and available to other students taking relevant MSc programmes, particularly Health, Population and Society and Health and Population Development.

Course content: Population ageing is now a near global phenomenon and is perceived as presenting major challenges not only in regions with an already high representation of older people but also in low and middle income countries set to 'grow old before they grow rich'. This course will consider the process and implications of ageing at both the population and the individual level and policy responses.

The course will be structured into five sections. The first will focus on demographic change and the causes and the course of population ageing in various world regions. This element will include explanation and discussion of population dynamics (how populations age) and inter-related social and economic changes associated with demographic transition (why populations age) and their implications for both older and younger generations.

The second section will focus on the process of ageing at the individual level including an overview of recent biological, social and psychological theories of ageing.

In the third section the emphasis will be on trends and differentials in the health of older populations. This will include discussion of the epidemiological transition; measures of health and disability and current debates about the future health status of the older population in different settings and prospects for further changes in longevity.

The fourth section will consider different models of health and social care provision in older populations and policy responses to population ageing at the international, national and regional level. The final section will be an integrative one in which these themes are drawn together with examples focused on particular countries or regions. This will be linked with student presentations of posters.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Students will be asked to work in groups (of 4-5) to produce and present posters on ageing in a specific country which relate to the main themes of the course and so consider demographic, social, economic, health and health care, and policy dimensions. Students will also be required to produce an individual 1,000 word essay on the poster theme for which they took primary responsibility

Principles of Modern Epidemiology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Allan Hackshaw

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. An optional course for students taking MSc Global Health and available to other students taking relevant MSc programmes, particularly Health, Population and Society and Health and Population Development

Course content: The course provides students with an understanding of key epidemiological concepts associated with describing disease/mortality or other health-related features of a population (such as causes of disease or early death), and evaluating ways to treat disease, or prevent disease or early death. This will include: (a) tools for descriptive epidemiology (incidence, prevalence and survival); (b) measures of association, using relative and absolute measures; and (c) confounding and bias. The course introduces the concepts associated with the design and analysis of research studies that are used to examine features of population health and burden of disease. It also introduces students to the principles of causality and risk factors. Students will cover the most common types of research studies used to evaluate human health (observational studies and clinical trials). The course includes fundamentals of data interpretation, including effect sizes, and data analysis (e.g. regression modelling).

Teaching is structured in the form of lectures and seminars. Lectures introduce students to key epidemiological concepts and methods, and complemented by seminars. Most lectures and seminars are based around specific published papers in epidemiology, used to illustrate the concepts. These articles would be sent to students in advance of each class, and students are expected to prepare a short review of the article, using an accompanying set of questions on the study design and interpretation.

Summative assessment is based on an examination to assess student's understanding of epidemiological concepts and their ability to interpret study results. Summative assessment also includes a research proposal in which students are expected to apply the basic principles of epidemiology in the context of a well-defined research question.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Four 2-hour lectures, six 1-hour lectures, and 5 2-hour seminars in the LT. One 3-hour revision seminar in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in the LT.

Students will be expected to produce one project in the LT, based on designing a research study, using a topic chosen by the student. In week 6, students would submit a draft report (up to 2000 words) of their project so far (not assessed, but feedback provided), as formative coursework. After this, the report would be expanded and finalised (~3000 words). In the report, students are expected to: (i) identify an epidemiological research question of relevance to global health, with justification, (ii) provide a summary of the key literature, and identify gaps in knowledge, and (iii) describe an epidemiological study to address their research question, including the methods.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (25%, 3000 words) in the LT.

An assessed research project paper of 3,000 words (25%) to be submitted at the end of the LT and a two-hour written examination in the ST (75%).

SA4N7 Half Unit Economics of Health and Wellbeing

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Grace Lordan M 2.26

Some lectures will be taken by Professor Andrew Clark (<http://www.parisschoolofeconomics.com/clark-andrew/index.html#DEA>).

Andrew currently has a partial appointment at the LSE in CEP.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: To have progressed from year 1 of the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management into year two students will have passed SA4E1 Health Administration and Management, SA4E2 Resource Allocation and Cost-effectiveness Analysis, SA4G1 Financing Health Care and SA4G2 Health Economics.

Course content: Overall the lectures will follow the following structure:

1. Lecture 1 Introduction
2. Lecture 2 Measurement
3. Lecture 3: Determinants of wellbeing
4. Lecture 4: Determinants of health with a focus on the income/health gradient
5. Lecture 5: Determinants of unhealthy behaviours (drinking, smoking, drug taking, obesity) with a focus on peer effects
6. Lecture 6: Causal Evidence on the determinants of health and wellbeing

In addition, we will have four seminar sessions that will complement these lectures. The following lectures map to individual seminars: (1 and 2), (3), (4) and (5)

This course is being convened by Dr Grace Lordan and will introduce students to the economics of health and wellbeing. Focus will be on the health or wellbeing production function, and the related economics literature. In particular, the course will cover how health and wellbeing are measured in the literature and factors that determine these outcomes. Attention will be paid to defining what a causal effect is and specifying an appropriate health production function. In this regard the student can expect to become familiar with some basic econometrics. In terms of measurement, we will consider the value of subjective versus objective outcomes. We will discuss the human development index and the Millennium development goals. In addition, the course will review the main determinants of physical health, including inequality. (Un)healthy behaviours will also be covered, including drug taking, obesity and smoking. Some attention will be paid to the role of peer effects in this regard. The course will also cover well-being, income comparisons and the Easterlin Paradox. This component will be taken by Professor Andrew Clark who is an affiliate with the Wellbeing group at the CEP. Overall, students taking this course can expect to gain insight as to the challenges faced by policy makers in altering the health and wellbeing outcomes of a nation. Students will also gain some insight into policies that are likely to be the most fruitful. Students will also become more familiar with a literature that considers individual health and wellbeing. This course will be complementary to the content covered in Advanced Health Economics. However, there is no overlap and this course can also be taken on its own.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the ST. This course will be a combination of lectures- where students learn theory- and seminars- where students apply what they have learned.

Formative coursework: Students will be given a mock exam on the last day and will receive feedback via a remote session.

SA4N8 Half Unit Riots, Disorder and Urban Violence

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Tim Newburn (OLD 240a)

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and Master of Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with sociology and/or criminology would be an advantage, but is not a formal prerequisite. Anyone unfamiliar with criminology can find a full introduction to the subject in: Newburn, T. (2012) Criminology, London: Routledge, 2nd Edition.

Course content: This course focuses on urban or collective violence, or what more colloquially tend to be referred to as 'riots'. The course will consider the various approaches that have been taken to this subject - via history, psychology and sociology - and, focusing on particular examples, the course will examine some of the core issues in the field including: the causes of riots; psychological versus sociological explanations; the role of race/ethnicity; the impact of traditional and new social media on the nature and organisation of rioting; the role and changing nature of the policing of urban disorder; and how riots might be understood both historically and comparatively.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write and submit two pieces of formative coursework for assessment and peer feedback. The first will be an essay outline - in effect an outline of an answer to a potential examination question, including a full introductory paragraph. The second will be an outline of their intended case study. Both pieces of formative coursework will be shared via Moodle and all students will be encouraged to offer constructive feedback to each other as well, of course, as receiving feedback from the course director. Peer feedback will be utilised as a means of encouraging a degree of group work and collective endeavour among course participants.

Evidence Review and Synthesis for Decision Making

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Huseyin Naci COW 3.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health, MSc in Health, Population and Society and MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is relevant to all students with an interest in the health and social care interventions.

Course content: Evidence review and synthesis methods (such as systematic reviews and meta-analyses) are increasingly used to evaluate the relative benefits and harms of healthcare interventions. In situations where direct, head-to-head comparisons of interventions do not exist, researchers also increasingly perform indirect comparisons (e.g., network meta-analyses) of two or more interventions to address comparative effectiveness questions. A broad range of decision making bodies across the health care sector (including health technology assessment bodies, drug and medical device licensing agencies, biopharmaceutical industry, and hospitals) need individuals equipped with the methods of reviewing and synthesising the existing body of evidence by performing systematic reviews and meta-analyses.

This course will be focused on the principles of reviewing and synthesising the existing body of literature. The course will have three components. The first will provide the rationale for adopting a systematic approach for evidence review and synthesis. It will equip students with the methods to undertake risk of bias assessments of randomised and non-randomised studies. The second component will focus on the quantitative synthesis of multiple studies in meta-analysis. The third component will discuss the opportunities and challenges of using evidence for decision-making.

The intended learning outcomes of this course will be the following:

- Describe the rationale for adopting a systematic approach to literature review
- Define the principal threats to validity both in individual studies and collections of studies
- Critically evaluate the quality of randomised and non-randomised studies in oral and written form
- Assess heterogeneity in a collection of studies
- Design and perform a systematic review and meta-analysis evaluating a health care intervention in a group setting
- Describe the opportunities and challenges of using systematic review and meta-analysis findings for decision making

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 3 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment:

- Systematic review and meta-analysis protocol (submitted as a group) - feedback provided by course instructor
- Peer review of risk of bias assessments (groups to provide feedback to each other based on suggested areas to emphasise by course instructor)
- Peer review of meta-analysis dataset and statistical analysis plan (groups to provide feedback to each other based on suggested areas to emphasise by course instructor)

Indicative reading: Cochrane Handbook for Systematic Reviews of Interventions (version 5.1.0, updated March 2011).

Assessment: Project (70%, 3000 words) in the Week 11.

Presentation (30%) in the ST.

Summative assessment:

- meta-analysis
- Poster presentation of findings to a hypothetical decision maker (30%)

MPA Policy Paper

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Dissertation.

Course content: The aim of the course is to enable students to plan, design and conduct independent analysis in an area of public policy. MPA students will write an individually-authored policy paper of no more than 6,000 words on a topic developed in consultation with their Academic Adviser. The paper will analyse a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and propose an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. It must be addressed to a non-academic audience and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers. The main body of the paper should include methodology, results of the analysis, discussion of different policy options, conclusions and policy recommendations. The policy paper must be accompanied by an Executive Summary. Policy papers can utilise quantitative and/or qualitative data and draw on secondary and/or primary research.

Teaching: 6 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars and 1 hour of seminars in the LT.

These six seminars provide academic and practical guidance on developing the policy paper topic and question; designing analytical framework; structuring and presenting policy analysis; and writing policy recommendations. The student's Academic Adviser will provide advice and guidance on this piece of work.

Formative coursework: A policy paper proposal (of no more than 750 words in total) consisting of the title, abstract, research question, justification for analysis, feasibility of the topic, an explanation of sources, structure and analytical framework must be submitted in the MT. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their Academic Adviser. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.

Welfare Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29 and Dr Berkay Ozcan OLD2.32

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course has no formal pre-requisites. Because much of the empirical evidence referred to in the course is quantitative in nature, a familiarity with basic statistical concepts and basic calculus is useful but not essential. (These topics are reviewed during the pre-session course of the MPA programme EC408.)

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the analysis and measurement of the welfare of individuals and societies, examining concepts, measurement and data, as well as providing illustrations. The aims are to provide an understanding of the main tools used to measure and monitor individuals and social welfare, and to develop skills for assessing academic research and official statistics (as produced by national or international agencies) and for undertaking one's own analysis. The first half of the course focuses on univariate monetary measures of economic wellbeing notably 'income', and on the experience of OECD countries (especially the UK, EU, and USA), but the aim is also to place these in the context of developments based on other approaches and in other countries including middle- and low-income nations. The topics covered include measurement of inequality, poverty, and mobility; setting poverty thresholds and equivalence scales; data sources and their quality; empirical illustrations considering assessments of trends within countries, cross-national differences, and global poverty and inequality. The second half of the course broadens the perspective to consider a range of non-monetary, multidimensional, and subjective measures of welfare for individuals and societies. Examples include occupational and socio-economic status (SES), anthropometric measures, the Human Development Index and related indices of development, and measures of happiness and life satisfaction.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The course provides a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading for the course is in journal articles. Books providing overviews include Salverda W, Nolan B, Smeeding TM (eds) The Oxford Handbook on Economic Inequality (2009); and Atkinson A and Bourguignon F (eds) Handbook of Income Distribution Volume 2 (2015) and the earlier Volume 1 (2000). A full reading list is distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Social Research Methods

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fabien Accominotti STC S206

Dr Rebecca Elliott - STC S211

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Part-time students taking the MSc over two years may take the course in either the first or second year.

Course content: The course introduces students to the theory and practice of research methods in sociology, comprising both qualitative and quantitative methods. The first ten sessions (in the Michaelmas Term) cover quantitative methods and the design of quantitative social research. As the course does not cover hands-on quantitative data analysis, students are encouraged to take MY451 and MY452 to complement it. The ten seminars in the Lent address issues of research design, data collection and analysis in relation to qualitative research methods. Separate syllabi detailing course objectives, course style, readings, teaching arrangements and student assessment and for each of the two terms will be distributed at the beginning of each sequence.

Teaching: The course is taught by a mixture of lectures, seminars and workshops. It normally provides two hours of teaching each week in MT, with 3 hour workshops in the LT and three revision seminars in ST.

Formative coursework: Students must participate in group presentations and undertake several pieces of compulsory practical work during the year.

Assessment: Exam (25%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (25%) in the MT.

Presentation (10%) in the LT.

Research project (40%) in the ST.

The Michaelmas Term session is assessed by two methods: (a) one piece of coursework (25%) and (b) a two-hour written examination in the ST (25%). The Lent Term session is assessed by a qualitative research project (10% presentation; 40% project write-up).

Two hard copies of each assessment, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the submission day. The Michaelmas Term coursework consists of two 1000-word memos; these are due on the Wednesday of week 9 and the Wednesday of week 11, respectively. The Lent Term project is due on the fourth Tuesday of Summer Term. An additional copy of each assessment is to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day each is due.

Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework are required.

Politics and Society

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer STC S105

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas, Ideologies and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas, Ideologies and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to explore some of the great debates about the relationship between politics and society. It will examine the interaction between political institutions, economic interests and cultural ideas, especially in societies that are both democratic and capitalist. The course will explore some of the classic empirical and historical controversies that have animated political sociologists. Each week, we will discuss questions like: What gave rise to states and nations? Why are some social movements more successful than others? How does social change shape parties and elections? Do repressive states give rise to radicalism? Why are welfare states more developed in some countries than others? Why is there no Labor Party in the United States? Under what conditions does democracy develop? What explains the growth of populism? And has neo-liberalism become hegemonic? The course will also look at the canonical writings of authors like Marx, Weber and Tocqueville, as well as critically explore the use of some political concepts. In addition, it will enable you to build up your knowledge of a number of countries and to assess the strengths and weaknesses of some of the main theories and approaches that have dominated the study of political sociology. These include functionalist, rational choice, and institutionalist theories, as well as historical and comparative approaches.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Reading weeks: week 6 MT and week 6 LT. Seminars: Papers will be presented by participants and, on occasion, by guest speakers. In addition to the weekly seminar, there will be a number of additional seminars specifically concerned with research strategies in political sociology. If possible, students should attend the lecture course SO203 Political Sociology when available.

Formative coursework: Members of the seminar will be required to present a number of papers during the course of the seminar. There will also be a termly essay in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: B. Anderson. Imagined Communities; R. Archer, Why is There No Labour Party in the United States?; M. ### Approaches to Human Rights

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chetan Bhatt TW3.8.02A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Rights. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped but a limited number of places are usually available to students from outside the MSc in Human Rights who wish to take this as an option. Priority is given to postgraduate students in the Sociology Department and those registered on the LLM. The course is also available as an outside option for other MSc degrees where regulations and numbers permit. Students from other programmes who wish to apply for a place on SO424 must complete the online application form on LSEforYou stating reasons for wishing to take the course.

Course content: This is a multi-disciplinary course that provides students with a rigorous and focused engagement with different disciplinary perspectives on the subject of human rights including philosophy, sociology and international law. It provides students with contending interpretations of human rights as an idea and practice from the different standpoints that the disciplines present (including debates from within and between the disciplines), and investigates the particular knowledge claims and modes of reasoning that the respective disciplines engage. The course applies the insights of disciplinary frameworks of understanding to key human rights issues such as universality, the right to life, free speech, humanitarian intervention, war, genocide, human rights activism, globalization, and states of emergency.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Reading weeks: week 6 MT and week 6 LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Active participation in the workshops is expected and students will be asked to make a presentation to their group.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus and students are expected to read widely from more general texts on human rights, to more specific texts outlining the debates on human rights from a particular disciplinary perspective. Introductory reading: Jack Donnelly, Universal Human Rights in Theory and Practice; Michael Freeman, Human Rights; Philip Alston and Ryan Goodman, International Human Rights (2013). Philosophy: P. Jones, Rights, (1994); A. Swift, Political Philosophy: A Beginners' Guide for Students and Politicians, (2006). International Law: A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd ed. (2005), chapter 19; P. Sieghart, The Lawful Rights of Mankind (1985), S. Greer, The European Convention on Human Rights - Achievements, Problems and Prospects, Cambridge University Press, 2007. Sociology: L. Morris, Rights: Sociological Perspectives (2006); B. Turner, Vulnerability and Human Rights (2006); A. Woodiwiss, Human Rights (2005).

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to Sara Ulfspärre, Centre for the Study of Human Rights, TW3.8.02, no later than 16:30 on the first Tuesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Regulation, Risk and Economic Life

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter STC S217

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to sociological perspectives on economic life and risk regulation in advanced industrial societies. Topics include economic sociology, state risk regulation including regulatory variations, enforcement and business responses, economic and civil society sources of regulation, organizational risk management, science, experts and risk regulation, globalization, and trends in risk regulation. The course will draw upon a broad international literature on social and economic regulation and case studies from the environmental, financial and public health domains.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the MT. 25 hours of seminars in the LT. 5 hours of seminars in the ST.

Reading weeks: week 6 MT and week 6 LT.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought) and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A review of classical social theory. The origins and development of classical sociological theory; exploring the work of Marx, Weber, Simmel and Durkheim through a close reading and interpretation of primary texts. It is not assumed that students have a basic grounding in classical social theory, although it is expected that students who register for this course will be prepared to develop their understanding through primary readings, and not rely on textbooks.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Reading week: week 6 (MT)

Indicative reading: Relevant books that provide an overview include: A. Callinicos, Social Theory; N. Dodd, Social Theory and Modernity; A. Giddens, Capitalism and Modern Social Theory; G. Ritzer, Sociological Theory. The reading list for each seminar will be divided up into essential and additional reading. Students will be asked to read between 50 and 100 pages of primary text per week. The following is a sample list of readings: Marx, K: The Communist Manifesto & Capital (sections of vols 1 & 3); Weber, M: The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism & 'Science as a Vocation'; Simmel, G: The Philosophy of Money (various sections) & various essays such as 'The Metropolis and Mental Life', 'The Stranger', etc.; Durkheim, E: The Division of Labour in Society & The Elementary Forms of the Religious Life (various sections from each).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day. Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO434

Cultural Theory and Cultural Forms

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fabien Accominotti STC S206

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Culture and Society. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Sociology of Culture is the core course for the MSc Culture and Society. The aim is to introduce you to a wide range of approaches, debates and issues that loom large in the study of cultural behaviour. By the end of this course you should feel you have a reasonable map of different aspects and approaches to researching cultural processes; and you should feel able to formulate your own research questions and strategies within the diverse traditions of the sociology of culture.

The course's primary focus is on the consumption and the production of culture, but the class also explores larger sociological notions (e.g. high vs. popular culture; subcultures) and approaches (e.g. field theoretical vs. interactionist approaches to cultural production), as well as social mechanisms that are transposable to other, non-cultural settings (e.g. mechanisms explaining superstar phenomena). Throughout we use a mix of empirical case studies and sociological theory. We want to encourage you to connect research and analysis – to keep asking whether a particular theory is good for making sense of things, and conversely, what concepts can be developed from particular things in the world.

The first term of the class (the Michaelmas Term) concentrates on the sociological explanation of cultural consumption. It surveys classic theories as well as recent debates dealing with the reception of culture. It then broadens the scope to explore how cultural consumption relates to social stratification. In the Lent Term, we first introduce major theoretical paradigms in the sociology of cultural production, and examine sociological accounts of artistic creativity. We then use cultural fields as laboratory-like settings to delineate mechanisms that can also be at work in other social domains, but are especially prevalent in cultural worlds. We thus unpack processes of social valuation, the relationship between talent and success, as well as a number of social mechanisms at play in artistic labour markets and in the culture industries. We conclude with a brief sequence on contemporary issues in the production of culture.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Reading weeks: week 6 (MT) and week 6 (LT)

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one piece of non-assessed written work per term and prepare seminar presentations.

SO448

City Design: Research Studio

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall TW2 8.01B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The City Design Research Studio is the central unit of the MSc programme, linking the critical issues raised in the core and optional lecture courses, including questions of power and social justice, with the practical analysis of issues of city design and proposals for urban intervention. This course promotes a practical understanding of the city as a social and built environment. Through a mixed-methods engagement with site-based issues, the research studio explores the different ways city design relates to policy formation, planning processes, legal frameworks, financing mechanisms, local forms of organisation and the emerging needs of complex urban societies. It will provide students with an appreciation of the complexities of urban design and development processes, and with interdisciplinary tools for addressing specific urban challenges. The course addresses design as both informed and imaginative modes of research and practice that shapes urban environments, responds to urban problems, and connects visual, social and material dimensions of the city. It aims to integrate the physical, economic, social and political aspects of urban contexts, and develop ways to analyse these visually, textually and verbally. The studio-based approach to learning is an immersion in site-based research and experimental, strategic and pragmatic forms of design intervention.

Teaching: The Studio course runs for one full day each teaching week in MT and LT through lectures, workshops and regular small-group tutorials; additional specialist seminars and workshops are scheduled throughout the Studio course. Studio groups are expected to work together during the scheduled Studio hours, and prepare collectively for regular workshops and tutorials. In MT, the Studio course focuses on methods and approaches of social and spatial research and analysis. In LT, Studio groups work intensively on a detailed analysis of a specific urban context, and develop a practical proposal for intervention in that site.

Formative coursework: Group presentations for faculty and guest critics. 1 x research presentation and site analysis. (MT)

Assessment: Other (50%) and other (50%).

The assessment consists of one Studio portfolio (50%) and an individual tutor assessment (50%).

SO449

Independent Project

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall TW2 8.01B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The independent project enables students to develop an original and extended piece of work on any approved topic within the field of the MSc programme - students are encouraged, but not required, to develop work on themes or sites introduced in their Studio or core courses. The project may focus on a small-scale urban research study or on a practical proposal for urban intervention. Approval for the topic must be obtained from your academic advisor.

Teaching: In LT students attend a project workshop and then submit a provisional project abstract; academic advisors for the independent project are assigned on the basis of the abstract. In ST, each student has regular supervisory meetings with their academic advisor, and one day of final group reviews with members of faculty. Students are also encouraged to consult with other members of faculty during regular office hours.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit one project abstract, and to produce regular formative project work in consultation with their academic advisor.

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on the 22nd of August if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system.

SO451 Half Unit

Cities by Design

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall TW2 8.01B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is available on the MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

SO451 is a capped course and we can only accept 32 students. If you are not registered on the MSc City Design and Social Design please submit an e-mail to Suzanne Hall motivating your inclusion on the course, ONCE you have attended the first introductory lecture where we will be available to respond to individual questions.

Course content: The course examines the relationship between built form and its political, social and cultural relations in contemporary urban landscapes. By introducing students to established and emerging approaches to design, the course investigates how the design of our complex urban environments shapes and is shaped by the people who live in them, and the urgencies of time and place. The course focuses on current urban research across diverse urban contexts and attempts to reconcile the often complex inter-connections between urban theory, research, policy and practice. A range of contemporary cities form the base for the course, and these are explored through urban design milieu and architectures including: design as ideology, design as observation, and the architectures of infrastructure, evidence and insurgency.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. Reading week: week 6

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Written feedback is given within two weeks of the essay submission, and in addition a writing seminar is incorporated in the course in preparation for the summative assessed essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course. We simultaneously engage with literatures by architects (as a broadly defined practice) and a range of social scientists. These include architects exploring new modes of practice and research, for example: Bremner, Burdett, Davis, Easterling, Hall, Hernandez, Lokko, King, Kurgan, Matsipa, Mehrotra and Weizmann, as well as social scientists exploring design and city space, for example: Datta, Hayden, Holston, Jacobs, Madden, Roy, Sennett, Scott, Simone, and Tonkiss.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 5000 words) in the LT. Presentation (25%) in the MT.

An illustrated course essay of not more than 5,000 words to be submitted by 4pm on the first Tuesday of LT. Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to all copies, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day. Attendance at seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO457 Half Unit Political Reconciliation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Moon STC S109

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped.

Course content: The course introduces students to current issues in the field of transitional justice and historical injustice, and draws upon a range of examples from Africa, Latin America, post-communist Europe, Australia and the US. Topics include transitional justice as a field of practice and a field of knowledge; historical injustice - apologies and reparations; state crimes; retributive and restorative justice; perpetration; theology and therapy in reconciliation; memory and atrocity. The course explores the politics of reconciliation by identifying and examining its key themes, the practices and institutions in which it is embedded and the political subjects of reconciliation discourse. It is an interdisciplinary course that draws upon literature from sociology, law, political theory, anthropology and philosophy amongst others, in order to understand and interpret the wide social and political reach of reconciliation, as well as its limitations.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Reading week: week 6

Formative coursework: One formative essay to be returned in week seven of the MT (does not contribute towards the overall mark for the course).

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This case study-led course provides a critical understanding of major urban development initiatives and practices in international city contexts. It will introduce students to the following knowledge and skills:

- general understanding of political theories underlying urban development models
- ability to situate major urban development initiatives within different development cultures and socio-economic policy agendas
- understanding the role of public, private and third party actors and formal and informal urban development processes
- perspectives on decision making at the strategic, pre-design stage for urban development initiatives and ability to relate urban policy to spatial outcomes, operating at different scales
- knowledge of key evaluation approaches and analytic frameworks used in the analysis of proposed and existing urban developments
- understanding of how urban development objectives, phases and processes can be integrated and how policy making, economic development, urban planning, city design, architecture, and engineering are related.

The course content is based on contemporary projects and urban trends examined in the context of cities throughout the world. These range from policies such as congestion charging (London) and Progressive City Development (Medellin) to urban development trends such as extreme urbanism in Mumbai and privatist planning (Canary Wharf, London and Santa Fe, Mexico City). Such projects will be examined through critical frameworks that include utilitarianism, cost benefit analysis, social and environmental justice, citizenship theory and the capabilities approach. The course will focus on negotiation, politics, financing, appraisals and decision-making for cities by inviting practitioners, experts and policy makers to join individual sessions for presentations and debate. Seminars and assessed project work for the course will be based on the analysis of Development Strategies and City Design briefs. Further information on the course can be found on:

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Two hard copies of the project, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Wednesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO468 Half Unit

International Migration and Migrant Integration

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick McGovern STC S119E

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Coverage of contemporary sociological perspectives on migrant integration including theories of international migration, immigration policy, labour market incorporation; welfare and social rights; 'assimilation' and social integration; multiculturalism; religion and ethnicity; and the second generation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write two non-assessed pieces of work during the term.

Indicative reading: There is no recommended textbook. Books of a general nature that cover substantial parts of the syllabus are: S. Castles and M. J. Miller (2013) The Age of Migration (5th edn); P. Kvisto and T. Faist (2010) Beyond A Border and A. Portes (2014) Immigrant America (4th edn). A more comprehensive bibliography will be available to students taking this course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Exam will be held during the Summer Term exam session.

SO469 Half Unit

Risk and Governance: A Sociological Approach

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter STC S217

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students an advanced understanding of the various ways in which risk is governed in modern societies and an appreciation of the complexities of different levels of risk governance. It will consider three main areas. First, state based risk governance regimes; second, risk governance beyond the state; and third transnational risk governance. The topics under consideration include a critical discussion of what is regarded as risk evidence and the role of experts in policy making; how state regulators incorporate risk based approaches into their governance regimes; the role of insurance companies and other business organizations in risk governance; the role of the public; and attempts to governance risks which traverse national borders. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including the environment, finance, biotechnology and food.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the MT.

Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: Students should hand in one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Ericson, R.V., Doyle, A. and Barry, D. (2003) Insurance as Governance University of Toronto Press. Hood, C., Rothstein, H. and Baldwin, R. (2001) The Government of Risk. Lahsen, Myanna (2005) 'Technocracy, Democracy, and U.S. Climate Politics: The Need for Demarcations'. Science, Technology & Human Values, 30, 137-169.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO470 Half Unit The Sociology of Markets

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leon Wansleben STC S208

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Economic Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers an introduction to the sociology of markets. We will look at this topic from two different sides: On the one hand, we will explore different theoretical issues in economic sociology, such as market structure, valuation, and the role of the state. Here, the underlying question is what sociology can contribute to a theoretical understanding of markets. On the other hand, we will explore particular case studies, such as illegal markets or markets for fine art; students will get the chance to study one of these cases in-depth. By the end of the course, students will be versed in the sociological and larger debates about markets, and they will be equipped to contribute to this debate with small, innovative case studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: A 1500 word essay is required.

Indicative reading: Recommended texts: Callon, Michel. 1998. The laws of the markets. Blackwell Publishers: Oxford; Fligstein, Neil. 2001. *The Architecture of Markets. Embeddedness and the paradigm of economic sociology." Theory and Society 30:775-810; Swedberg, Richard. 2003. Principles of Economic Sociology. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Assessment will consist of an essay analysis of two case studies along with the submission of a portfolio (100%).

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Wednesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Attendance at all workshop sessions and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO471 Half Unit Technology, Power and Culture

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Judy Wajcman STC S203

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought) and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a detailed understanding of sociologically informed approaches to the social studies of science and technology. It will consider how macro theories of post-industrial society (from Bell to Castells) have conceptualised the role of technology in social change. It will then look at the development of STS as a field that highlights the constitutive role of objects and artefacts in social relations. In other words, it will reflect upon sociology's traditional neglect of the social life of things or materiality. These broad themes will then be elaborated substantively. First, by considering the role of technology in reconfiguring time, space and mobility. Second, by considering power relations and social inequalities embedded in digital technologies, such as the Internet and mobile phones. Third, by treating technology as a culture that shapes gender identities, such as those that find expression in the virtuality of cyberspace. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including the environment, the internet, robotics, sex, and weapons.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Hackett, E. et al (2008) The Handbook of Science and Technology Studies (MIT Press). MacKenzie, D. and Wajcman J. (1999) The Social Shaping of Technology (MIT Press). (2013) To Save Everything, Click Here: Technology, Solutionism and the Urge to Fix Problems That Don't Exist (Allen Lane)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SO473 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Crime, Control and the City

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Janet Foster STC S218a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This half unit course examines crime and disorder in city landscapes, the relationship between crime, space and place, and the complex mix of informal and formal social controls that influence different types and levels of crime. Drawing on a range of comparative literature from different cities, and using a mixture of classic and contemporary texts, we examine the importance of informal social control in maintaining social order in cities, the role of policing, and what happens when formal and informal social controls fail using the recent riots, gangs and homicide as examples. We also explore the principles of crime prevention - both physical and social - and use public housing as a case study to critically examine the relationship between crime and design.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Reading week: week 6.

Indicative reading: Body-Gendrot (2012) Globalization, Fear and Insecurity (Palgrave Macmillan); Bottoms, A (2012) 'Developing socio-spatial criminology' in Maguire M et al (eds.) The Oxford Handbook of Criminology (5th edn.); Cochrane, A and Talbot, D (eds.) Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay with submission sheets on each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO475 Half Unit Material Culture and Design

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Donald Slater STC S310

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought) and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on designed entities in everyday life, looking at the ways in which materials are configured into things, practices, spaces and forms, and at the assemblage of objects across production, design, consumption and use. Though aiming to produce expertise in specifically social science research, the course will bring together literatures and debates that cross the social sciences, humanities and science/technology, drawing particularly on actor-network theory, material culture studies, sociology of consumption, practice theory, urban and architectural studies, cultural theory and design studies. There will also be a strong emphasis on methodology: what tools are available to social scientists to investigate the emergent properties and impacts of designed objects. Case studies will be central to the teaching, developing theoretical and methodological strategies through a (changing) set of empirical cases that are likely to include: digital objects (software, games); media objects; lights and lighting; fashion; domestic interiors.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 essay applying a theoretical approach to a specific case study.

Indicative reading: Bijker, W. E. and J. Law (eds.) (1992) Shaping technology/building society: Studies in Sociotechnical change. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press. Frayling, C., E. King and H. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay with submission sheets on each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO476 Researching Migration: research questions and research methods

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick McGovern STC S119E and Dr Eiko Thielemann CON 3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Having introduced the students to a range of possible research strategies, the students will be asked to prepare informal seminar presentations on their proposed research in the MT and LT. In addition, they will submit a one hundred word topic summary towards the end of the MT and a 400 word research proposal before the end of the LT. They will also prepare and deliver a formal presentation on their research for a workshop early in the ST. At each stage, participants will be encouraged to use feedback from the course convenors and fellow students to revise their research plans. A final proposal will be submitted after the ST workshop.

Teaching: Lectures 3 x 1 hour (3); Seminars 2 x 2 hours (4); Workshop 5 hours (5). Total 12 hours

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 presentations in the MT, LT and ST.

SO479 Half Unit

Human Rights and Postcolonial Theory

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ayca Cubukcu TW3.8.02C

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Drawing on postcolonial theory and critique, this course explores how human rights and international law came to be institutionalized in the context of European colonialism, and what the contemporary implications of this historical fact may be today. Engaging with the fields of socio-legal studies, intellectual history and social theory, the course also asks why, and with what consequences, human rights tend to monopolize the political language through which many social movements throughout the world articulate their desires for social and global justice.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

SO480 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Urban Inequalities

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francine Tonkiss STC S114

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers a critical introduction to key issues and processes in the study of contemporary urban inequalities. Recent urban analysis has highlighted the growing share of the global population that now lives in cities; this course puts that growth in the context of another major urban trend: deepening patterns of inequality in many cities across the world. It examines the continuing role of 'older' bases of urban inequality - access to land and property, gender inequity, ethnic and racial discrimination, legal exclusion and informality - as well as significant emerging patterns, including extreme concentrations of wealth at the top, middle-class stagnation, privatisation and spatial secession, immigration and insecurity. It also examines the complex of ways in which urban inequality is experienced, not only in terms of income or property, but also in consumption inequalities, inequities in access to housing, transport, urban services and legal protections, spatial disparities and environmental risks and injustices. The course considers the range of social, economic, environmental and political factors that shape, and also might help to address, urban inequality in these different contexts.

In sum, the course will:

- provide a critical introduction to current and emerging patterns of urban inequality
- consider the production of urban inequalities through social, economic, political and spatial processes
- explore common themes and critical differences across developed and developing cities
- address key debates in a range of urban disciplines, and situate these in specific urban contexts and examples

Key themes

- Urban growth and the growth of inequality
- Wealth, income and inequality
- Spatial injustice: segregation and access
- Environment and inequities
- Informality and insecurity
- Social inequality in the city: gender, race and exclusion
- Governing inequality

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

1 x 2000-word essay

SO481 Half Unit Class, Politics and Culture

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lisa McKenzie STC S212

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought) and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will begin by introducing traditional theories of social class and stratification before going on to examine the history and political significance of class in Britain, and how this compares with other countries throughout the world. It will then look at the place of class in a contemporary political context, critically examining the claim made by some 'postmodern' writers, and prominent politicians, that class boundaries have been irrevocably eroded. The course will then move on to look at the seminal work of French sociologist Pierre Bourdieu and his supposition that class boundaries are most clearly discernible from examining people's cultural taste, with the privileged using their preferences for 'highbrow' culture as a means of expressing their superiority over the working classes, who tend to prefer more 'lowbrow' culture. We interrogate how these arguments relate today, where the lines between high and low culture are increasingly blurred, where strong cross-cultural differences persist between Europe and the U.S, and where new taste distinctions exist even in traditionally lowbrow art forms, such as comedy and pop music. We then take a more detailed look at class-based boundaries in taste and lifestyle. In particular, we focus on the way in which the middle classes demonise sections of the working class based on what they consider to be 'pathological' consumption choices - focusing in particular on the 'Chav' phenomenon in Britain. We go on to explore both the meaning and consequences of such overt class prejudice, both in Britain but also using research from the U.S, the Netherlands and other international contexts. Finally, the module will ask to what extent class boundaries are malleable? How easy is it for people to escape their backgrounds and move upward or downward in social space? This final section of the course thus looks at contemporary patterns of social mobility, examining the social benefits and challenges that mobility implies, increasing closure within global elites, and the rise of the middle classes in developing countries like China, Brazil and South Africa.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Reading week: week 6.

SO482 Half Unit

Topics in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suki Ali STC S102

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course offers students a broad exposure to issues in the theory of race, racism and ethnicity as well as an opportunity to consider a range of contemporary instances in which the social and political problems arising from these factors of division have been manifested. It will offer a preliminary genealogy of race thinking connecting historical and theoretical work with new scholarly debates over multi-culture, diversity, genomics, postcolonialism, and human rights.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Reading week: week 6. Seminar length may be extended to three hours each depending on student numbers.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of writing a 3,000 word paper in preparation for the assessed essay.

Indicative reading: Appiah, Anthony (1996) Color conscious: the political morality of race, Princeton, N.J., Princeton University press; Ballhatchet, Kenneth (1980) Sex, Race and Class under the Raj, Weidenfeld and Nicolson; Barber, Butler, Judith P (2004) Precarious life: the powers of mourning and violence London, Verso; Cabral, Amilcar (2000) Return To The Source, Monthly Review; London, Hurst & Co; Eze, Emanuel Chukwudi (2001) Achieving our humanity: the idea of the postracial future, London, Routledge; Fanon, Frantz (1967) Toward The African Revolution, Grove; Fredrickson, George M (2002) Racism: a short history, Princeton, N.J., Princeton University Press; Jones, Greta (1980) Social Darwinism and English Thought, Harvester; Hannaford, Ivan (1996) Race: the history of an idea in the West, Washington, D.C. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay with submission sheets on each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Thursday of LentTerm. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO483 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17

Social Change Organizations

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael McQuarrie, STC S107

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The purpose of this class is to familiarise students with organisational sociology from the perspective of organisations other than firms or governments. Organisations are one of the primary tools society has for realising values and interests. However, organisations are not simply tools. They constrain and enable action for social change in a variety of ways and shape the outcomes of our efforts. Attempting to realise social change using organisations creates a set of dilemmas that must be managed and dealt with for efforts to be successful. The course will focus on social movement organisations, NGOs, associations, cooperatives, communes, and the dilemmas that these organisations confront in attempting to realise their goal of a better society. The course will also familiarise students with the theoretical and analytical tools sociologists use to understand social change organisations.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The class format will be a combination of lectures, guest Q&A with leaders of social change organisations, and seminar discussion.

Week 6 is a reading week.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework will consist of preparing and leading discussions, in-class analytical writing, and assignments meant to advance student work on the final essay.

Indicative reading: Katherine Chen, Enabling Creative Chaos Monika Krause, The Good Project

Nina Eliasoph, Making Volunteers

James Ferguson, The Anti-Politics Machine

Timothy Mitchell, The Rule of Experts

David Graeber, The Democracy Project

Frances Fox Piven and Richard Cloward, Poor People's Movements

Charles Perrow, "A Society of Organizations"

Elisabeth Clemens and Mary Bernstein, "The Multi-Institutional Perspective"

V.I. Lenin "What is to be done?"

Joreen, "The Tyranny of Structurelessness"

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

For their assessment students will complete an essay that does not exceed 4000 words in length. The essay will either be a review essay of the sociological literature on a topic related to social change organisations or an analysis of a social change organisation using the tools learned in the class.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Tuesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO489 Half Unit

Family and Migration

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ursula Henz STC.S100B

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the family life, family patterns and family relationships of contemporary migrant families in Great Britain and other societies. It applies three perspectives to migrant families: diversity, integration and transnationality. It examines variations in family life, patterns and relationships in migrant families; particular challenges that are associated with the migration of a family to a new country as well as transformations of family roles and intimacy in transnational families. After an overview over family forms in different cultures, the course explores selected substantive topics. Indicative topics are: migrant children and children left behind; marriage migration and transnational marriages; intermarriage and fertility as indicators of migrant integration; the roles of mother and father in immigrant and transnational families; migrant families and family care.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Kraler, Kofman, Kohli & Schmoll (eds.) (2011) Gender, Generations and the Family in International Migration; Beck & Beck-Gernsheim (2014): Distant Love; Ehrenreich & Hochschild (2004): Global Woman: Nannies, Maids, and Sex Workers in the New Economy; Dreby, Joanna (2010): *Divided by Borders. ## SO494

MSc in Political Sociology Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer STC S105

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

These seminars are for students on the MSc Political Sociology only.

Course content: These seminars aim to help you to begin the process of writing your dissertation. At the end of MT we will have four seminars that aim to get students thinking at a meta-level about research in political sociology. The seminars can, of course, only address a small selection of approaches. Examples might include rational choice and institutionalist theories, or comparative and case study methods. But please note that the MSc in Political Sociology takes a pluralist approach and does not seek to prescribe these or any other particular theories or methods. In LT we will hold dissertation workshop seminars that aim to give individually tailored guidance on proposed research questions in small groups with fellow students who are working on similar topics or using similar methods. Every student is required to make a formal presentation once during the term.

Teaching: 6 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of workshops in the LT.

4 x 1.5 hours seminars in MT. 10 x 1.5 hours workshops in LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Students will: (1) assess the strengths and weakness of selected theories and methods; (2) formulate a clearly specified research question and set out the rationale for researching this question and a proposed approach; and (3) give a presentation which develops one or two of the main arguments they anticipate will be important to their project.

Indicative reading: Donatella Della Porta and Michael Keating (2008), Approaches and Methods in the Social Sciences: a Pluralist Approach, Thomas Janoski et al, (2005), The Handbook of Political Sociology, James Mahoney and Dietrich Rueschemeyer (2003), Comparative Historical Analysis in the Social Sciences.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on the 17th of August if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system

MSc in Economy, Risk and Society Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter STC S217

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Risk, Regulation and Economic Life (SO425)

Course content: The dissertation is an extended piece of written work that that is your own independent research investigation of a human rights issue or problem, undertaken with the guidance of your dissertation supervisor. In the dissertation, you will critically appraise evidence, arguments and debates to reach a conclusion your research question. The key requirement is that the dissertation should demonstrate a high level of independent critical ability. You must show your ability to organise your material clearly and logically and to sustain a reasoned and cogent argument from beginning to end. Where appropriate you should explain clearly the research method(s) that you have applied and the reasons for your choice of approach. You should show awareness of any shortcomings of your study in relation to methods employed and where relevant, quality or quantity of the data, and disciplinary approach.

Teaching: 2 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be one Introductory lecture in MT for all MSc Economy, Risk and Society students, on the challenges and requirements of doing independent research for dissertation purposes, and different methodologies available for an interdisciplinary programme. The LT and ST sessions will cover fieldwork and research ethics. Students will work in smaller groups, in which they present and discuss possible research questions and strategies, along with preparing the dissertation and timeline.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit two pieces of work; one topic proposal during MT, and a formal abstract at end of LT.

Indicative reading:

- Alan Bryman, Social Research Methods (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004)
- Clive Seale, The Quality of Qualitative Research (London: Sage, 1999)

SO499

MSc in Sociology Dissertation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leon Wansleben STC S208

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought) and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation may be on any topic within the field of the MSc programme studied. Approval for the topic must be obtained from the relevant Programme Tutor.

Teaching: Dissertation Preparation

The candidate should confirm a working title and prepare a brief abstract for their intended dissertation (up to one A4 page, double-spaced, including your name not your candidate number), which should be reviewed with their Academic Advisor no later than the Monday, week 8 of Lent Term. Along with the title and abstract the candidate and Academic Advisor should review and complete the Research Ethics Review Checklist by this same time. These abstracts are the basis for an MSc dissertation Workshop that is organised for each programme. Attendance at this workshop is optional but students are, of course, encouraged to attend.

Dissertation Particulars

The dissertation must be a report of a research project, whether it comprises primary empirical material, secondary empirical material or theoretical/exegetical work on a body of social thought: i.e. there must be an identifiable and clear research question governing the research project; there must be critical reflection on the methods used (including their limits and the reasons why they warrant the kinds of claims made); and substantive analysis of empirical or analytical material. Even where the topic is substantively a literature or policy-review exercise, candidates are expected to offer original reasoned argument and interpretation and to show evidence of a competence in research methods. Guidance on topic selection and methods will normally be provided by the candidate's tutor. The dissertation is primarily a reflection of the candidate's own work and so feedback will not be given on draft versions of the dissertation. The dissertation should reflect the candidate's own views.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on the 17th of August if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system.

Governing Cities in an Urban Age: Challenges and Opportunities

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett TW2 8.01J and Prof Antony Travers CON6.06

Additional teacher(s): Dr Michael McQuarrie

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Governing Cities in an Urban Age is an intensive exploration of the global urbanisation and the state of cities. The course introduces different stages of urban development in cities and regions across the world. It provides students with an understanding of the key challenges facing both mature and rapidly-developing metropolitan areas. It will locate the key challenges facing large cities, notably the persistent levels of social inequality, poverty, unsustainable resource use and constraints to economic efficiency. The course introduces the key tools for intervention such as planning, governance and management of land and infrastructure in response to critical pressures linked to economic development, globalisation, migration, social inclusion, climate change, resource efficiency, and resilience. The key purpose of the course will be to give participants a comprehensive framework for understanding the challenges which cities are facing today.

Topics include: global urbanisation, development and design, urban change, population growth, urban productivity, urban expansion, urban sprawl, densification, intensification, sociability, urban governance, urban institutions, budgets and responsibilities.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 7 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT.

The course will be taught over a period of one week in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Submission of a 500 word non-assessed formative statement outlining the key political, environmental and socioeconomic challenges in the student's city that will shape the content of the 2,000 word assessed report.

Indicative reading: Angel, Shlomo (2011): Making Room for a Planet of Cities. Lincoln Institute of Land Policy. Barber, Benjamin R. ### Cities and Society: Design and Social Cohesion

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett 8.01J

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Cities and Society: Design and Social Cohesion looks at some of the major drivers of urban inequality and poverty and the key actions that cities are taking to reduce urban inequalities through urban design, infrastructure and policy. This is a heavily applied course providing students with tools to analyse the socio-demographic profile of households and neighbourhoods and their relation to spatial distribution and clustering in cities of the developing and developed world. Students are introduced to traditional measures of poverty and inequality such as income and wealth as well more recent multi-dimensional poverty measures such as health and education, and provided with analytical and mapping tools to identify areas of concentration of deprivation. A particular emphasis is placed on identifying spatial strategies that can alleviate the concentration of urban poverty and inequality by optimising access to jobs, housing, education, health, public space, transport and community infrastructure.

Cities and Society will also look at the macro-economic forces that are producing uneven regional and urban development and the key planning methods to reduce levels of inequality. These include spatially blind policies such as taxation and redistribution; spatially connective policies such as infrastructure links between high and low income neighbourhoods and finally spatially targeted policies where private and public investment is targeted at the most deprived urban areas.

Topics include: inequality and GINI coefficients; from income to multi-dimensional measures of poverty; the Human Development Index and its urban relevance; affordable housing, social infrastructure; equity planning (examples include London, Barcelona, Medellin and Bogota; the London model of urban regeneration; infrastructure and equity, health and well-being, migration.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 6 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course will be taught over a period of three sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Cities and the Economy: Urban Economic Development and Finance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Savvas Verdis TW2 8.01E

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Cities and the Economy forms part of the Executive MSc in Cities. This is an applied course looking at how cities position themselves in a competitive global economy and on the role of city government and firms in driving local economic development. The course introduces key methodologies to measure and analyse the city economy as well as policies and tools available to attract investment and finance as well as improve growth and competitiveness.

From a global economic level, we will look at the forces shaping urban development and the capacity of national, regional and local

Cities and the Environment: Urban Environmental Transitions

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode TW2 8.01I

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Cities and the Environment explores critical aspects of environmental sustainability in relation to both urbanisation globally and urban change in individual cities. This is an applied course giving students the relevant tools to measure, analyse and assess environmental impact. It introduces debates on different green city paradigms and focuses specifically on approaches to urban climate change mitigation and adaptation. The course further examines implications for urban planning, governance and management.

Cities and the Environment aims to provide the students with an analytical understanding of environmental challenges linked to urban development. Based on these, students are introduced to planning approaches, policy instruments and governance arrangements enabling environmental sustainability and resilience, facilitating the transition to a green economy in cities.

Topics include: environmental sustainability, green economy, environmental impact assessments, climate change adaptation and mitigation in cities, climate resilience, urban environmental transition, resource consumption, pollution, biodiversity.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 6 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

Urban Infrastructure and Strategic Planning

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode TW2 8.011 and Prof Antony Travers CON6.06

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities and is offered as an option.

Course content: Urban infrastructure and strategic planning is a workshop based course providing practical insights on infrastructure development and strategic planning for cities. The course combines a series of lectures with studio-based group work on a case study city. Students are introduced to all key components of urban infrastructure, cutting across transport, energy, water, waste and digital network systems. A particular focus of this course is the interrelationship of transport infrastructure and urban form. This relationship forms the basis for an inquiry into strategic planning approaches and practical applications in cities around the world. Furthermore, the course covers important aspects of infrastructure governance, finance and regulation and examines implications for large-scale physical infrastructure as well as digital, smart city technologies.

Infrastructure and strategic planning aims to provide the students with a praxis-oriented understanding of urban infrastructure development and strategic planning. The workshop-based nature of the course facilitates learning and skills development in relation to strategic development planning.

Topics include: urban infrastructure, transport, energy, water, waste, digital networks, strategic planning, smart cities, finance, privatisation, municipalisation, public private partnerships, design life, lock-in, phasing

Teaching: 3 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 9 hours of workshops in the ST.

The course will be taught during the lent and summer terms through hands-on team based workshops

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Prepare a 500 word brief for your project indicating key deliverables

Urban Development and Master Planning

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett TW2 8.01J and Dr Savvas Verdis TW2 8.01E

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities and is offered as an option.

Course content: Urban Development and Master Planning is an applied group project based on a major London regeneration site. Groups of no more than six students will be introduced to one of the regeneration sites project teams which will include: local planning officers, developers, planners, designers and financing teams. The groups will first immerse themselves in the offices of the host organisation as well as the site and understand some of the project challenges. The groups will then work in a collaborative environment in order to develop solutions to the challenges set by the project teams.

Using some of the key assessment and planning tools developed in courses SO4A1, SO4A2, SO4A3 & SO4A4 of the Executive MSc in Cities, this project will encourage students to apply the most appropriate analysis, planning and finance methods to an actual development site.

Topics covered: land ownership, development goals, developing the brief, urban design and master planning strategies, wider urban context, phasing, capturing value, mix of uses, public vs private space, financing projects, residual values, negotiations between developers and public agencies, planning constraints and policies, affordable housing, lifecycle assessment, built form, density and integration.

Teaching: 3 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 9 hours of workshops in the ST.

The course will be taught during the lent and summer terms using a mixture of hands-on workshops and lectures.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Prepare a 500 word brief for your project indicating key deliverables.

Assessment: Essay (80%, 5000 words) and presentation (20%) in the ST.

This project is conducted in teams of up to six students, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for the following three components.

1. A presentation to the project team and LSE Cities staff, which counts for 20% of the total mark.
2. A group project report not exceeding 5,000 words, which will count for 80% of the final grade. Appendices to the project may be included but would normally consist only of technical data or supplementary analysis.
3. Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution in no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project.

Urban Consultancy Project

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode 8.01I and Dr Savvas Verdis 8.01E

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: The Consultancy Project is a six-month individual consultation undertaken by a student in the Executive MSc in Cities in their own organisation or for an external organisation. Through the consultancy project, students will apply the knowledge and skills acquired in the first six courses of the programme to craft policy or program improvements for public or private agencies and non-profit organisations.

Through in depth interviews with the organisation's leaders as well as the relevant stakeholders, students will focus on a specific project and offer advice on one or more of its design and implementation phases. These may include but are not limited to the concept, feasibility, design, assessment, delivery and/ or evaluation phases in the project cycle.

Examples of projects include design briefs, assessment of master plans or strategic plans, social, economic and environmental impact assessment of projects, project finance and greening of projects and policies.

Teaching: 3 hours of seminars and 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Each student will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development. Other members of staff may also advise as required. Students will be supported with face to face or web based tutorials throughout the duration of their consultancy project.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

A 500 word proposal brief for the consultation project that will be carried out independently by each student.

Assessment: Project (100%, 6000 words) in the MT.

A consultancy report assessing an organisation's challenge and offering strategic advice on possible solutions at any stage of the project or policy cycle.

ST405 Half Unit Multivariate Methods

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Irini Moustaki

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) and Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202).

Course content: An introduction to the theory and application of modern multivariate methods used in the Social Sciences: Multivariate normal distribution, principal components analysis, factor analysis, latent variable models, latent class analysis and structural equations models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned fortnightly and returned to students via Moodle with comments/feedback before the computer workshops.

Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki & J Galbraith, Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data (2nd edition); D J Bartholomew, M Knott & I Moustaki, Latent Variable Models and Factor Analysis: a unified approach; C Chatfield & A J Collins, Introduction to Multivariate Analysis; B S Everitt & G Dunn, Applied Multivariate Data Analysis; K.V. ## ST409 Half Unit Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kostas Kardaras COL 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Good undergraduate knowledge of distribution theory

Course content: A broad introduction to stochastic processes for postgraduates with an emphasis on financial and actuarial applications. The course examines Martingales, Poisson Processes, Brownian motion, stochastic differential equations and diffusion processes. Applications in Finance. Actuarial applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Indicative reading: T Bjork, Arbitrage Theory in Continuous Time; T Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus; S I Resnick, Adventures in Stochastic Processes; B K Oksendal, Stochastic Differential Equations: An Introduction with Applications, D Williams, Probability with Martingales.

ST411 Half Unit Generalised Linear Modelling and Survival Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fiona Steele COL 7.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Mathematics to the level of Mathematical Methods (MA100) and probability to the level of Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202). Some knowledge of linear regression.

Course content: An introduction to the theory and application of generalised linear models for the analysis of continuous, categorical, count and survival data. Topics include: linear regression, analysis of variance (ANOVA), logistic regression for binary data, models for ordered and unordered (nominal) responses, log-linear models for count data and contingency tables, and models for survival (duration) data. The Stata software package will be used in computer workshops.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned weekly and returned to students with comments/feedback during the computer sessions.

Indicative reading: Dobson, A.J. & Barnett, A.G. (2002) An Introduction to Generalised Linear Modelling. 2nd edition. Chapman & Hall. McCullagh, P. & Nelder, J.A. Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to multilevel modelling with applications in social research. This course deals with the analysis of data from hierarchically structured populations (e.g. student nested within classes, individuals nested within households or geographical areas) and longitudinal data (e.g. repeated measurements of individuals in a panel survey). Multilevel (random-effects) extensions of standard statistical techniques, including multiple linear regression and logistic regression, will be considered. The course will have an applied emphasis with computer sessions using appropriate software (e.g. Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned fortnightly and returned to students via Moodle with comments/feedback before the computer lab sessions.

Non-Linear Dynamics and the Analysis of Real Time Series

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leonard Smith TW1 11.01A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: It is recommended that students have completed Time Series (ST422).

Course content: An introduction to the analysis of actual time series observations of real-world processes. The course casts both modern nonlinear methods and more traditional linear methods in a geometric approach. It introduces the properties of nonlinear mathematical models, covers chaos and the dynamics of uncertainty, and demonstrates the fundamental limitations in applied analysis which arise from model inadequacy. Fundamental aspects of predictability are addressed. Decision support under uncertainty is considered, with examples of economic impacts of forecasting, including weather and climate. The student will leave with a toolkit for the analysis and modelling of real data, with insights into how to evaluate which methods to employ (linear/non-linear, deterministic/stochastic) in a given problem, how to interpret the results in context, and how to avoid over interpreting nice theorems in practical circumstances. Concrete applications in economics (price time series, electricity demand, energy futures) and environment (weather, climate) as well as analytically tractable illustration from mathematics are considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST. Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Indicative reading: K Beven, Environmental Modelling: An uncertain Future? ## ST421 Half Unit

Developments in Statistical Methods

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wicher Bergsma COL 6.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have statistical knowledge up to the level of the course ST425: Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation. It is also useful to take ST411: Regression, Diagnostics and Generalised Linear Modelling in parallel to this course.

Course content: Our aim is to teach students important statistical methodologies that reflect the exciting development of the subject over the last twenty years, which include empirical likelihood, MCMC, bootstrap, local likelihood and local fitting, model Assessment and selection methods, and Gaussian process regression. These are computationally intensive techniques that are particularly powerful in analysing large-scale data sets with complex structure. A selection from the following topics will be covered: robustness of likelihood approaches: distance between working model and "truth", maximum likelihood under wrong models, quasi-MLE, model selection with AIC, robust estimation. Empirical likelihood: empirical likelihood of mean. Bayesian methods and Markov chain Monte Carlo (MCMC) basic Bayes, Gibbs sampler, Metropolis-Hastings algorithm. Elements of statistical learning: global fitting versus local fitting, linear methods for regression, splines, kernel methods and local likelihood. Model assessment and selection: bias-variance trade-off, effective number of parameters, BIC, cross-validation. Further topics: statistical learning using Gaussian process regression. The course will be continuously updated to reflect important new developments in statistics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment consists of weekly exercises.

Indicative reading: T Hastie, R Tibshirani & J Friedman, The Elements of Statistical Learning: Data Mining, Inference and Prediction; Y Pawitan, In All Likelihood: Statistical Modelling and Inference Using Likelihood; M A Tanner, Tools for Statistical Inference.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST422 Half Unit

Time Series

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yining Chen

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management Science (Operational Research), MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Good undergraduate knowledge of statistics and probability.

Course content: A broad introduction to statistical time series analysis for postgraduates: what time series analysis can be useful for; autocorrelation; stationarity; causality; basic time series models: AR, MA, ARMA; ARCH and GARCH models for financial time series; trend removal and seasonal adjustment; invertibility; spectral analysis; estimation; forecasting. We will also discuss nonstationarity and multivariate time series.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Exercises will be given out to do at home during Week 6.

Indicative reading: Brockwell & Davis, Time Series: Theory and Methods; Brockwell & Davis, Introduction to Time Series and Forecasting; Box & Jenkins, Time Series Analysis, Forecasting and Control; Shumway & Stoffer, Time Series Analysis and Its Applications.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST425*Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Qiwei Yao COL 7.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will provide a comprehensive coverage on some fundamental aspects of probability and statistics methods and principles. It also covers linear regression analysis. Data illustration using statistical package R constitutes an integral part throughout the course, therefore provides the hands-on experience in simulation and data analysis.

Teaching: 40 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Week 11 will be used as a revision week.

Formative coursework: Students will complete weekly assessed problem sheets. They will also complete R practice following instructions from the weekly computing workshop.

Indicative reading: L. Wasserman, All of Statistics.

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 3 hours) in the LT week 0. Project (15%) in the MT.

ST426 Half Unit*Applied Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Erik Baurdoux COL 6.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course builds on material discussed in ST409 (Stochastic Processes). In particular, elements of the general theory of semi-martingales will be covered and emphasis will be given on presenting a variety of models involving processes with general dynamics, including jumps. The theory will be applied to a range of topics in mathematical finance and insurance, as well as financial economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week; exercises will be given out to students to do at home.

Formative coursework: A set of coursework similar to the exercises that will appear in the exam will be assigned. Additional formative exercise will be available through Moodle.

Indicative reading: Brownian Motion and Stochastic Calculus.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST427 Half Unit*Insurance Mathematics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hao Xing COL 7.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A self-contained comprehensive introduction to life and non-life insurance mathematics. For the life insurance, mortality laws are analysed from probabilistic and statistical point of view. Actuarial analysis of basic insurance products: pure endowment, life insurance/assurance, and annuity. Prospective/retrospective reserves of these products. Extension to general multi-states policy is studied via Markov chains Pricing embedded interest and mortality guarantees is introduced. For the non-life insurance, axiomatic approach to ordering of risks is presented, optimal forms of insurance from the insured's and from the insurer's point of view are analysed, and Pareto-optimal risk exchanges are introduced. Standard schemes of reinsurance are introduced and analysed. Ruin probability of an insurance company and capital requirement are studied. Heavy tail distributions and the extreme value theory are introduced. Case studies on current developments in life and non-life insurance industry are also presented.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. An informal 'open book' mid-term practice examination will take place in Week 6.

Formative coursework: 5 to 6 problem sets will be assigned.

Indicative reading: R Norberg, Risk and Stochastics in Life Insurance (Lecture notes)

R Norberg, Non-life Insurance Mathematics (Lecture notes)

T Mikosch, Non-Life Insurance Mathematics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the LT week 0.

ST429 Half Unit*Probabilistic Methods in Risk Management and Insurance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hao Xing COL 7.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management (MiM Exchange), MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Risk and Stochastics and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A self-contained introduction to probabilistic and statistical methods in risk management. This course starts with risk factors models and loss distributions, which are illustrated via examples in stocks, derivatives, and bonds portfolios. Axioms of coherent risk measures are introduced. Value at risk and other risk measures are introduced and their relation with coherent risk measures is discussed. Multivariate factor models are introduced and analysed: covariance and correlation estimations, multivariate normal distributions and their testing, normal mixture distributions and their fitting to data. The theory of copulas is introduced: meta distributions, tail dependence, fitting copulas to data. Some limitations of copulas are also discussed. The extreme value theory is introduced: generalized extreme value distribution, threshold exceedances and generalized Pareto distribution, modelling and measures of tail risk. Applications to insurance with large loss are also discussed. Students will be exposed to financial data via sets of computer-based classes and exercises.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. A exercise/problem-solving session will take place in Week 6.

Formative coursework: A set of exercises which are similar to problems appearing in the exam will be assigned. A set of coding exercises which are similar to examples in computer lab sessions will be assigned.

Indicative reading: A. McNeil, R. Frey, P. Embrechts, Quantitative Risk Management: Concepts, Techniques, Tools; Princeton Series in Finance

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (25%, 2000 words).

ST433 Half Unit Computational Methods in Finance and Insurance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konstantinos Kalogeropoulos COL 6.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics) (MA400).

Course content: The purpose of this course is to (a) develop the students' computational skills, (b) introduce a range of numerical techniques of importance in actuarial and financial engineering, and (c) develop the ability of the students to apply the theory from the taught courses to practical problems, work out solutions including numerical work, and to present the results in a written report. Binomial and trinomial trees. Random number generation, the fundamentals of Monte Carlo simulation and a number of related issues. Finite difference schemes for the solution of ordinary and partial differential equations arising in insurance and finance. Numerical solutions to stochastic differential equations and their implementation. The course ends with an introduction to guidelines for writing a scholarly report/thesis.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises and practicals are set and form the basis of the classes.

Indicative reading: N. E. Steenrod, P. Halmos, M. M. Schiffer & J. A. Dieudonné, How to write mathematics (1973); D. J. Duffy, Finite Difference Methods in Financial Engineering: A Partial Differential Equation Approach, Wiley; P. Glasserman, Monte Carlo Methods in Financial Engineering, Springer; P. E. Kloeden and E. Platen, Numerical Solution of Stochastic Differential Equations, Springer. Further material will be specified during the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period. Project (50%) in the ST.

ST435 Half Unit Advanced Probability Theory

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luciano Campi COL 7.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is offered as a regular examinable half-unit as well as a service to students and academic staff.

Pre-requisites: Analysis and algebra at the level of a BSc in pure or applied mathematics and basic statistics and probability theory with stochastic processes. Knowledge of measure theory is not required as the course gives a self-contained introduction to this branch of analysis.

Course content: The course covers core topics in measure theoretic probability and modern stochastic calculus, thus laying a rigorous foundation for studies in statistics, actuarial science, financial mathematics, economics, and other areas where uncertainty is essential and needs to be described with advanced probability models. Emphasis is on probability theory as such rather than on special models occurring in its applications. Brief review of basic probability concepts in a measure theoretic setting: probability spaces, random variables, expected value, conditional probability and expectation, independence, Borel-Cantelli lemmas. Construction of probability spaces with emphasis on stochastic processes. Operator methods in probability: generating functions, moment generating functions, Laplace transforms, and characteristic functions. Notions of convergence: convergence in probability and weak laws of large numbers, convergence almost surely and strong laws of large numbers, convergence of probability measures and central limit theorems. If time permits and depending on the interest of the students topics from stochastic calculus might be covered as well.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Week 6 will be used as a reading/revision week.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set weekly and solutions are discussed in the lectures. There will be one set of compulsory written coursework in the MT which will be marked.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the LT week 0.

ST436 Half Unit Financial Statistics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Piotr Fryzlewicz COL 6.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation (ST425).

Course content: The course covers key statistical methods and data analytic techniques most relevant to finance. Hands-on experience in analysing financial data in the "R" environment is an essential part of the course. The course includes a selection of the following topics: obtaining financial data, low- and high-frequency financial time series, ARCH-type models for low-frequency volatilities and their simple alternatives, predicting equity indices (case study), Markowitz portfolio theory and the Capital Asset Pricing Model, machine learning in financial forecasting, Value at Risk, simple trading strategies. The course ends with an extended case study involving making predictions of market movements in a virtual trading environment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 11 will be spent working on the extended case study.

Formative coursework: Weekly marked problem sheets, with solutions discussed in class. Two marked case studies.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST439 Half Unit

Stochastics for Derivatives Modelling

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Beatrice Acciaio COL 6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Valuation and hedging of derivative securities: general principles of mathematical finance; asset price models; static vs dynamic option pricing; connection with PDEs; exotic options; volatility derivatives; mean-variance hedging.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. During week 6 students will carry out group work, solving problems that will have been set in an earlier class.

Formative coursework: Weekly homework will be set. Students are not expected to submit this homework but will go over the exercises in the following seminar with the lecturer.

Indicative reading: Steven Shreve, Stochastic Calculus for Finance II: Continuous-Time Models, Springer.

Selected papers from scientific journals.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST440 Half Unit

Recent Developments in Finance and Insurance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Beatrice Acciaio COL 6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Recent developments in the theory of stochastic processes and applications in finance and insurance and their interface. A variety of topics will be chosen, from robust evaluation; optimal hedging; evaluation via utility criteria; optimal risk sharing; minimal capital requirement according to the Basel Accords and the Solvency Directives; life insurance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. During weeks 10 and 11, students will be required to give group presentations using material which will have been provided in week 1 or 2; as well as discussing in groups solutions to problems that will have been set in class. Week 6 will also be used by students to prepare their presentations and work through exercises.

Formative coursework: A set of coursework similar to the exercises that will appear in the exam will be assigned as well as a mock exam.

Indicative reading: H. Foellmer and A. Schied: Stochastic finance. An introduction in discrete time. (3rd ed.), de Gruyter.
Selected papers from scientific journals.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST441 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17

Introduction to Markov Processes and their Applications

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umut Cetin COL 6.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Markov property and transition functions. Feller processes. Strong Markov property. Martingale problem and stochastic differential equations, relation with partial differential equations. Diffusion processes. Affine processes. Piecewise deterministic Markov processes. Selection of topics from filtering and statistics of diffusion processes. Applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A weekly set of homework will be set.

Students are not expected to submit this homework but will go over the exercises in the following seminar with the lecturer.

Students will also complete one or two sets of formative coursework during the year which will be marked. Feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: An Introduction to Markov Processes and Their Applications. Lecture Notes by Umut Cetin

Project (20%) in the ST.

ST442 Half Unit

Longitudinal Data Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fiona Steele COL 7.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to methods for the analysis of repeated measures data, including continuous and binary outcomes. Topics include: longitudinal study designs, models for two measures, (random effects) growth curve models, marginal models, dynamic (autoregressive) models, latent class models, and models for multivariate outcomes. The course will have an applied emphasis with fortnightly computer classes using the Stata software.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned fortnightly and returned to students with comments/feedback during the computer sessions.

Indicative reading: Singer JD, Willett JB. (2003) Applied Longitudinal Data Analysis: Modeling Change and Event Occurrence. New York: Oxford University Press. (Part I only). Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST443 Half Unit Machine Learning and Data Mining

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Xinghao Qiao

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course will be taught from a statistical perspective and students must have a sound knowledge of statistical methods of regression analysis, as covered for example in 'Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation (ST425)' Students are not permitted to take this course alongside MG4E1 Algorithmic Techniques for Data Mining.

Course content: Machine learning and data mining are emerging fields between statistics and computer science which focus on the statistical objectives of prediction, classification and clustering and are particularly orientated to contexts where datasets are large, the so-called world of 'big data'. This course will start from the classical statistical methodology of linear regression and then build on this framework to provide an introduction to machine learning and data mining methods from a statistical perspective. Thus, machine learning will be conceived of as 'statistical learning', following the titles of the books in the essential reading list. The course will aim to cover modern non-linear methods such as spline methods, generalized additive models, decision trees, boosting and support vector machines, as well as more advanced linear approaches, such as LASSO, linear discriminant analysis, k-means clustering, nearest neighbours, neural network.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

The first part of the course reviews regression methods and covers linear discriminant analysis, variable selection, nearest neighbours, shrinkage, dimension reduction methods, neural network. The second part of the course introduces non-linear models and covers polynomial regression, splines, generalized additive models, tree methods, bagging, random forest, support vector machines, principal components analysis, k-means, hierarchical clustering. Week 11 will be used for project group presentations.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 8 problem sets in the LT.

The problem sets will consist of some theory questions and data problems that require the implementation of different methods in class using a computer package

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (30%) in the Week 11.

ST444 Half Unit Statistical Computing

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yining Chen

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: An introduction to the use of numerical linear algebra, optimisation, numerical integration and simulation in statistical computation, followed by their applications in statistical methods, including least squares, maximum likelihood, principle component analysis, LASSO, etc. If time permits, more advanced topics such as kernel methods and graphical LASSO will also be covered. Throughout the course, students will gain practical experience of implementing these computational methods in a programming language. Learning support will be provided for at least one programming language, such as C++ or Python, but the choice of language supported may vary between years, depending on judged benefits to students, whether in terms of pedagogy or resulting skills.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Lectures will cover:

(1) Introduction to Tools in Numerical Analysis: linear algebra (Gaussian elimination, Cholesky decomposition, matrix inversion and condition); numerical optimization (bi-section, steepest descent, Newton's method, Quasi-Newton methods, stochastic search); convex optimization (coordinate descent, ADMM); numerical integration.

(2) Introduction to Tools in Numerical Simulation: random number generation (inverse CDF, rejection, Box-Muller, etc); Introduction to Monte-Carlo methods.

(3) Applications in Statistics: linear regression and least squares; generalised linear models; principle component analysis (PCA); Page rank; LASSO.

(4) Other advanced topics if time allows: bootstrapping; kernel density estimation; Graphical models and Graphical LASSO. Workshops on programming using Python (N.B. the choice of language supported may vary between years), including statements, expressions, data types, control flow statements, functions, strings, lists, input, output, using external modules (libraries).

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets in the MT.

Bi-weekly exercises, usually involving programming.

EC409E Half Unit

Public Policy in Practice Workshop III (EMPA)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Joachim Wehner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The policy workshop applies the analytical tools that are taught in the week-long modules of the Executive MPA to specific policy areas. Teaching is based on a series of case studies. The case studies are taught by specialists in a particular policy area and are complemented with group working sessions by the students and presentations by policy practitioners involved in the policy area.

Teaching: A three-day modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One optional mock policy exercise will be provided.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to each policy area will be distributed at the beginning of the course

Assessment: Essay (100%, 2000 words).

Assessment will consist of a 2,000 word reflective essay due 10 days after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC410E Half Unit

Public Economics for Public Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Henrik Kleven.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (EC455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (EC440E).

Course content: This is a course in theoretical and applied public economics using intermediate economic theory. Topics include issues of equity and efficiency and alternative theories of the role of the state. Models of public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. Who really pays taxes: issues of tax incidence and tax evasion. Income inequality, poverty alleviation and the role of welfare programmes in theory and in practice. Health and education policy. The effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply and migration; The optimal taxation of commodities and incomes. Current topics in public finance. The main institutional references will be to the UK and the US, but some attention will also be given to broader international experience.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be offered.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed prior to the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise. Data analysis exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPP and Executive MPA programme inductions.

Global Market Economics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Andrew Bernard

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (EC455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (EC440E).

Course content: This course focuses on the economic interdependence between countries in a global economy. The first part of the course examines the structure and geography of world trade and examines popular hypothesis such as the "global village" or "flat earth". The second part of the course analyses macroeconomic issues such as the magnitude and effects of international capital flows, the debate over fixed versus flexible exchange rates and the economics of a common currency

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC440E Half Unit

Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Gerard Padró i Miquel and Dr Ethan Ilizetzi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The course is an introductory graduate course providing an economics background suitable for high-level public policy-making. The emphasis is on acquiring sound models and methods suitable for appraising policy-making issues and applicable in a wide variety of contexts. The course will cover both key microeconomic policy issues, such as externalities, public goods and principal-agent problems and macroeconomic issues such as unemployment, fiscal and monetary policies, international trade and finance and the determinants of long-run growth.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise. Data analysis exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC454E Half Unit

Development Economics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Burgess LRB.R524 and Prof Oriana Bandiera LRB.R526

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (EC455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (EC440E).

Course content: The main focus of this course is on acquiring the necessary theoretical and empirical skills to engage in the rigorous analysis of public policies in developing countries. Topics at the forefront of development economics will be covered. These include political economy, trade liberalization, growth, access to finance, technology adoption, education, health, infrastructure, property rights, land reform, gender, environment, mass media and political accountability. The emphasis will be on combining theory and data to evaluate the effectiveness of policies in these different areas.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be distributed at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC455E Half Unit Empirical Methods for Public Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Gregory Fischer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but recommended advance readings will be distributed ahead of the course. Familiarity with the material covered in the EMPA/EMPP Mathematics and Statistics Refresher module is assumed.

Course content: The course introduces students to the quantitative evaluation of public policies. The focus of the course is on practical applications of techniques to test the effectiveness of public policy interventions. The course begins with an overview over the key benefits of randomized experiments in the evaluation of public policies. Next the course covers a number of techniques that are widely used in the evaluation of public policies, including difference-in-differences regressions, regression discontinuity approaches, matching and concludes with a brief introduction to cost-benefit analysis.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC4H8E Half Unit Executive MPP Capstone Project

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner and Dr Daniel Sturm

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 5 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by the Civil Service. The group will have a period of approximately 3 months to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during the project duration.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to project work will be distributed at the beginning of the course. Useful preliminary reading includes: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Office for Government Commerce Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Strategy Survival Guide (London: Prime Minister's Strategy Unit, July 2004); C. R. Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschann, Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems, chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words).

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances.

1) Presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation.

2) Group project report. The main body of the report may not exceed 10,000 words and will be read by academic markers whose assessment will count for 60% of the final grade.

Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution to the group's work, to be submitted alongside the report. The reflection should be no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project. The reflections should not be included in the report submitted to the client.

3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

EC4J3E Half Unit Public Policy in Practice Workshop III (EMPP)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner and Dr Daniel Sturm

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The policy workshop applies the analytical tools that are taught in the week-long modules of the Executive MPP to specific policy areas. Teaching is based on a series of case studies. The case studies are taught by specialists in a particular policy area and are complemented with group working sessions by the students and presentations by policy practitioners involved in the policy area.

Teaching: A three-day modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock policy exercise will be offered.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to each policy area will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

Assessment will consist of a 3,000 policy exercise. Policy exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPP programme induction.

Interest groups, markets and democracy (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Steve Coulter

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Political Economy of Europe. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The focus of this course is on the representation of interests in Europe, and their role in Economic policy-making. Students will analyse the main theoretical issues and selected empirical questions on how interests are differently organised across countries and at the EU level, on the interplay between interest representation and electoral politics, and on the policy outcome after interest intermediation. The objective is to understand the dynamics of economic policy-making in comparative perspective, with an emphasis on the globalisation period.

Teaching: The course will run between 11-15 April 2015.

Formative coursework: One essay.

European Capitalism(s) and the Global Economy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Coulter COW 3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Political Economy of Europe. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course consists of two parts. In the first part we will discuss the basic arguments and methodological considerations of the Varieties of Capitalism literature and conduct a comparative analysis of the core issue areas in the political economy of contemporary capitalism: how capital, labour and product markets are structured. The second part will build on these thematic treatments to discuss the structure of and dynamics of the main Western, Southern and Central European models of capitalism.

Teaching: The course will run between 21-25 September 2015.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay

Indicative reading: Peter A Hall & David Soskice (Eds), Varieties of Capitalism: The Institutional Foundations of Competitiveness. Oxford University Press, 2001; Hancké, Bob, Martin Rhodes and Mark Thatcher (eds.) 2007. ### Economic Governance of EMU (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Corrado Macchiarelli

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Political Economy of Europe. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to analyse the process of European monetary integration and its implications for the institutions of economic governance in the EU. There will be a strong emphasis on using the experience of the financial and economic crises since 2008 as a source of evidence to assess both the performance of EMU and the theories about monetary integration. We consider briefly the political and economic rationale for the establishment of EMU and then examine in detail how these rationales played themselves out in practice (e.g. problems of free-riding, political exchange, information asymmetries between policymakers etc). Indicative questions addressed in this course include: how and why did the EU develop the EMU project?; did economic theories prepare us for the Euro area crisis of 2010-11?; what are the challenges for member states in adjusting to the discipline of the 'Euro-zone'?; what issues arise for the EU in managing relations between member states in the Euro-zone and those outside?; how does the Euro affect the ability of member states to adjust to periods of crisis and to external shocks?; is the sovereign debt crisis of 2010 indicative of imbalances within the EU and basic flaws in its institutional design?

Teaching: The course will run on 19th – 23rd June 2017

Formative coursework: One essay - 2,000 words

Indicative reading: Paul De Grauwe, The Economics of Monetary Union (Oxford University Press 2012, 7th ed.); Kenneth Dyson and Kevin Featherstone (1999), The Road to Maastricht, OUP; Special issue (2006): Economic Governance in EMU Revisited, Journal of Common Market Studies vol.44, No.4 (November); DG Ecfm (2009), Economic Crisis in Europe: Causes, Consequences and Responses, European Economy 7/2009; Jean Pisani-Ferry and Adam Posen (2009), The Euro at Ten: The Next Global Currency?, Peterson Institute for International Economics

Capitalism and Democracy in Central Europe (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Gordon KSW 5.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Political Economy of Europe. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course applies concepts of political economy, economics and political science to its investigation of Central and Eastern Europe's evolution through post-communist transition to highly open, FDI-dependent emerging markets with 'European' expectations of welfare. Placing the region in the comparative context of both the EU15 and comparable emerging markets, the course investigates the ongoing challenges of political and institutional consolidation and the developmental consequences of the liberalization and FDI-led growth model of the 1990s/2000s. The course examines the emerging strengths and persistent weaknesses of these political economies and considers their implications for the region's emerging varieties of capitalism, relative international competitiveness and political stability.

Teaching: The course will run between 6-10 July 2015.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: J Kornai (1992) The Socialist System: The Political Economy of Communism, Princeton University Press; N Barr (ed.) ### Key Issues in the Political Economy of Europe (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Hancke COW 2.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Political Economy of Europe. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course forms the core course of the Executive MSc Political Economy of Europe. It tries to understand how the relation between state and economy in both Western Europe and Central and Eastern Europe has evolved over the post-war period. Key debates in this regard include the demise of Keynesianism as fiscal intervention by government and of real existing socialism, as well as the crisis of monetarism. We also examine how the operation of the EU as a whole, the Single Market and the monetary union in particular, interact with the political economy of European states inside and in the neighbourhood of the Community. The course aims to provide students with both an analytical understanding of and a systematic treatment of empirical issues related to the evolution of the European political economy. Topics include: State and economy in European economies; Economic theory and policy in Europe; The political economy of European integration; EU membership as a reform lever in post-communist Europe and in mature Western welfare states; EU enlargement; Monetary union and its crisis; the evolution of the Single Market.

Teaching: 27 hours of seminars in the MT. 27 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word individual essay, one project, plus a trial examination.

The Political Economy of Welfare State Reform (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Waltraud Schelkle - Room: COW 1.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Political Economy of Europe. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the course is to apply concepts of economics and political economy to social policies in European welfare states. The seminars establish the theoretical context, summarise the findings of quantitative comparative case studies and discuss European experience in the context of broader international experience. They then build on these concepts and apply them to qualitative case studies of welfare state arrangements in member states, considering in particular the role of social policy legislation and coordination at the EU level. The course will provide students with the conceptual and empirical background to enable them to answer questions such as: What does economic theory and political economy tell us about the design of welfare states? How do social policies in European welfare states reconcile equity and efficiency? What drives or stalls reform dynamics in member states? What are the proper boundaries of EU social policy? Is the EU gradually developing into a social union, through international mobility and the portability of social entitlements?

Teaching: The Module will run between 12-16 September 2016.

Formative coursework: One formative essay - 2,000 words

Indicative reading: Barr, N. (2012) The Economics of the Welfare State, 5th ed., Oxford: Oxford UP; Leibfried, S (2010) European Social Policy: Left to Judges and the Market? In H Wallace, M Pollack and A.Young, Policy-Making in the European Union, ch 10 (or earlier edition); Pierson, P. ### Fixed Income Securities and Credit Markets

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christian Julliard

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Interest rate modelling and derivatives
- Credit risk
- Credit derivatives and risk management

This course provides a thorough grounding in recent developments in fixed income securities pricing, hedging and portfolio management.

By the end of the course, the students will be familiar with the fixed income state of the art business practice and a variety of topics including (i) an analysis of the main products traded in the credit markets, such as Government and corporate bonds, bond options, swaps, caps, floors, swaptions, callable, puttable and convertible bonds, and an analysis of the main credit derivatives such as total-return swaps, spread options and credit default swaps; (ii) the specific tools used in the industry practice to evaluate and hedge these products, which range from no-arbitrage trees and the calibration of yield curve derivatives to the main tools used to monitor and manage credit risk; (iii) the process of securitization, with particular reference to collateralized default obligations and mortgage-based securities.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Indicative reading: The primary source for this course is a comprehensive set of Lecture Notes, tutorials and case studies and a reading pack containing chapters from the following books: (i) Sundaresan, S. ### Topics in Portfolio Management

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michela Verardo

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Balancing Risk and Risk Premia for the Construction of Optimal Portfolios
- Dynamic Investment Strategies
- Selecting and Monitoring Portfolio Managers
- Transactions costs and Liquidity Risk in Portfolio Construction

This course covers a wide range of topics in equity portfolio management, with a strong focus on empirical applications. The first part of the course starts with a theoretical and empirical overview of risk and risk premia in different segments of financial markets; it then focuses on the construction of optimal portfolios, with applications to equity, bond, and multi-asset portfolios. The second part of the course introduces students to the implementation of several dynamic investment strategies, such as value, momentum, carry and others. The third part of the course focuses on selecting and monitoring mutual fund and hedge fund managers to form portfolios of managed funds. Finally, the course incorporates transactions costs and liquidity risk in the construction and evaluation of portfolios. The course is based on recent empirical studies and on applied exercises using financial data.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: A study pack will include lecture notes and case studies. All relevant articles will be made available during the course. Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Financial Valuation of Firms and Corporate Transactions
- Mergers, Acquisitions and Leveraged Buyouts
- Distress, Bankruptcy and Corporate Restructuring

This course covers advanced topics in Corporate Finance and Valuation and introduces students to valuation techniques for both securities and projects. The first part of the course introduces students to several advanced valuation techniques applied to firms and projects. The second part of the course focuses on particular deals that involve firm valuation, in particular, mergers, divestitures, partial-divestitures (e.g. equity carve outs) and leveraged buyouts. The last part of the course provides with a framework of analysis for the resolution of financial distress and bankruptcy. Each of the topics introduced in this course covers both institutional details and results of relevant academic research. It is furthermore supported by case studies and practitioner talks.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be distributed that includes case studies as well as additional readings such as textbook chapters, and practitioner articles.

Financial Engineering

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jean-Pierre Zigrand

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students will be expected to show some familiarity with calculus and statistics.

Course content: Provides a thorough grounding in the theory and practice of financial engineering. The emphasis is on the application of derivatives pricing and hedging methodology to equity and volatility derivatives and to structured products.

This syllabus lists and describes the topics covered in this course. In a nutshell, the course aims to cover the basics in derivatives theory, and to apply them to a multitude of financial securities and structured products, with a special emphasis on recent products in the equity and volatility derivative worlds. We review selected case studies in order to gain a better understanding of their practical usage. We also implement the models numerically in Excel, VBA or Matlab.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Indicative reading: Based on a set of extensive lecture notes. No one book covers the material of the entire course. Books recommended include The Volatility Surface: A Practitioner's Guide by Jim Gatheral, Option Pricing Models and Volatility by Maurice Rouah and Gregory Vainberg, Derivatives Markets, 2nd edition" by Robert McDonald, Options, Futures and Other Derivatives by John Hull, Principles of Financial Engineering by Salih Neftci as well as Keith Cuthbertson and Dirk Nitzsche's Financial Engineering.

Risk Management in Financial Markets

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Vedolin

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Hedging in equity and fixed income markets
- Market Risk, Value at Risk and Expected Shortfall
- Endogenous Risk and Limits to Arbitrage
- Credit risk and structured products

The aim of this course is to give an introduction to the analysis and management of risk within financial markets. The objective of the course is to develop a conceptual framework for thinking about financial risk and to show how these concepts are implemented in practice in a variety of contexts. First, the course gives an overview of risk management in the context of portfolios of fixed income securities and derivatives. Next, will discuss the implementation and the merits of Value at Risk measures. We will spend some time on endogenous risk and limits to arbitrage. In the context of credit risk we will cover ratings based and structural models, as well as credit risk on portfolios and credit derivatives. A final topic covers regulation and the recent credit crisis. Throughout, the course spends a significant amount of time on practical applications of the theories that are introduced. Some limitations of current approaches are also discussed.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Problem sets. In addition, students will have the opportunity to present the results of a case study to the class.

Indicative reading: Course readings will vary from year to year depending upon the topics covered. The main reference is: John C. ### Corporate Investment and Financial Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ulf Axelsson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Supporting the firm's strategy with Long-term and short-term financial management
- Real options and strategic investment decisions
- Family firms, IPOs, and corporate governance
- Risk management, International valuation, and currency exposure

A case based course aimed at deepening the understanding of how to apply corporate finance concepts in a wide variety of business situations. In particular, we will try to build on concepts in business strategy, valuation techniques, and capital structure theories covered in previous courses, and see how to apply those tools in a systematic and rigorous way when approaching complicated real-life corporate finance problems. Examples of topics include working capital management, capital structure, risk management, real options, initial public offerings, international corporate finance, and family firms. Students will have to read up on cases before class and be prepared to discuss them interactively in class.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: 5 formative case study assignments (similar to summative cases).

Indicative reading: Berk and DeMarzo, "Corporate Finance"

-Around 10 case studies

-A number of related scientific articles, including:

Opler, Tim, M. Saron, & S. Titman, 1997, "Designing Capital Structure to Create Shareholder Value," Journal of Applied Corporate Finance 10.1, 21-32 Bodily, Samuel E., 2005, "Real Options", Darden case study UV0433-PDF-ENG. Koller, "Valuation in Emerging Markets," McKinsey Quarterly 2000:4

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (20%) and class participation (10%) in the LT.

FM422E

Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Amil Dasgupta

Dirk Jenter

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content:

- Financing
- Valuation

This core course provides a broad introduction to the key issues in corporate finance. The first half of the course, the Financing Module, investigates how companies should finance their activities by issuing securities (debt, equity, and convertible claims) and the interaction of business policy with financial policy. The aim is to understand what factors determine optimal capital structure and how the interplay of these factors can affect financing decisions in a way that creates value. The second half of the course, the Valuation Module, covers firm and project valuation and establishes how companies should select among investable assets. The module focuses on fundamental valuation techniques based on discounting future cash flows. The course goes on to introduce further valuations methods, such as real options analysis, as well as key applications of valuation concepts to major corporate decisions such as mergers and acquisition and initial public offerings. The course interweaves key conceptual material with a series of cases.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: The recommended textbooks for this course are Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance and Higgins, Analysis for Financial Management. Other recommended readings from relevant journal articles will be included in a study pack.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

In class assessment (20%) in the MT and LT.

FM423E

Asset Markets

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christopher Polk and Dr Dong Lou

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content:

- Investments and Securities Valuation
- Portfolio choice and performance evaluation
- Derivatives

The aim of the course is to familiarize students with the workings of financial markets, and equip them with the fundamental tools of asset valuation. The course will focus on the three main asset classes - fixed income, stocks, and derivatives - giving a unified perspective of modern valuation methods. The starting point will be the present value formula. The course will then proceed to fixed-income securities, focusing mainly on government bonds. These will be valued off the term structure of interest rates, using the present value formula. The connection with the principle of no-arbitrage will be emphasized. The course will then move to stocks, starting with portfolio theory and then deriving the relation between risk and return (CAPM). The CAPM will provide a risk-adjusted discount rate that will be used to discount stocks' cash flows with the present value formula. Alternative pricing models such as the APT and multi-factor models will also be covered, and the models will be applied to issues of asset allocation and portfolio selection. The last topic will be derivatives, especially futures and options. After familiarizing students with the use of derivatives, the course will cover the main valuation methods (binomial model, Black-Scholes) emphasizing again the principle of no-arbitrage.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: The organisation of topics of the course follows closely the treatment in Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, 2nd Global Edition, Pearson International, and Bodie, Kane, and Marcus, Investments, 8th Edition, McGraw Hill. Other recommended readings and case studies will be included in a study pack.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

In class assessment (10%) in the MT.

In class assessment (10%) in the LT.

FM447 Half Unit

Global Financial Systems

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, IMEX Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research) and MiM Exchange. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a strong background in microeconomics, and be comfortable with formal arguments.

Course content: This course examines the academic and policy debates on the operation of the global financial system. The course will aim to be topical, where the analysis of the issues will be based on economic arguments. The course begins with analysis of systemic risk, followed by an overview of important financial crisis and key institutions. Several theories of financial crises are then developed in some detail, and are assessed by reference to historical experience. The course concludes by analysis of the crises from 2007, including the latest policy and regulatory developments as well as the current situation in the European crisis.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to attempt the problem sets and essay questions set in the classes.

Indicative reading: Most material will be provided by the book Global Financial Systems (www.globalfinancialsystems.org), by Jon Danielsson, published by Pearson

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM472 Half Unit

International Finance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chiara Banti

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, IMEX Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research), MSc in Finance and Private Equity, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Finance and MiM Exchange. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

(Permission required from the course leader). Interested graduate students enrolled in any programme not listed above must email the course leader to ask for permission. The email must include the list of finance and economics courses taken during their previous studies and the motivation for wanting to take the course. Only once this specific information is received by the course leader, the course request on Lse For You will be considered.

Course content: This course examines key issues in international finance, focusing on recent developments and incorporating theoretical, empirical, policy and institutional dimensions. The course uses exchange rates as a unifying theme and considers them from four perspectives: theory, policy, global risk and international investors. The course examines models of exchange rate determination and related empirical evidence. It analyses the choice and coordination of exchange rate regimes, including the European Monetary Union. It examines exchange rates as one of the sources of global financial instability. It considers the risk exposure for investors arising from exchange rate volatility and its hedging with currency instruments. The course also explores the links, in each area, to current developments such as the internationalisation of the Chinese Renminbi, the EMU sovereign debt crisis, the recent financial crisis and global imbalances, forex carry trades and the high volatility of short term exchange rates.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to undertake a group research project on a given topic in international finance.

Indicative reading: A selection of journal articles; background reading from a textbook such as Keith Pilbeam International Finance (Palgrave, 2013, 4th edition)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Political Science and Public Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Hix CON3.07 and Dr Andrew Eggers

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites, but recommended advance reading is given below.

Course content: This course introduces a range of theoretical and empirical tools to analyse the politics of public policymaking. The main focus is on political institutions and political behaviour in modern democracies and how they relate to public policy. This includes topics such as elections, representation, bureaucracy, delegation, accountability, interest groups, legislatures, executives and decentralisation.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: Analyzing Politics: Rationality, Behavior and Institutions by Kenneth Shepsle (W.W. Norton, 2nd edition, 2010) is an excellent starting point and reference for many topics. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after the module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites, but recommended advance reading is given below.

Course content: The course examines contemporary issues in regulation in OECD countries and elsewhere. The focus is on exploring competing approaches towards regulation in the context of different domains, ranging from utility, environmental to health and safety regulation. Particular attention will be paid to issues such as institutional design, enforcement and compliance, as well as the relationship between politicians, regulators, business and other actors. Topics include institutional design, development and regulation, standard-setting, enforcement, 'better regulation', and accountability.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: Managing Regulation by Martin Lodge and Kai Wegrich (Palgrave, 2012) introduces key themes. A different introduction is Understanding Regulation by Robert Baldwin, Martin Cave and Martin Lodge (Oxford University Press, second edition, 2012)

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

A 2,000 word assessed essay (50%) and an online examination (50%). Please note that online examinations usually take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. ### Executive MPP Capstone Project

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner and Dr Daniel Sturm

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 5 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by the Civil Service. The group will have a period of approximately 3 months to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during the project duration.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to project work will be distributed at the beginning of the course. Useful preliminary reading includes: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Office for Government Commerce Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Strategy Survival Guide (London: Prime Minister's Strategy Unit, July 2004); C. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words).

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances.

1) Presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation.

2) Group project report. The main body of the report may not exceed 10,000 words and will be read by academic markers whose assessment will count for 60% of the final grade.

Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution to the group's work, to be submitted alongside the report. The reflection should be no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project. The reflections should not be included in the report submitted to the client.

3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

problem; the challenges ahead, including flashpoints; preventative action and crisis management.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars, 6 hours of seminars, 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars and 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One formative essay (2,000 words) with a pre-arranged title. Feedback will involve a meeting with each student to discuss their formative essay. We will aim to ensure that students are able to:

- Critically evaluate different kinds of evidence;
- Assess the strengths and weaknesses of competing explanatory paradigms;
- Formulate arguments in a coherent and balanced fashion.

IR444 Half Unit Strategy in Action

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox TW1.9.01A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Strategy and Diplomacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: In this course we will be examining through lectures, seminars and workshops four major foreign policy decisions, the diplomatic background to each of these and the strategic thinking behind them. We will be asking the students through group exercises to prepare a strategy and policy paper relevant to the day.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course is taught over 48 hours. This includes 3 intense sessions - a weekend of assessing strategic decisions involving drafting and crafting papers, a second weekend of formulating strategic decisions and briefing sessions on methodology. All these will lay the foundations for the dissertation plan.

Formative coursework: Group discussion and formulation of strategy/policy papers.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The formulation of a dissertation topic which must be in the form of a 3,000 word dissertation plan (100%). This should include the title, an abstract, a problem statement which should identify the features and theoretical concepts associated with the topic, the aims and objectives (including research questions or hypotheses), a literature review and the methodology. This module is taken in conjunction with IR496 Dissertation: MSc Diplomacy and International Strategy (1.5 units).

IR496 One and Half Unit

Dissertation: MSc International Strategy and Diplomacy (1.5 units)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox TW1.9.01A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Strategy and Diplomacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation will address a topic in the social sciences drawn broadly from the three core courses. This will normally be a library based dissertation. The topic should make central use of concepts in the study of diplomacy and strategy and should demonstrate a good understanding of these concepts and implications. The dissertation will draw on empirical topic areas but should also demonstrate a high degree of conceptual originality. Guidance on standards of presentation will be given in the handbook and conform to the standard laid down for MSc dissertations in the International Relations Department. The subject and title of the dissertation must be approved by the dissertation supervisor.

Teaching: Arrangements for supervision. Students will receive advice on how to choose a topic and how to write a dissertation from the dissertation supervisor in two 1.5 hour workshops and two 1.5 hour individual supervision sessions.

Formative coursework: Students submit a 3,000 dissertation plan on which they receive written feedback (see the details of the IR444 course, taken in conjunction with IR496).

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 15000 words) in the LT.

A 15,000 word dissertation (100%) to be submitted in September 2017. This course is taken in conjunction with IR444 Strategy in Action (H).

Using the dissertation plan (IR444), the dissertation will include an introduction, theoretical framework, a literature review and methodology followed by chapters, conclusion and bibliography.

LL400E Half Unit

European Capital Markets Law

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Niamh Moloney

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the EU's regulation of the capital markets. It considers the harmonized regulatory regime which applies to key capital market actors across the Member States and which supports the integrated market. The topics covered include: the rationale for integration and the role of law, the evolution of the integration project, and the impact of the financial crisis; the deregulation, liberalization, harmonization, and re-regulation mechanisms used to integrate and regulate the EU market and the role of the Court; market access and the passport for investment services; the Markets in Financial Instruments Directive 2004 (MiFID I) and the 2014 reforms (MiFID II and the Markets in Financial Instruments Regulation) and regulation; the liberalization of order execution and the regulation of trading venues; the 'UCITS' mutual funds regime; retail investor protection and conduct regulation; the prospectus and disclosure regime; gatekeepers (credit rating agencies and investment analysts); and the institutional structure for law-making and for supervision, including the European System of Financial Supervision and the European Securities and Markets Authority. Course coverage may vary slightly from year to year.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided in advance for each seminar. Sample texts include: Moloney, EU Securities and Financial Markets Regulation Regulation (2014); Veil (ed) European Capital Markets Law (2013); Chiu, Regulatory Convergence in EU Securities Regulation (2008); Skinner (ed), The Future of Investing in Europe's Markets after MiFID (2007); Ferrarini and Wymeersch (eds), Investor Protection in Europe. ## LL401E Half Unit The Law of Armed Conflict

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course covers the international law governing the conduct of hostilities (jus in bello, also known as the law of armed conflict or international humanitarian law)--as distinct from the law on the resort to force (jus ad bellum), which is a separate course. The course will take a critical approach to the international regulation and facilitation of armed conflict. As well as the laws governing the means and methods of war ('Hague' law), the 'protected' groups hors de combat ('Geneva' law), and the distinction between international and non-international armed conflict, the course will cover 'lawfare' more generally: the recourse to law as a means of waging war. It will examine the application of the laws of war, including occupation law, in recent conflicts, including the wars in Iraq, Afghanistan and Syria, the 'war on terror', and the Palestinian Occupied Territories. Students can expect to have a thorough grasp of the principles and regulations governing the conduct of hostilities, the context and efficacy of enforcement mechanisms, and a critical understanding of the normative and political stakes of international law in this area.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: It is worthwhile acquiring the following books: Yoram Dinstein, The Conduct of Hostilities under the Law of International Armed Conflict (Cambridge UP, 2nd ed., 2010, or 3rd ed., 2016), Roberts and Guelff, Documents on the Laws of War (Oxford UP, 2000); Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars (Basic books, 4th ed. 2006). Other useful books include: David Kennedy, Of Law and War (Princeton UP, 2006); Geoffrey Best, War and Law Since 1945 (Oxford UP, 1997). Detailed readings for each seminar will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Essay (100%, 8000 words).

Assessment path 2

Take home exam (100%).

LL402E Half Unit Key Issues in Transnational Environmental Law

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veerle Heyvaert NAB7.06

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course focuses on current developments in environmental law beyond the State, which includes both the European and international level. It reviews the main law and policy principles that inspire transnational environmental developments, and identifies opportunities for and obstacles to the effectiveness of transnational environmental law. Then, the course turns the spotlight on the most important environmental challenges of our time and examines the role of transnational law in managing or resolving them. The course is structured as follows: 1. Environmental law in context: economic and alternative approaches to sustainable development. 2. Sources and principles of transnational environmental law. 3. Transnational liability: responding to global catastrophes. 4. Governing environmental risk and the role of the precautionary principle. 5. Controlling toxic substances. 6. Climate change: international law and policy developments. 7. Climate change litigation. 8. Protecting biodiversity through designation: the EU example. 9. Regulating markets for ecosystem services. 10. Trade and the environment. 11. Revision.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided for each seminar. Essential reference works include Sands and Peel, Principles of International Environmental Law (CUP, 2012); Bodansky, The Art and Craft of International Environmental Law (Harvard University Press, 2010); Bodansky, Brunnee & Hey, The Oxford Handbook of International Environmental Law (OUP, 2007); M. ## LL403E Half Unit International Human Rights: Concepts, Law and Practice

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course is concerned with the international protection of human rights and its relation to a range of current global problems. The course draws on the international law and practice of human rights to examine how we might best understand the contribution and limitations of human rights to addressing contemporary ills. Through the consideration of a range of standards and thematic issues participants will learn about, and critically analyse, human rights concepts, norms, institutions and actors. The course begins by studying the ideas and objectives that underpin the post-1945 human rights legal order and then turns to assess the United Nations and regional architectures and standards of international human rights. We build on this foundation to examine a variety of human rights topics and to consider how international law in these areas has developed and is being applied. The lectures will explore civil and political rights, economic social and cultural rights, 'third generation' rights, the rights of particular groups as well as a selection of current issues. Subjects may include: the prohibition of torture and the war on terror; the right to privacy; the right to food; the right to self-determination; the right to development; the rights of indigenous peoples; women's human rights; transnational corporations and human rights; human rights and poverty, and; human rights and the environment.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL404E Half Unit European and UK Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty SAR.G.04

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course has two parts. In part one the origins, development and current standing of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms are considered. The primary focus will be on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, though the cases of other jurisdictions will also be referred to where appropriate. The course will analyse the Convention from the perspective of selected rights within it, but will also engage with the subject thematically, subjecting such concepts as the 'margin of appreciation' and proportionality to close scrutiny. The goal of this part of the course is to give students a good critical understanding of the Convention, the case-law of the Strasbourg court and the Convention's place within the constitutional and political structure of 'Greater Europe'. The second part of the course is made up of a detailed study of the UK Human Rights Act. The origins and the political background to the Act will be explained, and the structure of the measure will be fully elaborated, relying on the text of the Act itself but also on the burgeoning case law that accompanies the measure. This part of the course will identify the principles that underpin the UK Act and explain its proper place in British law. It will also explore the wider constitutional implications of the measure, looking at its effect on the relationship between courts and Parliament. Linkages with the broader European framework discussed in the first part will be made by students through their reading and through class-engagement.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Jacobs and White, The European Convention on Human Rights 6th edn (OUP, 2014) and/or Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2014). The text on the UK is Gearty, On Fantasy Island. Britain, Strasbourg and Human Rights (Oxford University Press, 2016). Also useful is Mowbray, Cases and Materials on the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2012). Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (Cambridge, 2009), Hickman Public Law after the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010) and Gearty, Principles of Human Rights Adjudication (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Essay (100%, 8000 words).

Assessment path 2

Take home exam (100%).

LL405E Half Unit Dispute Resolution and Advanced Mediation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB7.15

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The principal focus of the course is upon methods of resolving disputes other than adjudication. The course brings together theory and observation of practice and is divided into two parts. In the first section students examine what motivates people to enter into disputes and the range of outcomes they seek, the history of the "informal justice" movement and the transformation of attitudes to dispute resolution in the UK and beyond. The emphasis in this part of the course is also on looking at the two primary forms of dispute resolution, negotiation and mediation. In the second part of the course specialist practitioners work with the class in exploring the interface between theory and practice and the different dynamics of disputes and their resolution in specific subject areas such as commercial law, community disputes, international law and family law. The course is designed to complement the option on Commercial Arbitration.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Students will also find it useful to access the following books which provide important context for debate about the civil litigation system and negotiation tactics:

Henry Brown and Arthur Marriot, (2012) ADR: Principles and Practice, London: Sweet and Maxwell. This is written by practitioners but also makes reference to a number of seminal academic studies. It provides a good framework within which to position the more in-depth arguments contained in the academic articles set each week. Genn, Hazel, (2009) Judging Civil Justice (The Hamlyn Lectures) Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. This book provides a really good overview of civil justice reforms across developed legal systems and will alert you to many of the academic and policy debates which have surrounded reform.

Roger Fisher and William Ury (2012) Getting to Yes: Negotiating an Agreement Without Giving In, Random House. This is a classic text in the field and very simple to read. This book will also help you when we come to study mediation which is often described as a form of facilitated negotiation.

Simon Roberts and Michael Palmer's 2005 (second edition) Dispute Processes: ADR and the Primary Forms of Dispute Resolution, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. This is the most theoretical book in this list but provides extracts from many of the seminal works in the field that we will be studying. It adopts a very interdisciplinary approach. This is useful as background reading.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Essay (100%, 8000 words).

Assessment path 2

Take home exam (100%).

LL406E Half Unit Regulation of Financial Markets I

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Paech NAB7.05

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course (Part I and Part II) examines the regulatory structures governing financial markets and investment services. It covers the main principles of international, EU and UK financial regulation, with the aim of developing a critical understanding of the dynamics and conceptual framework of financial regulation. The course does not aim to provide a detailed comparative account of financial regulation across countries, but international comparisons may be made where these are useful. In this context, students are encouraged to draw on their knowledge of their own national systems of regulation in making comparisons, and to apply the analytical perspectives suggested to those systems. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial services and markets, rather than on private law and transactional aspects. No previous knowledge of financial market regulation or background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. Indeed, the course provides a good background for further study of both financial and economic law and economic analysis of law. The course might be regarded as complimentary to a number of other courses, including Law of Corporate Finance or International Financial Law and Practice I & II. The first part of this course will address the following topics:

- Anatomy of the Financial Market and the Great Financial Crisis
- Building Blocks of the Regulatory World
- Rationales for its Regulation: Systemic Stability, Market Integrity, Principle-Agent Competition
- Key Elements of Financial Regulation: disclosure, resilience, risk modelling and regulation inside firm
- Global and EU Regulatory Structures
- Financial Stability – Policy Issues, Principles and Global Standard Setters
- Prudential Regulation of Banks – The Basel Accords
- The EU Banking Union
- Deposit Guarantees
- Bank Resolution and Insolvency

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time (for each half unit)

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed during the course and essential materials will be made available to the students, where possible. In addition, the students will be invited to do independent reading. Good general introductions to financial markets and their regulation include: A Turner et al, The Future of Finance: The LSE Report (2010); S Valdez and P. Molyneux, Introduction to Global Financial Markets (7th edn).

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Essay (100%, 8000 words).

Assessment path 2

Take home exam (100%).

LL407E Half Unit Regulation of Financial Markets II

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Paech NAB7.05

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. Course content: This course examines the regulatory structures governing financial markets and financial services. It covers the main principles of international, EU and UK financial regulation with the aim of developing a critical understanding of the conceptual framework for financial regulation. This half unit focuses on financial stability, including macro and micro-prudential regulation, regulation of trading and market infrastructure, and on new and emerging issues in financial regulation.

The course does not aim to provide a detailed comparative account of financial regulation across countries, but international comparisons may be made where these are useful. In this context, students are encouraged to draw on their knowledge of their own national systems of regulation in making comparisons, and to apply the analytical perspectives suggested to those systems. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial services and markets, rather than on private law and transactional aspects.

background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. Indeed, the course provides a good background for further study of both financial and economic law and economic analysis of law. For non-lawyers, a willingness to engage in legal analysis will be necessary, although a legal background is not required. The course might be regarded as complimentary to a number of other courses, including Law of Corporate Finance or International Financial Law and Practice I & II.

Topics include:

1. Unpicking the Great Financial Crisis
2. Mapping regulation for financial stability
3. States, Banks and Global Markets: the macroeconomic Background
4. The next Financial Crisis
5. Ethics in Finance
6. Market Integrity
7. The role of Consumers
8. Consumer Protection
9. Securities markets and Conduct of Business
10. Fast, global, decentralized– the Challenges of the Future

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed during the course and essential materials will be made available to the students, where possible. In addition, the students will be invited to do independent reading. Good general introductions to financial markets and their regulation include: A Turner et al, The Future of Finance: The LSE Report (2010); S Valdez and P. Molyneux, Introduction to Global Financial Markets (7th edn).

Comparative Constitutional Law: Institutions

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jo Murkens NAB7.31

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course examines the central issues in comparative constitutional law across a range of jurisdictions and from a variety of perspectives. The course opens with an introduction on the purpose of comparative constitutional law. The first substantive part discusses various approaches to the study of CCL as well as the migration of constitutional ideas (and related notions of constitutional borrowing, transplants etc). The second part deals with key constitutional concepts (constitution; rule of law; presidentialism, parliamentarism) which are discussed from a historical and comparative perspective. The point of these sessions is not to compare for the sake of comparing, but to equip you (the researcher) with the conceptual tools to do insightful, critical, and original comparative work of your own. The third part looks challenges the assumptions of liberal constitutionalism by examining constitutions in divided societies and authoritarian constitutionalism. The overall aim of the course is to develop students' understanding and use of many general theoretical explanations surrounding debates in CCL, and to develop students' critical/analytical approach to many of the questions facing judges and scholars in the next decade.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: There is no set book for this course. All materials will be made available in advance on Moodle.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Essay (100%, 8000 words).

Comparative Constitutional Law: Rights

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Course content: This course examines a range of controversial issues in human and constitutional rights law from a comparative perspective. These issues include: abortion; euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide; 'deviant' sex: sodomy, sado-masochistic sex, and incest; religion in the public sphere; hate speech and denial of the holocaust; obscenity. We will approach them by comparing and contrasting judgments from courts all over the world, with a certain emphasis on cases from the U.S. Supreme Court, the Canadian Supreme Court, the South African Constitutional Court, the European Court of Human Rights, the U.K. Supreme Court, and the German Federal Constitutional Court. The goals of the course are, first, to introduce the students to the jurisprudence of those extremely powerful and influential courts, and, second, to invite them to think about and critically analyse some of the most controversial, difficult, and important rights issues of our time.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly case-based; however, interested students may find the following book helpful: V Jackson and M Tushnet, Comparative Constitutional Law, 3rd edition, 2014.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Course content: As the recent debate on shadow banking shows, the traditional financial market sectors of commercial banking, investment banking, derivatives, capital markets and asset management are nowadays converging. However, their academic analysis is still largely sector-based. This course offers a cross-sectoral, functional analysis, permitting students to grasp the big picture of the entire financial market law. To this end, the course largely concentrates on the different activities of risk taking and risk shifting regardless of the type of financial institution involved. The course is also a novelty as it integrates both spheres of rulemaking for the financial markets, notably financial law and some fundamentals of financial regulation. Experience shows that approaching the framework for financial law without at least considering the interdependencies with risk management and capital requirements leaves us with only a fragmented picture. For non-practitioners, the market context of financial law appears sometimes confusing. Therefore, this course will first approach each subject from in a market perspective before coming to the legal framework. This short overview is essential with a view to understanding the permanent interaction between market behaviour and the legislators' and regulators' responses to it. The legal framework will be analysed taking into account international rules and developments as well as European legislation. Since the City of London is one of the globally most important financial markets, England will be used as anchor-jurisdiction in order to develop patterns of global significance that are addressed by legislators and regulators around the world, in particular also looking at the European Union and at international rulemaking. The course also highlights certain anomalies in differing legal treatment of the respective sectors, and considers key trends. It is designed to be as topical as possible, and the content may change in the light of developments. While the precise topics covered will vary from year to year they typically will include the following:

- The logic and the players of the financial market. The creation and allocation of risk. The distinction between 'Law' and 'Regulation'.
- The reasoning and sources of financial law and regulation. The role of European financial law and regulation. The role of international law.
- Understanding the financial crisis.
- Banks and their nature. Assets and Liabilities. Deposit taking and bank loans. Money market instruments. Rank of creditors in bank insolvencies.
- Raising capital. Primary market and secondary market. Issuance of debt securities (bonds). Issuance of Eurobonds. Issuance of equity (shares).
- Security interests and financial collateral.
- Repurchase agreements and securities lending. Relevant conflict-of-laws problems.
- Guarantee, indemnity, insurance.
- Derivatives. Types of derivatives. The rise of derivatives. Recharacterisation risk. Standard documentation (ISDA).
- Netting and set-off. Relation to insolvency law. Importance for derivatives, repos, securities lending. Conflict-of-laws analysis. Cross-jurisdictional problems.
- Trusts.
- Fund structures (public and alternative).
- Structured finance, securitisation and asset-backed securities. The rationale behind it. Risks.
- Transfer of financial instruments. Stock exchanges. Trading and settlement of securities. Intermediated securities. Conflict of laws and cross-jurisdictional problems. Derivatives clearing.
- Syndicated loans.
- Regulatory arbitrage in respect of financial transactions.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to the field of international economic law: its principles, rules, practices, and institutions, and the debates which attend each. The course focuses on the public international law rules and institutions which govern international trade. Students will be given a grounding in the jurisprudence of the WTO, but will also be introduced to interdisciplinary material on the broader political, economic, institutional and normative contexts in which international economic law operates. Key themes will include the question of 'development' and developing countries, the role of expertise in global economic governance, and institutional aspects of judicial international dispute settlement. Students will be expected to engage with the principles and practice of international economic law both at the technical level, and at the level of critical reflection.

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the theory and practice of international arbitration, one of the most important mechanisms for settling disputes arising from commercial cross-border transactions. The focus is mainly on English arbitration law, which is put into a comparative perspective and contrasted especially with French law, which highlights the antagonism between Paris and London as the rival centres for international arbitration. Special attention is given to the applicable international treaties, the problems of conflicts of laws, and the different types of institutional and transnational rules that may have to be taken into consideration in an international arbitration. This course prepares for 'Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration'.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course aims at giving students who already are acquainted with the fundamentals of arbitration the possibility to go into depth into selected problems of international commercial arbitration. The course is designed to allow intense discussions of these problems in order to raise the sensitivity for the issues at stake and to lead to a research oriented approach. Despite its academic outset, the course is highly relevant for those wanting to specialise in arbitration practice, as the theoretical problems have a most significant impact on practical solutions. The course will treat a selection of topical contemporary issues of international commercial arbitration, such as the role of internationally mandatory rules of law, arbitration & insolvency, the scope of the competence-competence principle; arbitration and fraud and corruption, or the enforcement of awards set aside abroad. The course seeks to be as topical as possible, so that content may change in the light of developments.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

International Commercial Contracts: General Principles

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.09

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course treats what can be called the general part of transnational contract law, i.e. the general principles of law which are of relevance in any kind of international contract, be it sale, construction, shipping, financing, or joint venture. These general principles relate to contractual formation and negotiations, interpretation, transversal general principles, changed circumstances and hardship, agency, third parties, assignment, self-help and set-off, direct performance and damages and penalties. At present, such contracts are governed either by uniform rules of international conventions or by the national laws applicable by virtue of conflict of law rules. The course puts the existing national and international solutions in a comparative perspective so as to work with the sources of such generally accepted principles. Where there are divergences between existing solutions, the course focuses on the elaboration of new efficient solutions that are internationally acceptable and have the potential of becoming general principles in the future. For these purposes, special attention is given to the UNIDROIT Principles on International Commercial Contracts and the European Principles of Contract Law. Other national laws, however, are drawn upon from time to time. Students are also encouraged, in both examination and classes, to reflect upon the similarities and differences between their own national laws and the UNIDROIT Principles.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course will focus on the role of boards of directors in large public companies and groups of companies. It will deal with the legal regulation of agency problems arising between the board and shareholders as a class; between the board/majority shareholders and minority shareholders; and between the board and other stakeholder groups, notably creditors and employees. Although the main focus will be on board and shareholder relationships, the aim of the course is to develop and apply a framework of analysis which illuminates relations between the board and all stakeholder groups. The course will be taught largely on a comparative basis, focusing on English, US, German and French law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL420E Half Unit International Law and Climate Change

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course covers the international law dealing with climate change with a view to assessing how risks and uncertainties caused by climate change are governed and allocated in different legal regimes. The course adopts the stance that the political and legal questions raised by climate change cannot be addressed by reference to climate change law (or indeed international environmental law) alone. Climate change gives rise to a series of profound problems touching upon a range of bodies of law (international economic law, human rights law, state responsibility, international migration law) in a complex political and ethical environment. In approaching climate change as a concrete concern relevant to these various bodies of law and practice, the course will address the normative and/or ethical bases for choosing between actions designed to prevent and/or manage climate change and its consequences, attentive to developmental imperatives and the theoretical concerns raised by the 'fragmented' nature of international law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL423E Half Unit Media Law: Regulating Publication

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of mass media publication (principally the press, the broadcast media, and institutionalised Internet publication). The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media publication practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines potential restrictions on publication that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests considered are those in reputation (defamation), privacy, and confidentiality. The key public interests considered are the integrity of the judicial process (contempt and reporting restrictions), the impartiality of political representations, the avoidance of offence (obscenity and religion), national security, and the protection of children.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Warby, Moreham and Christie (eds) Tugendhat and Christie: The Law of Privacy and the Media, (3rd edn, OUP, 2016), Parkes and Mullis (eds), Gatley on Libel and Slander (Sweet & Maxwell, 12th ed, 2013); Fenwick and Phillipson, Media Freedom Under the Human Rights Act (OUP, 2006); Robertson and Nicol, Media Law (Sweet & Maxwell, 5th ed 2007), Doley and Mullis (eds), Carter Ruck on Libel and Privacy (6th edn, Lexis Nexis, 2010), Barendt, Freedom of Speech (OUP, 2nd ed 2005), Nicol, Millar and Sharland, Media Law and Human Rights (OUP, 2009); Cram, A Virtue Less Cloistered: Courts, Speech and Constitutions (Hart Publishing, 2002).

Course content: This course examines the legal and administrative regulation of newsgathering and content production practices undertaken by journalists and others working in the media sector. The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media newsgathering practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines a number of newsgathering practices that are either facilitated or proscribed by law and/or other forms of regulation. These include protection of sources (in general; vis-a vis police and security interests; payment of sources); access to information held by the state (official secrets; news management; freedom of information); access to the justice system (secret justice / physical access to courts; access to court documents; technology and the courts - text-based reporting and broadcasting; access to prisoners); media-police interaction; harassment and media intrusion, and surreptitious newsgathering practices (hacking, tapping and subterfuge).

Competition Law

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course is a comprehensive study of the main features of competition law. While the focus is on EU competition law, reference will be made to the laws of other jurisdictions (e.g. the United States and the UK) when these offer relevant points for comparison. The first part of the course examines the history and aims of competition law. It considers the role of economic analysis and its limitations in the light of non-economic considerations. The second part is a review of the major substantive fields: restrictive practices; the regulation of monopolies and dominant positions; distribution and cooperation agreements and merger control. The third part addresses the public and private enforcement of competition law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to the philosophy of human rights and theoretical issues in human rights law. The emphasis is on a combination of law and theory; to this end, each seminar will rely on a mixture of cases from various jurisdictions and theoretical and philosophical materials. The overarching questions to be examined are to what extent current philosophical theories of human rights can illuminate our understanding of the cases and legal doctrines, and to what extent the cases and doctrines can help improving the theoretical and philosophical understanding of human rights. Topics to be discussed will include: Interest Theories of Human Rights; Ronald Dworkin's Theory of Rights as Trumps; Balancing and Proportionality; Human Rights and Judicial Review I (The American Perspective); Human Rights and Judicial Review II (The European Perspective); Absolute Rights.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: The course will rely on both cases from various jurisdictions and articles and book chapters from authors including Ronald Dworkin, Robert Alexy, James Griffin, Matthias Kumm, Jeremy Waldron and Frances Kamm.

LL432E Half Unit Mergers, Acquisitions and Restructurings

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Edmund-Philipp Schuster NAB6.30

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites for this module.

Course content: In this module, we will explore the regulation of mergers, acquisitions and restructurings in Europe. We will focus on legal techniques for the combination and restructuring of business operations in Europe, with a particular focus on the legal issues arising in cross-border transactions in the EU.

There are a number of reasons for corporations wanting to restructure their operations or to make acquisitions. For instance, firms may want to acquire a strategically valuable firm or asset in order to improve the efficiency (and thus increase the value) of their business operations; they may want to implement a better governance structure, enabling them to manage their undertaking more effectively; or they may want to subject themselves to more favourable legal or tax rules – including choosing among different national corporate laws.

EU law offers a range of legal vehicles for achieving such aims, and it is these vehicles we will explore throughout the term. In particular, we will look at re-incorporations of EU companies based on the relevant Treaty provisions; takeovers of (listed) EU companies; domestic ("statutory") mergers; de-mergers and spin-offs; cross-border mergers in the EU; and the European Company.

Content overview:

- The market for corporate control, corporate ownership structures and transaction structures for takeovers and restructurings in Europe
- European takeover regulation
- Domestic mergers

- Divisions & spin-offs
- Cross-border mergers
- Employee participation (board-level co-determination) and board structures, and their relevance for corporate transactions
- The European Company (SE)
- Brief introduction to taxation of corporate transactions and tax-related drivers and incentives for intra-group reorganisation and company migration

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Course content: Member States of the EU are not free to award subsidies to their national companies or to support them in a comparable way (by, inter alia, securing favourable supply conditions to the companies, granting loans at favourable rates or providing unlimited guarantees). In the wake of the recent financial crisis, for instance, bailout measures adopted across the EU had to be cleared by the European Commission in accordance with Articles 107 and 108 TFEU. The first part of the course explores the economic rationale underpinning the control of State aid in the European Union (the reasons why similar regimes are not implemented at the national level in federal countries facing similar issues, such as the United States, will also be explored). The second part examines (i) the notion of State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU and (ii) the conditions under which measures falling under the scope of that provision may be deemed compatible with the internal market. The third part provides an overview of the application of the law in some sectors (including the financial and the communications sectors) or for some purposes (e.g. research and development, regional aid). The fourth part is devoted to the procedural aspects of the discipline.

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: Some background in public international law is helpful for this course. If an introduction or refresher is needed, a standard textbook such as Malcolm Shaw's International Law is recommended.

Course content: The course looks at the history of and background to international criminal law and at its substantive content—its origins in the early Twentieth Century, its purported objectives, and the core crimes set out in the Rome Statute over which the International Criminal Court has jurisdiction (war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide). The course will then examine in more detail a number of areas of contemporary interest (universal jurisdiction, immunity, torture, terrorism). The course is mainly directed at the conceptual problems associated with the prosecution of war criminals and, more broadly, legalised retribution.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Cryer, Friman, Robinson & Wilmschurst, An Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure (Cambridge), 2nd edition (2009)
Simpson, Law, War and Crime, Polity (2007).

Indicative reading

LL438E Half Unit Commercial Remedies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Solene Rowan NAB 7.26 and Dr Charles Webb NAB 6.26

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduate contract and tort law

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with a detailed understanding of remedies in a commercial context. The reading addresses both case law and academic commentary. Here is an indicative list of the issues that will be considered on the course:

1. The aims of commercial remedies: What interests and other policies may be served by the law when remedying commercial disputes?
2. The function of contract damages: How do the courts assess damages for breaches of contract? Should the courts do more to protect the claimant's interest in performance? What limits are placed on the recovery or measure of damages?
3. Punishment: Is punishment of a defaulting defendant ever a legitimate aim in commercial remedies? Should punitive damages be given a greater role in English commercial law?
4. Agreed remedies: To what extent are commercial parties free to fix the remedies available to them in the event of breach? Does freedom of contract extend to the parties' secondary obligations?
5. Unjust enrichment: What is the law of unjust enrichment? What is its relationship to the law of contract? What can commercial parties recover under the law of unjust enrichment?
6. Comparative law: How do other jurisdictions deal with these questions? What might the common law learn from civil law systems?

Teaching: 24 hours

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. Formative assessment opportunities will be provided (essay or problem questions)

Indicative reading: Rowan, Remedies for Breach of Contract: A Comparative Analysis of the Protection of Performance (OUP 2012) Burrows, Remedies for Torts and Breach of Contract (3rd edn OUP 2004). ### Digital Rights, Privacy and Security

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Orla Lynskey (NAB 6.23)

Professor Andrew Murray (NAB 7.11)

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of EU law is desirable but not essential for this course.

Course content: Personal data is an important factor of production in data-driven economies, and the processing of personal data can generate significant economic and social benefits. Personal data processing can also have a detrimental impact on established rights and values, such as autonomy, privacy and data protection. As a result, legal frameworks to regulate personal data processing have been enacted across the world, with the EU legal model used as a blueprint. Yet, despite the development of such legal frameworks across the globe, critical questions remain unanswered. For instance, the objectives of data protection frameworks differ with some prioritising a fundamental-rights approach to data protection regulation while other frameworks are based on an economic free-trade rationale. Disagreement also persists regarding how the balance should be struck between effective data protection and other rights (such as freedom of expression and freedom of information) and interests (such as innovation and national security). This course will critically evaluate the legal framework applicable to personal data processing. It will do this predominantly with reference to the EU framework, as this has served as a model for over 80 other jurisdictions. However we will also examine the US legal framework as it differs considerably from other global legal regimes. Participants will be introduced to techniques and technologies for monitoring and processing personal data in the information society. In order to bring key issues to life, a number of case studies will be considered: the application of data protection rules to online behavioural advertising; to the Internet of Things; and to State surveillance.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Lynskey, The Foundations of EU Data Protection Law (OUP, 2015). Mayer-Schönberger, Delete: The Virtue of Forgetting in the Digital Age (Princeton UP, 2009). For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: Executive version of an existing taught masters course (LL4A8).

Course content: This course examines the international law relating to when it is permissible to use force (jus ad bellum). The aim of this course is to develop an understanding of the principles of international law that regulate the use of force in international society. It concentrates on the prohibition of resort to force in Article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter and the exceptions to that prohibition. It looks in detail at the right of self-defence, humanitarian intervention and the responsibility to protect, pro-democratic intervention, the protection of nationals and the criminalization of aggression. The use of force by or with the authorization of the United Nations is also considered.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued in the course pack. See, in particular: Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence (5th ed, 2011); Gray, International Law and the Use of Force (3rd ed, 2008).

LL445E Half Unit Cultural Property and Heritage Law

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB7.27

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course looks at cultural property and heritage law from legal, social theoretical and practice-oriented perspectives. It provides an overview of existing and emerging cultural property and heritage legislation (domestic and international). We will be looking in particular at the development of cultural property legislation in the 20th century and emerging international cultural property and heritage initiatives under the auspices of the UN and UNESCO. Topics to be covered include the origins of cultural property law, the problems in defining cultural property and heritage, current issues and cases in repatriation and restitution of cultural objects, the National Trust and other heritage protection regimes, and intangible cultural heritage. The course also addresses the creation and management of museums and heritage sites, primarily within the UK, but also including sites in North and South America, Europe and Asia. We consider how the issues that we've identified throughout the course arise in the ongoing construction, protection, and (primarily economic) uses of heritage. Along with specialist seminars, the course includes visits to museums and contact with practising experts in the field.

Teaching: Courses are taught over 5 days (Mon-Fri) with approximately 5 hours teaching per day. There is a morning and an afternoon session, so 10 sessions in total with the overall contact time being 24-26 hours.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL446E Half Unit Art and Antiquities Law

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB7.27

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course engages in a discussion of specific cases and issues regarding acquisition, ownership, and restitution of antiquities and works of art, and the problems that arise in regulating markets in art, antiquities and cultural artefacts. We will look at domestic (UK and US) and international legislation regulating the art and antiquities trades. Against this legislative background, the course examines important cases in disputes regarding looting and provenance of antiquities, and questions of commodification and sale of cultural artefacts and antiquities, including the issues that arise in the operation of the art market (dealers, museums, collectors and auction houses). 'Art Law' is a specialized area of practice and an emerging area of theory and scholarship. We will look at some of the cases and theory of art and law, including the practices of dealers and auction houses in valuing (and mis-valuing) art for sale; the recent developments in addressing the restitution of art taken during the Nazi era; museum loans and the cross-border movement of art; the restoration and conservation debate(s) and then turn to a scholarly and interpretive approach to the issues that arise in considering the art market. 'Antiquity Law is an engagement with the problems of the market(s) in antiquities and the legal and ethical burdens on the participants in this trade. We will look at the practices and constraints that arise in the context of both private purchasers/dealers and museums acquiring antiquities. We will focus on the case that the government of Italy brought against Marion True, the erstwhile Curator of Antiquities at the Getty Museum, and we will consider how that ground-breaking prosecution changed some of the practices in this area, as well as added to the toolbox for nations seeking repatriation of cultural objects. We will also return to the questions that arise in dealer, auction house and museum policies more generally. Finally, practitioners in these areas, museum and auction house professionals, archaeologists, and art experts will be contributing to the seminars on the emerging legal issues in this area.

Teaching: Courses are taught over 5 days (Mon-Fri) with approximately 5 hours teaching per day. There is a morning and an afternoon session, so 10 sessions in total with the overall contact time being 24-26 hours.

International Law: Courts and Tribunals

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Devika Hovell NAB6.32

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course introduces students to the practice and theory of international legal dispute resolution, focusing on dispute settlement before courts and tribunals. The former Prosecutor of the Yugoslav Tribunal, Richard Goldstone, resolved that: 'it seems to me that if you don't have international tribunals, you might as well not have international law'. Given the proliferation of courts and tribunals applying and enforcing international law, certain scholars have argued we are witnessing the emergence of an 'international judicial system' (Martinez).

The course involves three main elements:

1. Firstly, the course examines the structure and work of the International Court of Justice, the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, focusing on jurisdiction/admissibility, contentious cases and advisory opinions.
2. Secondly, the course introduces a variety of other international courts and tribunals, such as the International Criminal Court, domestic and regional courts dealing with international law and human rights, including the European Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Justice, the WTO Dispute Settlement Body and investment treaty arbitral tribunals. Using contemporary and controversial case studies, the course will critically analyze and contrast the institutional design and jurisdiction of these courts and tribunals.
3. Thirdly, throughout the course we explore key theoretical controversies surrounding the adjudication of international law, focusing in particular on (a) how these courts and tribunals relate to one another (hierarchy, specialization and fragmentation); (b) what criteria should be used in assessing the legitimacy and effectiveness of these courts and tribunals; and (c) whether and how these courts and tribunals create international law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students are encouraged to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading includes Karen Alter, The New Terrain of International Law: Courts, Politics, Rights (2014 Princeton); Gleider Hernández, The International Court of Justice and the Judicial Function (2014 OUP); Yuval Shany, 'No Longer a Weak Department of Power? ### Behavioural Decision Science

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Barbara Fasolo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course introduces students to the fascinating field of behavioural "decision" science. We will explore a selection of current research topics relevant to personal and managerial decision making as well as policy-making. For each topic students will get acquainted with key psychological phenomena and principles of behavioural decision science through interactive lectures, and become alert to cognitive biases and learn how to overcome them. Students will read pre-assigned scientific articles and in class discuss lessons learned, limitations and implications of these concepts for the development of decision making competence in their organisation (e.g. via design of policies, training programmes, or tools). Topics will include: Origin of Behavioural Decision Science; the Building Blocks of Behavioural Decision Science: Preferences, Utility and Value; Probability, Uncertainty and Risk; Choice Architecture and Behavioural Change; Heuristics and Biases in Decisions about Money, Health, Consumer Products and People.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: The formative assignment will take place on the final day of the course after all the lectures and seminars have been completed. The assignment will consist of a plenary presentation in which students divided into small groups will be asked to give a short presentation discussing an intervention (de-biasing technique, nudging, or choice architecture) that can be used to tackle the most important biases in a decision making problem of their choice. Student groups will develop their plenary presentations during seminars while interacting with the course teachers and other students. The formative feedback will be given at a team level, and will focus on the rigour and use of behavioural science concepts learned in the course.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 3000 words) in the MT.

The summative assignment will include two parts. In the first part (no more than 1,000 words), you will be asked to describe and critically evaluate how the decision problem as well as the intervention presented for the formative assessment came about. This part will be less academic because we will expect you to use individual reflection, and academic references will not be needed. In the second part of the essay (no more than 2,000 words), you will justify the specific nudging or debiasing intervention, with reference to behavioural literature, and theories. The first part of the essay will count for 25% of your mark while 75% will come from the second part.

MG407E Half Unit*Goals and Motivation for Individuals and Teams*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Heather KappesAvailability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: For the modern day enterprise, be it private firms seeking to maximize revenues and profits, non-profit organisations seeking to change behaviours and raise money for pro-social causes, or government bodies seeking to implement policy, the role of goals and motivations is critical, both at the individual level and the team level. For each entity it is important to gain a critical understanding of what kinds of goals individuals and teams are attracted to, how these goals are set and pursued, what factors and incentives aid or hinder such goal pursuit and goal achievement, and how teams and individuals react to feedback on their progress towards these goals. This course familiarises students with strategies for promoting success over every phase of goal pursuit, from first consideration, to commitment, to action, and beyond. Students will learn how to categorise goals using empirically-tested frameworks like construal level theory, regulatory focus theory, and mindset theory (learning versus performance goals). They will use these frameworks to identify the problems that plague goal pursuit: problems like failing to get started (e.g., trying to break a habit), getting derailed (e.g., ego depletion), and continuing when it would be better to quit (e.g., sunk costs phenomenon). Students will be introduced to empirical findings on the optimal ways to use tools like specific goal setting, implementation intentions, mental simulations of processes versus outcomes, and self-efficacy in order to boost motivation and aid in successful goal pursuit.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 7 hours of seminars in the LT.Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option. The information in this course guide pertains to the 2016-2018 cohort.

Course content: A graduate-level introduction to the foundations of managerial economics and its application to high-level business decisions. Topics include:

1. Economics as a theory of organisation.
2. Demand, supply, and equilibrium: the determinants of consumers' and firms' market responses, the nature of non-strategic interaction, government intervention, international trade
3. Externalities and market failure
4. Strategic interaction and Game Theory
5. Choice under uncertainty: attitudes towards risk
6. Information and efficiency: adverse selection
7. Price discrimination: nonlinear pricing, social economics
8. Horizontal and Vertical Differentiation.

Management. This course is not available as an outside option. This information in this course guide pertains to the 2016-2018 cohort.

Course content: The course seeks to understand individual attitudes and behaviour in an organizational context. It does this by reviewing psychological theories as they apply to organisations, demonstrating the contribution of a psychological perspective to understanding human behaviour at work, and critically evaluating the empirical evidence. The course attempts to strike a balance between theory and practice by applying the theories to practical problems in organizations.

Topics include personality and individual differences, motivation and rewards, intrinsic motivation, creativity, organizational justice, cross-cultural management, organisational culture and change.

Teaching: Teaching is spread over the first 3 modules. The teaching is highly participative and includes breakout discussions and exercises. The course will run between the following dates:

- 30 August - 10 September 2016
- 12-17 December 2016
- 27 March - 9 April 2017

Formative coursework: A practice exam will be provided and feedback will be given on this assignment.

Indicative reading: The course relies on journal articles (for example, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour). A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. There is no required textbook. The following textbook is recommended for students who would like further reading: French, R., Rayner, C., Rees, G. & Rumbles, S. (2011) Organizational Behaviour, 2nd edition. John Wiley & Sons, Ltd.

Assessment: Essay (20%), take home exam (65%) and class participation (15%).

Class participation - based on group presentations.

MG445 Half Unit Marketing Strategy (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Om Narasimhan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option. The information in this course guide pertains to the 2015-2017 cohort.

Course content: This course is a rigorous examination of the key analytical frameworks, technical tools and concepts that are essential to building an effective marketing strategy. Peter Drucker, the father of business consulting once famously remarked, "Because the purpose of business is to create a customer, the business enterprise has two--and only two--basic functions: marketing and innovation". In today's highly competitive business environment these words ring even more true: a well-designed marketing strategy can make all the difference between success and failure in the marketplace. While marketing is commonly associated with consumer goods companies (e.g., Unilever) it would be myopic to restrict the relevance of marketing to such instances alone. Marketing, ultimately, is about understanding and shaping behaviour. Accordingly, banks and other financial institutions, as well as governmental, medical, and not-for-profit organisations - from those that design and sell financial products, to those that implement public policy (e.g., those dedicated to reducing drunk driving, increasing literacy, and encouraging safe contraception), have all found that a well-thought out marketing strategy can be a critical arbiter of success even in this "ideas marketplace."

By using a wide range of quantitative as well as qualitative methods, interactive lectures, videos, hands-on exercises, and case studies, we will share key analytical frameworks and tools that are essential to a good marketing strategy. The aim is to develop an analytical tool-kit that will be applicable to a wide range of industries and functions.

Teaching: Scheduled over two modules - one of which will take place overseas. Teaching will be spread across 10 sessions of up to 4 hours each.

Formative coursework: Case write up.

Indicative reading: There is no required textbook. Further references will be provided at the commencement of the course.

Assessment: Take home exam (55%), class participation (15%) and other (30%).

Class participation (15%).

Group live case analysis (30%).

Take home exam (55%).

MG446 Half Unit Strategy, Organisation and Innovation (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lourdes Sosa

(Three sessions will be taught by a guest teacher - Dr Mia de Kuijper)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option. The information in this course guide pertains to the 2015-2017 cohort.

Course content: The course seeks to understand differences in profitability across (for-profit) firms with the objective of designing strategic recommendations for managers to improve (and defend) their firms' competitive positions. To do so we will first review industry-wide as well as firm-specific determinants of short-term profitability. On that foundation we will look at long-term determinants of profitability including dynamic capabilities and innovative ability. The course aims to balance exposure to general strategic principles and specific practical applications. To that purpose, we will use theoretical frameworks to analyse practical cases from a wide array of firms in varied countries.

Topics include business models, industry structure and competition, value proposition, strategic resources and inimitability, dynamic capabilities, disruptive innovation, power nodes strategy and scenario planning.

Teaching: Taught over 10 four-hour sessions spread over 2 modules. The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures, breakout discussion, exercises and a company visit.

The course will run between the following dates:

- 5 - 10 September 2016

Formative coursework: Feedback will be given on one short essay, preparing students for the exam, as well as on in-class exercises.

Indicative reading: The course relies on journal articles (for example, Strategic Management Journal). A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Sample texts include the following: Porter, M.E. (2008) The Five Competitive Forces that Shape Strategy (Harvard Business Review); Christensen, C., Bower J. (1996) Customer Power, Strategic Investment, and the Failure of Leading Firms (Strategic Management Journal); Teece, D., Pisano, G., Shuen, A. (1997) Dynamic Capabilities and Strategic Management (Strategic Management Journal); De Kuijper, M. (2009) Profit Power Economics.

Assessment: Essay (30%), class participation (10%) and take home exam (60%).

MG447 Half Unit Foreign Direct Investment and Emerging Markets (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB4.32

Dr Christine Cote

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option. The information in this course guide pertains to the 2015-2017 cohort.

Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused to developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The new institutional economics has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies performance. This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concept such as the resource based view. We will then provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economics and working with a large variety of datasets and sources. The remainder of the course is devoted to specific topics of MNEs in emerging markets. These include the determinants and impact of FDI; entry mode choices; measures of institutional distance; outsourcing; and emerging market multinationals.

Teaching: 32 hours of lectures in the MT. 8 hours of lectures in the LT.

Scheduled over three modules, one of which will take place overseas – 10 sessions of up to 4 hours.

The course will run between the following dates:

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. Ghemawat, Redefining Global Strategy, Harvard Business School Press, 2007; J. ### Dissertation/Capstone Project (modular)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Various

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option. This information in this course guide pertains to the 2016-2018 cohort.

Course content: This course consists of a project which will be undertaken throughout the second year of the degree. Students will choose between an academic dissertation or a capstone project. The academic dissertation will explore a question that is grounded in academic theory and literature. The capstone project will explore a business idea or venture. In both projects, students will collect original data relevant to their research question or business idea and must analyse the data, discuss limitations, and draw conclusions.

Teaching: Students are required to participate in 20 hours of scheduled seminar sessions from module 3 onwards which will provide guidance and support in developing their dissertation or capstone project. Separate seminars will be conducted to provide support for those who choose the academic dissertation and those who choose the capstone project. Students will be allocated a faculty advisor who will support and guide them. The course will run throughout the year.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to agree their dissertation/capstone topic with a faculty advisor and provide a plan which they will receive feedback on.

Indicative reading: Relevant reading will be provided by academic advisors.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words).

PH426E Half Unit

Philosophy and Public Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Luc Bovens and Dr Alexander Voorhoeve

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Course content:

This course yields insight into key moral and political values that are essential for policy-makers when they draw on behavioural science. Discussion is focused on cases and is thoroughly interdisciplinary: it draws on both normative philosophical arguments and findings from the social sciences to allow students to make informed and rigorous evaluations of public decisions. Topics may vary, but the following is a representative sample:

- When we aim to prevent harms, should we give less priority to harms that befall people only because of their free choices than to harms that they could not avoid through their choices?
- How should we balance the importance of respecting people's autonomy (self-governance) with the importance of promoting their well-being?
- Or Should some things never be for sale even if both the buyer and the seller wish to transact and no one else is harmed?
- When we have limited resources to distribute among people who are in need, how can we distribute them fairly?
- What is the nature of behavioural mechanisms? How should subjects, social scientists and policy makers approach patterns of agency that are determined by such mechanisms?
- What are the moral problems associated with libertarian paternalism or Nudge? How does this approach compare to other policy mechanisms, such as regulation, taxation and subsidies, and social advertisement, to address and correct externalities?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 7 hours of seminars in the Easter Vacation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

Indicative reading: Bovens, L. (2008) The Ethics of Nudge. In: Grune-Yanoff, Till and Hansson, Sven Ove (eds.) Preference Change: Approaches from Philosophy, Economics and Psychology. ## SA4E1 Half Unit

Health Administration and Management

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COWG.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is intended to provide the student an orientation and overview on managing organizations within health systems. The governance, execution, information management, quality of care, and sustaining human resources will be discussed, including an examination of the uses of accounting and other forms of reporting to manage health services. This is an introductory course, appropriate for students with no formal inpatient health care management experience. The course will cover the following topics: principle responsibilities of a health care system and organizations within the system; issues and strategies for enabling health care organizations to be responsive to their environment; concepts for supporting and implementing governance decisions; strategies for performance measurement and information, and analytical activities related to planning, finance, and information needs; characteristics and development of systems to assure quality of clinical services.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars.

Formative coursework: Formative essay.

Indicative reading: The following are some of the background readings for the course: Julian Le Grand, The Other Invisible Hand; Woodstock: Princeton University Press, 2007, David Hunter, The Health Debate, The Policy Press, 2008., Henry Mintzberg, "Structures in 5's: A Synthesis of Research on Organization Design," Management Science, 26 (3): 322-341 (1980)., C.S. Chapman, D.J. Cooper and P. Miller (eds), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in August.

Resource Allocation and Cost-effectiveness Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi OLD.2.35

In addition, Professor M Drummond (Professor of Health Economics, University of York) will be teaching on the course.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim is to give an overview of the theory underlying economic evaluation as applied to the health care sector; to consider the different forms of economic evaluation; to give an understanding of the techniques associated with economic evaluation as applied to health care; to give an understanding of the interpretation of the results gained from economic evaluation; to provide the main practical tools necessary to undertake economic evaluation using computer-based programs. The course will cover the following topics: Conceptual rationales for economic evaluation in the health care sector (Pareto efficiency, Social Welfare, extra-welfarism and decision-making); Introduction to the methods of economic evaluation: cost-effectiveness analysis, cost-utility analysis, and Cost-benefit analysis; Cost data; Incremental cost-effectiveness analysis; Quality Adjusted Life Years gained and other outcome measures; Discounting; Uncertainty and sensitivity analysis; Economic evaluation and clinical trials; Policy decision-making using economic evaluation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars, including computer-based practical workshops.

Formative coursework: Mock exam given after teaching session with feedback from course organiser.

Indicative reading: M Drummond et al, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, Oxford, OUP, 2015, fourth edition..

M Drummond & A McGuire (Eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, Oxford, OUP, 2002.
Gray, A. Clarke, P.M, Wolstenholme, P., Wordsworth, S. Applied Methods of Cost-effectiveness Analysis in Healthcare (Handbooks in Health Economic Evaluation), Oxford, OUP, 2011.

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in August.

SA4E3 Half Unit

Dissertation in Health Economics, Policy and Management

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Grace Lordan OLD.M2.26 and Dr Irene Papanicolas COW G.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research that will contribute to the field of health economics, health policy or health management. The contribution of the work to the chosen field must be made clear. The output will be a piece of work of 5000 words or less that is written in an article format that is suitable for submission to a peer reviewed journal. Students must obtain the approval of their supervisor before embarking on any research.

Arrangements for supervision

Students' tutors will act as their dissertation supervisor in the first instance. If the specific topic a student wishes to cover for his/her dissertation requires a different supervisor, a MSc programme director can arrange this change. The dissertation supervisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research.

Teaching: The dissertation process is supported by three teaching sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will have an opportunity to have one draft of their thesis proposal read by their tutor in December of Year 2. In addition, they will have an opportunity to have a 1000 word outline of their thesis read by their tutor.

Assessment: Dissertation (95%, 5000 words) in September.

Research proposal (5%) in the MT.

5% of the mark will be based on a dissertation proposal due in the December of the second year of study. In this case students will receive 5% if their thesis proposal is deemed a viable and a relevant contribution to the literature by two examiners. If a student does not receive 5%, they will still have their dissertation marked out of 100.

The dissertation paper copies must be handled in to the Department by the specified deadline of the second year of the MSc programme. An electronic version of the dissertation must be also submitted. Penalties will be applied to any late submission. The word limit for the dissertation is 5,000 words (excluding references and tables) and it must be in a journal article format.

SA4F2 Half Unit

Principles of Evidence-Based Medicine and Clinical Trials

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Grace Lordan OLD.2.26

In addition, Professor Allan Hackshaw (Deputy Director, Cancer Research UK and UCL Cancer Trials Centre, UCL) will be teaching on this course.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A large amount of medical research is conducted, with variable quality. Also, health claims are frequently reported in the media, and it can be difficult to determine which is based on reliable evidence and which is not. It is therefore essential to be able to interpret study results and conclusions appropriately, in order to change clinical practice or develop public health policy. This is achieved by Evidence-Based Medicine. The module will enable students to evaluate risk factors for disease or early death, and methods of disease prevention or treatment. The module will provide students with practical skills in the following key areas:

- Understanding the different types of research that can be conducted in humans and their strengths and limitations, i.e. observational studies and a focus on clinical trials.
- Interpreting research results and conclusions using aspects of epidemiology and medical statistics, and how to communicate study findings.
- Reading and understanding published journal articles or pharmaceutical company reports.
- Examining the efficacy and safety of health care interventions (an important part of a complete health economic evaluation of a clinical trial).
- Familiarity with systematic reviews (i.e. how several studies are combined, and the importance of looking at the evidence as a whole).

Teaching: 10 interactive seminars/workshops, each 2-3 hours long.

Formative coursework: Students will be given two short exercises before the course begins, via Moodle, to help prepare for the course. The tutor will go over these during the contact week, and address any queries from the students. However, detailed written answers are provided, so the students can access these if they undertake any of the exercises after the contact week. The tutor is also available for one-to-one email contact with any student.

Indicative reading: - Hackshaw A. A concise guide to clinical trials. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, first edition 2009.

- Hackshaw A. A concise guide to observational studies in healthcare. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, first edition 2015.

- Greenhalgh T. How to Read a Paper: The Basics of Evidence-Based Medicine. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, fourth edition, 2010. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle.

Assessment: Other (50%) and other (50%) in the LT.

There will be two pieces of coursework based on a clinical trial of an intervention or a risk/causal factor, in the form of:

- a written assignment in the form of a PowerPoint slide deck (about 25 slides) and a statement of 400 words of conclusion, based on a published paper and associated media news article of the paper (50%)
- 4-5 questions specific to a published paper with answers requiring 1-2 paragraphs each (one question involves writing a media news article of 400-500 words) (50%).

SA4G1 Half Unit Financing Health Care

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos COW4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to give students a thorough grounding in health financing policy. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in European countries, but the general principles studied apply internationally. By the end of the course students will have:

- a grasp of the economic, political and philosophical concepts relevant to any discussion of health financing policy
- a good understanding of how financing arrangements affect the achievement of key health financing policy goals such as financial protection, equity in financing and equity of access to health care, incentives for efficiency and quality in the organization and delivery of health services, administrative efficiency, transparency and accountability

- the skills to critically assess current health financing arrangements and options for reform
- an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: 11 hours of lectures in total and 4 seminars (1.5 hours each).

Formative coursework: Students will sit a progress test in their own time. This will involve writing an essay under exam conditions. Their seminar leader will mark the essay and provide a mark and written feedback.

Indicative reading: WHO, World Health Report 2010 - Health systems financing: the path to universal coverage (2010); E Mossialos, A Dixon, J Figueras & J Kutzin (eds), Funding health care: options for Europe, Open University Press (2002); J Kutzin, Health financing policy: a guide for decision-makers, World Health Organization (2008); T Rice, The economics of health reconsidered, Health Administration Press (3rd edn, 2009)

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle.

They will be expected to read these prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Distinction between health and health care. Nature of health care as an economic commodity. How markets and insurance markets work, and how they can fail for health care and health insurance.. Incentive mechanisms and principal-agent relationships in health care. Yardstick competition and Diagnostic Related Group payment schemes. Labour markets in health care. Economic evaluation as a regulatory tool.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: The following is a basic reading list for the course: S Folland, A C Goodman & M Stano, The Economics of Health and Health Care (3rd edn), Prentice Hall, 2001; B McPake, L Kumaranayake & C Normand, Health Economics - An International Perspective, Routledge, 2002.

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

SA4G3 Half Unit Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the economics of pharmaceutical markets and related policies that affect national and international markets broadly.

- To provide students with an understanding of basic features of pharmaceutical markets and how pharmaceutical markets work and how competition manifests itself in different parts of pharmaceutical markets.
- To illustrate to students how the pharmaceutical market is linked to the health care market, why it is often the focus of much regulation, and to help students understand the multidimensional goals of pharmaceutical policies.
- To introduce students to the economic and policy problems encountered in managing pharmaceutical markets and how to evaluate the impact of alternative policy approaches. The course will also give students some experience in critically evaluating the impact of policy on market outcomes.
- To facilitate consideration of various country-specific political, cultural and economic factors that may drive governments' approaches to pharmaceutical regulation. In this context, this course will help students consider the extent to which policies may be transferable.
- To enable students to analyse pharmaceutical markets from the perspectives of several main actors: governments, third party payers, the pharmaceutical industry, doctors, patients, pharmacists and wholesalers. Literature from Health Economics, Industrial Organisation and Health Policy will be incorporated into lectures, discussions and seminars.
- To introduce students to the economics of pricing and reimbursing pharmaceutical products, to explore different models of pricing and reimbursing medicines in OECD countries, including rate of return regulation, value-based pricing, cost-plus pricing, external price referencing and internal reference pricing, among others.

Teaching: The course will comprise 10 x 1-hour interactive lectures, 1 x 1-hour revision session and 5 x 2-hour interactive seminars, where students will discuss specific case studies.

Formative coursework: A 2000 word formative essay, to mirror an exam question, to be written during seminar time.

Indicative reading: E Mossialos, M Mrazek & T Walley (eds), Regulating Pharmaceuticals in Europe. Striving for Efficiency, Equity and Quality, Buckingham, Open University Press (2004); S O Schweitzer, Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy, Oxford University Press (2006); W S Comanor, 'The Political Economy of the Pharmaceutical Industry', Journal of Economic Literature, XXIV (September): 1178-1217 (1986); F M Scherer 'The Pharmaceutical Industry', Chapter 25, in: A J Culyer & J P Newhouse (Eds), Handbook of Health Economics, Vol 1, Amsterdam, Oxford, Elsevier, 2000. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This is the same course as SA427 Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

SA4G4 Half Unit Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Raikou

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences and Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course develops the statistical and modelling techniques necessary to apply economic evaluation to the health care sector.

Introduction to statistical methods, linear regression analysis, logistic regression analysis, survival analysis for health outcomes, survival analysis for treatment costs, economic evaluation and clinical trials. Estimation of confidence intervals for cost-effectiveness ratios. Transformation of ratios - net benefit approach. Missing data, parametric and non-parametric approaches. Presentation of analysis, acceptability curves.

Teaching: 13 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars (computer based)

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time. Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: The following are basic reading for the course: M Drummond & A McGuire (Eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, OUP, 2002; M Drummond, B O'Brien, G Stoddart & T Torrance, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, 2nd edn, OUP, 1997; M Gold, J Siegel, L Russell & M Weinstein, Cost-Effectiveness in Health and Medicine, OUP, 1996; M Johannesson, Theory and Methods of Economic Evaluation in Health Care, Kluwer, 1996; P Johannesson, Evaluating Health Risks: An Economic Approach, CUP, 1995. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%).

This is the same course as SA4C3 Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

SA4G6 Half Unit Measuring Health System Performance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COWG.04

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences and Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to present a framework to discuss the opportunities and challenges with performance measurement in health care, examine the various dimensions and levels of health system performance, identify the measurement instruments and analytic tools needed, and examine the implications of these issues for policy makers and regulators. Lectures generally focus on measuring health system performance in high-income countries but draw on the experience of other countries where relevant.

After taking this course students are expected to:

- understand the principles of performance measurement
- appreciate the challenges, approaches, and opportunities in performance measurement in four dimensions: population health, patient outcomes, equity, quality and appropriateness of care, and productivity
- understand the methodological issues facing performance measurement relating to risk adjustment, developing composite measures, and measuring attribution and causality
- identify key issues relevant to policy makers relating to: developing targets and reporting on progress to the public, and developing incentives to improve performance

Teaching: 2 lectures (2 hours), 4 lectures (1.5 hours) and 5 seminars (2 hours).

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time. Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: Papanicolas I and Smith PC (Eds), Health System Performance Comparison: An agenda for policy, information and research. Maidenhead: Open University Press, 2013. Press, 2001; OECD, Measuring up: improving health system performance in OECD countries. Paris: OECD, 2002. World Health Organization (WHO), (2000) The world health report 2000:Health systems: Improving performance, Geneva: WHO Publications. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 3000 words) and in class assessment (25%).

In-class assessment (25%) and assessed piece of coursework (75%). In-class assessment on a presentation where students apply principles taught to construct an argument around a theory-based question informed from real world data. They would be assessed on their presentation as well as their ability to apply the conceptual material taught in class to practical data. Coursework is the production of a report where students are asked to evaluate and interpret key performance data for a particular country.

SA4K7

Health Care Negotiations

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Financing Health Care (SA4G1).

Course content: Lectures will cover the following material: The dynamics of health care stakeholders and the shifting balance of power among them; Introduction to the concept of negotiations and principles of game theory (principles of game theory, definition and properties of a Nash equilibrium; static and dynamic games; games with complete and incomplete information); the dilemma of complex, discontinuous, multiparty health care negotiations; the populator pricing exercise; the seven elements: defining success in health care negotiations; management as negotiation: frameworks and tools for analysing decision processes; the seven elements: defining success in health care negotiations; value creation and allocation in health care systems; when the people are the problem (partisan perceptions exercise; the three perspectives; the ladder of inference; the elements of relationship management).

Seminars will be interactive drawn based on case studies from specific health care environments (e.g. hospitals, drug coverage decision; health technology assessment; conflict between management and clinical excellence), and use frameworks such as Choice Analysis (a currently unresolved negotiation in which another party has or is expected to reject a proposal), Complex Problem Solving (a currently unresolved and complex situation involving so many parties and issues that the situation is unclear or confusing and our ability to influence the situation is in doubt), Rapport Management (one or more currently unresolved negotiations in which resolution of a troubled personal or corporate relationship with the key person(s) on the other side constitutes one of the major requirements or aspirations for agreement), Decision Rights Analysis (a live, unresolved task of persuasion involving one or more individuals negotiating in their capacity as employees of a large health care provider), and Value Creation (a complex, live, unresolved negotiation where lots of differing interests are implicated by the subject matter and the parties do not share the same interests or have the same priorities).

Teaching: The course will comprise 10 x 1-hour interactive lectures, 1 x 1-hour revision session and 5 x 2-hour interactive seminars, where students will discuss specific case studies.

Formative coursework: Students will be given a case study—reflecting a real-world situation - by the end of lecture 4 and will be asked to come up with a credible strategy/plan, which they will need to write up (2,000 words), submit and present during seminars.

Assessment: Project (100%, 4000 words).

The project is a group project, where small groups will be allocated a case study to work on, but individual group members will be responsible for submitting their own 4,000 word project individually (100%).

SA4K8 Half Unit

Health Care Quality Management

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW.G.04

This course will be led by Dr. Michael Holland, Associate Medical Director and Consultant Psychiatrist, South London and Maudsley NHS Foundation Trust.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences and Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An introduction and overview of quality improvement methodology as used in healthcare settings internationally. The course will cover the following areas:

1. History of quality management: The course will start with an overview of key theories in quality management such as those described Taylor, Shewhart, Deming and Juran. An overview of quality assurance systems used in healthcare, such as ISO 9000, Magnet, Baldrige award and their role in quality improvement. It will also include a discussion and overview of value-based healthcare.
2. A critical assessment of the mainstream schools of thought of quality as part of the production process - this will include a study of the relationship between supply chain procurement management and quality as well as the requirements for good production models and the critique of evidence-based decision-making in the clinical setting
3. Quantitative methods in quality management - This course will examine a number of tools for quality management purposes - both how to do them as well as how they fit into the various schools of thought on quality management. It will cover statistical process control which is a method of statistical analysis of time series data that is used in quality management. This method shows whether there is variability in processes and gives the user an ability to both measure improvements and declines in performance of both processes and outcomes and to understand whether processes are performing within acceptable limits. An overview of the quality improvement methodology known as Design of Experiments will also be given. The role of case mix adjustment in quality assessment will also be discussed.
4. Process Mapping - Understanding the value and power of mapping processes both at a systems level and at the individual process level. They will also be given an example of a process map from a healthcare environment to work on optimising.

5. Theories of capacity and flow management and examples of this in both in-patient and outpatient settings will be discussed. This will also include how DRG/HRG payment has a role within organisations of capacity management.

6. A critical overview of Lean, Six Sigma and Model for Improvement. While these models can be useful in healthcare management, these are not deep philosophies of organisation and many of the things which make healthcare unique (e.g. asymmetry of information, difficulty of measuring quality, patient behaviour and societal preferences for fairness) are sometimes not accounted for in these models.

Teaching: 5 lectures (5 x 2 hours) and 5 workshops (5 x 2 hours). The 5 workshops will focus on analysing case studies with a view of giving students a practical understanding of approaches to quality management in healthcare settings.

Formative coursework: A case study will be provided for the students to analyse and write an essay answering questions relating to it. Feedback will be provided on this essay by the seminar leader.

Two 2,500 word case study essays (50% each)

SA4K9 Half Unit

Advanced Health Economics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair McGuire COW4.05

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover: international comparisons of health care expenditure, health care insurance, contract theory applied to the health care sector (including principal-agent theory and incentive payment mechanisms), equity in health care, health behaviour and an introduction to econometric analysis applied to health care data.

Teaching: 19 hours of lectures.

Indicative reading: Culyer, A.J., and Newhouse, J.P., (eds.), 2001, Handbook of Health Economics Volumes 1A & 1B, (North-Holland, Amsterdam); Zweifel, P. and Breyer, F., 1997, Health Economics, (OUP, Oxford).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

Behavioural Science and Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Dolan OLD.2.38

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to the main concepts and tools of the growing fields of behavioural science. The course covers the following topics: What is behavioural science?; Choices under risk and uncertainty; Intertemporal decisions; Social preferences; Distributional preferences; The role of emotions in decision making; Compensating behaviours; Dual-process models of behaviour and the role of the unconscious mind; Dual processing into policy.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 7 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

Research Methods for Behavioural Science

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to introduce students to the main methodological concepts and tools in behavioural science. To achieve this objective, the course combines rigorous conceptual discussion with hands-on practical applications. The course covers: The beauty of experiments: how randomization solves the sample selection bias; Randomized controlled experiments from the lab to the field: taxonomy, principles, best practices; Statistical tools: distributions and their moments, the inference problem; Experimental design: between-subjects design, block/stratified randomization, matched-pair design, within-subjects design, cluster randomization, the mechanics of randomization; Introduction to econometrics: simple and multiple linear regression models, econometric analysis of experimental data; Tests of hypothesis: principles and practices, parametric and non-parametric tests in practice; Sampling: optimal sample size, sample size in practice, useful rules of thumbs; Experimental best practices and challenges: ethics, recruitment, informed consent form, attrition, non-compliance, external validity, data-linking; When randomization is not possible: before and after, matching, natural experiments, difference-in-difference, regression discontinuity design; Outcomes and preferences: surveys, measuring risk and time preferences; Game theory and behavioural game theory: games and strategic decision-making, measuring social preferences.

Teaching: 17 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Policy Appraisal and Impact Assessment

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Séverine Toussaert

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to the main concepts and tools of policy appraisal and project impact assessment. The course covers the following topics: 1) Architecture of Cost-benefit analysis for market and non-market goods; 2) Elicitation of monetary values through revealed and stated preference methods; 3) Adjustments for time discounting, risk and uncertainty; 4) Welfare analysis of policy interventions: efficiency, equity and asymmetric paternalism; 5) Evaluating welfare beyond monetary choices: the subjective well-being approach to valuation. The course offers practical examples and applications to key policy sectors, such as health and the environment.

Teaching: 17 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Dissertation in Behavioural Science

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of behavioural science. The dissertation is a quantitative or qualitative investigation in the field and can be either a theoretical or empirical piece or research. Students must obtain the approval of their supervisor before embarking on any research.

Teaching: 2 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: Relevant reading will be provided by supervisors.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the MT.

SA4M6E Half Unit

Economic Analysis for Health Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Mark Stabile

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will serve as an introduction to major developments in the economics of health and health care. It will provide medical practitioners with a strong understanding of the role economics can play in health policy and health system administration. It will provide a framework with which to understand the changing nature of health care supply and delivery and the interactions between patients and health care systems. It will review major changes in the financing and delivery of health care and both domestic and international efforts to control health care costs and improve efficiency.

Topics will include the following:

- Lecture 1: Introduction to the role of economics in health and health care
- Lecture 2: The Demand for Medical Care, The Role of Moral Hazard in Health Care
- Lecture 3: Prices, Insurance and Consumer Behaviour
- Lecture 4: The role of the state in providing health care
- Lecture 5: Financing Health Care Going Forward: How is the world paying for health care?
- Lecture 6: Determinants of Individual and Population Health
- Lecture 7: Physician Behaviour and Reimbursement. Supplier Induced Demand
- Lecture 8: The Pharmaceutical Industry
- Lecture 9: Technological Change, Quality, and Innovation in Health Care

- Lecture 10: Equity, Efficiency and Need

Seminar sessions will focus on current policy debates in the area of health and health care drawing on the theory and evidence from the lectures augmented by current readings from both academic and popular sources.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Student presentations to be held on the final day of class, with each student's topic of their presentation to form the basis of their essay.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 3000 words) and take home exam (50%) in the LT.

SA4M7E Half Unit

Quality and Outcomes in Cardiovascular Sciences

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Huseyin Naci

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Against a backdrop of great technological advances and delivery system innovations, healthcare systems are facing daunting challenges. Over the past half-century, research on cardiovascular diseases has manifested remarkable advances in the prevention and treatment of cardiovascular diseases. Yet, great challenges remain, primarily due to a lack of strong research evidence about how best to improve the quality, outcomes, and efficiency in health systems with a focus on cardiovascular diseases. Outcomes research aims to produce such evidence.

In addition to briefly reviewing key epidemiological trends in cardiovascular diseases in Europe and globally, this course will introduce key 'evidence-practice' gaps in cardiovascular diseases. The first part of the course provides an overview of the definition of quality, its key components, and its measurement in different health care systems. The second part offers a critical perspective on the literature evaluating quality improvement interventions focused on the cardiovascular disease field. The third part focuses on the basics of study design for evaluating quality improvement interventions, programmes, and policies, distinguishing between strong and weak research designs.

The intended learning outcomes of this course are the following:

- Summarise the primary components of quality in health care
- Explain the main limitations of the literature evaluating quality improvement interventions
- Define the principal threats to validity in studies evaluating quality
- Design an evaluation strategy for a quality improvement policy or intervention in a group setting

- Critically evaluate empirical evaluations of quality and outcomes in health care research in oral and written form

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Economic Evaluation in Health Care

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Mireia Jofre-Bonet
Dr. Victoria Serra-Sastre

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Health care decision makers are often faced with the challenges of resource allocation. Economic evaluation is used to formalize the process of decision-making on the basis of costs and benefits associated with multiple alternative scenarios or interventions. Decision makers use evidence from economic evaluation analyses to make specific recommendations for coverage, reimbursement, and pricing decisions for a variety of health care interventions, as well as define best practices. This course will enable students to understand and apply analytic methods in the economic evaluation of health interventions and provide a strong foundation in the several advanced concepts in economic evaluation, and in particular cost-effectiveness of interventions used in long-term chronic illnesses. The course will provide an overview of the principles and practices of measuring and analyzing costs; and estimating effectiveness in terms of quality-adjusted life years and disability-adjusted life years. Practical topics will include the design and implementation of economic evaluation models and the role of clinical data inputs to inform economic evaluation analyses.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 5 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Formative coursework: 5 brief response papers to each set of readings in preparation for each seminar.

SA4M9E Half Unit*Systematic Review and Meta-analysis*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr. Huseyin NaciAvailability:

A core course available only for students taking MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences

Course content: Systematic review and meta-analysis methods are increasingly used to evaluate the relative benefits and harms of healthcare interventions. A broad range of decision making bodies across the health care sector (including health technology assessment bodies, drug and medical device licensing agencies, biopharmaceutical industry, and hospitals) need experts equipped with the methods of reviewing and synthesizing the existing body of evidence.

This course will be focused on the principles of reviewing and synthesizing the existing body of literature. The course will first provide the rationale for adopting a systematic approach for evidence review and synthesis. It will then equip students with the methods to undertake risk of bias assessments of individual randomized controlled trials and also collections of randomized controlled trials. In addition to providing an overview of methods for quantitatively synthesizing multiple randomized controlled trials in meta-analysis, the course will present the opportunities and challenges of using evidence for decision-making in health care.

Learning outcomes:

- Describe the rationale for adopting a systematic approach to literature review
- Define the principal threats to validity both in individual randomized controlled trials and collections of randomized controlled trials
- Critically evaluate the internal validity of randomized controlled trials
- Assess heterogeneity in a collection of randomized controlled trials
- Design and perform a systematic review and meta-analysis evaluating a health care intervention in a group setting
- Describe the opportunities and challenges of using systematic review and meta-analysis findings for decision making

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Formative coursework:

- Course convener will provide feedback on group presentations on the last day of the in-person teaching session
- Groups will share their progress report, completed data extraction form and statistical analysis plan with other groups to seek formative peer feedback

Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: By the end of this course, students will be able to describe trends in cardiovascular disease incidence, survival and mortality over the last decades in different populations. The course will examine the evidence on well-established and emerging risk factors for cardiovascular disease, including behavioural risk factors such as dietary habits, physical activity, obesity and smoking, as well as metabolic risk factors such as blood pressure, serum lipids and glucose-insulin homeostasis. The course will also introduce students to evidence on the role of environmental risk factors including cultural, social, and physical (built- environment) factors, as major determinants of population-wide cardiovascular risk. The basic principles of nutritional and genetic epidemiology will also be discussed. The course will outline the principles of cardiovascular disease prevention. It will provide students with the skills to interpret findings from cardiovascular epidemiological studies. It will discuss evidence of preventive interventions that have been effective in reducing cardiovascular disease incidence and mortality around the world. The course will also discuss the key challenges for cardiovascular disease prevention over the next decades, with a particular focus on the clinical implications of population ageing for cardiovascular disease prevention.

Each course session will consist of 10 one-hour lectures introducing key concepts of cardiovascular epidemiology, and five two-hour seminars that deal with the key evidence, principles and challenges of cardiovascular disease prevention. Seminars will also discuss strengths and limitations of studies assessing cardiovascular disease prevention interventions, and it will draw clinical implications of specific cardiovascular disease prevention strategies shown to be effective.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

One non-assessed essay (2,000 words). This essay will be a first proposal of the final essay of the course, and will consist of a first proposal for an in-depth analysis of a specific cardiovascular disease prevention strategy. This essay should first identify a challenge in cardiovascular disease prevention (e.g., the obesity epidemic, hypertension control, smoking). Students will then review in the essay the available evidence of interventions to address this challenge, and they will critically assess the available prevention strategies to tackle the selected problem. Students will be expected to draw as much as possible on the concepts and principles of cardiovascular disease epidemiology and prevention discussed in class.

Dissertation in Health Economics, Outcomes, and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Huseyin Naci and supervisors

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation could be on any topic in the field of health economics, outcomes research, comparative effectiveness research, policy, and management. It should attempt to integrate approaches and knowledge learned across courses and present results to address a health/clinical policy, economic issue or a problem identified through the use of either primary or secondary data. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical and empirical literature in the field. In addition, careful analysis of the policy implications and formulation of policy recommendations is essential. The main body of the dissertation should, in principle, include the background to the research, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion and policy implications and recommendations.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

In addition to the lectures, students will be given individual support by their allocated supervisor.

Pre-requisites: No prerequisites

Course content: The course aims to introduce to students the main tools and principles of behavioural sciences and the key state-of-the-art applications to health economics, policy, and management. The course is designed to enhance students' abilities to apply rigorously and critically behavioural science tools to concrete challenges in the health area. It covers principles of behavioural science; behavioural health economics and policy, and behavioural experiments in health; risk preferences and health; time preferences and health; social preferences and health; behavioural principles for information policies in health; financial and non-financial incentives in health; nudging behavioural change in health; behavioural spillovers in health; behavioural principles for regulation of health and healthcare.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

5 x 3 hour lectures (15 hours)

5 x 1.5 hour seminars (7.5 hours each seminar group)

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the ST.

Introduction to Management in Health Care

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Brittany Jones NAB 4.04

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: No Prerequisites

Course content: The course aims to introduce students to the main principles of management and strategy and related issues that impact on organisational change, group decision making, innovation and leadership. Key models and academic tools will be presented and their application to real world situations discussed. The course aims to give students a strong academic understanding and also enable them to apply this knowledge to their practice. The course outline is below

1. Strategy and Managerial Work

In this session, we will explore the development of the modern practice of 'strategy' and what it means today. Along the way, we will show how organisational practices like planning met emerging ideas in academia, especially in economics, to develop new tools and ways of thinking that transformed the practice of management in the late 20th century. The development of strategic management and planning tools and the competitive environment in which they emerged will be discussed and the application of these tools will be examined in competitive markets.

2. Innovation Management

This part of the course will introduce the topic of innovation management. In particular, it introduces participants to the conceptualization of innovation as a means to affect the competitive process. Participants will be introduced to the basics of the competitive process and the effect of innovation on the competitive process. Participants will be active in analysing the competitive process surrounding their organization and the competitive position their organization occupies within it and activities will be used to promote thinking about how innovations, small or large, can defend and/or improve their competitive position.

3. How Individuals and Groups Organise and Make Decisions and Take Risk

This part of the course will introduce issues related to working as individuals within an organisation and as a group. It will look at the "benefits" and "harms" of group decision making processes – especially with reference to health care where collaborative multi-disciplinary teams are commonplace – and also discuss how group decisions making can be undermined by systematic biases.

4. Behaviour Change and Social Marketing

This part of the course will introduce the drivers and mechanisms of behaviour change in organisations. In particular, we will discuss how different organizational-level factors may influence behaviour change, including resistance to change from various levels and sustainability of changes across time, and how organizational behaviour change can be measured. Models of organisational behaviour change will be introduced and the principles of managing and leading change in established systems will be discussed with a focus on the stages of planning and implementation of change. Alongside this appropriate tools and resources will be introduced to aid future organisational changes. The coverage of social marketing will deal with the formulation and execution of strategies designed to influence behaviour change amongst groups at risk of cardiovascular disease.

5. Culture and Leadership

This part of the course will explore the definition of culture within organisations and leaders' role in creating and supporting successful teams. Key components of leadership, like the ability to establish direction and motivate and inspire a workforce as well as handle relationships with external stakeholders, will then be introduced with a consideration of how they affect culture and working practices.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Given the executive nature of this course, it will be offered as an intensive, accelerated, and compressed module with a 1-week duration consisting of 5x2-hour lectures and 5x2-hour seminars (in addition to a 1x1-hour online help session).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

The formative assessment is a 500 word outline of the summative assessment essay question.

What Is Disruptive Innovation? Harvard Business Review. December Issue (available online at <https://hbr.org/2015/12/what-is-disruptive-innovation>)

Assessment: Essay (100%, 2500 words) post-summer term. The course will be assessed on the basis of a 2500 word essay on a specific topic. In writing this essay, students will be able to demonstrate and synthesise what they have learned from the lectures, reading material, group discussions and their own independent research and thinking. The content of the assessments will lead on from the simulation exercises that have been used in the seminars and students will be encouraged to use topics they have identified during reflections on their own work.

Formative assessment will be based on a 500 word outline of the essay. This will give students an opportunity to develop their thoughts ahead of the summative assessment and will allow feedback from course teachers that will guide students when they work on their longer answers.

Due to the executive nature of the course and the 1 week nature of the module, this method of assessment will allow students to work away from campus alongside their professional roles.

Principles of Health Technology Assessment

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Health Technology Assessment a multidisciplinary process that summarises information about the medical, social, economic, and ethical issues related to the use of a health technology in a systematic, transparent, unbiased, and robust manner. Health Technology Assessment differs in its governance, data and evidence requirements, assessment methods, and operational arrangements across different settings and contexts. This course is aimed at introducing the key principles of Health Technology Assessment, its operational modalities, the different models of value assessment and how they link to decision-making. Outline of the course is included below:

1. The role of Health Technology Assessment in health care decision making
2. Models of Health Technology Assessment and their application in different jurisdictions - a comparative perspective
3. Governance issues (position in health care decision-making, topic selection, assessment process, stakeholder involvement)
4. Data and evidence requirements for value assessment
5. Health Technology Assessment and value assessment: focus on clinical benefit assessment
6. Health Technology Assessment and value assessment: focus on clinical-cost-effectiveness
7. Assessment methods in Health Technology Assessment
8. Explaining similarities and differences in Health Technology Assessment recommendations – a toolkit
9. The role of multiple criteria decision analysis in value assessment
10. Beyond Health Technology Assessment: links to risk-sharing and special purchasing arrangements

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Given the executive nature of this course, it will be offered as an intensive, accelerated, and compressed module with a 1-week duration.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise in the ST.

A selection of multiple choice and open-ended questions to test extent of knowledge and understanding of syllabus

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Huseyin Naci COW 3.01

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The objective of this course is to teach students how to design and critically appraise research studies evaluating policies, programmes, and interventions.

This course will provide an overview of the principles and models of evaluation, and the role of theories, concepts, and hypotheses. In terms of research design, it will cover study design choices in light of bias, validity and other design trade-offs. The core of the course will focus on experimental, quasi-experimental, non-experimental, and qualitative designs for evaluating health interventions, programmes and policies aimed at achieving high quality care, reducing costs, and improving health outcomes. Data and measurement considerations for both quantitative and qualitative studies will be discussed alongside the importance of using mixed-methods and triangulation for interpreting findings and taking a critical approach to the results of evaluation. The course will conclude with practical and ethical issues when undertaking evaluation studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the ST. Given the executive nature of this course, it will be offered as an intensive, accelerated, and compressed module with a 1-week duration.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in June.

Students will receive feedback on their project report outlines.

Methodological Training and Study Skills

The Methodology Institute provides a number of courses for research track PhD programmes. MY4M1 Foundations of Social Research 1 and MY4M2 Foundations of Social Research 2 contain modules in quantitative and qualitative analysis and are required for the ESRC 1+3 scheme. In addition the Institute offers courses in study skills and specialist options in a range of aspects of social research. All PhD students are welcome to attend any courses offered by the Institute, details of which are in the relevant part of the section on Master's degrees.

MRes/PhD in Anthropology

Programme code: TMRESAN

Department: Anthropology

Paper	Course number and title
1	AN471 Qualitative and Quantitative Methods for Anthropologists
2	AN472 Evidence and Arguments in Anthropology and Other Social Sciences
3	AN442 Supervised Reading Course and Fieldwork Preparation
4	AN443 Research Proposal In addition students are required to complete the following courses, which are compulsory but not examined.
5	AN500 Seminar on Anthropological Research
6	All MRes students are required to audit one or two of the department's main lecture courses (to the value of one unit): AN402 The Anthropology of Religion AN405 The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender AN437 Anthropology of Learning and Cognition (n/a 16/17) AN451 Anthropology of Politics (H) AN456 Anthropology of Economy (1): Production and Exchange (H) AN457 Anthropology of Economy (2): Transformation and Globalisation (H)

Award of the MRes in Anthropology

The marks for AN471 and AN472 will count respectively as 25% of the total mark for the year. The research proposal, worth 50% of the total mark for the MRes year, will be examined (and the examination includes a viva). In order to pass the MRes and in order to be upgraded to PhD registration and allowed to commence fieldwork, students (a) must earn an average of 60 or more across all units; (b) must earn a minimum mark of 60 on the research proposal.

Progression to the PhD

If the above MRes requirements are met, students will be upgraded to PhD registration and will commence the fieldwork phase of the programme. The mandatory first year progress review of PhD students will be based on written reports about the early phase of fieldwork. The mandatory third year progress review for students in Anthropology is held in the third term (or, exceptionally, in the fourth term) after their return from fieldwork; this entails a viva with both supervisors and one external examiner.

Programme Structure - PhD

MRes/PhD in Economics

Programme codes: TMRESEC (MRes)

RPEC2 (PhD)

Department: Economics

For students starting in or after the 2015/16 session

A PhD in Economics consists of two years of coursework, followed by a thesis which is expected to take three years. The coursework requirement involves three PhD-level core courses in microeconomics, macroeconomics and econometrics, three field courses and a supervised research paper.

A place on the MSc Economics or our MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics will include a conditional offer of progression to the MRes/PhD in Economics, subject to the attainment of a Distinction grade in the MSc. Those who meet the progression requirement and decide to progress are registered as MRes students and undertake the same two-year MRes course requirement as with all other MRes/PhD students.

First year MRes

All students are required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics, in year one. Students are required to take the following MRes core courses:

Paper	Course number and title
1	EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students
2	EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
3	EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students or EC484 Econometric Analysis*
* Permission must be obtained to sit EC484: it is intended for students with a strong econometric background and an interest in pursuing a PhD with econometrics as the primary field.

Second year or higher MRes

Students are required to take:

Paper	Course number and title
4	EC599 Research Paper in Economics (5,000 - 10,000 words in length)
5 & 6	Two courses from the Field Selection List below

Students are required to attend:

- EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research.
- The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

First year PhD Programme

Students who have been upgraded to PhD are required to work on their research and write a PhD thesis. In addition they are required to take:

Paper Course number and title

7 One course from the Field Selection List below

Students are also required to attend:

- D. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research
- E. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field
Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Second and subsequent years PhD Programme

Students are required to work on their research and write a PhD thesis.

Students are required to attend:

- H. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research
- I. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field

Progression to Year 2 of MRes in Economics

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration, students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in Papers 1, 2 and 3. With the permission of the MRes Programme Director, students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to one resit paper (with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams, including resits and EC599 in Year 2).

Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Master's Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and in one of the Papers 5 or 6. The marks for Papers 1 - 4 and the highest mark from Papers 5 or 6 will be used to determine the degree classification. A fail in one of these five classification papers (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper, or an aggregate mark of 220 in the non-failed papers. If compensated, a fail shall result in a drop in the overall award classification where a Distinction or Merit would otherwise have been awarded. It shall have no further impact where a Pass is to be awarded.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve four marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes Papers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, with at least two of the 60% marks achieved in the MRes core Papers 1, 2, and 3.

Condoning marks: A mark between 55 - 59% in one of the Papers 1, 2 or 3 can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another from Papers 1, 2 or 3. A mark between 50 - 59% in one of the Papers 1, 2 or 3 can be condoned by a mark of +70% in the EC599 research paper.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. In exceptional circumstances, the Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper at the next available opportunity. Students can resit each paper only once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing.

Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit.

A student can appeal against the Department's decision on progression to PhD according to the Appeals Regulations for Research Students.

Progression to Year 2 of PhD In order to progress to the second year of PhD registration students are required to pass the PhD qualifying field (Paper 7) with a mark of 50% or higher.

Award of the PhD in Economics Award of the PhD is contingent on progression requirements within the PhD and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

Special provisions for students who have completed an MSc degree within the economics department at the LSE

Students who have completed EC484 to the required standard as part of their MSc do not have to take the course again and will have their MSc mark carried forward.

With the approval of the Doctoral Programme Director, students who have completed an MSc degree within the Economics department at the LSE are permitted to take their PhD qualifying field course (Paper 5) in the first year of the MRes and might take Paper 7 in their second year.

For students who have taken Paper 7 in their second year the progression and award regulations are adjusted as follows:

MRes award - Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and at least one mark of 50% in Papers 5-7. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration - For PhD registration students are required to achieve four marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes Papers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, with at least two of the 60% marks achieved in the MRes core Papers 1, 2, and 3.

Progression to PhD to Year 2 of PhD - In order to progress to the second year of PhD students are required to pass all the PhD qualifying field (Papers 5-7) with a mark of 50% or higher.

MRes/PhD in Economics

Programme codes: TMRESECRE (MRes Track 1)
TMRESEC2RE (MRes Track 2)
RPEC2 (PhD)

Department: Economics

For students starting in academic sessions 2010/11 to 2014/15

The MRes/PhD programme is offered in twin-track formats. Students on both tracks of the programme will have to complete MRes degree courses, a PhD-qualifying course and research training modules prior to submission of the PhD thesis. The different entrance qualifications of Track 1 and 2 students dictate the sequence and duration of the coursework.

Track 1 is aimed at students graduating with a postgraduate degree, or an undergraduate degree and exceptional grades in economics, mathematics, econometrics and other quantitative subjects. Track 2 is for students who have completed a graduate degree in economics from a reputable university institution and who have demonstrated exceptional performance in it. The decision on which track students are registered is a matter of academic judgement of the selectors for the programme. In practice almost all Track 2 entrants come from the LSE MSc programmes.

The School's regulations for Taught Masters Degrees apply to Track 1 course components 1. - 6. and Track 2 course components 1. - 5., except where the regulations below supersede the School's degree regulations.

Programme Structure

Track 1

Track 1: (5 MRes Papers + 1 PhD-qualifying paper)

Track 1 students are required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

First year of Track 1

Students are required to take the following MRes core courses:

1. EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students
2. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
3. EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students or EC484

Econometric Analysis*

* Permission must be obtained to sit EC484: it is intended for students with a strong econometric background and an interest in pursuing a PhD with econometrics as the primary field.

Second year of Track 1

Students are required to take:

4. EC599 Research Paper in Economics (5,000 - 10,000 words in length)

5. One from the Field Selection List below

Students who obtain at least two marks of 60% or more and one mark of 50% or more in the core courses 1. - 3. will be allowed to take their second (PhD qualifying) field during Year 2 (Paper 6).

In addition, students attend:

- A. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars
- B. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Third and further years of Track 1

Students who have not completed paper 6 (PhD qualifying field course) will be required to take:

6. One from the Field Selection List below but different from Paper 5.

In addition, students attend:

- C. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research
- D. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field
Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Progression to Year 2 of MRes in Economics

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration, students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in Papers 1, 2 and 3. Students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to two resit papers, only with the permission of the MRes Programme Director, with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams (including resits and EC599) in Year 2.

Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve three marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes Papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. Two marks of 60% or higher are required from the MRes core papers 1, 2, and 3. A mark between 55 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another core paper and/or a mark between 50 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in the EC599 research paper.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students will also need to pass their PhD-qualifying field course (paper 6), which is taken in the first year of PhD registration, with 50% or higher.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Throughout the coursework portion of the MRes or MRes/PhD programme, students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. In exceptional circumstances, the Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper in a subsequent year. Students can resit each paper only once.

Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit.

A student can appeal against the Department's decision on progression to PhD according to the appeal's procedures against decisions on upgrading to PhD in the School's Regulations for Research Degrees.

Award of the PhD in Economics

Award of the PhD is contingent on meeting the progression requirements for the PhD, passing the PhD qualifying field with a mark of 50% or higher, and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

Track 2

Track 2: (4 MRes Papers + 1 PhD-qualifying paper)

Track 2 students may be required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

First year of Track 2:

Students are required to take:

1. EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students
2. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
3. EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students or EC484
Econometric Analysis*
4. EC599 Research Paper in Economics (5,000 - 10,000 words in length)

* Permission must be obtained to sit EC484: it is intended for students with a strong econometrics background and an interest in pursuing a PhD with econometrics as the primary field. Students who have completed EC484 to the required standard as part of their MSc do not have to take the course again and will have their MSc mark carried forward. These students are permitted to take their PhD qualifying field course (Paper 5) in place of Paper 3.

In addition, students attend:

- A. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars
- B. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Subsequent years of Track 2 (if upgraded to PhD):

Students are required to take:

- 5. One from the Field Selection List below (PhD qualifying field course).
Students who are permitted to take a PhD qualifying field in Year 1 are waived this additional requirement.
In addition, students attend:
- C. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research
- D. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.
Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3 and 4. A fail in one of these papers (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper, or an aggregate mark of 165 in the non-failed papers. If compensated, a fail shall result in a drop in the overall award classification where a Distinction or Merit would otherwise have been awarded. It shall have no further impact where a Pass is to be awarded.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve two marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes papers 1, 2, 3 and 4. Two marks of 60% or higher are required from the MRes core Papers 1, 2, and 3. A mark between 55 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another core paper and/or a mark between 50 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in the EC599 research paper.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students will also need to pass their PhD-qualifying field course (Paper 5), which is taken in the first year of PhD registration, with 50% or higher.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Throughout the coursework portion of the MRes or MRes/PhD programme, students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. In exceptional circumstances, the Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper in a subsequent year. Students can resit each paper only once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit.

A student can appeal against the Department's decision on progression to PhD according to the appeal's procedures against decisions on upgrading to PhD in the School's Regulations for Research Degrees.

Award of the PhD in Economics

Award of the PhD is contingent on meeting the progression requirements for the PhD, passing the PhD qualifying field with a mark of 50% or higher, and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

MRes/PhD in Finance

Programme codes: TMRESFI1 (MRes Route 1)

TMRESFI2 (MRes Route 2)

RPFI2 (PhD)

Department: Finance

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Students will take either Route 1 or Route 2 (depending on their previous Masters qualification) as detailed below.

Route 1

Students who have not completed the MSc Finance and Economics (research) at LSE or an equivalent programme elsewhere.

Route 1 students are required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

Year 1

Training courses:

Compulsory (examined)

- 1. EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students
- 2. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
- 3. FM481 Financial Econometrics for Research Students

Transferable skills courses:

Compulsory (not examined)

- A. FM436 Financial Economics
- B. Capital Markets Workshop

Optional (not examined)

- C. MY592 Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data
- D. Any relevant seminars in related areas.

Year 2

Training courses: Compulsory (examined)

- 4. FM502 Corporate Finance for Research Students
- 5. FM503 Asset Pricing for Research Students
- 6. FM482 Research Paper in Finance (6,000 - 8,000 words in length)

Transferable skills courses:*Compulsory (not examined)

- A. FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance. Presentation requirements: Students are required to do an FM505 seminar presentation in the second year.
- B. Capital Markets Workshop

Optional (not examined)

- C. Any relevant seminars in related areas

Year 3 (if upgraded to PhD) Training courses:*Compulsory (examined)

- 7. FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance

Students need to pass Paper 7 with a mark of 65% or higher.

Transferable skills courses:*Compulsory (not examined)

- A. Capital Markets Workshop

Progression and upgrade requirements

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in papers 1, 2 and 3. Students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to two resit papers, only with the permission of the MRes Programme Director, with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams in year 2, which must be the two resits, either paper 4 or 5, and paper 6.

Award of the MRes in Finance

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in 5 of full-unit papers, which must include Paper 6 (Research paper) and four papers from Papers 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 55% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve marks of 50% or higher in Papers 1, 2, and 3, marks of 60% or higher in papers 4 and 5 and a mark of 65% or higher in Paper 6.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. - B. Capital Markets Workshop

Year 2 (if upgraded to PhD)*Training courses:*Compulsory (examined)

- 5. FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance. Presentation requirements: Students are required to do a seminar presentation in the second year.
- 6. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students or another full unit course approved by the PhD Director. Students need to pass paper 5 with a mark of 65% or higher and Paper 6 with a mark of 50% or higher.

Transferable skills courses:*Compulsory (not examined)

- A. Capital Markets Workshop

Award of the MRes in Finance

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3 and 4. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 55% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve a mark of 50% or higher in Paper 1 and marks of 60% or higher in Papers 2 and 3, and a mark of 65% or higher in Paper 4.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Award of the PhD in Finance

Award of the PhD is contingent on meeting the progression requirements for the PhD, passing FM505 with a mark of 65% or higher, and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

MRes/PhD in International Development

Programme codes: TMRESDV (MRes)

RPDV2 (PhD)

Department: International Development

Year 1*Compulsory courses

- 1. DV501 Development History, Theory and Policy for Research Students (H)
- 2. Methodology course choice 1 to the value of one full unit (at the 400 and 500 level) (F)*
- 3. Methodology or Theory course choice 2 to the value of one full unit (at the 400 and 500 level) (F)*
- 4. Methodology or Theory course choice 3 to the value of one half unit (at the 400 or 500 level) (H)*

5. DV510 Research Design and Proposal in International Development (F)
6. DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies (non-examined)

Notes

* Course choices must be approved by the supervisor and Doctoral Programme Director.

Optional Courses

7. EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (September pre-session course as a pre-requisite for 400 and 500 level EC courses for students planning to make use of advanced quantitative methods in their PhD research).

Award of the MRes in International Development

The MRes in International Development will be awarded if all the exams are passed.

A 'Distinction' grade will be awarded for the MRes if an aggregate of 270 marks (over 4 full units) is achieved with no fails.

A 'Merit' grade will be awarded for the MRes if an aggregate of 250 marks (over 4 full units) is achieved with no fails.

A 'Pass' grade will be awarded for the MRes if an aggregate of 200 marks (over 4 full units) is achieved with no fails.

Upgrade to PhD

Upgrade to PhD is dependent upon:

1. Pass of the MRes with an average of 65 in the coursework (except as noted above).
2. Pass of the Research Proposal with a mark equal or greater than 65.

The Research Proposal Committee will offer constructive advice and make one of four decisions:

- Unconditional approval
- Conditional approval
- Revise and resubmit
- Fail

Students who are required to Revise and Resubmit are usually expected to resubmit the proposal within three months. These students will progress to a temporary MPhil status, with the approval of the Chair of the Research Degrees Subcommittee, while they are revising their research proposal. Students who are successful will be upgraded to PhD.

The progress of each student will be reviewed at the end of each subsequent year.

MRes/PhD in Political Science

Programme codes: TMRESPOLSC (MRes) RPPOLSCI (PhD)

Department: Government

Students complete and are examined in courses to the value of four full units.

Paper Course number and title

- 1 Research Design
GV5X1 Research Design in Political Science
- 2 Methods courses
Students take courses under A, B or C to the value of one unit:
A) Quantitative research topics
MY552M or MY552L Applied Regression Analysis (H)
MY557 Causal Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies (H) or GV4G1 Applied Quantitative Methods for Political Science (H)
GV4J6 Game Theory for Research (H)
B) Qualitative research topics
GV513 Qualitative Methods in the Study of Politics (H)
MY551M or MY551L Introduction to Quantitative

Analysis (H)

C) Political theory research topics

GV4G3 Foundations of Political Theory (MRes)
(withdrawn 16/17)

GV504 Research Methods in Political Theory

If these courses have already been taken, other methods courses may be substituted with the approval of the Doctoral Programme Director.

Field seminars

Courses to the value of 1 unit from the following:

- GV517 Comparative Political Economy: New Approaches and Issues in CPE (H)
- GV5X2 Research Paper in Comparative Politics (half or full unit)
- GV5X3 Research Paper European Politics and Policy (half or full unit)
- GV5X4 Research Paper in Global Politics (half or full unit)
- GV5X5 Research Paper Political Science and Political Economy (half or full unit)
- GV5X6 Research Paper Political Theory (half or full unit)
- GV5X7 Research Paper Public Policy and Administration (half or full unit)

Any course from 2, above, not already taken, or any research methods course taught anywhere in the School, with the approval of the Course Convenor and the Doctoral Programme Director.

Research Prospectus

GV599 Research Prospectus in Political Science

Second, third, fourth and fifth year

A) Research and write a dissertation

B) Participate in at least one Doctoral Workshop in the Government Department or elsewhere in the School in each year. e.g. GV501 Doctoral Workshop: Political Theory; GV503 Political Philosophy Research Seminar, GV510 Ethnicity and Nationalism Research Workshop (n/a 16/17), GV514 Political Science and Political Economy Doctoral Workshop, GV515 Researching People, Politics and Organisations (n/a 16/17), GV555 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop.

C) Second year students have the option of taking EC540 Political Economy. Permission to attend is at the discretion of the course convenor.

Award of the MRes

The award and classification of the MRes is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree

Conditions for progression to PhD

1. Award of the MRes with at least a Merit
2. Award of GV599 with at least a Merit

Award of the PhD

The PhD is awarded according to the rules of the LSE.

MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History

Programme codes: TMRESQEH (MRes)
RPQEH (PhD)

Department: Economic History

MRes

Students complete and are examined in courses to the value of four full units. Students are also required to attend EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics.

Award of the MRes Quantitative Economic History

The award and classification of the MSc degree is consistent with the School's scheme for the award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree. Student are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3 and 4 and submit paper 5 (EH474 Research Prospectus, not examined half unit). Where a candidate receives a Fail mark in any course, the penalty rules are set out in lse.ac.uk/intranet/LSEServices/TQARO/Calendar/SchemeTaughtMasters.pdf (see paragraph 3.2) apply. A Bad Fail (39% or lower) in any course of any unit value will result in an overall Fail for the degree.

Progression from the MRes Quantitative Economic History to the PhD

To progress from the MRes to the PhD programme, students need to achieve at least a Merit overall in the MRes and at least 65% in the (full unit) Research Paper in Quantitative Economic History (EH473). In addition, their Research Prospectus (EH474) needs to be approved by the departmental Prospectus Review Committee following a viva. If a student fulfils all other progression requirements but his/her Research Prospectus does not meet the expectations set out in the EH474 course description, the Prospectus Review Committee will grant an extension of up to three months to submit a revised version. If this revised version fails the required standards, the candidate will not be admitted to the PhD programme.

MPhil/PhD in Accounting

Programme code: RPAC

Department: Accounting

For students entering in or after the academic year 2015/16.

The Department of Accounting offers an MPhil/PhD Accounting programme with two tracks. The aim is to ensure the highest quality in the development of research students, in their research skills and to support their progression to the completion and defence of high quality theses in their respective specialisms.

Track 1 is devoted to the study of interrelationships between accounting, organisations and institutions. Research in this track examines how accounting practices are much more than a collection of routine techniques, but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. Efforts to design internal and external accounting practices are both a function of specific economic and political interests, but are also shaped by social and political aspirations. Research in this track includes a wide variety of accounting topics examined through this lens using primarily qualitative methods, such as studies in management accounting, analyses of accounting systems in the private and public sector, transformations of auditing and risk regulation regimes, historical studies of accounting, as well as broader contributions to social theory.

Track 2 primarily examines accounting and financial reporting issues from an economics perspective. Research in this track covers a wide range of accounting topics including design and choices between alternative accounting methods, the use of accounting numbers for internal reporting, performance measurement, incentive systems, and in economic decision making, assessment of financial reporting quality, the economic consequences of financial reporting and performance measurement, and the interactions between financial reporting, legal and economic institutions, and corporate governance. While much research in these areas takes the form of empirical archival analysis, theoretical analysis and field research can also be relevant in some cases.

When making an application, MPhil/PhD students in Accounting will choose to follow either Track 1 or Track 2 as detailed below.

Track 1

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Progression and upgrade requirements for Tracks 1 and 2:

Progression requirements:

The departmental MPhil/PhD Assessment Review Committee will reach a decision on progression for each student at the end of Years One, Two and Three, and progression from the pre-session course (for students on Track 2). All MPhil/PhD Accounting students are normally required to achieve a mark of at least 65% in each of the 2.5 examined graduate-level course units required for progression on both tracks of the programme. The Committee may, in exceptional circumstances, condone a marginal fail if a student has demonstrated strength in other examined courses. Students failing an examined course can, at the discretion of the Committee, and taking into account overall performance, re-sit that course on one occasion only. The Committee may also decide to substitute an alternative assessment to redress any mark deficiencies and has the discretion to set additional requirements for progression where appropriate.

Students are required to make a seminar presentation in each year of their programme. These are formatively assessed. Performance at the seminar presentations will be taken into account by the MPhil/PhD Assessment Review Committee when reaching decisions on progression.

Upgrade:

Students will initially be registered for the MPhil. Upgrade to PhD registration will normally happen at the end of Year Two. In order to progress to PhD registration, students must normally have met the progression requirements above (a mark of at least 65% in each of the required 2.5 examined graduate-level course units), and have made satisfactory progress in their research, which normally is understood to mean a solid draft of one complete chapter, plus a detailed outline for the rest of the dissertation with abstracts for each proposed chapter. Materials submitted for upgrade must include a clear framework for the research and a timetable for completion. Students will be provided with an opportunity to defend their submitted written materials orally. The departmental MPhil/PhD Assessment Review Committee will review the progress of each research student, and recommendations for upgrading to PhD will be made on a case-by-case basis.

Award of the PhD in Accounting:

Award of the PhD is contingent on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

Teaching Experience

Students in Tracks 1 and 2 are required to gain teaching experience with appropriate training in years two and three, and they are encouraged to take presentation skills and other training offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

Progression and upgrade requirements:
To proceed from Year One to Year Two, students must pass all course examinations normally with high Merit or Distinction marks Examinations: All MPhil/PhD Accounting students are required to achieve a pass mark of at least 65% in their examined courses. The examiners may, in exceptional circumstances, condone a lower pass mark if there is strength elsewhere. Students failing a paper can, at the discretion of the departmental Postgraduate Assessment Review Committee, and taking into account overall performance, re-sit that paper on one occasion only. The departmental Postgraduate Assessment Review Committee may also decide to substitute a make-up assignment, such as a 5,000-word essay, to redress any mark deficiencies.

Seminar presentations:

Students are required to make a seminar presentation in each year of their programme.

Upgrade:

Students will initially be registered for the MPhil. In order to progress to PhD registration, students must have achieved a pass mark of at least 65% in their taught course exams, and have made satisfactory progress in their research, which normally is understood to mean a solid draft of one complete chapter, plus a detailed outline for the rest of the dissertation with abstracts for each proposed chapter. The departmental Postgraduate Review and Assessment Committee will review the progress of each research student, and make recommendations for upgrading to PhD on a case-by-case basis.

MPhil/PhD in Anthropology*Programme codes: RPAN (MPhil/PhD)

RPAN2 (PhD)

Department: Anthropology(Programme withdrawn 2015/16. Last intake 2014/15)

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1:*Pre-fieldwork*Training courses*Compulsory (not-examined):

AN500 Seminar on Anthropological Research

Compulsory (examined):

AN501 Field Research Seminar (withdrawn 16/17)

AN449 Ethnography in relation to other Research Methods (H) (withdrawn 16/17)

AN455 Statistics and Causal Analysis for Social Anthropologists (H) (withdrawn 16/17)

Students with a strong background in statistics can take MY552 instead of AN455 (withdrawn 16/17).

In addition, students are required to attend and produce coursework for one or two of the department's main courses (to the value of one unit):

AN402 The Anthropology of Religion,

AN405 The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender,

AN437 Anthropology of Learning and Cognition (n/a 16/17) and

LL4E8 Law in Society: A Joint Course in Law and Anthropology

AN451 Anthropology of Politics (H),

AN456 Anthropology of Economy (1): Production and Exchange (H),

AN457 Anthropology of Economy (2): Transformation and Globalisation (H)

Students also follow a reading and fieldwork preparation course (AN442) under the direction of their supervisors and prepare a 10,000 word research proposal (AN443).

Years 2-3:*Fieldwork

Fieldwork normally lasts approximately fifteen to eighteen months.

Years 3-4: Post-fieldwork

Training courses*Compulsory (not examined):

After fieldwork students begin writing their PhD dissertations under the close supervision of members of staff. During this period of their studies, they attend:

AN500 Seminar on Anthropological Research,

AN503 Thesis Writing Seminar, and

AN507 Theoretical Issues in Anthropology: Precepts and Practice II.

Presentation requirements:

In the year following their return from the field, students are required to present a chapter to the rest of their cohort in the Thesis Writing Seminar (AN503). In the final year, students are normally expected to present a paper in the Departmental Seminar on Anthropological Research (AN500).

Progression and upgrade requirements:

In the first year of the programme, AN449 and AN455 will be examined in the Summer Term. Together these count for 25% of the total mark of the year. Students who obtain a fail (but not a bad fail) in either of these courses, but who achieve a pass when both marks are combined are allowed to progress without retaking the failed exam. Essays for the additional course are submitted at the end of Lent Term. If a mark of 60% is not achieved essays must be resubmitted within four weeks. The research proposal, worth 75% of the total mark for the year, will be examined, and must be passed before a student is upgraded to the PhD and allowed to begin fieldwork.

MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies

Programme code: RPDEPS

Department: Social Policy

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses.

Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Optional (not examined)

If not already taken previously:

SA451 Social Policy Research

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)

MY421M or MY421L Qualitative Research Methods (H)

MY451M or MY451L Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)

Students will discuss with their supervisors any other methodological training that may be relevant for the successful completion of the MPhil/PhD programme.

Transferable skills courses

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Each student is required to undertake Major Review in the summer term of their first year (second year for part-time students). For Major Review they must submit a 10,000 word document with a detailed thesis proposal, their research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. They are interviewed on this document by senior staff who make the decision on upgrading. Each year post-Major Review, every student is expected to submit a 1,000 to 2,000 word progress report, approved by supervisors, to the Research Students' Programme Director.

Each pre-Major Review student is expected to make a presentation on their proposed research to the SA550 seminar prior to the submission of their major review document and to address issues raised by the Research Students' Programme Director(s).

MPhil/PhD in Development Studies

Programme code: RPDV

Department: International Development

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses.

Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses Compulsory (examined)

All students will be required to take either a full or two half unit courses in research methods in the School's Methodology Institute. The precise courses taken will be decided in consultation with the student's primary supervisor.

Compulsory (not examined)

DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies

Students who have not received their MSc Development Studies from the LSE will be required to attend the lectures for the core course DV400 Development: History, Theory and Policy. All first year students are required to attend a special seminar for research students.

Optional (not examined)

Further appropriate graduate level courses in the Department of International Development and agreed with supervisor.

Optional (not examined)

MPhil/PhD students will find it advantageous to attend the weekly Visiting Lecture Series in Development Studies in Michaelmas Term.

By Year 4

Students are expected to have completed their research.

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Students will be required to achieve a minimum mark of 65% in the Methodology courses. Failure to do so may mean that you are unable to progress onto the PhD programme and will remain at MPhil until you have either completed a further methodology course or achieved an improved grade.

All students will be interviewed during the Michaelmas Term of their second year by the Graduate Review Committee. Continued registration for a second year will be conditional on the work presented being of a satisfactory standard and if satisfactory, will be upgraded from MPhil to PhD. By the end of Summer Term of the second year students should have finished all fieldwork (where applicable). By the end of the third year students should be able to complete their dissertation.

MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography

Progression and Upgrade requirements for both routes

Progression and upgrade requirements:

Students in the MPhil/PhD programme will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. This is Year 1 for students in the +3 programme and Year 2 for students in the 1+3 programme. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme). Progression to the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme) is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. This is Year 2 for students in the +3 programme and Year 3 for students in the 1+3 route. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. Students are asked to discuss their research paper/thesis outline during an Upgrade Meeting in front of an Upgrading Committee normally formed by main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The material is evaluated by the Upgrading Committee, who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD in Economic History

Programme code: RPEH

Department: Economic History

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses.

Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses Compulsory (examined)

EH520 Approaches to Economic and Social History EH401 and EH402 (unless already taken as part of the Master's degree, and, where appropriate, a pre-sessional statistics course)

Optional (not examined)

Supervisors may require students in their first or subsequent years of study to take other relevant economic history courses, methodological courses provided by the Methodology Institute or the Institute of Historical Research or skills training courses as required for their thesis topic.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History

Year 2

Compulsory (not examined)

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History

Progression and upgrade requirements

By the start of the Summer Term students are required to submit at least one draft thesis chapter and a 3-5 page thesis outline to the department's Graduate Review Committee. Students taking one or more MSc examination may, with the support of their supervisor, apply to defer their submission of work to no later than the start of the 7th week of the Summer Term. The Committee will interview all students during the Summer Term, and re-registration for a second year will be conditional on the work presented being of a satisfactory standard. All students are expected to gain broad knowledge of the subject from graduate level course work in their first year and active participation in workshops, seminars and conferences to complement the expertise gained from intense thesis research.

By the Summer Term of the second year the Graduate Review Committee will normally expect to see about half the thesis in draft. The Committee will interview students, and if the submitted work is of an acceptable standard, students will be upgraded from MPhil to PhD. Students may defer the upgrade decision until their third year for fieldwork or other reasons, but only with the support of their supervisor.

MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics

MPhil/PhD in Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour

Programme code: RPEROB

Department: Management

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MG501 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

Optional (not examined/examined):

Students should discuss their training needs with their supervisor. A large number of seminars and courses are offered by the Methodology Institute and elsewhere in the school.

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MG501 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

Year 3

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MG501 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

Year 4

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MG501 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

Progression and upgrade requirements:

Students are expected to take an active part in the PhD seminar series, usually presenting their work at the seminar once each year. A formal review committee assesses the progress of all MPhil/PhD students on an annual basis.

Students will initially be registered for the MPhil. It is the normal expectation that the decision to upgrade a full-time student from MPhil to PhD will be made either at the first formal review or by the end of the second year of registration, and for part-time students, respectively at the end of the second or third reviews.

The materials submitted for the upgrade review may include examples of written work, such as a draft chapter or literature review, an abstract, and an outline. Supervisors will advise their students as to the content and nature of the material required for the upgrade review.

MPhil/PhD in European Studies

Programme code: RPEU

Department: European Institute

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed research training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed and should discuss this with their supervisor. For a complete list of courses please refer to the 2016/17 Handbook for Research Degree Students.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

EU550 Research Workshop in European Studies
EU554 Research Methods and Design in European Studies (n/a 16/17)

Optional (examined):

MY552M or MY552L Applied Regression Analysis (H)
Further training courses provided by the Department of Methodology and agreed with their supervisors.
Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

EU455 Concepts in Political Economy (H)

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

EU550 Research Workshop in European Studies
Students expected to take relevant course(s) in the Department of Methodology or in other departments as agreed with their supervisors.

Optional (not examined):

It is highly recommended that students with research interests in political economy attend and present their work in the interdepartmental research seminar EU555/GV555/IR555 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop.
Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

EU455 Concepts in Political Economy (H)

Year 3

Year 4

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

EU550 Research Workshop in European Studies

Upgrading to PhD/Targets for Progress

Year 1 - For a standard thesis: a research proposal (approximately 2,500 words) and abstract of the whole thesis (one page); a sample chapter (approximately 8,000 words); a chapter synopsis, and a timetable for completion. For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: a research proposal (approximately 2,500 words) and an abstract covering the three prospective papers; a full draft of the introduction or a full draft of one of the papers (approximately 8,000 words); and a timetable for completion.

Year 2 - For a standard thesis: at least two further substantive chapters (of approximately 5,000-7,000 words each). For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: at least one fully written paper (approximately 10,000 words); and outlines of the other two papers (approximately 2,000 words).

Year 3 - For a standard thesis: a full draft of all core chapters and agreed timetable for completion.
For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: full drafts of all three papers and agreed timetable for completion of the thesis.

MPhil/PhD in Finance

Programme codes: RPFI (MPhil/PhD)
RPF12 (PhD)

Department: Finance

For students entering in or after the academic year 2013/14 please refer to the MRes/PhD Finance programme regulations.

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Students will take either Route 1 or Route 2 (depending on their previous Masters qualification) as detailed below.

Route 1

Students from the MSc Accounting and Finance or MSc Management and Regulation of Risk programmes and those from other relevant programmes, either at LSE or elsewhere, will enter in Year 1 and take the courses specified below.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

FM404 Forecasting Financial Time Series (H)
FM437 Financial Econometrics
FM502 Corporate Finance for Research Students
EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

Capital Markets Workshop

FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance

Optional (not examined)

Any relevant seminars in related areas

MY592 Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

FM503 Asset Pricing for Research Students

And one full unit equivalent optional course from:

EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students
EC518 Topics in Advanced Econometrics for Research Students
EC537 Microeconomic Theory for Research Students
EC539 Macroeconomic Theory for Research Students

Or any other course approved by the Programme Director

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

Capital Markets Workshop

FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance

Optional (not examined)

Any relevant seminars in related areas

Presentation requirements: Students are required to do a seminar presentation in the second year.

Years three and four

Students spend the remainder of their PhD registration period carrying out research and thesis writing. They should also attend the following courses:

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

Capital Markets Workshop

FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance

Optional (not examined)

Other seminars closest to student's field of study

Progression and upgrade requirements

All students are required to achieve a mark of at least 65% in their examined courses, with the exception of EC441 where the required mark is 50%. The examiners may decide under certain conditions to condone a lower mark if there is strength elsewhere. Students failing to satisfy a progression requirement in a paper can, at the examiner's discretion, taking into account overall performance, re-sit that paper on one occasion only.

Students are initially registered for an MPhil. In order to progress to PhD registration, students must have achieved a mark of at least 65% in the taught course exams, with the exception of EC441 where the required mark is 50%, and have made satisfactory progress in their research. Route 1 students will also be required to submit and defend a thesis proposal to a small Committee. The proposal builds on the 10,000 word essay completed for FM505 and should be submitted at the latest by the beginning of Summer Term of the second year of registration. The thesis proposal defence will be scheduled upon the satisfactory conclusion of all examined courses and completion of the FM505 paper and presentation.

Students are strongly encouraged to participate at an early stage in their research training in appropriate international workshops and colloquia. They are also offered the opportunity to gain teaching experience, with appropriate training, without detracting from their research time.

Route 2

Students who have taken the MSc Finance and Economics or MSc Finance and Economics (Research) programmes at LSE or equivalent from another institution may enter onto Route 2 of the programme (this will have been subject to the approval of the Programme Director).

Year 1

Training courses Compulsory (examined):

FM502 Corporate Finance for Research Students
FM503 Asset pricing for Research Students
FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance
EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students

Students who have already taken EC441 as part of the MSc Finance and Economics should instead choose one full unit equivalent optional course from:

EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students
EC518 Topics in Advanced Econometrics for Research Students
EC537 Microeconomic Theory for Research Students
EC539 Macroeconomic Theory for Research Students

Or any other course approved by the Programme Director

Audit any course from the Gender Institute menu as above.

Audit of relevant courses on other Masters programmes with agreement of the supervisor

Transferable skills courses*Compulsory (not examined)

GI500 Doctoral Workshop

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the first year students will go through their Aims and Methods examination. This is held in the summer term and materials should be submitted by the end of the second week of summer term. Students submit a draft chapter and a research proposal for consideration by a panel of their supervisor and advisor (and occasional one other person with appropriate expertise). The research proposal follows a specific template and includes research objectives, the methodology and short research rationale. The nature of the chapter should be agreed with the supervisor. Both parts of the assessment focus on the student's own research and draw on material and debates engaged in GI424 and GI402 where relevant. Students must pass Aims and Methods before progressing to their second year. If unsuccessful at first sit, students have the opportunity to retake Aims and Methods once more at the end of September.

Research students make the transition from MPhil to PhD (Upgrading) by the end of the MT of their second year. In order to upgrade, students must have passed their Aims and Methods. For Upgrade students submit a detailed outline for their thesis (including the anticipated division into chapters), two substantive draft chapters (usually a literature review, methodology or introductory chapter, in discussion with supervisor), and a timetable for completion. The Upgrade is examined in a viva and the committee consists of the main and advisory supervisors and one other person who is not familiar with the student's work. Part-time student submissions are calculated pro-rata for both Aims and Methods and Upgrading.

Expectations for successful Aims and Methods and Upgrading:

- Satisfactory completion of materials for submission and appropriate academic presentation of the same
- Completion of compulsory courses, attendance and contribution to Doctoral Workshop
- Development of appropriate LSE courses in discussion with supervisor

Having successfully Upgraded you will have an annual review with your supervisor and advisor to ensure satisfactory progress.

Department: Government

(Programme withdrawn 2012/13. Last intake 2011/12)

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

GV5X1 Research Design in Political Science

Optional (not examined/examined)

Relevant course(s) provided in the Methodology Institute agreed with supervisor.

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

At least one workshop from the following (workshop content varies from year to year, but a typical profile includes workshops in political theory, institutional analysis and political economy, European politics and policy, rational choice, and comparative politics):

- GV501 Doctoral Workshop: Political Theory
- GV503 Political Philosophy Research Seminar
- GV510 Ethnicity and Nationalism Research Workshop (n/a 16/17)
- GV513 Qualitative Methods in the Study of Politics
- GV514 Political Science and Political Economy Doctoral Workshop
- GV515 Researching People, Politics and Organisations (n/a 16/17)
- GV555 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

Presentation requirements:

students are required to present at one of the workshops attended

Year 3

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

At least one workshop from the above (workshop content varies from year to year, but a typical profile includes workshops in political theory, institutional analysis and political economy, European politics and policy, rational choice, and comparative politics).

Year 4

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

At least one workshop from the above (workshop content varies from year to year, but a typical profile includes workshops in political theory, institutional analysis and political economy, European politics and policy, rational choice, and comparative politics).

Progression and upgrade requirements Year 1 - To be allowed to re-register for the second year, first year students are required to give a satisfactory account of the progress and future direction of their research. This should take the form of:

1. A short prospectus, of approximately 3,000 words, setting out the research question, initial theoretical ideas, how these ideas will be applied in empirical research or theoretical enquiry, and a fully referenced discussion of the location of the proposed thesis in relation to existing research, questions, and controversies.
2. A list of intended chapter headings, giving the hypothetical contents of the thesis, together with a short abstract of one paragraph and no more than a page of A4, which summarises, albeit tentatively, the argument, anticipated or hoped for empirical findings or theoretical conclusions of the prospective thesis.
3. One substantial piece of writing, which would normally be a draft chapter. The draft chapter should not be a literature review: it should be a forward looking piece dealing directly with the planned research.

A student is allowed to re-register if, in the opinion of the panel, there is a strong probability that the student will complete a PhD in the permitted time.

Year 2 - The annual review examines the progress made by the student and especially the likelihood of completion of a thesis of sufficient standard within the normal periods (four years for a full-time student and eight for a part-time one).

Year 3 - The annual review examines the progress made by the student and especially the likelihood of completion of a thesis of sufficient standard within the normal periods (four years for a full-time student and eight for a part-time one).

Progression and Upgrade requirements for both Routes 1 and 2

Once students are in the MPhil/PhD part of the programme, they will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. This is Year 1 for students in the +3 programme and Year Two for students in the 1+3 programme. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress to the second year. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme). Progression is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops. All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. This is Year 2 for students in the +3 programme and Year Three for students in the 1+3 route. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. The material is evaluated by an upgrading committee that will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrading committee is normally formed by the student's main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD in Information Systems

Programme code: RPIS

Department: Management

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

- MG502 Foundations of Social Research in Information Systems: Paradigms and Traditions (H)
 MG503 Interpretations of Information (H)
 MG486 Digital Convergence and Information Services (H)

Or

Another half unit Masters Course from MISDI, Department of Management or School, subject to approval from supervisor and Research Chair.

Half unit course from Department of Management or other department, subject to approval from the supervisor and the Research Chair. The option would normally be an advanced level postgraduate course in an area that would contribute to their understanding or approach to the thesis topic.

- MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)
 MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)
 MY552 Applied Regression Analysis (H)

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

Compulsory (not examined)

- MG500 Information Systems PhD Seminar Series and Workshops (students are expected to attend each term and present at least once a year)

Optional (not examined)

PhD Seminar Series
 Faculty Research Seminars
 Progression and upgrade requirements Students are expected to make a presentation once per year at MG500 Information Systems PhD Seminar Series and Workshops. Students are also expected to take an active part in the PhD Seminar Series. During the programme students are required to pass an MPhil/PhD upgrade examination. This involves a presentation at the MG500 Seminar series, submission of a research proposal for formal assessment by the faculty, response document to assessor feedback followed by an oral exam in the early Michaelmas term of Year 2, attended by a panel of faculty members and an external moderator. Students would normally be required to pass all six of their first year courses with Merit in order to be upgraded.

MPhil/PhD in International History

Programme code: RPIH

Department: International History

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

- HY501 International History Research Student Workshop

Year 2

Training courses

Optional (not examined)

 HY510 Cold War History Research Seminar

Year 4

Training courses

Optional (not examined)

- HY509 International History Research Seminar
 HY510 Cold War History Research Seminar

Progression and upgrade requirements

On being admitted, all students are formally registered for an MPhil. By 13 June (Week 8 Summer Term) of their first year (1 March of their second year for part-time students) they are required to submit three hardcopies of their dossier containing (1) the provisional title of their thesis, together with the provisional titles of their chapters; (2) a bibliography, setting out as comprehensively as possible the primary published and unpublished sources they intend to use, along with the books, articles, unpublished theses and other sources they will consult; (3) an historiographical essay, evaluating the contributions of other scholars to their subject, and indicating clearly how their own thesis will contribute to it; and (4) a draft chapter of approximately 10,000 words based largely upon primary sources. The dossier will be read by three members of the Department, and students will be required to undergo a 20-30 minute viva. After the viva you will be informed of the outcome and will receive a joint report from the panel. If the Committee deems the dossier/viva satisfactory, the Department will recommend the student for transfer of registration from MPhil to PhD status. If it is less than satisfactory it will be examined by the Committee who will determine whether the student should be allowed to resubmit revised upgrade materials, which may be permitted once. The review and viva process is designed to determine whether the student is likely to meet the requirements of a PhD, and whether the chosen topic is suitable for a doctoral dissertation.

MPhil/PhD in International Relations

Programme code: RPIR

Department: International Relations

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

- IR501 Methods in International Relations Research
IR509 International Relations Research Design Seminar

Year 2

Training courses compulsory (not examined)

- IR509 International Relations Research Design Seminar (second-year workshops)

Optional (examined/not examined)

The subject workshops offered by the International Relations Department comprise international relations theory; security and statecraft; international institutions, law and ethics; international political economy; Asia-Pacific; and the Middle East. Relevant courses provided by the Methodology Institute and agreed with supervisor, including:

- MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design
MY521 Qualitative Research Methods
MY551M or MY551L Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)
MY552M or MY552L Applied Regression Analysis (H)
MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement
MY559 Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Quantitative Text Analysis (H) (n/a 16/17)
MY599 Methodology Institute Seminar
MY530 Advanced Qualitative Analysis Workshops
MY591 Computer Packages for Qualitative Analysis

Transferable skills courses

- MY592 Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data (Year One)

Progression and upgrade requirements

Early in the Summer Term first- and second-year research students will have their progress reviewed by a Research Panel. They may also be held at the end of the third or subsequent years of registration at the request of a supervisor or student. Supervisors will not attend Research Panels but will provide reports on progress. Panel members may attend student presentations at the Research Design Seminar (IR509). Students are expected for the first Panel to submit an outline of their proposed research and one draft chapter. Students who are deemed not to have made satisfactory progress will either be refused permission to re-register or will be required by the Research Panel to produce written work over the summer as a condition for re-registration in the autumn. In the event of conditions to re-registration being set, a further Research Panel may be reconvened in the September prior to re-registration. For the second Panel, which will decide on the question of upgrading from MPhil to PhD, students will be expected to submit two additional draft chapters. The two chapters should be substantially new work, but may include revised material from year one. Students who have not made sufficient progress to be converted from MPhil to PhD registration by the end of their second year will normally have re-registration made conditional on further progress (details to be decided by the Panel) or may, exceptionally, be prohibited from re-registering.

MPhil/PhD in Law

Programme code: RPLL

Department: Law

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory

1. LL500 Doctoral Research Seminar
2. Law Department lunchtime seminar series
3. One other relevant course offered by any department or other unit within the School

Students will normally be required to pass their first year modules with Merit or above in order to progress to the second year.

The research paper must be submitted in the autumn of the second year for the upgrade decision. The panel will decide whether to upgrade the student to PhD status by the end of MT, or require them to 'revise and resubmit', with continued advice from the supervisor, by the end of March. A final decision would then be made.

MPhil/PhD in Management Science

(formerly MPhil/PhD Operational Research)

Programme code: RPMS

Department: Management

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Training Courses and Seminars There are no prescribed courses for all research students. Your supervisor will discuss with you your experience and background and will advise you or require you to take courses as appropriate. These would normally be taken in your first year of registration as a research student.

Students would be expected to be active participants in the Group's Research Seminar Series and, where appropriate to their research, with the Mathematical Programming Study Group Seminar Series held in conjunction with the Operational Research Society.

Normally research students are expected, under the guidance of their supervisor, to present their work and findings to the whole Group every summer in a session devoted to that purpose. Students engaged in preparing the final draft of their thesis are exempted from this requirement.

Methodological Training You will work closely with your principal supervisor, who will provide advice and guidance. You will also have the opportunity to take advantage of research methodology courses provided by the Methodology Institute and the academic and professional development programme offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

Upgrading to PhD

The review to upgrade to the PhD normally takes place within two years of full time registration. Progress is assessed by the first and/or second supervisor in consultation with the PhD programme director and another expert in the field of the research undertaken by the student. If satisfactory progress has been made, the programme director will recommend that registration be upgraded to PhD status.

Targets for Progress

Year One - Successful completion of any taught courses required

Year Two - Upgrade to PhD

Year Three - Completion of research and thesis

Year Four - Completion of research and thesis

MPhil/PhD in Mathematics

Programme code: RPMA

Department: Mathematics

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses - Compulsory (not examined)

Courses designed for research students in Mathematics, chosen in consultation with their lead supervisor. Discrete Mathematics and Algorithms and Game Theory students will attend four courses organised by the London Taught Course Centre (www.ltcc.ac.uk), but there are separate arrangements for students in Financial Mathematics, where courses are provided by the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance (www.londonmathfinance.org.uk). Students also have the option of attending or auditing LSE Taught Masters modules, where appropriate.

Transferable skills courses - Compulsory (not examined)

MA500 Mathematics Seminar - students required to attend.

MA501 Research Student Seminar - students to attend and to make presentations.

Optional (not examined)

MA422 Research Topics in Financial Mathematics

Year 2

Training courses - Optional (not examined)

Students have the option of attending advanced courses organized by the London Taught Course Centre or the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance

Transferable skills courses - Compulsory (not examined)

MA500 Mathematics Seminar

MA501 Research Student Seminar

Optional (not examined)

MA422 Research Topics in Financial Mathematics

Year 3

Training courses - Optional (not examined)

Students have the option of attending advanced courses organized by the London Taught Course Centre or the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance

Transferable skills courses - Compulsory (not examined)

MA500 Mathematics Seminar

MA501 Research Student Seminar

Optional (not examined)

MA422 Research Topics in Financial Mathematics

Year 4

Training courses - Optional (not examined)

Students have the option of attending advanced courses organized by the London Taught Course Centre or the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance

Transferable skills courses - Compulsory (not examined)

MA500 Mathematics Seminar

MA501 Research Student Seminar

Optional (not examined)

MA422 Research Topics in Financial Mathematics

Teaching opportunities All students are offered the opportunity to teach for the department, subject to a successful interview and language requirements.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students are initially registered for the MPhil, and will be able to upgrade to PhD registration during their second year, dependent on satisfactory progress. Progress is assessed regularly by the student's supervisors, in consultation with the Doctoral Programme Director, on the basis of the extent to which the agreed research goals have been achieved. Any upgrade is dependent on the successful completion of a Major Review, the date of which is determined by the Doctoral Programme Director in consultation with the lead supervisor.

MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications

Programme code: RPME

Department: Media & Communications

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

MC408/418 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications I and II (for students without the appropriate background)

MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (includes MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis and MY552 Applied Regression Analysis). By agreement, the Methodology Institute components (MY551 and/or MY552) can be replaced by other, more advanced, statistics courses or an advanced qualitative course taught at the Methodology Institute. At least one half-unit course of statistics needs to be included.

Optional (examined/not examined)

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture

Annual Departmental PhD Symposium

Optional (not examined)

CLT04 Digital Literacy LN988 Thesis Writing course

Modern Foreign Language courses offered by the Language Centre

Other graduate seminars of relevance to research subject

Presentation requirements

At least one presentation annually at MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture

Year 2

Training courses

Optional (examined/not examined)

Either MY530 Advanced Qualitative Analysis Workshops (H) or

MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)

MY559 Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Quantitative Text Analysis (H) (n/a 16/17)

ST416 Multilevel Modelling (H)

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture

Annual Joint PhD Symposium for Second Years and above, at Goldsmiths, Westminster and City

Optional (not examined)

Other graduate seminars of relevance to research subject

Year 3

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture

Year 4

Students are expected to complete their research

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students will be required to submit a full Thesis Proposal of 10,000 words to their Thesis Committee by 1 June in their first year (part-time students can submit their Proposal by 1 March in their second year). This paper will include a substantive statement of the aims, theories and methods proposed for the thesis, a tentative chapter outline, an indicative bibliography and a timetable for its completion. Together with the Methods (MC5M2) and Theories & Concepts (MC408/418) examinations, this paper will form part of the evaluation process, and, together with an oral examination based on the Thesis Proposal, will determine whether students are permitted to upgrade from MPhil to PhD and continue into their second year.

MPhil/PhD in New Media, Innovation and Literacy

Programme code: RPMEIL

Department: Media & Communications

These regulations apply to students entering in or before the 2016/17 academic year.

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

Any two of:

MC402 The Audience in Media and Communications

MC409 Media, Technology and Everyday Life

MC413 new Media, Information and Knowledge Systems

MC418 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications II

MC424 Media and Communications Governance

MC425 Interpersonal Mediated Communication

Plus

MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (includes MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis and MY552 Applied Regression Analysis). Year 3*Transferable skills courses*Optional (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture

Year 4

Students are expected to complete their research

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students will be required to submit a full Thesis Proposal of 10,000 words to their Thesis Committee by 1 June in their first year (part-time students can submit their Proposal by 1 March in their second year). This paper will include a substantive statement of the aims, theories and methods proposed for the thesis, a tentative chapter outline, an indicative bibliography and a timetable for its completion. Together with the examinations in Methods (MC5M2) and the other two chosen compulsory first year courses from the list above, this paper will form part of the evaluation process, and, together with an oral examination based on the Thesis Proposal, will determine whether students are permitted to upgrade from MPhil to PhD and continue into their second year.

MPhil/PhD in Philosophy

Programme code: RPPH

Department: Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Methods

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor. All programmes of study should be agreed with the supervisor at the start of the year.

Year 1*Training courses*Compulsory (examined/not examined)

PH501 Philosophical Problems Seminar

Students who have never taken a paper in formal logic at degree must take PH502 Reasoning and Logic (examined).

Students who have already taken a formal logic course should choose one further MSc course not already taken as part of an MSc degree. Students can either decide to be examined in this course or instead choose to write two assessed essays, one at the end of each of the first two terms. This with the exception of students who choose PH419 Set Theory and Further Logic, in which case the examination is compulsory.

Either a further MSc course (again one not taken as part of the MSc course) plus one term unit of PhD level seminars. The seminars on offer are PH551 Research Seminar in Philosophy of Natural Sciences, PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences or PH500 Research Methods in Philosophy. If students choose to take a further MSc course, they can either decide to be examined or instead choose to write two assessed essays, one at the end of each of the first two terms. PhD level seminars are not examined and assessment is solely based on essays.

Or three term units of PhD level seminars with associated coursework. Taking three term units means that students can either take all three terms of one of these seminars or 'mix and match' by taking different seminars in different terms. Seminars must be taken with associated course work.

Optional (not examined)

Transferable skills courses offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre or the Methodology Institute.

Year 2*Training courses*Optional (not examined)

PH551 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences
PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

Progression and upgrade requirements

Successful completion of work required for each year is a necessary condition for re-registration in the following year; and for upgrading from MPhil to PhD status. During the first year students must write a first chapter of the thesis as well as an outline (research plan) of the rest of the thesis. The chapter should be around 40 pages; the research plan around 10 pages. Both have to be handed in to the Departmental Office by 1 September. This upgrading will normally take place after the successful completion of Year One requirements in Case A, and after the successful completion of Year Two requirements in Case B. In both cases once you are registered for the PhD that registration will be backdated to the start of your MPhil/PhD studies.

MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences

Programme code: RPPHSS

Department: Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Methods

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor. All programmes of study should be agreed with the supervisor at the start of the year.

Year 1*Training courses

Compulsory (examined/not examined)

1. MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis
2. MY552 Applied Regression Analysis
3. MY521 Qualitative Research Methods
4. Either PH419 Set Theory and Further Logic (if students have previous logic training) or PH502 Reasoning and Logic (if no logic training)
5. PH458 Evidence and Policy (H)
6. Students also attend a Research Seminar in the Department

Year 2*Training courses*Compulsory (examined)

7. MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement
8. MY500 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

GY450 Planning Practice and Research or GY502 Staff/Research Students Seminar

Compulsory (examined)

1. Courses to the value of one unit from the list of options on the relevant MSc degrees
2. Relevant advanced research method courses to the value of one unit from the following:
  - MY500 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)
  - MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)
  - MY526 Doing Ethnography (H)
  - MY527 Non-Traditional Data: New Dimensions in Qualitative Research (H) (n/a 16/17)

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students on the MPhil/PhD programme will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress to the second year. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review, in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year. Progression to the second year is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

Research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. The material is evaluated by an upgrading committee that will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrading committee is normally formed by the student's main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD in Social Policy

Programme code: RPSA

Department: Social Policy

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1*Training courses*Optional (not examined)

If not already taken previously:

SA451 Social Policy Research
 MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)
 MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)
 MY551M or MY551L Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)

Students will discuss with their supervisors any other methodological training that may be relevant for the successful completion of the MPhil/PhD programme.

Transferable skills courses*Compulsory (not examined)

SA550 Research Student Seminar

Optional (not examined)

Relevant courses provided by the Library, Teaching and Learning Centre and Methodology Institute

Year 2*Training courses*Optional (not examined)MY552M or MY552L Applied Regression Analysis (H)

SA550 Research Student Seminar

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Each student is required to undertake Major Review in the summer term of their first year (second year for part-time students). For Major Review they must submit a 10,000 word document with a detailed thesis proposal, their research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. They are interviewed on this document by senior staff who make the decision on upgrading. Each year post-Major Review, every student is expected to submit a 1,000 to 2,000 word progress report, approved by supervisors, to the Doctoral Programme Director(s).

Each pre-Major Review student is expected to make a presentation on their proposed research to the SA550 seminar prior to the submission of their major review document and to address issues raised by the Doctoral Programme Director(s).

MPhil/PhD in Social Psychology*Programme code: RPPSDepartment: Psychological and Behavioural Science

The MPhil/PhD programme includes taught courses on both methodology and theory. The precise courses students are required to attend varies and exemptions may apply depending on prior experience and qualifications. These matters should be discussed and agreed with the supervisor in the first formal supervision meeting.

Year 1*Training courses*Compulsory (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined)MY421M or MY421L Qualitative Research Methods (H)MY452M or MY452L Applied Regression Analysis (H) or MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)

Year 4*Training courses

Students can take further courses following discussion with their supervisor.

Transferable skills courses*Compulsory (not examined)

PS950 Current Research in Social Psychology

Optional (examined/not examined)

Students can take further optional courses which they should discuss with their supervisor

Progression and upgrade requirements

The first year Extended Essay and the second year Upgrade chapters (see below) are examined by a three-person thesis committee, which includes the student's supervisor, as well as two other academic colleagues.

Targets for progress

Year 1 - Extended Essay of 6,000 words, submitted on first day of Lent Term.

Year 2 - Upgrade viva. Two draft chapters of 10,000 words each (total of 20,000 words), submitted on first day of Lent Term. These chapters form the basis of an oral examination by three person thesis committee usually four to six weeks after submission. Success in this examination results in upgrade from MPhil to PhD status.

Year 3 - Completed first draft by end of three years.

Teaching experience

Graduates will usually gain some teaching experience and have had the opportunity to develop teaching skills.

MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods

Programme code: RPMI

Department: Methodology

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses

Optional (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined)

A selection of:

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)
 MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)
 MY551M or MY551L Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)
 MY552M or MY552L Applied Regression Analysis (H)
 MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)
 MY556 Survey Methodology (H) MY557 Causal Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies (H)

A typical selection would be to take MY400, MY521, MY552 and MY555 in the first year, but students may be excused from some or all of them if they have previously taken graduate-level courses covering the same material. Students who use quantitative methods in their research, are also encouraged to take MY559 (n/a 16/17) in their first or second year. The courses they take may also include ones from other institutes or departments at LSE, dependent on their needs.

Year 4

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

MY599 Department of Methodology

Progression and upgrade requirements In the Summer Term of their first year, candidates will produce a 10,000 word 'first year review' that outlines the aims and methods of their thesis: this means summarising the key literature(s), motivating their specific research questions, and highlighting the planned contributions of their work. A first year review document typically includes a general introduction, a comprehensive literature review (covering relevant empirical and theoretical work), a motivation of the research questions and hypotheses, and an indication of the literature(s) that the candidate is seeking to contribute to (i.e. the gaps in knowledge that will be addressed). Candidates will also give an oral presentation of their proposal at the Department of Methodology

PhD day.

Written and oral work will be assessed by two academics (not on the supervisory team), normally members of Department of Methodology staff. This work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable them to progress to the second year. It is particularly important that the first year review clearly states the objectives of the doctoral research and indicate how the empirical work will be carried out. If the panel deems the first year review to be not suitably clear, they can choose not to accept the submitted document and give the candidate up to a month to clarify. This decision will be taken maximum one week after the Department of Methodology PhD Day. Examples of unclear work might include (but not be limited to):

- A first year review that does not state clear research questions;
- A first year review that does not adequately review the specific literatures that the empirical work is contributing to;
- A first year review that does not give enough methodological detail, showing how the design will produce data that allows the candidate to address the theoretical issues at stake in a systematic and rigorous way.

After the first year candidates will spend more time on independent study under the guidance of their supervisor(s). This will involve the collection, organization and analysis of data, and writing up the results. During their second year of registration, they will typically submit three (minimum) draft chapters of their thesis plus a short introduction and a detailed plan for its completion. The three draft chapters will typically include a detailed literature review, specification of research problem(s) and two empirical chapters. If candidates are pursuing a paper-based thesis, their upgrading documents will typically include a short introduction, a literature review and at least two empirical papers. Whether a traditional or paper-based thesis, the material will be evaluated by an upgrading committee (two academics, not necessarily of the MI or even the LSE) who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if their work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity.

Throughout the MPhil/PhD and PhD, candidates will attend the Institute's research seminar and other specialist workshops and seminars related to their interests. The student must present at every Department of Methodology PhD day.

MPhil/PhD in Sociology

Programme code: RPSO

Department: Sociology

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Training courses Compulsory (examined)

SO500 Research Class for 1st year MPhil Students

Students may also be asked to attend and pass the assessment for up to one further course unit (or two half units) chosen with their supervisor on the basis of an assessment of their research training needs.

Optional (examined)

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)
 MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)
 MY551M or MY551L Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)
 MY552M or MY552L Applied Regression Analysis (H)

Selection of additional courses, with agreement of supervisor, including:

Other courses from Sociology Masters programmes

Specialist research courses: SO511 Research Seminar in Political Sociology, SO521 Research Seminar on Cities and Space (n/a 16/17), and SO401 Social Research Methods

Transferable skills courses*Optional (not examined)

- MY591 Computing Packages for Qualitative Analysis
 MY592 Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data

Year 2*Training courses Optional (not examined)

- SO501 Research Students Seminar (this course is strongly recommended)

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the Summer term of each year the progress of each student registered in the Department is discussed at the MPhil/PhD Board, which is a general meeting of all research student supervisors. This Board decides whether to recommend to the School that students be permitted to proceed to the next year of study. If progress is unsatisfactory, a course of action to assist students to reach performance standards deemed appropriate by supervisors may be required, or a recommendation may be made that the student not be allowed to re-register.

By the end of Year 2, students are expected to have completed their fieldwork, and to be ready to submit three draft chapters for upgrade. All full-time research students are expected to have made the transition from the MPhil to PhD (upgrading) within two years of first registration and to have submitted their PhD thesis within four years. Part-time students are expected to be upgraded to PhD by the end of their third year, and to submit their thesis within six years. The decision to upgrade from MPhil to PhD is taken by a panel consisting of two academics from the Department or the School, with the supervisor(s) in attendance and available to be consulted by the panel. For upgrade, students submit three draft chapters of their thesis, plus thesis abstract and outline schedule for completion. This material is then assessed by viva voce and a written report is made by the panel.

Students should aim to have a complete first draft of their thesis in years three to four and allow three to six months for revision and submission.

MPhil/PhD in Statistics

Programme code: RPST

Department: Statistics

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1*Training courses*Optional (not examined)

Courses offered by the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance.
 Courses offered by the London Taught Course Centre.

Optional (examined)

Masters level courses relevant to research and agreed by supervisor in department, the School or University of London College - particularly ST405, ST411, ST421, ST501 and ST542.

Transferable skills courses*Compulsory (not examined)

Annual Research Presentation Event.

Optional (not examined)

Departmental Seminar Series.
 Joint Econometrics and Statistics Workshops with the Department of Economics.
 Risk and Stochastics Seminar/Workshop.
 London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance Seminar Day.

Poster Presentations.

The department encourages students to attend and, where the opportunity arises, present a paper or poster at conferences during their PhD programme in relation to their particular research topic.

Optional (examined)

Courses provided by the Methodology Institute.

Year 2*Training courses*Optional (not examined)

Progression and upgrade requirements

Formal assessment is made towards the end of each Summer Term. This assessment is based on statements made by the student and the supervisors in the progress report form. Students are also required to complete a supplementary report of 1-2 pages (A4), providing in more detail an outline of their current research.

The review to upgrade to the PhD normally takes place within two years of full time registration. Progress is assessed by the first and/or second supervisor in consultation with the PhD programme director and another expert in the field of the research undertaken by the student. If satisfactory progress has been made, the programme director will recommend that registration be upgraded to PhD status. The department's research committee also monitors the progress of PhD students.

Teaching opportunities

The department employs Graduate Teaching Assistants (GTAs) to teach a number of its undergraduate and postgraduate courses.

In particular ST102, Elementary Statistical theory, and ST107, Quantitative Methods, are taught to a large number of students across the School and require a significant number of classes.

Research students are encouraged to undertake some teaching from year two onwards. First year MPhil/PhD students are normally not permitted to teach, although some marking may be available during the year or for the external degree at the end of the year. A Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education is offered to those who wish to pursue this.

AC500 Accounting, Organisations and Society

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Mennicken KSW 3.09, Prof Peter Miller OLD 3.27 and Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. In addition CARR staff and students on other programmes may be eligible to take this, with the permission of the Course Director.

Course content: This is an advanced course for doctoral and postdoctoral students focusing on the institutional and organisational context of accounting practices in their broadest sense. The seminars are generally based on key readings at the interface between accounting, organisation studies, regulation and management. Discussions will be focused on the analysis of accounting and calculative practices in context drawing on a wide range of approaches.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of both MT and LT.

Indicative reading:

There is no single text for this course and the seminars will be based on pre-distributed readings.

Assessment: Assessment will be based on written work as agreed with the Course Director.

AC501 Empirical Financial Accounting and Capital Markets

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Pope OLD 5.04, Prof Bjorn Jorgensen OLD 2.17 and Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is a readings based course dealing with advanced issues in accounting research methods. Its primary focus is to study accounting and financial reporting issues from an economics perspective. While much research studied in the course will be empirical archival in nature, the course also emphasises the importance of theory and research design in developing high quality research. The course covers a wide range of accounting issues including the design of and choices between alternative accounting methods, the use of accounting numbers in economic decision making, assessment of financial reporting quality, the economic consequences of financial reporting, and the interactions between financial reporting, legal and economic institutions, and corporate governance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Assessment: Second year MPhil/PhD students in Accounting (Track 2) are formally assessed by a take-home exam in the Summer Term. First year MPhil/PhD students in Accounting (Track 2) will not normally be formally assessed but they will receive feedback in the form of formative assessments. In addition, all students participating in the course are expected to present research papers being studied and will receive feedback on their presentations aimed at developing and improving their presentation skills.

AC502 Foundations of Accounting, Organizations and Institutions

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting (Track 1). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is also offered for students from other MPhil/PhD programmes, with the approval and written permission of the PhD in Accounting Programme Director.

Course content: The object of the course is to provide students with an advanced understanding of the changing role and position of accounting practices in organisations, both public and private, and societies more generally. Students will be exposed to advanced thinking about how accounting practices are much more than a collection of routine techniques but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. We will focus on how efforts to design internal and external accounting practices are both a function of specific economic and political interests, but are also shaped by social and political aspirations. The role of accountants and other agents will be addressed.

The course emphasises the inter-relations between technical, organisational and institutional issues. While some technical accounting knowledge will be helpful, it is not essential and each lecture will provide the necessary technical foundations.

Indicative topics include:

Foundations of Reporting, Calculation and Disclosure; Transnational Regulation and Standardisation; Accounting and the Notion of "Entity"; Audit and Assurance: The Audit Society; Organisational Boundaries, Structure and Control; Performance, Accountability Incentives; Accounting for Sustainability; Organisational Failure as a Process.

Teaching: 10, 3-hour seminars in weeks 1-10 of MT and a 2-hour essay workshop in week 11 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two pieces of written work. This may take the form of either an essay, or the analysis of a case, and may also include in-class presentations and team-based work. This work will be assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: Chapman, Cooper & Miller (eds), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford, 2009); Hopwood & Miller (eds), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice, Cambridge, 1994; Power, The Audit Society, Oxford, 1999; Roberts, The Modern Firm, Oxford, 2004.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words) in the ST.

MPhil/PhD in Accounting students must pass the course examination, normally with high Merit (at least 65%) or Distinction marks, to proceed to the next year of the programme.

AC550 Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Stefano Cascino OLD 3.32, Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07 and Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with the necessary background required for core accounting and finance courses. The course is organised in three sections: Section 1 - "Accounting: Disclosure Principles and Practice" provides an overview of fundamental accounting concepts, practices and the main financial statements. This section emphasises users' perspective rather than preparers' perspective on financial reporting (eg, for valuation purposes).

Section 2 - "Game Theory: Application to Capital Markets" introduces the game theoretical tools required to analyse issues in accounting and finance in settings in which economic agents interact strategically.

Section 3 - "Finance: Quantitative Methods" provides the basic quantitative tools needed for technical MSc courses. This section consists of an introduction to Basic Calculus, Probability and Statistics.

Teaching: Teaching takes place over a 9-day period before the start of MT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: This course is not assessed. However, students will be given a number of application exercises to complete on their own or in groups.

AN500 Seminar on Anthropological Research

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Scott OLD 6.16, Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD 5.09 and Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology and MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Seminar on Anthropological Research

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 14 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN503 Thesis Writing Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14, Prof Deborah James OLD 6.06 and Prof Katherine Gardner OLD 5.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option. This seminar is for 3rd and 4th year MPhil/PhD post-fieldwork students.

Course content: Students present draft dissertation chapters in their cohort.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 14 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN505 Not available in 2016/17 Advanced Professional Development in Anthropology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charles Stafford OLD6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This seminar course has two main aims. First, it examines key theoretical concepts and approaches in Anthropology at an advanced level that may be relevant to post-fieldwork doctoral candidates. It may focus on widely ranging thematic areas, e.g. recent developments in cognitive anthropology and/or in material culture studies and/or in anthropological studies of ontology. The aim is to enhance the ability of students to engage with such debates at an advanced level. Second, the course aims to enhance the professional development of doctoral students by providing them with advanced training in writing and presentation skills, and more generally in relation to skills relevant to their career progression.

Teaching: 14 hours of seminars in the MT. 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 12 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the MT, LT and ST.

AN507 Theoretical Issues in Anthropology: Precepts and Practice II

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Graeber OLD 6.10, Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.09 and Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option. This seminar is for 3rd and 4th year MPhil/PhD post-fieldwork students.

Course content: The course examines key theoretical concepts and approaches in anthropology. It focuses on a number of areas, including post-structuralist and post-modernist theory; theories of the person and the body; theories of gender; theories of social change; theories of distribution and consumption; theories of religion and ritual; and such theoretical issues as are determined from time to time to be relevant to the course participants.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

Fortnightly seminars in each of the MT, LT and ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold CON.7.10 and Prof David Keen CON.7.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Development Studies and MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar is designed as a forum for discussing theoretical and methodological issues in Development Studies research. Modules are organized around broad methodological issues (e.g. research design, case studies, causal inference) and presentations of research, with the former featuring heavily in the MT and the latter in the LT and ST. Research presentations at the seminar are made by DESTIN research students and also by staff, with some invited speakers from outside.

All research students are expected to attend the seminar while in residence in London. First year students are required to present a draft of their research proposal to the seminar during the LT or ST. Continuing students are invited to make presentations based on a report of their research, draft chapters or even their final draft of the dissertation. In making their presentations students are asked to provide (a) background material about the particular issue at hand, (b) a clear statement of the research questions and/or hypotheses that are being addressed, and (c) discussion of the research methods to be employed. Students should inform their supervisor(s) of the date when they are scheduled to make a presentation.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

DV501 Half Unit Development History, Theory and Policy for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Putzel

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course integrates the concepts and perspectives of a range of disciplines to consider: major trends of development and change in modern history and interpretations of them in the social sciences; contemporary economic and social theory and their bearing on the policy and practice of development. In more detail: concepts of 'development' and historical evolution of paradigms of development thinking and policy. Role of states and markets in development/underdevelopment. Colonial legacies and path dependencies. State resilience and fragility. Political economy of growth, poverty and freedom.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. Students will attend the Michaelmas Term lectures for DV400 and an associated weekly seminar for research students only.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 presentations in the MT.

Indicative reading: The following are recommended basic readings for the course:

A. Kohli, State-Directed Development: Political Power and Industrialization in the Global Periphery (Cambridge, 2004). A Sen, Development as Freedom (Anchor, 1999). D. North, J.J. Wallis, B.R. Weingast: Violence and Social Orders: A Conceptual Framework for Interpreting Recorded Human History, (Cambridge 2009). HJ Chang, Kicking Away the Ladder: Development Strategy in Historical Perspective (Anthem, 2002). D Rodrik. One Economics, Many Recipes: Globalization, Institutions, and Economic Growth (Princeton University Press, 2008). P. Collier The Bottom Billion: Why the Poorest Countries Are Failing and What Can Be Done About It (Oxford, 2007). S. Chari and S. Corbridge (eds.) The Development Reader (Routledge, 2008). W. Easterly The White Man's Burden: Why The West's Efforts to Aid the Rest Have Done so Much Ill and So Little Good (Oxford, 2006). J. Ferguson The Anti-Politics Machine: 'Development', Depoliticisation and Bureaucratic Power in Lesotho (Cambridge, 1990). M. Jerven, Poor Numbers: How we are misled about African development statistics and what to do about it (Cornell, 2013)

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in January.

DV510 Research Design and Proposal in International Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold CON710 and Prof David Keen

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will work with their academic supervisors to structure a doctoral research proposal that has the potential to make a significant contribution to knowledge and that reflects a sophisticated mastery of advanced theoretical and methodological tools from one or more academic disciplines related to international development. They will learn how to identify good research questions that are embedded in the current academic literature, and how to apply recognisable, defensible and academically sophisticated methodologies to address those questions. The doctoral research proposal itself will identify a key research question(s) for investigation, a justification well embedded in existing academic literature for why the topic is theoretically and empirically important, and a well-developed theoretical and methodological framework for researching the question(s).

Teaching: Students will meet their supervisors three times a term during their first year of study in accordance with the LSE's regulations for Research Degrees. Their proposals will be developed over the course of these meetings.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 pieces of coursework in the MT, LT and ST. Students will submit drafts of their proposal to their supervisors and receive feedback.

Indicative reading: The reading list for each student will be determined by the research they propose undertaking.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

DV518 Half Unit African Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Prof Thandika Mkandawire CON 8.02
Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled in the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: The major concern of the course is with the political economy of African development, to examine processes of economic, political, social and cultural change in Sub-Saharan Africa. It provides critical analysis of key development interventions and processes. It seeks to combine general theoretical overviews with country case studies illustrating the variety of experiences and trajectories. It does not aim to provide a comprehensive coverage of development issues or of regions. Course content will vary from year to year, depending on the specialities of staff.

Attention is paid to legacies of the colonial encounter; the constraints and opportunities presented by African countries' positions in the global economy; the political economy of industrialisation and agrarian transformation, resource mobilisation; trade diversification; institutional reforms and state capacity. Attention will also be paid to social policy with special focus on issues such as social social protection, cash transfers, Millennium Development Goals, horizontal inequality and conflict.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. The following readings provide an introduction to the course:

Paul Nugent, Africa Since Independence: A Comparative History, Palgrave Macmillan: 2004; Nick Van de Walle, African Economies and the Politics of Permanent Crisis, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2001; Robert Bates, Markets and States in Tropical Africa, Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1981; G. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

1 x 5000 word research paper to be submitted on the first Friday of the Summer Term. The research paper will be co-marked by the course convenor and the student's PhD supervisor.

DV520 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Complex Emergencies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16 and Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10

Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option to students enrolled in the MRes/PhD in International Development only

Course content: The course examines the consequences and causes of humanitarian disasters. It looks at the changing nature of civil conflicts, at the famine process, and at the benefits that may arise for some groups from war and famine. It examines some of the roots of violence in civil wars, as well as the information systems that surround and help to shape disasters.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. A useful text, which is designed in large part around the course, is David Keen, Complex Emergencies (Polity, 2008). Other texts of interest include David Keen, Useful Enemies: When Waging Wars is More Important than Winning Them (Yale University Press, 2012); Stathis Kalyvas, The Logic of Violence in Civil War (Cambridge University Press, 2006); David Keen, Conflict and Collusion in Sierra Leone (James Currey, 2005); David Keen, Endless War? Hidden Functions of the 'War on Terror' (Pluto, 2006); Michael Mann, The Dark Side of Democracy: Explaining Ethnic Cleansing (Cambridge University Press, 2005); Amartya Sen, Poverty and Famines (Oxford University Press, 1981); Frances Stewart and Valpy Fitzgerald (eds.), War and Underdevelopment, Volumes 1 and 2 (Oxford University Press, 2001); and Jeremy Weinstein, Inside Violence: The Politics of Insurgent Violence (Cambridge University Press, 2007); Tim Allen, Trial Justice: The International Criminal Court and the Lord's Resistance Army (Zed Press, 2006), Chris Dolan, Social Torture: The Case of Northern Uganda, 1986-2006 (Berghahn, 2009); Zoe Marriage, Not Breaking the Rules, Not Playing the Game: International Assistance to Countries in Conflict (Hurst and Co., 2006); Christopher Cramer, Civil War is Not a Stupid Thing: Accounting for Violence in Developing Countries (Hurst and Co., 2006); Mats Berdal and David Malone, Greed and Grievance: Economic Agendas in Civil Wars (Lynne Rienner, 2000); Hugo Slim, Killing Civilians: Method, Madness and Morality in War (Hurst and Co., 2008).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

1 x 5000 word research paper to be submitted on the first Friday of the Summer Term. The research paper will be co-marked by the course convenor and the student's PhD supervisor.

DV528 Half Unit Managing Humanitarianism

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Dr Darron Gordon CON 8.10
Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option to students enrolled on the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: The course looks at international, national and local responses to conflict and natural disasters. Building on an analysis of the causes, construction and consequences of humanitarian disasters, this course focuses on humanitarian actors (including aid workers, journalists, medics, government officials, soldiers, politicians and peace negotiators). It considers the principles and the politics of humanitarian action, exploring the overlaps and tensions between practices of humanitarian assistance and humanitarian intervention. How does humanitarianism relate to ideas about human rights and justice, or the politics of securitisation? Why do humanitarian organisations and governments respond to some crises and not to others? It also considers the critique of humanitarian assistance and the ways in which the UN and NGO communities have responded and sought to professionalise their activities. The course also looks at how recipients of humanitarian aid respond to these programmes, and in some cases subvert or transform them into quite different projects. Case studies will be drawn primarily from Africa, Central and South Asia and Latin America. However, there is also likely to be discussion of ongoing humanitarian emergencies, wherever they are located.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: M. Barnett (2011), Empire of Humanity: A History of Humanitarianism, Ithaca: Cornell University Press; M. Barnett, M. Barnett & T. G. Weiss (Eds.), 2008. Humanitarianism in Question Politics Power and Ethics, Ithaca: Cornell University Press; De Waal, A. 1997. Famine Crimes: Politics and the Disaster Relief Industry in Africa. London: James Currey. G. Loescher (2001) The UNHCR and World Politics, Oxford University Press. D. Rieff (2002) A Bed for the Night: Humanitarianism in Crisis, Vintage/Random House.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

1 x 5000 word research paper to be submitted on the first Friday of the Lent Term. The research paper will be co-marked by the course convenor and the student's PhD supervisor

DV531 Development Management

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Prof Jean-Paul Faguet CON 8.06
Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available to students in Year 2 or above of the MRes/PhD in International Development only. It is available to students in Year 1 of the MRes/PhD in International Development with permission.

Course content: Why are some countries rich and others poor? Why are some governed well and others badly? This course employs a political economy approach to examine the causes of development and non-development. It focuses on the different kinds of authority, incentives and accountability mechanisms that govern the relationships between managers and recipients in the institutions and organisations that people use to meet their political, economic and social needs. It reviews ongoing debates about the best ways of designing state agencies, private firms and NGOs in order to enable students to make practical judgements about institutional reform programmes by showing how centralised bureaucracies, markets, participatory and solidaristic agencies operate to provide essential services. It explores deep theories about the emergence of the state, and the different social, political and economic actors that work within it and vie to control it. And it examines how these forces interact to drive processes of change in different kinds of society, and especially in 'Late Developing Societies' that are attempting to make transitions to modernity by reviewing the literature that explain problems of state, economic and social failure and reconstruction in poor countries. The course is divided into four parts: (1) Analytical assumptions, (2) Government and governance, (3) Private Sector, and (4) Civil Society. On completing the course students should be able to: (i) use theory to solve practical development problems; (ii) identify and assess relevant case study material to inform the practice of development management; and (iii) critically appraise their own practical experience as workers in development organisations or consumers of their services. The course reviews literature dealing with the principles governing the institutions and organisations through which policies, programmes and projects are implemented. It examines the variety of functions they must perform; the structures they can assume; the incentive systems which motivate them and how they relate to differing political, economic and social conditions. It considers recent literature which re-evaluates the way these problems are understood, looking in particular at recent developments in economics, public sector management, social policy and organisational ethnography. It focuses on the role of hierarchy, competition and participation in providing different kinds of services in different situations and contexts. It provides an analytical basis for making judgements about institutional reform programmes by showing how different kinds of institutions and organisations, centralised bureaucracies, markets, participatory and solidaristic agencies operate to provide services in practice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 4 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be an introductory 4 hour workshop on Wednesday afternoon of week 1. There are also special evening sessions. Lectures will focus on the theoretical debates driving current policy practice in the development community, while seminars will relate these to practical problems of implementation, drawing on case studies, class exercises, and the personal experience of participants. Seminars will discuss topics covered in the lecture, and will be conducted on the basis either of a student presentation or a class exercise.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list is provided at the first course meeting. Background readings include: Brett, E.A. ## DV545 Half Unit Research Themes in International Development

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Prof Tim Allen CON 7.12

Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenors and student's PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled on the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: The course will be structured around large research topics associated with the work of the International Development department such as Complex Emergencies, Control of Tropical Diseases, Assessments of Global Poverty, Dilemmas in African Leadership, the Economic Growth of China and may include language and other specialist training linked to the student's research. A set of readings will be proposed for each topic, with an orientation towards the publications of International Development staff. Themes and questions will change over time as according to developments in the literature and specific interests of staff teaching the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

DV590 Half Unit Economic Development Policy I

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Prof Danny Quah
Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled in the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: This course focuses on analytically and empirically rigorous analyses of economic policies for macroeconomic growth in developing countries. We review current theoretical debates and consider how the use of empirical evidence can help to inform our analyses. In particular, increasing data availability has meant that the effectiveness of development policies, in terms of improving welfare, reducing poverty and promoting growth, can now be analysed using a variety of quantitative techniques. By looking at how these approaches can be applied to a range of development issues, the course will provide an overview of new thinking on the design of public policy in developing countries. While a strong mathematical or statistical background is not necessary to follow the course, students will be expected to actively learn and engage with regression analysis and other econometric techniques. These skills are developed through the term with mandatory weekly problem sets and occasional in-class quizzes supplementing the lectures and readings. The course consists of one lecture on the interpretation of empirical regression analysis and the role of quantitative methods in policy evaluation, and a further 9 two-hour lectures on theory and policy issues of relevance to developing countries. Topics themselves may vary from year to year but may include determinants of growth; human capital accumulation; globalisation and the political economy of trade policy; the global evolution of income distribution, structural adjustment, and financial crises; economic geography of development; aid; debt relief; and environment and growth. Seminars consist of student-led participatory in-depth analyses of best-practice theory and quantitative empirical research papers which students assess.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: The bulk of the course will be taught using journal articles. A reading list will be handed out by the lecturers at the beginning of their sessions. Useful reference texts include D Ray, Development Economics (1998) which will serve as the course text, W Easterly, The Quest for Growth;

By looking at how these approaches can be applied to a range of development issues, the course will provide an overview of new thinking on the design of public policy in developing countries. Students without a strong background in statistics and economics should take DV590 as a prerequisite as students will be expected to actively engage with regression analysis and other econometric techniques. These skills are further developed through the term with mandatory weekly problem sets and occasional in-class quizzes supplementing the lectures and readings. The course consists of 10 2-hour lectures on microeconomic theory and policy issues of relevance to developing countries. Topics themselves may vary from year to year but may include health and education intra-household resource allocation; credit markets; social networks; and behavioural economics applied to the design of development policies. Seminars consist of student-led participatory in-depth analyses of best-practice theory and quantitative empirical research papers which students assess and critique.

EC501 Work in Progress Seminars

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Research students present their work to faculty and peers in the designated field. Outside speakers are also invited from time to time.

Teaching: Seminars EC501: eight seminar groups covering the major field options. The frequency of meetings to be determined according to the number of students in each specialism, but generally each group will meet weekly throughout the session.

Assessment: This course is not examinable.

DV591 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Economic Development Policy II

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Prof Danny Quah
Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled in the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: This course focuses on analytically and empirically

EC518 Topics in Advanced Econometrics for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L.4.20 and Dr Taisuke Otsu 32L.4.25

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: See course content for EC485. Additionally, this course will examine more advanced theories and applications in Econometric Theory. Recent developments in the field will be discussed, giving students an insight into the process by which research is conducted, and suggesting fruitful areas for research.

Teaching: 20 hours of EC485 Topics in Advanced Econometrics lectures and 10 hours of EC518 lectures in each of the MT and the LT.

Indicative reading:

See reading list for EC485. Additional readings will be recommended at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the LT week 0. Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

EC532 International Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gianluca Benigno 32L.1.12, Dr Swati Dhingra 32L.2.31, Dr Thomas Sampson 32L.2.34, Prof Gianmarco Ottaviano 32L.2.27A and Prof Maria Tenreiro 32L.2.17 Dr Gregory Thwaites.

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is concerned with the latest developments in international economics. The course builds on techniques introduced in MSc International Economics (EC421) to take students to the research frontier. One term covers international trade and the other term covers international macroeconomics. The course is based around research papers. Topics covered vary from year as the research frontier expands. A list of representative topics in international trade includes: micro-econometric studies of international trade, theories of heterogeneous firms and trade, theories of incomplete contracts and trade, and the political economy of trade policy. A list of representative topics in international macroeconomics includes international business cycles, determinants of international capital flows, portfolio choice and risk sharing, monetary and fiscal policy in open economies, theoretical and empirical work on the real exchange rate and international financial crises (e.g., currency attacks and sovereign defaults).

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings will be from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC533 Labour Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels 32L.2.10, Prof Jorn Pischke 32L.2.16 and Prof Yona Rubinstein CON.5.31 Prof Stephen Machin - 32L 2.06A

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the course is to familiarise students with main theoretical and empirical issues in current labour economics, to provide them with the tools for carrying out independent research in the field, and to provide a perspective on areas of ongoing research. The course has a strong applied focus. For each major topic covered we will investigate the main available theories in light of their testable implications, and discuss the advantages and limitations of existing empirical work and assess policy options. Topics include:

- Labour supply, household behaviour, and the allocation of time
- Labour demand and monopsony

- Search, matching, labour market frictions, unions, and unemployment
- Wage determination, compensating differentials, race and gender gaps, and wage inequality
- Human capital, returns to schooling, and training
- Contracts and incentives in the labour market

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework:

One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading:

Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC534 Public Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Henrik Kleven 32L.3.16, Dr Camille Landais 32L.3.23 and Dr Johannes Spinnewijn 32L.3.24

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover the economics of the public sector, including material on taxation, public expenditures and political economics. The course, which covers both theory and empirics, aims to give students a broad overview of this growing field and bring them to the research frontier.

The specific topics covered may vary from year to year, but the following general areas would typically be included:

- Behavioural responses to taxes and transfers
- Optimal taxation
- Dynamic taxation
- Behavioural public economics
- Social insurance
- Federalism
- Privatization and regulation
- Voting
- The role of communication in politics
- Special-interest politics
- Political institutions
- Political accountability

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of the term. Although the course will not be based on a textbook as such, it will make extensive use of the Handbook of Public Economics Vol. 1-4 (A.J. Auerbach and M. Feldstein, eds.) and of T Persson and G. Tabellini, Political Economy, MIT Press, 2002.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC535 Development Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gharad Bryan 32L.3.10, Dr Gregory Fischer 32L.3.09 and Prof Maitreesh Ghatak 32L.3.08A

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover advanced topics in development economics where current research is active. It is intended to introduce research students in economics to the latest research in development economics and to serve as an input into the research work of these students.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback will be given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC536

Economics of Industry for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alessandro Gavazza 32L.4.21, Dr Matthew Gentry 32L.4.28, Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L.4.19 and Dr Pasquale Schiraldi 32L.4.22

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The main goal is to familiarize students with selected theoretical and empirical topics in industrial organization and to put students in a position to do their own research. Classical IO theory, well established empirical techniques including estimation of demand, production and models of strategic interaction and topics at the forefront of current IO research will be covered.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the MT and LT.

8 take home problem sets (two for each part - four in MT and four in LT). Each problem set will carry equal weight. Problem set questions may include an empirical exercise analysing data, a computation exercise, solving an analytical problem or evaluating a recent unpublished working paper.

EC537

Microeconomic Theory for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Ellis 32L.3.15, Dr Matthew Levy 32L.3.21 and Prof Balazs Szentes 32L.4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics for MRes students (EC441).

Course content: The objective of this course is to provide students with a graduate level introduction to advanced topics and contemporary developments in Microeconomic Theory. Topics will include:

- Classic static and dynamic game theory
- Contract theory
- Bounded rationality
- Psychology and economics.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and assessed by teachers.

Indicative reading: Osborne M, and Rubinstein A, A Course in Game Theory, MIT Press, 1994. Fudenberg D, and Tirole J, Game Theory, MIT Press, 1991.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC539

Macroeconomics for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shengxing Zhang 32L.1.16, Prof Philippe Aghion 32L.2.02, Dr David Baqaee 32L.2.18 and Prof Ricardo Reis 32L.1.27

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Surveys the most recent development in macroeconomics, with an emphasis on technical detail and directions for further research opened up by the material. The goal is to put the students on the research path by bringing them to the research frontier.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC540

Political Economy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Torun Dewan CON.6.07, Dr Ethan Ilizetzi 32L.1.10, Prof Gilat Levy 32L.4.31 and Prof Torsten Persson

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics, MRes/PhD in Economics and PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: MRes Economics first year core courses for Economics students, EC400 and adviser's approval for Government students. EC400, EC411 (or equivalent) and course convener's approval for all other students.

Course content: The course will provide students with the economic methodology and tools for the analysis of political decision making and its effect on public policy. We will consider how political institutions shape economic policy, e.g., how do institutions such as election, legislative bargaining, political parties or non-democratic regimes shape redistributive policies, fiscal policies, and the size of government. We will also consider how in the absence of institutions, political attitudes, beliefs and norms shape policies. The course will focus on analytical models and their testable implications.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will discuss papers in lectures and will be given the opportunity to solve problem sets.

Indicative reading: Political Economics by T. Persson and G. Tabellini (MIT Press 2000); Special Interest Politics by G. Grossman and E. Helpman (MIT Press 2001); Whither Political Economy? Theories, Facts and Issues, by A. Merlo, in Blundell, Richard, Newey, Whitney and Torsten Persson (eds.), Advances in Economics and Econometrics, Vol.1, Cambridge University Press, 2005; Tim Besley and Torsten Persson, Pillars of Prosperity: The Political Economics of Development Clusters, Princeton University Press Torsten Persson & Guido Tabellini, 2005; "The Economic Effects of Constitutions," MIT Press Books, The MIT Press; Positive Political Theory 1, Collective Preference, D. Austen-Smith and J. Banks, Michigan, 2000; Positive Political Theory 2, Strategy and Structure , D. Austen-Smith and J. Banks , Michigan, 2005.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC599 Research Paper in Economics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A research paper, between 5,000 and 10,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted mid-way through the summer term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

EH510 Seminar on Modern Economic History

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Max Schulze SAR 6.14 and Professor Joan R. Roses SAR 5.15.

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For research students. Also open to other EH graduate students and attended by LSE and other faculty.

Course content: The seminar provides a context in which research students can discuss with a range of seminar presenters from inside and outside LSE presentations of different aspects of economic development during the modern period.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

EH518 The Economic History of Firms & Industries Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gerben Bakker SAR 5.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For research students. Also open to other EH graduate students and attended by LSE and other faculty.

Course content: The seminar provides a context in which research students can discuss with a range of seminar presenters from inside and outside LSE presentations of different aspects of economic development. Presentations in this seminar relate particularly to economic development issues beyond the N American-European area, including aspects of global economic history.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 8 hours of seminars in the LT.

EH520 Approaches to Economic and Social History

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Morgan SAR 609 and Prof Juan Roses Vendoiro SAR 515

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is restricted to 1st year MPhil students in the Department of Economic History, for whom attendance is compulsory.

Course content: Approaches to Economic and Social History

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: There is no indicative reading list for this course as readings are updated annually to reflect student's interests.

Assessment: Assessment is by two pieces of written work, each approximately 1,500 words, on nominated topics to be submitted by the end of the Lent Term.

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Juan Roses Vendoiro SAR 515

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Thesis workshop in Economic History.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 15 hours of seminars and 20 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not examined.

EU550 Research Workshop in European Studies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mareike Kleine COW 1.01, Dr Vassilis Monastiriotis COW 2.05, Dr Waltraud Schelkle COW 1.06 and Dr Jonathan White COW 1.09

Availability: This course is compulsory for all first, second and third year European Institute MPhil/PhD students. The course is also recommended for those second and third year PhD students in the Government Department whose research focuses on European topics.

Course content: Presentation and detailed discussion of PhD theses, outlines and progression. Discussion of thesis chapters and related doctoral research. Discussion of research design and methodology. Practice conference panel sessions. A detailed syllabus is fixed at the start of each term.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation is required. All students are required: to present at least one substantial chapter/paper draft; to act as a discussant on another paper; and to make a contribution to a conference panel session.

EU554 Not available in 2016/17 Research Methods and Design in European Studies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in European Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course provides training in methods and research design tailored to European studies. Students are encouraged to discuss the distinctive problems of their own research in the light of the methodological and design issues raised. The last section of the course is taken up with student presentations and the development of research proposals in the run up to the first year assessment process in May/June.

Teaching: Weekly one and-a-half hour seminars during the MT and LT.

Assessment: There is no assessment on this course.

EU555 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mark Thatcher CON 4.17, Dr Mareike Kleine COW 1.01 and Dr Sandy Hager CLM 4.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in European Studies, MPhil/ PhD in Government (Joint) and MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This workshop is jointly organised by the European Institute, the Government Department and the International Relations Department for research students of these departments working in the general area of political economy and public policy and who have usually passed their first year. Research students from other departments wishing to attend should contact the teachers responsible. It should be noted that the course has three codes-EU555, GV555 and IR555.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis chapters and related work. A detailed syllabus is fixed at the start of the year. Seminar presentations by outside speakers may be added.

Teaching: Ten one and-a-half hour fortnightly meetings in MT and LT, commencing in week 1 of MT. A mini-conference in the ST, organised by the students themselves.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending student has to give at least one presentation.

FM502 Corporate Finance for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Daniel Paravisini Maggi
Dr Mike Burkart

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 1) and MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 2). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Doctoral students in the Departments of Finance and Economics, and other students with the permission of the PhD Finance Programme Director

Course content: The first half of this course focuses on the theory of corporate finance. The theory half of the course can, in turn, be subdivided into two parts. The first part reviews some of the classical concepts in corporate finance, using tools from game and contract theory to study incentive and information problems at the level of the firm, examining how financial contracts can be designed to mitigate these problems. This part of the course also considers how takeovers and ownership concentration can help to mitigate conflict of interests among insiders and investors in firms. The second part focuses on the theory of financial intermediation. This component reviews the classical theories for the existence of financial intermediaries, focusing on the key inter-linkage between financial intermediation and financial fragility. This component of the course also examines the role of financial intermediaries in engendering financial market imperfections. The second half of the course will consider empirical methods in corporate finance and its applications to capital structure, investments, financial distress, corporate governance, and financial intermediation.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly based on books and journal articles including: Tirole, Jean, The Theory of Corporate Finance, 2006, Princeton University Press. Freixas, X. and Rochet, J.C., The Microeconomics of Banking, 1997, MIT Press. J. Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross-Section and Panel Data, Cambridge: The MIT Press, 2002. M. Roberts and T. Whited: "Endogeneity in Empirical Corporate Finance," Handbook of the Economics of Finance, vol. 2.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (25%) in the LT.

FM503 Asset Pricing for Research Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Georgy Chabakauri, Prof Ian Martin and Dr Dong Lou

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 1) and MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 2). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is divided into two parts relating to asset pricing theory empirical asset pricing. The asset pricing theory half of the course will cover static models of frictionless markets, dynamic discrete-time models, dynamic continuous-time models, and models with frictions. The second half of the course is dedicated to empirical evaluation of asset-pricing models. Representative agent models (with power, habit and recursive preferences) and their application to valuation of equities are covered. Next, no-arbitrage term-structure and option-pricing models are discussed. The class concludes with both equilibrium and reduced-form models of currencies.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading:

- Darrell Duffie Asset Pricing Theory, Princeton University Press
- John Campbell, 1999, Asset prices, consumption, and the business cycle, in J. B. Taylor and M. Woodford, Eds., Handbook of Macroeconomics, Volume 1C, Elsevier Science B.V
- John Cochrane, 2004, Asset Pricing, Princeton University Press
- Kenneth Singleton, 2006, Empirical Dynamic Asset pricing, Princeton University Press

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (10%) in the LT.

FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 1) and MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This is a seminar course for PhD students in the early stages of their research to present their work in progress. Outside speakers may also be invited from time to time.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Other meetings to be arranged as necessary.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 10000 words) in the LT.

A 10,000 word essay on a topic to be agreed with the student's supervisor. This essay is to be submitted by the end of the ST of the third year of registration for Route 1 students, and by the end of the ST of the second year of registration for Route 2 students.

GI500 Doctoral Workshop: Gender Institute

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Professor Diane Perrons, COL 5.01B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Gender Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to give students experience and practice in presenting chapters or papers related to their current research for critical discussion. The focus of the seminar is on the research process and students are expected to present at least once per year. Some summer term sessions may be used for professional training, such as CV preparation, conference paper preparation, publishing and teaching organisation.

Teaching: 15 one-and-a-half hour seminars held fortnightly in the MT, LT and ST. First year students must also audit GI424 Gender Theories in the Modern World (lectures only) and GI402 Gender, Knowledge and Research Practice (full participation in course). All students are expected to participate in courses run by the Department of Methodology, the Gender Institute or within the School as advised by their supervisors. Students are also expected to participate in research seminars and public lectures.

Indicative reading: PhD chapters and articles suggested by students relevant to their topic.

Assessment: No summative assessment, but attendance and participation is considered part of the overall formal assessment of progress, including upgrade at the end of the first year and annually thereafter. Students are normally expected to attend GI500 until the end of their third year.

Students should refer to the PhD handbook for advice on milestones.

GV501

Doctoral Workshop: Political Theory

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Jenco

Availability: Compulsory for PhD students in the Government Department specialising in political theory.

Course content: An opportunity for students to present chapters or papers related to their current research for critical discussion.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

There are typically 5 sessions in MT and 5 sessions in LT, and a variable number of sessions in ST. The precise schedule will be made available at the start of each term.

GV503

Political Philosophy Research Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Spiekermann

Availability: Compulsory for all PhD students in the Government Department specialising in political theory. Other interested students are welcome to attend, if numbers permit.

Course content: Guest speakers present papers and initiate discussion at seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: No assessment

GV504

Research Methods in Political Theory

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne Phillips CON.5.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the philosophical and methodological foundations of political theory. It aims to give doctoral students a comprehensive conceptual toolbox that can be brought to bear on many different substantive problems and research questions in political theory and neighbouring fields and will prepare doctoral students for choosing and reflecting on their methodological approach. The course runs in concurrence with the Political Philosophy Research Seminar and the Doctoral Workshop in Political Theory, complemented by a reading group in the Lent Term on methodological questions in political theory.

Teaching: 20 hours of workshops in the MT. 10 hours of seminars and 20 hours of workshops in the LT. 4 hours of workshops in the ST.

Formative coursework: Regular presentations in the reading group.

Indicative reading:

Some possible choices for the reading group:

- Roxanna Euben, 2008, Journeys to the Other Shore, Princeton University Press.
- Jonathan Lear, 2008, Radical Hope: Ethics in the Face of Cultural Devastation, Harvard University Press.
- Lois McNay, 2014, The Misguided Search for the Political: Social Weightlessness in Democratic Theory, Polity Press.
- J. David Velleman, 2013, Foundations for Moral Relativism, Open Book Publishers.
- Jacob Levy, 2015, Rationalism, Pluralism and Freedom, OUP.
- Michael Freeden, 2013, The Political Theory of Political Thinking, OUP.
- Miranda Fricker, 2007, Epistemic Injustice: Power and the Ethics of Knowing, OUP.
- Philip Pettit, 2012, On the People's Terms, CUP.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the LT.

Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

GV510 Not available in 2016/17

Ethnicity and Nationalism Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Douglas Hutchinson and Prof John Breuilly

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Government, MRes Political Science and PhD in Political Science.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For MRes/PhD students specialising in Ethnicity and Nationalism, who have attended an LSE Undergraduate or Master's course in this or a related field, or equivalent at another University. By permission, Visiting Students and others may also participate.

Course content: Critical analysis of recent theories and research in the fields of Ethnicity and Nationalism.

Teaching: 8 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of workshops in the LT.

Students may also attend the lectures in GV479 Nationalism and participate (subject to space) in the seminars in this course.

Formative coursework: There is no formative assessment. This is a reading course.

Indicative reading: This changes each year, depending on the theme chosen.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course.

GV513 Half Unit

Qualitative Methods in the Study of Politics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog CON4.01

Availability: This course is available on the MRes Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other PhD students must request permission from the class teacher, which is routinely granted subject to capacity.

Course content: This course introduces and critically evaluates, at the advanced postgraduate level, a key range of qualitative techniques and methods in political science. It aims to build students' capability to evaluate such methods and to select, reject, and deploy them in research design and practice.

The course begins with debates over the place of qualitative methods in political science, and the question of how to match ideas to methods. The rest of the course is devoted to exploring a range of qualitative techniques, including case selection, case studies and process tracing, comparisons, interviews and field research, qualitative comparative analysis, and "mixed methods". The content of each week will be integrated as closely as possible with participants' own research projects (even if qualitative work constitutes only a small part thereof). The course is relevant for political scientists, but also students of development and international relations.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Critiques of articles or books that use the various methodologies discussed in the course.

Indicative reading: G. King, R. Keohane, and S. Verba, Designing Social Inquiry: Scientific inference in qualitative research (Princeton, 1994). Antoinette Burton ed., Archive Stories: Facts, Fictions, and the Writing of History (Duke University Press, 2006). Paul Rabinow, Reflections on Fieldwork in Morocco, first published 1977 (University of California Press, 2007); David Collier and Henry Brady, Rethinking Social Inquiry (Rowman and Littlefield 2010); John Gerring, Case Study Research: Principles and Practices (Cambridge University Press 2007).

Assessment: Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Project (70%, 3000 words) in the ST.

(1) A thorough critique of an article which uses one of the methods discussed in the course (2000 words) and (2) EITHER a complete "mock" research design, preferably (although not necessarily) on their own research question (3000 words) OR a discussion of the advantages and limitations of a specific empirical technique, based on a review of at least two pieces of published research (3000 words).

GV514 Political Science and Political Economy Doctoral Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Stephane Wolton CON 5.08

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Government, MRes Political Science and PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Mainly for second and subsequent year research students and staff in Government and elsewhere in the School involved in research in political science and/or political economy. First year MRes and research students are welcome to attend.

Course content: The PSPE Doctoral Workshop/Work in Progress Seminar is intended as a setting in which Research Students from the Government Department present and receive feedback on early stage and ongoing research projects. In weeks when research students do not present, LSE PhD students, LSE staff, and visiting scholars from other departments will present. The Seminar aims to foster a strong and lively research community and as such, welcome empirical or theoretical work linked in any way to politics or political economy.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT. 22 hours of seminars in the LT. 7 hours of seminars in the ST.

The workshop will meet every week.

Assessment: Not assessed.

GV515 Not available in 2016/17 Researching People, Politics and Organisations

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bruter CON406, Prof Edward Page CON3.05 and Prof Martin Lodge CON3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Government and PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Optional for second and subsequent year research students in Government and elsewhere in the School involved in researching political science topics. First year students may attend if numbers permit.

Course content: The workshop is for all PhD students doing empirical work in political science, whether quantitative, qualitative or mixed, and whatever theoretical approach they take. Around six of the twelve regular sessions are to be devoted to PhD student presentations and concentrate on setting the problems faced and choices made in approaching the empirical research. In the remaining four sessions we will arrange workshops involving outside speakers dealing with crosscutting issues for which we have experienced substantial demand including issues closely related to the empirical analysis of government such as interviewing techniques and the availability and use of international data banks as well as sessions of more general appeal including on how the UK and US job market works, the journal publishing process and presenting at academic conferences and job interviews. If numbers of students mean that we need more than 10 sessions, we will arrange extra late afternoon sessions, up to five throughout the year, to accommodate the crosscutting issues.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Workshops will tailor reading to the research of the participants.

GV517 Half Unit Comparative Political Economy: New Approaches and Issues in CPE

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Soskice and Prof Catherine Boone

Availability: This course is open to all LSE research students who are interested in comparative political economy.

Pre-requisites: This course will be open to research students (PhD students) from any of the LSE departments.

Course content: This half-unit reading seminar will survey a set of major topics in the Comparative Political Economy (CPE) of advanced capitalist and developing countries. We will consider different analytic strategies for conceptualizing variation in national economic structure, explaining change in economic structure, and understanding the political causes and effects thereof. The seminar is designed for PhD students (research students) across the School wanting to familiarize themselves with some of the major themes, controversies, and research frontiers in CPE. Our goal is to nurture innovation in doctoral-level CPE research at the LSE.

While situating our analyses in the context of a changing global economy, our focus will be on describing and explaining transformation at the level of nation states. Drivers of change can be found in the locus and organization of political power, in technological change, and/or in the dynamics of capital. Our seminar will explore both productive connections and tensions that emerge across these explanatory models.

Course materials are organized around three major topic areas (though like most else in CPE they are interrelated): redistribution, accumulation, and domestic regimes. A great many questions fit into these areas and our idea is that the seminars should enable students to raise issues related to their research.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: For formative work, feedback will be provided on a dissertation proposal or chapter.

Indicative reading: Ben Ansell, From the Ballot to the Blackboard: The Redistributive Political Economy of Education Reform, CUP 2014. Beramendi, Hausermann, Kitschelt and Kriesi eds. The Politics of Advanced Capitalism CUP 2015. Brynjolfsson & McAfee, The Second Machine Age, Norton 2014. Ben Ross Schneider, Hierarchical Capitalism in Latin America: Business, Labor, and the Challenges of Equitable Development (CUP 2013).

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 5000 words) in the LT. Each student will submit a 20-25 page (double spaced) research paper, dissertation proposal, or draft dissertation chapter as the basis of assessment for this course.

GV555 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mareike Kleine COW 1.01

Professor Jeffrey Chwieroth

Professor Mark Thatcher CON 4.17

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in European Studies, MPhil/ PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Government, MRes Political Science and PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This workshop is jointly organised by the European Institute, the Government Department and the International Relations Department for research students of these departments working in the general area of political economy and public policy and who have usually passed their first year. Research students from other departments wishing to attend should contact the teachers responsible.

It should be noted that the course has three codes- EU555, GV555 and IR555.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis outlines, chapters and related work. A detailed programme is fixed at the start of the year. Seminar presentations by outside speakers may be added.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Seminars are fortnightly and begin in week 1 of MT and LT. There is also a mini-conference in the ST, organised by the students themselves.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending student has to give at least one presentation of their thesis research.

GV599 Research Prospectus in Political Science

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Spiekermann CON 5.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes Political Science. This course is not available as an outside option. For MRes/PhD students in Political Science only.

Course content: A research paper, not to exceed 10,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted in early September.

Assessment: Research project (100%, 10000 words) in September.

GV5X1 Research Design in Political Science

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Spiekermann CON.517 and Dr Joachim Wehner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to help PhD students develop a research design. Students will learn how to find their research questions, choose a feasible data collection or modelling strategy, and match data collection and analytic methods to the aims of the PhD project. We also consider the relation of political theory and political science and explore research methodologies in normative theory. This course is therefore designed to be a primer in asking the right questions, exploring the options available to us and understanding the consequences of the design decisions that we make. Accordingly, this course is ultimately about turning good research questions into systematic projects that deliver interesting and worthwhile results. We also debate issues in research ethics and provide advice on publication strategies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Weeks 6 and 17 are reading and feedback weeks.

Formative coursework: This is a PhD level Research Design course – we do not intend to have additional essays. Students will give presentations and receive extensive feedback on their work in progress. These are part of formative rather than summative assessment and are an important part of professional development. The main learning outcomes are to help the PhD students develop professional research designs.

Indicative reading: King, G., R. Keohane & S. Verba (1994) Designing Social Inquiry. Princeton UP. Box-Steffensmeier, J., H. Brady & D. Phillips (eds.) (2008) The Oxford Handbook of Political Theory. OUP.

Assessment: Essay (20%, 2500 words), essay (20%, 2500 words) and research project (60%) in the ST.

GV5X2 Research Paper in Comparative Politics

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

MRes/PhD Political Science Programme Manager

Availability: This course is available on the MRes Political Science. This course is not available as an outside option. Students on the MRes/PhD in Political Science only.

Course content: Attend a GV-prefixed course from the MSc in Comparative Politics and write a research paper on a topic agreed by the convenor of the MSc course and the student's PhD supervisor. Students must obtain permission from the relevant MSc course convenor to attend the course concerned under this option.

Regular attendance and active contributions to the seminars are required.

Teaching: Attend the lectures, seminars and reading week activities (if applicable) of the relevant MSc course.

Formative coursework: A plan for the research paper (1,500 words) on which the students receive feedback and topic approval.

Assessment: Other (100%).

Either a 5,000 word research paper (for a half-unit course) or a 10,000 word research paper (for a full-unit course), to be submitted on Tuesday week one of the subsequent term. i.e. modules taken in the Michaelmas Term submit on Tuesday week one of the Lent Term. Modules taken in the Lent Term submit in Summer Term. The research paper will be co-marked by the convenor of the relevant MSc course and the PhD supervisor of the student.

Students must obtain permission from the relevant MSc course convenor to attend the course concerned under this option. Regular attendance and active contributions to the seminars are required

Teaching: Attend the lectures seminars and reading week activities (if applicable) of the relevant MSc course.

Formative coursework: A plan for the research paper (1,500 words) on which the students receive feedback and topic approval.

Assessment: Other (100%).

Either a 5,000 word research paper (for a half-unit course) or a 10,000 word research paper (for a full-unit course), to be submitted on the Tuesday of the first week of the subsequent term. i.e. modules taken in the Michaelmas Term submit in the first week of the Lent Term. Modules taken in the Lent Term submit in Summer Term. The research paper will be co-marked by the convenor of the relevant MSc course and the PhD supervisor of the student.

GY500*Research Project Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olmo Silva STC 5.06A, Dr Murray Low STC 5.12 and Dr Benjamin Groom KGS 2.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD Human Geography and Urban Studies, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Presentations by research students of aspects of their own research, stressing problems of theory, methodology and techniques.

Teaching: A series of workshops, running throughout the year, organised by each of the three research clusters in the Department of Geography & Environment (Economic Geography; Environmental Economics & Policy; Urbanisation, Planning and Development).

Formative coursework: All students attending this course will be required to present their own research once each year.

Assessment: This course is not intended as preparation for any particular examination.

GY502*Staff / Research Students Seminars

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Dietz TW3 11.01C, Dr Ryan Centner STC.412, Dr Riccardo Crescenzi STC.414, Dr Christian Hilber and Dr Felipe Carozzi

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. For all MPhil/PhD students registered in the Department of Geography and Environment and staff. Other interested students may attend.

Course content: Topical seminar series involving presentations by speakers from both inside and outside the Department on aspects of their own research.

Teaching: There are three different seminar series taking place regularly throughout the year, organised by each of the three research clusters in the Department of Geography & Environment. The Economic Geography cluster seminar series is organized in conjunction with the Spatial Economics Research Centre (SERC); the Environmental Economics & Policy cluster seminar series is organized together with the Grantham Research Institute on Climate Change and the Environment; and the Urbanisation, Planning and Development seminar series is organized with the Urban Research Centre. The timing and length of each seminar series vary across research clusters.

Urbanisation, Planning and Development Cluster: *10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT

Economic Geography Cluster: *10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT

Environmental Economics and Policy Cluster: *10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 5 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT

*Note that the actual seminar schedule is subject to change due to availability of speakers.

Assessment: This course is not intended as preparation for any particular examination. But, students will find it useful in increasing their awareness of current research and the application of research methods across the discipline. Attendance is compulsory or strongly recommended as indicated in the course availability (i.e. compulsory for MPhil/PhD in Geography -- that is PhDs in Economic Geography, Human Geography, Environmental Economics, Environmental Policy and Development -- and strongly recommended for PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies).

GY526 Half Unit*Advanced Methods in Environmental and Resource Economics: Time, Risk and Environmental Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antony Millner TW2 Grantham Research Institute and Dr Benjamin Groom KGS 2.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

A strong background in economics is required to take this course for credit. A Master's degree in economics or equivalent will usually be required. Students from the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and those enrolled on GY426: Environmental and Resource Economics are allowed to audit the course.

Pre-requisites: The course will be core training for the PhD in Environmental Economics. A background in Economics is therefore required to take this course. Students taking the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change or students enrolled on the GY426: Environmental and Resource Economics can audit the course.

Course content: Many of the most important environmental problems require us to choose between policy options with very uncertain, very long-run, consequences. Climate change provides an archetypal example, but this is also true of e.g. biodiversity loss and the decline in global fisheries. This half unit course will introduce you to the decision tools economists use to inform long-run, uncertain, policy choices. We will critically examine these tools, and how they are applied in environmental economics. The aim is to provide you with enough technical background to be able to read current research papers in the field, evaluate their claims for yourself, and begin to formulate your own research questions. Topics will include intertemporal choice and discounting, risk, uncertainty and learning, catastrophes, and some more advanced discussion of dynamic optimization. We will connect some of the economics literature on these topics to parallel discussions in philosophy. We will illustrate the theory we cover with applications to common-pool resource problems, climate change, and renewable and exhaustible resource management.

There will be 5 x 2 hour lectures:

- 1) Inter-temporal Decision Making;
- 2) Risk and Uncertainty;
- 3) Information and Learning;
- 4) The Economics of Catastrophes;
- 5) Elements of Dynamic Optimisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be 5 x 2 hour lectures:

- 1) Inter-temporal Decision Making;
- 2) Risk and Uncertainty;
- 3) Information and Learning;
- 4) The Economics of Catastrophes;
- 5) Elements of Dynamic Optimisation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets in the LT.

Formative coursework will take the form of a problem set each week.

Indicative reading: Human well-being and the natural environment. Partha Dasgupta, Oxford University Press, 2004; Valuing the Future: Economic Theory and Sustainability. Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

The summative assessment project counts for 100% of the overall grade for the course. This project will test understanding of the theoretical methods and their application to real world problems.

International History Research Student Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Piers Ludlow SAR 2.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in International History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The workshop aims to introduce students to effective archival research, issues in the preparation of a thesis and means of launching a career in academic or related fields; and the opportunity to present research in progress.

Students yet to pass their upgrade from MPhil to PhD attend the Introductory Workshop, which meets weekly in the Michaelmas term. Meetings are devoted to research and interviewing techniques and mainly practical issues of historical research.

Students due to be upgraded attend the Advanced Workshop held in the Lent and Summer terms, the frequency of meetings depending upon the number of participants. The meetings are intended primarily as a forum for reviewing research in progress, with a view to enabling students to pass their upgrade.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

International History Research Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Piers Ludlow SAR 2.16

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students need to have passed their upgrade to PhD.

Course content: Second, third and fourth year PhD students will present their research for discussion. There will also be seminars by staff from within and outside the department on their own research with relevance for PhD students either in terms of subject and/or methodology.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

Methods in International Relations Research

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathias Koenig-Archibugi CON 4.08, Dr Federica Bicchì CLM.4.13, Dr Covadonga Meseguer 95 ALD1.13 and Dr James Morrison 95 ALD1.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The main objective of this course is to familiarise students with the principal approaches to contemporary research in the main branches of International Relations and to help students identify the appropriate methodology for their project. The course is not a technical course on methods. Unless they have taken courses on methodology and methods in their prior studies, students are encouraged to attend appropriate courses at the Department of Methodology. The course will encourage awareness of the relationship between theory and method in the conduct of research. It will highlight trade-offs when choosing specific methods or research designs. Our aim is to train well-rounded academic professionals, who are able to comprehend, critically interrogate, and engage with scholarship employing diverse methodological toolkits. The course therefore aims to expose students to, and generate awareness of, a variety of research methods in the discipline irrespective of the particular approach employed in their doctoral work. The course will aim to promote an environment of mutual support and encouragement amongst first year research students, maximising the potential for cross fertilization between different projects. The course will develop students' presentational skills in a group setting. In addition, sessions on professional development will be offered in the context of the course.

Teaching: 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 22 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

39 hours of seminars spread over MT and LT, beginning in Week 2 MT. In addition, professional development sessions will be offered.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare presentations on examples of published research, commenting on the methodology adopted and the way in which it is applied. Moreover, students are required to submit a short written piece describing and justifying the methodological choices for their PhD. The aim is to practice writing about methodological choices with a view to the chapter students are going to submit to their Research Panel in the Summer Term. More indications about presentations and the written piece will be provided at the beginning of the course.

IR502 International Relations Theory Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Wilson CLM 5.10 and Mr Mark Hoffman OLD 1.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR502 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working in the area of international theory, broadly defined to include work in rationalist, constructivist and critical traditions. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars developing innovative theoretical approaches to better explain, understand and critique world politics. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. The papers are circulated in advance.

Teaching: 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR504 Security and Statecraft Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz CLM.4.05, Dr Tarak Barkawi CLM.5.06 and Dr Janina Dill CLM.4.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR504 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working in the area of security and statecraft broadly defined. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. Research in this area draws on diverse theoretic and methodological approaches, and ranges across levels of analysis, regions, and eras. Specific foci of research include diplomacy, foreign and security relations, foreign policy analysis, comparative strategy, identity and security, war and society, state-building, peace-building and conflict resolution, revolutions, human security and genocide.

Teaching: 12 hours of workshops in the MT. 15 hours of workshops in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR507 International Institutions, Law and Ethics Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM.4.09 and Dr Federica Bicchi CLM.4.13

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR507 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working on the theory, history or practice international institutions, international law and ethics. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. Research in this area runs from the study of intergovernmental and nongovernmental institutions and global governance, to the politics of international law, to the ethical and normative dimensions of global politics. It includes, but is not limited to, the study of international institutions such as the European Union, North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, and the International Criminal Court and international issues such as human rights, humanitarian intervention, climate change, and international crime.

Teaching: 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR509 International Relations Research Design Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Mr Mark Hoffman OLD 1.09 (for first year research students), Professor Margot Light (for second year research students).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

This workshop is compulsory for all first year and second year International Relations Department (IRD) research students and open to other interested IRD research students.

Course content: In the first year, this workshop will address issues concerning the formulation and design of the PhD research project. Its principal objective is to assist first year research students in designing a well-thought out and manageable thesis. It seeks to do so by providing a forum in which first year students discuss their research topic, the particular set of questions they intend to address and the methods they wish to use with other members of the workshop. Its aim is to provide students with constructively critical observations about their research project and the problems they may confront. It also seeks to promote an esprit d'corps amongst the first-year research students by familiarising them with the work of their peers.

In the second year, the focus will be on preparing students for their upgrade Research Panel in the summer. Exactly how the workshop will proceed will be decided by the members in their first session, but the aim is to give students the opportunity to update and refine their research proposals, get peer reactions to the draft chapters on which the decision to upgrade will be based, and also to talk to each other about the common problems they face. There will also be some sessions to consider such 'professional concerns' as the balance to be struck between teaching and research, the role of presentations at conferences, seminars and similar professional gatherings.

Teaching: In the first year, the workshop will meet for 11 sessions starting in week 4 of the MT. There will be initial discussions of various theoretical traditions and different approaches to research design within International Relations. All first-year students are required to give a presentation outlining their research to the seminar, a copy of their research proposal (of no more than 5,000 word) being circulated in advance to the workshop participants. There will be two presentations per meeting. Students must also attend IR501 Research Methods Training Seminar and participate in at least one of the Department's other research workshops.

In the second year, the workshop will meet for 10 sessions starting in week five of the MT. All members of the workshop are required to present one or more draft chapters of their theses. They will need to provide a copy of the chapter for prior circulation to the workshop participants. Students must also participate in at least one of the Department's other research workshops.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR514 Middle East Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Professor Toby Dodge CLM.6.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR514 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working on issues related to the Middle East. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in and on the Middle East, and obtain feedback on their work.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR516 Asia-Pacific Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Callahan CLM 5.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR516 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working on issues related the international relations of the Asia Pacific. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in and on this area, and obtain feedback on their work.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR555 International Political Economy Research Workshop

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Woolcock CLM.6.13 and Dr James Morrison 95 ALD1.14

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

This workshop is run with the Government Department and European Institute (GV555 and EU555).

Course content: IR555 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working in the area of international political economy: the relationship between states and markets in a global context. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. Research in this area works at multiple levels of analysis and draws on an array of theoretic and methodological approaches from several disciplines. Both historical and contemporary questions are addressed across a range of issues including: trade, migration, global environmental politics, international economic organisations, economic diplomacy, international finance, foreign investment, exchange rates, and monetary relations.

Teaching: 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

LL500 Doctoral Research Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB 7.15 Marks, Susan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Law. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Law (Socio-Legal Theory). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the skills required to undertake advanced legal research. The focus in the MT is on methodological and theoretical issues arising in legal scholarship. The focus in the LT is on the various stages of the PhD process, and on preparation for professional life in academic law beyond the PhD. In the ST an Upgrade Conference is held at which first year research students present their work-in-progress.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Assessment: There are no examination arrangements. However, attendance in the MT is compulsory for first year research students, and research students in other years are encouraged to attend.

MA500 Mathematics: Research Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Boettcher and Dr Laszlo Vegh

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminar ranges over many areas of pure and applied mathematics. The emphasis is on topics in discrete mathematics, operations research and game theory. The seminar is regarded as an important part of research students' formal training and they are expected to attend and contribute.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT. 22 hours of seminars in the LT. 14 hours of seminars in the ST.

MA501 Research Student Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Allen COL 4.05, Dr Christoph Czichowsky COL 3.11, Dr Pavel Gapeev COL 4.10, Prof Jozef Skokan COL 3.04 and Dr Laszlo Vegh NAB.3.05
Julia Böttcher, Johannes Ruf

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminars range across many areas of pure, applied and financial mathematics. The emphasis is on topics in discrete mathematics, algorithms, game theory, financial mathematics and control theory. The seminars are regarded as an important part of research students' formal training and they will all be expected to attend and contribute. Throughout the academic year, students are also invited to give presentations.

There are additional reading groups aimed at students working in financial mathematics and discrete mathematics. These are compulsory for students working in this area but other students of the MPhil/PhD in Mathematics are welcome to attend.

See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/mathematics/Seminars/Financial\_Mathematics\_Reading\_Group.aspx and <http://www.lse.ac.uk/mathematics/Seminars/PhD-Seminar-on-Combinatorics,-Games-and-Optimisation.aspx>

Teaching: PhD Seminar on Combinatorics, Games and Optimisation (MA501.1): 11 one-hour seminars in the MT and LT. 7 one-hour seminars in the ST.

LGSME Portfolio Optimisation Seminar (MA501.2): 11 three-hour seminars in the LT. 7 three-hour seminars in the ST.

Financial Mathematics Reading Group Seminar (MA501.3): 11 three-hour seminars and 11 one-hour seminars in the MT and LT. 7 three-hour seminars and 7 one-hour seminars in the ST.

Discrete Mathematics Reading Group Seminar (MA501.4): 11 three-hour seminars in the MT and LT. 7 three-hour seminars in the ST.

Approximately 80-90 meetings of between 1 and 3 hours throughout the MT, LT and ST, dependent on speakers. See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/mathematics/Seminars/Research\_Seminars.aspx for schedule and more details.

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Syragoula Chouliaraki TW2.7.01D and Prof Sonia Livingstone TW2.7.01L

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in New Media Innovation and Literacy and MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications. This course is not available as an outside option. For Research Students. The course is compulsory for students in the first and second years of the Doctoral Programmes in Media and Communications and in New Media, Innovation and Literacy. All Research Students in the Department are welcome and encouraged to attend.

Course content: The aim of the course is to raise awareness of theoretical, conceptual and methodological issues in the interdisciplinary field of media and communications research and to develop students skills with respect to theory building, research design and implementation. The course focuses, in particular, on the key conceptual issues and analytical strategies required in media and communication research, with special reference to the study of the changing environment of media production, dissemination and consumption, under conditions of globalization and digitization of information

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Compulsory for first and second year students and open to others. There may be additional seminars or workshops in ST.

Indicative reading: Manuel Castells, Communication Power, OUP, 2009; Lilie Chouliaraki (ed), Self-mediation: New media, citizenship and civil selves, Routledge, 2012; Lilie Chouliaraki, The Spectatorship of Suffering, Sage, 2006; Peter Dahlgren, Media and civic engagement: citizens, political communication, and democracy Cambridge 2008; Klaus B. Other reading will be given as appropriate during the course.

Assessment: This course is based predominantly on student presentations on their work in progress. Students are expected to use MC500 seminars as a key resource towards their Upgrade document at the end of their 1st year of study and towards the submission of their formative assessment document at the end of their 2nd year of study.

MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ellen Helsper TW2 7.01E

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications and MPhil/PhD in New Media Innovation and Literacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: a series of lectures offered by media and communications staff in MT. The lectures will normally cover the following topics central to research design across the social sciences, with a specific emphasis on their application to media and communications contexts: the general nature of research as social inquiry, interviewing, discourse analysis, social network analysis, content analysis, visual analysis, survey design/questionnaires, case studies, ethnography and participant observation, as well as research ethics.

ii. Principles of Social Research: Workshop (three hours) x 10 LT (5 comprised of two x 1.5 hour sessions and 5 comprised of one x 3 hour sessions) offered by media and communications staff in LT. Students are required to participate in all ten workshops.

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Students have to take at least one quantitative analysis course offered by the Department of Methodology (MY551M is the basic option). In addition, students need to take either another quantitative or a qualitative analysis course offered by the Department of Methodology. The combination of courses must be approved by the supervisor and discussed with the MC5M2 convenor.

Teaching:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: Lecture (one hour) x 10 MT; Lecture on Writing Methodological Chapters and Papers (one hour) x 1 LT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: Workshop (three hours) x 10 LT (each comprised of two 1.5 hour sessions).

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Quantitative analysis course in Michaelmas Term: Lecture (two hours) x 9 MT; Computer class (one hour) x 9 MT; Quantitative or Qualitative Analysis course in Lent Term (Varies depending on the course): Lecture (two hours) x 9 LT; Computer class or Seminar (one hour) x 9 LT.

Formative coursework:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit one essay of 1,500 words in week 11 of MT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit workshop assignments.

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Most quantitative analysis courses require weekly assignments. The qualitative analysis courses vary in their formative assessment.

Assessment: Exam (34%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (66%) in the ST.

Description of assessment:

1. Coursework: One written assignment of either 5,000 or 7,000 words to be submitted in ST, depending on the MY courses selected.

2. One two-hour examination in ST relating to Quantitative Analysis (e.g. MY551) and one two-hour examination in ST if another quantitative analysis course is taken (see Department of Methodology course guides).

Note: Summative assignments differ depending on the components of the methodological training taken by the students. PhD students must pass all components of MC5M2.

MG500

Information Systems PhD Seminar Series and Workshops

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24 and Prof Chrisanthi Avgerou

Availability: This course consists of a series of seminars and workshops at which PhD students present their work in progress.

Course content: This seminar series provides a forum for research students in management to present work in progress. Outside speakers may be invited from time to time.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 20 hours of seminars in the ST.

For 2015/16 this will consist of a weekly, two hour, student-led seminar in weeks 2-9 of all three terms. There will also be one full-day PhD workshop with a guest speaker MT & LT. Details of these workshops are listed on the ISIG News and Events page and emailed to students and staff as they are arranged.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment but all students are expected to attend the one day workshops and must email the course teacher to explain any absences. Attendance at the weekly seminars is more flexible but students should make an effort to attend as many as possible and to be involved in the organisation of at least one per year.

MG501

Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Marsden NAB 4.22 and Dr Daniel Beunza NAB 4.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option. MG501 is a compulsory, assessed course for first year students on the PhD Management (Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour) programme. The course is optional for second year students on the PhD Management (Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour) programme. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other tracks of the MPhil/PhD Management where regulations permit.

Course content: The PhD seminar in Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour draws upon organisational, psychological and employment relations theories to advance an understanding of individual, group and firm behaviour. The course covers a number of issues at an advanced level, and introduces students to emerging topics in various fields such as Organisational Behaviour and Employment Relations, including employment systems, employee voice, status, trust, social exchange theory, organisational justice, ethics and ethical climate, and corporate social responsibility. The seminar discussions will be led by a combination of faculty at the EROB group within LSE and prestigious visiting faculty. Throughout the course, students will be exposed to the methodological issues related to conducting research in an up-and-coming area where the research questions may be less known. These methodological issues will provide continuity across the substantively different topics featured on the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: The following reading list covers six weeks of seminars. All other readings will appear on Moodle. Anderson, J. C., & Gerbing, D. W. (1988). ## MG502 Half Unit Foundations of Social Research in Information Systems: Paradigms and Traditions

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Information Systems. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Compulsory for MPhil/PhD Information Systems and Innovation students in their first year. Students from related PhD programmes who are interested in epistemological paradigms may be able to join the course with the teacher's permission.

Course content: The course introduces the foundations of social research and the key issues concerning the status of knowledge and the forms by which it is acquired. The course deals with the principal paradigms/traditions in the philosophy of science and epistemology and the answers they have provided to the basic questions concerning the status of knowledge claims and the forms by which valid knowledge claims can be made. The main focus of the course concerns the ways by which these key epistemological paradigms have been applied in the fields of Information Systems and Organization Studies. The course is structured around the following basic epistemological paradigms: Positivism Critical

Realism Constructivism Hermeneutics, Phenomenology Critical Theory Structuralism Postmodernism

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures, 9 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Archer, M. et al. (eds.), (1998) Critical Realism, Readings. London: Routledge; Dreyfus, H & Rabinow, P. (1982) Michel Foucault: Beyond Structuralism and Hermeneutics. (2002) Qualitative Research in Information Systems. London: Sage.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words) in the LT.

An essay of between 5,000-7,000 words to be submitted by the end of March.

MG503 Half Unit Interpretations of Information

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24, Dr Edgar Whitley and Dr Carsten Sorensen

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Information Systems. This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Other MSc students may follow this course but a good knowledge of information technology is required.

Course content: The course explores the theoretical foundations of information and the technological and institutional processes by which information is increasingly becoming a pervading and crucial element of organizational and economic life. A central theme of the course is how information and the technologies by which it is produced and disseminated are involved in the constitution and coordination of organizational operations and the control of professional practices and organizational outcomes.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Indicative readings are given below. A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words).

An essay of 7,000 words (100%).

MG504 Not available in 2016/17 General Management PhD research seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chrisanthi Avgerou NAB 3.22

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar series provides a forum for research students in General Management to present work in progress. In addition, the series will include tutorials on issues of epistemology and methodology. Outside speakers will also be invited to present research of interest to these students.

Teaching: 14 hours of seminars in the MT. 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course will consist of seven two hour, student led seminars in weeks 3 to 9 in the MT and LT, and four two hour seminars in weeks 3 to 6 in the ST. Details of these seminars are listed on the course Moodle page, the Department's PhD newsletter and emailed to students and supervisors.

Formative coursework: This is not an assessed course and does not have a formative coursework component.

Assessment: This is not an assessed course

MY500 Half Unit Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alasdair Jones COL8.12

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Course content: Research design necessitates trade offs between the strengths and weaknesses of different feasible options. This course aims to introduce the broad range of design options and to foster an appreciation of these alternatives for particular research objectives. Drawing on a variety of examples from the social scientific literature, this course will explore design considerations and options across quantitative and qualitative research, including issues of data quality, analysis, reporting and reproducibility. At the end of the course, students will be able to read a wide variety of empirical social science with a critical and balanced perspective and will be better equipped to implement and make arguments defending the methods they use in their PhD theses.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignments.

Indicative reading: Robson, Colin (2011, 3rd edition). Real World Research. London: John Wiley.

Assessment: Research proposal (30%) in the MT.

Other (60%) in the ST.

Class participation (10%).

Research Proposal (1000 words) submitted in Week 9 MT (30%).

Provisional Research Design (5000 words) submitted in Week 1 in ST (60%).

MY505 Half Unit Research Methods for Evaluation in Health, Development and Public Policy

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09

Availability: This course is open to any Research level student.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the methodological knowledge and research skills to be able to design and critically appraise evaluation research. In the context of the rise of evidence-based policy, the course is designed to extend students' abilities to use evaluative information carefully and critically. The course takes a mixed methods approach. It covers the major quantitative designs, including randomized experiments and observational (i.e. non-randomized) research designs such as selection on observables, difference-in-differences, and the regression discontinuity design. It covers qualitative and participatory research designs and their contribution to formative research, process evaluation, interpreting outcomes, and assessing transferability to other settings. As well as the major design issues, the course addresses practical and ethical issues of evaluation research, how to write a study protocol, and how to draw lessons from a body of evidence through reviewing and synthesising evidence. Examples from the fields of health, international development and public policy will be used throughout the lectures, and students select one of these fields for their focus in seminars.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

10 x 1.5 hour lectures

9 x 1.5 hour seminars

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students write a critical review (1,500 words) of a published evaluation report.

Indicative reading: Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J-S. (2014)

50% group-based coursework. Students work in groups to develop an evaluation design, and write it up individually (2,500 words).

50% essay. Students are given a choice of essay questions, in response to which they write one essay (3,000 words).

MY521 Half Unit Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09 and Dr Alasdair Jones COL8.12

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Course content: This course presents the fundamentals of qualitative research methods. It prepares students to design, carry out, report, read and evaluate qualitative research projects. Students learn how to collect data using methods including interviewing, focus groups, participant observation, and documentary and historical work. The challenges and opportunities of new media including visual images and Internet research are discussed. We then cover analysis, using thematic, content, discourse, and semiotic analysis. Issues of research design, quality indicators, epistemology and ethics are addressed. The course has the dual aims of equipping students with conceptual understandings of current academic debates regarding qualitative methods, and with practical skills to put those methods into practice.

In seminars, research students gain experience of putting a range of data collection and analysis methods into practice, on topics within, or closely related to, their substantive area of research. A workbook details the seminar activities - and provides the guidance and basis for the formative and summative assignments.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

The course runs twice per year: in MT and again in LT. The content of the course is exactly the same in each term. Week 6 is a Reading Week, during which students work independently on their formative assignments.

Formative coursework: Students submit a portion of their practical work, with some written commentary, for formative assessment.

Indicative reading: M Bauer; G Gaskell, (2000). Qualitative Researching with Text, Image and Sound, London: Sage; U Flick, (2009). An Introduction to Qualitative Research, 4th edition, London: Sage; C Seale, G Gobo, JF Gubrium, & D Silverman, (2004). Qualitative Research Practice. London: Sage. Please Note: No single publication covers the whole content of the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST. One final written project of 4000-5000 words, based on seminar exercises (100%). It takes the form of a research project report, with detailed appendices documenting the methods used.

MY526 Half Unit Doing Ethnography

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alasdair Jones COL 8.08

Availability: This course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites:

A postgraduate qualitative research methods course, such as MY421, as pre- or co-requisite. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent.

Course content: Doing ethnography enables us to examine how social order is produced as people go about their everyday interactions. Multiple sources of naturally-occurring data are used to understand how communities, organisations and institutions work, informally as well as formally. Contemporary conditions of globalisation, individualisation, bureaucratisation and digitisation introduce new challenges for such fieldwork. This interdisciplinary course equips students with a practical understanding of how to do, and to think about, contemporary ethnography. Core conceptual, ethical and methodological debates are introduced through in-depth engagement with book-length exemplars, and through students' experience of fieldwork. Fieldwork is a key component of the course, with students collecting data in a setting closely related to their PhD topic. Data collection is followed by data analysis and presentation activities. Methodological concerns regarding case selection, establishing rigour, reflexivity, representing others, and ethical issues are addressed in detail. Practical issues addressed include access to study sites, studying elite and marginalised groups, innovative sources of data, and writing field notes. Emphasising that ethnography relies on the researcher-as-research-instrument, the course aims to develop students' sensitivity and rigour as ethnographic researchers.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which time students work independently on their formative assignments.

Formative coursework: An excerpt of field-notes from the field visit undertaken as part of the course (up to 2,500 words). Field-notes should record rich details of observations (the data), researcher reflections and brief interpretations of the significance of these observations. Written feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Bourgeois, P. & Schonberg, J. (2009). Righteous Dopefiend. University of California Press. De Laine, M. Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

MY527 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Qualitative Research With Non-Traditional Data

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Availability: The course is available to PhD students in departments such as Media & Communications and Sociology. Also available where regulations permit and with permission of the teacher responsible.

Pre-requisites:

Introductory course on qualitative methods (e.g. MY421, MY521 or MC4M1) recommended as pre-requisite or co-requisite.

Course content: Most qualitative research is in the form of written or spoken texts, produced through interviews and field notes or collection and analysis of documents. Recently qualitative researchers have become interested in ways of capturing and documenting other kinds of data and other dimensions of social life. This course will examine methods for collecting and analysing data which are not primarily textual or linguistic, and how these can be integrated into qualitative research. Lectures will cover key topics such as time and memory; space, place and mobile methods; digital research and online environments; and using visual, audio and other sensory data. Key example readings will be assigned, discussed and assessed each week. Seminars provide practical skills through hands on exercises of data collection and analysis, closely tied with the lecture content. These skills will be developed further in a final small research project on a topic of the students' choosing to be submitted at the beginning of summer term.

The course aims to understand how qualitative methods can be applied to non-traditional data and how to address traditional methodological concerns such as rigour and representativeness. The course is aimed at students who are considering one or more of these elements as part of their dissertation research design and/or who are interested in gaining more advanced skills in qualitative research.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 will be a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignment.

Formative coursework: Seminar activities will receive in-class feedback. A brief proposal for final summative coursework (c. 1000 words) should be submitted and will receive formative feedback and guidance.

Indicative reading: Note: No one text covers the whole course. Pink, S. (2009) Doing Sensory Ethnography, London: Sage. Bull, M. and Back, L. (eds) (2003) Auditory Culture Reader, London: Berg. Rose, G. (2006) Visual Methodologies, 2nd ed, London: Sage. Massey, D. (2005) For Space, London: Sage. Adam, B. (1995) Timewatch: The Social Analysis of Time, Cambridge: Polity Press.

Assessment: Project (100%, 7000 words). One 5500-7000 word research project related to the course material, on a topic selected by the student (100%).

MY528 Not available in 2016/17 Qualitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Chana Teeger (Room: TBC)

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/Phd in Media and Communications. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites:

A postgraduate qualitative research methods course, such as MY421, as pre- or co-requisite. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent

Course content: This course covers issues, methods, and applications of qualitative approaches for the analysis of textual data. It introduces techniques and procedures available to researchers to identify and extract information from texts for social scientific purposes. Topics discussed draw on a wide range of analytic traditions such as thematic analysis, content analysis, dialogical analysis and discourse analysis and dictionary-based approaches. The aim of this course is to equip participants with the right skills to work within these traditions and select appropriate qualitative methods for analysing textual data according to 1) Research Design 2) Type of data under consideration.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their Summative Assignment.

Formative coursework: A project proposal (c.1,000 words). Students write a proposal for the project that will comprise their summative assessment.

Indicative reading: Krippendorff, K. (2004). Content Analysis: An Introduction to Its Methodology. Sage, Thousand Oaks, CA, 2nd edition; Neuendorf, K. A. ## MY529 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Special Topics in Qualitative Research: Introspection-based Methods in Social Research

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer Col.8.04

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites:

The course will assume good knowledge of qualitative research methods as covered in MY521 and MY530.

Course content: Introspection comprises methods of empirically recording one's own subjective experience; the currently on-going, or perhaps very recently past, mental or emotional states and processes through methods of trained and technically supported self-observation. Historically, introspection is part of a quest of human self-knowledge and self-improvement. And a person's stream of consciousness is of interest in the social sciences, for example as reports of happiness or life satisfaction. Introspection has been difficult to verify, thus deemed not 'objective' and unscientific. The stream of consciousness (William James) was of interest mainly to literary elaboration. However, introspection-based methods survived and have re-emerged, not least because 1st person experience remains an indispensable source of evidence on an actor's states and processes that constrain and give meaning to human action. Not least recent advance in neurosciences accentuates the need for experience-focussed 1st person methods. Modern introspection-based methods are 'objectifications' of 1st person situated experiences in controlled settings that support episodic retention. Modern introspection-based methods create conditions which make immediate, pre-meditated experience less 'biased' and more accurate to record. This comprises techniques such as narrative and episodic interviewing, free-association techniques, survey-based reconstruction and attitudes, critical incident techniques, loud-thinking protocols, experience sampling and self-tracking methods, ecological momentary assessment, self-confrontation interviewing, and 1st person situated video methods, and auto-ethnography and the 'quantified self'. Many new techniques are mobile and adaptable to capture the fluid nature of mental and emotional states and processes. Miniature mobile devices for sound and video recording promise to overcome the bottlenecks that have hitherto plagued intensive and continuous introspection-based methods.

Learning Outcomes:

Students on this course will

- 1) appreciate the long past, and the short history of introspection-based methods;
- 2) be familiar with a range of techniques of collecting introspective data;
- 3) know the problems of introspection-based methods and how different methods try to overcome them;
- 4) gain practical skills with modern introspection-based methods.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: A complete reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

PhD students taking this course will be assessed on the basis of a small Research Project using an introspective method (3000 words).

MY530 Advanced Qualitative Research Workshops

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elena Gonzalez-Polledo COL 7.06

Availability: Research students who are undertaking projects using qualitative methods.

Pre-requisites: Some prior training in qualitative methods (eg: MY400 and MY421 or equivalent). Students who have no prior training in qualitative methods should consider taking MY521M or MY521L.

Course content: MY530 is a series of workshop modules that provide hands-on, in-depth and advanced training for specific methodologies of qualitative data collection, analytic techniques and research design issues. Research students can sign up to as many workshops as they wish. The programme includes topics such as in-depth interviews, focus groups, ethnography and participant observation, narrative interviewing and analysis, visual methods, classical content analysis, thematic analysis, etc. Each workshop consists of two sessions of two hours. The second session is practical. These interdisciplinary sessions provide a space for students to develop advanced methodological skills and exchange ideas with peers.

Teaching: Sessions to be held throughout the year, beginning in week 8 of MT and continuing throughout LT; Participants sign up via MOODLE.

Indicative reading: Each session will provide its own recommended reading list, available on Moodle.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY551 Half Unit Introduction to Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale Col.8.10 and Prof Jonathan Jackson Col.8.05

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Course content: An intensive introduction to quantitative data analysis in the social sciences. The course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical estimation and inference. At the end of the course students should be able to carry out univariate and bi-variate data analysis and have an appreciation of multiple linear regression. The computer classes give hands-on training in the application of statistical techniques to real social science research problems using the SPSS computer package (no prior knowledge of SPSS is necessary).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of the term. This course is given twice per session, starting in the first week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY551M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY551L which is taught in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the weekly computer classes can be submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online and can be purchased as a hard copy. Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data. Pearson Education. Or Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. Pearson Education (note that the second book is more advanced and is particularly useful if you are planning to take MY551 and MY552).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MY552 Half Unit Applied Regression Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale Col.8.10 and Prof Kenneth Benoit Col.8.11

Availability: Research students where programme regulations allow. Students are required to have completed MY451, MY551 or an equivalent level statistics course.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed CP-MY451 and Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY551). Students are required to have completed MY451, MY551 or an equivalent level statistics course.

Course content: The course is designed for students with a good working knowledge of elementary descriptive statistics; sampling distributions; one and two sample tests for means and proportions; correlation and the linear regression model with one or more predictor variables. The course is concerned with deepening the understanding of the generalized linear model and its application to social science data. The main topics covered are linear regression modelling and binary, multinomial and ordinal logistic regression. Class exercises and homework will be carried out using the Stata or SPSS package, according to the students choice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the first week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY552M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY552L which is taught in Lent Term.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Class exercises and homework will be carried out using the Stata or SPSS package, according to the student's choice.

Indicative reading: A Agresti & B Finlay, Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. A course pack will be available for download online and can be purchased as a hard copy. Additional reading will be recommended.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

A two-hour open book unseen examination in ST.

MY554 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Applied Statistical Computing using R

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL.8.10

Availability: This course is available to all research students.

The course is also available to taught masters students with different assessment, as MY454.

Pre-requisites: Students must have taken Applied Regression Analysis (MY452) or an equivalent intermediate regression course.

Course content: This course will cover basic statistical programming for social science research as well as several associated data analysis methods. Programming topics include basic programming, data structures, optimisation, and simulation. Applied statistical topics include nonparametric density estimation and regression, additive models, cross-validation, the bootstrap, and permutation/randomisation inference. Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets in the LT.

Each problem set is associated with a computer classes, and may be submitted for marking and feedback.

Indicative reading: Keele, L. Semiparametric Regression for the Social Sciences. Matloff, N. The Art of R Programming. Shalizi, CR. Advanced Data Analysis from an Elementary Point of View.

Assessment: Coursework (100%) in the ST.

A single piece of coursework (100%) in the ST applying the methods covered in the course to a topic in the area of the student's research. The topic and scope of the assignment will be developed in discussion with the teacher responsible for the course during LT.

MY555 Half Unit Multivariate Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson Col.8.05

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites:

The course will assume a knowledge of standard linear regression models, to the level covered in MY452/MY552 (Applied Regression Analysis)

Course content: An introduction to the application of modern multivariate methods used in the social sciences, with particular focus on latent variable models for continuous observed variables, and their application to questions of measurement in the social sciences. At least the following topics will be covered: principal components analysis, exploratory factor analysis, confirmatory factor analysis and structural equation models. In addition, a selection from the following topics will be covered: cluster analysis, correspondence analysis, multidimensional scaling, latent class models, latent trait models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki ; J I Galbraith (2008) Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data (Second Edition).

Assessment: Research project (100%).

Research paper 25-30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 3,000-4,000 words, answering a set of questions by applying multivariate analyses to some data (100%).

MY556 Half Unit Survey Methodology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson COL8.05

Availability: This course is available to all Research students.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of basic descriptive and inferential statistics, to the level of MY452/MY552 or equivalent. MY556 can also be taken in parallel with MY452L/MY552L. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400/MY500 or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the methodology of the design and analysis of social surveys. It is intended both for students who plan to design and collect their own surveys, and for those who need to understand and use data from existing large-scale surveys.

Topics covered include basic ideas of target populations, survey estimation and inference, sampling error and nonsampling error; sample design and sampling theory; methods of data collection; survey interviewing; cognitive processes in answering survey questions; design and evaluation of survey questions; nonresponse error and imputation for item nonresponse; survey weights; analysis of data from complex surveys; accessing, preparing and working with secondary data from existing social surveys. The course includes computer classes, using the statistical computer package Stata; no previous knowledge of Stata is required.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be no lectures or seminars in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the seminars can be submitted for marking

Indicative reading: Groves, R M, Fowler, F J, Couper, M P, Lepkowski, J M, Singer, E, and Tourangeau, R (2009). Survey Methodology (2nd ed.). Wiley.

Assessment: Research project (100%).

Research paper of 25-30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 3,000-4,000 words, reporting the data analysis of a given research question and data set (100%).

MY557 Half Unit Casual Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr David Hendry

Availability: Available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY552), Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400) and Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY500).

Knowledge of multiple linear regression and some familiarity with generalised linear models, to the level of MY452/MY552 or equivalent. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400/MY500 or equivalent Course content: This course provides an introduction to statistical methods used for causal inference in the social sciences. Using the potential outcomes framework of causality, topics covered include research designs such as randomized experiments and observational studies. We explore the impact of noncompliance in randomized experiments, as well as nonignorable treatment assignment in observational studies. To analyze these research designs, the methods covered include matching, instrumental variables, difference-in-difference, and regression discontinuity. Examples are drawn from different social sciences. The course includes computer classes, where standard statistical computer packages (Stata or R) are used for computation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: Rosenbaum, PR. (2010). Design of Observational Studies. Springer; Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J.-S. (2009). Mostly Harmless Econometrics. Princeton University Press.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

MY559 Half Unit Not available in 2016/17 Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Quantitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kenneth Benoit Col.8.11

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites:

The course will assume knowledge of linear and logistic regression models, to the level covered in MY452.

Course content: The course surveys methods for systematically extracting quantitative information from text for social scientific purposes, starting with classical content analysis and dictionary-based methods, to classification methods, and state-of-the-art scaling methods and topic models for estimating quantities from text using statistical techniques. The course lays a theoretical foundation for text analysis but mainly takes a very practical and applied approach, so that students learn how to apply these methods in actual research. The common focus across all methods is that they can all be reduced to a three-step process: first, identifying texts and units of texts for analysis; second, extracting from the texts quantitatively measured features - such as coded content categories, word counts, word types, dictionary counts, or parts of speech - and converting these into a quantitative matrix; and third, using quantitative or statistical methods to analyse this matrix in order to generate inferences about the texts or their authors. The course systematically surveys these methods in a logical progression, with a practical, hands-on approach where each technique will be applied using appropriate software to real texts.

Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: Benoit, Kenneth and Paul Nulty. Quantitative Text Analysis Using R. (in progress). <http://kbenoit.github.io/quanteda/>. Grimmer, Justin and Brandon M. Stewart. 2013. Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

MY560

Workshop in Advanced Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson

Availability: MY560 is a series of workshops available to any post-graduate student who signs up via Moodle.

Course content: It is intended to provide research students with an introduction to specific advanced research methods and hands-on training in the use of these tools.

Teaching: One-day introductory workshops consisting of a morning lecture and afternoon computer session during the MT, LT and ST. Participants will sign up via MOODLE.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY565 Half Unit

Intermediate Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson COL8.05

Availability: This course is available to all research students where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Participants should have studied introductory statistics or quantitative methods before, up to an introduction to descriptive statistics and basic statistical inference. Students with no previous studies in quantitative analysis should take instead Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY451).

Because of the overlaps between these courses, it is not possible to take both this course and either of Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY451) or Applied Regression Analysis (MY452) as assessed courses.

Course content: The course is intended for students with some (even if limited) previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers first a review of the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical inference, in the context of the analysis of two-way contingency tables and comparisons of means between two groups. The main topic of the course is linear regression modelling and related methods, including scatterplots, correlation, simple and multiple linear regression, and analysis of variance and covariance. An introduction to binary logistic regression modelling is also included. The computer classes give hands-on training in the application of these statistical techniques. Class exercises and homework are carried out using the Stata or SPSS package, according to the student's choice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6. On-line quizzes will be provided on Moodle to aid revision during the reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 exercises in the MT.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online and for purchase as a hard copy. Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data, and Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This is an open-book unseen examination.

MY591

Computing Packages for Applied Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kenneth Benoit COL8.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods (Social Policy). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. For students who intend to use qualitative and quantitative computer packages in their research.

Course content: It is intended to provide research students with an appreciation of various computer packages through introduction and hands-on training in the use of these tools.

Teaching: 63 hours of seminars in the MT. 75 hours of seminars in the LT. 30 hours of seminars in the ST.

Half-day introductory training courses on computer packages such as, Nvivo, ALCESTE, QDA Miner/Wordstat/Simstat, Stata and SPSS during the MT and LT. Participants will sign up via MOODLE.

Formative coursework: NA.

Indicative reading: R Tesch, Qualitative Research; Analysis Types and Software Tools (1990); N G Fielding; R M Lee, Computer Analysis; Qualitative Research (Sage, 1998); Roberts CW (1997) Textanalysis for the Social Sciences, Mahwah, Lawrence Erlbaum Ass.; Popping, R (2000) Computer-assisted Text Analysis, London, Sage, E A Weitzman ; M B Miles, Computer Programs for Qualitative Data Analysis (Sage, 1995).

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY592

Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Maria Bell R102

Maria Bell (Course Convenor), Academic Support Librarian; Dr Jane Secker, Copyright and Digital Literacy Advisor, Centre for Learning Technology; Clive Wilson, Academic Support Librarian.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

First and second year research students and MSc Social Research Methods students.

Course content: MY592 is a six week programme of 2 hour workshops which aims to develop students' research skills and introduce the essential sources and tools when undertaking research, and the skills required to use them. It is run by the Library and Centre for Learning Technology and is ideal for research students undertaking an extensive literature search and review. Students receive detailed advice on the most appropriate Library resources for their research topics. Materials, online activities and assessment will be available in Moodle to support the teaching.

Teaching: 24 hours of seminars in the MT. 24 hours of seminars in the LT.

Six two hour classes will be held weekly, and students are expected to attend all sessions in order to develop their information literacy skills. MY592 will run in both the Michaelmas and Lent terms and in the Summer term subject to demand. Dates and times will be advertised at the start of each term. Note that not all sessions will last for 2 hours but this will allow for individual contact time at the end of classes with class tutors.

If you only wish to attend an individual workshop, consult the Training classes offered by the Library and the Centre for Learning Technology on the LSE Training and Development System. Places on the entire programme can be booked using the LSE Training and Development System.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY599*Department of Methodology Seminar*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson Col.8.05 and Dr Alasdair Jones Col.8.12Availability: Open to all.Course content: Papers on topics of methodological interest will be presented by staff and visitors.Teaching: Meetings arranged as needed, taking place in COL.8.13 unless otherwise stated. Seminar dates, venues and speakers will be advertised on the Department of Methodology webpageAssessment: This course is non-examinable.PH500*Research Methods in Philosophy*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Richard BradleyAvailability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Course content: Topics in contemporary philosophy.Teaching: Seminars PH500 15 x two-hour (MT, LT, ST). Different members of the department will lead the seminar in each of the three terms.

A more detailed syllabus will be posted at the beginning of each term.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.PH501*Philosophical Problems Seminar*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Dennis and Prof Christian ListAvailability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.Course content: In this course, we will read and carefully discuss together a range of classic papers in contemporary analytic philosophy that might not otherwise be covered in LSE Philosophy Department courses. Topics are selected from metaphysics, the philosophy of mind and action, epistemology, and the philosophy of language. This list is illustrative.Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.Indicative reading: Specific readings will be announced in a detailed syllabus at the start of the term.Assessment: Four essays of 2,500-3,500 words each over the course of the two terms.PH502*Reasoning and Logic*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall LAK 3.02Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy and MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is, in general, only aimed at those students who have never taken a course in formal logic before. For such students the course is compulsory.

Course content: The course aims to give a precise formulation of correct deductive reasoning- of what it means for a sentence to follow from a set of other sentences taken as premises- and to investigate on this basis other important logical notions such as that of consistency. The course will also investigate how these formal principles are of use in analysing informal argumentation.

Mathematicians lay down certain axioms and establish theorems by deducing them as consequences of the axioms; scientists postulate certain theories and test them by deducing certain consequences from them that can be checked experimentally; ordinary reasoners try to win (intellectual) arguments by showing that some position that they favour follows deductively from assumptions that everyone accepts. This course studies what exactly is involved in correct deductive reasoning. It begins by considering certain very simple inferences that can be formalized in a system called propositional logic. The semantic notion of deductive validity is developed for this system and the truth table, “no counterexample” and tree methods for establishing validity in propositional logic are introduced. The connections between validity and other important logical notions such as equivalence, consistency and independence are precisely detailed. Some simple results about propositional logic are proved. More complex inferences require a system called (first order) predicate logic. The course shows how to formalize some ordinary informal sentences (and therefore ordinary informal inferences) in predicate logic; and introduces methods for establishing the validity or invalidity of predicate logic inferences: both a system based on rules of proof and one based on the tree method will be studied. Again the relationships between validity of inference, on the one hand, and the notions of the logical equivalence of two sentences, the consistency of a set of sentences or the independence of one sentence from a set of sentences, on the other, are investigated for the more powerful system of predicate logic. Both the systems that we shall study - of propositional and predicate logic - are entirely formal. Although we shall emphasize how some especially simple ordinary arguments can be ‘captured’ within such systems, it is of course true that ‘ordinary reasoners’ do not explicitly employ such formal techniques. How then, if at all, can formal logic help in assessing ordinary deductive reasoning in science, social science and elsewhere?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of lectures in the LT.

Appropriate back-up teaching will be arranged with individual students.

Formative coursework: Regular exercises will be set on the basis of the material covered in lectures; students are required to complete these exercises and to be ready to present and discuss answers in the associated seminar, where applications of formal logic to informal reasoning will also be investigated.Indicative reading: Extensive lecture notes will be provided covering all aspects of the course. Students will however find it useful to consult C Howson, Logic with Trees. This text concentrates exclusively on the method of trees, while the lecture also introduces other equivalent methods.Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.PH551*Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences*This information is for the 2016/17 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts LAK.5.03Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.Course content: This is a special topics course on the philosophy of physics. It meets weekly, and has two components.

The first component (roughly half the meetings) will consist in lectures on the philosophy of physics. In Michaelmas Term, the topic will be an introduction to the foundations of quantum mechanics, accessible to anyone with a background in probability theory and vector spaces. In Lent Term, we will develop a further advanced topic on the philosophy of quantum theory. Some exercises will be provided for these meetings.

The remaining component will consist in attending cutting-edge lectures by professional philosophers of physics, and in some cases by other philosophers of science. These consist in the Sigma Club and the BPS lectures on Monday evenings. Background readings to prepare students for these lectures as well as essay topics will sometimes be suggested.

Together this amounts to roughly 10 meetings in Michaelmas Term and 10 meetings in Lent Term. In the summer term there will be roughly 8 meetings. Half will discuss readings that students may wish to present, and the other half will be Sigma Club and BSPS lectures. Details about the meetings will be provided on Moodle, and information about the Sigma Club and BSPS lecture series can be found on the LSE Philosophy homepage under the "Events" heading.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 12 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are invited to write an essay on any topic discussed in these meetings, to submit before the last week of term for comments.

PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley LAK2.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Philosophical issues in economics and the social sciences.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write one essay per term and to give seminar presentations.

PS950 Current Research in Social Psychology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Professor Catherine Campbell, QUE.3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Social Psychology. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to academic staff and research students only.

Course content: Weekly seminars including plenary and specialist sessions in Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. Seminars for research students in: Health, Community and Development; Social and Cultural Psychology; Organisational and Social Psychology; Social and Public Communication.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 14 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: Non-examinable.

PS960 Classical Texts in Social Psychology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer COL.8.04 and Prof Sandra Jovchelovitch QUE.3.25

Course content: To maintain awareness of classical monographical studies of social psychology, its psychological as well as its sociological tradition. To provide a forum for entire textual reading and contextual discussions of contributions by J Vygotsky, K Piaget, Lewin, G H Mead, LeBon, McDougall, F Bartlett, S Freud, E Goffman, Ichheiser, Buehler and others.

Indicative reading: R M Farr, The Roots of Modern Social Psychology, Blackwell, 1996. Further readings will be suggested at the start of the seminar.

Assessment: Non-examinable.

SA550 Research Student Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Prof Anne West OLD1.16 and Prof Jane Lewis OLD1.18.

Availability: For all MPhil/PhD students in the Department of Social Policy.

Course content: This course provides background sessions for MPhil/PhD students in their first year of study. It also provides the forum in which first year full-time and second year part-time MPhil/PhD students must present their work in advance of submitting their major review documents.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

SO500 Research Class for MPhil Students

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter STC S217

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The research seminar aims to provide students with a conceptual and practical framework within which to think through planning their research. This includes devising research questions, how to do a literature review, selecting appropriate methods for research, linking theory and practices, ethical issues and writing. The course will comprise workshops and student presentations. By the end of the course students should be able to formulate clear aims and methods for their own research. All first year MPhil students must attend.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Reading weeks: week 6 (MT) and week 6 (LT).

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

5,000 word paper on the 'Aims and Methods' of the thesis, and a viva voce examination. For full-time students, three copies of this typed and paginated essay must be submitted to the Sociology Administration Office, Room S116, by the first Friday in May. Satisfactory completion of the 'Aims and Methods' paper, and the viva are necessary in order to proceed to the next stage of the course. Part-time students may elect to be evaluated in May or September of their first year or May of their second year.

SO501 Research Students' Seminar

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lisa McKenzie STC S212

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Only available to sociology research students in the second and subsequent years of their MPhil/PhD.

Course content: Seminars will discuss some recent influential or prize-winning articles or books in a number of areas of sociological endeavour. The purpose of the seminars is to introduce research students to what sociologists internationally consider to be leading examples of contemporary research, and to ensure that MPhil/PhD students graduating from the department have a chance to acquire a command of debates beyond the special expertise they develop in their own area of research. The seminars will begin with a thirty minute student presentation on the article or book in question, followed by discussion. On occasion, an academic with expertise in that area may be invited to act as a respondent. In addition, there will be a special day seminar devoted to helping those students who are preparing for their upgrade viva. This will provide them with an opportunity to present and defend a significant aspect of their argument.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

Fortnightly seminars in the MT and LT for all sociology research students in their second and subsequent years. For those students preparing for their upgrade viva there will also be a special day seminar usually in ST.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment, but participants are asked to present papers, read the work of selected authors, and contribute to discussion.

SO511

Research Seminar in Political Sociology

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Robin Archer, STC S105

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

MPhil/PhD students whose research is in the field of political sociology. Students from all departments are welcome.

Course content: Political sociologists seek to understand fundamental political phenomenon by studying them in their social context. This seminar seeks to provide a small, friendly forum in which research students can discuss important recent publications and debates in this field. It often spends a number of weeks reading recent prize-winning books and articles in the field, and sometimes examines a topical theme for part of a term. There are also occasional guest lectures. In recent years, for example, there were lectures by Michael Mann (UCLA) on the rise and fall of neo-liberalism. Theda Skocpol (Harvard) on the future of American politics, and Andreas Wimmer (Princeton) on ethnic conflict and state formation. The seminar also provides an opportunity to develop individual research projects. In each seminar, a twenty or thirty minute presentation is followed by discussion.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST. Fortnightly in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A short list of some important recent books and articles that could be discussed in the seminar will be suggested at the beginning of the year, and the seminar is always open to suggestions from participants. Readings continually change, but, for the purposes of illustration, recent seminars have discussed global anti-capitalism, suicide missions and the new imperialism, Christianity and American democracy, the welfare state, the politics of free markets, labour protest in China, street politics in Egypt, boycotts, and the crisis of capitalism.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment but participants are asked to present papers, contribute to discussion and read the work of selected scholars in the course of the session.

SO521 Not available in 2016/17

Research Seminar on Cities and Space

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francine Tonkiss STC 219

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For MPhil/PhD students doing research on urban and spatial issues in the Cities Programme/Department of Sociology. If space is available, other graduate students may apply.

Course content: This graduate seminar is based on discussion of key readings in the fields of urban social theory and spatial analysis. It also provides a forum for discussion of research issues relating to the study of cities and space

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

One two-hour seminar every two weeks in the MT and LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed

ST501 Half Unit

Multilevel Modelling

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Irini Moustaki COL 6.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Statistics.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and basic statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to multilevel modelling with applications in social research. This course deals with the analysis of data from hierarchically structured populations (e.g., students nested within schools, individuals nested within households or geographical areas) and longitudinal data (eg repeated measurements of individuals in a panel survey). Multilevel (random-effects) extensions of standard statistical techniques, including multiple linear regression and logistic regression, will be considered. The course will have an applied emphasis with computer sessions using appropriate software (e.g., Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 exercises in the LT.

Formative coursework is assigned fortnightly and returned to students with comments/feedback via Moodle before the lab sessions

Indicative reading: T. Snijders & R Bosker Multilevel Analysis: an Introduction to Basic and Advanced Multilevel Modelling, Sage (2011, 2nd edition). S Rabe-Hesketh & A Skrondal, Multilevel and Longitudinal Modeling using Stata, (Third Edition), Volume I: Continuous responses (plus Chapter 10 from Volume II, which is available free on the publisher's website). Stata Press (2012). Also recommended are: A Skrondal & S Rabe-Hesketh, Generalized Latent Variable Modeling: Multilevel, Longitudinal and Structural Equation Models, Chapman & Hall (2004); H Goldstein, Multilevel Statistical Models, Arnold (2003); S W Raudenbush & A S Bryk, Hierarchical Linear Models: Applications and Data Analysis Methods, Sage (2002); G Verbeke & G Molenberghs, Linear Mixed Models for Longitudinal Data, Springer (2000); E Demidenko, Mixed Models, Wiley (2004).

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

Assessment is by 100% coursework given to students in week 8 of the course.

ST542 Half Unit

Longitudinal Data Analysis

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fiona Steele COL 7.08

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Statistics.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and basic statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to methods for the analysis of repeated measures data, including continuous and binary outcomes. Topics include: longitudinal study designs, (random effects) growth curve models, marginal models, dynamic (autoregressive) models, latent class models, and multiprocess models for multivariate outcomes. The course will have an applied emphasis with weekly computer classes using appropriate software (e.g. Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be a reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 exercises in the LT.

Formative assessment is based on data analysis problems that require the use of the statistical software to apply the statistical techniques taught in the lectures and computer classes. Coursework is given out to students every two weeks and returned with feedback and comments.

Indicative reading: Hedeker D, Gibbons RD. Longitudinal Data Analysis. Hoboken, New Jersey: John Wiley & Sons, Inc. (2006). Rabe-Hesketh S, Skrondal A. This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Colleen McKenna, Mark Baltovic, Dr Esther Saxey

Pre-requisites: Participants are required to be teaching for a minimum of 20 hours during the academic year in which they are enrolled.

Course content: This is a course tailored for those working as GTAs at LSE. Its purpose is to develop participants' confidence in leading classes and seminars and assessing student work. The course also enables participants to reflect on their teaching and to explore diverse ways of gathering feedback from peers and students.

The programme comprises 3 modules:

- small group teaching
- student learning
- evaluating teaching

Participants will develop a portfolio of written tasks and reflections; all formative and summative assignments will be incorporated into the portfolio which is submitted at the end of the programme.

Successful participants will be awarded the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education - Associate level and are eligible for Associate Fellowship of the Higher Education Academy (HEA).

Teaching: 12 hours of workshops in the MT. 12 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of workshops in the ST.

Teaching for this course will take the form of 2-hour, interactive workshops. Moodle will also be used as a learning environment.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework per module.

There are formative feedback points for each of the summative assignments.

Additionally, there are formative reflections at both the start and finish of the programme. These formative reflections, combined with the coversheets on the 3 summative essays, make up the learning log element of the course and contribute to the final portfolio submission. Throughout the formative texts are designed to encourage a reflexive approach to academic practice.

Essay (33%, 2500 words) in the LT and ST.

This course is assessed entirely by coursework - formative and summative. There are no exams.

All assignments are assessed on a Complete/Not Yet Complete basis, and all assessments are viewed as developmental opportunities.

Participants are offered detailed feedback for all assignments and, where appropriate, they have the option of developing assignments further based on feedback from the teaching team.

The assignments include both essay-style written texts and reflective pieces. Additionally, there are some opportunities for choice within the assessment diet. For example, for module 1, participants can select either a reflective task plus a poster OR a 2500 written assignment.

TC502 2.0 Units Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education Part 2 (Full Level)

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Colleen McKenna, Dr Claire Gordon

Pre-requisites: Participants are required to have completed either the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education for Part 1 (Associate Level)

or

the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education for Career Track before enrolling on the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education Part 2 (Full Level).

Course content: This course builds upon the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education (Part 1) and offers participants an opportunity to explore and critique assessment and feedback practices and to design (or re-design) a course in their discipline drawing on principles of constructive alignment among other pedagogical approaches.

The programme comprises 2 modules:

- assessment and feedback, and
- course design.

Participants who have already completed the course design module on the PG Cert HE (Career Track TC503) can select an optional, enquiry-based module.

Successful participants will be awarded the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education - Full level and are eligible for full fellowship of the Higher Education Academy (HEA).

Teaching: 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 10 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of workshops in the ST.

Teaching for this course will take the form of interactive workshops. The majority of these will be 2 hours long; however, there will be a full day workshop on course design in Lent Term. Moodle will also be used as a learning environment.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT, 1 piece of coursework in the ST and 1 presentation in the LT or ST.

There are formative feedback points for each of the summative assignments.

Additionally, there are formative reflections at both the start and finish of the programme. These formative reflections, combined with the coversheets on the 2 summative essays, make up the learning log element of the course and contribute to the final portfolio submission. Throughout the formative pieces are designed to encourage a reflexive approach to academic practice.

TC503 2.0 Units Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education Career Track

This information is for the 2016/17 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Gordon

Availability: New career track members of faculty with fewer than three years' teaching experience in higher education and who do not hold an equivalent teacher development qualification have been required since 2009 to complete the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education before passing Interim Review. Faculty members with teaching responsibilities who have completed their PhD and have at least two to three years' teaching experience may also take this programme.

Pre-requisites: Participants will be career track academics at LSE

- generally assistant professors, assistant professorial lecturers and fellows. They should have teaching responsibilities in the year that they will be taking the PGCertHE.

Course content: This practice-based programme is tailored for academics teaching at LSE. It is designed to develop participants' confidence in leading lectures, classes and seminars and in assessing student work. The programme also enables participants to reflect on their teaching and to explore diverse ways of gathering feedback on their practice from peers and students. The programme culminates in a course design project.

The programme comprises 3 modules:

- teaching in our disciplines
- evaluating teaching
- course design

The programme is assessed by a portfolio of coursework including

- a set of short written tasks on disciplinary teaching and student learning;
- a short project on evaluating teaching;
- the design of a new course;
- two teaching observations;
- a reflective learning log.

Participants are strongly encouraged to draw on their previous teaching experience both during discussions and in their assignments and to consider how this informs their practice at LSE. Successful participants will be awarded the Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education - and are eligible for fellowship of the Higher Education Academy (HEA).

Teaching: 6 hours of workshops in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the LT. 6 hours of workshops in the ST.

Teaching for this course will take the form of interactive workshops.

Moodle will also be used as a learning environment.

Additionally, participants have the opportunity to attend regular workshops offered as part of LSE's Academic Development Programme lse.ac.uk/intranet/LSEServices/TLC/academicStaff/AcademicDevelopmentProgramme.aspx which explore different aspects of teaching and learning linked to assignments.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT, 1 piece of coursework in the LT, 1 piece of coursework in the ST and 1 presentation in the LT or ST. There are formative feedback points for each of the summative assignments.

Additionally, there are formative reflections at both the start and finish of the programme. These formative reflections, combined with the coversheets on the summative essays, make up the learning log element of the course and contribute to the final portfolio submission. Finally, participants present their course design work and receive formative feedback from both members of the PGCertHE teaching team and peers.

Throughout, the formative pieces are designed to encourage a reflexive approach to academic practice.
