LSE PEER SUPPORTERS

Heya! I'm Noor, I'm a second-year Finance student who's always down for a chat. I love a good restaurant/cafe, game, movie and book, especially if it's mystery or horror. During my first year I made a lot of mistakes, be it educational, social or career-related. I managed to turn things around as the year went on and I realized there was nothing wrong with asking for help. I hope I can give back the same help and guidance I received and I'm excited to get to know you.

Hi everyone, I'm Hazal! I'm a part-time Master's student in Anthropology and Development at LSE, currently in my second and final year. Alongside my studies, I work as an Account Manager for a company in North London, and I've been living in London for around seven years. I'm originally from Turkey. I have a deep passion for sports - these days, I enjoy tennis and Pilates. In the past, I ran half-marathons to raise money for charity and practised Muay Thai for two years in Turkey. I'm also interested in queer and feminist political theory, activism, and social rights. I became a Peer Supporter because I know how helpful it can be to have someone simply listen when you feel stuck. I hope to be a friendly first point of contact and help fellow students find the support they need.

Hi! My name is Zayna and I am a third year Philosophy and Economics student. In my free time, I adore reading philosophy as well as poetry, drawing portraits and going to the gym. I fully understand that life at LSE can be overwhelming, and I'm here to help. If you ever need anyone to talk to about any worries you have, feel free to reach out!

LSE Student Wellbeing Service

LSE PEER SUPPORTERS

Hi!! I'm Shayna and I'm a second year LLB Law student. I love poetry, both spoken word and written, crochet, reading, and badminton/ tennis! I also love to learn things about new disciplines, and I enjoy reading up on things in my spare time. LSE is by no means an easy feat. When trying to adjust to independent living and university life whilst balancing academics it can all feel a bit daunting, especially when you include your personal life and whatever is thrown at you on that end, but there are always people you can reach out to in times of need! If you ever just need a friendly face, or a break from the pace of university, I would be more than happy to meet up, wind down, and give any support or company you need during your time at LSE!

Hello! My name is Annabel and I am currently a fourth year studying Language, Culture & Society. I am from Chicago and love songwriting and everything music and dance parties! I know just how overwhelming university life can be, especially having moved halfway across the world alone twice, and how difficult it can be to balance everything at once, while making the most of your uni experience. If you ever need someone to talk through your worries or wonders, I am here to support you!

Hello! I'm Samuel, a third-year BSc Economics student from Hertfordshire. I love playing racket sports, dabbling in the lore of my favourite sci-fi franchises, and reading especially long, rich novels. I'm currently making my way through Tolstoy's War and Peace — that should keep me busy for a while! As someone with caring responsibilities, I understand how challenging it can be to balance the demands and opportunities that characterise university life with other personal commitments. As such, I recognise that simply having someone to talk openly and freely with can make all the difference. If you ever want to chat, talk things through or just need someone to listen, please don't hesitate to reach out!

LSE Student Wellbeing Service

LSE PEER SUPPORTERS

Hi, I'm Sama, a second year Master of Public Administration student from Azerbaijan. In my free time, I enjoy playing tennis, dancing and running. Moving abroad for the first time and adjusting to living independently and studying in a new academic environment was not always easy for me. Everything felt overwhelming and I learned how much it can help to have someone to talk to. If you ever feel like talking to someone about university, life in London or anything on your mind, I am always happy to listen.

Hi! I'm Tara, a third-year Geography student from London. I love travelling, going to see musicals and live music and playing tennis! I know first-hand that university life can be overwhelming, especially joining as a commuter student, but you're never alone. I am always happy to go for a coffee or a walk, or just simply be a friendly face on campus. Feel free to reach out anytime!

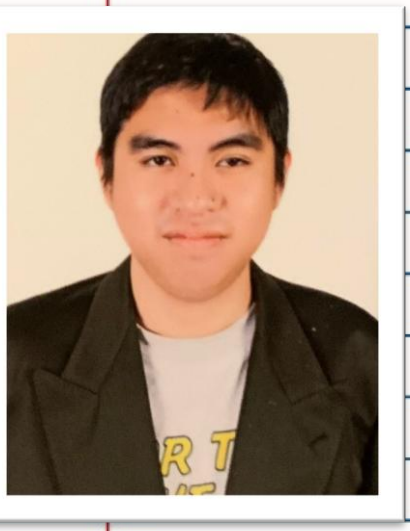

Hey! I'm Dasha, a third-year Economics student from Ukraine. I enjoy going to the gym, swimming, travelling, and learning about econometrics and environmental economics. I've also attended more than a dozen theatre shows over the past year, so if you ever need a recommendation, you know who to ask! ;)

Having been a first-year student myself, I understand how challenging it can be to adjust to everything that comes with university — from keeping up academically to finding your own circle of friends and settling into a new environment. So if you ever need a listening ear, some reassurance, or just a friendly conversation, please don't hesitate to reach out. I know from experience that sometimes simply talking to someone who understands what you're going through can make all the difference. Remember, you are not alone!

LSE Student Wellbeing Service

LSE PEER SUPPORTERS

Hello there! My name is Chiang Loong Tan and I am a second year law undergraduate who was born and bred in Malaysia. I am a reader at heart, enthralled by literary fiction and singularly devoted to murder mysteries. Beyond immersing myself in books, I have been a train enthusiast ever since I stepped foot on the London Underground. Above all, I find engaging in conversations illuminating, and I look forward to discussing virtually any topic of interest with you.

As an international student, I understand first hand the homesickness and culture shock which many have experienced. The widespread expectation to dedicate ample time to one's academic endeavours whilst partaking in extracurricular activities and internship schemes may also feel daunting. If you ever desire to speak to someone for any reason, I am more than willing to lend an ear and alleviate your worries .

Hi! I'm Anisha, a second-year BSc Psychological and Behavioural Science student from Singapore. I love going out with my friends, hitting the gym, and spontaneously travelling around the world (bonus points if there's a good caramel latte involved).

University is such an exciting chapter, but sometimes it comes with its own quiet, overwhelming moments too. I know firsthand how much it helps to find people who've been through the same experiences, and I'd love to be that same consistent, judgement-free presence for you. So please don't hesitate to reach out, whatever's on your mind. It's completely okay to not have it all figured out — we're all only human, carrying big feelings and figuring things out as we go. If you ever just need to escape for a bit, I'm more than happy to listen :)

LSE Student Wellbeing Service

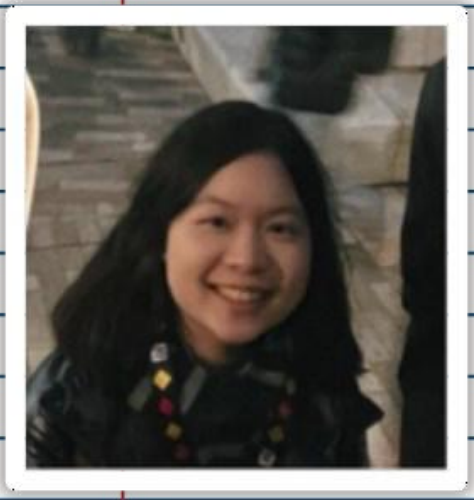

LSE PEER SUPPORTERS

Hi! I'm Dinuli, a final year Economics student from Sri Lanka. In my free time, I enjoy having movie nights with friends and going on spontaneous adventures across the city.

Life at LSE can sometimes be overwhelming, especially when trying to adjust to a new environment, balancing your academic and social life throughout the year or even just managing your personal worries.

Accessing support is always a great way to start so feel free to reach out at any time for a chat- I would love to help you through your university experience!

Hi, I'm Oliver, a final year Environment and Sustainable Development with Economics student from China.

I came to LSE with a science background and zero training in academic writing, but over time, I found my voice through questions and conversations. As an international student, I know how hard it can be to settle into a new country and navigate life at LSE academically, socially, and emotionally.

LSE Student Wellbeing Service