Brief Description of Institution

The London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) is a world-leading social science university based in the heart of London. Founded in 1895, LSE was established on the belief that knowledge can help build a better society, a mission reflected in its motto, rerum cognoscere causas ("to know the causes of things"). LSE is a global community of students, academics and alumni, with an international outlook and partnerships spanning Europe, Africa, the Americas and Asia. As a member of the Russell Group and CIVICA, the European University of Social Sciences, LSE delivers world-class teaching and research across the social sciences. Its research addresses major global challenges and informs public policy, business and society, while its graduates go on to leadership roles in governments, international organisations, academia and industry worldwide.
