LSE100 is taken by all students in the Lent Term of Year 1 and the Michaelmas Term of Year 2. The course is compulsory but does not affect the final degree classification.
* In Year 1 students choose between AC102 and AC103, on financial and management accounting respectively. Students MUST do ONE of these courses in Year 1; should they wish, they MAY choose to do the other in their second or third year as an option. All students are required to attend the first AC100 lecture to get an overview of the topics to be covered in each course. Students wishing to continue their studies with advanced financial accounting (AC330) in the second or third year should be advised to take AC102 in the first year. Students wishing to continue with advanced management accounting (e.g. AC211, AC310) in the second and third year should be advised to take AC103 in the first year. Should they wish to do both AC102 and AC103 in the course of their degree programme, it is recommended that they opt for the financial accounting unit (AC102) in the first year to ease their way through the management accounting and financial management unit (AC103).

Notes § Course allocation dependant on Economics A-level or equivalent background. See course guides for further information.
LSE100 is taken by all students in the Lent Term of Year 1 and the Michaelmas Term of Year 2. The course is compulsory but does not affect the final degree classification.

Outside options

Outside options for first year students

Where the regulations refer to an approved paper taught outside the department, this means that you may take any course in a subject other than the principal subject(s) of your degree, subject to any restrictions listed in the Course Guides. If your degree is for joint honours (e.g., Philosophy and Economics) or is a major/minor combination (e.g., Geography with Economics), a course outside the department means a course taught in any department other than the two named in the title of your degree. The home department of each course is indicated by the first two letters in its code.

Please note that some course combinations are not allowed. Please see the Mutually Exclusive options list below.

The courses available for this purpose in your first year are:

AC211
Managerial Accounting

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tommaso Palermo KSW 3.07 and Mr Per Ahblom OLD 3.13
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Please seek permission from the Accounting Department tutor. This course is also an option for students taking the Diploma in Accounting and Finance.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Management Accounting and Financial Management (AC103) or Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management (AC104).
Course content: The course analyses the roles and uses of management accounting practices in contemporary organisations and enterprises. Management accounting is extensively involved in the planning, coordination and control of complex organisations and networks of organisations competing on a global scale. The course explores key management accounting concepts and tools, and their economic, strategic, behavioural and organisational underpinnings
The course is organised around four topics.
Management Accounting for Decision Making examines how management accounting information can be used in the context of a variety of short- and long-term decision problems, ranging from costing to pricing, outsourcing and investment appraisal.
Management Accounting and Strategy looks at management accounting change and at the emerging role of management accounting in strategy making.
Management Accounting and Organisational Control examines intra-organisational planning and control issues, focusing on how managerial action is guided by practices such as budgeting, variance analysis and transfer pricing.
Performance Measurement addresses the use of financial and non-financial performance measures in complex organisational and managerial settings, with particular emphasis on their behavioural consequences and the limits of quantification.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a 2 hour revision lecture in week 11 of the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.
The lecture time in week 6 of the LT will be used to explain the rationales and requirements of a mandatory assignment (a case analysis) that will be carried out in the second half of the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to complete written assignments before each class. Three of these assignments, two in the MT and one in the LT, will be collected and graded by class teachers as part of formative coursework to provide feedback on analytical and writing skills ahead of the final exam. Course work may take the form of an essay, a case analysis or a numerical exercise and may also include in-class presentation and team-based work. Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during class, on written homework assignments, and during office hours.
Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists will be distributed before the first lecture of each module. A range of academic papers, professional reports and news articles will be used in the course. Illustrative texts and articles include: Bhimani A, Horngren CT, Datar SM and Rajan MV (2012), Management and cost accounting, 5th edition, FT/Prentice Hall; Shank JK (1996), Analysing technology investments – From NPV to strategic cost management, Management Accounting Research 7, 185 – 197; Van der Stede, WA and Palermo, T (2011), Scenario budgeting: Integrating risk and performance, Finance & Management 184(1), 10–13; Nocera, J (2009), Risk Mismanagement, New York Times, January 2nd; Hall, M (2010). Accounting information and managerial work. Accounting, Organizations and Society 35, 301-315.
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours and 15 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Case analysis (15%) and class participation (10%) in the LT.
The case analysis will require students to work in small groups. Class participation will be assessed based on students' engagement with course activities, including for example in-class discussions and class assignments.

AC310
Management Accounting, Financial Management and Organisational Control

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Nadine de Gannes, OLD 2.23
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management and UBSTWFI. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Available to students on other undergraduate/Diploma programmes with the permission of the Accounting Departmental Tutor.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Management Accounting and Financial Management (AC103) or Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management (AC104).
Course content: The course addresses contemporary issues in management accounting, financial management, and organisational control. The course consists of four modules, all of which are taught by faculty with specific expertise in the area. The exact composition of the course may vary from year to year, but issues which are typically addressed include financial controls, organisational structures, performance measurement and incentive systems, budgetary control and public-sector and non-profit financial management.

The Function of management control systems: The course starts with the study of the quintessential role of management control systems in decentralised organisations, with a focus on the measurement and evaluation of the performance of organisational entities and their managers. Focusing on financial control systems, this module analyses issues related to financial target setting (as part of organisations' planning and budgeting processes), performance measurement and evaluation, and the assignment of various forms of organisational rewards, such as bonuses and promotions.
Management accounting, budgets and behaviour: Building on the first module, this module focuses primarily on budgeting issues and on understanding how budgets impact employee behaviours and their decisions and actions. This module also discusses "beyond budgeting" and capital budgeting. This is done through the lens of different organisational theories, including contingency theory.
Accounting in non-governmental organisations: Many of the concepts from the prior two modules are then studied in the context of NGOs, including measuring the performance and effectiveness of NGOs, the use of 'business-like' management control and financial management systems (like budgets), the evaluation of programme efficiency and impact, and the accountability to donors and beneficiaries.
Accounting in the new public sector: The final module studies management accounting and financial management in the 'new public sector', including performance measurement, cost accounting, cost management and pricing; the roles of accounting controls in the health system reforms in the UK and elsewhere.
Teaching: The first half of MT will comprise 10 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes. The second half of MT, the module on 'Accounting in non-governmental organisations' is taught using a 'flipped-lecture' approach, with a series of on-line lectures, and five 2-hour classes. In LT, there will be 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes. Please note that there is no Reading Week in AC310 in either term.
Formative coursework: Case studies and applications will be used extensively. Students will be expected to present cases and contribute to in-class discussions. Students will also be expected to produce four written assignments; two in MT and two in LT. Assignment 2 in MT and Assignment 4 in LT will count towards the final mark in the course.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be distributed at the start of each Module of the course. Illustrative references include: Bhimani and Bromwich, Management Accounting: Retrospect and Prospect, Elsevier/CIMA (2009); Bhimani, Contemporary Issues in Management Accounting, OUP (2006); Olson, Guthrie & Humphrey (Eds), Global Warning: Debating International Developments in New Public Financial Management, Cappelan Akademisk Forlag As, Oslo (1998); Merchant & Van der Stede, Management Control Systems: Performance Measurement, Evaluation and Incentives, FT/Prentice Hall (2012).
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Coursework (20%) in the MT and LT.
Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period; the other 20% of the mark will be based on the two summative assignments submitted during the year. Assignment 2 (MT) and Assignment 4 (LT) will each count for 10% of the final mark for this course.

AC330
Financial Accounting, Analysis and Valuation.

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vasiliki Athanasakou OLD 2.20, Dr Stefano Cascino OLD 3.32 and Prof Richard Macve OLD 3.11
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
The course is available as an outside option, subject to the course leader's permission, if students have achieved a sufficient standard of performance in the pre-requisite course AC100 Elements of Accounting and Finance or AC102 Elements of Financial Accounting or AC104 Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management or equivalent.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed AC100 Elements of Accounting and Finance, or AC102 Elements of Financial Accounting, or AC104 Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management.
Course content: The course addresses the theory and practice of financial reporting. Accounting practices are examined in the light of historical development, regulatory requirements, theories of income and capital and other approaches to accounting theory and to the use of accounting information in business analysis and valuation.
Financial accounting with particular reference to company accounts. Issues in financial accounting including accounting for business combinations under International Accounting Standards. Implications of empirical research into stock market effects of management choice of accounting policies. Business analysis and valuation. Regulation of financial reporting. There will be a revision class in week 1 of ST.
Formative coursework: Students should prepare weekly written work for class discussion. At least two pieces per term will be collected for marking and some of these assignments will count towards the final mark for the course.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists of books and journal articles will be provided during the course. No one book covers the entire course. Recommended books include Whittington, G, Inflation Accounting: an introduction to the debate, CUP (1983); Baxter, WT, Inflation Accounting, Oxford, Philip Allan, (1984); Beaver, WH, Financial Reporting: An Accounting Revolution, Prentice-Hall (1998); Palepu, KG, Healy, PM, Bernard, VL and Peek, E, Business Analysis and Valuation: IFRS Edition, Thomson (2013).
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Other (10%) in the MT.
Other (10%) in the LT.
The two other assessments are presentation/essay assignments comprising group work (total 20%).

AC340
Auditing, Governance and Risk Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Liisa Kurunmaki KSW 3.04, Dr Nadia Matringe KSW 3.05 and Dr Julia Morley OLD 3.09
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Financial Accounting (AC102) or Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management (AC104). Elements of Management Accounting and Financial Management (AC103) is recommended to complement AC102, but not required.

Course content: The course provides a critical analysis of auditing practices and their role in organisational governance and risk management. Auditing is demanded by, and provides assurance to, a variety of internal and external stakeholders, including corporate shareholders and regulators. As societal demands for accountability have increased, auditing has become both more important and more regulated itself. Auditing also remains controversial and this course will address contemporary debates. The course addresses the theoretical basis of auditing, its role as a risk management function, its practical methodologies and its legal, professional and social environment. The course is divided into four modules.
Internal Control and Risk Management critically examines recent developments in risk management and internal control practices, including the role of internal auditing and the problem of reporting on the effectiveness of control systems.
Corporate Financial Audit provides a basic overview and introduction to corporate auditing theory and practice. The module investigates the roles of corporate financial audit in contemporary society; discusses issues related to the collection of audit evidence and assurance of audit quality; and analyses recent national and international developments in audit regulation and standard setting.
Public Sector Auditing and Accounting considers variants of the audit function in the public sector context, such as value for money auditing.
Sustainability Accounting and Auditing addresses the broader accountability framework of the corporation and related environmental and social accounting and auditing issues. While the primary focus of the course is upon UK practice, international comparisons will also be made. There is also an intention to run a small number of practitioner lectures during the 2014-15 session. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
There will be a reading week in week 6 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of four written essays per year and one class presentation. All students will be expected to contribute to class discussion. Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during class, on written homework assignments, and during office hours.
The two written assignments with the highest marks will count towards the final mark for the course.
Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus. In addition to professional and academic journals, reading will cover the following: Gray I, & Manson S, The Audit Process, Thomson, 2011; and refer to Power M, The Audit Explosion, Demos, 1996 and The Audit Society, OUP, 1999, Flint D, Philosophy and principles of auditing : an introduction, Macmillan Education,1988. Background reading for the fourth module may be found in Henriques, A, Corporate Truth: The Limits to Transparency (Earthscan 2007). Students will also be provided with relevant examples of corporate and other reports and referred to relevant websites. Detailed course programmes and reading lists will be distributed at the first lecture of the course.
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Other (20%) in the MT and LT.
The exam will be in the main exam period; the other 20% of the mark will be based on two of the four formative written assignments submitted during the year. The two assignments with the highest marks from the four submitted pieces of work will each count for 10% of the final mark for this course.
AC340 Mazars Prize
The international accounting firm, Mazars, sponsors a prize for the best examination performance in AC340. The prize has a value of £200 and is awarded at the end of the examination period each year.

Anthropology, Text and Film

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides training in the reading and interpretation of visual and textual anthropology. It introduces students to detailed, holistic study of social and cultural practices within particular geographic and historical contexts, and develops skills in bringing together the various elements of cultural and social life analysed by anthropologists. By the end of each term, successful students will have both a detailed knowledge of three important texts, and also have a rounded view of the three settings studied. They will also have developed the capacity to think critically about ethnographic writing and film-making. In addition, the course aims to enable students to examine in detail the process by which ethnographic texts are produced. The course brings students to a closer understanding of anthropological fieldwork and evidence, and the way in which it relates to the forms of knowledge and insight generated by other genres of social scientific enquiry, documentary, and art. Students will usually read three book-length ethnographic accounts (or the equivalent) per term, and will study a film (or pictorial, architectural or other visual material) associated with each text.
Teaching: 5 hours of lectures, 6 hours of lectures, 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 7 hours of classes in the MT. 4 hours of lectures, 9 hours of lectures, 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 7 hours of classes in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to read the three set texts per term, approximately 1/3 text (two-four chapters) each week, and it will be essential to do this in order to pass this course. The emphasis in classes and seminars will be on developing students' abilities to read and analyse texts as a whole, and to relate them to the other material offered on the course. Supplementary readings may be provided during the term. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists (including this year's set texts) will be provided at the beginning of the course.
For a general introduction to issues covered in the course, see the following: Engelke, M., ed. 2009. The Objects of Evidence: Anthropological Approaches to the Production of Knowledge. Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell. Grimshaw, A., and A. Ravetz. 2009. Observational Cinema: Anthropology, Film, and the Exploration of Social Life. Bloomington: Indiana University Press. MacDonald, S. 2013. A Thrice-Told Tale: Feminism, Postmodernism, and Ethnographic Responsibility. Stanford: Stanford University Press.
Assessment: Coursework (100%, 6000 words) in the MT and LT. All students will produce a portfolio of position pieces (worth 100% of the total mark), to which they are expected to make a contribution after each cycle. Portfolios will be assessed periodically throughout the year, with the final grade determined at the end of Lent Term.

AN200
The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14 and Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems, gender roles, personhood and human sexuality, analysed through ethnographic examples from a diverse range of settings. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'marriage', 'gender', 'sex', 'the person', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture', as well as exploring how the experiences of kinship, sex and gender vary according to the regimes of politics, law and materiality in which they are embedded. The course charts the history of anthropological debates on kinship, relatedness, sex and gender, and familiarises students with a range of contemporary approaches to these themes, placing ethnographic materials into a critical dialogue with recent developments in feminist theory, queer theory, the anthropology of colonialism, cognitive science, and psychoanalysis.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

AN205 Half Unit
The Anthropology of Melanesia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott, OLD 6.16
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides an introduction to selected themes in the anthropology of the region in the Southwest Pacific Ocean known as Melanesia. It gives students a grounding in the contemporary anthropology of the region, primarily through a close reading of three book-length ethnographies.
The three ethnographies, which are all new since 2013, are Christopher Wright's The Echo of Things, an account of what photography means to people in the western Solomon Islands; Alice Street's Biomedicine in an Unstable Place, an analysis of how persons and diseases are made visible or invisible in a hospital on the north coast of Papua New Guinea; and Alex Golub's Leviathans at the Gold Mine, a study of the relationship between indigenous landowners and a large international gold mine in their valley in the highlands of New Guinea.
These ethnographies not only provide students with focused accounts of three very different contexts in Melanesia, they also address histories, dynamics, and concerns familiar to people living throughout the region. Furthermore, because the three authors draw on different intellectual antecedents and disciplinary traditions, their work provides an entree into the most influential theoretical debates animating Pacific anthropology today.
Topics to be traced throughout the course include personhood and bodies, kinship and sociality, religion and cosmology, technology and infrastructure, development, globalization, and the state. The readings will be supplemented by ethnographic films and a visit to the British Museum.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.
Indicative reading: Christopher Wright, The Echo of Things: The Lives of Photographs in the Solomon Islands (2013); Alice Street, Biomedicine in an Unstable Place: Infrastructure and Personhood in a Papua New Guinean Hospital (2014); Alex Golub, Leviathans at the Gold Mine: Creating Indigenous and Corporate Actors in Papua New Guinea (2014).
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Cognition and Anthropology: Human Development in Cultural Environments

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD 6.11
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher
Course content: The course will examine the contribution that the study of human psychology can make to anthropology.
After discussing why anthropologists should pay attention to psychology and why psychologists should pay attention to anthropology, we will examine a range of psychological findings (for example, on infant's knowledge of the physical and mental world) and their relevance to anthropology.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Christianity

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The ethnography of local Christianities in the light of differing cultural and social situations including colonial conditions. The relationship between Christianity and the discipline of anthropology. The course will examine a number of anthropological and historical studies of local forms of Christianity, from a range including local forms of Catholicism, Mormonism, contemporary and historical Protestantisms including American Protestant forms and 'heretical' and other unorthodox Christianities. The course asks why anthropologists shied away from analysing Christianity long after studies of other world religions, such as Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism, had become widely established. It looks at the relationship between Christianity and the history of anthropological thought, and locates the place of Christianity in the writings of Mauss, Durkheim, Foucault and others, in order to defamiliarise the religion which Europeans and Americans especially often take for granted. Issues examined may include the nature and experience of belief, conversion and the appropriation of Christian doctrines by local populations, the problems of writing about religion, Christianity and the state, the nature of religious confession, Christian texts, and Scriptural reading practices, Christian objects and materialities, Christianity and women's religious and social experience (from Medieval women mystics to women priests), inquisitions and heretical beliefs, priests and alternative forms of mediation with divine power, miraculous saints, incorrupt bodies and 'non-eaters' and changing ideas about death, Heaven and Hell. Where possible, the course will include a student fieldwork weekend and forms of reflection and reporting on that experience. Please check with the course teacher in any given year whether this is planned as part of the year's programme.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher. Students are asked to participate in the fieldwork trip in years when this is available (please note that costs will be kept to a minimum and consideration will be given in any cases of financial hardship). Fieldnotes and other materials will be prepared by fieldtrip participants.

The Anthropology of Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course will introduce students to selected theoretical and ethnographic issues in the history and contemporary life of Southeast Asia (including Burma/Myanmar, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, The Philippines, and Vietnam).
The alleged distinctiveness of Southeast Asian gender relations, political leadership, and experiences of self and emotion have led to ethnographic studies of the region making major contributions to the anthropology of the state, sovereignty, globalisation, gender, identity, violence, and mental health. By providing a strong grounding in regional ethnographic materials, this course will equip students to critically evaluate such contributions and to consider possible further contributions that studies of Southeast Asia might make to anthropological debates. The course will also examine how anthropologists have responded to the interpretive challenges presented by selected aspects of Southeast Asia's social and political life, such as the legacies of mass violence (e.g. the Cambodian genocide, the Vietnam War, or Indonesia's massacre of suspected communists), its ethnic and religious pluralism, and the impact of international tourism.
The course also contains a strong visual anthropology element: each week's lecture will be paired with a film screening, and students will be encouraged to examine whether and how this visual material contributes to, o indeed reframes, the theoretical debates at hand.
Upon successful completion of the course, students will be able to:
1. Describe the key features of Southeast Asian social and cultural systems, and identify their similarities and differences with social and cultural systems in other world regions.
2. Describe key events and patterns in Southeast Asia's history, and evaluate the extent to which these influence contemporary social phenomena in the region.
3. Describe and evaluate the most influential paradigms that have been developed in anthropological studies of Southeast Asia over the past 60 years.
4. Apply anthropological concepts and theories to ethnographic materials from Southeast Asia, and evaluate the results.
5. Apply anthropological research findings and theories to social and policy issues in Southeast Asia.
6. Locate and use research findings from Southeast Asia in order to participate in, or advance the terms of, wider disciplinary debates.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Film screenings will also take place throughout the term.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare material for discussion in the classes. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Development

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Katy Gardner OLD 5.07
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course considers a range of contributions made by anthropologists to the analysis of development. It assesses the reconcilability of two divergent perspectives: development anthropology, with its corpus of writings by practitioners working on practical projects, and the 'anthropology of development', comprising a series of critiques of development theory and practice by anthropologists. It examines the historical background, showing how development and its discourses were made in the wake of the colonial encounter and exploring the role played by anthropologists in this process. Critiques of both state-planned and market-driven development are considered and weighed against the ethnographic evidence, and anthropological studies of development organisations, institutions and 'the aid industry' considered. The anthropology of planning and policy; actor-centred perspectives on development; NGOs and participatory approaches; microcredit and gender; and religion and development, are among the topics explored. Regional ethnographies used include those from various parts of Southern and West Africa, China, Latin America, South and South-East Asia.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher. Towards the end of the term the students will also have the opportunity to answer a quiz on the key concepts covered in the course which will be marked by the course teacher.

Anthropology and Human Rights

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher
Course content: The tension between respect for 'local cultures' and 'universal rights' is a pressing concern within human rights activism. For well over two decades, anthropologists have been increasingly involved in these discussions, working to situate their understandings of cultural relativism within a broader framework of social justice. This course explores the contributions of anthropology to the theoretical and practical concerns of human rights work. The term begins by reading a number of key human rights documents and theoretical texts. These readings are followed by selections in anthropology on the concepts of relativism and culture as well as other key frameworks, such as identity and violence. Students will then be asked to relate their understandings of human rights to the historical and cultural dimensions of particular cases, addressing such questions as the nature of humanity, historical conceptions of the individual, colonialism and imperialism, the limits of relativism, and the relationship between human rights in theory and in practice. Case studies focus on Africa and Latin America.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for classes/seminars and are required to write an assessment essay. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.
Indicative reading: E Messer, 'Anthropology and Human Rights' Annual Review of Anthropology 1993; J Cowan et al (Eds), Culture and Rights: Anthropological Perspectives; R Wilson (Ed), Human Rights, Culture, and Context: Anthropological Perspectives; T Turner, 'Human Rights, Human Difference: Anthropology's Contribution to an Emancipatory Cultural Politics' Journal of Anthropological Research 1997; T Asad, Formations of the Secular; P Farmer, 'On Structural Violence', Current Anthropology 1999; M Mamdani, When victims become killers; C Taylor, Sacrifice as Terror; R Menchu, I, Rigoberta Menchu. Investigating the Philippines - New Approaches and Ethnographic Contexts

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is most suitable for second and third year students but interested first year external students may seek an exemption. Also available to General Course students.
Course content: This course offers the chance to look at the ethnography of one country in more detail than is usual for regional courses. It considers topics taken from the ethnography of the lowland and highland Philippines, with a focus on exciting new high quality writing, drawing on the recent rennaissance in Philippine Studies. The course will balance works by expert non-Filipino ethnographers with the new writing of 'native ethnographies' by Filipino scholars resident both in the Philippines themselves and in the US. The course will be framed within the colonial, religious and social history of the archipelago, and will consider both new interpretations of Philippine history, and topics on contemporary social issues, as well as using classic works on the Philippines. Teaching each week will normally be organised around the reading of one outstanding ethnography, allowing students to look closely at particular cases. Topics in any year are likely to be drawn from the following list (although obviously only ten topics can be offered in one year) ; Migration, 'mail-order' brides, and the Philippine diaspora ; New religious movements: Philippine colonialism and the processes of conversion: Healing, spirit possession, midwifery and local medicine: The contemporary Catholic Church; Violence in the Philippines; Ecology, landscape and environmental politics: Kinship and its transformations; Gender, Philippine queer theory and Philippine transvestitism: Ritual, drama and local performance traditions: Philippine architecture and material culture.: Philippine cinema: Colonial politics, tribal politics and issues of self-representation: Magic, sorcery and "anitismo"; Tourism, symbolic economies and the impact of international capitalism.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for classes/seminars. Students in the Anthropology Department have the opportunity to submit non-assessed essays to their tutor. Students external to the Department may submit a short piece of written work to the course teacher by arrangement.
Indicative reading: Selected texts: Renato Rosaldo Ilongot Headhunters; Vicente Rafael Contracting Christianity; Fenella Cannell Power and Intimacy in the Christian Philippines; Sally-Ann Ness Where Asia Smiles; Heather L. The assessed essay must be between 2,000 – 2,500 words in length.

AN243 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18 Children and Youth in Contemporary Ethnography

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should normally have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.
Course content: For much of its history, and with some notable exceptions, anthropology has paid little serious attention to children. However, recent years have seen a growing interest in both 'childhood' as a historical and social construction, and in children's engagement with their own social worlds. This course aims to introduce students to emerging ethnographic work on children and youth, in order to explore both its theoretical and methodological challenges. Ethnographic studies will cover a wide range of societies and regions, including anthropological work on children and childhood in the US and UK. The course will begin with an investigation of children's place in anthropology, including early anthropological work on 'Culture and Personality' and 'child socialisation'. The course will then move to consider a variety of topics that have been the focus of recent ethnographic study. These may include: children's play, childhood identities and kinship, education and schooling, youth cultures and globalization, children's work, street children and children's competencies in contexts of crisis, including war.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. Weekly lectures and classes in the Lent Term. Film screenings in the Lent Term.
Formative coursework: In addition to preparing discussion material for classes, students will normally write one tutorial essay for the course. Non-Anthropology students taking this course may submit an essay to the teacher responsible.

AN244 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18 Anthropology and Media

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Engelke 6.12
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course introduces students to anthropological analyses of media, including books and other printed texts, photography, radio, television, film, and the internet. Although 'the anthropology of media' is often understood to be a relatively new subfield, there has been a long-standing interest in media technologies within the discipline. There is also an important manner, from an anthropological point of view, in which 'media technologies' have to be understood not only as these cultural artefacts (radio, film) but also the more elementary senses they express (hearing, sight, etc). We therefore investigate media both as a broad conceptual category and as specific technologies of communication. The course begins with a historical overview of anthropologists' investigations of media technologies, broadly construed. We then move on to consider ethnographic case studies of media in context. Examples may include: photography in India, radio in Zambia, television and cassette circulation in Egypt, mobile phones in Jamaica, book groups in England, and 'indigenous video' in Brazil and Australia. Throughout the course, these case studies are framed in relation to some of the key theoretical debates that have shaped media studies in anthropology and related disciplines since the 1930s. Some attention is also given to the methodological problems involved in studying media, especially the extent to which it challenges the possibility of conducting fieldwork by participant observation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking the course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.
Indicative reading: Domestication of the Savage Mind (J Goody); Imagined Communities (B Anderson); 'The Work of Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction' (W Benjamin); Media Worlds (F Ginsburg, L Abu-Lughod, and B Larkin, eds); Understanding Media (M McLuhan); Understanding Media (D Boyer); 'Anthropology and the Mass Media' (D Spitulnik); 'Anthropology and its contributions to studies of Mass Media' (S Dickey); Media Rituals (N Couldry); A Voice: And Nothing More (M Dolar); The Presence of the Word (W Ong).

Borders and Boundaries: Ethnographic Approaches

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: How do territorial borders influence human behaviour and thinking, and how, in turn, do people, create, manage, and manipulate such borders? These question have become pressing with the intensification and politicisation of global interconnectedness. While a few decades ago the tearing down of the Berlin Wall seemed to herald a border-less world, todays the loudest politicians promise to create "huge, great, great, beautiful walls." This course studies the numerous tensions accompanying global interconnectedness. Why is it so difficult to make borders impermeable? How do smuggling networks operate? What does the world look like from the perspective of undocumented migrants? What are the effects of new border fortification technologies? What is it like to live in a gated community? Are people boundary-drawing creatures? Why do borders play a central role in images of utopia? Why is it silly yet productive to ask: where is the border between Europe and Asia? These and other questions will be discussed by situating ourselves ethnographically in the borderlands, potentially making us realise that "the frontier is all around us."
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion materials for presentation in the classes. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

The Anthropology of Ontology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott OLD6.16
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: In Western thought, the study of the nature of being itself (Greek ontos), including theories about how things come into being and how they are related to one another, is known as ontology. Building on, but broadening the scope of this Western tradition, the growing anthropological literature on questions of being seeks to document ethnographically and model theoretically the many different ontologies, or lived realities, that shape social practice in diverse historical, geographic, and cultural contexts. Twenty-first century anthropology has seen an 'ontological turn', or more broadly, the emergence of 'the anthropology of ontology' as a recognized sub-field. Increasingly, there is a convergence of anthropological discourses around the concept of ontology, yet there is no unified approach to this topic. The anthropology of ontology remains a set of loosely linked discussions. Working in different geographical regions and drawing on different intellectual antecedents, anthropologists interested in questions of being have developed different analytical vocabularies and models that are now in need of comparison and mutual interpretation. This course provides an orientation to the various backgrounds and points of similarity and difference that constitute this emergent sub-field. Through ethnographic readings from such contexts as Aboriginal Australia, Amazonia, Central Asia, China, Melanesia, Native Alaska, Polynesia, and the history of science, the course takes a comparative approach to the exploration of different ontologies and their relationship to practice, cultural change, ethics, and social conflict.
Questions and topics covered include: the relationship between ontology and cosmology; where and how - beyond myth and ritual - ontologies are available to ethnographic observation; theories of animism versus Western nature/culture dualism; Amazonian perspectivism; relationship to place and the environment as indices of ontology; the ontological status of 'things'; dreams, illness, and curing as indices of different modalities of being; conflicting ontological assumptions in intercultural contexts; processes of ontological transformation; scientific ontologies; the ontological assumptions that have informed anthropology.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have the opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of South Asia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD5.09
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course will aim to address issues of citizenship, inequality, political participation and democratic governance in rural and urban India. The course will cover both classic and current literature and weekly sessions will be organised thematically. We will start by looking at Indias place in the world as a democracy and emerging economy and the many paradoxes that the country throws up - alongside some of the highest rates of economic growth, India also has one of the lowest performances on development indicators; despite 40% adult illiteracy, India has among the highest voter turnout rates in the world; despite local institutions having the least power compared to state level or the central government, ordinary people feel most invested in local elections; India remains largely rural yet India will hold the largest urban population in the world in less than ten years and so on. In order to understand these paradoxes, it is essential that issues of caste and class be examined in some detail, through the anthropological literature produced on these topics over the past 60 years or so. The changing caste dynamics will be examined through everyday practices of discrimination, violence and endogamy as well as institutional innovations of affirmative action for jobs and education. Class relations have also dramatically changed with land reforms in rural India as well as a substantial middle class has emerged in urban India. Economic reforms introduced since the 1990s have altered modes of retail and consumption in both urban and rural India creating new inequalities and entrenching old ones. In the political arena, these changing practices and dynamics have led to a democratic upsurge from below, leading to a greater participation in the electoral process by members of the lower castes and classes of India. All these issues and more will be addressed in this course through the rich corpus of anthropological literature on the subject alongside examples from Indias vibrant media and popular culture.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Film screenings will be scheduled at the start of term. One revision session in ST.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their academic advisers. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Cognition and Anthropology: Learning and Thinking in Relation to Social Institutions

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charles Stafford OLD6.02
Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology.
Course content: This course focuses on human learning, thinking and cognitive development, specifically in relation to cultural-historical artefacts (such as writing) and social institutions (such as schools). The topics covered include: (1) cultural models and distributed cognition; (2) attachment behaviours and rites of passage; (3) emotions cross-culturally; (4) incest aversion and incest taboos; (5) morality and ethics cross-culturally; (6) numerical cognition and mathematics; (7) human logic and reason cross-culturally; (8) language and literacy; (9) training, schooling and expertise; (10) exchange, reciprocity and economic psychology.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in classes. Students registered for Anthropology degrees will prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting essays to the course teacher and receiving feedback on them.

Anthropological Approaches to Value

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor David Graeber OLD.6.10
Course content: In this course we will first take stock of the current anthropological theories of value in contemporary anthropology. After a critical appraisal of such theories, we will explore what an anthropological theory of value might actually look like. After a brief exploration of Kluckhohn's "values project", the formalist-substantivist arguments, and debates about the nature of the social role of money, up to the recent neoliberal resurgence in anthropological theory, we'll be looking at the contrasting legacies of Karl Marx and Marcel Mauss. Looking at these as two very different approaches to many of the same problems will provide enormous opportunities for creative synthesis. The course will include some fairly extended case studies (of Tiv fetishism, wampum, and anthropological studies of consumption), to investigate how useful all this theory can actually be in throwing new light on familiar problems.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Economic Anthropology (1): Production and Exchange

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys OLD 6.08
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course examines 'the economy' as an object of scholarly analysis and a domain of social action. We start by asking how scholars have measured, described, modeled, and predicted its behaviour; what forms economic institutions take cross-culturally; and how these institutions were transformed as a result of their incorporation into a wider capitalist markets, state systems, and development initiatives. For example, we will examine the central place of households within capitalist economies, largely overlooked by mainstream economic analyses, and the role that money can play in both dividing and uniting human societies. The course will familiarise students with fundamental aspects of the field and with core concepts used in anthropological analyses of economic life, such as production, consumption, exchange, property, alienation, scarcity, and value. But we will also try to break open the standard frames of the debate by highlighting, for example, the entanglement of nature in the capitalist expansion, and how economic life is rarely stable. What progress have anthropologists made in understanding booms, busts, prolonged pauses and delays? What can ethnography tell us about how people cope with crises and instabilities, individually and collectively, and how they seek to anticipate what the future may hold? Throughout the course, students will engage both with theoretical writings and with a range of select ethnographies to gain a rounded understanding of relevant debates.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

The Anthropology of Amazonia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Agustin Diz OLD 6.06
Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology.
Course content: The course will introduce students to selected themes in the anthropology of Amazonia. It will provide a grounding in the ethnographic literature of the region while seeking to engage with current theoretical debates, highlighting their potential importance to the discipline of anthropology. Topics to be covered include history, indigenous social movements; sexuality and gender; trade and inter-ethnic relations; politics and power; illness, well-being and death. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the broader relationship between ethnography and theory, to challenge common stereotypes of Amazonia and its inhabitants, and to explore ways in which the region has inscribed itself on the imagination of anthropologists and laypersons alike.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.
Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees will prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors.

Subjectivity and Anthropology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B
Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology.
Course content: This course will explore the nature and formation of the self and of subjective experience. It will draw together a range of anthropological, psychological and philosophical approaches to subjectivity and the social and cultural phenomena that shape and condition it, attending both to the particulars of individual lives and settings and to more general, existential dimensions of the human condition. The course will be structured around engagements with three principal paradigms: psychoanalysis; phenomenology; and subjectivation. A key aim of the course will be to understand the strengths and limitations of these approaches for anthropological analysis as well as potential sites of convergence and divergence. Specific topics to be covered include the unconscious, dreams, illness and healing, embodiment, sound, intersubjectivity, interpellation, the feminist subject, and altered states of consciousness.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Ten hours of lectures and ten hours of classes in MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.
Students registered for Anthropology degrees will submit a tutorial essay for this course to their academic advisers. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will submit a formative essay to the course teacher

Assessment for this course will comprise a 'take-home' exam of up to five questions. Students will be asked to write a 2000-2500 word essay on two of the questions, drawing across the breath of the course. The take home essay will be worth 90% of the total mark. 10% of marks will be given for general class participation. Those who give full attendance and make some effort to participate in class will be able to achieve first class marks.

AN275 Half Unit
The Anthropology of Revolution

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alpa Shah OLD 6.17A
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Optional for BA/BSc Social Anthropology and BA Anthropology and Law. Also available to students on other degree programmes as an outside option, and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology (AN100 Introduction to Social Anthropology).
Course content: This course will focus on the study of revolution from an anthropological perspective. It will concentrate on three different types of revolutionary struggle, in three different continents, through three different types of ethnographies: the Zapatista indigenous movement in Mexico, the Zimbabwean anti-colonial struggle, and the Maoist 'People's War' in Nepal. In each case, students will be encouraged to critically consider the varying degrees of involvement of the anthropologist in the movements concerned, the theoretical premises of the anthropologists and how these affect the politics and ethics of writing. In this process, students will deepen their understandings of the theoretical debates around production and reproduction, social transformation, religion and secularism, activism and anthropology, and violence and ethics in radical social change. The course will demonstrate that although anthropologists were once criticised for 'missing the revolution' on their doorstep, in fact their long term engagement with communities who come to be affected by revolutionary struggles has much to offer to the theoretical and practical work of radical social transformation.
Teaching: 6 hours of lectures, 6 hours of classes and 8 hours of workshops in the MT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees will submit a tutorial essay for this course to their academic advisers. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will submit a formative essay to the course teacher.
Indicative reading: This course will be based on the close reading of the following three ethnographic monographs: Earle, Duncan, & Simonelli, Jeanne. (2005). Uprising of Hope: Sharing the Zapatista Journey to Alternative Development. Walnut Creek: Altamira Press. Lan, David. (1985). Guns and Rain: guerrillas and spirit mediums in Zimbabwe. Berkeley: University of California Press. Pettigrew, Judith. (2013). Maoists at the Hearth: Everyday Life in Nepal's Civil War. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the MT.
The take home exam will be held the week following the end of the MT.

AN276 Half Unit
Anthropology and the Anthropocene

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: In August 2016, scientists participating in the Anthropocene Working Group put forward an official recommendation to rename our present time interval 'the Anthropocene'. It postulates that humans now exert recognisable influences on the earth's bio- and geophysical systems sufficient to warrant the naming of a distinct geological epoch encompassing the earth's present, recent past, and indefinite future. The Anthropocene thus echoes contemporary anxieties about climate change, the deterioration of global ecologies, and other environmental crises on unprecedented scales, as well as humans' capacity to devise adequate solutions to the problems they face. The scholarly and popular debate on the Anthropocene has exploded in recent years, with anthropologists contributing both theoretical and important ethnographic insight into how people apprehend and deal with the repercussions of anthropogenic environmental change. It now seems that the continued successful existence of humanity on this planet will require us to live differently both with each other and with the earth: 'We will go onwards in a different mode of humanity or not at all' (Val Plumwood 2007).
In this course, we will approach the Anthropocene as a contested category, with evident political and ethical implications. We will begin by examining the dramatic changes in the relationship between humans and their natural environments brought about by industrialisation, specifically, the increased exploitation of natural resources as well as the production and use of fossil fuels on a large scale. We will attend to the practices and cosmologies of people who in their everyday lives – for example, by digging, polluting, and wasting – participate in the work of anthropogenic alterations, drawing on case studies from across the world.
We will consider alternative labels, such as the Capitalocene, Plantationocene, Plasticene, Eurocene, Misanthropocene, and Neologocene, each of which tells a different origin story for what Donna Haraway has called 'the trouble'. However, we then move to ask whether the Anthropocene might be less a marker of an epochal transformation than a signal of a profound anti-political shift in discussions about the future of the planet. We will inspect the scientific and non-scientific controversies the Anthropocene has provoked, and the particular forms of power, authority, reason, imagination, and subjectivity it has generated.
Students will be expected to engage with a variety of resources, including online publications, blogs, documentary and feature films, and other media, and an emergent interdisciplinary literature, spanning the social and natural sciences, which we will read in relation to a more long-standing engagement with the environment within the anthropological discipline. This will lead us to interrogate established binaries of human/nonhuman, subject/object, and nature/culture, and, significantly, to ask about the critical valence of anthropologists' enquiry into the 'anthropos' for an age so profoundly shaped by humans. What methods and modes of analysis are required to comprehend the diverse human/non-human interactions and seemingly incommensurable scales that the Anthropocene invokes? What types of collaboration, knowledge, and mutual care does an anthropocenic outlook make possible? How can we anchor the manifold theoretical proposals that have been put forward not just in ethnographic examples but also in own 'experiments for living'?
Teaching: 7 hours of lectures, 7 hours of classes, 6 hours of classes and 4 hours of workshops in the LT.
The course is comprised of three cycles of three weeks plus an additional, concluding week. Each cycle consists of two weeks taught in the traditional lecture/class format, and a third week with a two-hour class bringing together the entire course cohort. While the one-hour classes will focus on core readings set by the lecturer, the two-hour class will, in addition, offer space for viewing other resources (films, online material), discussing students independently researched material, student presentations, etc.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay, 1 presentation and 6 other pieces of coursework in the LT.

Research Methods in Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti 6.11
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The twofold aim of this course is to provide students with deeper insight of the process by which anthropological knowledge is produced, and to develop their skills with regard to the collection, analysis and representation of ethnographic data. We will review the main tools of anthropological research, and discuss the ways in which empirical data are being incorporated in ethnographic texts. The research techniques that will be reviewed include 'participant observation', various approaches to asking questions and interviewing, and research with documents and in archives. Students will carry out a small research project in London in which they address a specific research question from different angles, employing the various techniques learned during this course. They will report on their research activities and write a 4,500 to 5000 word ethnographic essay on the basis of their research findings.
Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: A short description of the student's proposed research project will be discussed in the seminars in week 1 in a student-led workshop. Students will then produce a 1000-word report due between weeks 5 and 7, describing the progress made on the research, including a sample ethnographic description and an explanation of the methods used to date. Students will receive extensive feedback on the report within two weeks of submission.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

AN300
Advanced Theory of Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B and Mr Geoffrey Hughes OLD 5.06A
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a substantial background in Social Anthropology.
Course content: The aim of this course is to train students to engage critically with classic and contemporary texts in the discipline, thereby deepening understandings of current trends and emerging debates. It will examine the theoretical implications of particular anthropological approaches by surveying their origins, their strengths and their critique. The course will take the form of an intensive reading group in which approximately six texts (three in each of MT and LT) will be discussed and analysed in depth, along with supplementary reading material where appropriate. Students will be expected to develop their own critical responses to each text, as well as an appreciation of the context in which it was written and its contribution to relevant theoretical discussions and debates.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Lectures provide a general introduction to the text and relevant issues or debates. Classes probe more deeply into these topics and will comprise small group work as well as general conversations.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 in MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
- Verbal: all students are expected to come to class prepared to participate and everyone is expected to speak in every class. Anyone struggling to participate should meet with the course teacher to discuss ways to increase participation.
- Essays: A formative essay may be submitted to your academic advisor through the tutorial system. This essay can be used to develop ideas for the summative essay. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.
Indicative reading: Adriana Petryna. Life Exposed. Janet Roitman, Fiscal Disobedience. Jason de León, Land of Open Graves. James Laidlaw, The Subject of Virtue. Tanya Luhrmann, When God Talks Back. Alessandro Duranti, The Anthropology of Intentions.
Assessment: Essay (100%, 7200 words) in the LT.
All students will produce a portfolio of six position pieces, to which they are expected to make a contribution after each three-week cycle. Each position piece will be around 1200 words, and will comprise a critical reflection on the text and its contribution to the wider anthropological literature. Portfolios will be assessed periodically throughout the year, with feedback provided to students on a regular basis. The final grade will be determined by the beginning of Summer Term.

AN301
The Anthropology of Religion

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Scott OLD 6.16 and Prof Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have a substantial background in Social Anthropology.
Course content: This course covers selected topics in the anthropology of religion, focusing upon relevant theoretical debates. In the Michaelmas term, the focus will also be on understanding through specific ethnographic and empirical case-studies, the ways in which lived religious practice, and the understanding of religion, get constituted inside and outside 'Western' and modern contexts. We will also pay attention to cases in which Western and non-Western definitions are emerging in interplay with each other, including their relation to understandings of modernity and the secular. Current approaches to and reconsiderations of classic topics in the anthropology of religion are also presented; these may include ritual, belief, sacrifice, and the fetish. In the Lent term, we will consider topics such as shamanism, cargo cults, initiation, witchcraft and sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of the MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Essay (15%, 2500 words) in the LT.

AN357 Half Unit
Economic Anthropology (2): Transformation and Globalisation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.09
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course examines 'the economy', as an object of social scientific analysis and a domain of human action, focusing on the anthropology of globalisation. Scholars have various ways of analysing the new forms of production, consumption, exchange and circulation that have emerged since the 1980s. Some emphasise post-Fordist methods of flexible production and neo-liberal elite projects. Others focus on trans-state processes of globalisation. For other theorists shifts in state policies such as austerity, decentralised planning, public-private partnerships and the deregulation of financial markets are at the centre of analysis. Others address new forms of consumer society, popular desires for social mobility and transnational migration. Drawing from ethnographies and anthropological theory this course will cast a critical eye over these arguments. It will also revisit classic topics from the perspective of present realities — for example production and intimate economies; formal markets in relation to informalised, violent economies; circulation in relation to financial debt and risk; and consumption and consumer citizenship.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will submit a tutorial essay for this course to their academic advisers.
Non-Anthropology students taking this course will submit a formative essay to the course teacher.
Indicative reading: J Inda and R Rosaldo (eds) The Anthropology of Globalisation (2007); M Edelman and A Haugerud (eds) The Anthropology of Development and Globalization (2004); J Collier and A Ong (eds) Global Assemblages: Technology, Politics and Ethics as Anthropological Problems (2004); A Tsing, Friction: an Ethnography of Global Connection (2004); This is an indicative reading list: detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (30%, 2500 words) in the LT.

AN398 Half Unit
Special Essay Paper in Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD 6.11
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course need to have completed the first two year of either the BA/BSc Social Anthropology or the BA Anthropology and Law.
Course content: The essay may be based on any topic deemed to be amenable to anthropological analysis, and agreed by the student's academic advisor. Students should ensure that there is an adequate body of relevant literature available for analysis, and that the topic as defined is not unmanageably large.
There is no formal course content. Students will be expected to draw widely on their readings from other anthropology courses.
Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the LT.
Guidance on dissertation research and writing will be given in two-hour sessions in each of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students have the opportunity to submit an abstract and bibliography to their academic advisor, who will advise candidates during their normal tutorial meetings on the chosen topic, the empirical and analytical scope of the essay, and on relevant readings. Students submit three-page outlines, and other writing assignments in Lent Term, and receive feedback on these during the seminar.
Indicative reading: There is no formal course content. Students will be expected to draw widely on their readings from other anthropology courses.
Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.
The essay is 7,000 to 8,000 words of main text, including footnotes and appendices but excluding bibliography. The essay should be typed, double spaced, and should follow the reference procedures of The Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute. The essay must be handed in to the Anthropology Departmental Office by the date announced in the Department's Handbook, normally by May 1st.

EC100
Economics A

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alan Manning 32L 2.36A
Dr L. Rachel Ngai 32L 1.15
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: This is an introductory course in microeconomics and macroeconomics. It may not be taken if Economics B (EC102) has already been taken and passed. No previous knowledge of economics is assumed. The treatment will be non-mathematical, but students are expected to be able to interpret graphs. Entrance on to EC100 and EC102 is dependent on Economics A-level or equivalent background. Students with A-level economics (or equivalent) are not allowed to take EC100.
Course content: This course provides a foundation in micro and macroeconomics, primarily to those without background in the subject. Microeconomics is the focus of Michaelmas Term: This term aims to provide students with methods of economic analysis that can enable them to think about when markets work well, when they are likely to fail and what policies might improve outcomes. Macroeconomics is the focus of Lent Term, which covers topics such as economic growth, unemployment, inflation, monetary & fiscal policy, and international macroeconomics.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Handouts of the slides are distributed.
Formative coursework: Weekly feedback is given on the multiple choice questions which form the weekly quizzes. Individual written feedback is given on at least one essay question per term.
Indicative reading: Daron Acemoglu, David Laibson and John List (2016) Economics, Pearson Education.
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the LT week 0.
Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
The Lent term examination is based on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on the Lent term syllabus.

EC102
Economics B

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francesco Caselli 32L.1.21 and Prof Erik Eyster 32L.4.29, alongside other members of the Economics Department.
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This is an introductory course in microeconomics and macroeconomics. Students without a mathematical background may consider taking an introductory mathematics course, such as Basic Quantitative Methods, at the same time. EC102 is unavailable to anyone who has passed Economics A (EC100). Entrance on to EC100 and EC102 is dependent on Economics A-level or equivalent background. Students without A-level economics (or equivalent) are not allowed to take EC102.
Course content: Part A Consumer and Producer Theory; Markets and Competition; Welfare; Game Theory; Adverse Selection and Moral Hazard. Part B Measurement of the aggregate economy; growth and development, economic fluctuations; stabilization policy; money and inflation; unemployment; financial and sovereign crises.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
A one hour revision lecture will be offered in week 11 of both the Michaelmas and Lent terms.
Formative coursework: Students will submit two problems sets per term on which written feedback will be provided. Feedback will also be provided on weekly Moodle quizzes.
Indicative reading: Part A: Morgan W., M. Katz and H. Rosen (2009) Microeconomics, 2nd edition, McGraw-Hill. Part B: N Gregory Mankiw, Macroeconomics, Worth, 8th edition.
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.
Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The Lent term examination is based on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on the Lent term syllabus.

EC201
Microeconomic Principles I

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margaret Bray 32L4.27
Professor Erik Eyster, 32L4.29
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, Diploma in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: This is an intermediate course in microeconomic analysis. Students are expected to have completed Economics A (EC100) OR Economics B (EC102), or an equivalent introductory course in economics based on textbooks such as D Begg, S Fischer & R Dornbusch, Economics; P A Samuelson & W Nordhaus, Economics; or R G Lipsey, Positive Economics. Students are also expected to have completed an introductory mathematics course such Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) and should revise calculus including partial derivatives and the use of Lagrangians.
Course content: I. Consumer Theory. Utility functions and indifference curves. Income and substitution effects. The Slutsky equation. The expenditure function, compensating and equivalent variation, and consumer surplus. Selected applications to savings and labour supply, including the effects of taxes and benefits. II. Producer Theory. Production and cost functions. Firm and industry supply. Perfect Competition and Monopoly. III. Strategic Choice. Basic ideas in game theory. Applications to oligopoly and auctions. IV. General equilibrium and welfare. Competitive equilibrium. Efficiency of equilibrium. Welfare criteria. V. Topics in welfare economics. Public goods and externalities. VI. Uncertainty and information. Choice under uncertainty. Insurance markets. Asymmetric information. Loss Aversion. Moral Hazard.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the LT.
Two hours of revision lectures will be held in week 11 of both MT and LT
Formative coursework: Students should complete the weekly web-based quizzes before attending classes. In addition, at least four pieces of written work will be required and marked by class teachers.
Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course. The main text for the course is Snyder, C. and Nicholson, W. "Microeconomic Theory: Basic Principles and Extensions". Reference is also made to other texts and to journal articles.
Assessment: Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.
Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The Lent term examination is based on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on 33% on the Michaelmas term syllabus and 67% on the Lent term syllabus.

EC202
Microeconomic Principles II

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Frank Cowell 32L3.25A and Dr Andrew Ellis 32L3.15
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Finance, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance, Diploma in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102). In addition they must have a suitable mathematical background: students who have thoroughly mastered mathematics to the level of Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) should be able to follow the course, but would find it difficult. Mathematical Methods (MA100) would give a better grounding.
Course content: This is an intermediate course in microeconomic analysis. The coverage is similar to Microeconomic Principles I. However a greater mathematical facility will be assumed of the student permitting both greater depth and a number of additional topics, such as duality, to be covered. Further details are available on http://darp.lse.ac.uk/Frankweb/courses/ec202/.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
A one-hour revision lecture will be scheduled in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. At least four pieces of written work will be required and marked by class teachers.
Indicative reading: The text for the course is Cowell, F.A. (2006) Microeconomics: Principles and analysis, Oxford University Press, Oxford. Additional readings to complement the lecture notes on specific topics from other books or articles will be indicated as needed.
Assessment: Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.
Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The Lent term examination is based 100% on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on 33% of the Lent term syllabus and 67% of the Lent term syllabus.

Macroeconomic Principles

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kevin Sheedy 32L1.09
Professor Ricardo Reis 32L1.27
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102), or an equivalent introductory course in Economics. Students are also expected to have completed an introductory Mathematics course such as Basic Quantitative Methods (MA110).
Course content: This course will cover the fundamental principles of macroeconomics at an intermediate level. Topics include the study of economic growth, consumption, investment, unemployment, business cycles, inflation, monetary and fiscal policy, financial markets and international macroeconomics.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. Two pieces of written work per term will be required and marked by class teachers.
Indicative reading: The main textbook for the course is O Blanchard and D R Johnson, Macroeconomics, 6th ed., supplemented by other reading selected by the lecturers. A combined package will be available in the Economists' Bookshop.
Assessment: Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.
Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The Lent term examination is based 100% on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on 33% of the Michaelmas term syllabus and 67% of the Lent term syllabus.

EC220
Introduction to Econometrics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Greg Fischer 32L.3.09 (MT), Dr. Taisuke Otsu 32L 4.25 and Dr. Marcia Schafgans 32L 4.12 (LT)
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, Diploma in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. Availability to General Course students is with the permission of the lecturer.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Those who have taken MA107/ST107 should consider taking EC220 only if they have obtained marks of 65 or better on both courses
Course content: This course is an introduction to econometrics; it aims to present the theory and practice of empirical research in economics.
In MT, the focus of the course is on empirical questions and students will work with the econometrics software packages R or Stata analysing actual data sets. Students will learn how various tools are used to answer causal "what-if" questions (e.g., "What is the effect of monetary policy on output?") and prediction problems.
In LT, the focus of the course is on the underlying econometric theory: estimation, properties of estimators (unbiasedness, efficiency, sampling distribution, consistency) and hypothesis testing.
Topics include: randomised experiments; program evaluation; matching; simple and multiple regression analysis; omitted variable bias; functional form; heteroskedasticity and weighted least squares; endogeneity (measurement error, simultaneity); instrumental variables and two-stage least squares; and stationary and non-stationary time series analysis.
Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
A one hour revision lecture will be held in week 11 of both the MT and LT.
EC220.B for graduate students.
Formative coursework: Exercises are provided each week and are discussed in the classes. (MT) Students are required to hand in written answers to the exercises for feedback. (LT) While students are expected to attempt the weekly problem sets before each class, students will receive formal feedback on 4 occasions.
Indicative reading: J. W. Wooldridge Introductory Econometrics. A Modern Approach,5th Edition, South-Western. J. D. Angrist and J. S. Pischke Mastering 'Metrics. The Path from Cause to Effect, Princeton University Press. Further materials will be available on the EC220 Moodle page.
Assessment: Exam (12.5%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.
Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Coursework (12.5%) in the MT.

Principles of Econometrics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Greg Fischer 32L.3.09 (MT) and Dr. Marcia Schafgans 32L 4.12 (LT)
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Finance, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Course content: This course is a more advanced introduction to econometrics; it aims to present the theory and practice of empirical research in economics. Compared to EC220, in LT this course puts more emphasis on the underlying statistical theory and relies on the use of matrix algebra.
In MT, the focus of the course is on empirical questions and students will work with the econometrics software packages R or Stata analysing actual data sets. Students will learn how various tools are used to answer causal "what-if" questions (e.g., "What is the effect of monetary policy on output?") and prediction problems.

EC230
Economics in Public Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mohan Bijapur 32L.1.31 and Dr Daniel Sturm 32L.2.25
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is not open to students who are Economics specialists.
Pre-requisites: Students normally will have completed Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or their equivalent.
Course content: This course develops economic analysis for the large questions in contemporary public policy, without the need for knowledge of calculus. Precise topics and readings will be announced and are selected to be of current interest. Last year's topics included central bank independence and inflation targetting; financial crises: causes and consequences; unconventional tools of monetary policy; currency crises, currency unions; Brexit; the Greek sovereign debt crisis; growth policy; principles of taxation; inequality; and congestion charging.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
A one hour revision lecture will be held in week 11 of the MT and week 11 of the LT.
Formative coursework: Four pieces of written work to be handed in to the class teacher.
Indicative reading: There is no set course textbook. A list of selected texts and readings will be provided at the start of term.
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.
Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The Lent term examination is based on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on the Lent term syllabus.

EC240 Half Unit
PPE Interdisciplinary Research Seminar

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Maitreesh Ghatak
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is only available to second year students on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. The course will run from the beginning of Lent Term in year 2 and will continue as EC340 through to the end of Lent Term in year 3.
Course content: The course will include lectures given by top researchers from inside and outside LSE, including researchers from the public, private and third sector. The lectures will expose the students to research on the frontier in topics such as public economics, political economy and decision making in the public domain. This research and background reading will then be discussed in seminars.
Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.
The course will run across three terms starting at the beginning of Lent term in year 2 of the PPE and continuing in Michaelmas and Lent term of year 3 of the PPE. Each term will consist of a series of biweekly lectures (5 x 90mins) and seminars (5 x 60mins). Lectures will be given by outside speakers on a specific topic, such as inequality, and will allow for the opportunity to interact and ask questions. Depending on the availability of the speaker, there may be the opportunity for further discussion at an informal social event after the lecture. The seminars will discuss the previous lecture as well as examining background reading related to the topic.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.
Students will write a 2,500 word essays in groups in the LT of year 2 and MT of year 3 to prepare them for the individual assessment of year 3. In addition, students will discuss and present current research. Feedback on these essays and the presentation will help prepare students for the final individual essay and presentation.
Indicative reading: Acemoglu, Daron and James Robinson, Why Nations Fail, Crown Books, 2012; Besley, Timothy and Torsten Persson, Pillars of Prosperity: The Political Economics of Development Clusters, Princeton University Press, 2011 (will be used as the core text book, and students will be asked to familiarise themselves with the core modelling framework developed in the book); Banerjee, Abhijit and Esther Duflo, Poor Economics, Random House, 2011; Bowles, Samuel, The Moral Economy - Why Good Incentives are No Substitute for Good Citizens, Yale University Press, 2016; Fukuyama, Francis, The Origins of Political Order, Profile Books, 2011; Moore, Barrington, Social Origins of Dictatorship and Democracy, Beacon Press, 1966; North, Douglass, John Wallis and Barry Weingast, Violence and Social Orders, Cambridge University Press, 2009; Piketty, Thomas, Capital in the 21st Century, Harvard University Press, 2014; Rodrik, Dani, Economics Rules, OUP 2015; Sandel, Michael, What Money Cannot Buy - The Moral Limits of Markets, Allen Lane, 2012; Sandel, Michael, Justice- What's the Right Thing to Do, Allen Lane, 2009; Satz, Debra, Why Some Things Should Not be For Sale - The Moral Limits of Markets, OUP, 2010; Sen, Amartya, The Idea of Justice, Allen Lane, 2009. An extensive list of required and further readings will be available on Moodle.

Assessment: This information is for students in the first year of the PPE Interdisciplinary Research Seminar. Second year students please refer to the EC340 course guide.
Students will be assessed throughout the course, through essays, presentations and class participation. There will be one essay and one presentation per term in MT and LT of the third year of the PPE. The final summative grade will weigh together the presentations (20%), essays (70%) and class participation (10%) from all three terms (the essays will be weighted 15%, 15% and 40%, respectively).
The overall grade the students will receive will be one of four: fail, pass, merit and distinction.

EC301
Advanced Economic Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr L. Rachel Ngai 32L 1.15
Dr Shengxing Zhang 32L 1.16
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) and Microeconomic Principles I (EC201). Mathematics to at least the level of Mathematical Methods (MA100). Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) is also accepted (in place of EC201).
Course content: This course is divided into two sections introducing recent developments in economic theory. The first section focuses on the relationship between the financial sector and the macroeconomy, considering such questions as why there exist financial crises and asset bubbles. To answer these questions, this section aims to equip students with frameworks to understand the role of the financial market, connect theories with real life observations about imperfections of the market. Topics covered in this section include financial frictions and capital misallocation, banking and financial stability, asset pricing and market liquidity. In the second section of the course we focus on economic growth, considering questions like these: Why was GDP per capita in the UK 15 times higher than China in 1960? Why did the factor of 15 decrease to 5 in 2000? To gain an understanding of the "whys" we have to ask deeper questions: what drives economic growth? Why do some economies grow faster and other slower? Thus this part of the course studies the determinants of economic growth through capital accumulation, reallocation of resources from agriculture into manufacturing and services and, technology innovation.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will submit, and receive feedback on, two problem sets per term.
Indicative reading: The course is mainly based on lecture notes and journal articles. As an example of the level and content of the reading in economics articles, students may wish to look at the following: Lucas, R. 2000. "Some Macroeconomics for the 21st Century." Journal of Economic Perspectives, 14: 159-168. Ngai, L. R. 2004. "Barriers and the Transition to Modern Growth ". Journal of Monetary Economics 51:1353-1383. A good textbook reference for economic growth is: Jones, C. and D. Vollrath (2013), Introduction to Economic Growth. W. W. Norton & Co.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC302
Political Economy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ronny Razin 32L4.01
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent.
Course content: The course seeks to introduce students to the major theoretical models of Political. Economy and the available empirical evidence. Sample topics to be covered include: Social Choice theory and Preference aggregation; Comparative electoral systems; Political economy of income redistribution; Turnout in elections; Strategic and Sincere voting; Political Parties; Debates and Communication
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Two hours of revision lectures will be held in week 11 of LT.
Formative coursework: At least four exercises or pieces of written work will be required and assessed by class teachers.
Indicative reading: There is no text book covering all the material in the course. The following books are recommended as supplements to what is covered in the lectures. Analyzing Politics, Rationality, Behavior and Institutions, K.A. Shepsle and M.S. Bonchek. W. W. Norton & Company, New York, London. Liberalism Against Populism, W.H. Riker, Waveland Press, Prospect Heights, Illinois. For additional readings see http://econ.lse.ac.uk/courses/ec302/
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC303 Not available in 2017/18
Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Sinclair
Dr Michael Vlassopoulos
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I or II (or equivalent) and Macroeconomic Principles (or equivalent).
Course content: The course will concentrate on selected important economic policy issues and relevant economic tools. It will treat the issues at a level appropriate for students with the knowledge of economics provided by the courses already taken. The specific topics will be of contemporary interest, and will be announced by the start of each year. In any year the topics covered are likely to include some of the following: Globalisation: effects on welfare, development and income distribution. ii Inequality iii. International negotiations and trade policies iv. Global imbalances v. World trade collapse vi. Tax, fiscal policy and unemployment. vii. Monetary policy and exchange rate frameworks viii. Financial integration and currency unions ix. Financial crises and relevant policies x. endogenous growth, exhaustible resources and relevant policies.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Two hours of revision lectures will be held in week 11 of both the MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. At least four pieces of written work will be required.
Indicative reading: There is no course textbook. Detailed reading will be provided in the syllabus at the start of the year. Books that provided useful background reading Lent Term 2013/14 included: (a) General books on the European economy / Union and the Eurozone: R. Baldwin, C. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC307
Development Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oriana Bandiera 32L.3.02 and Prof Robin Burgess 32L.3.03B
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I or II (or equivalent) and Macroeconomic Principles (or equivalent). A knowledge of introductory econometrics at least to the level provided by a course such as EC220 Introduction to Econometrics, or EC221 Principles of Econometrics, is also necessary. Students who do not have all three pre-requisites and General Course students must consult with Professor Bandiera or Dr Fischer before selecting it.
Course content: The course provides an introduction to selected issues in economic development including theory, evidence and policy. It will analyse economic institutions in developing countries focusing around the themes of "Markets, Institutions and Welfare" and "Public Policy and Welfare". Failures in key markets such as those for land, labour, credit and insurance have far reaching implications both for productive efficiency and welfare. The story of economic development is, in many ways, one of how informal, imaginative institutions have evolved to fill the gaps left by these market failures. The course will study how institutions have evolved to cope with missing markets, and how they affect the allocation and the distribution of resources. The course will analyse both the channel through which the institutional environment affects efficiency and welfare and how public policy can be designed to increase welfare and growth. The course has a strong applied focus. Under each section we want to derive testable implications from the theory, subject these to econometric testing, comment on the robustness of the results obtained and draw out policy conclusions.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Feedback is provided for four assignments (two in MT and 2 in LT)
Indicative reading: Teaching in the course will be done mainly from journal articles drawn from the forefront of theoretical and applied research in development economics. Background texts for the course are A. Banerjee and E. Duflo, Poor Economics, Public Affairs, 2011 and D. Ray, Development Economics, Princeton UP, 1998.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC309
Econometric Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L4.24 and Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L4.20
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Mathematics and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Econometrics (EC221).
A good knowledge of linear algebra, calculus and statistical theory is essential, and therefore MA100 and ST102 or equivalent is required. Students taking this course who are not in BSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics or BSc Mathematics and Economics must consult with Dr. Komarova before selecting this course Course content: Introduction to the asymptotic theory of estimation and inference of economic models; Basics of large sample theory; Estimation of linear regression models (OLS, GMM, GLS); Testing hypotheses and model specifications; Estimation of nonlinear models (MLE, Nonlinear least squares); systems of equations; time series analysis.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: The main text for the lectures is R Davidson & J G MacKinnon, Econometric Theory and Methods,Oxford University Press (2004). Other useful texts include Davidson (2000), Econometric Theory Amemiya (1985), Advanced Econometrics; and Hayashi (2000), Econometrics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC310
Behavioural Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L3.21
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
Students taking the course as an outside option are required to meet the pre-requisites as detailed below.
Pre-requisites: Ideally, students will have completed EC202 (or equivalent). A highly motivated student who has done well in EC201 -- as a guideline 65 or better – is welcome on the course, if he or she finds handling economics mathematically comes naturally. Any such student should see Dr Levy before the course starts. Fluency in calculus is essential, and some knowledge of methods of mathematical proof, including those using sets, is necessary.
Course content: The course will expose students to a number of major topics in Behavioural Economics, and will link theory with empirical applications. The first half of the course will focus on departures from neoclassical preferences, while the latter half will cover departures from rational expectations. The particular topics to be covered include:
- Reference Dependent Preferences and Loss Aversion
- Social Preferences
- Hyperbolic Discounting
- Naiveté and Self-Control
- Projection Bias
- Happiness and Adaptation
- Heuristics and Biases
- Inattention and Shrouding
- Nudging and Framing
- Behavioural Welfare Analysis

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: At least four exercises or pieces of written work will be required and assessed by class teachers.
Indicative reading: Congdon, William, Jeffrey Kling, and Sendhil Mullainathan. Policy and Choice: Public Finance Through the Lens of Behavioral Economics (selected chapters). Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC311
History of Economics: How Theories Change

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: To Be Announced
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course examines the ways in which economics has developed from the Mercantilists of the 17th century to the Neoclassical thinking of the later 20th century. The course will explore how the theories, concepts and methods of economics have changed over the lasts 250 years, focusing on Europe and North America.'. We will use the original texts in order to understand how economists of the past approached perennial questions (about for example, the sources of growth or the role of money) and resolved them in the context of the economic conditions of their own time and place; and use theories about scientific change to understand the longer history of economics.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to discuss assigned texts and produce several pieces of written work.
Indicative reading: A reading list of original texts and secondary literature will be given at the beginning of the course. For an introduction, students may read R L Heilbroner's, The Worldly Philosophers; for general background, consult Roger E Backhouse's, The Penguin History of Economics or David Colander & Harry Landreth's, History of Economic Thought.
Reading will be made available in a course reading pack.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC313
Industrial Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L.4.19
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) and Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221). Students who believe they have completed an equivalent course instead of one of these must receive permission from Prof Pesendorfer first.
Course content: The aim of the course is to provide students with a working knowledge of theoretical and empirical methods for industry studies. Topics may include: monopoly, price discrimination, pre-requisites in game theory, oligopoly theory, product differentiation, demand estimation, production function estimation, conduct in concentrated industries (cartel stability, limit pricing, etc.), empirical techniques for oligopoly models, identification of conduct, markets with asymmetric information, entry in strategic settings, advertising, auction markets, empirics of auction markets, winner's curse, insurance and contract design. The topics will be discussed with detailed applications for selected industries and considering competition policy questions.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: At least four problem sets will be required and assessed by class teachers.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. The primary text is Tirole's The Theory of Industrial Organization. Specific sections will be assigned (others are too advanced for this course). There will be additional required readings on empirical articles and case studies on competition policy.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC315
International Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Keyu Jin 32L.1.17
Prof Dennis Novy
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent and Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or equivalent.
Course content: International Macroeconomics: This section of the course offers an introduction to international macroeconomic theory and develops the main tools for macroeconomic policy analysis. We start by studying the balance of payments and the causes and consequences of global imbalances, followed by an in-depth study of the determination of exchange rates, money, and prices in open economies. We discuss the costs and benefits of different nominal exchange rate regimes and their sustainability, as well as examine the causes and consequences of debt and default, speculative attacks and financial crises.
International Trade: This section of the course offers an introduction to international trade theory and develops the main tools for trade policy analysis. We start by studying the patterns of trade distinguishing between inter-industry and intra-industry trade flows. We then proceed to an in-depth analysis of the causes and the effects of those flows based on the concepts of absolute and comparative advantage, relative factor abundance and relative factor intensity, increasing returns to scale and imperfect competition. Finally we discuss the gains and losses from trade, their distribution among people and firms, and their implications for the debate on trade liberalization vs. protectionism .
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete a problem set weekly, and two of these each term will be collected at random for marking and feedback.
Indicative reading: Paul Krugman, Marc Melitz and Maurice Obstfeld; International Economics: Theory and Policy, 10th ed.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC317
Labour Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels 32L2.10
Dr Pawel Bukowski 32L 2.01
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Management, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent and Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or equivalent.
Course content: This course is an introduction to the economic analysis of behaviour and institutions in the labour market. Primarily microeconomic models are applied to labour market phenomena, such as labour supply and participation, labour demand by firms, and wage determination under different institutional settings. Students learn how to distinguish alternative theories empirically using real world data. The course explores how models and empirical analysis can be applied to evaluate labour market policies, such as the minimum wage, welfare programmes, and immigration restrictions. We will also examine labour market inequality and the role of technological change. The goal of the course is to enable students to think independently about labour market issues, drawing on the models and tools developed during the course.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Problems sets in the course involve hands-on statistical analysis of real world data.
Indicative reading: G Borjas, Labor Economics. Additional reading, drawn from journals, will be suggested during the course.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC319
Games and Economic Behaviour

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Ellis 32L 3.15 and Dr Francesco Nava 32L 3.20
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent. Fluency in calculus is essential, and some knowledge of analysis, linear algebra and set theory is advantageous. A highly motivated student with a less technical background could enrol on the course, if he or she finds handling economics mathematically comes naturally. Any such student should see Dr Nava or Dr Ellis before the course starts.
Course content: This course reviews fundamental concepts in Economic Theory and presents some of its most successful applications. The first part of the course consists of an introduction to Auction Theory. It presents standard auction formats and discusses strategic behaviour in such environments. Auctions will be analysed both in private and interdependent value environments. Fundamental topics such as the revenue equivalence theorem, the optimal auction design problem and the linkage principle will be covered in detail. Departures from the standard model will be also considered allowing for heterogeneity among players, risk aversion, and budget constraints. The focus of the course is mainly theoretical, but when possible some evidence supporting the formal models will be discussed with references to relevant work in the field. The second part of the course will revise concepts in non-cooperative game theory and will introduce students to game theoretic models of bargaining, voting, and communication. After setting up the primitives of the game theory framework, different solution concepts will be analysed with an emphasis on different applications. In studying models of bargaining, both axiomatic and non-cooperative approaches will be examined, such as Nash's axiomatic approach and the Rubinstein-Stahl model.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
A revision lecture held in week 11 of Michaelmas term.
Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. At least four pieces of written work will be required.
Indicative reading: M. Osborne, "An Introduction to Game Theory", Oxford University Press, 2003. V. Krishna, "Auction Theory", Academic Press, 2009.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC321
Monetary Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kevin Sheedy 32L1.09
Professor Sir Charles Bean 32L 1.18
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent and Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or equivalent. Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) or equivalent are also strongly recommended. Students who have not taken either of these two courses are still welcome provided they can show other evidence of a strong quantitative background.
Course content: The course provides an introduction to monetary theory, to the effects of monetary variables on the macroeconomic system, the role of the central bank and the conduct of monetary policy. Subjects covered include: The nature and function of money; Asset prices and the term structure of interest rates; Classical monetary theory, neutrality and inflation; Interest-rate feedback rules; The interaction between monetary and fiscal policy; Theories of the demand for money; The market for reserves; Financial markets and financial intermediaries; The transmission mechanism of monetary policy and theories of the Phillips curve; The optimal rate of inflation and optimal stabilisation policy; The positive theory of inflation and the case for central bank independence; Policymaking in an uncertain environment; The role of banks in the transmission mechanism and the case for bank regulation; Financial crises and the role of the central bank as a lender of last resort; The 2007-8 financial crisis and unconventional monetary policies.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
A one-hour revision lecture will be held in week 11 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students are required to submit two essays or exercises in the MT and the LT. Feedback is provided on these by the class teacher.
Indicative reading: The most useful text books are M Lewis & P Mizen, Monetary Economics, and C Walsh, Monetary Theory and Policy 3rd edn. Other useful texts include: C Goodhart, Money, Information and Uncertainty, 2nd edn; D Laidler, The Demand for Money, 3rd edn; R Aliber and C Kindleberger, Manias, Panics and Crashes: A History of Financial Crises, 7th edn.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC325
Public Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Reck 32L.3.16 and Prof Camille Landais 32L.3.06
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent.
Course content: The first part of Michaelmas term lectures focuses on the issues of equity, efficiency and the role of the state. We begin by looking at questions of equity and alternative theories of the role of the state. We then look at problems of public choice and political economics, and go on to consider the implications of recent research in behavioural economics for welfare analysis. We conclude the first part by discussing issues of market failure, public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. The second part is devoted to the evaluation problem and empirical methods. The third part studies education policies, and the fourth part is devoted to social insurance programs. The final part is devoted to taxation, behavioural responses and the design of tax policy. We begin by examining the effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply and migration, and then go on to consider incomes and behavioural responses at the top of the income distribution. We look at the implications of taxation for economic efficiency and explore the optimal taxation of commodities and income. The final lecture is devoted to the question of development and public finance.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Feedback is provided for one class presentation and one essay (1,500 words) each term (Michaelmas and Lent).
Indicative reading: The recommended textbook for the course is Jonathan Gruber (2011) Public Finance and Public Policy, 3rd edition, Worth Publishers. Many of the readings will be journal articles.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC331
Quantitative Economics Project

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L3.21
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or exceptionally Introduction to Econometrics (EC220).
Course content: This course provides an opportunity to learn how to do independent quantitative economic research at an advanced level. Students are expected to pursue research on a question of their own choice under the supervision of a member of staff. They are expected to formulate an initial proposal near the start of MT in order to be matched with a supervisor, refining their choice into a manageable research question during that term. Following independent work during MT, a seminar in week 9 will review student progress. In the LT seminars, each student will present a preliminary outline of the results for comments by fellow students and teachers, and later a follow-up presentation on further, more final results and a draft dissertation. Seminars in LT are formally timetabled as classes.
Teaching: 4 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. In week 11 of the MT and the LT students will work independently (with supervisory advice).
Formative coursework: Students are required to prepare material for their presentations in the seminar, but this is not formally graded. Students are additionally expected to participate in discussion on the presentations of other students' as this is part of the training of a research economist, but this is also not formally assessed.
Indicative reading: As each student chooses an individual research question, there is no common reading list for this course.
Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the LT.
A completed dissertation (up to 10,000 words, not including abstract, footnotes, bibliography and tables) on an approved subject will be required to be submitted by 25 April 2018. There is no written examination. The dissertation carries all the marks.

EC333
Problems of Applied Econometrics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels 32L.2.10
Dr Rachael Meager 32L.3.13
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent, and either Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221).
Students who have completed EC220 rather than EC221 should refer to Dr Gentry for advice before starting the course regarding additional preparatory work for Lent term course material.
Course content: The purpose of this course is to provide a solid grounding in recent developments in applied econometrics. A major feature of the course is the use of both analytical and computer-based (data) exercises for the classes, which will enable students to gain practical experience in analysing a wide variety of econometric problems. The topics covered in the Michaelmas term include analysis of experimental and non-experimental data, identification of average treatment effects and local average treatment effects, weak instrument problems, quantile regressions, and regression discontinuity. The Lent term will focus on topics in the analysis of cross section and panel data with static and dynamic models, including fixed and random effects, nonlinear models, issues of measurement error, selection and attrition in panel contexts, binary choice models, maximum likelihood estimation, and generalized method of moments.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Michaelmas term: 2-3 problem sets, usually to include econometric questions and applications. Feedback to be provided by the class teacher. Lent term: 3 problem sets, usually to include econometric questions and applications. Feedback to be provided by the class teacher.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of each term of the course. In parts of the Michaelmas we will use sections from the textbook "*Mostly Harmless Econ*ometrics" by Angrist and Pischke. There is no single text for the Lent term, but useful books (somewhat more advanced than the lectures) are Hsiao, "The Analysis of Panel Data" and Wooldridge, "Econometrics".
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

EC340
PPE Interdisciplinary Research Seminar

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charlie Bean 32L 1.18
Prof Erik Berglof
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is only available to third year students on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. The course started at the beginning of Lent Term in year 2 as EC240 and continues as EC340 through to the end of Lent Term in year 3.
Course content: The course will include lectures given by top researchers from inside and outside LSE, including researchers from the public, private and third sector. The lectures will expose the students to research on the frontier in topics such as public economics, political economy and decision making in the public domain. This research and background reading will then be discussed in seminars.
Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.
The course will run across three terms starting at the beginning of Lent term in year 2 of the PPE and continuing in Michaelmas and Lent term of year 3 of the PPE. Each term will consist of a series of biweekly lectures (5 x 90 mins) and seminars (5 x 60 mins). Lectures will be given by outside speakers on a specific topic, such as inequality, and will allow for the opportunity to interact and ask questions. Depending on the availability of the speaker, there may be the opportunity for further discussion at an informal social event after the lecture. The seminars will discuss the previous lecture as well as examining background reading related to the topic.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one essay and one presentation each in the MT and LT.
Students will write a 2,500 word essays in groups in the LT of year 2 and MT of year 3 and an individual essay of 2,000 words in LT in year 3. In addition, students will discuss and present current research. Feedback on these group essays and presentations will help prepare students for the final individual essay and presentation.
Indicative reading: Besley, Timothy and Torsten Persson, Pillars of Prosperity: The Political Economics of Development Clusters, Princeton University Press, 2011 (will be used as the core text book, and students will be asked to familiarise themselves with the core modelling framework developed in the book); Acemoglu, Daron and James Robinson, Why Nations Fail, Crown Books, 2012; Banerjee, Abhijit and Esther Duflo, Poor Economics, Random House, 2011; Fukuyama, Francis, The Origins of Political Order, Profile Books, 2011; Moore, Barrington, Social Origins of Dictatorship and Democracy, Beacon Press, 1966; North, Douglass, John Wallis and Barry Weingast, Violence and Social Orders, Cambridge University Press, 2009; Piketty, Thomas, Capital in the 21st Century, Harvard University Press, 2014; Sen, Amartya, The Idea of Justice, Allen Lane, 2009. An extensive list of required and further readings will be available on Moodle.

Assessment: This information is for students in the second year of the PPE Interdisciplinary Research Seminar. First year students please refer to the EC240 course guide.
Students will be assessed throughout the course, through essays, presentations and class participation. There will be one summative essay per term and one presentation per term in MT and LT of the third year of the PPE.
Presentation (20%) and essay (70%, 2000 words) in the MT and LT of year 3.
Class participation in EC240 and EC340 (10%).
The overall grade the students will receive will be one of four: fail, pass, merit and distinction.

EH101
The Internationalisation of Economic Growth, 1870 to the present day

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eric Schneider SAR.5.16 and Dr Christopher Minns SAR.5.12
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course examines the inter-relationships between the development of the international economy and the growth of national economies since the late nineteenth century. The course is designed to introduce students not only to a wide variety of topics and issues, but also to the wide variety of approaches used by historians. The course includes analyses of the original leading nation, Britain, and its replacement, the United States, we well as the catch-up of areas such as continental Europe, and the failure to catch-up of earlier well-placed areas such as Latin America. The effects of major events - such as wars and debt crises - are investigated, and we also consider the implications of changing global economic institutions, such as the Gold Standard and IMF, as well as the effects of sometimes rapid changes in product and process technology.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Lectures: There is one lecture course (EH101) with 21 lectures in the MT, LT and ST. A lecture programme will be circulated at the first meeting. This course uses Moodle to provides a web based location for your core LSE course materials. The lectures are accompanied by weekly classes (EH101.A). Classes are given by several different teachers. They do not necessarily deal with the same topics each week but they all cover the same ground. There is a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four very short papers during the year and two longer essays.
Indicative reading: The following are particularly useful: A G Kenwood & A L Lougheed, The Growth of the International Economy, 1820-2000 (2000); J Foreman-Peck, A History of the World Economy; R Floud & P Johnson (Eds), The Cambridge Economic History of Modern Britain, Vol 2 & Vol 3 (2004); T Kemp, The Climax of Capitalism. The US Economy in the 20th Century; P Johnson (Ed), Twentieth-Century Britain: Economic, Social and Cultural Change (1994); E Jones, L Frost & C White, Coming Full Circle. A History of the International Monetary System; M S Blackford, The Rise of Modern Business in the USA, Britain and Japan; William Easterly, The Elusive Quest for Growth (2002). (A fuller reading list and class topics will be given out at the first meeting.)
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EH102
Pre-industrial Economic History

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oliver Volckart SAR 6.10
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: This course surveys long-term processes of growth and development in late medieval and early modern Europe (fourteenth to eighteenth centuries). It focuses on the transition from a hierarchical society of estates or corporate orders to a market society based on legal equality. There are two core questions: First, why did this transition occur in an evolutionary way in England and the Netherlands, whereas it was severely delayed the rest of Europe? And second, how is it related to the 'small divergence' between the Dutch Republic and England on the one side and most of the Continent on the other, where the North-West enjoyed significantly higher living standards and per capita incomes than other countries even before industrialisation began? The course thus raises fundamental questions about societies and economies: Was pre-industrial economic growth transitory and regional? Or was it a recurrent, even normal phenomenon, which however could occasionally be reversed? Was Dutch and British success the result of their social and institutional features? Or was it a combination of geographical factors and good fortune? To what degree did early modern governments help or hinder economic development? Did Europe's political fragmentation hold back the continent's development, or did competition between states have beneficial consequences? In conclusion, can we define an optimal combination of social, political, and economic institutions that sustained growth in the past (and thus, perhaps, in the future)?
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
Students will give presentations on topics that form part of the course content.
Students will receive structured feedback on their formative coursework (both on their essay and the presentation).

Making Economic History Count

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Debin Ma SAR.6.12
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is very strongly recommended for all first year Economic History students.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: This course provides students a brief, non-technical introduction to the quantitative methods that economic historians use to understand the past. It assumes no prior statistical knowledge or experience. It will teach students basic statistics (descriptive statistics and inferential statistics) and how to implement and visualise these statistics with Excel. These skills will be essential for the independent research projects conducted in the second and third year and are highly desired skills on the job market. In addition, it will introduce students to regression analysis and teach them to interpret regression tables. Regression analysis is a very common methodology employed in the economic history and economics literature, so understanding how to interpret regressions will allow students to engage with readings for other economics and economic history courses at a higher level. All first year Economic History students are very strongly encouraged to take this course.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. Some of the classes will take the form of computer based workshops.
Formative coursework: The formative coursework will consist of weekly exercises to give students practise with Excel and the methods being taught in the lecture. There will be a formative take home exam over Christmas Break (due week 2 of Lent Term) to test students' knowledge of the material.
Indicative reading: Feinstein, Charles and Mark Thomas, Making History Count: A Primer in Quantitative Methods for Historians (Cambridge, 2002).

Assessment:
There is no summative assessment for this course.

Money and Finance: From the Middle Ages to Modernity

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oliver Volckart SAR 6.10 and Dr Olivier Accominotti SAR 5.14
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course provides an overview of the main developments in monetary and financial history from 800 to the present day, taking the students from the simple beginnings of medieval European monetary history to the complex financial arrangements of the modern world. The first part of the course covers the emergence of money and finance from the medieval ages to the early modern period. The second part examines the main developments in the global financial system since the nineteenth century. Historical developments in major European and non-European countries (England, Spain, Italy, France, Germany, USA) will be discussed and compared. The course is designed to introduce students to the main concepts of money and finance (financial development, financial integration, monetary policy, banking crises etc.) and to provide a long run perspective to the current policy debate.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: The students will produce 3 formative essays. The exercise will help them practice academic writing (structuring and presenting arguments, providing explanations, referencing etc.); a skill both necessary for the dissertation they are expected to write in year 3 and helpful for the exam of this course that will take place in summer term. The class presentation has a formative character, too. Students will practice presenting complex arguments to their peers and answering questions from the audience.

The Making of an Economic Superpower: China since 1850

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Debin Ma SAR 6.12
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides a survey of long-term economic change in China from the mid-nineteenth century to the present. It focuses on China's long path to becoming a major global economic power at the beginning of the new millennium. The course examines the importance of ideological and institutional change in bringing about economic transformations by surveying major historical turning points such as the opening of China in the mid-nineteenth century, the collapse of the Qing in 1911, the rise of the Communist regime in the 1950s and the adoption of a reform policy since the late 1970s. It examines both the constraints as well as the capacity of a giant traditional economy to respond and regenerate in the face of external challenge from outside since the Opium War of the mid-nineteenth century. The economic analysis of Chinese economic history will examine both macro and micro level questions.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work.
Indicative reading: Naughton. B., The Chinese economy, transitions and growth (MIT Press); Rawski. T., Economic growth in prewar China (Univ. of Berkeley Press); Brand, L. and Rawski. T (eds.) Economic change in China, c. 1800-1950 (Cambridge University Press); Spence, J.D The search for modern China (New York : W.W. Norton).
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (15%, 1500 words) in the MT and LT.
Essay (15%, 1500 words) in the ST.
Coursework of two take home essays of 1,500 words (inclusive of bibliography and footnotes) to be completed independently by each individual student. The essays should develop arguments, analysis and evidences on a specific research question (or a set of research questions) chosen by the student in consultation with teachers and should be related to the course materials covered. While it is essential to demonstrate one's grasp of the course material, students are encouraged to develop their own insights and arguments going beyond the course material.

Africa and the World Economy, 1500-2000

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner SAR 5.07
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: This course examines aspects of the economic history of sub-Saharan Africa, focusing on the nature and consequences for Africa of its external relationships. Lectures provide a chronological introduction to significant periods in African economic history, from the pre-colonial period through the slave trade, different periods of colonial rule, post-independence state-led development, and Structural Adjustment. Classes focus on case studies from individual countries and regions, which illustrate the diversity of experience across the continent. Primary source material related to the case studies will be included in the readings and facilitate the development of research skills in African economic history.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Latin America and the International Economy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Sims, SAR.6.15
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course examines the development trajectory of Latin America and its relation with the international economy from the Early Modern period (c. 1700) to the present. It focuses on the political and economic factors that drove - and that resulted from- the region's engagement with the world attending to the environment, population and factor endowments, institutions and policies. The causes and outcomes of this 'engagement' will be explored in the following broad themes: the determinants of Latin American growth performance, the political economic legacy of European rule and of the formation of modern states and markets; the ambivalent relation with international markets and institutions, the continuous quest for development together with political and macroeconomic instability; the economic aspects of different political experiments and political culture - from authoritarian to democratic regimes and various generations of populism interspersed with military rule and direct democracy- and the short and long run impact on equality, poverty and the prospect for sustained intensive growth.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Theories and Evidence in Economic History

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick Wallis and Dr Eric Schneider SAR.5.18
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: The course examines theories and concepts used in economic history, and provides an introduction to the methods used by economic historians to collect evidence and generate inference on relevant historical questions. The course will begin with an examination the development of history as a subject and discipline. Consideration will be given to the assumptions made in economics and their principal applications in economic history. The course will also introduce students to essential methods for the design and execution of a research project. Students will be introduced to the analysis of historical arguments and the critical interpretation of primary and secondary sources. The course will also provide students with the basic quantitative skills required to pursue an independent research project, and to engage critically with current scholarship in economic history.
The course will include a non-assessed component that serves to prepare students for their final year dissertation, covering the formulation of the thesis question, primary and secondary sources, analysis of evidence, and structuring and writing up the thesis. Students are expected to submit a preliminary title for their final year dissertation before the end of ST and get this approved by their supervisors.
Teaching: 11 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 11 hours of lectures, 14 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Business and Economic Performance since 1945: Britain in International Context

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Cirenza
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course examines the successes and failures of British business and industry, with an emphasis on the post-World War II period. It examines many of the hypotheses on why the UK economy grew more slowly than other OECD nations during this period. Explanations of relative economic decline are examined in the context of comparisons with other European nations and with the US and Japan. The course is organised to combine economy- wide factors, such as education, management organisation, labour relations, and membership in the EU, with case studies of industries as diverse as cotton, cars, banking and steel. By interacting themes and case studies, students get a sense of how national policies interact with business opportunities, and how governments can both aid and harm business. They also get a sense of why much – but not all – of British business history in the post-war period has been characterised as one of relative decline. The main attention is on the post-war period, including current changes in performance, but the historical roots of Britain's recent performance are also considered.

The Economic History of South Asia, 1600-2000

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tirthankar Roy SAR 6.16
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: South Asia is one of the fastest growing economies of the world. The region is also home to nearly one-third of the world's poorest people. How did this paradoxical mix between the creation of wealth and persistence of poverty come into being? Does economic history suggest an answer? The course introduces the stylized facts and major debates in the economic history of modern South Asia. It considers the legacies of empires and developmental states, globalizations of the past and the present times, and the role of indigenous institutions and resource endowments. The course begins with a discussion of empires and markets before European colonial rule began, with special reference to maritime trade and craft production, in which the European East India companies were interested in. For the colonial period, the major theme is the transformation engendered by colonialism and international economic integration. In the sixty years since the end of colonial rule, developmental states tried to overcome the obstacles to growth as the economists interpreted them. The course considers how successful they were in meeting the aim, and why they were limitedly successful.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Historical Economic Geography: Cities, Markets and Regions in the 19th and 20th Centuries

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Juan Roses Vendoiro SAR 5.15
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: The course explores how and why the location of economic activities changes across time and space from industrialization up to the present. One goal for this course is to demonstrate the importance of history in the formation of the present-day economic landscape. An equally important goal is to demonstrate the applicability of the study of economic geography to the understanding of historical patterns of development and underdevelopment. The course is not organized chronologically but thematically. Particular attention focuses on four major issues: the development of cities, the creation of national markets, the historical basis for manufacturing agglomeration, and the historical evolution and sources of regional inequality.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
There will be a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: All students are expected to write one formative essay, or similar piece of work, and make one formative presentation that will not be used in the final assessment.

Slavery from Ancient Greece to the Gulag

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Oliver Volckart
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: The course surveys slave labour-employing economies from a long-term and global perspective on the basis of the research literature and of primary source material. It covers the period from the fifth century BCE to the second half of the twentieth century and not only Ancient and Christian Europe but also the Islamic world and the Americas. Slavery in Classical Greece and in the Roman Empire will be discussed just as well as the employment of military slaves in the medieval and early modern Muslim empires. Further core topics are the early modern Atlantic slave trade, black slavery in the American South, the formal abolition of slavery and the use of slave or quasi slave labour in the totalitarian dictatorships of the twentieth century.
The course raises fundamental questions first about the nature of work in different historical periods, societies and economic systems, and second about the criteria that allow distinguishing economic systems. What was a slave? How did the work of a slave differ from that of a free person? Was slavery always inefficient? To what extent was it compatible with ‘feudalism’, a free market economy, or capitalism, and did it hold back technological progress and economic growth? One of the core hypotheses is that a clear-cut distinction between slavery and freedom is historically and geographically an exception: In most periods and cultures, there was a fluid transition, with labour being not either enslaved or free, but rather more or less free. The course will address the question of what this implies for the analysis of historical labour markets and their outcomes as reflected, for example in factor prices.
Teaching: 2 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
Following an introductory lecture in week 1 of the Michaelmas Term, the course will be taught over 19 two-hour seminars
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the MT.
Indicative reading: Engerman, S. L. (1973). Some Considerations Relating to Property Rights in Man. Journal of Economic History 33, 43-65. Fynn-Paul, J. (2009). Empire, Monotheism and Slavery in the Greater Mediterranean Region from Antiquity to the Early Modern Era. Past & Present 205, 3-40. Klein, H. S. (2010). The Atlantic Slave Trade. Corporate Finance, Investments and Financial Markets

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Martin Oehmke and Dr Georgy Chabakauri
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212).
Including both portfolio theory and corporate finance (FM212 or equivalent course).
Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and will be a broad-based follow-up to FM212 Principles of Finance. The goal is to broaden, and selectively deepen, students' understanding of finance, building on their existing knowledge of financial economics. The course will cover a broad range of topics, with both a theoretical and an empirical emphasis. These include topics in corporate finance, investments and performance evaluation and international finance. The course consists of two interchangeable ten-week components, one on investments and international finance, and the other on corporate finance.
The first component provides students with a way of thinking about investment decisions by examining the empirical behaviour of security prices. We first study the empirical evidence of the CAPM and other asset pricing models, and then analyse different tests of market efficiency focusing on event studies and investment anomalies. We also study the main empirical findings in behavioural finance. We then learn how to measure the performance of a portfolio manager and to attribute it to different types of skill. Finally, this section of the course introduces the foundations of international finance and explores issues related to international portfolio management.
The second component of the course examines theory and evidence concerning major corporate financial policy decisions. We focus particularly on the firm's decision to finance with debt vs. equity. We will start with the famous Modigliani and Miller proposition and will then analyse the impact of taxes, financial distress, agency frictions, and asymmetric information on financing decisions. We will then critically analyse different valuation methods and investment criteria (NPV, IRR, APV, WACC method, valuation by comparables) and conclude the course with a critical analysis of the market for corporate control.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussions.
Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Bodie, Kane & Marcus, Investments (Irwin) and Grinblatt & Titman, Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy (Irwin, McGraw-Hill).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Market Anomalies and Asset Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michela Verardo
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed FM212 Principles of Finance.
Course content: This course will examine the extent to which financial markets are informationally efficient. Topics include notions of market efficiency, return predictability in bond, stock, and derivatives markets, limits to arbitrage and other theories of return predictability.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.
Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Bodie, Kane & Marcus, Investments (Irwin) and Grinblatt & Titman, Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy (Irwin, McGraw-Hill).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.

Theories of Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michela Verardo
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed FM212 Principles of Finance.
Course content: This course examines theory and evidence concerning major corporate financial policy decisions. It will focus particularly on the firm's decision to finance with debt vs. equity, the impact of taxes on such decisions, and the role of dividends. We will begin with the Modigliani and Miller proposition and discuss the firm's choice to raise capital using debt versus equity and the firm's choice to payout earnings using dividends versus repurchases. We will analyze the impact of taxes, financial distress, and asymmetric information on such decisions. We will also cover optimal managerial compensation, take on the role of the policy maker to learn about corporate governance mechanisms and discuss some recent corporate scandals. Finally, we will review empirical evidence from a wide range of international sources to support or refute the theories we discussed.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of lectures in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.
Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Bodie, Kane & Marcus, Investments (Irwin) and Grinblatt & Titman, Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy (Irwin, McGraw-Hill).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.

Applied Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vicente Cunat
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212).
Course content: This course will illustrate and extend the topics covered in "Principles of Corporate Finance" with a range of case studies. The course focuses on core concepts in corporate finance, that can be divided into two main topics. The first topic is capital structure. It covers issues such as how do firms choose how much debt and equity to keep in their balance sheets and the process of issuing them. The second topic are corporate deals that re-shape the financial structure of a company such as mergers and acquisitions, divestitures, initial public offerings or debt restructuring. The teaching of both topics will be covered using a combination of lectures and case studies with a very applied approach.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of lectures in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.
Indicative reading: A course pack will be distributed that includes case studies as well as additional readings such as textbook chapters, and practitioner articles.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Advanced Asset Markets

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ian Martin
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: This course will cover the modern theories of asset valuation. Topics include the principle of no-arbitrage, martingales and state prices, valuation by arbitrage, option pricing and risk-neutral valuation, factor models and the arbitrage pricing theory, equilibrium pricing and capital asset pricing models, bond pricing and the term structure of interest rates.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.
Indicative reading: "Asset Pricing" by Cochrane.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM320
Quantitative Finance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson and Dr Rohit Rahi
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212), Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Introduction to Econometrics, Principles of Econometrics or other statistics courses where at least linear regression models are covered are recommended but not required. Students who have not taken Principles of Finance, but have an excellent quantitative background, may be allowed to take this course at the discretion of the course leader.
Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and builds upon FM212 Principles of Finance.
The main topics covered are financial risk analysis and financial risk management (first part of the course) and derivatives pricing (second part). As such, this course is complementary to FM300 Corporate Finance, Investments and Financial Markets, with minimal overlap.
The first part of the course provides students with a thorough understanding of market risk from both a practical and technical point of view. We discuss the empirical properties of market prices (fat tails, volatility clusters, etc.), forecasting of prices, concepts of financial risk (volatility, Value-at-Risk, etc.), volatility models (ARCH, GARCH, etc.), and we analyse how interactions and feedback between market players can generate endogenous risk and liquidity crises. Finally, we discuss credit markets and liquidity, with applications to the current situation in financial markets.
This part of the course presents methods and models used by banks and other financial institutions in the management of risk and allocation of risk capital, as well as models of financial crises. Students apply the models to real financial data using Matlab, a computer software popular in both industry and academia. No prior knowledge of programming is assumed: students will learn-by-doing in class. Students will at times use data and software for classwork assignments.
The second part of the course focuses on derivatives, with a particular emphasis on equity derivatives (standard call and put options, exotic options), futures and forward contracts, and interest rate derivatives (swaps, caps and floors, swaptions).
We systematically address three basic questions: how do these products work, i.e. what are their payoffs? How can they be used, for hedging purposes or as part of trading strategies? And above all: how are they priced? The course emphasizes a small number of powerful ideas: absence of arbitrage, replication, and risk-neutral pricing. These are typically introduced in the context of discrete-time models, but the course also covers some well-known continuous-time models, starting with a comprehensive treatment of the Black-Scholes model. The level of mathematics is appropriate for third-year students with a solid quantitative background. Continuous-time stochastic processes and stochastic calculus will be introduced as we go.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 22 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussion.
Indicative reading: J Danielsson, Financial Risk Forecasting: The Theory and Practice of Forecasting Market Risk will be the required textbook for the first half of the course. For the second half of the course, there is no required textbook, but the following is an excellent reference: J Hull, Options, Futures, and Other Derivatives.
Assessment: Exam (87.5%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (10%) and coursework (2.5%) in the MT.

Introduction to Political Science

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Hix
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course is an introduction to politics in a globalised world, with a focus on how political science tries to understand and explain cross-country and cross-time differences. The course will begin by introducing students to some of the main empirical variations in political behaviour, political institutions, and outcomes across the world, focusing mainly on democratic and partially democratic countries (in both the developed and developing world), and introducing students to some of the basic theoretical ideas and research methods in political science.
Each subsequent week will be devoted to a substantive topic, where a more detailed analysis of political behaviour, political institutions, or political outcomes will be presented and various theoretical explanations will be assessed. Most weeks will involve an interactive element. For example, students will be required to 'adopt a country', from the range of democratic or partially democratic countries across the world (which cannot be a student's home country). The aim is for a student to become an expert on the political behaviour, institutions and outcomes in his or her adopted country, particularly to provide material and knowledge for class discussions.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
There will be reading week in Week 6 of both terms.
Formative coursework: Formative Assessment:
• Problem set (MT)
• Essay (MT)
• Moodle entries on adopted country task (most/every week/s)

This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed a suitable course in Anthropology, Sociology, Political Science, International Relations or History. Government students should have completed GV101 Introduction to Political Science.
Course content: This course considers debates concerning the increasing importance of nationalism and ethnic identity in modern history, their impact on political movements, states and international relations.
There are three principal concerns:
1. Theories of nationalism and ethnicity, including primordialist, ethno-symbolic, modernist and post-modernist approaches. These will be compared and critiqued.
2. The development of various kinds of nations, nation-states and nationalisms from pre-modern Europe to the global present, and a consideration of various concepts (e.g. civic/ethnic, political/cultural, Asian and African forms of nationalism) frequently used to understand as well as evaluate these historical and contemporary phenomena.
3. Nationalism and transnational politics, including problems of state sovereignty, secession and national self-determination; the European union, globalisation and religious fundamentalism.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Power and Politics in the Modern World: Comparative Perspectives

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Woodruff
Other members of Government Department staff will also teach on the course.
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is capped at 4 groups.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).
Other background in political science will be considered as a substitute for GV101 for students outside of Government.
Course content: This course will acquaint students with the contemporary study of comparative politics, focusing on theories susceptible to testing with narrative historical evidence. Students will learn to address the methodological challenges of developing and testing such theories. The course will treat a wide variety of themes, including ethnic and political violence, the political impact of natural resources in developing countries, social movements and revolution, the political economy of distribution, and political ideologies. With respect to each theme, students will receive a grounding in theories of the topic and and samples of application to empirical cases drawn from throughout the developed, developing, and post-Communist world.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Classes will run from Weeks 2-5 and 7-11 in MT and Weeks 1-5 and 7-11 in LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of both terms.
The Week 11 lecture in LT will be a revision lecture and there will be one revision class per group in Week 1 of ST.

Research Design in Political Science

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Leeper
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course will introduce students to the fundamentals of research design in political science. The course will cover a range of topics, starting from the formulation of research topics and research questions, the development of theory and empirically testable hypotheses, the design of data collection activities, and basic qualitative and quantitative data analysis techniques. The course will address a variety of approaches to empirical political science research including experimental and quasi-experimental designs, large-n survey research, small-n case selection, and comparative/historical comparisons. As a result, topics covered in the course will be varied and span all areas of political science including political behaviour, institutions, comparative politics, international relations, and public administration.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
There will be a Week 6 reading week in both terms.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 8 problem sets in the MT and LT.
Approximately every other week throughout the course, students will complete a short "problem set" that allows them to apply material from the course to concrete political science examples (e.g., identifying design elements of a published research paper; proposing strategies for answering a given research question, etc.).

Contemporary Political Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr David Axelsen
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Introduction to Political Theory or equivalent.
Course content: This course provides an advanced introduction to contemporary political theory. The course is divided into two parts. The first focuses on key political concepts, such as liberty, equality, justice, rights, authority and democracy. The second turns to particularly pressing ethical questions characterizing the political domain. Some of these questions arise within the domestic political arena (e.g., civil disobedience; animal rights; respect for minority cultures), others in the international/global one (e.g., global poverty relief; terrorism; global climate change). Although the course will be concept and problem-driven, along the way, students will also be exposed to the views of leading contemporary political theorists, including John Rawls, Robert Nozick, Ronald Dworkin and many others. This course will provide students with a good grounding in the methods and substantive concerns of contemporary political theory as well as familiarity with the works of major thinkers in the field.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
There will be reading weeks in MT Week 6 and LT Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit at least two formative essays per term, one of which will be a timed-essay conducted under exam-like conditions.
The course requires ability to organize workload/do readings in advance/prepare for seminars. The course will present students with normative/ethical dilemmas they will need to tackle, and will enhance their analytical skills. As a course in political theory, verbal and written communication will be very much emphasized throughout.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).
Course content: The course aims to give students an understanding of the full range of leading topics and areas of debate and research relevant to the analysis of political institutions and politics in Europe. The course focuses on both traditional fields of comparative enquiry, such as the study of party competition and voting behaviour, and emerging fields of interest, such as national and European identities, immigration and Europeanisation. The course places particular emphasis on the diverse experiences of liberal democracy in different parts of Europe. The course covers not only long-established democracies in Western Europe, but also the relatively new democracies in Central and Eastern Europe. In the Lent Term, the course will study in depth a number of European countries, such as Britain, France, Germany and Italy, analysing the main developments in the country concerned in the last twenty years (elections, parties, governments), and then examining issues of particular interest related to that country. Course topics include: electoral behaviour; parties and party systems; government formation and coalitions; regionalism and federalism; national and European identities; immigration; and the challenge of Europeanisation.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
There will be reading weeks in Week 6 of the MT and Week 6 of the LT for private study and essay and assessment preparation.

Key Themes in the History of Political Thought

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Lucia Rubinelli
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
This course is capped at two groups. The deadline for enrolments is 12 noon on Friday 29 September 2017.
Pre-requisites: Students will normally be expected to have taken Introduction to Political Theory or equivalent, in a previous year.
Course content: A thematic study of political thought in Ancient, Medieval/Renaissance and Modern periods. This advanced course treats some of the major themes in the history of western European political thought as drawn from the writings of selected political philosophers of the ancient Greek, Roman, Medieval, renaissance, early modern and modern periods. The aim is to demonstrate, and explain, some of the continuities and discontinuities in ethical and political problems and their solutions over time and changing context.
Examples of such themes: different views on the nature of "man" and the consequences for political agency of different perspectives on human reason, will, desire; debates on the origins of law and the purpose of legislation; changing conceptions of justice; different views on government and the state's relation to the individual; on the sources of public authority and the nature of legitimate sovereignty; on the relation of property ownership to personal identity and to participation in collective governance; the historical and socio-political presuppositions behind the different constitutional regimes: democracy, monarchy, republic etc; on the role of religion in politics; the changing perspectives on the relationship between life in the family and a life of active citizenship; theories of natural law and natural rights; social contract theories; idealist political theory; utilitarianism; nationalism; liberal, conservative and socialist traditions of thought; anarchism and feminism.
The themes, thinkers and primary texts will be selected each year to reflect the current debates in contemporary scholarly literature on them and the research interests of the lecturer. This year, we will focus on understandings and implications of the principle of popular power in Hobbes, Rousseau, thinkers of the French Revolution, Carl Schmitt.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT and week 6 of the LT for private study and formative/summative assessment preparation.
Formative coursework: Two formative essays per term, one of which is a timed-essay set in exam-like conditions.

Global Public Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathias Koenig-Archibugi
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon, Friday 29 September, 2017.
Pre-requisites: N/A
Course content: The course examines the process and outcomes of policy-making at the global level. It considers a range of modes of policy-making, from classic intergovernmental cooperation to novel forms of governance beyond the state such as transgovernmental networks, multistakeholder initiatives, and regulation by non-state actors. The lectures provide an analytical toolbox and cover the following topics: (1) What is the meaning of “global”, “public”, and “policy”? Does global public policy really exist? (2) What types of actors participate in global public policy? (3) Who sets the global policy agenda and how? (4) What types of governance institutions exist? (5) How are governance institutions created or chosen, and what are the implications of their plurality and interplay? (6) What types of global public policies exist? (7) Who decides the content of global public policies and how? (8) How are global public policies implemented? (9) When can global public policy solve global problems? (10) When does global public policy have democratic legitimacy? The seminars apply the analytical tools provided in the lectures and readings to case studies, to be explored through team work. Students can choose an area of specialization from a range of global policy problems. Examples of relevant global policy problems include the surveillance and eradication of infectious diseases; access to essential medicines; tobacco control; food safety; labour standards; child labour and education; deforestation; protection of environmental commons; illicit financial flows; internet regulation; arms control; and other topics that may change from year to year.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Political and Ethnic Conflict and Coexistence: Key Debates

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Omar Mcdoom
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
This course is capped at two groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday 2 October 2015.
Course content: This course is designed to engage students with several of the more critical normative and empirical controversies relating to the justification, explanation, and termination of violence. The course focuses on violence commonly characterized as political, ethnic, or religious in nature and will illustrate each of the highlighted debates with a touchstone case drawn from the contemporary world.
The selection of debates and cases will evolve year-to-year as the scholarly frontier of understanding and the world's catalogue of conflicts also evolve. However, by way of example, students grapple with empirical and normative questions such as: (i) Is it more effective to address underlying grievances when responding to political violence or is it better simply to constrain the actor's opportunity to commit it? Students here will assess existing evidence of the effectiveness of the response of liberal democracies to the threat of militant Islam within and outside of their countries' borders; (ii) Is the decision to engage in violence a rational choice or do powerful emotions such as fear, hatred, and resentment have a causal role? Students here will be asked to analyze evidence from Rwanda's 1994 genocide of the actions of the Hutu extremist elite who organized and the ordinary Rwandans who committed violence; (iii) Should we concern ourselves with the ethical and legal constraints on the use of violent force in international politics or is it wiser to accept politics are preeminent? Students here will examine the US government's case for war in Iraq in 2003 through the lenses of just war theory, public international law, and popular politics; (iv) Should we accept the arguments in favour of international interventions to end violence or is there a rationale for 'giving war a chance'? Students will consider the doctrine of the 'Responsibility to Protect' in the context of the violence continuing in Darfur, the Sudan.
The course is taught as a research seminar comprising ten weekly two-hour sessions. Given its research-oriented focus, the course is attentive to methodology and students will be taught to critically evaluate the more common approaches to empirical research in the field. Students will have the opportunity to undertake a single substantial research project on a course-related topic resulting in an assessed summative essay of 4000 words.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

Leadership in the Political World

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Torun Dewan
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. Deadline for enrolments is 12 noon Friday 30th September.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Public Choice and Politics (GV225).
Course content: Good leadership is central toward having effective organisations, well functioning institutions, and attaining desirable policy outcomes. But what is good leadership? What is successful leadership? Can we distinguish outcomes as causally related to the actions taken by good and successful leaders? And how important is a leader's style? The course will look at both theoretical and empirical frameworks for analysing these questions developing in particular rational choice accounts of leadership. Different notions of leadership will be discussed including: (1) Leading by Example; (2) The Leader as a Focal Point and (3) The Leader as an information source. These will be illustrated by specific examples.
Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the LT.
There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and assessment preparation.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Politics of Money and Finance in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Cheryl Schonhardt-Bailey
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at two groups. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon, Friday 29 September, 2017.
Pre-requisites: A background in political economy would be advantageous.
Course content: The course focuses on the role of institutions, ideas and interests in the process and formulation of both (a) monetary policy, and (b) financial stability & regulation. We examine in particular the causal influences of institutions, ideas and interests in independent central banking, financial stability and financial regulation (including times of financial crisis), and the oversight and accountability of independent financial agencies, as well as relevant aspects of Brexit. Focusing predominantly on OECD countries, we draw on theories from economics and political science to analyse both decision making and policy outcomes, using both contemporary and historical perspectives. The course adopts a comparative country perspective, rather than an international relations perspective.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for private study and assessment preparation.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
Indicative reading: The full reading list for this course is currently available on Moodle for GV309. GV312 Not available in 2017/18
Advanced Topics in Government: Executive Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Lodge
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 2 October 2015.
Pre-requisites: GV101 or GV100 or equivalent
Course content: This course offers an advanced consideration of select key themes in the study of executive politics. It focuses on the changing conditions in which politics takes places (demographic change, sovereign debt crisis, environmental change and societal values) and considers how these changes impact on national executives.
Teaching: 20 hours of classes and 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of classes and 2 hours of workshops in the LT.
The workshops will introduce and provide support for the assessed coursework projects.
Formative coursework: Three formative essays (2500 words) and project proposal for assessed essay component.
Indicative reading: Hood, C (2011) The Blame Game, Carpenter, D (2010) Reputation and Power, Lewis, DE (2009) The Politics of Presidential Appointments, Lodge, M and Wegrich, K (2012/eds) Executive Politics in Times of Crisis.
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (50%, 2500 words).

Politics of Trade in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephanie Rickard
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at two groups. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon, Friday 29 September, 2017.
Pre-requisites: A background in political economy would be advantageous.
Course content: The course focuses on the role of institutions, ideas and interests in the process and formulation of trade policy. We examine the causal influences of institutions, ideas and interests in trade, focusing predominantly on developed countries. We draw on theories from economics and political science and analyze these using both historical and contemporary examples, and do so from a comparative perspective, rather than an international relations perspective.
The primary focus of the course is on actual policy outcomes.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6.
Formative coursework: Weekly writing assignments.

Empirical Research in Government

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Edward Page CON3.05
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. The deadline for receipt of applications is 12:00 noon on Friday 29 September, 2017.
Course content: The course introduces a variety of techniques and issues in the empirical study of political science and applies them to a practical research project in which students participate throughout the year. No prior knowledge of statistics or research methods is required. The focus of the course will be the practical research project. For 2017/18 the research project will explore international student perceptions of the UK as a place for study, though this is subject to change. At the theoretical level the course will cover questions relating to the utilization of policy research, forms of research design, sampling, questionnaire construction, coding and converting non-quantitative to quantitative indicators, response rates, elite interviewing and research ethics. As the practical research project progresses classes will cover the development of practical skills such as, principles of research report writing and, where appropriate for the project, use of text processing programmes, and basic routines in the widely-used Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS), such as those used for compiling crosstabulations.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
The two workshops will take place in the reading weeks (week

6 of MT and LT) and will consist of additional teaching activities to extend students' familiarity with the course content at which attendance will be voluntary.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Voting and Elections in Developing Democracies

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ryan Jablonski CON 4.14
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
The course is capped at two groups. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon on Friday 29 September 2017.
Pre-requisites: Government students should have completed GV101 Introduction to Political Science or equivalent.
Course content: Most governments in the developing world have adopted electoral institutions, many in the last few decades. However, these institutions vary considerably in their ability hold politicians accountable. Emergent democracies are frequently plagued by violence, fraud, corruption, weak accountability, and clientelism. This seminar is a discussion of the nature of electoral institutions in developing democracies, with a particular focus on the causes and consequences of these ills. Among other things, we will seek answers to the following questions: Why do governments adopt electoral institutions, but then fail to permit free and fair voting? When and why do governments use fraud and violence to win elections? What has been the impact of development aid, election monitoring and democracy assistance on elections and democratization? To answer these questions we will draw on an emerging political science literature on these issues, as well as several case studies. Students are expected to be active participants in this course, and will participate in several class debates and writing exercises.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. Each session will begin with a lecture, followed by a discussion and – in the latter half of the course – presentations by one or more students.
There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay of 1,000 words in the LT.

GV316 Half Unit
Advanced Issues in Applied Political Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Spiekermann CON.517
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon, Friday 29 September 2017.
Course content: An investigation of contemporary questions in applied political theory. Taking as a starting point a pressing social and political challenge, the course instructs students to systematically apply different political theories to approach the problem, to understand and critically discuss different normative viewpoints, and to develop and defend their own position in these debates.
Examples of such themes include environmental and climate change, free speech, multiculturalism and toleration, poverty and global justice, colonialism, or surveillance and privacy. The topics are selected each year to reflect current debates and the interests of the course convener. The course gives students the opportunity to experience research-led teaching, as the course convener will typically create a syllabus to reflect their current research projects.
In 2017/18, this course applies theories and concepts from political theory to the problems of environmental change. Among the topics discussed will be climate change, overpopulation, food and water scarcity, deforestation, desertification and the loss of biodiversity. Looking at contributions from political theorists, we will ask: How should we balance the interests of current and future generations? How does climate change affect our obligations towards the global poor? How do we make policy decisions if the effects are uncertain but potentially severe? Are we individually or collectively responsible for causing climate change, and what follows from this? How do we relate to the environment and what precisely is valuable about preserving it?
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. During the reading week (week 6), all students have the opportunity for a one-on-one meeting with the convener to plan for their formative essay.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay.
Indicative reading: John Broome (2012) Climate Matters: Ethics in a Warming World, New York (W.W. Norton); Stephen Gardiner, Simon Caney, Dale Jamieson and Henry Shue, eds. The Modern State - Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Patrick Dunleavy

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon, Friday 29 September, 2017.
Pre-requisites: Some background in at least one of these fields will be helpful: political theory, comparative politics, political sociology, public policy/economics, or international relations.
Course content: Since the 2008 financial crisis the modern state has re-emerged as a key actor in shaping the political identities, welfare and life-chances of its citizens; the strength and shape of a nation's economy; and much of the development of international policies. Some earlier expectations of the dwindling away of state institutions in the face of global forces or international institutions have been decisively refuted. Yet the operations of states as 'multi-systems', with many component parts, continues to generate theoretical controversy about whether and how they exist, and how their diversity can be ascribed unity of purpose or operations. The first five weeks examine the main theories of the modern, complex state and controversies about its unity and diversity. After reading week, we move on to look at the integrating roles of budget systems, constitutional provisions, bureaucratic institutions and information policies, the 'regulatory state' and 'welfare state' institutions in shaping the overall evolution of states. The approach is comparative throughout, drawing mainly on the experience of OECD countries and advanced industrial societies.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
Indicative reading: John Dryzek and Patrick Dunleavy, Theories of the Democratic State (Palgrave-Macmillan, 2009). GV318 Half Unit
Building Democracies from Conflict? Violence, Power-Sharing and Institutional Design

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Mitchell
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Government department students will be given priority. The course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for enrolments is 12 noon on Friday 29 September.
Pre-requisites: Students may find it helpful to have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).
Course content: How can we design, build and sustain 'democracies' in less than ideal circumstances? We will explore societies torn apart by political violence and ethnic conflict. The main purpose is to diagnose the central problems, and examine what political responses are most appropriate. The first part of the course mostly looks at the problems, in particular political violence. We consider the likely futures for Iraq, Kurdistan and Islamic State. What are the justifications for political violence? How much political violence is there and what are the main types and trends? We shall examine the strategies terrorism and suicide terrorism. Since the end of the cold war, almost all wars are 'civil wars' and we will consider what causes civil wars, what sustains them (why do some last much longer than others?), and how do they end? The second part of the course shifts the focus of attention to 'solutions' and policy responses to divided societies and failing states. Informed responses might include: intervention, mediation and peace agreements; power-sharing and constitutional design; territorial management of conflict; transitional justice; elections, party systems and institutions for governing divided societies.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.
There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in the Week 7.
Formative - one short project proposal - which should be a research design plan for the project. Students will receive written and verbal feedback on the viability and quality of their proposal, but it will not be graded. It is feedback and advice, not part of summative assessment. The deadline will be week 7, just after reading week in week 6. Length 1000 words. Pedagogically, preparation of the research proposal combined with advice and feedback will help improve the quality of the final project.

Assessment: Project (90%, 4000 words) in January.
Presentation (10%) in the MT.
As a final year course, the aim is to have a 'research output' as the main method of of assessment in the form of a mini-project. This will be similar to the shorter 'research notes' sections of many academic journals and should not exceed 4,000 words.
Students will also each make one seminar presentation, on which they will receive feedback and a grade.

GV319 Half Unit
Experimental Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Thomas Leeper CON 3.21
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy.

This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. The deadline for enrolments is 12 noon on Friday 29 September 2017.
Pre-requisites: Familiarity with basic algebra required and comfort with basic statistics as covered by Research Design in Political Science (GV249) or an equivalent course in research design or introductory statistics (such as ST102, ST107, ST108, GY140, SA201) is recommended.
Course content: This course will introduce students to the use of experiments or randomised controlled trials (RCTs) in politics to evaluate policies, programmes, and theories. The course will introduce the art, science, and ethics of experimentation, debate the validity and utility of experiments as a tool of evaluation and as the basis for policymaking, and examine the findings of experimental research in several distinct political domains. Representative topics include:
1. Voter mobilisation
2. Campaign message testing
3. Social media
4. International development
5. Public health
6. Polling
7. Small-group deliberation
8. Policy nudges

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be no lecture during Week 6 and no class during Weeks 1 and 6. Reading week activities will include one-on-one meetings with the instructor to discuss final paper topics/proposals (and other course content) and set aside time for students to prepare formative presentations (which will occur in class sessions during Weeks 7-11).
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem sets and 1 presentation in the MT.
The problem set will be due at the end of Week 5 and the presentations will occur during Weeks 7 to 11.
Indicative reading: Required textbook: Glennerster and Takavarasha. 2013. Running Randomized Evaluations: A Practical Guide. Princeton, NJ: Princeton. Suggested texts: Desposato. 2016. Ethics and Experiments: Problems and Solutions for Social Scientists and Policy Professionals. New York: Routledge. Morgan and Winship. 2015. Counterfactuals and Causal Inference. New York: Cambridge. Journal articles and other reading list texts, as assigned. Students will have free choice on final essay topics, so they should expect to find and read additional books and articles on the topic in consultation with the instructor and the library.
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.
Essay (50%, 2250 words) in the LT.
Assessment for the course will consist of a written exam (1 hour and 30 minutes) during the regular exam period (50%) and an individual case study essay (50%). The essay can take one of two forms: (a) a research design proposal that advances an original theoretical contribution to a political science literature, proposes an experimental test of that theory, and critically discusses related issues of research design, ethics, and implications; or (b) a case study that examines a real-world use of experimental methods to study a question relevant to political science by a government, firm, NGO, or other entity, describes the context for and design of the experiments, and evaluates the findings and use of experiments in this case context.
Students have complete topical choice for the essay and will be expected to give a short presentation (one part of the formative assessment) on their chosen topic during class. Regardless of the form of essay chosen, the quantitative problem set will ensure that students have the skills necessary to propose a credible experimental design and/or evaluate an applied example of experimental research. One-on-one meetings during Reading Week will provide a checkpoint to obtain early feedback and presentations will invite both peer and instructor feedback near the end of the term.

GV320 Half Unit
Populism

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Francisco Panizza CON 5.12
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. The deadline for enrolments is 12 noon on Friday 29th September 2017.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Democracy and Democratisation (GV245).
Democracy and Democratisation (GV245) is a pre-requisite for taking the course.
Course content: The course aims at bringing together the conceptual analysis of populism with comparative case studies in different regions of the world. It studies populism from a conceptual, theoretical and comparative perspective. Given the highly contested nature of populism, the first weeks will look in depth to different theories of populism, including institutional, ideological, discursive and socio-cultural understandings of populism. It will then move to explore the conditions of emergence of populism and the relations between populism and key political concepts, such as democracy and political participation. The second half of the course will seek to apply the conceptual tools presented in the first half of the course to regional case studies. Among the topics to be explored are: What is populism? Populism as a "thin ideology". Populism as a mode of identification. The socio-cultural dimensions of populism. The socio-economic dimensions of populism. The conditions of emergence of populism. Populism, democracy and political participation. Populism in Europe. Populism in the USA. Populism in Latin America.Populism in Asia.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
On week 6 (reading week) it will be open to students to attend a session of short films and videos on populist politics . This session does not form part of the formal teaching of the course.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.
Formative coursework:
1 X 1,500 words essay to be submitted on week 7 of the LT. The formative essay will offer an outline of the final essay- including key indicative reading. The feedback will be used in two ways: 1) to guide students' critical thinking in line with course learning outcomes; 2) to guide students on the key aspect of formatting an academic argument using literature and critical debate. Students will also be encouraged to reflect upon their learning from the presentation and use this to refine their summative essay.
Indicative reading: Essential Readings

Assessment: Presentation (10%) in the LT.
Essay (90%, 3500 words) in the ST.
The essay will be marked in line with departmental guidance on assessed essays. This will allow for a scale of outcomes in line with different levels of academic outputs. It will be marked for command of the literature, theories and empirical findings, analytical sophistication, use of evidence, critical judgement and originality. The individual class presentations will take the form of a 15 minute presentation followed by 30 minutes of questioning from both the class and the teacher. Particular value will be placed on the ability to present contending arguments in a clear and balanced way, the use of empirical evidence to support arguments and the capacity to raise relevant questions for class discussion.

GV325 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Advanced Issues in Political Economy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephane Wolton
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
The course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for enrolments is 12 noon on Friday 30th September.
Pre-requisites: Students are expected to have taken GV225 Public Choice and Politics, or equivalent, in a previous year. An introductory knowledge of economics and econometrics would be useful.
Course content: This course is an advanced treatment of Political Economy. The course will cover some advanced concepts in game theory and their application to contemporary political issues. It will provide an overview of the empirical literature on the topics covered. The course material will expand students' capacity to think about policy relevant issues and will cover democratic and autocratic politics. The course structure will be as follows:
Week 1 – Game theory refresher
Week 2 - Political accountability
Week 3 – Media and democracy
Week 4 - Behavioural political economy
Week 5 - Accountability in autocracies: The role of elite
Week 7 – Accountability in autocracies: The role of institutions
Week 8 - Democratisation,
Week 9 – Terrorism
Week 10 - International conflicts
Week 11 - Revision lecture
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. There will be 9 one-hour lectures in Weeks 1-5 and Weeks 7-10 in MT and a one-hour revision lecture in Week 11. Classes will run in Weeks 2-5 and Weeks 7-11 in MT. Week 6 will be a Reading Week.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem sets and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.
Students will complete one problem set to further their understanding of the concepts covered in the course and prepare for the take-home exam. There will also be a time exam in week 11 to allow practise on problem sets solving under exam conditions.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours and 45 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Coursework (40%) in the Week 9.
The exam will have two parts. Part A is a compulsory question. In Part B, candidates will answer two questions from three posed. The coursework will have four compulsory questions.

GV335 Half Unit
African Political Economy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Boone CON 6.04
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon, Friday 29 September, 2017.
Course content: This class is an introduction to the study of contemporary African political economy. The goal is to set major questions of state and economy in historical, geographic, and international context. Course readings and lectures stress marked unevenness in national and subnational trajectories and in the political-economic character of different African countries, and introduce students to theories that aim to identify causes of similarity and difference across and within countries. Students will come away with a better understanding of the possibilities and limits of structured, focused comparisons in comparative politics, and with an introduction to political economy approaches to questions of late development. They will also develop substantive knowledge of the political economy of sub-Saharan Africa and analytic tools to describe and make sense of its diversity.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
This course shares lectures with DV435 African Political Economy. Seminar classes are separate for undergraduate students.
There will be a reading week in Week 6.
Formative coursework: There will be one 1,200 formative assignment (short essay).
Indicative reading: Texts used may include all or part of the following:
Fred Cooper, Africa Since 1940 (Cambridge U. Press)
Keith Hart, The Political Economy of West African Agriculture (Cambridge, 1983). Jeffrey Herbst, States and Power in Africa (Princeton 2000). Mahmood Mamdani, Citizen and Subject: Africa and the Legacy of late Colonialism (Princeton 1996). Will Reno, Warfare in Independent Africa (Cambridge 2011). Abiodun Alao, Natural Resources and Conflict in Africa: The Tragedy of Endowment (University of Rochester Press, 2007). Sara Berry, No Condition is Permanent: The Social Dynamics of Agrarian Change in Africa (U. of Wisconsin Press). Crawford Young, The Postcolonial State in Africa: Fifty Years of Independence
Assessment: Essay (75%, 2000 words) in the LT.

In class assessment (25%).
For the in-class assessment: Students will be asked to write one-page feedback papers on selected weeks' readings and to participate in class discussions. In the last class meeting, each student will give a 5-minute overview of his/her plans for the final course essay. Participation assessment is designed to motivate students to keep up with the readings and to contribute actively to class discussion.

GV342 Not available in 2017/18
Philosophy, Politics and Economics: Capstone and Research Project

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Lodge CON308
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Exclusive for fourth year BSc PPE students.
Pre-requisites: This course will be available exclusively for 4th-year PPE students.
Course content: The course introduces students to team-based and individual research work. The MT will focus on the capstone project. The initial three weeks of the course will introduce students to the requirements of capstone projects, key research strategies and essential questions. During weeks four to nine, they will be required to research, as part of small teams, problems in public and private sector organisations. The completed research has to be presented to fellow students (and the client organisations) both in form of a presentation as well as a research report.
In the LT, the focus shifts to the production of an individual academic paper. Students will be encouraged to develop an interdisciplinary research question and to complete a research paper and a poster on the conclusions of the paper by the end of the LT. The initial weeks' seminars during the LT will be focused on key questions for research design, with the following weeks focusing more on individual consultation and feedback sessions.
Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 9 hours of help sessions in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 9 hours of help sessions in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.
The seminars will introduce the key issues and demands on the students. The help sessions will operate on the basis of feed-back and consultation sessions to support students' research efforts. The ST session will involve a 'poster exhibition' that allows all students to exhibit and discuss their research projects.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the MT and 1 presentation and 1 essay in the LT. The team and the individual research efforts will be supported during the help sessions. To support the development of presentational skills, students are required to prepare a draft presentation and will receive feedback in the MT. Equally, students will be required to prepare a poster outlining their research for week 4 in the LT. This will help the development of the research ideas, but also provide for feedback on the intended research and the design of posters more generally. They will also be asked to provide for a draft paper outline in week 9 to receive additional feedback.
Indicative reading: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979; Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); C. R. Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems, chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004). An extensive list of readings will be made available on Moodle.
Assessment: Project (30%, 5000 words) and presentation (20%) in the MT.
Presentation (20%) and research project (30%) in the LT.

GV366
Political Economy of the Developing World

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog CON4.01
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is capped at one group. Deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon on Friday 29 September, 2017.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).
Course content: This course introduces students to the broad theoretical traditions in the study of political economies outside of the OECD world, and provides an empirical overview of a number of concrete phenomena that shape the interplay of the political and economic realms in different world regions. It will address puzzles like: Why did some developing countries grow much faster than others after WWII? Are some forms of corruption more compatible with development than others? Which impact do natural resource rents have on politics and development? Under which conditions can countries with a short history of independent statehood build efficient institutions?
GV366 will engage with broad theoretical traditions like modernization theory, dependency theory, and neo-patrimonialism, and with concrete empirical topics like state-business relations, the developmental state, corruption and clientelism, the politics of public enterprise, and the political economy of resource-rich countries.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: One essay of 3,500 words to be submitted in the LT.
Indicative reading: Bardhan, Pradeep (1997). "Corruption and Development", Journal of Economic Literature, Vol. 35. Evans, Peter (1995). Embedded Autonomy: States and industrial transformation (Princeton: Princeton University Press). Richards, Alan, and John Waterbury (2007). A Political Economy of the Middle East (Boulder: Westview Press). Ross, Michael (2012). The Oil Curse: How Petroleum Wealth Shapes the Development of Nations (Princeton: Princeton University Press) Schneider, Ben Ross, and Sylvia Maxfield (eds.) 1997. State-Business Relations in Developing Countries (Ithaca: Cornell University Press). Wade, Robert (2003). Governing the Market: Economic Theory and the Role of Government in East Asian Industrialization (Princeton: Princeton University Press). Waterbury, John (1993). Exposed to Innumerable Delusions: Public Enterprise and State Power in Egypt, India, Mexico, and Turkey (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press).
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (50%, 3500 words) in the ST.

GV390
Government Dissertation Option

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bruter
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government,

BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course may be taken only in the third year. A BSc Government and History student cannot choose both HY300 and GV390; a BSc Politics and Philosophy student cannot choose both GV390 and PH399; and a BSc Politics and International Relations student cannot choose both GV390 and IR398.
Course content: A dissertation of not more than 10,000 words on a topic to be approved by a proposed dissertation advisor and the Course Convenor. The topic should be chosen from any area within the field covered by the degree course and supported by a member of the academic staff from the Government Department willing to act as dissertation advisor. Following the dissertation information session organised by the Department in the second year of the students' curriculum, candidates should approach their tutor during the Lent Term or Summer Term of their second year to discuss the possibility of a proposed dissertation topic. After having received approval for a topic by a prospective advisor, students must submit a dissertation form detailing the final title and synopsis/prospectus to the Course Convenor for approval. Dissertation approval forms must be submitted no later than the end of Week 2 of Michaelmas term.
Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.
Six seminars split between the Michaelmas Term and Lent Term as well as individual supervision. Dissertation advisors can be expected to offer advice on reading and guidance on the organisation of the dissertation; they may also read and comment on a draft outline of up to 2,000 words. Tutors or other teachers are not permitted to read or comment on a draft of the whole dissertation. The number of individual meetings with the students will be agreed with the supervisor but should be at least once per term in the student's third year. It should be stressed that no member of staff is under an obligation to agree to supervise any proposed dissertation Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

GV398
Inside the Mind of a Voter: Research in Electoral Psychology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bruter CON 4.06
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Available to final year students in the programmes named above. Students from other degrees are not normally accepted on the course except with the exceptional discretionary approval of the course teacher.
This course is capped at one group. The deadline for enrolments is 12 noon on Friday 29 September 2017.
Course content: This final year undergraduate course has three important ambitions.
Substantively, it aims to introduce students to the study of electoral psychology and electoral ergonomics, which represent novel and dynamic approaches to the study citizens' electoral behaviour and the way voters' psychology interacts with the organisation of elections.
Methodologically, it introduces students to some of the key methods used in the field and enables them to practice fieldwork in one of them through an empirical group project. That project will change each year in terms of topic and method, and will be discussed jointly by the course teacher and the students. It may include lab experiments, interviews, diaries, or any of the core methods used in the field.
Finally, it introduces students to the research process through the main assessment component, which is a supervised 7,000 words dissertation, and supports them through several research clinics whereby we discuss students' dissertation issues and problems collectively throughout the year.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.
Teaching takes place on MT (10x2 hours), LT (10x2 hours), ST (1x4 hours). The department operates a reading week on week 6.
The course includes:
- 10 x 2 hour SUBSTANTIVE SEMINARS on key issues in electoral psychology
- 5 x 2 hour FIELDWORK SEMINARS focused on preparation and fieldwork for the group project
- 5 x 2 hour RESEARCH CLINICS on the preparation and discussion of analytical, methodological, and ethical issues faced by students with regards to their dissertation
- 1 x 4 hour CONFERENCE WORKSHOP where students will briefly present their findings to one another.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment includes:
- draft research synopsis and design (end of MT)
- draft research methodology (early in LT)
- unassessed critics of further readings (throughout MT/LT)

Indicative reading: Bruter, M. and Harrison, S. Understanding the emotional act of voting.
Lipset, S., Lazarsfeld, P, et al. The psychology of voting. Sniderman, P. Personality and democratic politics. Bruter, M., and Lodge, M. Political Science research methods in action. Baddeley, A. The psychology of memory. Cammaerts, B.et al. Youth participation in democratic life. Harrison, S and Bruter, M. Mapping extreme right ideology
Assessment: Other (70%) in the ST.
Research project (15%) in the MT.
Other (15%) in the MT and LT.
The summative assessment consists of:
• A final dissertation of 7,000 words (70%)
• Group work on project (15%)
• Critiques of further readings (15%)
The critics of further readings work as follow: to make the reading list more manageable for the 10 substantive seminars, all students will only be expected to familiarise themselves with the core readings, and will divide the further readings between themselves. Each student will be expected to be responsible for a total of 5-6 further readings throughout the year, all in different weeks. Students responsible for a further reading will be asked to write a short (1-2 page) critic of it following a set format (1) what is the research question and why is it interesting, 2) what methods are the authors using, 3) what are the main findings, 4) what are the main shortcomings or what do you wish the authors had done differently) and post it on moodle by the Sunday before the seminar so that students can quickly browse the week's 'menu' in advance. The students having each covered different further readings will bring them into the seminar discussion.
The critics count for 15% of the final mark as follows: 5% for completing 5 quality critics throughout the year, and 10% based on the average mark for what they choose as their two best critics.
The group work mark (15%) is based on the satisfactory completion of the tasks assigned to small groups of students during the fieldwork (e.g. conducting interviews or experiments, etc depending on the topic of the year).

Introduction to Geography

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Mercer STC418
Dr Alex Jaax
Dr Nancy Holman

Dr Michael Mason
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to Geography at LSE. In Michaelmas Term we will examine human geography's key concepts, including space, place, landscape, nature, globalization, mobility, society and city. In the Lent Term the course will move on to introductory sections on environmental geography and economic geography. The environmental section will cover topics such as the anthropocene, nature and culture, and global and local environmental problems. The economic geography section will introduce students to the changing location of economic activity, inequalities within and between countries, regions and cities, and the rationale, objectives and tools of local and regional development policies in a globalizing world.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading-lists related to the different topics within the course will be provided at the start of the course. Clifford, N.J., S.L. Holloway, S.R. Rice and G. Valentine (eds) (2009) Key Concepts in Geography, 2nd Ed, Sage, London; Dicken, P. (2011) Global Shift: Mapping the Changing Contours of the World Economy 6th Edition Sage Publications; W.E. Murray, Geographies of globalization, 2006; A Pike, A Rodríguez-Pose & J Tomaney Local and regional development, 2006; N. Castree (2014) Making Sense of Nature
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Contemporary Europe

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simona Iammarino (on sabbatical for 2017-18)
Dr Neil Lee
Dr Alex Jaax
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course aims at introducing students with little prior knowledge of European issues to some of the most important economic, social, and political challenges the European Union overcame in the past, and currently faces. The course develops a sound understanding of the determinants and the evolution of these challenges and the related public policies. Students will learn about strengths, weaknesses and lessons to be drawn from the most striking example of international integration as a result of historical forces and in the context of a globalised world. The course covers issues such as economic integration, competitiveness, cohesion, innovation and growth, enlargement, Euro crisis and Brexit, social policy, employment trends, poverty, migration, ageing, and social exclusion and inequality. Particular stress is laid upon the spatial constitution of these themes, at various levels of geography: supranational, national and subnational (regional) level.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
The 2 hour-class in the ST is Revision Session for the exam.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of two class essays during the year and will also be expected to give class presentations.
Indicative reading: Given the diversity of the subject, there is no one textbook that covers all of the topics. A mix of academic articles and chapters from textbooks is used in the course. Reading lists are provided electronically, and additional web sources will also be indicated during the lectures. Indicative textbooks are the following: A Rodriguez-Pose, The European Union: Economy, Society and Polity, 2000; R Baldwin and C Wyplosz, The Economics of the European Integration, 3rd edition, 2009; S Senior Nello, The European Union. Economics, Policies and History, 2nd edition, 2009; W Molle, European Cohesion Policy, 2007.
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Environmental Change: Past, Present and Future

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Jones STC S417
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Many consider that 'Climate Change' is the greatest challenge currently facing human society, mainly because of the 'Environmental Changes' that it will cause. But what are 'Climate Change' and 'Environmental Change'? What causes these changes? How much have they changed in the past and how do we know? How much is human activity responsible for the recent changes identified and when did this influence begin? How is the climate going to change in the next century and if water finds its own level, why does sea-level change vary over the Globe?
To answer these questions requires that the course focuses on developing an appreciation of the Planet Earth as the home of human societies. The analysis focuses on the physical nature of the 'natural' or biophysical systems and involves consideration of how the solid earth, the gaseous atmosphere, the hydrosphere and the biosphere, were formed, have evolved, interact and have changed over time due to both external (extra-terrestrial) and internal factors, including humans. From this, an appreciation of change and evolution over differing time-scales is developed, which will serve as an essential basis for students when evaluating the contemporary two-way interaction between humans and the environment. The relevant science will be taught as and when required.
The course consists of the following sections:
- Introduction to Environmental Change:
The structure and functioning of the Earth as a set of systems (The Geosystem). The Scientific Method. The systems approach and its application to environmental studies. Ecosystem concept. Biogeochemical cycles. The nature and causes of Environmental Change and Climate Change; "Change" and "Variability".
- Key Aspects of Environmental Change:
(i) The Contemporary Atmosphere. Composition and structure of the atmosphere. Radiation and selective absorption (Greenhouse Effect). Global energy budget and global energy transfers.
(ii) The Hydrosphere: Hydrological cycles. Cloud formation, precipitation and evapotranspiration. General introduction to hydrology and the "Hydrological Cascade". Human Influences on river flow. Flooding.
(iii) The Biosphere; Development and change of Biodiversity over time due to evolution through Natural Selection
- Quaternary Environmental Change: Environmental Change over the last 2.6 million years.

Prelude: Introduction to the Quaternary. Divisions of the Quaternary. The evolution of humans. But what went before? - Long-term influences on climate and environmental change; past ice ages and 'greenhouse worlds'. Catastrophic events. The Gaia hypothesis.
Establishment of the contemporary paradigm of Quaternary climate change, i.e.: the "Ice House - Hot House" paradigm.
Ice cores, ocean sediment cores, the Oxygen Isotope record; what causes glaciations and inter-glacials? The Milankovitch Mechanism. Milankovitch and sub-Milankovitch oscillations.
- Past, Present and Future Change
Merging the instrumental, historical and proxy records. Problems with dating. The growing influence of humans (the human impact). The possibility of an Anthropocene / Anthropogene. Holocene Climate Change: The Post-Glacial Climatic Optimum, Medieval Warm Period and Little Ice-age. Mann et al's "Hockey Stick". Human impacts on the Ecosphere and the Ruddiman Hypothesis. Debates about Twentieth Century Warming.
Patterns of sea-level change: Past, Present and Future.
Contemporary Climate/Environmental Change and future prospects to AD 2100.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Please note there is a Reading Week taking place in Week 6 in both Michaelmas and Lent Terms.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two essays during the year, one in each term, and give class papers.
Indicative reading: Bell, M. and Walker, J.C., Late Quaternary Environmental Change: Physical and Human Perspectives, 2005; P. Smithson, K. Addison and K. Atkinson, Fundamentals of the Physical Environment, 2008; T H van Andel, New Views on an Old Planet, 1994; R Chistopherson, Geosystems, 2005; J Gribbin,Almost Everyone's Guide to Science, 1998; A. E. GY121 Sustainable Development

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Giles Atkinson
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: "Is development sustainable?" While this is undoubtedly a challenging question, the purpose of this course is to provide building blocks that will allow an answer to be formulated. In doing so, we will seek to understand better how the natural world is affected by development decisions and crucially how those decisions shape human development prospects or widen the gap between development outcomes across geographical regions and socioeconomic groups. All of this gives rise to a rich array of themes and debates, which are reflected in distinct sections of the course. We begin by introducing a number of concepts including human development, sustainable development and natural capital. We will then explore a variety of linkages between human development and natural capital (resources and environment). In doing so, we consider the viewpoint that society is being 'guided by the wrong compass' in the way that social and economic progress conventionally is measured by e.g. "GDP". Resource scarcities are frequently relative and the uneven distribution of, or access to, resources has implications for how development outcomes and prospects are distributed globally and within countries. We will therefore investigate the way in which this affects specific human populations particularly those who are amongst the most vulnerable This set of themes additionally will examine issues of resource security drawing on examples from debates about food, water and energy availability as well as broader debates about resource conflicts, population growth and changing technology.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce class essays during the year and to give class presentations.
Indicative reading: There are a variety of texts available for this course. A detailed reading list will be given at the beginning of each term but will include: G Atkinson, S Dietz,E Neumayer and M Agarwala (eds) Handbook of Sustainable Development, 2nd edition, Elgar, 2014; WM Adams (2009) Green Development: Environment and Sustainability in the Developing World, 3rd Edition, Routledge, JA Elliott (2012) An Introduction to Sustainable Development, 4th edition.
Assessment: Essay (25%) in the LT.
Take home exam (75%) in the ST.
Exam to be taken in week 1 of ST

GY140 Introduction to Geographical Research

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Austin Zeiderman, Dr Murray Low, Dr Claire Mercer, Prof Henry Overman, Prof Gareth Jones, Prof Sylvia Chant and Dr Richard Perkins
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The main objective of this course is to introduce students to the production of geographical and environmental knowledge and to prepare them to become producers of such knowledge themselves. It provides students with a sound understanding of both the conceptual foundations and real-world applications of a variety of methodological approaches for conducting research. To appreciate why, how, and to what ends geographers conduct research on the social and spatial dimensions of human activity, the research process is examined from beginning to end: selecting a topic, performing a literature review, designing a project, collecting and analysing data, and communicating results. The process of producing knowledge about geography and the environment is also examined from a number of different perspectives: examining case studies of written work, engaging with internationally-renowned researchers, discussing the rationale for choosing a methodological approach, practicing the application of individual methods, and designing and executing a piece of independent research. Both quantitative and qualitative research methods are discussed in detail and fieldwork exercises in London give students the opportunity to apply various methods from the course in their own research.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of classes in the MT. 9 hours of lectures and 18 hours of classes in the LT.
Compulsory fieldwork exercises to be completed instead of lecture/class in Week 11 of Lent Term. No class to be scheduled for Week 1 in MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be given the opportunity to complete two formative assignments during the course of the year: one in MT that draws on qualitative research methods and one in LT draws on quantitative research methods.
Information on the formative assignments will be provided in the course outline.

Indicative reading: Methods in human geography: a guide for students doing a research project (Flowerdew and Martin, 2005); Statistics: a tool for social research (Healey, 2012); Statistics in geography and environmental science (Harris and Jarvis, 2011); Geography and geographers: Anglo-American geography since 1945 (Johnston, 1997); International Encyclopedia of Human Geography (Kitchin and Thrift, 2009); Key methods in geography (Clifford, French, and Valentine, 2010); Qualitative research methods in human geography (Hay, 2010).
Assessment: Project (50%, 3000 words) in the LT.
Project (50%, 3500 words) in the ST.
The first project (3000 words) will be due toward the end of Lent Term. The second project (3500 words) will be due at the start of Summer Term.

Economy, Society and Space

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alan Mace STC513a and Dr Ryan Centner STC601c
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course examines the inter-relatedness of economy and society and the spatiality of social and economic phenomena in contemporary societies. Themes include: spatial fixes, Fordism, the development project, suburbanisation, rural crisis and shrinking cities. Through these themes we examine relationships between economic and social restructuring; the geographies of privilege, exclusion and marginality; as well as responses through urban regeneration, urban renewal and city planning. At the end of the course students should be able to understand the relationship between the economic, social and spatial realms and communicate and apply these understandings to the contemporary geographies of everyday life.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare written work for weekly classes, and write one formative essay each term related to course readings.
Indicative reading: N. Brenner and N. Theodore, Spaces of Neoliberalism, 2002. D. Harvey, A Brief History of Neoliberalism, 2005. D. Massey, World City, 2007. P. McMichael, Development & Social Change: A Global Perspective (5th edition), 2012. K. Polanyi, The Great Transformation, 1944.
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.
In the examination students answer three out of nine questions. Details of the style and layout of the essay will be provided at the start of the session.

Environment: Science and Society

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Mason STC.510 and Prof David Jones STC.417
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Geography with Economics and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course examines debates concerning the nature, cause, and effects of, and alternative solutions to, the key natural environmental degradation and pollution problems faced by human societies. It highlights the role of science in environmental understanding and governance.
The course consists of three sections, although the specific content, order and relative proportion of teaching may change with staff availability. Part A: Introduction and Themes: this introduces students to social scientific perspectives on scientific knowledge and environmentalism. Part B: Environmental Risk and Science: this section examines the physical science basis of current regional and global environmental risks, including geohazards and global atmospheric pollution. Part C: Science and Environmental Governance: this final section of the course examines how environmental science is incorporated in global environmental governance. The course concludes with an examination of the notion of sustainability science.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: No one book or small group of books adequately covers the themes considered in the course, and separate reading lists are provided for each distinct part of the syllabus. Basic reading material includes; T. Forsyth, Critical Political Ecology; The Politics of Environmental Science, 2003; A. Goudie (Ed), The Human Impact Reader, 6th edition, 2006; M. K. Hill, Understanding Environmental Pollution, 1997; J. Houghton, Global Warming: The Complete Briefing, 5th edition, 2015; M. Hulme, Why We Disagree About Climate Change, 2009; A.M. Applied Environmental Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susana Mourato STC.503 and Dr Sefi Roth STC.421A
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.
Course content: This course is an introduction to economic principles in the analysis of environmental change and natural resource use, and in designing appropriate policy responses. The first part of the course largely covers the concepts and tools of environmental economics, while the second part applies these concepts and tools to specific challenges for real world policy-making. Topics to be covered include: the evaluation of regulatory and market based instruments in controlling pollution; moral suasion and voluntary regulation; economics of natural resource use; economic growth, the environment and sustainable development; cost-benefit analysis and environmental valuation; economics of biodiversity and ecosystem services conservation; climate change economics; health and the environment; behavioural and happiness economics and the environment.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce non-assessed coursework throughout the year that will include at least one essay and a series of quizzes, and may be asked to give class presentations.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. For an overview and introduction to the main issues covered by the course students may wish to consult the following: N Hanley and EB Barbier, Pricing Nature: Cost-Benefit Analysis and Environmental Policy, 2009; J Kahn, The Economic Approach to Environmental and Natural Resources, 3rd ed. 2005; B Field and M Field, Environmental Economics, 6th ed. 2012; DW Pearce, G Atkinson and S Mourato, Cost-Benefit Analysis and the Environment: Recent Developments, 2006; E Neumayer, Weak Versus Strong Sustainability: Exploring the Limits of Two Opposing Paradigms, 4th Edition, 2013.

Research Techniques (Spatial, Social and Environmental)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low
Additional teacher(s): Dr Felipe Carozzi, Dr Ryan Centner
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: This course is similar to GY2A0 and shares most teaching arrangements with that course. It does not include the week long field-course associated with GY2A0.
This course aims to prepare second year students, who already have some grounding in social science methodology, to undertake individual research projects. It examines the methodologies used in Geographical research and evaluates their application to different kinds of research problems. It considers the choice of methodology which may be used in the student's own Independent Research Project (IRP) and how to plan research. It enables students to acquire familiarity with, and practice of, contemporary research techniques and to examine different ways of, and gain experience in, presenting research results. A further aim of the course is to enable students to evaluate critically the methodological validity of geographical literature.
The course covers a variety of different approaches to social science methodology including: (i) analysis of quantitative data using linear regression including hypothesis testing, (ii) analysis of quantitative spatial data using geographic information systems (GIS) software, (iii) techniques for qualitative data analysis including structured and unstructured interviewing, participant observation, and research ethics, including research ethics when conducting fieldwork (vi) techniques for the economic analysis of environmental issues; and (v) techniques for designing, carrying out and presenting an Independent Research Project
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 9 hours of workshops and 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
GY240 shares most teaching arrangements with GY2A0. There are reading weeks in Week 6 of the MT and LT.
Formative coursework: In the MT classes, and during the field-course, students work on elements of the summative assessment for the course with opportunities for support and feedback from staff as they do so. In addition, there is one piece of formative assessment (no more than 1000 words) in each term.
Indicative reading: Assigned readings may include: A H Studemund (2001 or later edition) Using Econometrics: A Practical Guide; J Bell, Doing your Research Project - Guide for first time researchers in education and social science (2nd edition), 1993; J Burt & G Barber, Elementary Statistics for Geographers, 1996; I Heywood, S Cornelius & S Carver, An Introduction to GIS, 1998; P Kennedy, A Guide to Econometrics, 1985; A MacEachren, Some truth with maps: a primer on symbolization and design, 1994; K G Esterberg, Qualitative methods in social research, 2002; I Hay (Ed), Qualitative Research Methods in Human Geography, 2010; Cloke, Paul, Ian Cook, Philip Crang, Mark Goodwin, Joe Painter, and Chris Philo, eds. 2004. Practising Human Geography. London: Sage; Flowerdew, Robin, and David Martin, eds. 2005. Methods in Human Geography: a guide for students doing a research project. Second edition. London: Routledge.
Students unfamiliar with basic inferential statistics and/or those who anticipate difficulty with the linear regression analysis component of the course in Michaelmas Term weeks 1-5 should prepare in advance by studying Chapter 16: Statistical Principles in Studemund, A H (2000) 'Using Econometrics: A Practical Guide.' Fourth edition (or later). Boston: Addison Wesley. or a similar text.
Assessment: Project (50%) and other (15%) in the LT.
Project (35%) in the ST.
(i) Quantitative methods/Geographical Information Systems project (50%)
(ii) Project in environmental and economic analysis (35%)
(iii) Proposal for 3rd Year Independent Research Project (15%)

London's Geographies

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alan Mace STC315a
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course introduces you to cultural geography, with application to conditions of life, livelihood and urban experience in 19th, 20th and 21st century London. What is it that makes London such a specific kind of urban scene, and how have people sought to represent its specificity: this is the key question of the course. Rather than a comprehensive account of London's past and present, this course uses the synthetic (social, economic, political and cultural) tools of human geography to understand how and why London is a specific kind of city. London provides an opportunity for thinking about the interplay of culture, society, and space through time. We consider a series of questions about the spatial and social divides of the city and about urban and social transformation. Topics include, but are not limited to; landscape, spectacle, crime & terror, sexuality, migration & racism and labour politics. An important 'lab' component involves leaving the classroom to enter the LSE Archives and to walk the streets to interpret London's cultural geographies. You will be encouraged to access a wide range of sources to build up your interpretation of London, including; novels, film, photographs, music and blogs. You are encouraged to go on walks, to explore aspects of the city you do not already know, and to dig through archival material to find connections between past and present London.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 12 hours of lectures, 6 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two formative essays and to participate actively in classes led by the Class Teacher.
Indicative reading: Mitchell D. 2002. Cultural Geography; a Critical Reader. Oakes T et al. 2008. The Cultural Geography Reader. Kureishi H. 1990. The Buddha of Suburbia. Nead L. 2000. Victorian Babylon: People, Streets and Images in Nineteenth Century London. Stedman Jones G.. 1984. Outcast London.
Assessment: Essay (40%, 3000 words) in the MT.

Urban and Spatial Economic Analysis II

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olmo Silva STC.S506a
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have normally taken one or more from: EC100, GY201, GY222.
Course content: The aim of the course is to develop theoretical and empirical understanding of spatial economic processes in order to study and evaluate a wide range of issues and policies. Particular emphasis will be put on urban and regional economies and business and worker location decisions. More specifically, the first part of the course will study models of the location of economic and innovation activity with a particular emphasis on regional economies. The second part of the course continues to study location, but focuses more on household location decisions, personal mobility and their implications for spatial labour markets, housing markets and residential neighbourhoods.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of two essays during the year.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be given out at the beginning of the course. Reading will predominantly include journal articles and policy documents.
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Geographies of Race

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Austin Zeiderman
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: This course will critically analyze the intimate relationship between race and space in the modern world. Through a range of historical and contemporary examples, it will examine how interconnected forms of racial and spatial difference are produced, reproduced, and transformed. Focusing on the material and cultural formation of racialized geographies, students will learn to recognize how racially inflected discourses and practices shape the production of space and how geographical location matters to racial classification, identification, and discrimination. The course will be organized around a series of archetypal spaces: for example, the body, the nation, the colony, the city, the home, the prison, the plantation, the border, the school, and the street. In each case, students will examine the confluence of race and space within broader themes, such as colonialism, capitalism, urbanization, globalization, environmentalism, migration, and incarceration. Since race often intersects with other forms of difference, students will also learn to interrogate the influence of gender, class, religion, and sexuality on the production of space. Texts from human geography, critical race theory, colonial and postcolonial studies, history, sociology, and anthropology in addition to other media, such as film, literature, journalism, and photography, will provide students with conceptual resources and methodological tools. Ultimately, the objective is to advance a comparative, critical analysis of the relationship between race and space, past and present, and to explore the conditions of future possibility for the linked political projects of anti-racism and spatial justice.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Mason STC.510 and Dr Richard Perkins STC.413
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course seeks to explore and critically interrogate the evolving patterns and processes of environmental governance. The course begins by examining recent debates on the changing role of state and non-state actors in environmental governance, and outlines different explanations for market actors’ growing engagement with environmental sustainability. The next part focuses on the role of financial and corporate actors in environmental governance, outlining the motives, practices and outcomes of sustainable and responsible investment (SRI) and corporate social responsibility (CSR). Lent Term provision examines the issues, actors and processes that shape environmental governance at the transnational and global scales. Introductory lectures on the global environmental policy process introduce different scholarly perspectives informing current research (e.g. regime analysis, critical political economy and constructivism): these perspectives are referred to as subsequent lectures address particular actor groups and issues (e.g. sustainable energy transitions, climate security). Students are encouraged to think critically about the ways in which the regulation of global environmental risk is framed and politically contested.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of three 1,500 word formative essays/projects during the year.

Environment and Development

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Charles Palmer STC. S303

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Applied Environmental Economics (GY222) and/or Intermediate Microeconomics (EC201)
Course content: This course explores the complex relationships between development, poverty and the environment. It covers a range of important natural resource and environmental issues in developing countries, and provides students with the necessary tools to critically evaluate how these issues have been addressed by different stakeholders and at different levels of governance. Using concepts and analytical tools grounded in political ecology and economics, the course will examine a range of topics, including: the politics of sustainable development; property rights and governance; the food-energy-water nexus; the resource curse; critical resource issues (including forestry, fresh water, and fisheries); biofuels; and urbanisation.
By the end of the course, students should be able to:
• Assess key debates related to sustainable development
• Critically evaluate relationships between development, poverty, natural resource use and the environment
• Understand the natural resource linkages between developing and developed countries
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one 1,000 word formative essay in the MT and one 750 word essay plan in the LT.

Independent Research Project

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Mercer STC.418
Other teachers responsible: Student's Academic Adviser in the Department of Geography and Environment
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
For students required to, or choosing to, submit an independent research project ('IRP') as part of a Bachelor's degree within the programmes' listed above.
Pre-requisites: GY2A0 or GY240 Geographical Research Techniques (Spatial, Social and Environmental) are a pre-requisite.
Course content: Students plan their own independent research project from start to finish on a geography topic of their choice. Carrying out the project generally includes reviewing the literature in their chosen topic area, formulating a viable and geography-relevant research question, analysing primary or secondary evidence or other material appropriate to the investigation (often a case study, data set, archival source, fieldwork observation, survey results or interviews, but also other material), and drafting the findings from their investigation into a final, polished submission. Students are expected to deal with the many procedural and analytical decisions that arise in independent research themselves, with guidance from Academic Advisers and others.
Teaching: 6 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the LT. In the course of conducting their independent research students can draw on various forms of teaching support. A workshop on conducting the IRP will be held early in MT. Students regularly report on their research progress to their Academic Advisers during regular meetings in MT and LT. Students are also assigned a PhD student in the Department who is familiar with their general research topic. Students have the option to arrange further supervision with their PhD Adviser on an individual basis. Students will also present their research in progress to their peers and their Academic Advisor early in Lent Term.
Formative coursework: Students are required to produce an extended proposal which they must submit during the MT. They will be expected to report regularly to their Academic Adviser on the progress they are making on their independent research project, at least during regular termly Advisee meetings, if not more frequently. Students may also choose to arrange additional oversight and update arrangements with either their Academic Adviser or PhD Adviser.
Students are also expected to deliver a presentation of their dissertation project in a workshop during the LT.
Assessment: Research project (100%) in the LT.
IRPs should not exceed 10,000 words, exclusive of appendices and other supportive material. Appendices may be used for supporting documentation and evidence, but not for discussion and analysis. One bound copy of the IRP must be submitted to the Undergraduate Office in S406 by the published deadline, and by the same deadline an electronic copy must be submitted on Moodle.

International History since 1890

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Stevenson 3.11 (SAR)
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course aims to equip students with a comprehensive knowledge of international politics since 1890, to provide a factual grounding and interpretive apparatus necessary to understand the contemporary world, and to survey the main historiographical debates. Lectures and classes examine the origins, course, and aftermath of the First World War; the Great Depression, appeasement , and the origins of the Second World War in East Asia and Europe; the course and aftermath of the Second World War and the global origins of the Cold War: and aspects of the Cold War world, including decolonization, European integration, the Arab-Israeli conflict, the 'American war' in Vietnam, and peaks and troughs of tension between the superpowers from the Cuban Missile Crisis to détente. The course closes with the end of the Cold War and the origins of the post-Cold War era.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to write three 2,000-word essays during the course of the year, two in MT and one in LT, from topics chosen from a past examination paper or designated in the course reading list, and in addition to complete a one-hour mock examination in LT. Essays and mock examination do not form part of the final course assessment. However, they are required components of the course, and students must complete them in order to be admitted to the course examination.
Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, will be found in the HY116 Moodle site. The following works offer useful background: students should consider reading one of them in advance: A. Best, J. Hanhimäki, J. Maiolo, K. E. Schulze, International History of the Twentieth Century and Beyond (2015); W R Keylor, The Twentieth Century World and Beyond: an International History since 1900 (2011).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Faith, Power and Revolution: Europe and the Wider World, c.1500-c.1800

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan SAR.2.13
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides an introduction to the international history of the early modern period by examining the complex political, religious, military and economic relationships between Europe and the wider world. The period between 1500 and 1800 enables the course to introduce students to a crucial period in international history. In political terms, it covers the rise of major dynastic states, with increasingly centralised institutions and concepts such as absolutism to promote the authority of the monarch, as well as the challenges to that authority and growing interest in political and social reform, culminating in the revolutions examined at the end of the course. Internationally, the period witnessed the gradual consolidation of leading European powers, as reflected in the Treaty of Westphalia (1648), with formerly peripheral states emerging to challenge their position by the early eighteenth century. At the same time, the rise of major Islamic empires in Eurasia and the growing contact between Europe and the wider world provide students with important points of comparison between European and non-European states. The intellectual, religious and cultural developments of this period provide an important context for these major political events. The course will discuss the influence of key movements, such as the Renaissance, the Scientific Revolution and the Enlightenment, which re-ignited an interest in the Classical past and fostered a culture of rational enquiry into the natural world. Yet religion remained a vital component in the world-view of contemporaries, whether Christian, Muslim, or Jewish. This world-view was subject to challenges throughout the period, as during the Reformation, and often sought to impose its own orthodoxy, whether through religiously-motivated conflicts or the persecution / conversion of certain groups. The course seeks to familiarise students with some of the most important issues and current debates on these aspects of this period. While its scope is necessarily broad in nature, the course will help students to deal with the dynamics of continuity and change over a long period of time.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 1 hour of workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas & Lent terms and a revision lecture in the Summer Term.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay in the ST.
The third formative essay is a mock exam answer, which will be written by students as part of their revision during the Easter break, then graded by teachers and given written feedback in the first week of Summer Term.

The Rights of Man: the History of Human Rights Discourse from the Antigone to Amnesty International

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hochstrasser Sardinia House 2.14
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Human Rights are often assumed to have a precise twentieth-century origin in the 1948 Universal Declaration or in the succeeding decades of increasing activism. However, the history of human rights discourse and its practical impact emerged as only the latest stage of a sequence of intellectual debates and real-life struggles in specific historical settings over political, religious, economic rights, broadly defined. Different cultural milieus have produced a variety of contexts for working out tensions between claims by individuals or minorities for autonomy on the one hand and the rival demands of collective obligation and identity on the other.
This course will seek to explore an (inevitably selective) range of these historical contexts in order to demonstrate the continuity of perennial themes of conflict between the claims of individual actors and corporate institutions, whether states, churches, empires or other institutions, while also showing how and when key changes take place in the recognition of rights of political action, conscience, property ownership, gender identity and workers' rights etc. The growth of toleration and free speech, the abolition of slavery and torture, and the role of Declarations of Rights will all be examined, but less familiar subjects will also find their place. The contribution of the conceptual legacy and historical inspiration of Greece and Rome will be recognised as will the crucial role of the political thought of the High Middle Ages, and at the other end of the course specific connection will be made to the recent development of human rights organisations.
In each session a contrasted selection of contemporary writings will be studied to recover the intellectual framework of the discussion and the role of the dispositive political, social, and economic circumstances of the debate will also be considered.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT and the LT.
Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly meeting, to participate fully in class discussions and offer presentations. Both participation and presentations will form part of summative assessment.

The International History of the Cold War, 1945-1989

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Piers Ludlow SAR 2.16
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The Cold War dominated the second half of the 20th century, but until recently we had only an imperfect sense of what it was all about. Historians wrote about it, of necessity, from within the event they were seeking to describe, so that there was no way to know its outcome. And because only a few Western countries had begun to open their archives, these accounts could only reflect one side of the story. Cold War history, hence, was not normal history: It was both asymmetrical and incomplete. The end of the Cold War and the subsequent partial opening of Soviet, Eastern European, and Chinese archives have revolutionised the field. Everything we thought we knew is up for reconsideration, whether because of the new documents available to us, or as a consequence of being able to reflect on how it all came out in new ways - given that the historical discipline has evolved methodologically as well.
The course will provide an introduction to key topics in the new, international history of the Cold War. The selected topics vary from the study of specific Cold War crises to the exploration of broader themes such as the roles of ideology and technology.
Course objectives: (i) To equip students with comprehensive knowledge of the international politics of the Cold War; (ii) To offer a firm basis for more advanced historical work in this area; (iii) To provide some of the factual grounding and conceptual apparatus necessary to understand the contemporary world.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Students are expected to keep up with readings for weekly seminars, and to participate in the class discussions.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

The History of Russia, 1682-1825

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan SAR 2.13
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
May be taken by 3rd years, General Course students and as an outside option where regulations, timetabling constraints and teaching capacity permit.
Course content: The course provides an introduction to the history of Russia in all its major aspects from the reign of Peter I to the accession of Nicholas I. The following topics are studied: Russia in 1682; the impact of the reign of Peter I on the internal development and international position of Russia; the social and political developments of the period 1725-1762; popular revolt during the eighteenth century; the domestic and foreign policies of Catherine II; the impact of the Enlightenment and the French Revolution on Russia; Russia and the Napoleonic Wars; the failure of constitutional and social reform in the first quarter of the nineteenth century; the policies towards non-Russians within the empire; the Decembrist Revolt of 1825. The course is taught chronologically but several main themes are addressed throughout the period. These themes include: tsarist rule as an instrument of both reform and reaction; the relationship between the ruler and the major social groups; the significance of serfdom for Russia's economic, institutional and legal development; the 'missing' middle class; the nature and impact of Western ideas on Russia; the role of the Orthodox Church within the Russian state; the growth of a disaffected elite in Russia; the relationship between Russia and other European powers; the development of Russia as a 'great power'; the policies towards the non-Russians in the multi-ethnic empire; the growth of a Russian national consciousness.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
There will be a reading week in Michaelmas and Lent terms. There will be a revision lecture in Summer Term.

War, Genocide and Nation Building. The History of South-Eastern Europe 1914-1990

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Mason
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
May be taken by 3rd years where regulations permit.
Course content: The course aims to explain the history of these regions as expressed and moulded by the peoples and their leaders during a particularly turbulent period in European History. Attention will be paid to two European wars and the Russian Revolution, all of which had a profound impact on these countries' freedom to determine their destiny. The study of the inter-war period will include a debate of the reasons for the collapse of democratic institutions, the emergence of patriotic and anti-Semitic movements, economic failures and responses to German and Italian aggression. The establishment, development and the collapse of Soviet domination of the region after the Second World War will be discussed on the background of ethnic and inter ethnic conflicts. In addition political, economic and cultural theories, which formed the background to the emergence of the independent states of Eastern and South Eastern Europe, will be considered. The course will develop these themes in the history of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Yugoslavia, Albania and the Baltic States. Final lectures will concentrate on the transition from Communism to democratic states. The break up of Yugoslavia and the wars in the Balkans will be considered in a separate lecture.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Modernity and the State in East Asia: China, Japan and Korea since 1840

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antony Best SAR 3.14
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
May be taken by 3rd years where regulations permit.
Course content: The course is concerned with providing a comparative political history of the major East Asian countries, China, Japan and Korea, in the period from the Opium War to the 1990s. The course is concerned with providing a comparative political history of the major East Asian countries, China, Japan and Korea, in the period from the Opium War to the 1990s.
It begins by looking at the impact of the arrival of Western imperialism in the mid-nineteenth century and the respective approaches taken by Japan, Korea and China in response to this encroachment. For Japan, it covers the rise of the Meiji state, the beginnings of constitutional government and the development of Japanese imperialism. This naturally is linked with the study of Korea's failed efforts to maintain its independence; in regard to China it deals with the attempts by the Qing state to introduce reforms and the final collapse of Imperial China. It then deals with the difficulties provoked by modernization and nationalism in the first-half of the twentieth century, taking in the rise and fall of Taisho democracy and the drift towards fascism in Japan and the Guomindang's revolution and state-building and the birth of the Chinese Communist Party in China. The course then concentrates on the aftermath of the Second World War for East Asia, studying the Chinese Civil War and the emergence of the People's Republic, the course and legacy of the US occupation of Japan and the formation of the two Koreas. The last part of the course covers the development of the People's Republic under Mao and Deng, the rise of Japan as an economic superpower and the emergence of South Korea and Taiwan as economic powers.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of the Michaelmas and Lent terms. There will be a revision lecture in the Summer Term.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit three 2000 word essays in all and to sit a mock exam.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the start of the course, but the following survey texts are essential: W G Beasley, The Rise of Modern Japan; P Duus (Ed), The Cambridge History of Japan: The Twentieth Century; L Eastman (Ed), The Nationalist Era in China, 1927-1949; J L McLain, Japan: A Modern History; R MacFarquhar (Ed), The Politics of China, 1949-1989; A Buzo, The Making of Modern Korea; J Spence, The Search for Modern China.

Latin America and the United States since 1898

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tanya Harmer SAR M.11
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: HY239 is designed to provide students with an introductory overview of the history of the Americas and inter-American relations from 1898 to the present day. Rather than focussing exclusively on U.S. policy towards Latin America, the course explores the international history of Latin America and the United States from a variety of U.S and Latin American perspectives. It also incorporates broader thematic and interpretive questions alongside country specific studies. Among the major themes covered on the course are the concepts of imperialism, neo-colonialism and anti-imperialism, revolution and counter-revolution, nationalism and interventionism, democracy and dictatorship, human rights and repression, development and dependency, the 'war on drugs' and migration. More specific topics covered in lectures and class discussions include: the Spanish-American War; Big Stick and Dollar Diplomacy; FDR's 'Good Neighbour' policy; Juan Perón and Populism; the onset of the Cold War and post-war system in the Americas; Jacobo Arbenz' Guatemala; the Cuban Revolution; JFK and the Alliance For Progress; the Brazilian Coup of 1964 and U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic, 1965; Cuba's Latin American policy and Che Guevara's Bolivian mission; Salvador Allende's Chile; the 'Condor Years'; the Panama Canal Treaty and Carter's opening to Cuba; the Nicaraguan Revolution and Reagan's Central American interventions; 'The Lost Decade' and Debt crisis of the 1980s; the Washington Consensus, the War on Drugs, Hugo Chavez and the 'Bolivarian Alternative for the Americas' (ALBA).
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and Lent terms and a revision lecture in the Summer Term.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to do two presentations, to write one 2,000-word essay and one 1,000-1,500-word book review, to contribute to weekly Moodle discussion forums, and to submit a Mock exam at the start of the Summer Term. These assignments will not form part of the final assessment but they are a required component of the course, and students must complete them in order to be admitted to the course examination.
Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, will be provided at the first lecture and will also be available on Moodle and in the departmental public folders. However, the following works are useful introductions and core texts for the course: E Williamson, The Penguin History of Latin America, Mark T Gilderhus, The Second Century: U.S.-Latin American Relations since 1889, Robert Holden and Eric Zolov, Latin America and the United States: A Documentary History, Walter Lafeber, Inevitable Revolutions: The United States in Central America, Alan McPherson, Intimate Ties, Bitter Struggles: U.S.-Latin American Relations Since 1945, Lars Schoultz, Beneath the United States: A History of U.S. Policy Towards Latin America, Peter H Smith, Talons of the Eagle: Dynamics of U.S.-Latin American Relations, Thomas Skidmore and Peter Smith, Modern Latin America, and Eduardo Galeano, Open Veins of Latin America.

What is History? Methods and Debates

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Imaobong Umoren
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: What is history? How and for what purposes do we study the past? What kinds of debates and controversies result from historical study? The purpose of this course is to provide undergraduate students with an introduction to these important issues. We will discuss the history of history from ancient times to the present and how it has changed as an intellectual pursuit over the years. We will think about different types of history – for example, international history, intellectual history, social history, economic history, cultural history or the history of religion – and we will discern their different concerns and priorities. We will analyse some of the most important themes in modern historical study: empires and colonialism, war and conflict, nationalism. We will outline different ideological frameworks for conducting historical research, for example Marxism, postmodernism, and gender studies. We will debate some of the key philosophical questions surrounding historical research: for example, how historians determine facts, and whether or not historical study can ever be truly objective? Finally, we will look at different ways of presenting the past., from traditional history books to museums and TV history. The course is highly recommended for all those students studying history, especially those completing a history-based dissertation.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and Lent terms and a revision session in the Summer Term.

The Soviet Union: Domestic, International and Intellectual History

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Vladislav Zubok SAR 3.13
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course will cover the history of the Soviet Union, from its inception as a combination of the Russian Revolution and a Bolshevik dictatorship, through the Stalinist terror and World War II, its role as an international centre of the 'socialist camp' during the Cold War, to the failure of Gorbachev's reforms and a surprisingly peaceful demise in 1991. Many courses on Soviet history deal separately with politics, social history, foreign policy, and intellectual/cultural developments. This course seeks to connect disparate threads into one historical and analytical narrative by focusing on major issues confronting the interpretation of the Soviet Union and its role in the international history of the twentieth century. The course takes advantage of the extraordinary wealth of new sources about Soviet history that appeared in recent years. The following questions will be examined during this course. Was the Soviet Union a continuation or rejection of its Russian heritage? What were the sources of Soviet legitimacy, modernization, and expansionism? What was Stalinism about? Why and how did the Soviets win the war against the Nazis? Can Soviet history be better understood as a multinational, imperial, or transnational history? How did the outside world affect Soviet domestic evolution? Why did the militarily successful Soviet state that emerged strongly from the Second World War then collapse so suddenly only a few decades later? Finally, the course will examine the legacy of the Soviet Union and the extent to which there is a Soviet 'path dependency' for Putin's Russia.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms and a revision class in the Summer Term.

Islamic Empires, 1400 - 1800

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gagan D. S. Sood. SAR 2.07
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None.
Course content: Following the Mongol upheavals of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires arose in India and the Islamic heartlands. These 'Islamic' empires would go on to rank among the wealthiest and most powerful regimes known to the early modern world. Supported by an array of provincial and local elites, they were at the zenith of their power in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, spanning a region that extended from the Mediterranean to the Bay of Bengal, from Yemen to the Crimea. Their populations were producers, consumers, importers and exporters of goods critical for global trade; their location accorded them a vital role in the flow of ideas and information; there was a remarkable flowering of the arts in the period; and conversion to the region's dominant religious tradition, Islam, continued apace, forging new frontiers. By the eighteenth century, however, the Islamic empires had been reduced to shadows of their former selves, with power devolved to a variety of successor regimes vying with each other for supremacy. It is this struggle that paved the way for the region's later incorporation into Europe's global empires of modern times, and the emergence of today's Middle East and South Asia.
This course will examine the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires, and the larger world of which they were part, from their origins in the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries to their 'decline' in the eighteenth. We will study how temporal authority was expressed symbolically and through governance; the patterns of daily life found in urban and rural settings, and on the frontier; Islam in theory and in reality, and its relationship to the region's other major religious traditions; diplomacy within and without the Islamic world; the new techniques and technologies of warfare; inherited and collective knowledge of other lands, near and far, and the everyday movement of people, goods and news; the signal achievements in the literary, visual and architectural realms; secular changes to the region's societies and economies; early modern millenarianism, fundamentalism and reformism; and the reasons for the eighteenth-century demise of the Islamic empires as world powers.

The United States and the World since 1776

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: This course explores how the United States has engaged the wider world since 1776. Throughout, the course analyzes state-to-state policy-making alongside a wide array of non-state actors and institutions that have also shaped U.S. global power. It opens with foundational concerns in the field about the nature of American exceptionalism—the belief that the United States is fundamentally different than other nation-states and empires—before exploring themes such as settler colonialism, race, gender, capitalism, imperialism, immigration, and transnationalism. The course arc will begin in the earliest founding of the American Republic. Since independence, the nation looked outward to the vast expanse of territory westward across the continent. It spearheaded expansion through indigenous land dispossession and contests with competing European empires. When the United States met territorial limits to continental expansion at the end of the nineteenth century, it initiated an era of formal overseas imperialism in the Pacific and Caribbean. In and through two World Wars, the United States jockeyed for a lead role in constructing an international global order organized around commitments to self-determination. These commitments rang hollow, however, as the United States intervened across the Third World as part of a Cold War contest with the Soviet Union to win hearts, minds, and allies. With decolonization movements, the international order began to fragment, a process accelerated by a new era of globalization. The course will trace this arc and end by considering such transnational forces, including migration, environmentalism, humanitarianism, financialization, and terrorism, which have underscored the recent emergence of a nationalist brand of anti-globalization in the United States and wider world. Throughout, we will ask, what historical conditions incited and enabled the projection of American power in the world? How have forces of globalization impacted the nation-state?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antony Best SAR 3.14
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in History. This course is available on the BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: A dissertation of not more than 10,000 words on a topic to be approved by the candidate's supervisor. It is designed to allow a detailed and thorough exploration of a topic of interest to the candidate. The topic should fall within the parameters of the degree course. It should include the examination of primary sources, in printed, manuscript and/or digital form.
Teaching: 1 hour of workshops in the MT. 2 hours of workshops in the LT.
Candidates should secure in the course of the LT of their second year the agreement of a member of academic staff in the Department of International History (who need not be their advisor or tutor) to supervise a suitable topic, and then submit a title to the Undergraduate Programmes Administrator by published deadline. Supervisors can be expected to offer advice on the scholarly literature, guidance on research and writing, and detailed comments on a sample of up to 3000 words.
Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.
The dissertation must be submitted to the Undergraduate Programmes Administrator by the published deadline in Week 1 of ST in the student's third year. It should be typewritten. Precise details on length, format, presentation and deadline will be issued by the Department through the workshops and Moodle. Candidates may be called for an oral examination if the Examiners wish to satisfy themselves that the dissertation is the candidate's own work.

The European Enlightenment, c.1680-1799

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hochstrasser SAR 2.14

on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The European Enlightenment of the eighteenth century is conventionally taken to be the period in which the disciplines of philosophy, history, economics and anthropology, and other social sciences began to emerge as discrete disciplines independent of state and church control. This course therefore sets out to explore the new ideas generated in these areas as a result of a fresh understanding of man's place in the physical world. But while the course aims to look at ideas and concepts in themselves it is also concerned with the way that they were applied in political practice and adapted to provide new understanding of social structures, or as contemporaries put it, a 'Science of Man'. The chronological context of the Enlightenment is taken to be Europe between the reign of Louis XIV and the end of the Directory in France in 1799. Within this broad framework the following large themes provide the subject matter of both lectures and classes in the Michaelmas Term: the impact of the Scientific Revolution upon institutionalised religion; the emergence of a 'Republic of Letters'; English and French critiques of absolutist monarchy; the creation of scientific approaches to the study of ethics and politics; the political theory of enlightened despotism; the intellectual origins of the French Revolution; intellectual encounters with the New World; the concept of a Counter-Enlightenment; and the move from a private to a public sphere of cultural inquiry. The contributions of Newton, Locke, Voltaire, Montesquieu, and Rousseau - among others - will be highlighted. In the Lent Term the focus will be more narrowly directed to the study of individual key authors and texts and on the impact of enlightened ideas in particular countries, notably England, France, Prussia, Russia and the Habsburg Monarchy. Space will also be found for an examination of the contribution of enlightened thought to the visual arts and music in the 18th century. The course gives students the chance to consider whether or not the Enlightenment was an era of European history that fostered the application of reason to political and social reform, an end to censorship, torture, and hierarchical social models, and a beginning to religious toleration and recognizably modern concepts of human rights, international law and social equality. The focus throughout will be on the writings of the philosophes themselves and their attempts to convert theoretical innovation into practical reform through the agency of bureaucracy and rulers.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Week 6 of the first term will be a reading week. Week 6 of the second term will contain a mock exam. There will be a revision lecture in week 1 of the Summer Term.
Formative coursework: Two pieces of formative assessment are required, the first a source-criticism exercise in the Michaelmas Term (week 4), and the second a conventional essay in the Lent Term (week 4). In addition there will be a mock-exam in the reading week of the Lent Term.
Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course. The following represent basic introductory reading only, and an indication of some primary sources: T C W Blanning, The culture of power and the power of culture (2002); D Outram, The Enlightenment (1995); T Munck, The Enlightenment (2000); R Porter, The Enlightenment (2001). Anthologies: I Kramnik (Ed), The Portable Enlightenment Reader (1995); S Eliot & B Stern (Eds), The Age of Enlightenment (2 vols, 1979).
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Presentation (15%) and class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.
Students MUST give an assessed presentation in either the MT or the LT.
Class participation will be graded across both the MT and the LT.

Napoleon and Europe

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan SAR 2.13
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The Napoleonic Empire was crucial in the formation of modern Europe. Much of Europe was covered by the Napoleonic Empire and its impact was felt across large parts of the non-European world. The influence of the emperor and his policies was most obvious in relation to the European international system, particularly through his military campaigns and his territorial reorganisation of Europe n the wake of his successes. However, the Napoleonic era also saw major developments in the legal, constitutional, social, and economic order of many states, whether allied or opposed to the Napoleonic project. Likewise, in the aftermath of the French Revolution, much attention is paid to the impact of the Napoleonic era on the relationship between Church and State and the rise of national consciousness, whether in political or cultural terms. By studying how Napoleon's empire was created, challenged, and ultimately defeated, the course will focus on the nature of power and legitimacy in this era. An attempt will be made to place the Napoleonic empire in a broader context, in part by comparing it to other contemporary, rival states, including Russia, Austria, and the United Kingdom. Finally, the course will begin and end with an assessment of the Napoleonic myth, both in terms of his contemporaries and for subsequent generations of historians.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.
Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful introductory reading includes: M. Lyon, Napoleon Bonaparte and the Legacy of the French Revolution; G. Ellis, The Napoleonic Empire; C. Emsley, Napoleon: Conquest, Reform and Reorganisation; M. Broers, Europe under Napoleon, 1799-1815; C. Esdaile, Napoleon's Wars; S. J. Woolf, Napoleon's Integration of Europe; P. Dwyer (ed.), Napoleon and Europe; P. Geyl, Napoleon, For and Against.
Assessment: Essay (50%, 3000 words) in the ST.
Other (20%) in the LT.
Presentation (20%) and class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.
The other assessment in the LT involves a 2000-word document analysis.

The Cold War Endgame

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Brier SAR M.13
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Based upon a variety of primary sources, this course will explore why and how in the second half of the 1980s the Cold War confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union transformed itself so suddenly and peacefully into the collapse of (European) communism, German unification and the end of the USSR and her empire. In doing so, we will ask what was the correlation between "high" and "low politics" in these events and processes? Topics will include: the onset of détente and neue Ostpolitik; the impact of Helsinki (1975) and human rights; détente's death, Euromissiles and the war in Afghanistan; the second Cold War of the early 1980s, pacifism and transatlantic turmoil; the Pope and the Polish crisis of 1980-81; Gorbachev's new thinking and reforms in the USSR; Reagan and Gorbachev: superpower summitry; German unification: domestic and international aspects; Kohl, Mitterrand and the road to the European Union; the eastern European revolutions and the collapse of the Soviet 'empire'; the Baltic independence struggle, Yeltsin, the coup and Soviet disintegration; explanations and interpretations of the end of the Cold War. The discussion in each seminar will draw on a combination of primary and secondary material.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
There will be a reading week in MT and LT and a revision session in ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to present one short class paper as well as undertaking small weekly tasks on Moodle, and to submit two essays à 1500 words and one document answer during MT and LT. There will also be a timed mock exam in ST.
Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, as well as a document pack will be available at the beginning of the course on Moodle. The following works are recommended as essential reading: A Brown, The Gorbachev Factor (1996); S Dockrill, The End of the Cold War Era (2005); R L Garthoff, The great transition: American-Soviet relations and the end of the Cold War (1994); Idem, Détente and confrontation: American-Soviet relations from Nixon to Reagan (1985); J Levesque, The Enigma of 1989: The USSR and the Liberation of Eastern Europe (1997); C S Maier, Dissolution: the crisis of Communism and the end of East Germany (1997); P Zelikow & C Rice, Germany unified and Europe transformed: a study in statecraft (1995); H Adomeit, Imperial overstretch: Germany in Soviet policy from Stalin to Gorbachev (1998); H Adomeit, Imperial Overstretch: Germany in Soviet Policy from Stalin to Gorbachev (1998); A Lieven, The Baltic states: Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia, and the path to independence (1993); R Summy & M E Salla (eds), Why the cold war ended: a range of interpretations (1995); O A Westad, Reviewing the Cold War: Approaches, Interpretations, Theory (2000); Idem, The fall of detente: Soviet-American relations during the Carter years (1997); Idem et al (eds), The Cambridge History of the Cold War, vols 2-3 (2010); M E Sarotte, 1989 (2009). Also students should familiarise themselves with the Cold War International History Project homepage (http://www.wilsoncentre.org) and in particular: Bulletins No 5 'Cold War Crises', No 8-9 'The Cold War in the Third World and the Collapse of Detente in the 1970s', and No 12/13 'The end of the Cold War'.

The Struggle for the Persian Gulf, 1945-2003

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Roham Alvandi SAR M.12
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is capped at 30 students.
Course content: This course examines the international history of the Persian Gulf as an ongoing struggle among external powers and local actors for regional supremacy. Through the use of documentary primary sources, the course covers the history of this struggle for mastery in the Gulf in three stages. It begins with the decline of the British Empire and the rise of American power in the Gulf after the Second World War, in the face of Arab and Iranian nationalism. It then examines the long era of intense regional competition for primacy between Iran and Iraq, with particular reference to the Cold War and the 1979 Iranian Revolution. Finally, the course turns to the renewed Anglo-American military intervention in the Gulf since 1991 that continues until today. As a List B paper, the course makes extensive use of primary sources as part of the weekly reading assignments. These will include government documents, public statements, diaries, and memoirs. These primary sources will all be in English and will all be available on Moodle for students to access. Key topics covered in the course include: nationalism in Mosaddeq's Iran and Qasim's Iraq; the Arab Cold War and the civil war in Yemen; the Cold War politics of reform in Mohammad Reza Shah's Iran and King Faisal's Saudi Arabia; the British withdrawal from the Persian Gulf between 1968 and 1971; Nixon and Kissinger in the Persian Gulf; the secret war between Iran and Iraq in Kurdistan from 1972 to 1975; the rise of OPEC and the 1973/74 energy crisis; the 1979 Iranian Revolution; the Iran-Iraq War of 1980 to 1988; the Persian Gulf War of 1991; the rise and fall of Iranian-American détente under Khatami; Saudi Arabia and the United States before and after 9/11; and the 2003 Anglo-American invasion of Iraq
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Nazi Germany's War: Violence and Occupation in Europe, 1939-1945

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Motadel SAR 3.16
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is capped at 15 students.
Course content: The Second World War was the most destructive conflict in modern European history. At the height of the war, German soldiers occupied lands from the Channel Islands to the Caucasian mountains, from Scandinavia to the Attica peninsula. Across the continent, societies were torn apart by war, occupation, and civil war. Drawing on key secondary texts and primary sources, this course examines Nazi Germany's war in Europe from a comparative perspective. It looks at the origins of the conflict; the course of the war, from the partition of Poland to the fall of Berlin; war crimes; Nazi occupation regimes; local collaboration and the recruitment of hundreds of thousands of non-Germans into Hitler's armies; resistance and partisan insurgency; ethnic cleansing and genocide; and the aftermath of the war. The focus is not only on political leaders, party functionaries, and generals, but also on ordinary people, such as soldiers, peasants, slave workers, and concentration camp inmates. Particular attention is given to the views and experiences of contemporary intellectuals, such as George Orwell, Raphael Lemkin, Marc Bloch, and Hannah Arendt. The course considers the Second World War as an amalgam of different forms of conflict, including wars between states, civil wars, and partisan wars, and it also addresses more general questions about conflict and violence in the modern age.

Teaching:
20 hours of seminars in MT. 20 hours of seminars in LT. 2 hours of seminars in ST.

Travel, Pleasure and Politics: The European Grand Tour, 1670-1825

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Stock SAR 2.15
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Throughout the eighteenth century thousands of young British men and women embarked on extensive journeys to continental Europe – an activity known as the Grand Tour. 'Travel, Pleasure and Politics: The European Grand Tour 1670-1825' explores who these people were, where they went, and the reasons for their expeditions. For some, the Tour was the final stage of formal education; to others an opportunity for sexual adventures and pleasure-seeking. The course discusses the practical challenges of eighteenth-century travel, the political, religious, and cultural contexts of the Tour, as well as the key places to visit and the reasons for their popularity. It also considers what the Tourists brought back with them: from physical artefacts for public and private collections, to new ways of seeing and understanding the world. 'Travel, Pleasure and Politics' introduces students to the actual writings of the Tourists, showing how they experienced international travel and shaped the modern tourist industry.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
This course operates reading weeks in the MT and LT. There will be a revision session in Summer Term.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT and 2 essays in the MT and LT. Specifically, the course's formative coursework will consist of two essays (MT and LT), one document analysis (LT). Students will also have an opportunity to sit a mock exam.

Muslim-Jewish Relations: History and Memory in the Middle East and Europe, 622-1945

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Marc Baer SAR 3.17
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Because of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, most discussions of Muslim-Jewish relations focus on the period after 1948. Muslims and Jews, however, have engaged with one another for over 1,400 years. Just as at the beginning, when Muhammad first met Jewish Arabs in Medina in 622, Jewish and Muslim relations have spanned the whole range of human interaction. What approaches have historians taken to understand the connected histories of Jews and Muslims in Middle Eastern and European history, from their earliest relations in seventh-century Arabia to mid-twentieth-century Europe? Through attention to historical events and personalities as well to religious texts, language, law, ritual, sacred spaces, intellectual and spiritual movements, art, architecture, and literature we will explore different approaches to the history and memory of Muslim-Jewish relations in the Middle East and Europe, evenly divided between the pre modern and the modern period. Students are advised that this is not a history of the Palestinian-Israeli struggle, although its impact on the memory of Muslim-Jewish relations in history will be discussed.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
20 two-hour seminars in the MT and LT; one revision seminar in the ST. There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms. Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly meeting and to participate in the seminar discussions.

Retreat from Power: British foreign and defence policy, 1931-68

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Jones SAR 3.09
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The period between the onset of the Manchurian Crisis of 1931 and the decision of the Wilson Government in 1968 to accelerate the withdrawal from East of Suez saw Britain's position in the world transformed under the multiple pressures of economic decline, world war, nationalist opposition to colonial control, and the demands of Cold War confrontation with the Soviet Union and international communism more generally. This course examines how this change occurred by studying several central episodes in British foreign and defence policy. Its focus is predominantly on high-level policymaking in the diplomatic, military and economic realms, but it will all give attention to shifts in popular attitudes, parliamentary debates, the influence of electoral considerations, and the larger-scale transitions taking place in the international system. In common with other Level 3 courses, it will include study and discussion of primary sources throughout. Documents will be drawn from either published collections, including British Documents on Foreign Policy, 1919-1939, and Documents on British Policy Overseas, 1945-, official publications such as Command papers (including such material as international agreements and Defence White Papers), the diaries of key politicians or officials, and copies of documents from The National Archives at Kew. Much use will be made of online sources. Specific topics include the Italian invasion of Ethiopia; the Munich Agreement of 1938 and appeasement; British strategy in the Second World War; Anglo-Soviet relations in the Second World War; the formation of NATO; the Korean War; the Malayan emergency; Suez crisis; the first application to join the EEC; and the withdrawal from East of Suez in the 1960s.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.
Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly class, to deliver presentations, and to participate in seminar discussions.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.
Formative assessment is by one essay for submission in week 5 of the MT, and one essay for submission in week 5 of the LT (each essay should be a maxmium of 2000 words and be drawn from a list supplied at the start of the course). One gobbet exercise will also be conducted in the LT as a form of revision for the final examination.

Slavery, Capital, and Empire in the British World, 1700-1900

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Padraic Scanlan
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is capped at 15.
Course content: From the late sixteenth century until the early nineteenth century, Britain was one of Europe's most prolific slave-traders. British colonies in the West Indies and the colonies that eventually became the United States of America were among the most brutal and fully realized slave societies in world history. And yet, Britain was also the first major European state voluntarily to abolish its slave trade, and the first to resolve to emancipate its slaves. This tension,between an empire of slavery and an empire of freedom, is the puzzle at the heart of this course.
Using primary and secondary sources, this course explores the interconnected histories of slavery, commerce, and capitalism in the history of Britain and the British world in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The course explores how the British slave trade functioned both as political economy and as a system of everyday oppression, how it intertwined with trade in other commodities and financial products like bonds and insurance, how Britons profited by it, and how enslaved and free people resisted it. The course interrogates the limits of 'British' history in the context of a global system of trade, and investigates the complicated history of the end of slavery and continuities before and after abolition – what did it mean to be 'free' in the British empire?

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Each seminar is structured around analysis of an historical document, and debate about a problem or theme in the historiography. Students are expected to read essential primary and secondary materials for each meeting and to participate in discussion.
There will be reading weeks in MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT and LT.
Formative coursework includes a 250-word primary source analysis exercise and a 1,000-word review of a film related to course themes, as well as occasional short response papers and in-class writing assignments.

HY327 The Anglo-American Special Relationship, 1939-89

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nigel Ashton SAR M.07
Primarily for 3rd year BA History, BSc International Relations and History, and BSc Government and History students, but may be taken by 2nd years where regulations permit. May also be taken as an outside option and by General Course students where regulations, timetabling constraints and capacity permit. Not to be taken in conjunction with HY325 Retreat from Power: British foreign and defence policy, 1931-68. This course is capped at 30 students.
Course content: This course will analyse the changing nature of the Anglo-American "special" relationship from its creation against the backdrop of the Second World War through to the end of the 1980s. It will illuminate the foundations of the relationship in terms of culture and ideology, and also the threat posed by common enemies in the Second World War and Cold War. The competitive dimension of the Anglo-American relationship will also be highlighted as a means of explaining instances of discord such as the Suez Crisis of 1956. Topics addressed include: the creation of the Anglo-American alliance, 1939-41; competitive co-operation in war strategy and politics, 1941-45; the American "occupation" of Britain during the Second World War; the emergence of the Cold War in Europe and Asia, 1945-54; the Palestine question; the Suez Crisis; nuclear relations; the Cuban Missile Crisis; European integration; decolonisation; the impact of the Vietnam War; the cultural Cold War; intelligence co-operation; Anglo-American relations in the 1970s; the Falklands War of 1982; and the revival of the special relationship under Thatcher and Reagan in the 1980s.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
In common with other Level 3 History courses, this course will include the study and discussion of primary sources in each weekly seminar. Documents will be drawn from published collections, including the Foreign Relations of the United States series and the Documents on British Policy Overseas, the diaries of key politicians or officials, copies of documents from the UK National Archives, the US National Archives and the relevant US Presidential Libraries.
The rest of each weekly seminar will consist of the class discussion of allocated questions on each seminar topic to provide the essential context for the primary sources and to illuminate the relevant historiographical debates in the secondary sources.
There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and Lent terms, and a revision session in the Summer Term.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.
Formative assessment will be through the submission of one essay in week 7 of the MT, and one essay in week 5 of the LT (each essay must be a maximum of 2000 words long and be drawn from a list supplied at the start of the course).
One 'gobbet' answer, consisting of commentaries on two extracts, must also be submitted in week 9 of the LT.

Independent India: Myths of Freedom and Development

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Taylor Sherman SAR M.10
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Focusing on the early decades after India gained independence in 1947, this course raises questions about the nature of freedom and the task of development faced by postcolonial nations. The course begins with a study of Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first prime minister. Students will survey his philosophy and his style of leadership while exploring the myth of the strong male leader. Students will then question the nature of secularism in India by examining the treatment of Muslims as well as the politicisation of India's Islamic monuments and their preservation. The course moves on to query how socialist India was by reading political theory from Communists, Socialists, Gandhians and others, as well as by exploring Indian programmes in education, health and family planning. Similarly, the course will question the nature and extent of economic development achieved in this period by studying famine, urbanisation and scientific advancement. Next, students will investigate how strong India's state was by scrutinising India's Constitution and surveying the problem of corruption in the ranks of the police and bureaucracy. Finally, the course will cover India's foreign policy, asking students to probe the meaning of Non-Alignment, and inspect the character of India's relations with Indians Overseas and with its neighbours, including China and Pakistan. While the main focus is India, the course will involve comparative thinking about circumstances and policies in other countries around the world. Throughout the course we will watch films, read fiction and view art and architecture produced at the time to get a sense of the popular and artistic response to the challenges of freedom and development.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

From Tea to Opium: China and the Global Market in the Long Eighteenth Century

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chung Yam Po SAR.2.18
Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Did China foster or resist the early wave of globalisation? How should we situate China within the global context prior to the First Opium War? Compared with the Dutch and the British, in what ways did the Chinese interact with the world that had been created by global trade? Had China already become the world factory in the eighteenth century? Using both primary and secondary sources, this seminar examines these questions by looking at the production, circulation and consumption of a variety of commodities that were exported from and imported to China. If we agree that a commodity has its own social life and history, then we can also examine its story in order to complicate our understanding of China's role and significance in the global market throughout the long eighteenth century.
This seminar is divided into two parts. In Part I (the first five sessions) we will historicise the political, social and economic background of the Qing dynasty in the early modern period. From week to week, we will identify remarkable watersheds that changed or transformed the way that China engaged in or became disengaged from the global market, covering the China Seas, Indian Ocean, Atlantic and Pacific. We will also focus on port cities in China and Southeast Asia, so as to illustrate exactly how peoples and places facilitated the flow of commodities on a global scale. In Part II (the remaining sixteen sessions) we will study a series of commodities that each fits under different featured themes, such as 'When Silk was Gold', 'Pepper and Parley', 'Camphor and Taiwan' and 'Opium and Power'.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

International Organisations

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ulrich Sedelmeier Room CLM.5.06.
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have a background in International Relations. Prior familiarity with international relations theory is an advantage, but not necessary.
Course content: The course draws on theories of international institutions to explain comparatively key aspects of the role of International Organisations in international politics. These questions include why states create International Organisations, why states transfer certain powers to them, and what impact they have on the practice of international cooperation with regard to matters of concern to international society such as the maintenance of international peace and security, the management of international economic relations, the promotion of international environmental standards, or the protection of human rights. International organisations to be discussed include the United Nations, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the World Trade Organization, NATO, and regional organisations like the European Union.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two essays of a maximum length of 1,500 words. The first will be due in the Michaelmas Term and will provide the basis for feedback prior to the submission of the assessed coursework as well as preparation for the exam. The second will be due in the Lent Term and will provide the basis for feedback prior to the Summer Term exam. In addition, student will give at least one class presentation (introduction to discussion). Class teachers will mark the essays and provide feedback on student presentations.
Indicative reading: Ian Hurd (2013): International Organizations: Politics, Law, Practice, 2nd edition (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press); Volker Rittberger, Bernhard Zangl and Andreas Kruck, International Organization: Polity, Policy, Politics, 2nd ed. (Basingstoke: Palgrave, 2012).
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the MT.
The assessed essay will be from a fixed range of questions. The essay topics will be posted on Moodle in Week 9 of the MT and will focus on the theories and conceptual material covered in the first part of the course. The essay will be due in Week 11 of the MT.

International Security

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz CLM.4.05 and Dr Milli Lake
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in International Relations and Mandarin and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The aim of this course is to give students a thorough introduction to the literature on international security, both theoretical and policy-oriented. This course is organised into three main parts. The first part introduces students to the concept of security, examines competing theoretical approaches to international security, and considers how the field has changed over time. The second section of the course analysis the causes of interstate and intrastate war and conflict as well as the processes of conflict management, war termination, and peacebuilding. The last part of the course takes up 'new' security issues, including humanitarian military intervention, terrorism and counter-terrorism, cybersecurity, and climate change. By exploring these and related issues, students will gain a greater understanding of how different traditions of analysis, from mainstream studies of deterrence and war, to constructivist treatments of securitisation, to recent developments in critical security studies, think about international security and contemporary international security issues.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Classes are compulsory. Students will be expected to contribute to class discussions and present papers each week.
In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will submit two formative essays: one in Week 7 of the MT; one in Week 2 of the LT. Students may use these to develop ideas for their summative essay Students will submit a 2 page outline of their assessed essay in the LT. This will consist of a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and and an indicative reading list. Feedback will be provided via email and/or individual meetings with students.

IR312 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Genocide

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 6.07
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
This course cannot be taken in conjunction with SO309 Atrocity and Justice.
This course will not be available 2017-18.
Course content: This lecture course provides an introduction to the study of genocide. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, it explores major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role(s) of genocidal campaigns in international politics, inter alia, their origins, development, and termination; the manner of their perpetration, progression, and diffusion; their impact on the maintenance of international peace and security; their consequences for the reconstruction and development of states and the building of nations; and their adjudication in domestic and international courts and tribunals. Empirical cases to be discussed include Australia, Cambodia, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, East Timor, Nazi Germany, Guatemala, Iraq, Northern Ireland, the Ottoman Empire, Rwanda, Uganda, the Soviet Union, Sudan, and the former Yugoslavia, among others. The course is designed to equip students with the analytic tools necessary for making sense of the evolution of the international system from the nineteenth century to the present - and for critically assessing the promise and limits of responding to collective violence.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students are required to research and write one formative essay (1,500 words). In order to ensure a broad acquisition of knowledge, students should diversify the subject matter of their essays. In addressing a given essay topic, students must seek to integrate theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen. In constructing their answers, students may examine a number of cases, drawing comparisons among them, or may focus on a single case. Essays must be fully - and carefully - referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Week 8 and must be made in hard copy.

IR313 Half Unit
Managing China's Rise in East Asia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jurgen Haacke CLM 7.09
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: The main focus of this class-based half-course on the contemporary international relations of East Asia is the management of China's rise. The course begins by exploring China's re-emergence as a major regional power, in part by discussing the economic, political and military dimensions of Chinese power, China's evolving identity, as well as the major aspects of its declaratory and substantive foreign and security policy. It also examines from different theoretical and political perspectives the implications that China's rise has been posing for East Asia. As regards the management of China's growing capabilities, status and ambitions, the course explores what political and security strategies vis-à-vis China have in turn been adopted by the key states that are either resident in or have a significant presence in the wider East Asia, such as the United States, Japan, Russia and India. The course also explores the ways in which China's rise has impacted on conflicts in the South China Sea and on the Korean peninsula, and the nature of the management of China's rise by states from continental and maritime Southeast Asia. It moreover examines how regional arrangements and institutional frameworks for dialogue and cooperation led by lesser regional states have served the management of China's rise. Concepts and theories from International Relations will be drawn upon as appropriate.
Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will write two essays with a maximum length of 2,000 words and present on class topics.

Southeast Asia: Intra-regional Politics and Security

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jurgen Haacke CLM 7.09
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: This class-based half unit course examines key aspects of the contemporary international relations of Southeast Asia, with the primary focus being on the intramural relations of the member states of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). In order to contextualise these intramural relations, the course first explores the different domestic political contexts in which Southeast Asian decision-makers operate, the historical backdrop to the region's major intrastate and interstate conflicts and disputes, and the key security issues and challenges affecting the region and individual states. The course also, secondly, engages in a comparative analysis of the foreign and security policies of the five original member states of ASEAN that will, for instance, take account of the influence of geographical factors, the relevance of ethnic politics and nationalism, political change, leadership ambitions, and the main economic and security interests pursued by governments. Finally the course explores how the respective domestic backdrop and foreign policy outlook of Southeast Asian states have shaped the nature, effectiveness and limits of ASEAN as a vehicle for intramural political-security cooperation. In this context, the course assesses the grouping's efforts to establish an ASEAN political-security community. The course will conclude by comparing the role played respectively by the ASEAN states and extra-regional powers in managing regional security and order. Concepts and theories drawn from International Relations, and especially Foreign Policy Analysis, will be applied as appropriate.
Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will write two essays with a maximum length of 2,000 words and present on class topics.

The Middle East and International Relations Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katerina Dalacoura
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200). Or an equivalent course.
Course content: The course applies the theories and conceptual tools of the discipline of International Relations to the study of the Middle East region. It uses the empirical material offered by the history, politics, political economy and international politics of the region to explore these concepts and theories. More specifically, it concentrates on the areas of foreign policy analysis, international political economy, gender, the study of international norms and conflict and peace studies. It explores the applicability of various International Relations theories (for example, realism and neo-realism; neo-liberalism; constructivism; English School; neo-Marxism and structuralism; and post-colonialism) to the study of the region.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Three essays of 1,500 words each.

American Grand Strategy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz CLM 4.05
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: This course explores American foreign policy at the broadest level of analysis – the level known as grand strategy. The course showcases the main theoretical perspectives that inform the study of grand strategy and applies them to historical and contemporary cases of American statecraft. In this connection, we will assess the relevance of the U.S. experience for theorizing about power politics and the implications of alternative theories for thinking critically about American international behavior. Emphasis is placed on the debates and controversies that animate the study of grand strategy, as well as of the unique challenges posed by making foreign policy in the American political, economic, and cultural context.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will write one short (1,200) words formative essay based on questions from previous exam papers. The essay will be due in Week 7 of the LT. Students will be able to use the essay to explore ideas that they might wish to develop in their assessed essay.
Students will provide a 1-2 page outline of their assessed essay by the end of Week 9 LT. This will be returned with comments and feedback by the end of the LT.
Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (100%, 2500 words) in the ST.
Students will write a 2,500 word assessed essay selecting from a list of topics and questions provided by the course coordinator. The essay will be due at the end of Week 1 of the ST.

IR318 Half Unit
Visual International Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Callahan CLM 5.07
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200).
Course content: We live in a visual age. Images play an increasingly important role in shaping international political events and our understanding of them. The objective of this course is to examine how visual sources - maps, photographs, film, television, new media - influence international political phenomena, our perception of them, and public responses to them. The course has conceptual, empirical, and practical objectives.
At a conceptual level students will acquire knowledge of key theoretical and methodological debates necessary to study visual international politics. At an empirical level, students will gain a better understanding of several concrete instances where images helped to shape international political phenomena, from wars to humanitarian crises, from global social movements to alternative world orders. At a practical level, students will learn how to make a short documentary film.
Teaching: 9 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study and 1 essay in the LT.

Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.
The project will be a ten minute documentary film, which will be made by groups of 2 or 3 students.

IR319 Half Unit
Empire and Conflict in World Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Martin Bayly CLM.4.08
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200).
Course content: Many places and peoples in modern world politics have been shaped by relations and histories of imperialism. Across the social sciences and humanities, as in International Relations, there has been an explosion of interest in empire in recent decades. This course explores the violent dimensions of the imperial past and present. It covers histories and social relations of armed conflict in imperial context from "small war" to "counterinsurgency" and the War on Terror; it looks at the ways in which warfare shapes (and is shaped by) the societies, cultures and polities that populate world politics; and it considers some of the intellectual traditions that have arisen out of the experience of, and inquiry into, colonial violence, from the thought of resistance leaders to subaltern and postcolonial studies. The premise of the course is that warfare and violence have been generative forces in shaping world politics, well beyond the times and places of specific battles and killings.
This course aims to familiarise students with scholarship on empire and conflict in International Relations and related disciplines. This involves, first, understanding the limitations of the sovereign nation-state as the basic unit of world politics. For most people in most times and places, international relations have taken imperial form of one kind or another. What would it mean to take empire seriously in international thought and inquiry? The course approaches this question by looking at the relations between empire and globalization in historical and theoretical context. Second, although much scholarship on empire concerns economy and culture, the history of empire is a history of continual warfare and armed resistance. Such "small wars" have shaped society and politics in both the core and periphery of the international system, and often continue to do so long after the guns fall silent (as for example in the case of the US and the Vietnam War). The course will cover the histories, strategies and theories associated with such wars and their effects. Third and finally, the course will explore the intersection between empire and knowledge in political theory and social inquiry. Not only did anti-colonial resistance produce its own theorists, such as Frantz Fanon and Mao Zedong, but in recent decades empire has been the site of new turns in social and political theory and inquiry, as for example in subaltern studies and postcolonialism. The course will introduce students to this work and it applications to understanding world politics.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the MT.
Additionally, there will be weekly film viewings starting in Week 2.

IR320 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Europe's Institutional Order

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM 409
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Organisations (IR203).
Course content: Europe is the region with the highest density of organisations in the world. This course will analyse the importance of European organisations for both their member states and international relations in general. It will review the development of Europe's institutional order in the post-war era and its evolution since the end of the Cold War. Much emphasis will be placed on the evolution of West European organisations such as the Council of Europe, the European Union and NATO, but attention will also be given to European organisations in the former communist bloc, trans-European organisations, and sub-regional organisations.
Lecture and class topics:
1. Theorising about Europe's Institutional Order
2. Building Europe's Institutional Order I
3. Building Europe's Institutional Order II
4. Building Europe's Institutional Order III
5. Europe's Institutional Order and the ending of the Cold War
6. Enlarging Europe's institutional order after the Cold War I
7. Integration in Europe after the Cold War
8. Enlarging Europe's institutional order after the Cold War II
9. Europe's security and defence institutions after the Cold War I
10 Europe's security and defence institutions after the Cold War II
Teaching: 15 hours of classes in the LT.
In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.
Independent study based on the readings is required. Classes provide an opportunity to discuss issues in depth in a small group setting. Attendance at classes is mandatory, as is adequate preparation for participation in each class discussion. Students will be required to give at least one presentation on one of the topics on the class schedule. Each presenter should provide the class with a one-page outline of the presentation. Presentations should be a maximum of 10 minutes long.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.
Students will produce one short 1,500 word formative essay due in week 6 of the Lent Term. The essay question is to be selected from past exam papers. The purpose of the essay is to provide experience of summarising succinctly and engaging with complex empirical and theoretical material, develop research and writing skills necessary for the assessed essay, and to assist in the development of ideas and arguments for the assessed essay. Independent study, based on the readings indicated on the reading list, is required.
Students will also produce a 1.5-2 page outline of their summative essay in week 9. The outline will include the essay question/title, an overview of the argument, a draft of the structure, and an indicative reading list. Feedback will be given to students by the end of week 10.
Indicative reading: Brent Nelsen and Alexander Stubb, The European Union: Readings on the Theory and Practice of European Integration 4th ed (Palgrave, 2014). Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

IR321 Half Unit
Revolutions and World Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Lawson CLM 5.12
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Course content: Revolutions are often considered to be a 'side order' to the 'main course' of International Relations. But as this course explores, the lack of attention paid to revolutions is a mistake – revolutions have played a major part in the making of modern international order. From the 'Atlantic Revolutions' of the late 18th and early 19th centuries to the 'colour revolutions' of the early 21st century, revolutions have been constitutive of notions of sovereignty, order, justice, and more. Revolutions have also been tightly bound up with dynamics of war and peace. This course explores both the theory and practice of revolutions, teasing out their effects and examining the prospects for revolutionary change in the contemporary world.
List of Topics
Part 1 Thinking about revolutions
Week 1 What are revolutions?
Week 2 Key themes in the study of revolutions
Week 3 Revolutions and world politics
Part 2 The experience of revolution
Week 4 The Atlantic 'age of revolutions'
Week 5 Socialist revolutions
(Week 6 Reading week – session on the assessed essay)
Week 7 'Third World' revolutions
Week 8 The 'last great revolution'?
Week 9 'Colour' revolutions
Part 3 Revolution today
Week 10 The Arab uprisings
Week 11 Rethinking revolution
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT.
The main aim of the course is to provide an opportunity for students to make informed judgments about how and in what ways revolutions have impacted on core features of modern international order. Additional aims include assessment of the place of revolution in the contemporary world and, more generally, the ability to connect theoretical arguments about revolutions with the substantive experience of revolutions.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.
Students will also submit an outline of their assessed essay during Lent Term.
Indicative reading: Doug McAdam, Sidney Tarrow and Charles Tilly (2001) Dynamics of Contention (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press). Assessment: Essay (80%, 3000 words) in the ST.
Presentation (10%) and coursework (10%) in the LT.

IR322 Half Unit
Sovereignty, Rights and Justice: Issues in International Political Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christopher Brown SHF.3.02
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Combines insights and concepts from political theory and international relations theory, and focuses on modern debates on sovereignty, the rights of states, individuals and peoples, and international justice.
Sovereignty and the norm of non-intervention; the contemporary international human rights regime; the ethics of war and violence; the politics of humanitarian intervention; the politics of international criminal law and the ICC; global social justice. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will write one formative essay (1,500 words) due end of week 6; they can use this to develop ideas for the summative essay but students will not be allowed to 'cut and paste' their formative work into the summative essay. Students will produce a 2 page outline of the assessed essay in Week 10. This will set out the research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and indicative reading list. Students will receive approval of the research topic and feedback on the outline by the end of Week 11.
Indicative reading: A detailed list of references will be provided: Widely used books include: C Brown, International Society, Global Polity: An Introduction to International Political Theory (2015), Anthony Lang, International Political Theory (2014); Michael Walzer Just and Unjust Wars (2015).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.
Students will write an essay of 4,000 words on a topic approved by the course convener due in Week 1 of the LT. Full details and guidance will be provided on Moodle and in the first seminar.

IR323 Half Unit
Gender and International Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katharine Millar - CLM 4.10
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200).
Course content: The course examines the gendering of both the practices/events studies as international politics and the discipline/study of international relations. The course is grounded in feminist theory, and provides students with an introduction to feminist epistemologies and methods. Students will discover how 'gender matters' to the study and conduct of international politics through an examination of several substantive areas of international politics, including security, development, NGOs and transnational social movements, and international law/organisations. These overarching topics are balanced with issue-specific case studies (eg sexual/sexualised violence in conflict; gendering of informal economy) to be discussed in class. Particular thematic attention will be paid to the on-going construction of global/transnational hierarchies that are gendered and gendering.
Indicative topics to be covered:
1. Where (and why) is gender in international politics?
2. Introduction to feminist theory and its relation to the 'international'
3. Gender, hierarchy and the international system
4. Intersectionality: gender, race, empire
5. Gender, epistemology and the study of international politics
6. Femininity, masculinity and security
7. Gendered mobilities: queer theory, security and migration
8. Gender and poverty/development
9. Feminist activism, NGOs and transnational social movements
10. Gender and global governance.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT.
In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in in Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.
Indicative reading: C Enloe, Bananas, beaches and bases: making feminist sense of international politics, rev'd 2nd ed (University of California Press, 2014). C Weber, Queer International Relations: sovereignty, sexuality and the will to knowledge (OUP, 2016).

G Caglar, L Prugl and S Zwingel, Feminist Strategies in International Governance (Routledge, 2013). M Yenenoglu, Colonial Fantasies: Towards a Feminist Reading of Orientalism (CUP, 2008)
Assessment: Coursework (10%) and essay (90%, 3000 words) in the MT.
The coursework entails weekly short reaction pieces (300 words maximum) engaging with the week's topic/readings to be submitted in advance of each class. These will prepare students to fully engage with the class discussions. Most importantly, they will familiarise students with the feminist epistemological commitments to critique and self-reflection.

IR324 Half Unit
The Practices of Transitional Justice

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM.6.07
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Organisations (IR203) and International Political Theory (IR200).
Course content: This taught seminar introduces students to the theory and history of transitional justice. It explores the logic of amnesties, apologies, memorials, lustrations, reparations, trials, truth commission, and related responses to genocide, crimes against humanity, and other mass atrocities. Examining the whole array of historical and contemporary solutions to the problems of 'radical evil' (Immanuel Kant), the seminar assesses the conditions for - and limitations to - achieving order, truth, and justices in domestic politics and international affairs. Utilising insights from political science, law, history, sociology, and philosophy, the seminar will compare alternative institutional designs and divergent choices and consider their real, and imagined, social, political and economic consequences across space and time, from Athens to South Africa to Libya.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.
In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.
Students are required to research and write one essay (2,500 words). In addressing a given essay topic, students must seek to integrate, where applicable, theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen. Essays must be fully—and carefully—referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Week 8 and must be made in hard copy. Feedback is provided by the course teacher, who is responsible for marking essays.
Several criteria are applied in the evaluation of student essays, notably: (1) Originality of argument: How unexpected is the advanced claim? (2) Use of literature: Has relevant scholarship been digested and put to good use? (3) Soundness of analysis: Is the inquiry comprehensive and logically consistent? (4) Organisation of evidence: Have argument and evidence been introduced and presented in a compelling manner? (5) Validity of findings: Does the argument remain valid when applied empirically? (6) Clarity of presentation: Are grammar, punctuation, and references flawless?
Indicative reading: Indicative reading list:

IR326 Half Unit
The Rule of Law: A Global History

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 607 and Prof Martin Loughlin NAB 712
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Course content: This taught seminar course introduces students to the theory and history of the rule of law, one of the most frequently invoked—and least understood—ideas of political theory and practice. What exactly is the rule of law? Is it still a harbinger of liberty or just the latest manifestation of neocolonial domination? Is it a moral ideal or merely a means to an end? Can it really facilitate democracy, development, and economic growth? And why is the rule of law compatible with authoritarianism? In answer to these and related questions debated in law and the social sciences as well as in international organizations, governments, think tanks, and NGOs the world over, this interdisciplinary course introduces students to important advocates of the rule of law (from A. V. Dicey to the World Bank) and also to notable critics (including Thomas Hobbes, Carl Schmitt, Judith Shklar, and Eric Posner). Through close readings of seminal texts and a global analysis of historical cases and trajectories, students will gain an innovative and in-depth understanding of the promise—and limits—of one of the most foundational concepts of the modern world.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
Students will write one formative essay of 1,500 words on an assigned topic. This essay will be used to sketch out ideas for the summative essay. Feedback will be provided on the essay which will aid in the research and writing of the summative essay.
Indicative reading: Tom Ginsburg and Tamir Moustafa, eds., Rule by Law: The Politics of Courts in Authoritarian Regimes (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2008). Political Economy of International Labour Migration

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Covadonga Meseguer 95 ALD 1.13
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The mobility of workers is one of the pillars of globalisation. However and surprisingly, international political economists have paid less attention to the political causes and consequences of international migration in comparison to that paid to other aspects of globalisation such as trade or finance. In this course, we shall employ a political economy perspective to study the historical evolution of migration policy, the relationship between trade and migration, and the political causes and consequences of migration flows. I shall place special emphasis on the study of the political consequences of migration for sending (rather than receiving) countries. We shall also pay attention to an important capital flow associated to international migration: remittances. Rather than focusing on the economic/developmental consequences of remittances, we shall discuss how remittances impact political outcomes as diverse as democratisation, the survival of dictatorships, political clientelism, corruption, political participation, and political accountability.

Week 1. Overview and Introduction
Week 2. Labour Flows and Economic Theory.
Week 3. Causes of International Labour Flows: Economics and Politics.
Week 4. Trade and International Migration in Historical Perspective.
Week 5. The Making of Migration Policy (I): Interests and Institutions.
Week 6. Reading Week
Week 7. The Making of Migration Policy (II): Immigration, the Economy, and Public Opinion.
Week 8. International Migration and International Cooperation
Week 9. Economic Consequences of International Labour Migration for Sending Countries: Remittances.
Week 10. Political Consequences of International Labour Migration for Sending Countries (I): Autocracies.
Week 11. Political Consequences of International Labour Migration for Sending Countries (II): New Democracies.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the MT.
Students are expected to write 1 essay (1500-2000 words) to be handed in Week 8.
Students are expected to make one class presentation.

IR354 Half Unit
Governing International Political Economy: Lessons from the Past for the Future

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Morrison 95 ALD 1.14
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided by IR204 'International Political Economy', will be useful for students taking this course.
Course content: Who governs the global economy? How do they do so? And to what ends do they govern it? This course examines these questions by examining the canonical theories of—and state approaches to—the challenges of global economic governance across the last several centuries. While this course takes history seriously, the primary objective is to use the history to tease out generalisable insights into those challenges we face today.
More generally, this course of study will demonstrate the incomparable insights historical thinking offers in addressing contemporary challenges. History has always been central to the study and practice of international political economy. The most influential scholars and practitioners of international political economy have repeatedly turned to history both to explain, and to offer a fresh perspective on, the great challenges of their day. This course is designed to help students cultivate that invaluable skill and habit of mind.
Proceeding from the seventeenth century to the present, it examines:
- seminal theorists' particular treatments of international political economy
- the ongoing, timeless debate between these theorists
- the major shifts in the global economic order
- the interaction between theories and policy in each shift
The course begins with mercantilism and the 'age of empires.' It then explores the great critics of mercantilism—Adam Smith and David Hume—and the relationship between their critique and the revolutions in IPE that followed. It goes on to analyse the rise of so-called 'English' political economy and the 'First Era of Globalisation' in the 19th Century.
The course then pivots to consider two major challenges to this hegemony of thought and practice. First, it traces the development of socialism from an internal critique through the writings of Marx & Engels to an instantiated alternative system in the early Soviet Union. Second, it considers the German Historical School's return to mercantilism and the ascent of the American Empire onto the global stage. These clash of empires then leads to the cataclysm of the First World War.
In the interwar period, the course analyses the failed attempts to restore the global order. It analyses the radical challenge posed by fascist political economy. It also considers the variety of responses issued by different types of liberals. The course then transitions into a discussion of the several postwar orders, from Keynes's neoliberal institutionalism to Gandhi's rejection of Eurocentric political economy.
Last, the course turns to the modern era. It analyses the trajectories of the postwar global trade and financial systems. It then turns to contemporary issues, such as the post-Cold War order, the 2008 Global Financial Crisis, and the rise of emerging markets.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 2 presentations in the MT.
Indicative reading: Thomas Munn. England's Treasure by Forraign Trade. Adam Smith. An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. Karl Marx. Communist Manifesto. JM Keynes. General Theory of Employment, Interest, & Money. Gandhi, Mohandas K. Hind Swaraj or Indian Home Rule.
Assessment: Essay (100%, 2000 words) in the MT.

IR355 Half Unit
Economic Diplomacy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Woolcock CLM 613
The course is coordinated by an LSE academic but is supported by an experienced practitioner of economic diplomacy Sir Nicholas Bayne, former UK foreign service and ambassador and Kenneth Heydon (formerly Deputy Director at the OECD in Paris).
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 'International Political Economy, will be useful to students taking this course.
Course content: The course introduces students to the theories and analytical frameworks relating to decision-making and negotiation in international economic relations and enables them to develop the skills needed to apply these to cases. It discusses the roles of the main actors, institutional settings and processes involved in domestic decision-making and international economic negotiations, and their interaction. It provides students with both academic and practitioner perspectives of economic diplomacy and offers participants an opportunity to understand the challenges faced by negotiators through the simulation of a current multilateral negotiation.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

IR368 Half Unit
The Political Economy of Trade

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Woolcock CLM 6.13
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 International Political Economy, will be useful to students taking this course.
Course content: The course begins with a discussion the intellectual history of free trade and how this has shaped ideas that continue to shape policy today as well as of the core analytical models that assist in any analysis of trade and investment. It covers changes in the nature the of trade and investment in the 21st century, including among other things in the impact of the growth of global supply chains on the political economy of trade and investment. The domestic and international institutional frameworks within which trade and investment policy are conducted are discussed. The course then considers some of the underlying trends in trade towards the use of preferential and plurilateral rather than multilateral approaches. Finally the course covers some of the main topics in current negotiations including in particular agriculture and food security, trade in manufactures, services and investment as well as the inter-relationship between trade and sustainable development.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

The final examination lasts 2 hours and students will be asked to answer 2 out of 8 questions.

IR369 Half Unit
Politics of Money in the World Economy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Martin Hearson LCH.2.04
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 International Political Economy, will be useful to students taking this course.
Course content: This course is designed as a component of the study of a global system in which the management and mismanagement of money and finance are matters of fundamental consequence for international relations. It is intended to be of particular relevance to students specialising in international political economy. This is a course in applied international political economy theory. It deals with the basic concepts regarding the creation, use and management of money and finance in the global system. Students are then introduced to the political foundations of international monetary governance. Issues covered include the use of national currencies as international money, the politics of exchange rate adjustment, the operations of banks and other institutions in international money and capital markets, the evolution of global financial markets, the relationship between states and markets in the arena of global finance, international monetary cooperation, and the choices of monetary and financial policies open to developed and developing countries. The course emphasises that contemporary issues, such as international financial crises, international financial regulation and the politics of IMF conditionality, are best understood in a broader theoretical and analytical context.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.
Students are expected to make presentations on topics of their choice and to write one 2,000-word essay, to be marked by the seminar teacher.
Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus, but the following general works provide a useful introduction: B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital (2008); A Walter and G Sen, Analyzing the Global Political Economy (2009); R Gilpin, The Political Economy of International Relations (1987), Chapters 4&8; S Strange, Mad Money (1998); J Frieden and D Lake, International Political Economy: Perspectives on Global Power and Wealth, section IIIC; T Porter, Globalization and Finance (2005); D Andrews (ed), International Monetary Power (2006).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

IR373 Half Unit
China and the Global South

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Alden CLM 513 and Prof Christopher Hughes 95A 115
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in International Relations and Mandarin and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Foreign Policy Analysis (IR202)
Course content: This course focuses on the substantive role that China plays in the Global South where its preponderance of mterial power and putative developing country status confers upon it a dominant position in bilateral and regional political economies. China's economic position, coupled to an astute use of finances flowing from its mercantilist policies, has enabled it to become the leading trading partner and a significant investor in the developing world. Moreover, the Global South is increasingly figuring in Beijing's expanding security interests and soft power provisions. Interpretations embedded in prevailing academic discourses like socialisation, threat and peaceful rise take on new meaning when studied through the lens of ties with developing countries. Understanding how dynamics in this relationship are impacting upon a host of global and contemporary issues (BRICs, multilateralism, peacekeeping, the environment) is crucial to the shape of the 21st century.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.
Indicative reading: Chris Alden and Chris R Hughes, 'Harmony, Discord and Learning in China's Foreign Policy', China Quarterly, Special Issue (No.9 December 2009), pp.13-34. Chris Alden, 'China and Africa - The Relationship Matures', Strategic Analysis (36:5 2012), pp.701-707. Carol Wise and Margaret Myers (eds), The Political Economy of China-Latin American Relations in the New Millennium: Brave New World (Routledge: 2016)
Assessment: Essay (80%, 3000 words) in the LT.
Presentation (20%) in the MT.
During the course of the seminars students will participate in a group presentation (20%) and submit a 3,000 word essay (80%) at the start of the LT.

IR377 Half Unit
The Politics of Governance, Development and Security in Sub-Saharan Africa

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Milli Lake
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Course content: This course explores the politics of governance, peace, and security in sub-Saharan Africa as it relates to the broader global context. It will explore the divergent impacts of, and responses to, colonial policies in different locations and their legacies in the contemporary era. It will also explore the different political responses embraced by African leaders and politicians to some of the political, economic, and security challenges of the post-colonial period. In addition to emphasising diversity, the course also pulls together common challenges such as rapid decolonisation, the Cold War, structural adjustment, civil conflict, human insecurity, humanitarian intervention, and foreign aid.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 other pieces of coursework and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.
Students on the course will produce a 'journal' composed of weekly short pieces of about 250-300 words focused on a particular country and related to the topic of that week's discussions.
In addition, students will produce an assessed essay outline in week 10 consisting of a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Feedback will be provided via email and/or individual sessions with students.
Indicative reading: Mahmood Mamdani, When Victims Become Killers: Colonialism, Nativism, and the Genocide in Rwanda (PUP: 2001). Alex de Waal, Famine Crimes: Politics and the Disaster Industry in Africa (Indiana University Press: 2009). William Reno, Warfare in Independent Africa (CUP: 2011). Séverine Autesserre, 'Dangerous Tales: Dominant Narratives on the Congo and Their Unintended Consequences', African Affairs (2012)
Assessment: Essay (100%, 2500 words) in the ST.
Students will submit a 2,500 word essay (100%) due in week 1 of the ST.

IR398
Dissertation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Lawson CLM.5.12
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: Candidates are required to submit a dissertation of up to 10,000 words, excluding bibliography, but including notes and any appendices and tables, by the beginning of May of their final year. The subject of the dissertation can be anything within the syllabus of the undergraduate degree in International Relations at the School. Candidates are required to submit the title of their dissertation for approval by the Course Co-ordinator before the last day of the Michaelmas Term of their third year. They are also required, by the same deadline, to submit to the Course Co-ordinator a brief plan of their proposed study.
Dissertations offer the chance to discover, and deal with, new and interesting material. Students are encouraged to participate in this challenge, which assesses different skills from examinations, and to use the opportunity to enhance their knowledge in an area of particular interest to them. The aim is to develop the ability to make independent judgements and decisions on extracting and analysing the most important and relevant material. The outcome will be the provision of a coherent, sustained, systematically developed, and well supported argument on a topic, predominantly empirical or theoretical, within the field of International Relations. The dissertation may deal entirely with secondary literature. There is no requirement for the use of original material such as unpublished documents, archives, or personal interviews.
The final text should contain a full bibliography of utilised sources. Direct quotations from published or unpublished work must be fully referenced. Standard scholarly practice with regard to referencing the ideas of other scholars should be followed. The completed dissertation must be typed with double spacing on one side of the paper and with a wide left-hand margin. The pages must be numbered consecutively and adequately secured. The first page should bear the full title, the candidate's number (but not name), together with the rubric: 'BSc International Relations 2015/16. Dissertation submitted in partial fulfilment of the requirements of the degree.' All students must add on the cover page of their dissertation a declaration which is required for all work submitted as part of the formal assessment of degrees other than work produced under examination conditions, to the effect that they have read and understood the School's rules on plagiarism and assessment offences at http://www.lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/academicRegulations/RegulationsOnAssessmentOffences-Plagiarism.htm and that the work submitted is their own apart from properly referenced quotations. Further information including detailed information on footnote and referencing style can be found on the IR398 Moodle site.
Teaching: 2 hours of lectures and 4 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the LT.
There will also be a 1 hour introductory lecture in the Summer Term of the preceding year for those interested in taking this option, IR398 contains lectures on how to formulate a research question, how to structure a dissertation, and how to find and use evidence. Classes explore how questions are formed, how literature is used, and how evidence is deployed. Tutorials are a chance for students to discuss outlines, as well as receive guidance on issues of structure, logic and evidence.
Advice and Assistance
The dissertation is unsupervised and must be entirely the candidate's own work. In no circumstances are teachers within the School or the wider university community, permitted to read or comment upon a draft of the dissertation or any part thereof. This does not mean, however, that students will be without guidance. The Course Co-ordinator will provide guidance on the nature and process of writing a dissertation in the field of International Relations. He will also provide bibliographical guidance, and will be available for consultation throughout the year to help students address more specific problems as and when they arise. Students are encouraging to approach other teachers within the department for bibliographic and general guidance on topics falling within that teacher's particular field of expertise. Students will have ample opportunity to discuss aspects of their topic, general and particular, with fellow students and the Course Co-ordinator throughout the year.
Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the LT.
Examiners of the dissertation look for a variety of skills and qualities such as: conceptual precision, skill in analysis, organisation of material, clarity of exposition, and capacity for logical reasoning. Examiners also attach weight to accuracy in English spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Candidates should ensure that their submitted dissertation does not exceed the word limit. A penalty will be deducted from the given mark for any dissertation that exceeds 10,000 words. The penalty will be a deduction of 5 points for each 500 words above the word limit (i.e. a 5 point reduction from 10,001 words; a further 5 points from 10,501, etc.). Dissertations over 12,000 words will automatically fail. There is no lower word limit, but students should be aware that it is very difficult to produce a sustained argument to the required standard in less than 8,000 words. For further details, please see the IR 398 Moodle site.
The dissertation must be handed in to room CLM 6.11 by 5 pm on Monday 23 April 2018.
Penalties for the late submission of course work.
(i) Where a course includes course work as part of its assessment, the LSE requires that all students must be given clear written instructions on what is required and the deadline for its submission;
(ii) if a student believes that s/he has good cause not to meet the deadline (e.g. illness), s/he should first discuss the matter with his/her academic advisor or Course Coordinator and seek a formal extension from the Chair of the Examination Sub-Board. Normally extensions will only be granted where there is a good reason backed by supporting evidence (e.g. medical certificate);
(iii) if a student misses the deadline for submission but believes that s/he has good cause which could not have been alerted in advance s/he should first discuss the matter with his/her academic adviser or the Course Coordinator and seek a formal extension;

(iv) any extension should be confirmed in writing to the student;
(v) if a student fails to submit by the set deadline (or the extended deadline as appropriate) the following penalty will apply:
Five marks out of 100 will be deducted for a Dissertation submitted within 24 hours of the deadline and a further five marks will be deducted for each subsequent 24-hour period (working days only) until the Dissertation is submitted.

LL201
Administrative Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Thomas Poole NAB7.19
Additional Teachers: Professor Carol Harlow
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Outline:
Administrative Law is a vital subject throughout the modern world. An understanding of the role which it plays is essential to private practitioners. Commercial lawyers frequently come into contact with regulatory agencies whose special procedures derive from administrative law. Dealings with international agencies (including the European Union) are often governed by administrative law. Public law expertise opens the way to good careers in government service. There is a flourishing Administrative Law Bar, reflected in well-established sets of chambers.
The course aims to reflect the wider dimensions of administrative law, stressing links with public administration, commerce and politics. We emphasise the functions of law in the administrative process and the constitutional role of judicial review. We also aim to show how membership of the European Union and adherence to the European Convention on Human Rights has influenced our system of public law. We look at the way in which changed systems of governance, especially the rapid growth of regulatory agencies, can be reflected in and controlled by traditional rules of administrative law. We consider alternative dispute resolution, including public inquiries or the Citizens' Charter. In addition to compulsory essays there are opportunities for presentation of papers.
Syllabus:
Theories of administrative law. Decision-making and the administrative process: rules and discretion. The 'contracting state': administrative law and new public management. Risk and the regulatory state (including responses to the financial crisis of 2008-9). The changing nature of judicial review. Judicial review and the Human Rights Act. The role of public inquiries. European influences on national administrative law. 'Global administrative law'. The Ombudsman and complaints.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.
Indicative reading: Main texts: C. Harlow & R. Rawlings, Law and Administration (3rd ed., 2009); P. Cane, An Introduction to Administrative Law (2004); M. Taggart (ed.), The Province of Administrative Law (1997); N. Bamforth and P. Leyland (eds.), Public Law in a Multi-Layered Constitution (2003).
Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Essay (33%, 4000 words) in the ST.

LL202
Commercial Contracts

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Macmahon (Michaelmas Term) NAB6.02A and Dr Joseph Spooner (Lent and Summer Terms) NAB6.29
Additional Teachers: Dr Jo Braithwaite, Professor Ross Cranston, Professor Michael Lobban, Dr Nick Sage.
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
This optional LLB course is normally available to students who have completed Law of Obligations LL104.
Pre-requisites: Completion of LL104 - Law of Obligations is normally a prerequisite.
Course content: Objectives:
LL202 Commercial Contracts comprises a study of the general principles of English law governing commercial contracts.
Its examination of this subject-matter divides into two parts. Part 1, 'Fundamentals of Commercial Contracting' examines several important aspects of, or themes in, the law's regulation of commercial contracting. The topics are chosen because of their intrinsic interest, and because of the opportunity offered for an advanced contextualised examination of contract law fundamentals. Part 1 therefore explores topics including the process of commercial contracting; multi-party transactions and agreed remedies. Part 2, 'Fundamentals of Commercial Law' examines core topics in commercial law. It focuses on an examination of the sale of goods contract, while also considering several important allied topics: money, payment and payment methods; credit, security and reservation of title; agency; and assignment. The course concludes with a discussion of dispute resolution in commercial contracts, particularly those of an international nature.
Topics are likely to include:
Part 1 – Fundamentals of Commercial Contracting
• Freedom of contract.
• The formation of commercial contracts and their interpretation.
• Pre-contractual duties.
• Mistakes in contracts.
• Frustration of contracts.
• Multi-party projects (privity of contract).
• Agreed remedies.
Part 2 – Fundamentals of Commercial Law

• Agency.
• Assignment.
• Contracts for the sale of goods.
• Credit and security.
• Money, payment and payment methods.
• Commercial dispute resolution.
• International contracting.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two formative essays per term.

Indicative reading: The principal textbooks for the course are:
• Chen-Wishart 5th edn OUP
• McKendrick, Goode on Commercial Law, 5th edn (Penguin 2017)

LL203
Law of Business Associations

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Kershaw

Additional Teachers: Visiting Professors Leslie Kosmin, QC and Mary Stokes (lectures).

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Experience suggests that third year students are more successful.

Pre-requisites: It is helpful to have studied or be studying Property II, although this is not a formal pre-requisite.

Course content: Outline:

This course examines the nature of the legal vehicles available for the carrying on of entrepreneurial activities, paying particular attention to the analysis of companies. It examines the core features of the company. These are: separate legal personality, limited liability, centralised management, the allocation of control rights, and free transferability of shares. The course analyses how the law implements these features and the policy trade-offs among them.

The course discusses the relationship between various groups with an interest in the affairs of the company – shareholders, directors, managers, financiers, trade creditors, employees, consumers and regulators - and the balance of power between them. The course looks beyond purely technical legal issues and encourages a critical examination of the system and proposals for reform.

Registered companies are creatures of statute and close attention to the Companies Acts and related legislation is essential. However, no attempt is made to deal with all, or even most, of the complex technical aspects of the legislation and non-statutory regulation. The course concentrates on the problems and policies underlying the legislation, with some more detailed consideration of selected provisions. The increasing influence of European Directives and Regulations on UK company law is also reflected.

Despite the importance of statute, common law and equitable principles have played a major role in the development of company law by the courts. This has relied heavily on principles of agency and the equitable principles relating to fiduciaries. Case analysis is therefore a major element of the course. Excellent case books are available.

This subject covers a wide range of businesses - from the one-person firm (the local greengrocer or plumber) to family companies, to major multinational groups listed on the Stock Exchange. This wide coverage plus the policy emphasis means that this course should appeal to all students with an interest in the economic, social and political aspects of business organisations and not only to those wishing to practise commercial law.

Topics usually covered are:
• Introductory concepts and themes including limited liability and corporate personality.
• Capacity of companies & the powers of individuals acting for companies.
• Shares and share capital.
• Directors: powers, duties and corporate governance issues.
• The role of shareholders in companies: rights, decision-making and governance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Lectures are accompanied by fortnightly two-hour seminars, which follow the lectures closely. Reading lists provided by the lecturer in each topic are used as the basis for seminar work.

Seminars are held in weeks 3,5,8,10,11 of MT and LT. The two revision classes are in week 1 ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Gower and Davies, Principles of Modern Company Law (9th edn, 2012); David Kershaw, Company Law in Context (2nd edn, 2012); Sealy and Worthington, Cases and Material on Company Law (10th edn, 2012)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL204
Advanced Torts

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emmanuel Voyiakis, NAB 6.17

Additional Teachers: Dr Paul MacMahon and Dr Charlie Webb.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Law of Obligations (LL104).

Course content: Our course aims to broaden and deepen your knowledge of tort law in two ways. First, it looks at a range of important torts that are not covered in the Law of Obligations course. Second, it tackles the 'big' theoretical questions of tort law. On finishing the course, you will not only have gained a better understanding of the rules and principles that govern specific torts, but you will also be able to engage critically with different views about the overall purpose and the moral and social function of tort law.

Here are some topics we usually cover:
(1) Theories of tort law: what is the aim of tort law and do judges need a theory of it?
(2) Tort law and the 'compensation culture'
(3) Tort law, moral responsibility and luck
(4) Negligence focus: the position of public authorities; negligent endangerment
(5) Wrongful life and wrongful birth
(6) Interference with the person: assault; battery; harassment; the Wilkinson v Downton tort
(7) Problems of causation: loss of chance
(8) Illegality
(9) Strict liability regimes: vicarious liability; liability for ultra-hazardous activities; liability for defective products; the justification of strict liability.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One item of written work per term
Indicative reading: Introductory Texts: John G. Fleming, An Introduction to the Law of Torts (2nd ed., 1985); Carol Harlow, Understanding Tort Law (3rd ed., 2005). General Texts: W V H Rogers, Winfield & Jolowicz on Tort (18th ed., 2010); N J McBride & R Bagshaw, Tort Law (4th ed., 2012); B A Hepple, D Howarth & M H Matthews, Tort: Cases and Materials (6th ed., 2008); S Deakin, A Johnston & B Markesinis, Markesinis and Deakin's Tort Law (7th ed, 2012); P Cane, Atiyah's Accidents, Compensation and the Law (7th ed., 2006). Advanced/Specialised Texts: Robert Stevens, Torts and Rights (2007); Jules Coleman, Risks and Wrongs (2002); Guido Calabresi, The Cost of Accidents: A Legal and Economic Analysis (1970); David Owen (ed.), Philosophical Foundations of Tort Law (1997); Harvey Teff, Causing Psychiatric and Emotional Harm: Reshaping the Boundaries of Legal Liability (2008); Nicolette Priaulx, the Harm Paradox: Tort Law and the Unwanted Child in an Era of Choice (2007). If all goes according to plan, the degree of depth we will attain in the course and the focused nature of our reading lists for each topic will make textbooks redundant, or at least useful only as a basic introduction to the issues we will be covering. This means that the tort textbook you may have purchased for the LL104 Law of Obligations course will probably be good enough for the latter purpose. Here are some other introductory or general texts that you might like to consult from time to time, just to get a different perspective on things, and some more advanced or specialised books from which we will be setting reading for certain topics.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL205
Medical Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Emily Jackson
Additional Teachers:
Dr Julie McCandless, Mr Antony Blackburn-Starza
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Medical law is a fast moving and increasingly controversial subject. The rationing of expensive new drugs, and the future of the NHS have become central political issues. New scientific developments, such as gene editing, face transplants and direct-to-consumer genetic testing, are invariably accompanied by demands for their regulation. In this course we examine the legal framework within which health services are provided, and we explore some of the complex ethical dilemmas that arise when determining the limits of medical innovation.
Subjects include resource allocation; malpractice litigation; consent; capacity; confidentiality; genetics; clinical trials; regulation of medicines; organ transplantation; embryo and stem cell research; abortion; assisted conception; preimplantation genetic diagnosis; surrogacy; assisted dying.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.
Indicative reading: Jackson, Medical Law: Text, Cases and Materials 4th edition (Oxford UP, 2016).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL207
Civil Liberties and Human Rights

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB 7.01
Additional Teachers:Dr Thomas Poole, Dr Peter Ramsay.
This course is capped at 50.
Course content: The course provides a challenging introduction to human rights law. The first term focuses on the European Convention on Human Rights with an in-depth analysis of the case law on several important rights, including but not limited to freedom of expression, freedom of association, freedom of religion, the right to respect for private life, and freedom from torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The second term deals with the UK Human Rights Act and builds not only on the first term's work but also on the knowledge that students have acquired in Public Law in year one. Thus, students must engage with the law of two legal systems here: the European Convention on Human Rights and U.K. law.
The course takes a highly analytical approach; it will not be sufficient to approach the issues in a descriptive, "black letter" way. Rather, an overall aim is to enable students to critically assess the European Court's and the U.K. Supreme Court's arguments about the compatibility of a policy or administrative decision with human rights and the particularities of human rights adjudication within the U.K. legal system. To this end, the course will focus on the necessary doctrinal and conceptual framework – such as positive obligations, the margin of appreciation and proportionality –, an overview of the relevant case law, and in-depth analysis of selected problems in human rights law.
This course does not touch upon strategic or policy issues (such as the most effective ways to promote human rights, NGO practices, etc.); rather it focuses on the controversial and often difficult moral and political issues that arise in human rights adjudication and on unravelling the implications of the unusual (some would say idiosyncratic) way in which U.K. law has incorporated the ECHR. Regard will however be had to the current argument over whether or not the Act should be repealed.
The teaching of this course is mainly case-based. To complete it successfully, students must prepare for each seminar by reading and thinking through the relevant cases; the seminars will be conducted on the basis of the expectation that the students are familiar with the materials. There is no comprehensive textbook available for this course.
Syllabus: The history of human rights protection in the UK; theoretical aspects of human rights; the Human Rights Act 1998; human rights and parliamentary sovereignty; human rights and standards of review; human rights and the common law; precedent and human rights law. The rights to life and freedom from torture; freedom of expression; freedom of association and 'militant democracy'; freedom of religion; the right to respect for private and family life. Mental health and human rights. Terrorism, security and states of emergency; 'social learning'. Anomalous zones.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.
Indicative reading: For European Convention law there exists no textbook which deals with the issues in adequate depth, but interested students may want to take a look at Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (OUP, 2014) for an overview. For the more theoretical aspects of the course, see K. Möller's The Global Model of Constitutional Rights (OUP 2012; paperback edition 2015). For the second term, representative works include Conor Gearty, Civil Liberties (OUP, 2007), Tom Hickman, Public Law after the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010) and Aileen Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (CUP, 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL209 Commercial and Enterprise Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: To be confirmed
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Commercial and Enterprise Law introduces the basic institutions of the market economy, and the governance of enterprise, in a post-financial crisis world: the law of contract, companies, labour and insolvency. It is the LSE's oldest course (since 1895, originally named 'Commercial and Industrial Law') and probably the first in the world to teach labour law. Over the years it has attracted enquiring students from non-law departments, a number of whom became Nobel laureates.
Michelmas term is the law of contract. We examine how agreements become legally binding, the regulation of unfair terms and basic consumer protection laws. We see how a contract may be cancelled when fully informed and true consent is not present, including through misrepresentation or coercion, and examine remedies for breach of contract.
Lent term examines enterprise governance: introducing companies, labour relations and insolvency law. How are company directors accountable to shareholders, employees and other stakeholders? Which fiduciary duties and duties of care do directors owe a company? What voice does labour have in corporate governance? Should banks acquire privileges through securitised lending over other creditors? How will a corporate insolvency be administered, and the losses distributed? Finally, how can directors and shareholders be held to account after insolvency? The aim is to understand the operation of the basic institutions in the market segment of the economy.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: Core texts: E McKendrick, Contract Law (11th edn 2015). A Dignam and J Lowry, Company Law (8th edn 2014). A Burrows, A Casebook on Contract (4th edn 2013). L Sealy and S Worthington, Cases and Material in Company Law (10th edn 2013)
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL210 Information Technology and the Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Andrew Murray NAB 7.11
Dr. Orla Lynskey NAB 6.23
Availability:
This course is available to LLB and Law and Anthropology students. It is also available as an outside option to students in other departments and to General Course Students. Students from other Universities should contact the course convenor regarding participation in this course.
Pre-requisites: This course does not require an in-depth understanding of contemporary computer technology – we are primarily interested in the implications of the use of information technology, and the intended and unintended consequences of regulating that use.
Course content: This survey course, which is divided into six modules, introduces students to a selection of fundamental legal issues in the field of Information Technology (IT) Law. It begins by examining ongoing debates regarding the appropriate theoretical framework applicable to internet regulation and governance, tackling questions such as whether the internet should be controlled and, if so, by whom. It then examines substantive legal topics, such as data protection, cybercrime, intellectual property and online freedom of expression, against this theoretical backdrop. In particular, students are encouraged to consider how the law has responded to the challenges of information technologies, and the extent to which legal issues have shaped the development of information society policy.
The focus will be initially on English law, although the increasingly global nature of IT law means that there are already strong EU and US legal influences upon the English system, so comparative aspects will be introduced in places, and readings will include materials drawn from, amongst others, US law journals.
At the end of the course, students should be able to assess critically ongoing developments in law relating to information technologies and to evaluate the internal coherence of these developments and their doctrinal and political implications.
Indicative Content:
Michaelmas 2017
• Introduction to Internet Regulation and Governance
• Cybercrime
• Intellectual Property Rights Online
Lent 2018
• E-Commerce
• Data Protection and Online Surveillance
• Freedom of Expression Online

LL212 Conflict of Laws

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jacobus Bomhoff NAB6.09
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: A good knowledge of law is required. The majority of students taking this course tend to be in their third year. That said, many second year students have done very well on this course over the past years.
Course content: Conflict of laws - also known as private international law - is the area of law concerned with cases in which the facts present one or more international elements. The field's three main questions are (1) jurisdiction (will an English court or a foreign court hear a case?), (2) choice of law (should the court apply its own law or that of a foreign country?), (3) the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgements. During the course, these three questions will frame reflection on a range of topics, including commercial/practical issues (e.g. how can companies structure their cross-border transactions), but also questions of a more political nature (e.g. to what extent should States be able to regulate matters beyond their own borders?) or with a strong social/cultural dimension (e.g. how should foreign cultural understandings of justice be accommodated in domestic law?). Because of the growing role of the European Union in this area, the interaction between English and European approaches to conflict of laws issues will be an important running theme throughout the course.

Syllabus
- Jurisdiction: Brussels I Regulation 2012; English traditional rules; Comparative case studies (US and Canadian law); Choice of court agreements; Anti-suit injunctions.
- Choice of law: Contract and Tort (Rome I and Rome II Regulations); Comparative case studies; Public policy; Foreign illegality; Overriding mandatory rules.
- Foreign judgments: Brussels I Regulation 2012; English traditional rules; Comparative case studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
There will be reading weeks in Week 6 of MT and Week 6 of LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: Students will be provided with a Course Reader, which is posted on Moodle in instalments throughout the year. The following texts may serve as sources of reference throughout the course: Jonathan Hill & Adeline Chong, International Commercial Disputes (Hart Publishing); Trevor Hartley, International Commercial Litigation (CUP); Peter North & James Fawcett, Cheshire & North's Private International Law (OUP); Adrian Briggs, The Conflict of Laws (OUP). Always make sure you have the most recent edition.
Resources: www.conflictoflaws.net (Topical references, cases and reviews).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL221
Family Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julie Mccandless NAB.6.07
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: This is an exciting time to study Family Law! Maybe more than ever before, the family is in flux. With marriage rates tumbling, divorce rates escalating and reproductive technologies becoming normalised, record numbers of children are living outside the traditional nuclear family of their biological married mum and dad (the heteronormative family). What's more, after centuries of exclusion, lesbians and gay men are on the brink of entering into the most sanctioned relationship of all – marriage. Is the traditional family dead, has it changed beyond all recognition, or is the family functioning much as it always has done? How does the law respond to the modern family, and how should the modern family be regulated? If you want to chew over these and a host of other fascinating questions, Family Law is the course for you.
Term 1: Adult Relations: 1. Introductory concepts: (a) Intervention in the family; (b) Discrimination against families, in the context of human rights legislation. 2. Marriage and Civil Partnerships: (a) the distinction; (b) Gender Recognition Act; (c) nullity. 3. Divorce and Dissolution 4. Financial provision: (a) conceptions of equality; (b) the legal framework for discretion. 5. Domestic violence: the legal framework, and the limits of legislation.
Term 2: Child Law: 1. Introductory concepts: (a) children's welfare; (b) the welfare checklist; (c) legal parenthood; (d) parental responsibility: meaning and allocation. 2. Children and families: (a) legal framework; (b) regulation after relationship breakdown. 3. Children and the state: (a) care and supervision; (b) child abuse.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: Students are provided with a detailed syllabus and reading list for class topics. Basic reading for each topic will be drawn from a number of sources including text books, cases and articles.
In case students wish to purchase any books the following are suggested:
Textbooks: Jonathan Herring, Family Law (7th edn, 2015, Pearson); Kate Standley and Paula Davies, Family Law (8th edn, 2013, Palgrave Macmillan); Stephen Gilmore and Lisa Glennon, Hayes and Williams' Family Law (4th edn, 2014, Oxford University Press); Rebecca Probert, Cretney and Probert's Family Law (9th edn, 2015, Sweet and Maxwell) Casebooks: Alison Diduck and Felicity Kaganas, Family Law, Gender and the State (3rd edn., 2012, Hart Publishing); Sonia Harris-Short, Joanna Miles and Rob George, Family Law: Text, Cases and Materials (3rd edn, 2015, Oxford University Press); Brenda Hale, David Pearl, Elizabeth Cooke and Daniel Monk, The Family, Law and Society: Cases and Materials (6th edn, 2009, Oxford University Press)
Reader: Jonathan Herring, Rebecca Probert and Stephen Gilmore, Great Debates in Family Law (2012, Palgrave Macmillan); Rob George, Ideas and Debates in Family Law (2012, Hart Publishing.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Approved statutory materials may be taken into the examination in accordance with School Regulations.

LL232
Law and Institutions of the European Union

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Wilkinson and Dr Veerle Heyvaert
Additional Teachers: Orla Lynskey
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available on the BSc in Management and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course is an introduction to European Union Law. The course considers a legal and political system which has become the most formidable system of transnational government in modern times. It is also a system that has become, in recent years, a source of continual political conflict: both over the content of its measures and the presence of its involvement in many spheres of activity. Discussions on the democratic nature of the EU, its stance of the protection of fundamental rights, and the relationship between the welfare state and EU law, for example, will all be covered in this course.
This course covers three aspects of EU law. First, it covers the institutional and constitutional structure of the European Union. Second, it looks at the central policies of the European Union, notably the rights to free movement for goods, services, workers, and Union citizens. Third, it looks at some of the most topical policy areas in which EU law plays an increasingly important role: the area of freedom, security and justice (and in particular the Common European Asylum System),EU social policy, and the euro area crisis.
Topics will be taken from:
(1) Evolution of the European Union
(2) Institutions and Law-Making of the European Union
(3) Sovereignty and EU Law
(4) The Authority of EU Law outside the EU
(5) Subsidiarity and the role of national parliaments

(6) Policing of National Observance of EU Law
(7) Judicial application of Union law within the Member States (e.g. Direct effect, indirect effect, state liability) and relations between the Court of Justice and National Courts
(8) Fundamental Rights
(9) The euro area crisis
(10) Free Movement of Goods
(11) Free Movement of Persons and European Citizenship
(12) Free Movement of Services and Establishment
(13) The Area of Freedom, Security and Justice and the European Arrest Warrant
(14) EU Social Policy and Anti-Discrimination Law

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Week 6 MT and week 6 LT will be reading weeks. Essays will be set around reading week to allow students to dedicate time to writing skills.

Formative coursework: A minimum of two pieces will have to be submitted: an essay in MT and a mock exam in LT. One additional optional essay will be set in LT.

Indicative reading: The core text for this course is Chalmers et. al., EU Law (3rd edn, CUP 2014). An alternative textbook that is useful to consult is Craig & De Burca, EU Law (6th edn, OUP 2015) or Barnard & Peers, European Union Law (OUP 2014). In addition, the course uses a broad range of on-line reading material. Students are expected to retrieve these materials on Moodle and print these materials themselves: there is no course pack. Students are not required to purchase a statute book, and the statute book will not be allowed in examination (contrary to the policy in the past years).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The examination will contain 10 questions (of which some may be 'either/or') of which four are to be answered, and at least one question must be answered from each of two sections, which represent Lent and Michelmas term work respectively.

LL233
Law of Evidence

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Abenaa Owusu-Bempah

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: If a person is suspected of committing a crime, how does the prosecution go about proving that they are guilty? Are there any restrictions on the type of evidence that the prosecution can use to prove its case? What protections does the law offer to defendants in order to safeguard them against false conviction? These are among the central questions in the law of criminal evidence, that is, the set of rules governing the production and the use of evidence in criminal trials.
This course concentrates on criminal, rather than civil evidence, and emphasis is placed on matters of principle and conceptual issues. The aims of the course are to teach students how to reason about evidence, and to encourage them to reflect critically on the modern law of criminal evidence.
We study the standard of proof, asking whether a high standard such as 'proof beyond reasonable doubt' is justified. We examine how the police gain confessions from suspects, and how the law regulates the admissibility of confessions. A central theme on the course is the question as to what makes a trial fair. The European Convention on Human Rights is relevant to this question. In this context, we look at whether courts should admit improperly obtained evidence and we ask what the privilege against self-incrimination is and whether it can be justified. As you will learn, much of the law of evidence involves rules of admissibility. Among these we cover the rules regulating the admissibility of hearsay evidence (a topic that now has an important human rights angle) and of bad character evidence (can a defendant's previous convictions be introduced against them at trial?). We also look at particular problems relating to testimony, ranging from the protections afforded to vulnerable witnesses to the admissibility and presentation of expert evidence.
While coverage may vary from year to year, we usually focus on the following themes and topics:
Reasoning with Evidence:
• Analysing Evidence: Admissibility, Relevance and Exclusion of Evidence;
• The Burden of Proof and the Presumption of Innocence;
• The Standard of Proof;
Trial Fairness and Pre-Trial Proceedings:
• Improperly Obtained Evidence;
• Eyewitness Identification;
• Confessions;
• The Privilege Against Self-Incrimination;
• Drawing Inferences from Silence;
Traditional Rules of Use;
• Hearsay;
• Confrontation;
• Bad Character Evidence;
Testimony:
• Vulnerable Witnesses;
• Sexual History Evidence;
• Expert Testimony.
The course has a Moodle page. You are encouraged to consult it should you want more information on the themes, the topics, and the sort of material that we study.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: There is no set text for the course, but standard texts are useful on many topics. Consider, for instance, I. H. Dennis, The Law of Evidence (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 5th ed, 2013); A. Choo, Evidence (Oxford: OUP, 4th ed, 2015); R. Munday, Evidence (Oxford: OUP, 8th ed, 2015).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL241
European Legal History

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umberto-Igor Stramignoni NAB 7.34

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with an in-depth understanding of the social and cultural history of the European legal tradition (from antiquity to the onset of modernity), in order to engender a solid grasp of the basic assumptions and practises that underpin the legal systems of today's Europe.
The seminars are built around certain significant moments in the history of the law of Rome, widely considered to be the heartland of the European legal tradition, from its mythical beginning circa 8th century BCE all the way through to the astonishing story of the birth of the French Civil code in 1804, the first of the major legal codifications taking place in Europe in the early hours of modernity.
In the first part of the course we will explore: the ancient laws of Rome and their relationship to religion and to space; the emergence of the popular assemblies; the position of women, slaves, foreigners, and other minorities in the Roman world; Augustus and his Imperial Chancery; the great jurists of the classical age; the challenges posed by the new religion of Christianity to the Roman constitution; and the decline of Rome and the rise of Byzantium as the "new Rome".

In the second part of the course we will be considering how the Roman law tradition, now increasingly referred to by the English as Civil Law, transformed itself and continued to play a very central role in the imagination, thought and language of Europe. We will look at how Roman law became immensely influential once again, upon its reappearance, in new and different guises, at the end of the Middle Ages; the challenges new readings of the Digest presented to the existing law of the Christian Church, and to the medieval world more generally; the cultural revolution of the Italian Renaissance; the emergence of Humanism and of the scientific method; Enlightenment; the modern movement towards legal codification; and finally, the French Revolution, Napoleon and, as he put famously it, his 1804 Code Civil. The course will end there, at the on modernity, when the European legal tradition began to face the wider and wider challenges presented by an increasingly complex, interconnected world.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
No seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.
Indicative reading: The general textbooks for the course are Inventing the Individual (2014), by Larry Siedentop, and the short but iconic book by Peter Stein, Roman Law in European History (1999). In addition, students will be required to familiarize themselves with the content of a mixture of visual aids (designed specifically for this course by Dr Stramignoni), and of numerous readings complementing the two textbooks, including academic journal articles and chapters from other monographs. Those thinking to take this course are encouraged to explore the course Moodle page for more information.
Assessment: Assessment path 1
Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Assessment path 2
Dissertation (100%, 12000 words) in the ST.

LL242
International Protection of Human Rights

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chaloka Beyani
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students need to have already taken and done well in a course in Public International Law or in Civil Liberties Law.
Course content: This course aims to provide a comprehensive and analytical account of the application of human rights standards in international law, and the operation of the existing international machinery for the protection of human rights. The course is designed to be both theoretical and practical.
The course deals with important conceptual issues: What are human rights? What is their purpose and status in international law? Are they absolute or relative? Can they be of equal significance to societies at different stages of development? When may they be qualified? What is the relation between economic and social rights as well as civil and political rights? Are rights attributable to groups as well as to individuals? Why are there special categories of protection, e.g. minorities, indigenous peoples, children, women and refugees?
Extensive use is made of relevant case law, of the Civil and Political Covenant, the European Convention, the American Convention, the African Charter, and the International Court of Justice; and particular rights (such as those of persons belonging to minorities, the right to life, the prohibition of torture, the right to a fair trial, family life, and the fundamental freedoms) are studied in considerable detail.
The law of human rights reflects attempts made internationally to articulate basic legal standards for the protection of individuals and groups in their relations with the state, and to use the authority of international law, institutions, and procedures, to secure compliance with such standards. Human rights law is a modern phenomenon; but it has an ancient lineage. Some account of its evolution is given, from natural rights, civil liberties, the history of minorities protection, and the progressive development of human rights in public international law since 1945.
However, the major part of the course relates to post-1945 events concerning the protection of human rights. A section of the course deals with the role and reform of the United Nations to promote and secure the observance, on a universal basis, of international standards of human rights. The development of important legal standards (such as those of non-discrimination) is traced; and the work of various UN bodies in applying human rights is analysed. The International Covenants on Human Rights are closely studied, with equal emphasis on the Committee under the Civil and Political Covenant, and the Committee under the Economic Covenant. Comparisons are also drawn with regional attempts to promote and protect human rights, with the European system, the Inter-American system and the African system receiving special attention as regards their treaties, their institutions, procedure, and case-law.
By the end of the course students should have a good understanding of the substantive content of contemporary human rights and of the existing and alternative means available for protecting these rights and fundamental freedoms.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: R. Smith, International Human Rights; S. Joseph, J. Schultz, M. Castan, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: Cases, Materials and Commentary; Jacobs and White, European Convention on Human Rights or Harris, The Law of the European Convention on Human Rights or Janis, European Human Rights Law. A detailed reading list is also provided.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL250
Law and The Environment

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veerle Heyvaert NAB7.06
Teacher responsible for 2017/18: Dr Joana SETZER
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The aim of this course is to study and understand how law can be used as a tool to pursue environmental goals and to think critically about law's contribution to local and global environmental protection.
THEMES:
I. General features of environmental law in the UK:
The introductory sessions examine how we understand 'the value of the environment' as an object of legal protection, and how environmental law evolved through time. We study the notions of 'risk' and 'precaution' as key concepts of environmental regulation, and examine how the relationship between Parliament, the Government and the Environment Agency affects the effectiveness of environmental laws and rules in the UK.
II. Controlling space

This section reviews legal strategies for environmental protection through the management of the built environment, parks and nature. It covers planning law, environmental impact assessment, and nature conservation law.
III. Controlling climate change
Studies international law and politics of climate change, the UK approach to climate change mitigation and adaptation, and discusses the pros and cons of market-based regulation as a response to the climate change challenge.
IV. Controlling enterprise
Section IV looks at how environmental harm can be prevented or limited by regulating particular industries (such as heavily polluting industries and the waste treatment sector), by targeting particular products (such as dangerous chemicals), or by focusing on particular activities (such as international trade). We examine how environmental regulation aims to balance between restricting hazardous activities on the one hand, and fostering free enterprise on the other, and review the court's role in adjusting this balance.
V. Remedying environmental harm
The final section examines the role of both case law and regulation in the remediation of environmental harm, paying attention to clean-up of contaminated land, common law and human rights based approaches to compensation, and legal responses to international environmental disasters.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Week 6 MT and week 6 LT will be reading weeks. Essays or equivalent writing assignments will be set around reading week to allow students to dedicate time to writing skills.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to write a formative essay; answer a problem set in writing; and participate in a mock exam.
Indicative reading: There is no set book that covers the entire course, however, several sessions use Bell, McGillivray & Pedersen, Environmental Law (8th edition, Blackstone Press, 2013). A detailed reading list is provided for each seminar. Materials that are not sourced from Bell, McGillivray & Pedersen are made available on Moodle. A good alternative source is Fisher, Lange & Scotford, Environmental Law. Text, Cases and Materials, 2013. Useful introductory books include: Ashford & Caldart, Environmental Law, Policy and Economics, 2008; Lazarus, The Making of Environmental Law, 2004; Holder & Lee, Environmental Protection, Law & Policy, 2007; R Carson, Silent Spring, 1962; R Eckersley, Environmentalism and Political Theory, 1992.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL251
Intellectual Property Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Pottage NAB 7.21
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Content and Scope: Intellectual Property Law consists in the rules determining when, and subject to what conditions, the activity of producing information (broadly conceived) can generate rights to exclude others from access to information. Given that information is an increasingly important source of commercial value within the modern economy, particularly for the entertainment and media sectors and science-based industries, it is not surprising that IP law is such a fast-growing field here and abroad. However its apparently relentless growth is the focus of vigorous debate.
Copyright already provides the legal foundation for the well-established film, music, TV and publishing industries, and its continuing expansion is said by some to be crucial given the trend towards media convergence in the 'digital future', and by others to be a threat to free speech and freedom of access to information. Patents sustain such key sectors as pharmaceuticals, and increasingly now biotechnology, and their availability in this context raise complex ethical and political issues.
Trademarks are central to effective advertising and marketing but at the same time exemplify the tendency of more and more aspects of our cultural landscape to be 'commodified'; they have attracted support and denigration in equal measure for this reason. This course will provide students with an introduction to the law relating to patents, trademarks and copyright, and to the factors responsible for the continuing rapid expansion of each of these regimes of rights. We will reflect upon the variety of economic, cultural, political and technological pressures for the reform of Intellectual Property Law, and upon the processes by which these become translated into legal initiatives. And we will evaluate critically the implications for economic activity and social life generally of recognising intellectual property rights.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: The recommended text will be Lionel Bently and Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law (4th ed., Oxford University Press 2013), and students will also be required to purchase one of the available edited collections of statutes. For a critical introduction to the field, see Peter Drahos with John Braithwaite, Information Feudalism: Who Owns the Knowledge Economy? ((London: Earthscan, 2002); and James Boyle, The Public Domain: Enclosing the Commons of the Mind (Yale University Press, 2008), ebook available free online
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Candidates will be required to answer a total of three questions out of nine (one from each of three sections).

LL253
The Law of Corporate Insolvency

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Sarah Paterson
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: The Law of Corporate Insolvency forms an increasingly important legal arena, which is now recognised as meriting study in its own right. The last thirty years have seen great strides in the development of corporate insolvency law in England. We have seen the adoption of an enhanced legislative framework and the development of conceptual aspects and jurisprudence of the subject. As the recession of the early 1990's eased off there was a period of reflection and assessment of our insolvency law and procedures which resulted in reform of law on the books, although perhaps not of law in action. English lawyers have had to revisit the toolbox during the financial crisis in order to adapt existing legal procedures to meet the needs of new, modern financing structures. There is now another period of wide spread reflection and debate in Europe and the US, as jurisdictions consider whether the insolvency law and procedures which they have are fit for the twenty-first century.
During the course we analyse the legal rules affecting distressed and insolvent companies and those concerned with them (for example, creditors, directors and employees) and assess the issues and principles underlying a corporate insolvency regime. (Corporate Insolvency Law bears a close relationship to the Law of Business Associations (BA) and students may find that taking BA as well as Corporate Insolvency will give them a broad understanding of major themes relating to corporate activity.)
Outline Syllabus:
Outline of corporate borrowing and development and nature of security interests: fixed and floating charges.

The Role and Objectives of Corporate Insolvency Processes and Procedures
Corporate Insolvency Processes and Procedures
(a) Informal Negotiation
(b) Liquidation

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and LT.
Students will be expected to prepare for participation in weekly seminar discussion.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course. The recommended book is V. Finch, Corporate Insolvency Law: Perspectives and Principles (2nd ed., 2009) (Cambridge University Press).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The examination will be based on the full syllabus. Unmarked, unannotated versions of the relevant legislation may be taken into the examination.

LL257
Labour Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Astrid Sanders
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: This subject builds on contract and tort, and to some extent public law and EU law, but introduces the distinctive legal regulation of employment relations, such as the law of dismissal and discrimination law, and the institutional arrangements of industrial relations, including trade unions and collective bargaining. The course looks at these topics in an industrial relations context informed by sociology and economics. Labour law is an important area of legal practice, with employment law disputes representing one of the largest topics of civil litigation.
Syllabus:
- Contract of Employment: the duties of employer and employee; the variety of work relations; vulnerable workers and the personal scope of employment law
- Regulation of the Employment Relation: minimum wage, working time
- Anti-Discrimination Law: implications of the Equality Act 2010
- Dismissal: wrongful and unfair dismissal, economic dismissals
- Human Rights in the Workplace: civil liberties of employees at work
- Membership of Trade Unions, Worker Representation, and Collective Bargaining: freedom of workers to associate with each other and to act in association with each other
- Industrial disputes: strikes, other industrial action and lockouts; rights and liabilities of individual workers who take industrial action; civil liabilities for organising industrial action – the economic torts, the 'golden formula' immunities and loss of immunity – industrial action ballots.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays in the MT and LT.
Students may be expected to perform a moot instead of one of those essays.
Indicative reading: For a concise overview of the subject a suggestion is: H. Collins, Employment Law 2nd edn (Oxford University Press, 2010). See also Kahn-Freund's Labour and the Law (3rd ed. by P. Davies and M. Freedland, 1983) chapter 1.
The leading textbooks are H. Collins, K.D.Ewing, A. McColgan, Labour Law: Law in Context (2012); S. Deakin & G. Morris Labour Law 6th edn 2012; A.C. L. Davies, Perspectives on Labour Law 2nd edn (Cambridge University Press, 2009).Reading lists are supplied for each week's seminar and links are supplied on Moodle for most readings.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL259
Legal and Social Change since 1750

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course examines developments in British legal history in the era from 1750 to 1914. Drawing on printed and electronic primary sources, as well as secondary literature, it will explore the changing nature of law in a number of areas. The course begins with an exploration of the nature of eighteenth century criminal justice, and how this was transformed in the nineteenth century. It will then examine the nature of the system of civil justice, and how this was reformed in the era before the Judicature Acts. In the second term, the course will explore topics relating to status, examining the attitude taken by the law to women, workers and slaves. A final set of topics will turn to explore the impact of law on economic change, looking at how the law facilitated the growth of a modern economy.
The course will be taught by a combination of lectures and seminars in the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. Seminars take the form of a short introductory presentation by one or more students followed by class discussion in which all are expected to participate.
Lecture and Seminar Topics
Michaelmas term: The first term is devoted to an examination of the criminal and civil justice systems in the eighteenthand nineteenth centuries. Topics covered in the first term include the prosecution of crime in the era of the 'Bloody Code', the nature of the criminal trial before and after the arrival of criminal barristers in the courtroom, the reform of criminal punishments and the rise of the prison and modern policing. In the second half of the term, the course looks at the system of the civil courts, the nature of civil litigation and the reform of the major courts. It looks at topics including the 'old corrupt' court of Chancery depicted in Dickens's Bleak House and its reform into the modern Chancery Division.
Lent term: The second term is devoted to exploring the impact of law on society and the economy. Topics explored include the law relating to married women and the custody of children, the law of slavery, and the law relating to workers and trade unions. The economic topics addressed include the law relating to the environment, the transformation of tort and contract law, and the law relating to business organisation.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Students who choose to be assessed by unseen examination must submit one essay each term. Those submitting a dissertation will produce outlines and drafts that will be used for formative coursework purposes.
Indicative reading: Reading will be suggested during the course.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Students can choose to be assessed by 100% examination or 100% dissertation.

LL272 Half Unit
Outlines of Modern Criminology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Meredith Rossner
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None, but some familiarity with sociological or psychological literature would be an advantage.
Course content: This half unit course is a general introduction to the study of modern criminology. The course is highly selective and every effort is made to hold the reading requirements within reasonable limits. It is suitable for General Course students, and a limited number may be admitted on application.
The main focus is on the classical and contemporary theories developed over the past two hundred years to explain and predict criminal behaviour in society. The propositions, assumptions, empirical validity, and policy implications of these criminological theories, as well as the social context in which they were developed, will be examined. Other significant issues in criminology – such as the measurement and extent of crime, the role of demographics (age, race, gender, social class) in the causation of and reaction to crime, the influence of the media and political regimes, and the changing boundaries of criminological research – will also be discussed.
Course content:
- The history of criminological theory.
- Trends in crime and crime statistics. How official statistics can be interpreted and the role of crime surveys
- 'Classical' criminology, rational choice, and crime prevention theories.
- Individual explanations of crime: biological, psychological and psychoanalytical theories.
- Sociological explanations of crime, including macro and micro approaches and recent critical theories
- Criminal justice policy and 'law and order' politics.
- Discrimination, Inequalities, crime and criminal justice
- Crime and the mass media

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
One formative essay per term and a class presentation.
Indicative reading: The texts for this course are:
- Criminology 3rd ed. by T. Newburn (2017)
- The Oxford Handbook of Criminology. By Leibling, A; Mcara, L. and Maruna, S (eds) 6th edition (2017)

Recommended Readings
- Law and Order: An Honest Citizen's Guide to Crime and Control. by R. Reiner (2007)
- Violence: A Micro-Sociological theory. By. R. Collins (2009)
- Crime, Shame, and Reintegration. by J. Braithwaite (1989)
- Understanding Deviance 6th Ed. by D. Downes and P. Rock (2011)
- Vold's Theoretical Criminology by G. Vold, T. Bernard and J. Snipes and A. Gerould. 6th edition (2009)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL275
Property II

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Neil Duxbury NAB 6.10
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
This course is available to second and third year LLB and BA Anthropology and Law students. It is also available as an outside option to other second and third year LSE undergraduates where regulations permit and with permission from the course convener. Students requiring exemption from the Law Society's Part I exam are strongly advised to take this course in their 2nd or 3rd year
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Property I (LL105).
Course content: Property II examines principles of Land Law and the Law of Trusts. Land Law is taught in the first term and Trusts in the second term.
The Land Law component of Property II is designed to introduce students to the fundamental principles of the law of real property (i.e., land). The course examines the general principles governing the ownership and occupation of land, including concepts of estates and interests, legal and equitable ownership, title registration, and trusts of land (including constructive trusts). It also considers the law governing specific third party interests – licences, proprietary estoppel, easements, covenants and mortgages.
The Trusts component of the course focuses on general principles of trusts law and examines the circumstances in which trusts arise, the obligations of trustees, and the remedies available to beneficiaries when these obligations are breached. It also considers the nature and classification of trusts, including resulting and constructive trusts, and how the law of trusts relates to and impacts on the law of contract, wrongs and unjust enrichment.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: Advice on reading, including textbook recommendations, will be provided at the beginning of the first and second terms. An essay which students might profitably read before the commencement of the course is Peter Birks, 'Before We Begin: Five Keys to Land Law', in Land Law: Themes and Perspectives, ed. S. Bright & J. Dewar (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998), 457-86.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Students are required to answer questions on both the Land Law and Trusts components of Property II.

LL278
Public International Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys
Additional Teachers: Professor Andrew Lang, Professor Gerry Simpson, Dr Devika Hovell, and Dr Chris Thomas.
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the concepts, principles, institutions and debates that define public international law today. We begin with an overview of the international legal system, considering how international law is made, how it relates to national legal systems, and what scope exists for pursuing those who violate it. In this connection we examine the work of the International Court of Justice, the International Criminal Court and the various ad hoc international criminal tribunals, along with judgments of national courts invoking international law. We then take up a range of topical issues of global concern, studying the ways in which they affect and are affected by public international law. The issues to be discussed include: war, trade and investment, climate change, and the protection of human rights, focussing in particular on the challenges presented by the current period of instability and uncertainty. We also investigate aspects of the history of international law, its role in relation to the establishment and retreat of European empires, and its contemporary significance and prospects. Overall, our aim is to lay the basis for an informed assessment of the contribution and limits of international law as a force in world affairs.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Students are expected to participate actively in weekly classes in addition to writing assignments during the year. All formative coursework is set by class teachers.
Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each topic on Moodle. You are asked to buy M. Evans (ed.), International Law (4th ed., 2014) and Blackstone's International Law Documents. Some other works to which you may wish to refer include: D. Harris, International Law: Cases and Materials; H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law; M. Shaw, International Law; M. Koskenniemi, From Apology to Utopia; V. Lowe, International Law; and J. Crawford, Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL284 Half Unit
Topics in Sentencing and Criminal Justice

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Meredith Rossner
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Scope
In recent years sentencing and criminal justice issues have been matters of considerable debate and conflict amongst the public and politicians alike. This half unit course is liable, therefore, to alter year by year, with a focus on recent issues and cases. The course examines both the climate in which criminal justice operates and the justifications for punishment, and looks at how courts practically carry out their sentencing function in the context of persistent statutory reform. The various custodial and non-custodial measures available are examined and their effectiveness assessed, including new innovations such as restorative justice. Finally, we take a broader look at debates within policing, prison, and sentencing reform with a particular focus on how social inequality, ethnicity, gender, and migration contour these debates.
Content
• The context of sentencing and the justifications for punishment
• Sentencing - theory, practice and possibilities for reform
• Custody - containment, treatment, mandatory life sentences
• Community based penalties - their scope and future
• Restorative justice and penal abolition
• Police and the community
• 'Border criminology' and the criminalisation of migration.
• Race, ethnicities, gender and criminal justice practice
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
Week six is a 'reading and project' work week.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.
Indicative reading: A list will be supplied at the beginning of the term together with key questions to be addressed in class. The recommended text for the course is A. Ashworth (2015) Sentencing and Criminal Justice. (6th edition) Cambridge University Press.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL293
Taxation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Blackwell
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Available to second and third year LLB and BA Anthropology and Law students. It is also available as an outside option to second and third year students where regulations permit.
Course content: Taxation is a topic that has throughout history pervaded political debate and is encountered in every area of life. Taxation was one of the very first subjects to be taught at LSE. The teaching of tax law as an academic subject started at LSE, where it was introduced by Professor GSA Wheatcroft in 1957.
On the LSE Taxation course, the approach to the subject includes a strong policy perspective. However, legal issues are still important. The UK tax code is long and complex. There are also many relevant cases that are required reading too. Accordingly, by taking this course you should develop the following skills and attributes (i) working with and analysing legislation; (ii) working with and analysing case law; (iii) research skills; (iv) communication skills; (v) professionalism.
Students taking this course should be prepared to use a variety of sources ranging from statute and case law to literature on public policy. The precise balance of materials used varies from topic to topic. All the readings set will be accessible and non-mathematical. NO COMPUTATION is required and no knowledge of any discipline other than law is required. The course is open to second and third year law students, and experience suggests that it is equally suitable for both years.
The syllabus is set out below, although there is some variation of topics selected from year to year, depending on the focus of current debate, and in the order of topics.
• General principles of taxation – objectives of a tax system, types of taxation, and the philosophical foundations of taxation: what gives the state the right to tax? Structure and administration; powers of HM Revenue and Customs. Outline of the British tax system.
• Employment income – taxation of salaries, wages and other remuneration of employees and officers.
• Business income (trading income) – taxation of business profits, income taxation of unincorporated businesses.
• Tax treatment of capital – capital gains tax; other taxes on capital and on income from capital – objectives and effectiveness.
• Corporations – legal forms for carrying on a business, reasons for taxing corporations, corporation tax, integration with taxation of individuals, distributions to shareholders, taxation of shareholders on reorganisations and takeovers, taxation of groups of related companies.
• International aspects – the tax base, tax residence and domicile, double-tax relief, tax treaties and the consequences of British membership of the EU for UK tax.

- Statutory interpretation and tax avoidance – application and interpretation of tax legislation by the courts; tax evasion and tax avoidance and methods of controlling these activities.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: The principal book for the course is expected to be Lee, Revenue Law Principles and Practice (Bloombury Professional, 2017). Tiley and Loutzenhiser, Revenue Law (Hart Publishing, 2016) will also be referred to. These texts are supplemented by the other readings that will be set. The cases and readings are readily available electronically or in BLPES. Vouchers are available for students on the course to purchase of published copies of the tax legislation at a substantial discount. N.B.: most tax law textbooks are revised extensively on an annual basis, so do not buy an old one!
For some interesting background reading the first five chapters of Tiley et al (2016) are useful. Also see M.C. Blackwell 'Variation in the Outcomes of Tax Appeals Between Special Commissioners: An Empirical Study' [2013] British Tax Review 154.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
Selected 'Legislation' may be taken into the examination, with non-verbal markings only.

LL295 Media Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of the press and broadcast media. It focuses on three areas: the regulation of content to protect private interests (such as those in privacy and reputation), the regulation of content in the public interest, and the control of news-gathering practices. The course centres on law and regulation in the UK, as influenced by European law. The course is introduced with an overview of two overarching areas: first, the media landscape and the main social, technological and regulatory influences shaping its development, and secondly, the protection of freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law. It then proceeds to review potential restrictions on these values that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests included are those in reputation, privacy, confidentiality, and intellectual property. The key public interests included are those in preservation of the integrity of the judicial process, the fairness of political debate, the protection from offensive content, and the protection of consumers. The third part of the course focuses on the regulation of journalists' news-gathering practices, and covers such themes as harassment, surreptitious methods (the 'Dark Arts'), cheque-book journalism, protection of sources, and access to state-held information.
Teaching: 10 hours of seminars, 14 hours of classes and 20 minutes of help sessions in the MT. 8 hours of seminars, 16 hours of classes and 20 minutes of help sessions in the LT.
The intellectual content of the course is introduced in hour-long seminars held weekly throughout most of MT and LT. Classes - two hours in duration, and also held weekly throughout most of MT and LT - are occasions for working through group-based problem exercises that build progressively over three blocks of six weeks. Students also receive support in the writing of their individual research papers.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 15 problem sets in the MT and LT.
Each week, group-work in classes will focus on 2 sets of problem exercises, and 1 set of policy-focused themes. The problem exercises are designed to allow students to build the knowledge necessary to complete the summative problem-based assessment. The policy-focused sessions are intended to introduce students to themes that may be picked up as topics for the summative coursework.
Indicative reading: Supporting texts for the course include Millar and Scott, Newsgathering: Law, Regulation and the Public Interest (Oxford University Press, 2016); Parkes and Mullis (eds) Gatley on Libel and Slander (Rev 12th edn, Sweet & Maxwell, 2015), and Barendt et al, Media Law: Texts, Cases and Materials (Pearson, 2013); Leveson, An Inquiry Into the Culture, Practices and Ethics of the Press: Report, HC 780, 2012. These and other materials relevant to the course are generally made available via the BLPES electronic resources or online.
Assessment: Coursework (50%, 3000 words) in the MT and LT. Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.
During the year, students must complete three problem exercises in groups, following extensive preparatory group-based problem exercises in classes. These group-based problem exercises are released at the beginning of each part of the course, and the answers developed progressively over the subsequent six weeks. Submission of the group-based answers will take place in week 7 MT, week 3 LT and week 10 LT respectively. The best two grades achieved in these three exercises will comprise 50% of the overall grade for each student for the course.
Each student must also complete one 4,000 word research paper on a theme to be agreed with seminar or class teachers. The grade achieved for this paper will comprise the remaining 50% of the overall grade for the course. This work is supported by the weekly seminars, by the policy-focused element of each class and by short supervision meetings in LT and ST as required.

LL300 Competition Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo NAB5.16
Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Competition is widely understood to be the best means to deliver better products at lower prices. The point of competition law is to preserve the process of rivalry between firms, thereby benefitting consumers and society at large. A broad range of corporate strategies are subject to this field of law. For instance, competition authorities enforce the law against powerful firms (such as Microsoft, Google, or Intel) that have the ability to influence market conditions and to exclude smaller rivals. Competition authorities also have the power to block mergers and acquisitions that have the potential to harm consumers (think of a merger creating a monopoly). Attempts by firms to avoid competing by means of secret arrangements (the so-called 'cartels') are another key area of enforcement.
Competition law regimes have progressively become a major feature of legal systems around the world. They have long applied in the US and Europe – including the UK – but have now been adopted (and/or actively enforced), inter alia, in jurisdictions like Brazil, Chile, China, Hong Kong, India, Malaysia, Singapore and South Africa. Unlike other legal disciplines, the relevant provisions in all of these regimes are virtually identical in their form and substance and are enforced in very much the same way. This is, in other words, a truly cosmopolitan field. After this module, you will be equipped to interpret and practice competition law almost anywhere in the world.
After an introduction in which competition law is put in its economic and institutional context, this module will address the main substantive and procedural aspects of the discipline. Topics covered include the following:

• Anticompetitive agreements between firms (including 'cartels' and distribution agreements).
• Abusive practice by dominant firms.
• Mergers and acquisitions, including both mergers between competitors and vertical and conglomerate arrangements.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: Whish and Bailey, Competition Law (8th ed 2015); Jones and Sufrin, EU Competition Law (5th ed 2014); Hovenkamp, The Antitrust Enterprise (2005).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL301
Global Commodities Law

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys 6.15
Course content: This course provides a critical introduction to the legal regulation of global commodities, with a focus on the colonial histories of Asia, Africa and the Americas. Taking some of the world's most heavily exchanged primary commodities as examples, we will track the development of their production and consumption from their domestic origins to their marketization and circulation in global trade today. The histories of some principal commodities – such as sugar, coffee, rubber, oil – tell the story, and provide the shape, of today's global economy in microcosm. Most significantly, their evolving regulation has provided the base for central elements of the contemporary international and transnational legal architecture. In exploring this history, we will also touch on cross-cutting issues relating to some or all of the following: the law of the sea, human rights, WTO/trade law, environmental law, the laws of war, investment arbitration, labour law, climate change and animal welfare law. We will also be looking at theories of consumption and production more generally, adopting a broad definition of 'commodity' to enrich our understanding and discussion of these topics.
In Michaelmas term, we track the increasingly global circulation of certain basic commodities (spices, gold, sugar, tea, coffee) in the early modern period, and its centrality to the emergence of international law as well as to the formation of colonial relations at this time. Our examination of emerging commodity markets will remain cognizant of the state-formation processes, international law developments, and trans-global networking entailed in their consolidation. We will also look through some basic theoretical and historical texts and aim to have an overview of key legislative texts and vying historical theories of the economy. In Lent term, as well as student presentations and dissertation preparation, we bring our study forward to the industrial era (rubber, whales, oil, industrial metals, precious stones) through to emerging commodities such as carbon or data.
A caveat: The course is predominantly historical and theoretical in nature. It deals in the main with events from the colonial period (c.1515-1960) as they relate to the history of international and transnational law. It does not aim to prepare students for life as a commodity trader. While this class is complementary to LL278 (Public International Law), it is not necessary to have studied LL278 to take this class.
Following completion of the course, students can expect to have a broad understanding of the historial evolution of global markets, with specific knowledge of how certain commodities have contributed to and shaped the most important international law challenges of our time. Through individual presentations and research projects students are expected to develop critical perspectives on aspects of the topics covered throughout the year as well as hone presentation skills.
At the end of the course, students should be able to demonstrate:
• A broad understanding of the historical rise in trade of global commodities, and of the evolution of the early legal regimes, both international and transnational, for their regulation, especially during colonial times.
• An awareness of intersecting legal issues relating to, for example: human rights, trade disputes, law of the sea, laws of war, environmental law, labour, animal welfare and illegal trade.
• An understanding of the impact that historical patterns of production and consumption of commodities around the world have had on contemporary international law structures.
• An appreciation of the critical theory that informs existing scholarly analysis of the trade in global commodities.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
Students will be expected to submit one 2,000-word essay in MT.
Indicative reading: Fernand Braudel, The Perspective of the World (Civilization and Capitalism), 3 vols. trans. Si¢n Reynolds (Collins, 1984); Sarah Rose, For All the Tea in China (Arrow Books, 2010); Jean Baudrillard, The Consumer Society (Sage, 1998 [1970]); Duncan Kennedy (1985) 'The Role of Law in Economic Thought: Essays on the Fetishism of Commodities' 34 The American University Law Review 939-1001; Hugo Grotius, The Freedom of the Seas, or the Right Which Belongs to the Dutch to take part in the East Indian Trade [Mare Liberum], trans. Assessment: Essay (85%, 8000 words) in the LT and ST.
Project (15%) in the MT and LT.
Summative assessment will be in two parts:
• 85% for a 6,000-8,000 word long essay (proposal to be submitted in LT)
• 15% for participation in, and presentation of, a research project.

LL305
Jurisprudence

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Wilkinson
Availability: This course is compulsory on the LLB in Laws. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: The aims of the course are: To introduce students to thinking philosophically about the law. To familiarise students with the main methodological, ontological, and normative issues in the study of law and its legitimacy. To provide students with knowledge of some of the most influential legal and political philosophers and their theories of law. To encourage and enable students to think about doctrinal legal questions from a philosophical and critical perspective. To help students to develop legal reasoning skills by training them in abstract, philosophical arguments. Some of the themes that the course covers are: natural law; conventionalist legal positivism; the rule of law; the use and significance of principles in legal reasoning; the social contract tradition (Hobbes; Kant; Rawls); the democratic legitimacy of the state and its law; Marxist approaches to law; Arendt's political theory and its implications for law.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write at least one essay per term.
Indicative reading: Students are provided with outlines and readings for topics discussed in the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. For some introductory and background reading see: J.E. Penner and E. Melissaris, McCoubrey & White's Textbook on Jurisprudence, OUP 2012; Brian Bix, Jurisprudence: Theory and Context (3rd ed.), Thomson Sweet & Maxwell 2003.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL398 Half Unit
Half-Unit Dissertation on an approved legal topic

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is available to students in Year 3. It may be taken in Year 2 in exceptional circumstances with permission of the Departmental Tutor. This course cannot be taken in the same year as LL399.
Course content: The half-unit dissertation should be taken in Part II but in exceptional circumstances permission may be sought to take it in Part I.
Students wishing to do either a full or half-unit dissertation should first consult their Academic Adviser in the preceding Summer Term about:
1 whether a dissertation is a suitable option for the student;
2 the particular dissertation topic;
3 who might be an appropriate dissertation supervisor.
Because this option requires considerable independent study, it is generally not advisable to opt to write a full-unit dissertation unless the student has been achieving marks of an upper second class standard. The dissertation subject must be of a suitable academic character that has not already or will not have been explored in depth in any taught course taken by the student but is related to subjects taught in the School.
In light of discussions with their Academic Adviser, a student wishing to pursue this option should approach a potential supervisor for approval. Once they have their supervisor's approval, students should select the relevant dissertation course on LFY. They will then need to complete the 'Dissertation topic approval form' (available on LLB Dissertation Moodle page) which needs to be signed off by the student's proposed Dissertation Supervisor, Academic Adviser and the Chair of Examinations. This should be submitted to the Law Reception by the end of Week 4 of Michaelmas Term, 16.00.
Including the initial meeting, students will have four support meetings with their supervisor to guide them through the research process as follows:
1 One initial meeting to establish the broad topic.
2 A second meeting to agree a title, review an outline and see an initial bibliography.
3 A third meeting to discuss progress and difficulties (optional for half-unit essays).
4 A fourth meeting to give feedback on progress to date, to take place before the end of the Lent Term. In order for this feedback meeting to be of use, students will need to have made substantial progress with the preparation of a draft dissertation by the middle of the Lent Term. It is the student's responsibility to arrange these meetings with the supervisor.
Dissertations are normally submitted on the first day of the Summer Term of the academic session in which the dissertation is being written. There is discretion for an additional oral examination on the subject-matter of an essay which "may extend to cover the wider background aspects of the essay".
Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT.
Beyond the one-to-one sessions held with the dissertation supervisor there is no formal teaching. However, there is a one hour session held in the Michaelmas term for all half-unit and full-unit dissertation students to orient them to the requirements of writing a dissertation.
Indicative reading: There is no essential reading as such, but there is a dedicated moodle site for the LLB dissertation options.
Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL399
Full-unit Dissertation on an approved legal topic

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
This course is available to students in Year 3 only. It cannot be taken in the same year as LL398.
Course content: The full-unit dissertation can only be taken in Part II (third year) when students are better prepared for it.
Students wishing to do either a full or half-unit dissertation should first consult their Academic Adviser in the preceding Summer Term about:
1 whether a dissertation is a suitable option for the student;
2 the particular dissertation topic;
3 who might be an appropriate dissertation supervisor.

The focus is on accuracy as well as communication that advance students' language competence, transferable skills and cultural awareness. At this level, the students are required to read and write up to 3500 Chinese characters.
Teaching: 30 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.
Three hours per week, which will feature: (a) interactive topical work; (b) oral practise; (c) grammar and vocabulary work; (d) tutorials; and (e) guided study using IT and web-based materials. Structured activities in week 11 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: The students will be required to complete weekly exercises. This includes newspaper reading, research projects and online communicative materials.
Indicative reading: Hunshan Carolyn Lee, Hsin-Hsin Liang, Liwei Jiao and Julian K Wheatley, 2010, The Routledge Advanced Chinese Multimedia Course: Crossing Cultural Boundaries. Hong Kong, Routledge.
Authentic materials from newspaper, web and journals.
Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Oral examination (20%) in the ST.
Continuous assessment (40%) in the MT and LT.
Language courses map to the Common European Framework for Language Learning. This framework defines linguistic proficiency in the four language skills (reading, writing, speaking and listening) at different levels. To pass this course, students are therefore required to achieve a pass mark in each element of the assessment (continuous assessment, oral and written exams), as these test all four skills.

Literature and Aspects of Ethics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olga Sobolev TW3 6.01A and Dr Angus Wrenn TW3 6.01A
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.
Pre-requisites: Although an A-level pass or equivalent in Literature is useful, it is not an absolute requirement (especially for General Course students).
Course content: a) Literary treatment/projection of the aspects of ethics, focusing on the classical ideas of Aristotle and Kant, Schopenhauer, and Nietzsche, developed in modern times by Sartre, Lacan, Bernard Williams and Michel Foucault. The course will draw on a range of themes arising from the interface between literary and philosophical studies and will explore such issues as the objectivity of moral reasoning (the question whether the practices that are traditionally and factually legitimated by religion, law or politics are indeed worthy of recognition); the spiritual crisis of the modern world (desire, guilt and innocence); technological omnipotence versus determinism; and the illusion of liberty in a tolerant democracy based on consensus. It will also be concerned with such questions as whether philosophy and literature, when combined, can achieve more than the sum of the two parts.
b) The course is based on a carefully chosen range of short stories from world literature (including such authors as Kafka, Murakami, Kundera, Borges, Bessie Head, Isabel Allende etc.) where there is either a direct allusion to or a strong parallel with the key ethical issues.
c) Related trips to galleries and theatre productions during the year.
d) Use of archive recordings of authors, and video.
e) Students encouraged to draw upon background in their main discipline, and to read widely.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Interdisciplinary structured research field-trips contextualising literature (visual and performance arts), which will contribute to students' experience and develop their critical thinking and transferable skills.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 10 exercises in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading:
1. Bashevis Singer The Spinoza of Market Street
2. Franz Kafka In The Penal Colony
3. Isabel Allende The Guest Teacher
4. Thomas Mann Death in Venice
5. Jorge-Luis Borges Blue Tigers
6. Haruki Murakami The Ice Man
7. Jean-Paul Sartre The Wall

Society and Language: Linguistics for Social Scientists

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Skrandies TW3.6.01f
Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.
Course content: The course will introduce students to key (socio) linguistic concepts (semantic and pragmatic meaning, discourse, register, genre, dialect, idiolect, sociolect) employed in the analysis of language use as a social process. Students will explore the reciprocal relationship between language and specific social contexts and structures (class, gender, ethnicity), and study the role that language plays in the creation, maintenance and change of social relations and institutions. Important themes are changing attitudes to language and the prestige afforded to particular languages and language varieties. The use of language for academic purposes will be analysed, as will be situations of language contact, multilingualism and the role of translation in intercultural and international communication. The implications and consequences for less widely used languages of the emergence of English (and other widely spoken languages) as global lingua francas will be outlined and discussed.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Two hours per week, featuring: (a) Lectures on a range of concepts and themes; (b) classes including students' presentations; (c) revision workshops; (d) tutorials. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Short essays, linguistic analyses, presentations.
Indicative reading:
- Mesthrie, Rajend (ed) (2011) The Cambridge Handbook of Sociolinguistics, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Rafael Penas Cruz TW3 6.01 L
Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.
Pre-requisites: Completion of the Spanish Language and Society 4 (Proficiency) course (LN220) or its equivalent is required. An interview with the course co-ordinator prior to registration is compulsory.
Course content: Further advanced (up to the level of mastery) study of the Spanish language through themes related to Spanish speaking societies within the framework of social sciences and culture. In a dynamic and communicative way the course develops all four language skills (i.e. speaking, listening, reading and writing) through individual and group work, topical discussions, authentic and studio-based multi-media materials. The focus is on accuracy as well as communication that advance students' language competence, transferable skills and cultural awareness.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Week 11 in MT and LT structured activities.
Two hours per week, which will feature: (a) interactive topical work; (b) oral practice; (c) grammar and vocabulary work; (d) tutorials; and (e) guided study using IT and web-based materials
Formative coursework: The students will be required to complete weekly language exercises
Indicative reading: The following works are core texts:
- Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Cien Años de Soledad;
- Carmen Laforet, Nada;
- Tomas Eloy Martinez, Santa Evita,
- Luis CERNUDA, "La realidad y el deseo", Fondo Cultura Económica, Madrid, 1982,
- Poesia; Jaime GIL DE BIEDMA,: Antología poética (2001); Alianza Editorial, SA; Fuguet, Alberto; Sergio Gomez (Eds),
- Presentación del país McOndo, En McOndo, Barcelona: Grijalbo, 1996;
- Amores Perros (2000) Filmax DVD;
- Ay Carmela! [1990] Arrow Warner Home Video DVD;

Students will be advised to buy any relevant materials at the beginning of the course.
Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Oral examination (20%) in the ST.
Continuous assessment (40%) in the MT and LT.
Language courses map to the Common European Framework for Language Learning. This framework defines linguistic proficiency in the four language skills (reading, writing, speaking and listening) at different levels. To pass this course, students are therefore required to achieve a pass mark in each element of the assessment (continuous assessment, oral and written exams), as these test all four skills.

French Language and Society 5 (mastery)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Francois Simon TW3 6.01 K
Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed French Language and Society 4 (proficiency) (LN230).
AND / OR attend a compulsory interview with the course co-ordinator prior to registration.
Course content:
- Further advanced (up to the level of mastery) study of the French language within the framework of social sciences and culture. In a dynamic and communicative way the course develops all four language skills (i.e. speaking, listening, reading and writing - including grammar) through individual and group work, topical discussions, authentic and studio-based multi-media materials.
- The focus on accuracy, near native command of the target Language, maximisation of cultural awareness through the latest developments with a particular emphasis on using student centred approach in course delivery, preparing the students to be fully operational in a French speaking company or any other Organisation where near native command of French is an essential requirement.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.
Two hours per week, which will feature: (a) seminars; (b) Oral Classes; (c) Workshops; (d) Tutorials; and (e) Guided study using Language (f) grammar. Showroom, IT and web-based material including a virtual learning environment supported by Moodle.
Formative coursework:
• 40% : Research project (in the MT and LT (including an Oral examination (20%) in the main exam period).
• 20% : Continuous assessment (in the MT and LT).
See Assessment below
Indicative reading: Students are encouraged to make full use of the resources of French books in the Library as well as reference books. Students are also strongly advised to use the resources available on the World Wide Web.The course is in the process of being supplemented with new activities, topics and themes that underpin French Modern Society.

LSE100
The LSE Course: Understanding the causes of things

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jessica Templeton KSW4.06
Academics from a range of LSE departments contribute to the course.
Availability: Compulsory course on all undergraduate programmes: students complete Term 1 in Lent Term of their first year and Term 2 in Michaelmas Term of their second year. The course is not available to General Course students or to second-year direct-entry students.

Course content: The course introduces students to the fundamental elements of thinking like a social scientist. As no complex issue can be fully understood through the lens of a single discipline, LSE100 explores pressing social issues from the perspective of different fields of social science. The goal of the course is to enable students to complement intellectual grounding in their discipline with a broad understanding of different ways of thinking. In four five-week modules, the course will ask 'big' questions, such as: 'How should we address poverty and inequality?' and 'Should markets be constrained or unleashed?' Using such questions as guides, students will explore different types of evidence, forms of explanation and strategies for abstraction and modelling that are used across the social sciences. The aim is not only to broaden students' intellectual experience, but also to deepen their critical understanding of their own disciplines. LSE100's focus on the core elements of social scientific reasoning will be accompanied by a strong emphasis on critical thinking, research and communication skills.
Teaching: 15 hours of classes and 5 hours of specialized online lectures, plus four optional workshops, in the MT. 15 hours of classes and 5 hours of specialized online lectures, plus four optional workshops, in the LT.
Formative coursework: Formative activities will be completed in class and may include writing assignments or data analysis tasks.
Indicative reading: Readings are module-specific. Class reading packs are provided in hard copy and are all available from the LSE100 Moodle site, along with additional reading and resource recommendations.
Assessment: In both terms, students will write a summatively-assessed persuasive academic argument and work with a group of their peers on a project and presentation related to one of the modules. Students will also complete a portfolio of work including weekly questions designed to support students' reading, as well as a piece of reflective writing. These portfolio exercises are designed to support continuous learning throughout the term, and support students' engagement with key theories and critical analysis of arguments or evidence. The group project will be completed in Weeks 4 and 5, the portfolio will be due in Week 10, and the written work will be due in Week 11. The written work and group projects are each worth 20% of the student's final mark and the portfolio exercises are worth 10% per term. Students receive a numeric mark and overall grade for the course of Distinction, Merit, Credit or Fail.

Mathematical Methods

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ioannis Kouletsis
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: This course assumes knowledge of the elementary techniques of mathematics including calculus, as evidenced for example by a good grade in A Level Mathematics.
Course content: This is an introductory level course for those who wish to use mathematics seriously in social science, or in any other context. A range of basic mathematical concepts and methods in calculus of one and several variables and in linear algebra are covered and some applications illustrated. It is an essential pre-requisite for any mathematically orientated economics options and for many further mathematics courses. Topics covered: Matrices, reduced row echelon form, rank. Systems of linear equations, Gaussian elimination. Determinants. Vector spaces, linear independence, basis, dimension. Linear transformations, similarity. Eigenvalues. Diagonalization. Orthogonal diagonalization. Complex numbers. Vectors. Functions of several variables, derivatives, gradients, tangent hyperplanes. Optimisation including Lagrange's method. Vector-valued functions, derivatives and their manipulation. Inverse functions, local inverses and critical points, use in transformations. Integration, differential and difference equations. Some applications of the above topics.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 20 hours of Workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 11 hours of classes and 20 hours of Workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete homework assigned weekly. Written answers to the homework questions are submitted to the appropriate class teacher for feedback. In addition, in-class open book practice sessions will be conducted weekly in class. These are also submitted to the appropriate class teacher for feedback. Success in this paper depends on dealing withthe written work as it is assigned, in a regular and systematic manner.
Indicative reading: Ken Binmore & Joan Davies, Calculus, Concepts and Methods; Martin Anthony & Michele Harvey, Linear Algebra, Concepts and Methods.
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour) in the LT week 0.

MA103
Introduction to Abstract Mathematics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bernhard Von Stengel and Prof Graham Brightwell
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have taken, or be taking concurrently, the course Mathematical Methods (MA100).
Course content: The course is an introduction to the use of formal definitions and proofs in mathematics, and to basic results of elementary set theory, number theory, linear algebra, algebra and analysis. Specific topics covered are as follows: Logic, integers, sets and functions, prime numbers, relations, real and complex numbers, greatest common divisor and modular arithmetic, infimum and supremum, sequences, limits, continuity, groups and vector spaces.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 21 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Students are expected to have one of the recommended textbooks: N L Biggs, Discrete Mathematics (2nd edn) or P J Eccles, An Introduction to Mathematical Reasoning. Further background reading can be found in R Allenby, Numbers and Proofs; M Liebeck, A Concise Introduction to Pure Mathematics; V Bryant, Yet Another Introduction to Analysis; R Bartle & D Sherbert, Introduction to Real Analysis and H Anton, Elementary Linear Algebra.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA107 Half Unit
Quantitative Methods (Mathematics)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Ward
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: A-level Mathematics (or equivalent).
Students with A-level Mathematics who are confident of their mathematical skills may also consider the full unit MA100 Mathematical Methods.
Course content: The aim of this course is to develop the basic mathematical tools necessary for further study in economics and related disciplines. To this end we focus on: techniques of calculus (differentiation, partial differentiation, optimisation and integration), methods of linear algebra (use of matrices), and the solution of difference and differential equations. The ideas are taught systematically, with emphasis on their application to economic problems. Examples are used throughout the course for motivation and illustration.
Specific topics are as follows: sets, functions, equations, graphs. Difference equations, sequences, limits. Differentiation, inverse functions, exponential and logarithmic functions. Partial differentiation, chain rule, homogeneous functions. Optimisation in two variables: unconstrained and constrained. Lagrange multipliers. Vector notation and convexity. Matrix notation, systems of linear equations, inverse matrices. Integration. Differential equations.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: The course follows M Anthony & N L Biggs, Mathematics for Economics and Finance: Methods and Modelling, CUP, 1996. A useful background text which is the basis of a follow-on course is A Ostaszewski, Mathematics for Economics: Models and Methods, Blackwell, 1993. There are many other books with titles like Mathematics for Economists but none of them are close enough for use in this course. Further information will be provided in the lectures.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA110
Basic Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Ward and Dr Pavel Gapeev
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance and BSc in Government and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: GCSE or AS-level Mathematics (or equivalent). Students with A-level Mathematics (or equivalent) should take MA107 Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) or MA100 Mathematical Methods.
Course content: The course is designed to provide students with the elementary mathematical tools that are needed to study Economics. Students will be introduced to basic mathematical concepts and manipulations. Examples of applying these techniques to a variety of economical and management problems are given throughout the course. Content - Part A: Arithmetic operations, powers and roots; basic algebra; introduction to linear programming; logarithms and exponential growth; sets, functions and graphs; differentiation of functions of one variable; marginal cost and marginal revenue; optimisation of functions of one variable; difference equations; equilibrium and stability in dynamical models. Content - Part B: Introduction to integration; consumer and producer surplus; matrix algebra; systems of linear equations; functions of several variables; partial differentiation; optimisation and the Lagrange multiplier method.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: The course will be mostly taught from the lecturers' notes. The following books can provide additional material: T Bradley & P Patton, Essential Mathematics for Economics and Business; E T Dowling, Mathematics for Economists (Schaum's Outline Series); I Jacques, Mathematics for Economics and Business; M Rosser, Basic Mathematics for Economists; M Anthony & N L Biggs, Mathematics for Economics and Finance: Methods and Modelling, CUP, 1996.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA203 Half Unit
Real Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konrad Swanepoel
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103), or some equivalent giving experience with formal proofs, convergence of sequences and continuity of functions.
Course content: This is a course in real analysis for those who have already met the basic concepts of sequences and continuity on the real line. Here we generalize these concepts to Euclidean spaces and to more general metric and normed spaces. These more general spaces are introduced at the start and are emphasized throughout the course.
Topics covered are:
• Sequences and series on the real line.
• Metric and normed spaces; open and closed sets, topological properties of sets and equivalent metrics, sequences in metric spaces, compactness, completeness.
• Continuity of real valued functions and of functions between metric spaces, uniform continuity and Lipschitz condition.
• Differentiation of real valued functions, the mean value theorem, differentiation of functions between Euclidean spaces and partial derivatives.
• Riemann integral and the fundamental theorem of calculus.
• Sequences and series of functions; pointwise and uniform convergence of sequences of functions, power series and series in normed spaces.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: A comprehensive pack of lecture notes will be provided.The following may prove useful:
• Robert G Bartle & Donald R Sherbert, Introduction to Real Analysis
• W A Sutherland, Introduction to Metric and Topological Spaces
• Tom Apostol, Mathematical Analysis, second edition.
• Walter Rudin, Principles of Mathematical Analysis, third edition.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA207 Half Unit
Further Quantitative Methods (Mathematics)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Ward
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have previously taken MA107 Quantitative Methods (Mathematics). It is not available to students who have taken MA100 Mathematical Methods, or equivalent, nor higher level methods courses.
Course content: This is a second course in quantitative methods, following on directly from Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107). This course will contain further algebra and calculus. As with the course MA107, the emphasis will be on applications in economics and finance. Topics covered: Matrix methods in portfolio analysis. Linear independence. Rank of a matrix. Eigenvalues and eigenvectors. Diagonalisation. Linear systems of recurrence equations. Markov process. Second-order recurrence equations. Macroeconomic models. Vector geometry. Gradient and directional derivative. Tangent hyperplanes and the optimal bundle. Resource allocation and Pareto efficiency. Orthogonal matrices and quadratic forms. Critical points of quadratic functions. Taylor's approximation. Optimisation of functions of two or more variables.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: M Anthony & N Biggs, Mathematics for Economics and Finance (Cambridge, 1996); A Ostaszewski, Mathematics in Economics (Blackwell, 1993).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA208 Half Unit
Optimisation Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bernhard von Stengel COL 4.12
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) are pre-requisites. Real Analysis (MA203) is desirable, and students who have not done MA203 should contact the teacher responsible.
Course content: The course describes various techniques of optimisation, gives a mathematical presentation of the relevant theory, and shows how they can be applied. Introduction and review of relevant mathematical background. Introduction to combinatorial optimisation; shortest paths in directed graphs; algorithms and their running time. Classical results on continuous optimisation: Weierstrass's Theorem on continuous functions on compact set; optimisation of differentiable functions on open sets; Lagrange's Theorem on equality constrained optimisation; Kuhn and Tucker's Theorem on inequality constrained optimisation. Linear programming and duality theory.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Good sources of literature are R K Sundaram, A First Course in Optimisation Theory; N L Biggs, Discrete Mathematics (2nd edition). Additional notes will be made available throughout the course.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA209 Half Unit
Differential Equations

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jan van den Heuvel
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) are pre-requisites. Real Analysis (MA203) and/or Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) are highly desirable, and students who have done neither MA203 nor MA212 should contact the lecturer.
Course content: The course concentrates on the theory and qualitative analysis of (ordinary) differential equations, although some solution techniques will be considered as well. Special attention will be paid to geometric concepts and the role of differential equations in the theory of dynamical systems. Specific topics covered are: First examples; illustrations of use of the computer package Maple. Existence and uniqueness of solutions. Autonomous 1 and 2 dimensional systems. Linear equations and systems: phase portraits; classification of systems in the plane; higher dimensional systems and higher order equations. Nonlinear systems in the plane: local and global behaviour; linearisation and stability at equilibrium points; Lyapunov functions; limit cycles. Control theory; linear systems; controllability.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Full notes will be handed out throughout the course. A good additional text book is D K Arrowsmith & C M Place, Dynamical Systems - Differential Equations, Maps and Chaotic Behaviour. Other books closely related to R Grimshaw, Nonlinear Ordinary Differential Equations and W A Brock & A G Malliaris, Differential Equations, Stability and Chaos in Dynamic Economics.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA210 Half Unit
Discrete Mathematics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Allen
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: MA103 Introduction to Abstract Mathematics, or an equivalent course giving a background in rigorous mathematics.
Course content: This is a course covering a number of concepts and techniques of discrete mathematics. Topics covered: Counting: selections; inclusion-exclusion; generating functions; recurrence relations. Graph Theory: basic concepts; walks, paths, tours and cycles; trees and forests; colourings. Coding theory: basic concepts; linear codes.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: PJ Cameron, Combinatorics (CUP 1994); NL Biggs, Discrete Mathematics (OUP 2004)
Extensive notes covering the course content will be distributed as well.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA211 Half Unit
Algebra and Number Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Anthony COL 3.13
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) and Mathematical Methods (MA100).
Course content: The aim of this course is to continue (from MA103) the study of abstract algebraic structures. There are two main strands in the course. First, we develop further the theory of groups, using permutation groups as a key example. We investigate the important concepts of normal subgroups and quotient groups. Secondly, we introduce rings, and study factorisation in rings, where we also look at some connections with number theory. Groups: Review of basic group theory; permutations and permutation groups; homomorphisms; conjugation, normal subgroups and quotient groups; the first isomorphism theorem for groups. Rings: basic properties of rings and examples (including polynomial rings, matrix rings, and number rings); subrings, ideals and ring homomorphisms; divisibility in integral domains; greatest common divisors; Euclidean rings and unique factorisation; applications to number theory; principal ideal domains.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Introduction to Algebra, Peter J Cameron (OUP 1988); Rings, Fields and Groups: Introduction to Abstract Algebra, Reg Allenby (Butterworth-Heinemann, 2nd edition 1991)
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA212
Further Mathematical Methods

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jozef Skokan, Prof Adam Ostoja-Ostaszewski and Dr Arne Lokka
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should ideally have taken the course Mathematical Methods (MA100) or equivalent, entailing intermediate-level knowledge of calculus and linear algebra, linear independence, eigenvalues, diagonalisation, and proficiency in techniques of differentiation and integration.
Course content: This course develops ideas first presented in MA100. It is divided into two halves: calculus and linear algebra. The calculus half explores how integrals may be calculated or transformed by a variety of manipulations, and how they may be applied to the solution of differential equations. This aim is achieved by studying the following topics: Limit calculations. Riemann integral. Multiple integration. Improper integrals. Manipulation of integrals. Laplace transforms. Riemann-Stieltjes integral (permitting application of the Laplace transform to discrete and continuous probability distributions), to a level of detail dependent on time constraints. The linear algebra half covers the following topics: Vector spaces and dimension. Linear transformations, kernel and image. Real inner products. Orthogonal matrices, and the transformations they represent. Complex matrices, diagonalisation, special types of matrix and their properties. Jordan normal form, with applications to the solutions of differential and difference equations. Singular values, and the singular values decomposition. Direct sums, orthogonal projections, least square approximations, Fourier series. Right and left inverses and generalized inverses.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: A Ostaszewski, Advanced Mathematical Methods for both halves.
Useful background texts:
(i) for the calculus half: Ken Binmore & Joan Davies, Calculus, Concepts and Methods; M R Spiegel, Laplace Transforms; R A Adams, Calculus.
(ii) for the linear algebra half: Martin Anthony and Michele Harvey, Linear Algebra: Concepts and Methods (Cambridge University Press 2012).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA231
Operational Research Methods

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gregory Sorkin and Dr Laszlo Vegh
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
The course code and some of its content changed in 2017/18. Previously, the course code was MG211.
Pre-requisites: Mathematics, Statistics and Probability Theory to the level of the courses MA107 Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) and ST107 Quantitative Methods (Statistics) is required. In particular, students should have covered elementary distribution theory and the Poisson Process, and have an elementary knowledge of linear algebra. Students must be prepared to use computer packages when required.
Course content: An introduction to all the main theoretical techniques of Operational Research.
Linear optimisation: from the most basic introduction to sufficient conditions for optimality; duality; sensitivity of the solution; discovery of the solution to small problems by graphical methods, and proof of optimality by testing the sufficient conditions.The transportation programme: properties of solution, connections with graph theory, an algorithm for hand computation. Modelling real world problems using linear optimisation.
Various other operational research techniques including: Shortest Paths, Critical Path Analysis, Markov Chains, Stable Matchings, Queueing Theory, Simulation, Inventory Management, Dynamic Programming, Decision Theory, Game Theory.
The course includes an assessed software component. The software used will be "Microsoft Excel" and the add-on packages "LP solve" to solve linear optimisation problems and "@ risk" to perform Monte Carlo simulation.
Full lecture notes are provided.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 5 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.
Students will receive 30 hours of lectures (20 in the MT and 10 in the LT) accompanied by 30 hours of classes. There will be 3 revision sessions in the summer term. Furthermore, during the LT there will be 5 non-compulsory computer workshops
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 8 problem sets in the MT and 1 project and 4 problem sets in the LT. Twelve short problem sets will need to be submitted as formative coursework. A mock project will be given, similar in format to the summative project, to be carried out by the same groups that will work on the final project. This is meant as a trial run of the group project, with a similar level of work but with no summative mark.
Indicative reading: Comprehensive lecture notes will be provided. The course content largely follows the following textbook:
- F S Hillier, G J Liebermann, Introduction to Operations Research, McGraw-Hill Series in Industrial Engineering and Management Science. Any edition from 7th onward.
- Duxbury
- W L Winston, S C Albright: Practical Management Science, Cengage Learning. 4th edition or later.
- H P Williams, Model Building in Mathematical Programming, Wiley (2013).

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours and 45 minutes) in the main exam period.
Case analysis (20%) in the LT.
The group project will consist of a case study developed by lecturer and presenting a (simplified version of a) real world problem that is amenable to optimisation and simulation techniques that are taught in the course. The students will need to choose the appropriate techniques, develop a mathematical model, implement it using the software taught in the course, and write a report describing the approach and reporting critically the results obtained from the solution of the model.

The group project will be in randomly allocated groups of 3, and students will need to submit a teamwork evaluation form to assess whether the workload was fair and balanced.

MA300
Game Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Duetting, Prof Bernhard Von Stengel and Prof Olivier Gossner
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of matrices as covered in Mathematical Methods (MA100) or Quantitative Methods (MA107). Some knowledge of probability. Knowledge of economics as covered in Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202).
Course content: Concepts and methods of game theory with applications to economics. MA300.1: same as for Game Theory I (MA301). MA300.2: Coalitional game theory - central solution concepts with application: the core, Shapley value, stable sets, weighted majority games, market games, stable matching.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Lecture slides will be provided, as well as references to selected papers. Further reading: R Gibbons, A Primer in Game Theory, 1992; A Mas-Colell, M Whinston, J Green: Microeconomic Theory; M Osborne, A Rubinstein: A Course in Game Theory; M Maschler, E Solan, S Zamir: Game Theory.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Duetting and Prof Bernhard Von Stengel
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of matrices as covered in Mathematical Methods (MA100) or Quantitative Methods (MA107). Some knowledge of probability.
Course content: Concepts and methods of game theory with applications to economics. Game trees with perfect information, Nim. Backward induction. Extensive and strategic (normal) form of a game. Nash equilibrium. Commitment. Zero sum games, mixed strategies. Maxmin strategies. Nash equilibria in mixed strategies. Finding mixed-strategy equilibria for two-person games. Extensive games with information sets, behaviour strategies, perfect recall. If time permits: The Nash bargaining solution. Multistage bargaining.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. Further reading: K Binmore, Playing for Real: Game Theory CUP, 2007; E Mendelson, Introducing Game Theory and Its Applications, CRC 2004.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA303 Half Unit
Chaos in Dynamical Systems

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Graham Brightwell
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Mathematical Methods (MA100) is a pre-requisite. Background in rigorous mathematical methods, such as provided in Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103), is desirable. In particular, some familiarity with proving theorems would be useful.
Course content: Given a function f:X->X, what is the (iterative) behaviour of fn (x)=f(f(...(f(x)))) (f applied n times). What do 'orbits' of f look like - an orbit has the form x, f(x), f(f(x)).,,, Particular emphasis is given to long-term evolution and stability analysis of such systems f:X->X. We explore connections with so-called fractal sets, which are roughly sets that look the same at any degree of magnification, and may have a dimension which is not an integer. We also discuss chaotic maps f, where fn (x) cannot be determined if there is any small uncertainty about x. Topics covered: Iteration of discrete maps. Orbit analysis. Contraction mapping theorem. Quadratic maps. Bifurcations. Definition of chaos. Sarkovskii's theorem. Fractal sets.
Teaching: 21 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful, R Devaney, A First Course in Chaotic Dynamical Systems; R Devaney, An Introduction to Chaotic Dynamical Systems; E Scheinerman, Invitation to Dynamical Systems. A fun and interesting read might be Glieck, J.,Chaos: Making a New Science.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Optimisation in Function Spaces

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Adam Ostoja-Ostaszewski
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have attended a course in Mathematical Methods, ideally Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Course content: This is a course in optimisation theory using the methods of the Calculus of Variations. No specific knowledge of functional analysis will be assumed and the emphasis will be on examples. This course develops a geometric approach to those optimisation problems which involve the choice of functions. Applications relevant to Economic Theory are studied. It introduces key methods of continuous time optimisation in a deterministic context, including the Calculus of Variations, Pontryagin's Principle and Bellman's Principle. Specific topics include: Introductory examples. Calculus of variations. Euler-Lagrange Equations. Necessary conditions. Maximum Principle. Transversality conditions. Linear time-invariant state equations. Controlability. Dynamical programming. Applications to Economics.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: A full set of lecture notes will be provided. D. G. Luenberger, Optimization by Vector Space Methods, Wiley, 1969.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA310 Half Unit
Mathematics of Finance and Valuation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Ruf
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: MA313 Probability for Finance is required
Course content: Main mathematical ideas in the modelling of asset price evolution and the valuation of contingent claims (e.g., calls, puts); discrete methods will dominate. Introductory treatment of the Black-Scholes continuous-time model. This course introduces a range of mathematical concepts and techniques of modern finance. It considers discrete and continuous time models for the price dynamics of actively traded assets. It develops the basic principles of risk-neutral valuation of contingent claims, such as call and put options. The course contains some elements of stochastic analysis such as Brownian motion, stochastic integration, stochastic change of variable formula, change of probability measures. These analytic tools are used for the pricing of contingent claims in stochastic models of financial markets. Specific topics studied include: one-period and multi-period binomial tree models; the Black and Scholes model; self-financing replicating portfolios; martingales and conditional expectation; Itô calculus; risk-neutral valuation of call and put options in the absence of arbitrage; the Black and Scholes formula; option deltas, gammas, vegas, and other sensitivities.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. Probability for Finance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christoph Czichowsky
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Real Analysis (MA203).
Experience obtained through other Mathematics and Statistics courses is highly desirable.
Course content: The purposes of this course are (i) to explain the formal basis of abstract probability theory, and the justification for basic results in the theory, and (ii) to explore those aspects of the theory most used in advanced analytical models in economics and finance. The approach taken will be formal. Probability spaces and probability measures. Random variables. Expectation and integration. Markov chains. Convergence of random variables. Conditional expectation and martingales, in the discrete case.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. MA315 Half Unit Algebra and its Applications

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Anthony
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have passed MA103 Introduction to Abstract Mathematics and, ideally, have taken MA211 Algebra and Number Theory. Students who have not taken MA211 may, in some cases, take the course with the lecturer's permission. (A small amount of additional reading on their part will be required).
Course content: The aim of the course is to continue the study of abstract algebraic structures and show how these structures can be used to solve concrete problems. There are three strands: Group actions; Rings, polynomials and fields; Applications, including coding and cryptography. Group actions; revision of permutation groups; orbits and stabilizers, the orbit-stabilizer theorem; applications to counting problems. Rings, polynomials and fields: revision of rings; quotient rings; polynomial rings and the Euclidean algorithm for polynomials; irreducible polynomials and factorisation of polynomials. fields; fields as quotients of polynomial rings; construction and properties of finite fields: Applications: Designs and orthogonal latin squares ; Error-correcting codes, including linear codes, cyclic codes and perfect codes; cryptography.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided but additional reading is recommended. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA316 Half Unit
Graph Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Boettcher
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: MA103 or equivalent course giving a background in rigorous mathematics.
Course content: This course examines the basic concepts and techniques of graph theory. The topics to be covered are: fundamental concepts, flows, connectivity and matchings, colourings, extremal problems. Optional topics include Ramsey theory, the probabilistic method, spectral graph theory, or matroids.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA317 Half Unit
Complex Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Amol Sasane
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Solid grounding in mathematics, especially analysis, in particular MA203 Real Analysis.
Course content: The course will cover the fundamental concepts and methods in complex analysis. The basic objects of study in the course will be complex differentiable functions in domains, and the far-reaching consequences of the notion complex differentiability will be dealt with in the course. The specific topics that will be covered are: the geometry of complex numbers, complex differentiation, Cauchy-Riemann equations, Cauchy's integral theorem and its consequences, Taylor and Laurent series, and harmonic functions. The core results will be illustrated with computational examples and applications.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading:

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA318 Half Unit
History of Mathematics in Finance and Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jan van den Heuvel
Additional teachers: Prof June Barrow-Green, Prof Norman Biggs and Prof Robin Wilson
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100).
General Course students may substitute an equivalent course.
Course content: This course surveys the development of mathematics from the beginning of history with an emphasis on its applications to finance and economics. Major themes are the development of arithmetic and geometry, the use of algebraic symbolism, the creation of the calculus, geometry, probability, and game theory. In order to give this course a distinctive flavour, we will illustrate these themes with examples taken from the social sciences, broadly interpreted. For example, the algorithms of arithmetic will be illustrated by their applications in finance, rather than astronomy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit written work on a weekly basis. One of these assignments will be a short essay of 1000-1200 words.
Indicative reading: The course is based on source material which will be distributed to students as hard copy. J. Stedall's 'History of Mathematics: A Very Short Introduction' (Oxford 2011) is recommended for background reading.
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 5 minutes) in the main exam period.
Essay (30%, 1650 words).
The assessed essay is due for submission at the start of the Summer Term.

MA319 Half Unit
Partial Differential Equations

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Amol Sasane
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) and Real Analysis (MA203).
Course content: The aim of the course is the study of partial differential equations. The focus will be on first order quasilinear equations, and second order linear equations. The method of characteristics for solving first order quasilinear equations will be discussed. The three main types of linear second order partial differential equations will be considered: parabolic (diffusion equation), elliptic (Laplace equation), and hyperbolic (wave equation). Techniques for solving these for various initial and boundary value problems on bounded and unbounded domains, using eigenfunction expansions (separation of variables, and elementary Fourier series), and integral transform methods (Fourier and Laplace transforms) will be treated. Elementary distributional calculus and the notion of weak solutions will also be considered. Applications and examples, such as the solution technique for Black-Scholes option pricing, will be discussed throughout the course.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.
Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA320 Half Unit
Mathematics of Networks

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Lewis-Pye
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103).
Course content: Globalisation and the growth of the internet have meant not only an increasing need to understand the way in which social and communication networks form and operate, but also an unprecedented amount of data available to aid in this analysis. The last decade has seen a coming together of multiple scientific disciplines in an effort to understand how these highly connected systems function. The aim of this course will be to give an introduction to the study of networks, requiring as little background knowledge as possible. The course will begin with an analysis of some of the fundamental properties normally observed in real world networks, such as the small world property, high degrees of clustering and power law degree distributions. After reviewing required notions from game theory, we shall then apply these techniques to an analysis of the spread of behavioural change on networks, together with cascading effects and epidemic models. The final part of the course will be concerned with specific applications to the world wide web and page ranking.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Measure Theoretic Probability

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Anthony COL 3.13
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Real Analysis (MA203).
Course content: This is a first course in measure-theoretic probability. It covers the following topics. Abstract probability spaces: sample space, sigma-algebra, probability measure, examples. Borel sigma-algebra, Lebesgue measure, Caratheodory's extension theorem. Random variables, distribution functions, discrete and absolutely continuous distributions, examples. Construction of the Lebesgue integral, relation to "measure-theoretic induction", convergence theorems, further properties, relation to Riemann integral. Different modes of convergence of random variables. Conditional expectation for simple, absolutely continuous and general random variables, construction and properties.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.
Indicative reading: Comprehensive lecture notes will be provided. The following books may prove useful: D Williams, Probability with Martingales. J. Jacod & P. Protter, Probability Essentials; A. Klenke Probability Theory. A Comprehensive Course
Assessment: Other (100%).

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Measure Theoretic Probability (MA321).
Course content: This course provides the mathematical tools of stochastic calculus and develops the Black-Scholes theory of financial markets. It covers the following topics. Continuous-time stochastic processes, filtrations, stopping times, super-, sub- and martingales, examples. Brownian motion, properties, Markov property. Construction of the stochastic/Ito integral, simple integrands, Derivation of Ito's isometry, Ito processes, Derivation of Ito's formula, stochastic differential equations. Changes of probability measure, Radon-Nikodym derivative, Bayes' rule, Girsanov's theorem. Black-Scholes model: self-financing portfolios, fundamental theorem of asset pricing, risk neutral measure, existence of replicating strategies via martingale representation, risk neutral valuation of European contingent claims, Black-Scholes formula, Black-Scholes PDE, Greeks, delta hedging. PDE techniques for pathwise derivatives: barrier and Asian options. Implied volatility, Dupire's formula, local volatility, basic idea of calibration, variations of the Black-Scholes model.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.

Practical Optimisation Modelling

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Xue Lu
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have a knowledge of Mathematics and Statistics to the level of MA107 (Quantitative Methods - Mathematics) and ST107 (Quantitative methods - Statistics), or ST102 (Elementary Statistical Theory). MG211 is not a prerequisite but is advisable to be taken previously or in conjunction with the course.
Course content: Mathematical Optimisation is one of the most powerful and widely-used quantitative techniques for making optimal decisions. The course has a pragmatic focus and aims at enabling students to model and solve real-life management problems. An overview is provided on fundamental technique, most importantly linear and integer programming, emphasising modelling and solution concepts and methods (e.g. feasibility, optimality, duality, multiple objectives, using binary variables for modelling, network models). The students will learn to formalise management problems using linear and integer programming models, to implement these models using specialised optimisation software, and to analyse and interpret the results, reflecting on the limitations of the models.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of classes in the LT.
8 hours of computer help sessions in the MT. 2 hours of computer help sessions in the LT. Computer help sessions are optional.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will have the opportunity to submit a mock project for marking and feedback before the final assessed project is due. Students will also be given weekly homework exercises.

Management, Labour and Work

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eddy Donnelly NAB 4.07
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course was formerly known as ID100 Employment Relations
Course content: The syllabus introduces students to the complex relationships between employers, managers, workers, trade unions and the state. It builds from the perspective of the individual worker and his/her job and proceeds, via discussion of management strategies and trade union responses, to contemporary views on globalisation and its impact on state policy.
The employment relationship in theory. Work organisation and work methods. Emotional labour. Japanisation. Human Resource Management. Pay and reward. Individual and collective resistance at work. Collective bargaining and trade unions. Industrial conflict and the right to strike. Comparative models of employment relations. The role of the state. Corporate governance. Globalisation and migrant work. International labour standards.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
A supplementary learning activity may take place during reading week, in Week 6.
Formative coursework: As well as contributing to class discussion, students are expected to provide one piece of written work at the end of each term (MT and LT) in preparation for their final exam.
Indicative reading: The lecture course does not follow a single prescribed textbook. A detailed reading list will be supplied. However the following are useful; M Noon, P Blyton & K Morrell, The Realities of Work, 4th edn, 2013; P Blyton & P Turnbull, The Dynamics of Employee Relations, 3rd edn, 2004; John W Budd, The Thought of Work, 2011; C Frege & J Kelly, Comparative Employment Relations in the Global Economy, 2013, Routledge.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Operations Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Newton
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: This course provides students with an understanding of the drivers of organisational performance, conditional on a strategic objective. Aspects of Operations Management studied include process flow analysis, inventory management, assembly line balancing; supply chain management; quality management and scheduling.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: One formative essay of 2000 words will be set in the Michaelmas Term.
Indicative reading:
• Operations and Supply Chain Management, Jacobs and Chase.
• Whelan Tensie Carly pag
• Madeleine Svetlana
• morim Marlene Moscoso Lago
• D'Aveni

Organisational Behaviour and Leadership

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Connson Locke
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course cannot be taken with MG203.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: This course introduces students to social science theories, research and application related to understanding human behaviour in the workplace. That is, this course is about the people side of business and management. Each week focuses on a different topic investigating individual, group, and organisational issues. Weekly topics include: motivation, teams, careers, and leadership.
When studying theories of leadership, the course examines: power and influence; trait, behavioural and contingency theories of leadership; the dynamics between leaders and their followers; transformational and transactional forms of leadership; team leadership and co-leadership; leadership communication; leadership development.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
The Summer Term teaching will be review sessions. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one presentation and one essay in the LT.

Analytical Methods for Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Abell and Dr Nuno Oliveira
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
BSc Management students must take either MG202 or MG205 in their second year.
Pre-requisites: ST107 or equivalent is recommended but not required.
Course content: This course will provide students with the knowledge and tools required to perform qualitative and quantitative analysis in support of managerial decision making, and to read and interpret the management research literature.

The course introduces the fundamentals of behavioural research design, and provides an introduction to various methods used to gather data, analyse data, and communicate results. In the course, students will: 1) acquire the knowledge needed to act as critical consumers of a wide range of academic and commercial research, 2) acquire some facility in designing valid research and reporting research results, and 3) be exposed to a range of stock knowledge regarding research design and research methods. A particular focus of the course will be on methods which are used in management research, and which are useful in doing applied research within a management context.
Topics covered: Introduction to behavioural research and causality. Designing valid research. Experimental design. Bivariate analysis. Survey design. Multivariate analysis. Measurement analysis. Semi-structured interviews and focus groups. Collecting and coding recorded behaviours. Collecting and analysing network data. Collecting and analysing process data. Communicating results. Forward engineering with data.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
A supplementary learning activity may take place during reading week, Week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be provided with regular opportunities to submit formative work, consisting of both quizzes administered in class and short individual or group assignments to be discussed in class. Students will be expected to provide and receive formative peer feedback on all written assignments during class, and designated written formative assignments will be marked and commented on by course instructors.

Organisational Theory and Behaviour

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: To be confirmed
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course cannot be taken with MG102.
Course content: Individual behaviour including: attitudes, motivation, personality, emotion, work-life balance and stress. Group and inter-group processes including: social networks, cohesion, power, and leadership. Organisational dynamics including: structure, learning, cross-cultural issues, responses to work-life conflict, and change. This course introduces students to social science theories and research regarding individual, group and organisational issues in order to analyse employee behaviour in the context of work organisations.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students are required to submit three pieces of written work throughout the year, in the form of two unassessed essays and one mock examination.
Indicative reading: A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Sample texts include the following: J Child, Organisations; S Dawson, Analysing Organizations; S Robbins & T Judge, Organizational Behaviour; R Steers & L Porter, Motivation and Work Behaviour.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG205
Econometrics: Theory and Applications

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordi Blanes i Vidal
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or equivalent and Quantitative Methods (Statistics) (ST107) or equivalent Course content: Simple and Multiple Regression; Hypothesis Testing; Mechanics and Limitations of OLS; Causality; Natural, Field and Laboratory Experiments. Panel Data and Fixed Effect Models. Instrumental Variables Regression.
The main aim of this course is to provide a thorough understanding of the quantitative techniques which guide evidence-based managerial decision-making. It seeks to develop a framework in which students can examine whether the predictions of managerial, social or economic theory are supported by empirical evidence. Particular emphasis is made on (a) illustrating the many ways in which evidence is abused in the academic or managerial debate, and (b) trying to establish causality in the relationship between variables. The approach is both formal, as the course makes extensive use of econometric theorems and techniques, and solidly grounded in intuition, as it provides numerous examples of tests of real-life relations. Many of these examples will be illustrated using the STATA software package, and the students will be expected to learn the basics of data manipulation and regression running. A solid base of introductory statistics and probability (equivalent to that provided by ST107) and introductory algebra and calculus (equivalent to that provided by MA107) will be expected.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem sets in the MT and 1 problem sets in the LT.
There will be one formative assessment each term.
Indicative reading: The textbook for the course is: James H. Stock and Mark W. Watson, Introduction to Econometrics, Second Edition, Pearson, 2007. Two other very useful (complementary) books are: Christopher Dougherty, Introduction to Econometrics, Third Edition, Oxford University Press, 2007; Jeffrey M. Wooldridge, Introductory Econometrics - A Modern Approach, Third Edition, South-Western, 2006.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG206 Half Unit
Firms, Management and Competitive Advantage

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Nilesh Dattani NAB5.02
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed EC100 OR EC102 OR equivalent.
Course content: This is not a course on corporate strategy. It focuses on the evolution of thinking about firms and the activity of management and examines firm advantages through conceptual ideas and empirical knowledge. There will be an emphasis on analysing firms as reservoirs of resources and capabilities and topics to be covered will include distinctive capabilities of firms, organisational design, decision making in firms, organisational routines, managerial leadership and the role of ethics. Particular attention will be given to firms in technology-based industries and the management of innovation and contrasts will be made with public sector management.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce one piece of written work and to do the weekly class exercises
Indicative reading: A reading list will be available to students taking the course.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Managerial Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Catherine Thomas NAB 5.27
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or equivalent is a pre-requisite. This course cannot be combined with Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202).
Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with insights from economic theory which are relevant to applications in managerial decision making. The emphasis is on applying microeconomics ideas to solve problems. Topics covered include consumer theory, production, applications to the labour market, market structure, monopoly, oligopoly, product differentiation, pricing, game theory, decision analysis, bargaining, auctions, and asymmetric information.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare answers to set problems on a weekly basis. Some of this work will be assessed. Assiduous preparation for the weekly tutorials is essential to achieve a good exam performance.
Indicative reading: No textbook covers the whole course but Hal R Varian, Intermediate Microeconomics with Calculus (International Student Edition) is the best text book to use for the course. In addition students are advised to refer to T C Bergstrom & H R Varian, Workouts in Intermediate Microeconomics (1990), which contains practice problems.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG208 Half Unit
Business Transformation and Project Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Susan Scott NAB 3.12
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Projects are the way that organizations manage change. This course aims to critically review the project management landscape with a particular focus on the processes involved in business transformation. It will cover history and foundations of project management, responding to changing environments, governance and control, contracting and relationships, managing risk and organisational learning. The course will focus on issues and challenges raised by business analysis and project management. Example topics of study include: questioning business transformation and projects as a mode of organising; understanding the dynamics and relations involved in IT-enabled business transformation; strategy formation; business process analysis; projects as an organisational form; project escalation; project management approaches and techniques; and change management. To develop students' understanding of project management and provide insight into issues they are likely to encounter in possible future employment as business analysts / project managers students will participate in group work based on a 'real-world' scenarios of business transformation projects. They will also be required to sit a 2 hour exam.

(1996) Escalation in Decision-Making: The tragedy of Taurus. Oxford: OUP.
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (30%, 1500 words) in the LT.
Please note that students will have the opportunity to form their own project groups within their allocated class, but the course teaching team will retain the right to make changes to group membership where necessary.

MG209 Half Unit
E-business

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antonio Cordella NAB 3.30
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course presents an analysis of the management, economics and information systems theories and practices in online business. This is a management information systems course and not a technical course. It is mainly directed at undergraduate students. It focuses on the study of the impact of digital technologies on business strategies and market configurations. Internet-based systems offer new means to operate businesses and to compete in the global marketplace and it is important for future executives and entrepreneurs to understand the economic and managerial implications of these transformations. Students will gain a good understanding of why and how successful companies are taking advantage of e-business, as well as an understanding of the main challenges and risks associated with different e-business models and strategies in a fast changing technological and business environment.

The course is structured into four main sections:

1. Strategic, technological, and economic foundations of e-business
2. E-business and its configurations: B2C and B2B
3. E-business: strategic and organisational challenges
4. Implementation of e-business strategies'

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

A 2 hour revision session will be offered in the summer terms. Students will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a formative assessment based on previous exam questions.

Each student will receive feedback on the approach to the question, the structure of the presentation, and the argumentation they have proposed to discuss the assigned question.

Aim of the formative work is to offer students the opportunity to self-evaluate their understanding of the subject, to test their preparation, to help them better understand what are the criteria of assessment, and to help them to better identify what is need to achieve the desiderated outcomes.

MG210 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Corporate Social Responsibility and International Labour Standards

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sarah Ashwin NAB 4.19

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Any social science background

Course content: Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is becoming an expected element of business strategy. This course critically evaluates CSR from a number of perspectives, drawing on material from a variety of different disciplines. Students analyse the emergence of CSR, its theoretical basis, the business case for the adoption of CSR programmes, as well as the social impacts of such policies. The opening lectures of the course focus on globalisation and international labour standards, and provide an understanding of how CSR relates to international regulatory institutions such as the International Labour Organisation. Subsequent lectures focus on the different aspects of CSR mentioned above, as well as topics such as comparative CSR. In terms of the impact and design of CSR policies, the course mainly focuses on issues relating to labour standards.

As well as traditional academic readings and case studies, students will critically examine publically available material such as corporate policies and reports. Seminars will follow a mixture of formats including group activities and presentations. The course will include one interactive lecture from a CSR professional.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

MG214 Half Unit
Human Resource Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Jeffrey Thomas
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Organisational Behaviour and Leadership (MG105) or equivalent.
Course content: This course is designed to provide insights into Human Resource Management, especially in a way that appeals to students of management who are quite international in their orientation. After setting the global scene of labour markets, Human Resources and organisational change in the twenty-first century, it then proceeds to look at the management of people in different national contexts. The focus then shifts down to the employment relationship – why firms hire workers and how they strategically manage them. Once workers are hired as employees, we begin to explore how the latter might be motivated and rewarded, and how the design of policies varies across organisations of different types. To help us with this, we usefully draw on key ideas and models from the field of organisational studies that are also a prelude to thinking through the implications for HRM in environments where innovation and technology are prone to rapid change. This then allows us to gain an overview of the potential contribution that HRM can make to the dynamic capabilities of firms generally.
Topic outline
1. The global context of human resources in C21: migration, offshoring, supply chains and MNCs
2. The macro-context (enterprise governance, employer networks, skill and training, and employment relations
3. Stakeholders in firms and employee management (Corporate Social Responsibility and HR)
4. Cross-cultural management of employees: the complexities and opportunities
5. Firm strategy and international HR alignment
6. Identification of talent gap and solutions (expatriation and repatriation)
7. Global Talent Management (selection, training and development, performance appraisal and management, compensation)
8. Motivation and incentives (theories from Economics and Psychology)
9. Innovation, dynamic capabilities of firms and HRM – HR policies to promote diffusion of knowledge within a company
10. Managing HR in cross-border alliances, in particular international Mergers and Acquisitions and Joint Ventures
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: A formative assignment will be set consisting of one mock exam question. The purpose of the mock exam is to provide - as realistically as possible - a practise session for the final exam.

MG228 Half Unit
Managing the Stone-Age Brain

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Satoshi Kanazawa NAB 5.33
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course will introduce second- and third-year Management students to the new science of evolutionary psychology and explore the biological and evolutionary foundations of human behaviour. In the first few weeks, various critiques of and competing perspectives on evolutionary psychology, with regard especially to the relative importance of biological/evolutionary vs. social/cultural determinants of human behaviour and its sex differences will be discussed and debated. In later weeks, an evolutionary perspective will be applied to various topics in management such as organizational behaviour, occupational choice, productivity, and status hierarchy. The study of business and management is currently dominated by economic perspectives, supplemented by sociological and social psychological perspectives, in American business schools. The course will provide a necessary corrective to the dominance of economics perspectives in the study of business and management by providing biological and evolutionary perspectives and thereby throwing a new light on the old problems (and finding potential solutions for them) in organizations and organizational behaviour. The course will provide evolutionary and biological perspectives on management and organizational behaviour. It will introduce the students to the following topics: Principles of evolution; Principles of evolutionary psychology; Sex differences in preferences, values, cognition, emotions, and behaviour; Physical attractiveness; General intelligence; Evolutionary constraints on human behaviour and their relevance to organizational behaviour.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Each student will give a class presentation on the week's readings and their presentation will be evaluated by the course instructor and the feedback will be given to the student within one week. During the first few years of the course, mock examinations will be given to the students in order to familiarize them with the anticipated exam contents and format.

MG301
Strategy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ricardo Alonso NAB 5.31
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or equivalent, Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or equivalent and Quantitative Methods (Statistics) (ST107) or equivalent, and Economics for Management (MG207) or Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or equivalent.
Course content: The first half of the course studies how firms compete with each other. More specifically, we will study strategic situations (competition and rivalry, competitive advantage (sources and sustainability), entry and entry deterrence, product differentiation, the role of information in markets, etc.) and formulate decision models of these situations. While the modelling and predictions are based on game theory, we will contrast our findings to real life games according to the growing empirical evidence.
The second half of the course studies how firms organize and the challenges they face in doing so. More specifically, we study the way managers interact with the different constituencies inside the firm- workers, board members, and other managers- and how those interactions shape the actual design of organizations. It presents, again with a heavy emphasis on the evidence, how the need to motivate organizational members and to coordinate their actions shape the provision of incentives, the allocation of authority, the ownership structure, acquisition and diffusion of knowledge, and patterns of communication.
Beyond the emphasis on the content of the course, the course also aims to be a course where students learn to think critically and analytically. Students will learn to identify trade-offs in how firms behave and the way they organize themselves, and critically evaluate the sources of those trade-offs by appealing to simple models of individual behaviors. Students will learn to read the primary literature, discuss papers in class, interpret the evidence etc. Students will learn to ask questions such as: What is the evidence? What evidence would convince me of the opposite hypothesis?
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
There will be a reading week in Week 6 in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Formative work such as problem sets and mock exam questions will be set.
Indicative reading: The basic readings for the course will be the lecture notes written by Dr. Alonso. These lecture notes can be complemented with the following additional readings:
Thinking Strategically: Competitive Edge in Business, Politics and Everyday Life, WW Norton, 1993, by Avinash Dixit and Barry Nalebuff. The Art of Strategy, WW Norton, 2008, by Avinash Dixit and Barry Nalebuff. Games of Strategy (WW Norton, 3rd edition, 2009) by Avinash Dixit, Susan Skeath and David Reiley. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG302 Half Unit
Topics in Management Research

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Diane Reyniers NAB 5.22
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: MG207 or equivalent and MG205 or equivalent.
Course content: This course addresses various topics in management research which will be used to encourage creative and logical thinking, structuring of clear arguments and critical assessment of evidence. The focus is on interpretation of findings rather than statistical or econometric techniques.
The intellectual backbone of the course is applied and empirical economics (including behavioural economics) and finance but wherever appropriate contributions from the psychology, sociology and management literature will be discussed. We will mainly deal with issues which are amenable to rigorous empirical investigation. The course is designed around a set of empirical research papers. Examples of questions considered are whether pain killers are more effective when they are expensive, whether creative people cheat more, whether steeper incentives lead to better performance. The main objective of the course is to enable students to comprehend and critically assess the literature on selected management topics, to evaluate statements in terms of evidence and to detect false reasoning or logic.
Topics vary each year (based on student feedback) but examples are Racial discrimination, Negotiation, Experiments on Incentives, Placebo effects of price, Leadership.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the LT.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Two take-home mock exam papers.
Indicative reading: A reading list will be available on Moodle.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG303 Half Unit
International Business Strategy and Emerging Markets

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB 4.32 and Dr Christine Cote NAB 4.05
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course cannot be taken with MG307.
Pre-requisites: BSc Management students should be in their 3rd year. Other students should have taken Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102), or equivalent.
Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. It will combine the development of conceptual frameworks primarily through the lectures with the analysis of key cases in the classes.
Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused to developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The "new institutional economics" has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies' performance.
This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concepts such as the resource based view. We will provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economies and working with a large variety of datasets and sources. The course will then turn to key topics. These will include the interaction between international trade and investment in the internationalisation choices of MNEs; the emergence of global supply chains; the determinants of FDI; the effects of FDI on the host economy; entry mode choices; measures of institutional and cultural distance; and the growing importance of multinationals from emerging markets.
Students will work with case material as well as the required reading, and the group project will comprise a case write up, which will be presented prior to submission in class for comment and discussion.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to write a 1,000 word essay and will be provided with feedback. They will also be required to present their group project in class.
Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. Digital Platform Innovation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Sorensen NAB 3.11
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course provides students with both practical and theoretical insights into the dynamics of large-scale digital service platforms and their associated ecosystems. The course will begin by exploring the span of business innovation challenges from securing intimate user-technology relationships to the establishment and control of global service ecosystems based on digital platforms. The course examines the components, operations and trends of digital ecosystems, for example focusing on the role of large distributed datasets applied for organisational intelligence of various forms. The course, furthermore, considers social networks both in terms of large distributed datasets, and as innovation platforms relying on associated service ecosystems. The course addresses the general challenges of business digitalisation and platformisation with specific focus on mobile smartphone and tablet platforms. The course will conclude with a broader consideration of digital infrastructures and the dynamics associated with their innovation and growth.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: The classes will engage students in discussions and they will form the foundation for checking, on a continuous basis, the progression of student understanding. Classes will entail small assignments and written and oral feedback will be given during the classes.

Innovation and Technology Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Liebenau NAB 5.14
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The main focus of this course is on how innovative technologies are managed and their consequences. It includes technological innovation in areas such as telecoms, hi tech industries, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, space technology, financial technologies. Aspects covered are how new industries are created, how existing industries can be transformed by new technologies, linkages between technological development and the creation of wealth, and implementation success and failure of technological systems. Topics include: technology and entrepreneurship, technology strategy, R&D management, patents and intellectual property, disruptive technologies, project escalation, technological disasters. Economic, systems, managerial and sociological approaches will be compared using a variety of case studies.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles and case studies from the course study pack on Moodle. Formative feedback is provided on class participation.
In addition, students will present an essay plan in preparation for the final case-based essay, on which formative feedback will be provided.

MG307 Half Unit
International Context of Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Nilesh Dattani NAB5.02
This course cannot be taken with MG303.
Course content: The course aims to apply social science theory to the analysis of the conduct and management of transnational activities; to critically appraise concepts such as globalisation, regionalisation, national competitiveness, transnationality of firms, etc. in the context of international management structures and processes; to delineate the international political, economic, social and legal structures and environments within which the activity of management takes place. The topics to be covered will include: the nature of the contemporary global political economy; the globalisation of business, finance and trade in goods and services; Global competition; the transnational corporation in the global economy; the tension between globalisation and regionalisation; the international trading order; the international monetary regime; the impact of culture on global business; the changing position of the state in the global economy; the new diplomacy of states and firms.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce one piece of written work and do the weekly class exercises.
Indicative reading: P Dicken, Global Shift: Mapping the Changing Contours of the World Economy (7th edn), Sage Publications (2015); R W Griffen & M W Pustay, International Business: A Managerial Perspective (8th edn), Pearson Prentice-Hall (2015); O Shenker, Y Luo & T Chi, International Business, (3rd edn) Routledge (2015).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG308 Half Unit
Simulation Modelling and Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alicia Mejia-Salazar
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Elementary statistical concepts and experience of standard computer software is assumed.
Course content: The main characteristic of this course is that it is a hands-on course and of an extremely practical nature. Research shows that 90% of the largest organisations both in Europe and the USA use the techniques taught here to monitor their operations and especially in risk management. The aim of the course is to introduce students to the concepts, techniques and applied aspects of the development and analysis of simulation models. The course will cover two main approaches for modelling problems bound by uncertainty (stochastic behaviour): Monte-Carlo Simulation (static problems) and Discrete Event Simulation (dynamic problems). Topics covered will include: types of uncertainty; types of simulation modelling; sampling methods; the simulation process; structuring problems for simulation; running simulation models; analysing simulation outputs; risk analysis using simulated models; testing and validating simulation models; applications of simulation. Excel modelling is an integral part of Monte Carlo simulation and at the end of the course students will have a sound foundation on how to set up different Excel models. Additional tutorial examples will be provided both throughout the course, and posted on Moodle to help develop this very important skill.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. An Excel help class may be held during reading week in Week 6. Extended office hours to students who need it.
Formative coursework: Three individual or small-group assignments will be required during the course.
Indicative reading: JR Evans & DL Olson (2002) Introduction to Simulation and Risk Analysis. Prentice-Hall: Upper Saddle River, NJ; AM Law (2006) Simulation Modelling and Analysis. McGraw-Hill: Boston, 4th ed.; M Pidd (2004) Computer Simulation in Management Science. Wiley: Chichester, 5th ed.; S Robinson (2004) Simulation - The Practice of Model Development and Use, Wiley: Chichester; D Vose (2008) Risk Analysis - A Quantitative Guide, Wiley: Chichester, 3rd ed.
Assessment: Project (100%) in the ST.
The project will have two components, a written document and an oral examination.
An individual management report (maximum 15 pages – excluding appendix) describing the modelling and results from a simulation study of a realistic decision problem. The problem will be defined by week 5 or 6 of the LT, the project should be completed by the beginning of the ST.

International Human Resource Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Virginia Doellgast
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None for students on the BSc Management degree. Students on other degrees and General Course students require permission of the instructor. Background in human resource management, employment relations, or sociology of work is recommended (e.g. ID100, ID205, SO212).
Course content: This course examines the human resource management (HRM) strategies of global corporations, with the aim of understanding both the causes of different strategic choices and the consequences of these strategies for diverse stakeholders. In course modules, we will evaluate the strategic choices facing global corporations, including the choice between adopting highly centralized or predominantly decentralized HR policies; HR considerations in the outsourcing and offshoring of work; and the role of HRM in managing international mergers and acquisitions. A central area of concern will be to analyze how institutional and cultural factors affect HRM policies and outcomes across the 'global supply chains' of MNCs.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 exercise in the LT.
Indicative reading: Edwards, T. and C. Rees. (2011) International Human Resource Management: Globalization, National Systems, and Multinational Companies (2nd Edition). Essex: Pearson Education, Ltd. Essay (20%, 2000 words).

MG310 Half Unit
Analytics for Strategic Decisions

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Valentina Ferretti
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Elementary statistical and mathematical concepts.
Course content: How to choose in tough situations where stakes are high, and there are multiple conflicting objectives? How do we perceive risk, and how to act when there are risks and uncertainties involved in a decision? How can we create options that are better than the ones originally available? Decision making is a central aspect of virtually every management and business activity, including marketing, strategic planning, marketing management, resource allocation, operations management, and investment. Moreover, important decisions are not only made by managers and entrepreneurs, but also by the consumers of their goods and services, and by their business rivals, partners and employees. The ability to make better decisions is an invaluable part of everyone's toolbox. It is this ability that will be developed in this course, which introduces students to the use of Risk and Decision Analysis as a form of analytics that supports decision making in private, voluntary and public organisations. The course shows how a consistent and realistic mix of data and judgement can help decision makers to better achieve their objectives. Based on sound theory underlying normative, descriptive and prescriptive decision-making research, the course emphasises the practical application of Risk and Decision Analysis for decision-making across many different contexts.
The course is designed to enhance the students' decision capabilities when confronted with strategic or operational choices, when searching for decision opportunities, and when designing strategies and policies. It uses real-world Risk and Decision Analysis applications in organisations and public policy making, and employs several case-studies (supported by specialised decision software) to build students' skills in decision modelling and analysis. It covers modelling and supporting decisions involving multiple stakeholders and conflicting objectives (multi-criteria decision analysis) as well as uncertainty (decision trees, influence diagrams, and risk analysis).
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Two formative assignments:
1. Group project plan presentation (i.e. personal decision context selected, due in week 7)
2. Individual review of an anonymous technical report developed from students who took this course last year. Students will have to review the report by following specific criteria and by completing a set of both descriptive and evaluative tasks (e.g. indicating the strongest part of the report, indicating sentences or paragraphs that seem out of order, incompletely explained or in need of revision, etc.). This review assignment will help students to improve their reading, writing and collaborative skills.
The topic of the project (i.e. a decision making problem to be modelled and analysed by means of Multicriteria Analysis) can be a personal decision (i.e. which job offer to accept when confronted with multiple ones, which master to apply for, etc.). Students will have to collect data, develop and apply a quantitative model, interpret the results and refer to the key scientific literature for the main steps in the development of the model. Students are allowed to work in groups of maximum 4/5 people. In the individual technical report of the group project, students will have to report on the developed process. This assignment will help students develop their operational problem solving skills by demonstrating their ability to apply a quantitative model to solve an operational problem, interpret its results, and develop sound recommendations.

Assessment: Presentation (40%) and other (60%).
The presentation is a group project due in Week 11 of Lent Term. The other assessment is an individual technical report on the group project due in Week 1 of Summer Term.

MG311 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Behavioural Decision Science for Management and Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Barbara Fasolo NAB 3.15
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: An introductory quantitative course, such as MA107 or ST107 or equivalent.
It is an advantage to have taken an introductory social science course in one of these fields: economics (e.g. EC101 or EC102), management, psychology or sociology.
Course content: This course develops your ability to make decisions or help others make better decisions, with the help of 'system 1' – the fast, intuitive and (before this course) automatic way our brain makes decisions, and evaluates others' decisions. The aim is for you to become a better intuitive decision maker.
In lectures, taught with MSc students, we examine how behavioural decision science came about and review a number of descriptive theories of decision making. We also focus on empirical research on heuristics, biases, decision style and other phenomena which can unconsciously affect decisions.
In seminars which are uniquely designed for undergraduates you answer to questions posed by the class teachers, and are guided to think about how behavioural insights apply to personal, managerial or policy decisions.
This is a course for undergraduates with a strong passion for behavioural science and a keen interest in the psychology of decision making and applications for management and policy. Lectures are taught at an advanced level, and experientially (e.g., in-class experiments). It is suitable for 3rd year undergraduates who are keen to learn alongside master's students in their first term at LSE, from diverse backgrounds and cultures. The course is a natural complement, and preparation for, MG310, which aims at improving the other side of the decision-making brain – the slow and analytic ability to make strategic decisions via modelling and decision analytic techniques
Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: A 500-word essay plan for one long essay (following the same structure as the summative essay) to be submitted AFTER reading week.
Indicative reading: Ariely, D. (2008). Predictably Irrational: The Hidden Forces That Shape Our Decisions. Harper Collins. Bazerman, M. (2006) Judgment in Managerial Decision Making. New York: Wiley. 6th edition. Hastie, R., and Dawes, R.M. (2001). Rational Choice in an Uncertain World. Sage Publications, Thousand Oaks. Russo, J. E. & Schoemaker, P. J. H. Decision Management: How to Assure Better Decisions in Your Company. Jossey-Bass
Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.
Assessment will be as follows:
An essay of 3,000 words to be submitted no later than the beginning of week 7 of LT (100%)
The essay will include two parts. In the first part (1,000 words), you will be asked to prepare a memorandum to the CEO of an organisation (be it public or private, an NGO, a business corporation or a third sector enterprise) giving a behavioural insight on some decision to make, or situation to improve, or goal to achieve. In the second part of the essay (2,000 words), you will justify the specific recommendations presented in the memorandum with reference to behavioural and decision science literature and theories. The first part of the essay will count for 50% of your mark while 50% will come from the second part.

MG312 Half Unit
Extreme Organisational Behaviour: Examining behaviour in non-normative organisational contexts

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tara Reich and Dr Chia-Huei Wu

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Organisational Behaviour and Leadership (MG105) or Organisational Theory and Behaviour (MG203) or equivalent Course content: Extreme OB seeks to understand atypical forms organisational phenomena. Alternative forms of organisations and unique individual circumstances have become more commonplace in recent years; however, OB theories—designed to apply to "typical" workplace behaviour and contexts—have not kept pace. The emphasis in this course will be on critically evaluating existing OB theories as they relate to extreme forms of workplace behaviour (e.g., workaholism, pro- and antisocial behaviour) and contexts (e.g., military, hospital, and artist culture). Weekly topics include isolated and high pressure work environments, passion work, virtual and flexible teams, and compliance and proactivity.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 pieces of coursework (1 essay outline based on a case study and 1 presentation) in the MT.
Indicative reading: The course relies heavily on journal articles (for example, Academy of Management Journal, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour, and Harvard Business Review). An extensive reading list is provided at the start of the course. Indicative readings include:

P., & Harris, J. N. (2014). Developing a passion for work passion: Future directions on an emerging construct. Journal of Organizational Behavior, 35, 145-150.
Assessment: Other (100%) in the LT.
Assessment is based on a 3,000 word Case Study in which students will be asked to identify and describe an example of an "extreme" organisational phenomenon and to use existing theory(ies) to explain it, noting what the theory(ies) can and cannot account for. Students will then be asked to propose a modification to the theory(ies) to make it "fit" the phenomenon better. The Case Study, which will be due at the beginning of LT, will account for 100% of the final grade in this course. The Case Study will be supported by formative feedback from instructors and peers throughout the course, as well as a presentation.

MG315 Half Unit
Marketing Action Learning Project

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Haider Ali
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Core Disciplines II: Marketing, Human Resource Management and Information Management (MG201) or Marketing (MG212).
Course content: This course will build on theoretical concepts taught in the pre-requisites, by applying these theories and concepts to a real-life situation. Working in teams, students will develop a marketing plan for a new product/service launch; from ideation through to marketing research and setting marketing launch budgets, and considering Return on Investment. With support from the course leader, students will get the opportunity to use knowledge gleaned from many management courses to craft a compelling marketing plan. This course will test not only your academic knowledge but also your practical problem-solving skills, resourcefulness, and creativity.
Teaching: 4 hours of lectures in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 other piece of coursework and 2 other pieces of coursework in the LT.
i) One page memo drafting the scope of the project area
ii) Mid Term Report One – proposing the market segment to be targeted (based on relative attractiveness)
iii) Mid Term Report Two – Research Plan
Indicative reading: Malcolm McDonald, Marketing Plans: How to Prepare them, How to use them, 7th Edition, Wiley
Business Model Generation, Osterwalder & Pigneur, Wiley
Assessment: Project (90%, 5000 words) in the LT.
In class assessment (10%).
The project will be completed in a group. A Group Evaluation Form will be required, where students' comments on their peers can affect the final grade allocated. Please note that project group membership will be allocated by the course leader.
In the last class of the Lent Term students will be required to write, under exam conditions, a reflective piece on the work undertaken by their team and their contribution to it. The precise focus of students' answers will be determined by the question that they have to address.

PH101
Logic

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Owen Griffiths, LAK 3.01
Availability: Students on the BSc in Philosophy, Logic & Scientific Method and on the BSc in Politics and Philosophy are required to take either this course or PH104. Students on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics who opt to take their logic paper in their first year may take either this course or PH104; those who opt to take their logic paper in their second year must take PH104 rather than this course. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: We reason or make deductions all the time - both in intellectual disciplines and in everyday life. For example, a scientist will test a particular theory by reasoning that if that theory were true then some other claim, one that can be checked observationally or experimentally, would have to be true as well - that is, by showing that some observationally testable claim is deducible from the theory. Mathematics is of course concerned with proofs and proofs are deductive inferences. Finally, philosophy is centrally concerned with arguments or deductions. To take one example, many have argued that the presence of evil in the world is incompatible with the existence of an all-powerful, all-knowing, all-merciful god as proposed in, for example, Judaeo-Christian theology. That is, they have claimed that if you assumed that there is such a god, then it would follow, or you could infer that, there would be no evil in the world. But since there is evil, it follows that there can be no such god. More mundanely, we reason, or make inferences, all the time - though we don't always think of it that way. Deductive Logic is the study of such inferences - it therefore has an enormously broad scope. Different disciplines have different ways of garnering information in the first place (the way that we arrive at a scientific theory is different from the way that we arrive at an axiom in mathematics or a thesis in philosophy), but the way that we reason from that information is the same no matter what the discipline. The main task of logic is to give an explicit characterisation of those inferences that are correct, or as we shall say, VALID (and hence differentiate them from those that are invalid). Logic tells you exactly when some conclusion really does follow from some premises and when it does not.

The course begins with a simple system called propositional or truth-functional logic, which despite its simplicity captures a great range of important arguments. The system of predicate logic that we study next is, however, still more powerful and provides the logical basis not only for ordinary inferences but also for inferences in the sciences. In both the case of propositional and of predicate logic, the course also covers other notions, such as the consistency of a set of sentences, and the independence of one sentence from a set of assumptions, that are closely related to validity of inference. Finally the course covers some issues in the foundations of logic - to do with truth and sets.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework will take the form of a number of computer based quizzes and a number of regular exercises. Both of these will be set on the basis of the material covered in lectures. In the case of the computer based quizzes, students are required to complete them before a specific deadline; these will be discussed in class. In the case of the regular exercises, students are required to complete these and to be ready to present and discuss answers in the associated class; some of these will be formatively assessed by the class teachers. Successful completion of both the quizzes and the regular exercises is regarded as a prerequisite for admission to the examination for this course.

Indicative reading: Detailed course notes are provided and are intended to be sufficient reading for the course. However for those who like to have a book the one whose treatment is closest to that adopted in the lectures is P.Suppes Introduction to Logic (Van Nostrand).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PH103
The Big Questions: An Introduction to Philosophy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Birch and Dr Bryan W Roberts (co-teaching both MT and LT)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: Philosophers formulate sharp ways of thinking about some of the world's big questions. In this course, we explore 10 of the biggest such questions:

(1) What do I know? (2) What is consciousness? (3) Who am I, and do I exist? (4) Do I have free will? (5) Does God exist? (6) What are space and time? (7) What are numbers? (8) What should I do? (9) What is justice? (10) What is the meaning of life?

You will be getting to the bottom of these questions, and to do so, we will be training you in the essential skills of a philosopher. There will be three main components. First, you will hone your ability to read philosophical texts, focusing on how to extract and present a philosophical thesis and argument in a clear, logical way. Second, you will practise creative, critical thinking and discussion on the fly, by participating in philosophical discussion with your peers. Finally, you will develop your ability to write philosophical arguments of your own in essay-form.

The questions of this course are some of the hardest that have ever been asked. Our plight as philosophers is that we still find them irresistible. Don't let this worry you; we need not settle the answers once and for all. (The joke among philosophers is that, "At least we have all the questions!") This course will nevertheless prepare you to make clear progress on big questions, and to think about them in a philosophical way.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Parallel to this course, students will take a 5-week writing "Seminar" in either Michaelmas Term or Lent Term, but not both. This seminar, called ‘Philosophy and Argumentative Writing’ (or "PAW"), will provide you with practical advice and exercises to improve your writing style. Students in the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, the BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, and the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics are required to attend (5 hours of workshops in either MT or LT) and do all assignments. Other students are invited to do so.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write one formative essay in MT and two formative essays in LT.

Indicative reading: The readings will be articles and excerpts from books and will be made available via Moodle.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 1500 words) in the LT.
Essay (50%, 1500 words) in the ST.

PH104
Formal Methods of Philosophical Argumentation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Owen Griffiths, LAK 3.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics (2nd year). It is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics for those students who do not take PH101 in their first year. It is available as a more demanding alternative to PH101 for the BSc Philosophy and Economics (1st year); BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and the BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Students are advised that it is a more demanding alternative to PH101. Only students with facility in formal reasoning (such as employed in mathematics or statistics) are advised to take this course rather than PH101 (where regulations permit this choice).

Pre-requisites: Although there are no formal prerequisities, facility in formal reasoning (such as employed in mathematics or statistics) will be presupposed.

Course content:

1. Deductive Logic. Philosophy is centrally concerned with arguments. The first question to be asked of any argument (or inference) is whether or not it is valid: that is, does its conclusion really follow from the cited premises?

Validity of inference is the central problem of deductive logic. Logic has universal scope: different disciplines have different ways of garnering information (the way that we arrive at a scientific theory is different from the way that we arrive at an axiom in mathematics or a thesis in philosophy), but the way that we reason deductively from that information is the same no matter what the discipline. The key to answering some other formal questions that often arise in philosophy – such as whether a position (set of assumptions and claims) is consistent (let alone true) – is also provided by deductive logic.

This section of the course covers first a simple system called propositional or truth-functional logic, which despite its simplicity captures a great range of important arguments and provides a formal articulation of the key notions of validity and consistency. The main system covered, however, is (first order) predicate logic, which is powerful enough to capture not only simple inferences but also those involved in philosophy and the sciences.
The final section of this part of the course investigates more systematically how the formal techniques provided by these systems of logic relate to the invariably more informal arguments found in philosophy (and ordinary discourse).
2. Probability. In a valid deductive argument, the conclusion must be true if the premises are. Many inferences, however, conclude only that a certain claim is probable (or more probable than it would otherwise be). For example, we clearly cannot infer from the premise that someone smokes 40 cigarettes a day (together with background medical theories and data), that s/he will die early from smoking-related illness, but we can infer that it is much more probable that she will than if s/he did not smoke.
Issues about probabilities play many roles in current philosophical debates: in decision theory, philosophy of economics, philosophy of physics and many other areas. Building on the axiomatic development of probability that students will have covered in ST102, this section of the course will cover elements of probability logic together with some foundational issues. For example, it turns out that there are importantly different notions of probabilities, that is, different interpretations of the probabiliy axioms. In particular, a subjective interpretation which sees probabilities as credences or degrees of belief in some proposition; and objective interpretations which see probabilities as properties of physical events (like the probability of a particular radioactive atom decaying in a given time interval). Some interesting difficulties arise with both interpretations.
The subjective interpretation has been developed into a full-blown and general “Bayesian” account of theory confirmation in science, the essentials of which will also be covered.
3. Formal Philosophical Devices. This final section of the course covers some of the formal, technical ideas that are often presupposed in contemporary philosophical work: including the notions of sets and infinities; theories of truth (and partial truth); analyticity and the a priori; possibility and necessity; and conditionals. Some of these notions have been clarified via analyses of celebrated 'paradoxes' that will also be covered in this section of the course.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
There are regular structured exercises on Moodle.
Formative coursework: Formative coursework will take the form of a number of computer-based quizzes and a number of regular exercises. Both of these will be set on the basis of the material covered in lectures. In the case of the computer-based quizzes, students are required to complete them before a specific deadline. In the case of the regular exercises, students are required to complete these and to be ready to present and discuss answers in the associated class; some of these will be formatively assessed by the class teachers. Successful completion of both the quizzes and the regular exercises is regarded as a prerequisite for admission to the examination. For later sections of the course, exercises will include questions requiring brief essay answers.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

PH201
Philosophy of Science

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ioannis Votsis
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None.
Course content: Science is chock full of miraculous predictions, shocking revolutions, and unexpected results that few science fiction writers could have ever dreamed of. What makes science so special? This course is a tour of the philosophical underpinnings of modern science. No background in any science is needed for this course; everything you need to know will be covered.
Indicative topics include: Theory and Observation: Hume’s problem of induction and Goodman’s new riddle of induction, Popper’s falsificationism, underdetermination of theory by evidence, the positive instance account of confirmation, Bayesianism. Laws of Nature: the regularity view of laws, laws as universals, the best systems account, instrumentalism. Explanation: the DN model of explanation, statistical explanation, causal explanation, unification. Intertheory relations: reductionism and pluralism. Realism versus Antirealism: Scientific realism and antirealism, the no miracles argument, inference to the best explanation, the pessimistic meta-induction, reductive empiricism, constructive empiricism, the natural ontological attitude, entity realism, structural realism, Kuhn and scientific revolutions. Sociological approaches to science: Social constructivism, feminism. Causation: Hume’s, Mill’s, Mackie’s accounts of causation, counterfactual theories, probabilistic causality and manipulability accounts, transference accounts. Philosophy of a special science: Evidence-Based Medicine.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write four essays (two in MT and two in LT), submit a few short answers before each class, and participate in class discussion.
Indicative reading: P Godfrey-Smith: Theory and Reality: An Introduction to the Philosophy of Science. C Hitchcock (editor): Contemporary Debates in Philosophy of Science.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PH203
Philosophy of the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mattia Gallotti, LAK 3.01
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: No formal pre-requisites, but PH103 The Big Questions: An Introduction to Philosophy or equivalent is recommended.
Course content: Philosophical issues concerning the nature of social scientific theory and its applications.
Topics to be covered will include some or all of the following: the explanation and interpretation of action; naturalist and hermeneutic social theory; the nature of social facts; reductionism and methodological individualism; functional and structural explanations; rationality and relativism; the role of values in social science; social norms; the construction of social reality; methods of evolutionary explanation in the social sciences; philosophical and methodological critiques of evolutionary psychology. In additional, philosophical problems of particular social sciences such as anthropology, sociology, and economics will also be addressed.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write three formative essays, two in Michaelmas term and one in Lent term. A mock exam will be given near the end of Lent term, with feedback provided. Class presentations may also be required depending on the pedagogical approach adopted by the class teacher.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list may be found on the Moodle page for the course. Useful preliminary background readings include: The Philosophy of Social Science Reader, edited by Francesco Guala and Daniel Steel; Daniel Little, Varieties of Social Explanation; Alex Rosenberg, Philosophy of Social Science; Martin Hollis, The Philosophy of Social Science; Brian Skyrms, Evolution of the Social Contract. A useful anthology is Readings in the Philosophy of Social Science, edited by Michael Martin and Lee McIntyre.
Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Scientific Revolutions: Philosophical and Historical Issues

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall LAK 3.02
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: No prior systematic knowledge of physical and biological science is presupposed.
Course content: The course examines a number of fundamental issues in philosophy of science, as they arise from instances of important theory-changes (so-called 'scientific revolutions') in the history of science. It is therefore by no means a 'straight' course in history of science: it looks at historical episodes to test and/or illustrate philosophical theses about science and its development.
1. The Copernican revolution: the switch from the Ptolemaic geocentric view of the world to the Copernican heliocentric one was probably the greatest revolution in human thought ever: What justified the switch? Was Ptolemaic theory definitively refuted by the data? Was Copernican theory simpler? Was the Church's view that Copernican theory should only be thought of as an instrument for calculating astronomical data purely theologically motivated or does it have some scientific rationale? What role was played in the eventual acceptance of the Copernican view by predictive success? Do we need to invoke social or other non-intellectual factors to explain why this 'revolution' occurred?
2. Galileo: Galileo and the telescope: are all observations 'theory-laden' and does this mean that there is a subjective element to all theory-choices? Galileo and the argument for his law of free fall: can theories be 'deduced from the phenomena'?
3.The Newtonian revolution: What was the relationship between Newton's theory and Kepler's and Galileo's laws? What does this tell us about theory-change in general?
4.19th Century revolutions in Optics: the switches from the corpuscular theory to the wave theory of light and from the wave theory to the electromagnetic theory. What do these cases of theory-change tell us about the twin theses of scientific rationality and scientific realism?
5. The Darwinian Revolution: This revolution certainly ranks alongside the Copernican one in terms of its impact on man's view of herself. But debates about the scientific credentials of Darwin's theory began immediately on the publication of Darwin's work and continue to this day. Is Darwinian theory unfalsifiable (or even just one big tautology)? Can 'scientific' creationists explain everything that Darwin can?; What objections were raised by Darwin's critics to particular aspects of Darwinian theory? Were these valid objections and, in so far as they were, have they now been resolved?
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays per term of 1500 words maximum, and to give class papers.
Indicative reading: Background reading: T S Kuhn, The Structure of Scientific Revolutions; Imre Lakatos 'Falsification and the Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes' in his The Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes, Philosophical Papers 1; G Holton (revised by S Brush): Theories and Concepts in Physical Science.
Recommended reading: The central text for the first part of the course is T S Kuhn, The Copernican Revolution, Harvard University Press; the central text for part 5 is Philip Kitcher: Abusing Science: the case against Creationism. MIT Press.
There will be lecture slides on each topic including (i) a list of essential reading and suggestions for further reading and (ii) 'study questions' to guide your thought. Aside from the above reading for the section of the course on the Copernican revolution, reading for particular topics will be in the form of articles and selections from books. These will be made available through a combination of handouts, course pack and the Offprint Collection.
Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

PH214
Philosophy, Morals and Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alexander Voorhoeve
The course will be taught by Prof. Michael Otsuka (weeks 1-5 MT); Prof. Luc Bovens (weeks 6-10 MT); and Prof. Alex Voorhoeve (weeks 1-10 LT)
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None.
Course content: Michaelmas Term weeks 1-5 (Michael Otsuka): The ethics of harming and saving from harm. We will discuss the following topics in normative ethics regarding the morality of harming and saving from harm: (i) Should one save the greater number from harm?; (ii) Can contractualism justify the saving of the greater number when and only when we ought to?; (iii) Should one be solely concerned with how badly off people are, or should one also care about inequality?; (iv) Does it make a moral difference that a person is less well off than she could have been? (a.k.a. 'the non-identity problem'); (v) Why is it permissible to divert a tram so that it runs over one rather than five, whereas it is impermissible to kill a single individual in order to redistribute his vital organs to save the lives of five? (a.k.a. 'the trolley problem').

Michaelmas Term weeks 6-10 (Luc Bovens): Moral psychology. We will study five topics in moral psychology, viz. hope, self-management, love, apologies and death. Hoping for something seems to be more than just believing it to be possible and desiring it—but what else is required for hope? Can it be reasonable to adapt our desires and beliefs to improve our quality of life? Or should be just dismiss this as sour grapes and self-deception? Should we conceive of romantic love foremost as a deep attraction to the features of a beloved, a commitment of caring for a beloved, or a desire to form a single identity with a beloved? What makes for a genuine apology? Why would one care that one be forgiven? What kind of hopes might people have in the face of death, if not eternal life? The core thread through our readings are various strategies of coping with life's challenges. We will also explore literary expressions and political dimensions of these concepts in moral psychology. The readings are a combination of chapters from a book manuscript by Luc Bovens and classical and contemporary sources.
Lent Term weeks 1-5 (Alex Voorhoeve): The good life, virtue, and the market. We will engage with two outstanding thinkers from the history of ethics: Aristotle and Hume. We will use their works to pursue the following questions in ethics: What is a good life? What makes a character trait a virtue or a vice? Why be moral? We will also consider social and political questions, including: what is the origin and role of property rights? Do markets corrupt us or make us better human beings?
Lent Term weeks 6-10 (Alex Voorhoeve): The moral law and social justice. In these weeks, we will draw on Kant's works to engage with the following moral questions: Are there moral laws that are binding on every rational being? What does respect for human beings require? Is impartial morality in tension with partial emotions like love? We will also use Rawls's work to pursue the following questions: What does justice require? Does it demand the redistribution of income from rich to poor in order to create a more egalitarian society?
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT and 3 essays in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: John Taurek, 'Should the Numbers Count?' Philosophy & Public Affairs, 6 (1977): 293-316; Derek Parfit, 'Equality and Priority', Ratio, 10 (1997): 202-221; Derek Parfit, Reasons and Persons; Luc Bovens Coping: a Philosophical Guide (mimeo). Adrienne Martin (2014) How We Hope, Princeton University Press. William James (1896) "The Will to Believe". Plato (1994) Symposium. Translated by Robin Waterfield. Oxford University Press. Jeffrie G. Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the ST.
Class participation (10%).

PH217
Set Theory and Further Logic

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible:
Dr Owen Griffiths, LAK 3.01
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Logic (PH101).
Course content: The aim of the course is to help students of philosophy become familiar with naive set theory, classical logic, and modal logic. From set theory, the course covers 'working' set theory as a tool for use in formal reasoning, and also some 'conceptual' set theory of philosophical interest in its treatment of infinite sets, cardinals and ordinals. From classical logic, it deals with propositional and first-order inference from both semantic and axiomatic viewpoints, with also some material on first-order theories including celebrated theorems of Tarski and Godel. The material on modal propositional logic presents the main axiomatic systems and their analysis using relational models. Throughout, a balance is sought between formal proof and intuition, as also between technical competence and conceptual reflection.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: In each term, students are required to submit solutions to two problem-sets, and write one essay on a topic selected from a list or proposed by the student and approved by the instructor.
Indicative reading: Textbooks: Makinson, David 2012 Sets, Logic and Maths for Computing, 2nd edition. Springer; Cameron, Peter 1999 Sets, Logic and Categories. Springer; Sider, Theodore 2010 Logic for Philosophy. Oxford University Press. Remark: Specific sections of these three texts that are relevant to weekly topics will be indicated on the Moodle page for the course.
Complementary reading : Crossley, John 1972 What is Mathematical Logic? (Dover reprint 1991); Goble, Lou ed 2001 The Blackwell Guide to Philosophical Logic (Blackwell); Halmos, Paul Naive Set Theory (Springer reprint 2011); Smith, Peter 2015 Gödel without (too many) tears http://www.logicmatters.net/igt/godel-without-tears/; Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy http://www.plato.stanford.edu/.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Scientific Method and Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katie Steele
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Policy decisions should be responsive to our best evidence. But what does this mean? How should we negotiate conflicting sources of evidence? And whose responsibility is it to link policy and evidence?
These questions reflect the two main topics of the course.
The first topic concerns the quality, strength and relevance of the available evidence with respect to a given policy question. This is a central issue in the 'evidence-based' policy-and-medicine movement. Are randomised controlled trials really the gold standard? Can evidence be statistically significant without being scientifically or practically significant, and vice versa? What is the role of quantitative versus qualitative evidence in establishing causal claims? How do general causal claims bear on individual cases, and vice versa? Can some evidence be disregarded due to cultural and political biases?

The second topic concerns the roles and responsibilities of scientists, policy-makers and citizens alike in enhancing evidence-based policy making. What does it mean to say that there is a scientific consensus? Does expert knowledge of scientists constitute a threat to democratic processes? What is the ‘Precautionary Principle’ and does it provide a way forward when there is little evidence available? To what extent should individual rights be compromised to enable scientific research? What issues arise when scientists interpret and measure ethically-loaded concepts like poverty, well-being or bio-diversity? Is science a ‘public good’ and what does this mean for how it should be managed?
Examples referred to in the course are drawn from various areas of science in policy-making, including climate, conservation, international development, poverty, education, and health.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful background readings are: Cartwright, N. and Hardie, J. (2012) Evidence-Based Policy: A Practical Guide to Doing it Better; Mackie, J.L. (1980) The Cement of the Universe; Howson, C. and Urbach, P. PH221
Problems of Analytic Philosophy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christian List and Dr Anna Mahtani
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed The Big Questions: An Introduction to Philosophy (PH103).
Course content: Short description: Some central topics in metaphysics, the philosophy of mind and action, epistemology, and the philosophy of language. Topics may vary by year. More detailed description: The aim of this course is to give an overview of some central themes in analytic philosophy, drawn from several areas: metaphysics, the philosophy of mind and action, and the philosophy of language. We will discuss questions such as the following:
Metaphysics: Is "physicalism" -- the thesis that everything is ultimately produced by physical processes -- philosophically defensible? Are there any features of the world that go beyond physical ones? Is the world deterministic? Could there be true randomness? What is the nature of causation and causal laws? What is the role of time? What is it for one object (or person) to persist through time?
Mind and action: What does it mean to have a mind? What is an intentional agent? How can we make sense of the emergence of human and animal minds against the background of a physical world? What is consciousness, and how does it relate to physical properties?
Language: How do some patterns and noises have meaning? How do some words refer to objects in the world? How do we manage to imply things by what we say? And how can we handle the problem of vagueness?
Our emphasis will be on developing a sharp understanding of key concepts, arguments, and the logical relationships between different ideas, rather than providing an encyclopaedic historical or exegetical coverage. We aim to give students a conceptual toolbox for a rigorous analysis of some classic philosophical questions.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Lectures are taught alongside PH501 postgraduate students.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in their classes and to write 3 formative essays, each with a 2000 word limit. None of these may be a draft of the summative assignment.
Indicative reading: Bertrand Russell, Problems of Philosophy (Any Edition); A.P. Martinich & D. Sosa (eds.), Analytic Philosophy: An Anthology; David Chalmers, The Conscious Mind; W.V.O. Quine, From a Logical Point of View; Jaegwon Kim, Physicalism, or Something Near Enough; John Searle, Making the Social World: The Structure of Human Civilization, William Lycan (2nd Edition): Philosophy of Language; Rosanna Keefe, Theories of Vagueness; Mark Sainsbury: Paradoxes.
Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

PH222
Philosophy and Public Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Campbell Brown
This course is taught by Prof. Alex Voorhoeve (weeks 1-5 of Michaelmas Term); Dr. Campbell Brown (weeks 6-10 of MT); Dr Johanna Thoma (weeks 1-5 of LT) and Prof. Michael Otsuka (weeks 6-10 of Lent Term).
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course offers critical reflection on the design and evaluation of public policies from the perspective of moral and political philosophy. To this end, we study a range of theories and concepts that are used in policy evaluation. We often discuss and evaluate them by focusing on specific policy proposals. The course addresses questions such as the following.
- What is a correct public measure of well-being?
- Should we distribute resources in health care to produce the most well-being overall or should we also aim to limit inequalities?
- Should people be left to bear the consequences of their free choices?
- May the government force you to buy health insurance?
- Is torture ever justified?
- Do prosperous countries have a right to close their borders to immigrants from poor countries?
- Should hate speech be protected by freedom of speech?
- Should the development of new drugs be left to private companies rewarded by patent protection?
- What is the optimal population size and what policies may the state pursue in order to achieve it?
- Should higher education be financed by student loans or general taxation?
- Should we be free to act as we choose so long as we do not harm others?
- Is killing morally worse than letting die?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.
Indicative reading: A detailed list of readings will be available on moodle. The following is an indicative sample of readings that may be discussed in the course.
- Bognar Iwao Hirose The Ethics of Health Care Rationing Routledge
- A. Voorhoeve (2018) 'May a Government Mandate More Comprehensive Insurance than People Want for Themselves?' Oxford Studies in Political Philosophy.
- Michael Rustin (2016), 'The neoliberal university and its alternatives', Soundings
- Ronald Dworkin et al (1997) 'Assisted Suicide: The Philosophers' Brief'
- Carol Kates (2004). 'Reproductive Liberty and Overpopulation' Environmental Ethics.
- John Stuart Mill (1859), On Liberty
- Jonathan Wolff (2011), Ethics and Public Policy: A Philosophical Inquiry

Additional readings will be available on Moodle.
Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

PH225 Half Unit
Business and Organisational Ethics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Susanne Burri
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Some tough-minded people believe that "business ethics" is a contradiction in terms. They argue that business is like a game where winning means making as much money as possible. These tough-minded people claim that whoever thinks otherwise --- whoever thinks that business is also about treating others respectfully --- is either naive, or deluded, or both. What people who argue in this way don't usually realise is that they are, in fact, making an argument within business ethics while they are denying that "business ethics" exists. To assert that business is a game where winning means making as much money as possible is to claim that when it comes to business, everyone should, or is at least permitted to, pay attention only to their personal gain. This statement may be correct, or it may be false. But it is definitely an ethical statement, simply because it makes claims about how people may permissibly behave.
In this introductory course to business ethics, we look at different types of ethical theories, and we apply them to problems that tend to arise in business contexts. The primary aim of the course is not to present you with solutions or dogmatic guidance, but to teach you to think critically, so that towards the end of the course, you will no longer be satisfied with simple answers to difficult problems. Participating in this course will help you sharpen your analytical skills. You will also become more experienced at expressing your thoughts clearly and concisely, both in writing and in discussion.
Topics discussed in the context of this course include:
- What are the moral responsibilities of managers? Is Milton Friedman correct that the main purpose of business is to increase profits?
- What, if anything, is wrong with exploitation? If sweatshop workers voluntarily choose to work under bad conditions because it is their best shot at having a decent life, isn't it wrong to outlaw sweatshop labour and rob the workers of this opportunity?
- If you want to live a morally good life, what career should you pursue? Is William MacAskill right that you should consider working for a hedge fund, and then give a large part of your earnings away to charities?
- Do employers have a duty to promote employee happiness? According to the ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle, happiness is the ultimate goal of all human beings. But is everyone responsible for their own happiness, or are employers required to make their employees happy as well?
- To what extent are the large pay packages that CEOs receive justified? What makes a wage fair?

Required readings amount to about two papers per week.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: One essay of 1500 words.

PH227 Half Unit
Genes, Brains and Society

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Birch
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: None.
Course content: This course examines, from a philosophical perspective, the ways in which recent developments in genetics and neuroscience challenge our conceptions of what we are — and what we could become.
Topics covered include:
Human nature: Does the concept of 'human nature' have any biological basis? Can we distinguish between those traits which are part of 'human nature' and those which are not? And is 'human nature' fixed, or can it be altered by technological means?
Sex and gender: Are 'sex' and 'gender' the same thing? Are gender categories natural or social? Are there robust psychological differences between men and women? If so, are they explained by genes or by culture? And should we reconcile ourselves to these differences, or should we try to eliminate them?
Race: Do races exist? Is there any objective biological basis for racial categorization, or are races socially constructed? Does the concept of 'race' have a legitimate role in medicine?
Free will and responsibility: Has neuroscience debunked the notion of 'free will'? If so, can we still be held responsible for our actions? Should neuroscientific data be used to predict—and prevent—wrongdoing?
Right and wrong: Has neuroscience shown that morality is more a matter of emotion than reason? Can we use neuroscience to help us choose between ethical theories, and to help us improve our own behaviour?
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Lectures: Weeks 1 - 10
Classes: Weeks 2 - 11
Formative coursework: A critical analysis exercise (1,000 words)
Indicative reading: Suggested introductory readings:
Glover, J. (2008) Choosing Children. Fine, C. (2005) Delusions of Gender. James, M. (2011) "Race", in the Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy [online]. Greene, J. D. (2013) Moral Tribes.
Assessment: Essay (45%, 1500 words) and wiki entry (10%) in the LT.

Essay (45%, 1500 words) in the ST.
There is no exam for this half-unit. There will be two summative essays, each worth 45% of the final mark. 10% of the final mark will be awarded for contributions to a collaborative wiki.

PH228 Half Unit
Emotion, Cognition and Behaviour: Science and Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Adrian Boutel
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course provides an introduction to the (i) philosophical and (ii) scientific foundations of contemporary cognitive science with a particular focus on its (iii) ethical, social and political implications. No background in either philosophy or cognitive science is required.
Topics covered include:
Folk psychology and its discontents: We tend think of ourselves, and of others, as more-or-less rational instrumental deliberators, choosing actions that further our goals in light of our beliefs. But is this common-sense understanding a good psychological theory? Or is it, at best, a useful heuristic for dealing with something much more complex?
Cognition as computation: Is the brain (like) a computer? Is computation sufficient for thought? Could computers potentially do all the things our minds do?
Dual-process theories: Do our cognitive processes come in 'fast' and 'slow' varieties? Is the mind partitioned into two systems?
Implicit bias: Could we be unaware of our own racial, gender and other biases? If so, are we responsible for the decisions they influence? What can we do about them?
Thought outside the body: Are thoughts wholly 'in the head'? How might they extend beyond it? Will augmented reality paint our minds onto the world?
Happy societies: Should policymakers aim at increasing the happiness of society? What would this mean, and how would we go about it?
Nonhuman thought: Do we share cognitive capacities with animals? What kind of value judgements are involved in answering that question? And if AI is possible, what happens to us when machines can think better than we can?
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Lectures: Weeks 1 - 10
Classes: Weeks 2 - 11
Formative coursework: One formative essay and comments on a draft of the assessed essay.
Indicative reading: Suggested introductory reading:
Crane, T. (2003), The Mechanical Mind (2nd ed). Routledge.
Kahneman, D. (2011), Thinking Fast and Slow. Allen Lane/Penguin.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the LT week 0.
Essay (33%, 1500 words).

PH230 Half Unit
Einstein for Everyone: From time travel to the edge of the universe

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites for this course; it is accessible to students of all backgrounds.
Course content: Does the universe have an edge? Is time travel possible? What is a black hole, and in what sense are space and time described by "geometry"? The modern theory of spacetime introduced by Einstein provides a precise framework in which to ask these questions. This course makes their analysis accessible to everyone.
Students will have the opportunity to engage with Einstein's theories of relativity, to use them to analyse philosophical problems, and to examine their philosophical and practical implications. The topics of the course will include: 1) Relativity: Slowing clocks, shrinking rods, and the relativity of simultaneity; 2) Spacetime: Thinking in higher dimensions, faster-than-light travel, and other philosophical issues; 3) Non-Euclidean thinking: Beyond the geometry of Euclid, measuring curvature, gravity as curved spacetime; 4) Cosmology: Our place in the universe, big bang cosmology, time travel; 5) Limits of space and time: Geometry, black holes, singularities.
Students will learn to apply these conceptual tools to the analysis of space, time and gravity, as well as to formulate and argue for their own perspectives on the philosophical implications of relativity theory. One is often faced with unsubstantiated declarations about the implications of Einstein's theories, by both scientists and non-scientists. This course will equip non-scientists with the conceptual tools needed to critically analyse these claims for themselves. It will also provide students with the tools needed to discuss the philosophy of space and time from a modern perspective.
Einstein for Everyone requires absolutely no background in physics or maths. Students are only required to learn two equations, which really cannot be omitted: E=mc2, and Einstein's equation!
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.
Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets and short discussion questions submitted through Moodle and for review in classes.
Indicative reading:
- Norton, John D. (2015) Einstein for Everyone.
- Hugget, Nick. (2010)
- Einstein, Albert (1920) Relativity: The special and general theory.
- Euclid (1908) The Thirteen Books of Euclid's Elements, Vol I.
- Poincaré, Henri (1905) Science and Hypothesis.

Weekly essential readings will be provided on Moodle, selected individually from various book chapters and journal articles.
Assessment: Essay (50%, 1500 words) in the MT.
Essay (50%, 1500 words) in January.

PH232 Half Unit
Physics and the City: From Quantum Jumps to Stock Market Crashes

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites for this course; it is accessible to students of all backgrounds.
Course content: One of the most surprising discoveries of the 20th century is that many things can be described by tiny atoms moving randomly about. Thinking about the physical world in this way led to the invention of modern particle physics. Thinking about the financial world in this way led to modern financial modeling. This course is about some of the philosophical issues underlying the relationship between physics and finance.

Students in this course will explore some of the most important conceptual and philosophical questions underlying physics and finance, like: How are assumptions about randomness compatible with observed forms of determinism? What does it mean to be an atom? How does the quantum world differ from the everyday world? What explains why physical models have unexpected applications in finance? To what extent do such applications help to underpin how the prices of financial instruments are set?
The course will proceed at a conceptual level that is suitable for students of all backgrounds. We begin by introducing the concept of atoms and of the random walk, and investigate the role it played in the development of statistical mechanics and quantum physics. We then explore how random walks and other models used in physics apply to understand financial ideas like rates of return, Black-Scholes option pricing, and stock market crashes, analysing the philosophical issues underlying this practice along the way.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the LT.
Students should also prepare to discuss a few short questions in each weekly class meeting.
Indicative reading: Weekly essential readings will be provided on Moodle, selected individually from various book chapters and journal articles. Some indicative readings include:
- MacKenzie, Donald. An Engine Not a Camera, excerpts.
- Malkin, Burton G. A random walk down Wallstreet, excerpts.
- Norton, John D. Einstein for Everyone, Chapters 34-37 on Brownian motion and the origins of quantum theory.
- Weatherall, James O. The Physics of Wallstreet (optional further reading)

Assessment: Essay (50%, 1500 words) in the Week 11.

PH301 Not available in 2017/18 Rationality and Choice

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley LAK2.03
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Available only for 4th year students in the BSc. PPE
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Formal Methods of Philosophical Argumentation (PH104).
Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202)
Course content: This course introduces the three main components of rational choice theory: individual decision theory (including probability theory), game theory and social choice theory. Students will become familiar with the kinds of problems and solution techniques (the logical/mathematical machinery) that characterise these areas of rational choice. The primary aim of the course, however, is to philosophically examine the theories in question. To this end we examine the basic assumptions underlying the dominant decision, game and social choice models, and how these assumptions relate to the role(s) these models are supposed to play in various areas of philosophy (e.g. philosophy of science and ethics) and in the social sciences.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

PH311 Philosophy of Economics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johanna Thoma LAK 4.02
Dr Campbell Brown
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics A (EC100).
Although it is a third-year course, second-year students can take it with permission.
Course content: This course provides a philosophical discussion of the methods and normative commitments of contemporary economics.
The first term will focus on economic methodology and the foundations of utility theory, with an eye to important current debates in economics. We will discuss questions such as: What is utility, and how do economists measure it? Does evidence of widespread `irrationality' from behavioural economics undermine standard microeconomic theory? Can idealised models teach us anything about real-world phenomena? If yes, how? How should we measure important economic variables, such as inflation? How do we best find out what interventions work in development? Does macroeconomics need microfoundations? Is the economics profession to blame for its failure to predict the financial crisis? The second term will focus on welfare economics, and the ethical assumptions and implications of economics. We will cover questions such as: Is getting what you want always good for you? Can you be harmed by something if you never know about it? Does it make sense to say that eating pizza gives me more happiness than going to the movies gives you? Is it possible to combine the preferences of individuals into an overall 'social' preference? Does it matter if the well-being of some people is less than that of others? What are the moral limits of markets? How should we resolve collective action problems? What is a fair distribution of the benefits from cooperation? Should there be barriers to international trade?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.

Indicative reading: D. Hausman, The Philosophy of Economics: An Anthology; J. L. Bermudez, Decision Theory and Rationality; J. Cohen and W. Easterly, What Works in Development: Thinking Big and Thinking Small; H. Davies, The Financial Crisis - Who is to Blame? D. Hausman and M. McPherson, Economic Analysis, Moral Philosophy, and Public Policy; D. Gauthier, Morals by Agreement; D. Satz, Why Some Things Should Not Be for Sale.

Additional readings will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (65%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Class participation (10%).

PH332 Half Unit
Effective Philanthropy: Ethics and Evidence

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Luc Bovens and Mr Stephan Chambers

Professor Bovens will deliver the weekly lectures and the seminars based on lecture material; Stephan Chambers, Marshall Institute Director, will arrange and chair the bi-weekly discussion with leaders in philanthropy.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This is 3rd-year level course, open to students from any degree in LSE. Interested second-year students can apply to the lecturer for permission to take the course.

Course content: The course will address key questions in philosophy and social science concerning philanthropy, including:

- Which motives actually drive philanthropy and which motives should drive it?
- What is the nature and extent of our moral obligations to philanthropy?
- Is the proper aim of philanthropy to 'do the most good'?
- How should the good aimed at be conceived of and measured?
- How, if at all, should people's rights and the risks of causing harm constrain the pursuit of the good?
- What are a charitable organisation's duties of accountability towards its stakeholders, that is, the donors, the recipients and its employees?
- Do we need Randomised Controlled Trials as evidence for the efficacy of philanthropic interventions?
- Which career and personal choices should one make in order to further philanthropic aims?
- Which moral principles govern the relationship between the state and private philanthropy? Between corporations and charities?
- What is the role of foundations in support for the arts?
- How should the recipients of aid be represented in media campaigns of charities addressing global poverty?
- What behavioural techniques can be invoked to increase charitable giving and are these techniques respectful of the freedom and autonomy of the targeted donors?

Learning aims:

- Students will learn about key contemporary debates in the ethics of philanthropy through critical engagement with the philosophical literature.
- Students will learn how to use both social science and normative (ethical and methodological) reasoning to assess philanthropic organisations.
- Students will gain knowledge of philanthropy in action via case studies that highlight key methodological and ethical issues and via discussions with professionals with extensive experience of the sector in bi-weekly, supplementary talks and Q&A sessions.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

In Michaelmas term: 1 hour lecture per week (x 10), fortnightly 1 hour additional 'philanthropy in practice' guest lecture and seminar with leading figures in philanthropy organised by the Marshall Institute; seminars: 1 hour per week (maximum of 15 per seminar).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

This formative essay has a word limit of 1500 words.

Philosophy, Politics and Economics: Applications

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alexander Voorhoeve LAK 401

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Available only to fourth-year PPE students.

Pre-requisites: The course will be available only to 4th-year PPE students.

Course content: This course will draw on concepts, theories and findings from Philosophy, Politics and Economics to tackle questions faced by decision-makers in public and private institutions. Each week will focus on a case study. Students will be expected to have had some prior exposure to the issues in previous courses--this course will stand out by being more interdisciplinary, in-depth and practical. Questions covered may include:

1. What measure(s) should governments use as the 'currency of distributive justice'? We will look at merits and drawbacks of various 'currencies' (including subjective satisfaction, the capability approach, the 'equivalent incomes' approach, and quality-adjusted life-years) and how they have been used.

2. How should we measure inequality and poverty? We will look at merits and drawbacks of various measures in the light of both (i) the nature of reasons to be concerned with inequality and poverty; and (ii) practical concerns.

3. How, if at all, should governments aid the disadvantaged 'at home'? We will consider the merits and drawbacks of conditional versus unconditional transfer programmes.

4. Should public services be provided for free 'in kind' or should citizens be granted 'vouchers' which they can 'top up' with their own money?

5. How should priorities be determined in aiding the global poor? We will consider whether efforts should be guided by where they will 'do the most expected good' or whether they ought instead also to be directed to reforming unjust institutions.
We will consider what kinds of goods can be traded for money and which goods ought to remain 'market-inalienable'.
We will consider the justifiability of the use of 'traditional' paternalistic instruments such as taxes and prohibitions and the use of 'nudges'.

8. How should one respond to the 'Democratic Trilemma', i.e., the conflict between three central demands on good democratic procedures: 'robustness to pluralism', 'majoritarianism', and 'collective rationality'? Discussion will centre on the merits and demerits of the various types of democracy that result from giving up each of these demands.

9. When people disagree, what are the conditions under which a consensus can be achieved and how desirable is it to do so? We will consider some of the epistemic and moral reasons for and against reaching a consensus and consider how some public organisations proceed in the face of disagreement.

10. How can and should collective action problems be resolved? We will consider the nature of the obligations to address collective action problems and the ways in which they may be solved.

11. Why limit immigration? We consider the moral reasons for and against limits on immigration and immigration's political and economic consequences.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
The lectures will present theories and findings from the three disciplines relevant to the policy issue being studied in that week; they will also give the outline of a real-world case study. Classes will devote some time to clarifying concepts, theories and findings, but will focus especially on the practical policy question posed by the case study. At least three classes will involve team debates, in which students are assigned to teams which must argue for a particular solution to the dilemma posed by the case study. Two of these debates will be formative, and one summative.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 2 presentations in the MT and LT.
Students will write at least two 2,000-word formative essays. At least twice, students will be assigned to a debate team, which must together present a case in class for a particular resolution of a policy dilemma. Feedback on these essays and the presentation will help prepare students for the final, summative essay and final, summative presentation.

An extensive list of required and further readings will be available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the ST.
Presentation (20%) in the LT.
The grade for the presentation will normally be the same for all members of the presentation team. This is to incentivise working effectively together. Students will have two summative team presentations first before the formative one, so will have time to learn to work together effectively and get guidance from the class teacher where needed. All other marks are individual.

Dissertation in Philosophy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marie Milofsky
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Course content: The dissertation may be on any topic for which a suitable supervisor in the Philosophy department can be found.
Selection of topic
Candidates should have the subject of their dissertation approved by their supervising member of department.
Arrangements for supervision
The dissertation is an opportunity to do extended independent research and writing and to present this work to one's peers. It should reflect the candidate's own views but must develop out of some established part of the philosophical literature. Students should carefully discuss their topic and approach with their supervisor who will also advise on reading and give feedback on written work. Students must have regular meetings with their supervisor, submit written work regularly, and keep a formal record of their work and progress. Students must also present an early version of their argument to fellow students and will be given feedback on the quality of their presentation as well as on the content of their arguments.
Teaching: 1 hour of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT, 2 essays and 1 presentation in the LT and 1 piece of coursework in the ST.
The formative coursework sets out several steps towards the dissertation: a literature review (due in MT); a first 2,000 words (due in week 1 of LT), a subsequent 3,000 words (which may be in part a revision of the first 2,000 words), due in week 5 of LT; a presentation of the student's arguments in LT; and a full draft of the dissertation, due in week 1 of ST. All written coursework must be submitted by email to both the student's supervisor and the teacher responsible. Students who fail to submit this coursework on time may be barred from submitting the dissertation.
Participation in the weekly seminar and the quality of the presentation will determine 10% of the final mark for the course.
Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 7000 words) in the ST.
Class participation (10%).
Dissertations must be submitted in May 2018, exact date to be confirmed. They should be 5,000-7,000 words, and should be typewritten.

Social Psychology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sophie Von Stumm QUE.3.22
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy and BSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.
Course content: Theories and concepts such as: self and identity; attitudes; communication, influence and persuasion; groups, organisations and crowds; social cognition, e.g. how our expectations influence our perception of the social world, and how our culture and social world influences those expectations. Applications such as: exploring the meaning of public opinion polls; the social and psychological sources of prejudice; rioting; crime and eyewitness testimony; media influence; leadership and motivation. This course's emphasis on social and applied psychology distinguishes it from the broader introduction to cognitive, developmental, clinical and other branches of psychology provided by PS100.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce two assignments as coursework, one in MT and one in LT. The first assignment comprises of three separate short answers responding to a choice of questions, comprising up to 1,500 words in total. The second assignment is an essay of 1,500 words. These will be assessed by the class teachers. Students are expected to give class presentations.
Indicative reading: Recommended reading: M Hogg & G Vaughan, Social Psychology, 7th edn, Prentice Hall, 2014; C.A. Sanderson, Social Psychology, Wiley, 2009; M Hewstone, W. Stroebe, K. Jonas. Foundations of Psychological Science

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Muthukrishna QUE 3.15
Availability: This course is available to all first and second year undergraduates who are permitted to take an outside option as part of their programme. This course is available to General Course students.
This course will offer students and understanding of how psychology relates to and informs other disciplines concerned with humans and human behaviour. The course is therefore suitable to students enrolled in other programmes who wish to enrich their understanding by drawing on the psychological sciences.
Pre-requisites: None
Course content: This course provides an introduction to human cognition and behaviour, addressing foundational topics in psychological science. These foundational topics include key concepts such as evolution, genetics, neuroscience, human evolutionary biology and anthropology, and specific topics, such as perception, memory, heuristics and biases, decision-making, child development, psychopathology, personality and individual differences, emotion, attraction and sexuality, cross-cultural differences, social relations, stereotypes and prejudice, norms and attitudes, social learning, social influence and persuasion, and group processes.
The course will offer an integrated perspective on these topics, investigating the evolution and variation in human psychology over time, across cultures, and over the lifespan. The course will introduce the history of the study of humans and human psychology, offering students the historical context to trends in research. By the end of the course, students will have a broad knowledge of key topics in psychology and related disciplines. Students will be prepared for more in-depth investigations of more advanced topics in later courses.
Students will also understand how psychology relates to and informs other disciplines concerned with humans and human behaviour. The course is therefore suitable to students enrolled in other programmes who wish to enrich their understanding by drawing on the psychological sciences.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 6 quizzes in the MT and LT.
In order to assess student performance and practice for the summative assessments, students will:
1. Write 2 mini-essays, one prior to each summative blog post.
2. Six pop quizzes of around 10 items will be given to students over the course of the year to help both the lecturer and students assess their progress. These quizzes will probably be administered via Moodle and will be administered quickly at the beginning of a lecture.
Indicative reading: Primary Text: Gray, P. O., & Bjorklund, D. F. (2014). Psychology (7th ed.): Worth Publishers.
Secondary Text: Henrich, J. (2016). The secret of our success: How culture is driving human evolution, domesticating our species, and making us smarter. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.

Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society of London B: Biological Sciences, 371(1690). doi:10.1098/rstb.2015.0192. Students will be expected to read one additional reading from the primary literature per class. These readings will be provided in the course profile.
Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Other (40%) and other (20%) in the MT and LT.
Students will write two media/blog posts that summarise a key finding in psychology. This will result in more engagement, communication and summarizing of research as well as encouraging them to seek out new findings in the psychological and behavioural science, finding ways to connect these to the real world.
Students will create or edit a Wikipedia or Simple Wikipedia entry on a topic in psychology that is either incorrect, badly described, or missing. This will teach students critical thinking skills, not to take information at face value, and how to communicate research to a smart audience looking for both an overview and details.
The final exam will consist of multiple choice questions plus a short answer section.

The Foundations of Social Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Mangen OLD 2.62 and Dr Isabel Shutes OLD 2.58
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Places on this course are limited to 45 and priority is given to Social Policy students in the first instance. If places remain available once Social Policy students have been accommodated, they will be offered on a first come first served basis to students from outside the department. If you would like to take SA100 as an outside option, please contact the Undergraduate Programme Manager who will be able to advise you on availability (contact details available on the Social Policy web pages).
This course is not available to third year students.
Course content: The course examines the nature of social provision in different fields of social policy and for different groups of people. This work is contextualised by reference to changes in the role of the state and other providers of welfare, and changes in ideas and key concepts.
The first half of the course examines the development and restructuring of the welfare state in historical context; key perspectives on welfare; key concepts, such as human needs and social rights; and the organisation of social welfare provision, including the governance and financing of welfare. The second half of the course extends this learning to examine the nature of social provision in different areas of social policy, such as social security, employment, education, housing, health and social care, and for different groups of people. If focuses on the changing roles and relations between the state, market, voluntary sector, family and individual, and concludes by examining how the welfare state has changed since the 2008 economic crisis and the effects for different social groups.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Additional classes in the reading week (Week 6) to provide support with coursework.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit three pieces of written work (one in MT and two in LT), and to read for and prepare contributions to class discussion each week.

If you would like to take SA104 as an outside option, please contact the Undergraduate Programme Manager who will be able to advise you on availability (contact details available on the Social Policy web pages).
This course is not available to third year students.
Pre-requisites: No prior knowledge of economics is required.
Course content: This course provides an introduction to the economics of social policy and the economics of the income distribution. The course begins by introducing basic economic concepts and principles and discussing their application to different social policy areas, including health care, social care, education and housing. Key concepts include supply, demand and elasticities, externalities and market failure, private insurance and social insurance, and quasi-markets. The course goes on to analyse the distribution of household income and the drivers of poverty and inequality, including unemployment, low wages and wage inequality. It covers concepts of human capital and productivity and looks at a range of policy responses, including minimum wage legislation, trade union policy, government economic management, taxation and the social security system. Throughout, the course emphasises the importance of understanding political goals in assessing the effectiveness or justice of economic and social policies, and seeks to encourage students to draw on both theory and empirical evidence in addressing its core questions. The course is taught without mathematics and is designed to be suitable both for students with no prior knowledge of economics and for those who have taken A level.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Four formative essays will be required during the year, and students will be expected to make at least two presentations to the class.

Research Methods for Social Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eileen Munro OLD 2.33 and Dr Amanda Sheely OLD.2.52
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course aims to give students a comprehensive introduction to methods of social research in social policy.
The design and analysis of social policy research. The nature of social measurement. The concept of statistical inference. Data collection by means of social survey, depth interviews, participant observation and documentary methods. Descriptive and inferential statistics, including bivariate and multivariate techniques. Analysis of data particularly from surveys. The use of computers in data analysis. Ethics and politics of Social Policy Research. Strengths and weaknesses of commonly used research methods. Methods of analysing qualitative data.
Teaching: The course combines two elements:
SA201.2 Research Methods for Social Policy: Professor E Munro
MT Lectures: 10 x 1hr SA201.2. Classes: 10 x 1hr SA201.2.
ST: Revision session 1hr
SA201.1 Data Analysis for Social Policy: Dr A. Sheely
Lectures: 10 x 1hr SA201.1. Classes: 14 x 1hr SA201.1.
MT Lectures: weeks 8, 9, 10, 11 (MT);
LT Lectures: weeks 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7 (LT)
MT Classes: weeks 8, 9, 10, 11 (MT);
LT Classes: weeks 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 (LT)
Formative coursework: For the Research Methods class, students submit an essay by the end of the MT from a list of questions relating to their work on the summative project.
For the Data Analysis class, students will use a computer to analyse data, and will be expected to produce summaries and interpretations of their results. Each week of the course, students will be assigned a formative homework assignment.
Indicative reading: Alan Bryman (2012) Social Research Methods, 4th edition Oxford University Press; Alan Acock (2016) A Gentle Introduction to Stata, 5th edition Stata Press; Charles Wheelan (2014) Naked Statistics: Stripping the Dread from the Data W&W Norton & Company, Inc.
Assessment: Project (50%, 5000 words) in the ST.
Essay (50%, 3000 words) in the LT.
The first assignment asks students to apply their learning from the Michaelmas Term to create a research proposal. This proposal will describe the type of study design, sampling strategy, and data collection method that will be used for the summative coursework due in Lent Term. This proposal will also include a critique of 3 research articles in depth, identifying the methods used, their appropriateness to the particular questions being addressed, the sample and measurements used and the validity of the conclusions reached. The The second assignment is designed to illustrate the whole research process albeit on a small scale. In the Michaelmas Term, you will learn about the research process from having an area of interest, focusing on a specific research question relating to the gender wage gap, and collecting evidence to help you answer that question. In the classes, you will work in small groups to prepare a semi-structured survey instrument that you will each then administer to 4 adults in your life. There will be variation in the specific research question chosen by each small group in relation to the broader issue of the gender wage gap but the instrument will also contain some closed questions common to all the instruments. This will produce both qualitative data and quantitative data. The assignment will include the analysis and discussion of both sets of data.

Health and Social Care Policy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Knapp COW 4.03
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The course covers both the foundations of health and social care policy, and how they impact on our everyday lives. It covers the key policy issues in health and social care faced today in the UK, the USA, and in low- and middle-income countries. Comparative health system performance is also included.
In the first term, students will be introduced to the main dimensions of and challenges facing health and social care systems today. These include the concepts of need and demand for health and social care; how to pay for health and social care (the challenges of health insurance, for example); and how to pay providers in ways that incentivise appropriate responses. We will look at health and behaviour (including 'nudge' efforts); models of reform in the delivery of health and social care; and personal responsibility, choice and risk. Inequalities in health and healthcare will be a feature running through many topics.
In the second term, we will move on to look at a number of specific areas. These will include: mental health policy; child protection and health; the successes and challenges associated with ageing populations; pharmaceuticals policy; prevention and public health; and economic evaluation. There will also be a focus on the issues and challenges of health and social care policy in low- and middle-income country contexts.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: One essay of 1000 words (excluding references).

Introduction to Global Population Change

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone OLD2.56
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is also an option for third year students in social policy and outside the department, where the regulations permit.
Pre-requisites: As a general introduction to Population Studies, it assumes no previous knowledge of the subject.
Course content: The course is concerned with inter-relationships between the population characteristics of a society (fertility, mortality and migration) and their economic and social context. Both the causes of population change and their consequences are examined. The approach of the course is comparative across time and space: it covers population issues across the developed and developing world, and examines trends over time in both regions. The course will address key global debates which include: is population growth sustainable; what is the relationship between population size and available resources; what are the social, biological and economic influences on population growth rates, especially the role of famine, disease and war. What role have family planning programmes in decreasing population size; is ageing a threat. A wide range of topics is covered, including the demographic and health transitions; HIV/AIDS; fertility decline; the changing characteristics of the family; global trends in population ageing and their social and economic consequences for the elderly; theories and trends in migration; urbanisation.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare at least one class presentation per term and complete two mock exams (one in each of LT and ST).
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of each term. Key overview texts include: M Livi-Bacci, A Concise History of World Population; H Jones, Population Geography; E A Wrigley, Population and History; W Lutz, The Future Population of the World.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Assessing Social Progress

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Demonstrated familiarity with research methods to at least the level of SA201 (Research Methods for Social Policy) or equivalent.
Course content: The course aims to facilitate student understanding of key issues in assessing social progress. 'Assessing' is shorthand for developing a critical understanding of the relevant concepts and their policy relevance, practical issues associated with data collection and monitoring, and the policy implications of different findings. 'Social progress' is shorthand for 'are we getting better off'? There are many potential benchmarks that could be used for answering this question: comparisons with the past, with other countries, or with some absolute standards (e.g. meeting some basic needs). And at the personal level, one might compare one's self relative to other people within your 'society'. There are multiple domains that are relevant too: ranging from conventional summary measures such as income to life satisfaction and happiness, employment, health, housing and education. Much information about 'social progress' already incorporated in official statistics (from national and international agencies), and in more specialist academic analysis. But other interpretations of what social progress exist and are not routinely incorporated in existing monitoring exercises, and some say they should be. The course aims to reflect this diversity – to critically analyse both existing approaches and others that have been proposed. The course starts with relatively conventional approaches to assessment including macroeconomic indicators such as GDP and cross-national comparisons, income and work, and then considers newer approaches and related measures. The course also considers progress in several specific life domains. For each of the topics considered, the course addresses a specific question relating to social progress. In providing answers to the question, the course considers, from a critical perspective, relevant analytical approaches, data sources and empirical findings, and also discusses policy implications.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin OLD 2.57 and Dr Timothy Hildebrandt OLD 2.55
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course requires a minimum of 12 students in order for the course to run.
Course content: This course aims to analyse and understand the way social policies deploy sexuality categories in regulating everyday life in developing countries, both in its public and private manifestations Sexuality is a central part of human experience. Institutions created to deal with human life/wellbeing have considered sexuality as one of the reference points from which to regulate social relations. Perceptions on sexuality are formed in the intersection of socio-political, historical processes and everyday practises in particular societies. Particular perceptions of sexuality in turn influence the way people negotiate access to resources to address their well-being. In some central areas of social policy sexuality is used as one of the sorting mechanisms (in addition to gender, race among various other categories) to establish entitlements for resources (social, political and economic). In this regard social policy is both informed by perceptions on sexuality and in turn social policy acts as a mechanism of social reproduction of these perspectives impacting people's lives. And while globally high profile cases and rights abuses related to sexuality are important, a narrow global policy focus on these overlooks how more embedded and diverse social policy practices related to sexuality are impacting people's lives in many developing countries. This course aims to explore sexuality and its importance for social policy for developing countries. It aims to consider social policy and particular interventions in their historical contexts, as a way of unpacking the construction of sexuality in the intersection of colonialism, gender, race, class and international policy frameworks in developing countries. The course also aims to interrogate the relationship between particular social policy prescriptions developed in most industrialized welfare societies and the way some of these are transferred to developing countries. The major concern of the analysis is to bring out the perceptions of sexuality that underwrite these policies and how these interact with existing perceptions of sexualities and their performances (identities, desires and bodily practices) in multiple developing country contexts. These policy areas include, among others, discussions of rights, entitlements, citizenship, same-sex marriage, sexually transmitted disease, HIV/AIDS, family policies, migration/border controls, criminality and employment-related policies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. The lectures for this course 10 X 60 min lecture will be joint lectures with MSc students who are taking SA4K2 as an option course. There will be a designated UG seminar for UG students 10 x 60 mins seminars in LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Statistics in Society

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Fran Tonkiss STC.S205
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course explores how numbers are deployed in social settings, and how they are used in sociology to construct and challenge our understanding of the social world. The first part of the course (taught by Fabien Accominotti) introduces students to the importance of quantification in modern societies, familiarizes them with the main instruments for the collection of quantitative data, and provides them with an overview of the methods used to treat such data in contemporary sociology. We cover both descriptive and explanatory methods, and we reflect on the vision of the social world implicitly associated with each of the methods we encounter. In the second part (taught by Jouni Kuha) students start learning basic descriptive skills of quantitative data analysis, notably how to download large data sets, how to manipulate variables and carry out descriptive statistical analyses with statistical software Stata, and how to present statistical information in tabular and graphical form.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Reading weeks: week 6 MT and week 6 LT.
Formative coursework: One 2000 word essay asking students to reflect on the changing use of quantitative data in social scientific research.
Two practical exercises demonstrating basic knowledge of data processing and descriptive statistical analysis using statistical software.

Political Sociology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer, STC.S114a
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: Political Sociology concerns the way in which political and social factors interact to produce the societies in which we live. This course aims to discuss some central empirical and theoretical questions in the field. The course begins by examining classic comparative debates about the relationship between the development of the state and democracy on the one hand, and the rise of capitalism and liberalism on the other. We will then examine the impact that social cleavages have on parties, elections and other political institutions in a number of different countries. We will examine the strength and political impact of both labour movements and other important social movements. And we will examine why similar countries can develop very different social and economic policies. In addition we will examine some of the founding writings of Marx, Weber and Tocqueville and critically assess the use of political concepts. Throughout the course we will consider some of the main theoretical approaches that are used in the study of political sociology.

Researching London: Methods for Social Research

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ioanna Gouseti STC.S105a
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course will provide students with a first understanding of research design issues and a dynamic introduction to research methods through practical exercises in the context of London's social life.
By the end of the course students will:
- Understand the key role of research design for conducting original empirical social research. In particular, taking into account relevant extant literature, they will develop a research question of their own interest and identify appropriate research method(s) to address it.
- Have engaged with practical research strategies and methods including the design of questionnaires, conducting qualitative interviews, ethnographic observation, and documentary and web based sources in the context of London.
- Have a sense of the urban sociology of London and a first-hand experience of its potential for exploring contemporary social issues.
- Be able to analyse different kinds of data, using quantitative methods, grounded theory, and visual analysis.
- Be able to assess the different methodological strategies employed on the basis of measurement concepts such as reliability, validity and generalizability.
- Understand the ethical issues involved in social research.
- Have developed a research proposal which will inform and strengthen their dissertation design.

Teaching: 25 hours of workshops in the MT. 25 hours of workshops in the LT.
Reading weeks: week 6 MT and week 6 LT.
Formative coursework: There are two pieces of formative assessment which will be marked and on which you will get feedback in the Michaelmas Term (MT).
Indicative reading: A good introductory textbook is Angela Dale and Jennifer Mason, Understanding Social Research: thinking creatively about method (2011): see also A Bryman, Social Research Methods (4th edn 2012). Other useful textbooks are R H Hoyle, M J Harris & C M Judd, Research Methods in Social Relations (7th edn 2002); D A de Vaus, Surveys in Social Research (5th edn 2001).
Assessment: Essay (20%, 1500 words) and presentation (30%) in the LT.
Research proposal (50%) in the ST.
Two hard copies of each assessment, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the submission day. The first assessment, a qualitative interview transcript and 1,500 word essay (20%), is due by the first Thursday of Lent Term. The second assessment, a group presentation (15 slides maximum) based on the agreed group survey (30%), will be carried out in Lent Term. Each group presentation will be marked in class by both the course convenor and the group GTAs, who will then discuss and moderate marks after all the group presentations took place. Marks will take into account the work done by each group in the previous six weeks (questionnaire design, survey data collection and data analysis) as well as the clarity of the presentation itself. The third assessment, a 2,000 word research proposal (50%), is due by the second Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy of each essay is to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day each assessment is due. Attendance at all workshops and submission of all set coursework is required.

The Sociology of Race and Ethnicity

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antonia Dawes STC.S218
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Optional Course for BSc Sociology for 2nd and 3rd years and the Diploma in Sociology.
Course content: The course provides an introduction to theoretical, historical and contemporary debates around race, racism and ethnicity. It firstly explores the main theoretical perspectives which have been used to analyse racial and ethnic relations, in a historical and contemporary framework. It then examines in more detail the areas both theoretical and lived within our contemporary social and political climate where analyses of 'race', racism, culture, belonging and identity are urgently needed, focusing primarily on Britain, Europe and the US. Topics include:

race and ethnicity in historical perspective; race, class and gender multiculturalism; diaspora and hybridity; whiteness; mixed race; race, disease and contamination; race and the senses; race and popular culture; urban multiculture and the street; race, riots and youth culture; community cohesion; Muslim identities; asylum and new migrations; the Far Right and the white working class.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Digital Technology, Speed and Culture

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Judy Wajcman S203
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: This course aims to give students a detailed understanding of sociologically informed approaches to the social studies of science and technology. It will consider how macro theories of post-industrial society (from Bell to Castells) have conceptualised the role of technology in social change. It will then look at the development of STS as a field that highlights the constitutive role of objects and artefacts in social relations. In other words, it will reflect upon sociology's traditional neglect of the social life of things or materiality. These broad themes will then be elaborated substantively. First, by considering the role of technology in reconfiguring time, speed, space and mobility. Second, by considering power relations and social inequalities embedded in digital technologies, such as the Internet and mobile phones. Third, by treating technology as a culture that shapes gender identities, such as those that find expression in the virtuality of cyberspace. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including information and communication technologies, robotics, cyborgs, sex, and weapons.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare one essay per term of 1500 – 2000 words and at least one presentation per term.
Indicative reading: Hackett, E. et al (2008) The Handbook of Science and Technology Studies (MIT Press). MacKenzie, D. and Wajcman J. (1999) The Social Shaping of Technology (MIT Press). Suchman, L. (2008) The Future of the Internet (Allen Lane)
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the ST.
Attendance at all classes and submission of all set coursework is required.
Two hard copies of the assessed essay with submission sheets on each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Wednesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO231 Half Unit
Knowledge, Power, and Social Change

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leon Wansleben STC208
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Course content: The aims of the course are threefold: First, the course will provide an introduction to how key sociological theories reflect upon the nature of knowledge in society; it will thereby strongly connect to other theory courses. Second, the course will explore knowledge and expertise as critical aspects of contemporary society, which contribute to the reproduction, as well as alteration, of social inequalities and relationships of power. Third, the course will provide a forum for thinking about our own roles, as sociologists, outside the university.
By the end of the course, students will feel capable of questioning the 'taken-for-grantedness' of authoritative knowledge and to critically analyse how social actors make knowledge claims . Second, students will be able to examine, evaluate, both in written and oral form, theories and debates within the sociological discourse on knowledge. Thirdly, students will be able to explore knowledge production and dissemination in contemporary society and develop corresponding sociological research projects (case studies) related these issues.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study and 1 essay in the MT.
Indicative reading: Espeland, Wendy N., & Sauder, Michael (2007). Rankings and Reactivity: How Public Measures Recreate Social Worlds. American Journal of Sociology, Vol. 113 No. 1, S. 1-40. Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.
Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Tuesday of Lent Term.An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO232 Half Unit
Sociology of Health and Illness

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carrie Friese STC S213
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: No specific pre-requisites, but this course is only open to second and third year students in Sociology and other programmes. It is not available as a first year option.
Course content: Sociology of Health and Illness explores the ways in which experiences of health and illness are socially organized. We will also ask how the management of health and illness organizes social life. To explore experiences of health and illness, we will look at how specific 'medical disorders' (e.g., ageing, cancer, Alzheimer's disease, asthma, chronic fatigue syndrome, childbearing, menopause, etc.) are 'embodied' in socially patterned ways. Empirical studies of specific disorders will be read, in conjunction with analysis of other kinds of texts (e.g., popular writing, film, performance art, museum exhibits, etc.).
To address how the management of health and illness organizes social life and vice versa, key theories in the sociology of health and illness will be explored. This will include Parsons's sick role; Weberian and feminist understandings of professional dominance; medicalization, demedicalization and biomedicalization; and Foucaultian notions of surveillance, biopolitics and governmentality.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.
Teaching will comprise of a one hour lecture and one hour class each week. A revision session will be held to prepare students for the seen examination.
Students on this course will have a reading week during Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.
The assessed examination is supported by ONE take home, mock examination that is formative. Participation is supported by student's first making ONE comment on the Moodle discussion board in Weeks 2-3 and responding to another student's comment from Weeks 4-5.
Indicative reading: S Nettleton The Sociology of Health and Illness (2006), P Starr, The Social Transformation of American Medicine (1982), A Nelson Body and Soul: The Black Panther Party and the Fight Against Medical Discrimination (2011), M Foucault The Birth of the Clinic: An Archaeology of Medical Perception ([1973] 1994), I Hacking The Social Construction of What? (1999), A Frank, (1997) The Wounded Storyteller: Body, Illness and Ethics (1997), E Martin Bipolar Expeditions: Mania and Depression in American Culture (2007), J Latimer The Gene, The Clinic and the Family (2013), S Kaufman (2015) Ordinary Medicine, Eugene Raikhel and William Garriott (2013) Addiction Trajectories

SO233 Half Unit
Reactionary Radicalism: Populism and Authoritarianism in the 21st Century

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael McQuarrie STC.S217a
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: No specific pre-requisites, but this course is only open to second and third year students in Sociology and other programmes. It is not available as a first year option.
Course content: This half-unit course will take up the emergence of a new brand of populist politics. The course will examine the link between political economic, demographic, and cultural changes and the rise of new varieties of ethnonationalist and anti-systemic populism. It will examine the nature of populism, why it is a prevalent language of political mobilization, and its limitations as a political project. The course will examine the relationship between populism and authoritarianism, populism and racism, populism and classism, populism and technocracy, and populism and neoliberalism. This discussion will be undertaken in the context of an overarching theme of the relationship between new varieties of populism and the economic geography and class structure of neoliberalism with an emphasis on the link between socio-economic transformation and political mobilization. Finally, the course will take up the issue of populism and its relationship to intellectuals and academics with a focus on the problems this creates for research.
Teaching: 25 hours of workshops in the LT.
Course Outline
1. Introduction: what is populism and why has it emerged as such a powerful political force in the early 21st century?
2. Who are the Populists? Voting patterns in the US, France, and Britain and the new economic geography of neoliberalism.
3. Inequality and Politics: The founding problem of capitalist democracies: integration without equality. The various institutional and ideological efforts to cope with this problem. We will focus on the technocratic welfare state, racism, populism, and fascism.
4. The included and the excluded: this class will juxtapose the neoliberal and welfare state eras with particular attention to the shifting logic for valorizing people and places.
5. Race, prejudice, and populism: here we take up the issue of race and difference directly. In general we will assess the hypothesis that populism is actually a new expression of racism in response to the emergence of immigration or the emergence of a more multicultural society.
6. The authoritarian personality: this class will focus on the Frankfurt School hypothesis, trends in authoritarian attitudes, and possible explanations for those trends.
7. From political moderation to political extremism: Here we return to some issues of conceptualization in understanding political motivation and political action with a particular interest in the limits and advantages of a rationalist framework. We examine the question of whether the emergence of extremist politics is because people were extremist all along or because circumstances have made extremist politics more attractive.

8. The Political Economy of Despair: This class will focus on changes in 21st century political economies and the institutional mechanisms that are designed to cope with the negative effects of those changes.
9. Parties and Populism: Here we take up the issue of established political parties and their response with a particular focus on their inability to police the boundaries of electoral politics.
10. The Rust Belt Revolt and its Challenge: This class will focus return to the economic geography of the populist revolt but with a particular focus on its timing and its racially specific composition. We will then turn to contemporary debates about strategies for dealing with it on both the Right and the Left.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to read, and prepare in advance, for each of the workshops and to be working on their summative assignments over the course of the term.
Indicative reading: Karl Polanyi, The Great Transformation. Karl Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte. Daniel Bell, Post-Industrial Society. Ulrich Beck, The Risk Society. Josh Pacewicz, Partisans and Partners. Jake Rosenfeld, What Unions No Longer Do. Kathy Cramer, The Politics of Resentment. Michele Lamont, The Dignity of Working Men
Assessment: Essay (60%, 2500 words) in the ST.
Other (20%) and other (20%) in the LT.
The essay (2,000-2,500 words) (60%) is to be submitted at the beginning of ST.
The other assessments are: 1) A presentation or poster (20%) to be completed over the course of the term, and 2) Essay outline, annotated bibliography, and thesis statement due at the end of LT (20%).
Assessed essay due Wednesday of Week 2 in ST. Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the day of submission. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

The Sociological Dissertation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fran Tonkiss STC.S205
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students undertaking this course need to have completed the first two years of the BSc in Sociology.
Course content: The dissertation takes the form of an independent and extended research project of 10,000 words on a sociological topic of the students' choosing, subject to approval by the Department of Sociology. The topic should be chosen from any area within the discipline of sociology, preferably from an area covered by the BSc in Sociology. The process generally includes reviewing the literature in the chosen area, formulating a viable and sociologically-relevant research problem, collecting and analysing primary and/or secondary data (such as a case study, data set, fieldwork observation, survey results or interviews), and drafting the findings of their investigation into a research project.
Students' work on the dissertation is supervised in small-group and individual tutorials with their Academic Advisor over MT and LT. The Dissertation process is supported by a series of compulsory workshops in the MT and LT which focus on research project design. The workshops cover topics such as identifying a sociological problem for investigation, constructing a bibliography, research ethics, research access, data collection, data analysis, writing up and trouble-shooting.
Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.
Seminars will be structured as follows: 5 x 1.5 hour seminars in the MT. 5 x 1.5-hour seminars in the LT.
In addition, 5 x 1.5-hour small-group tutorials with Academic Advisors in MT. 2 x individual supervisions with Academic Advisors plus drop-in sessions in LT.
Academic Advisors can be expected to offer advice on preliminary reading, research design, data collection and analysis, and on organisation of the dissertation. They can also read and comment on an outline of the dissertation, or on one draft chapter. Academic Advisors are not permitted to read or comment on a final draft of the whole dissertation or any part of it.
Formative coursework: One piece of formative coursework in the MT.
Assessment: Research proposal (10%) in the MT.
Research project (90%) in the ST.
Assessment Particulars:
Two hard copies of the 10,000 word dissertation must be submitted to the Sociology Administration Office, Room S116, by 4.30pm on the second Thursday of ST, with a third copy posted to Moodle by 18:00 on the same day. Accidental loss of data or text on a computer will not be accepted as a reason for non-submission.

Pre-requisites: N/A
Course content: Law and Violence is an intensive introduction to key theoretical texts that can inform a nuanced understanding of the controversial yet crucial nexus between law and violence. What is the relationship between law and violence? Are they mutually exclusive forms of human action? Is it a paradox that law employs violence in claiming to prevent or circumscribe the latter? Is it a contradiction that violence is often the means to establish or change the law? We will consider these questions within historical contexts of the nation-state and the global legal order. The case of refugees—often caught "outside" the law—will also be considered.
Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.
This course requires the practice of close reading. We will not read in large quantities. However, students are expected to engage with the assigned texts deeply, paying special attention to the presuppositions of the authors and the structures of their argumentation, identifying the weaknesses and the strengths of their theoretical constructions. By the end of the course, students are expected to make the texts speak with and against each other. Students in this course will have a reading week in week 6.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.
Essay abstract (max 800 words) to be submitted in class in week 7. Students will get detailed feedback on their abstracts.

Assessment: Essay (90%, 4000 words) in the LT.
Class participation (10%) in the MT.
Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Tuesday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO312 Half Unit
Work, Inequality and Society

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick McGovern STC.S313
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: No specific pre-requisites, but this course is only open to 2nd and 3rd year students in Sociology and other programmes. It is not available as a 1st year option.
Course content: Sociological perspectives on cross-national differences in employment and social inequality.
Theoretical perspectives on inequality; gender in the labour market; occupational segregation; the 'glass ceiling';; immigrant employment; race, ethnicity and discrimination; social class at work; class reproduction in elite firms; the rise of wage inequality; and income inequality in the mass media.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.
Formative coursework: 1,500 word essay due in Week 8 of MT.
Indicative reading: Tilly, C. & C. Tilly (1998) Work Under Capitalism; Grint, K. (2005) T*he Sociology of Work* (3rd ed.);D. Grusky, (2014) (4th ed) Social Stratification;Hakim, C. Payne (ed) (2013) Social Divisions,L. Platt (2011) Understanding Inequalities
Further reading will be detailed in the course syllabus.
Assessment:
Essay (75%, 3000 words) in the LT.
Class Presentation (10%) and Online Blog (15%) in the MT.
Assessed essay due Wednesday of Week 1 in LT. Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the day of submission. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO313 Half Unit
Material Culture and Everyday Life

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Don Slater S310
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course is available as an option course to second and third year students on the BSc in Sociology, and as an outside option for students in other departments.
Pre-requisites: No specific pre-requisites, but this course is only available to second and third year students in Sociology and other programmes. It is not available as a first year option.
Course content: The course focuses on how 'things' enter into and mediate everyday social relations and practices. Students will consider all aspects of the social life of things, from design and production through use, consumption and everyday practices. This will allow them to address a range of long-standing theoretical and political concerns within sociology such as the role of objects and materiality in social life; social organizations of objects and exchange, such as consumer culture; design, technology and innovation; and the socio-political status of 'everyday life' itself. At the same time, there will be a strong methodological emphasis: not just how do we study objects in everyday life, but how might such studies impact on social research more generally.
The course will rely heavily on case studies. After mapping out central traditions in material culture studies, the course will focus on 2-3 strategically chosen objects to explore analytical and methodological issues (eg, mobile phones, water, bicycles, food, supermarkets, etc). Cross-cultural differences will be raised throughout but at least one of the cases will be predominantly focused on major global difference.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.
1,500 word essay, due after reading week, in which students are asked to analyse an object from the standpoint of one of the theoretical perspectives introduced in the course. They will additionally submit a short research outline (probably 1-2 A4 sides) on which they can base their work towards the summative assessment.
Indicative reading: Drazin, A. & Küchler, S. (eds.) (2015) The social life of materials: Studies in materials and society. Bloomsbury Academic, London. Gunn, W., Otto, T. & Smith, R. C. Watson (eds.) (2007) The Design of Everyday Life. Oxford: Berg.
Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.
3,000 word research report (100%, due in ST) on an object of the student's choosing in which they are asked to address a clear list of considerations such as design, material properties, social practices and uses, methodological questions and so on.
Two hard copies of the research report, with submission sheets attached to each, to be submitted to the Administration Office, STC S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

ST102
Elementary Statistical Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course cannot be taken with ST107 Quantitative Methods (Statistics) or ST108 Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.
Pre-requisites: A-level Mathematics.
No previous knowledge of statistics is assumed.
Course content: The course provides a precise and accurate treatment of introductory probability theory, statistical ideas, methods and techniques. Students will also be exposed to the Minitab statistical package. Topics covered are data visualisation and descriptive statistics, probability theory, random variables, common distributions of random variables, multivariate random variables, sampling distributions of statistics, point estimation, interval estimation, hypothesis testing, analysis of variance (ANOVA), linear regression, nonparametric tests, goodness-of-fit and independence tests.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 22 hours of lectures, 11 hours of classes and 11 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students will finish off new material or revise in week 11.
Formative coursework: Weekly exercises will be set and students are expected to submit solutions to their class teacher each week for feedback.
Indicative reading: All course materials are made available via Moodle, including notes to accompany the lectures, but this can be supplemented with additional background reading. The recommended supplementary text is:
Larsen R.J. and M.L. Marx (2011) An Introduction to Mathematical Statistics and Its Applications (fifth edition), Prentice-Hall (earlier editions are also fine).
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 10 minutes) in the LT week 0.

ST107 Half Unit
Quantitative Methods (Statistics)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
This course cannot be taken with ST102 Elementary Statistical Theory or ST108 Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.
Pre-requisites: A-level Mathematics.
Course content: The elementary statistical tools necessary for further study in management and economics with an emphasis on the applicability of the methods to management and economic problems. Topics covered are data visualisation and descriptive statistics, probability theory, discrete probability distributions, continuous probability distributions, sampling distributions of statistics, point estimation, interval estimation, hypothesis testing, contingency tables and the chi-squared test, correlation and linear regression.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Students will finish off new material or revise in week 11.
Formative coursework: Weekly exercises will be set and students are expected to submit solutions to their class teacher each week for feedback.
Indicative reading: All course materials are made available via Moodle, including notes to accompany the lectures, but this can be supplemented with additional background reading. The recommended supplementary text is:
Newbold, P., W.L. Carlson and B.M. Thorne (2012) Statistics for Business and Economics. (Eighth edition), Pearson (earlier editions are also fine).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST108
Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Cron COL.2.04 and Dr Wicher Bergsma COL.6.06
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
The course is designed for students without a strong background in Mathematics, e.g. without A level Mathematics, and is suitable for students who wish to learn basic statistical methods for analysing social science data. This course cannot be taken with ST102 Elementary Statistical Theory or ST107 Quantitative Methods (Statistics).

Pre-requisites: A grade B in GCSE Mathematics or equivalent. No background in statistics is required.
Course content: A basic foundation in elementary statistical methods, theory and statistical reasoning. Basic use of computers to analyse data. Probability, random variable theory and distributions. Normal distribution, sampling concepts and sampling distributions. Estimation, significance tests and confidence intervals, one and two-sample methods. Test for proportions, simple contingency tables. Linear regression, correlation. Basic decision theory.
Teaching: 14 hours of lectures, 8 hours of classes and 2 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 2 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.
Students will have a two hour computer workshop in week 6 of MT, and a further two hour computer workshop in week 9 of LT.
Indicative reading: Notes will be provided and form the basic reading material. Pointers will be given to further reading.
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.
Continuous assessment (20%) in the MT and LT.
At least a pass mark is required for both assessment components (i.e., the exam and the continuous assessment)

ST201 Half Unit
Statistical Models and Data Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Cron (COL2.04)
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Also available to students who have studied statistics and mathematics to the level of MA107/ST107 Quantitative Methods or ST108 Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.
Course content: A second course in statistics with an emphasis on problems of practical importance and statistical analysis using computers. Principles of modelling: data preparation, mathematical and statistical models, linear and non-linear models. Simple linear regression. Multiple regression: assumptions, transformations, diagnostics, model selection. Logistic regression: odds ratios and likelihood. The course will conclude with a brief introduction to time series.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.
Students will be given their assessed project to start on in week 6 which is due in at the end of LT.
Formative coursework: Moodle quizzes and a quantitative research project.
Indicative reading: Baddeley & Barrowclough (2009), Running Regressions: A Practical Guide to Quantitative Research in Dougherty (2011) Introduction to Econometrics; Economics, Finance and Development Studies; Fox (2016) Applied Regression Analysis and Generalized Linear Models; Diaz et al (2014), OpenIntro Statistics.
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Coursework (20%) in the LT.

ST202
Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Miltiadis Mavrakakis-Vassilakis
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) and Mathematical Methods (MA100). Students who have not taken these courses should contact Dr Mavrakakis.
Course content: The course covers the probability, distribution theory and statistical inference needed for third year courses in statistics and econometrics.
Michaelmas term: Events and their probabilities. Random variables. Discrete and continuous distributions. Moments, moment generating functions and cumulant generating functions. Joint distributions and joint moments. Marginal and conditional densities. Independence, covariance and correlation. Sums of random variables and compounding. Multinomial and bivariate normal distributions. Law of large numbers and central limit theorem.
Lent term: Functions of random variables. Sampling distributions. Criteria of estimation: consistency, unbiasedness, efficiency, minimum variance. Sufficiency. Maximum likelihood estimation. Confidence intervals. Tests of simple hypotheses. Likelihood ratio tests. Wald tests, score tests.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of seminars and 10 hours of help sessions in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of help sessions in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.
Week 6 in both terms will be used for class tests.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 pieces of coursework in the MT and LT.
Indicative reading: G C Casella & R L Berger, Statistical Inference (primary reading); R Bartoszynski & M Niewiadomska-Bugaj, Probability and Statistical Inference (stresses comprehension of concepts rather than mathematics, supplementary reading only); J Jacod & P Protter, Probability Essentials (for further reading, a more advanced text on probability, using measure-theoretic concepts and tools, still very accessible).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST205 Half Unit
Sample Surveys and Experiments

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Tzougas
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
For students who have studied mathematics and statistics to the level of MA107/ST107 Quantitative Methods or SA201 Research Methods for Social Policy.
Course content: Sampling methods for social surveys. Survey design and estimation. Nonresponse and measurement error. Design of experiments and observational studies.
Teaching: 22 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 2 hours of workshops in the MT.
Formative coursework: Weekly exercises and group presentations.
Indicative reading: S L Lohr, Sampling: Design and Analysis. (2nd Ed. 2010). F J Fowler, Survey Research Methods (4th Ed. 2009)
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Coursework (20%) in the MT.

ST206 Half Unit
Probability and Distribution Theory

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Miltiadis Mavrakakis-Vassilakis
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) and Mathematical Methods (MA100).
Course content: The course covers the probability and distribution theory needed for third year courses in statistics and econometrics.:
Events and their probabilities. Random variables. Discrete and continuous distributions. Moments, moment generating functions and cumulant generating functions. Joint distributions and joint moments. Marginal and conditional densities. Independence, covariance and correlation. Sums of random variables and compounding. Multinomial and bivariate normal distributions. Law of large numbers and central limit theorem.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 pieces of coursework which will consist of written exercises aimed at practising calculations and understanding of theory.
A formative in class exam-style assessment will be done in Week 6.
Indicative reading: G C Casella & R L Berger, Statistical Inference (primary reading); R Bartoszynski & M Niewiadomska-Bugaj, Probability and Statistical Inference (stresses comprehension of concepts rather than mathematics, complimentary reading only); J Jacod & P Protter, Probability Essentials (for further reading, a more advanced text on probability, using measure theoretic concepts and tools, still very accessible).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST211 Half Unit
Applied Regression

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Cron (COL2.04)
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.
Specifically the course is available to Accounting and Finance students who have taken ST102.
Pre-requisites: ST102
Course content: Tabulation, Graphical representation, Regression, Detection of outliers, Model diagnostics, Analysis of Variance.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
Students will be given their assessed project to start on in week 6 which is due in at the beginning of ST.
Formative coursework: Regular Moodle quizzes. Regular take home exercises.
Indicative reading:
1. Neter, J., Kutner, M., Nachtsheim, C. and Wasserman, W. Applied Linear Statistical Models, McGraw-Hill, Fourth Edition. (2004).
2. Abraham, B. Ledolter, J. Introduction to Regression Modelling, Thomson Brooks Cole. (2006).
3. S. Weisberg Applied Linear Regression, Wiley, 3rd edition. (2005) (intermediate).
4. Fox (2016) Applied Regression Analysis and Generalized Linear Models.
5. Dougherty (2011) Introduction to Econometrics.
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period. Project (50%) in the ST.

ST213 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Introduction to Pricing, Hedging and Optimization

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pauline Barrieu
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: MA203 Real Analysis. Must be taken with ST202 Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference.
Course content: This course introduces the concepts of valuation, hedging and portfolio selection in a discrete-time environment with full technicalities, and then treats continuous-time markets in a slightly more heuristic fashion. It covers the following topics:
- Martingale theory in discrete time.
- The binomial model; pricing and hedging. Trinomial model and incompleteness, arbitrage-free price intervals.
- General discrete-time models and the FTAP.
- Passage to continuous-time Black & Scholes model; formal Ito calculus.
- Option-pricing with PDE methods, the Black & Scholes formula and Greeks; connections with risk-neutral measure, Feynman-Kac
- Portfolio optimisation (Merton's problem) in the standard Black & Scholes market

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 problem sets in the LT.
Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided.
Stochastic Calculus for Finance I: The Binomial Asset Pricing Model, by Steven Shreve, Springer
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

ST226 Half Unit
Actuarial Investigations: Financial

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gelly Mitrodima COL.7.04
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Course content: The application of compound interest techniques to financial transactions. Describing how to use a generalised cash-flow model to describe financial transactions such as a zero coupon bond, a fixed interest security, an index-linked security, cash on deposit, an equity, an interest only loan, a repayment loan, an annuity certain and others. The time value of money using the concepts of compound interest and discounting. Accumulation of payments and present value of future payments. Expressing interest rates or discount rates in terms of different time periods. Real and money interest rates .The calculation of the present value and the accumulated value of a stream of equal or unequal payments using specified rates of interest and the net present value at a real (possibly variable) rate of interest, assuming a constant rate of inflation. Compound interest rate functions; definitions and use. Equations of value with certain and uncertain payments and receipts; conditions for existence of solution. Describe how a loan may be repaid by regular instalments of interest and capital; flat rates and annual effective rates. Calculation of a schedule of repayments under a loan and identification of the interest and capital components of annuity payments where the annuity is used to repay a loan for the case where annuity payments are made once per effective time period or p times per effective time period and identify the capital outstanding at any time. Discounted cash flow techniques and their use in investment project appraisal; internal rate of return, discounted payback period, money-weighted rate of return, time-weighted rate of return, linked internal rate of return. The investment and risk characteristics of fixed-interest Government borrowings, fixed-interest borrowing by other bodies, shares and other equity-type finance derivatives. The analysis of compound interest rate problems; the present value of payments from a fixed interest security where the coupon rate is constant and the security is redeemed in one instalment, upper and lower bounds for the present value of a fixed interest security that is redeemable on a single date within a given range at the option of the borrower, the running yield and the redemption yield from a fixed interest security, the present value or yield from an ordinary share and a property, given simple (but not necessarily constant) assumptions about the growth of dividends and rents, the solution of the equation of value for the real rate of interest implied by the equation in the presence of specified inflationary growth, the present value or real yield from an index-linked bond, the price of (or yield from) a fixed interest security where the investor is subject to deduction of income tax on coupon payments and redemption payments are subject to the deduction of capital gains tax.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to give written answers to a number of problem sets.
Indicative reading: J J McCutcheon & W J Scott, An Introduction to the Mathematics of Finance, Heinemann; Institute of Actuaries, Formulae and Tables for Actuarial Examinations. Core reading notes obtainable from the Institute of Actuaries.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the LT week 0.

ST227 Half Unit
Survival Models

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Konstantinos Kardaras COL 6.07
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Course content: An introduction to stochastic processes with emphasis on life history analysis and actuarial applications. Principles of modelling; model selection, calibration, and testing; Stochastic processes and their classification into different types by time space, state space, and distributional properties; construction of stochastic processes from finite-dimensional distributions, processes with independent increments, Poisson processes and renewal processes and their applications in general insurance and risk theory, Markov processes, Markov chains and their applications in life insurance and general insurance, extensions to more general intensity-driven processes, counting processes, semi-Markov processes, stationary distributions. Determining transition probabilities and other conditional probabilities and expected values; Integral expressions, Kolmogorov differential equations, numerical solutions, simulation techniques. Survival models - the random life length approach and the Markov chain approach; survival function, conditional survival function, mortality intensity, some commonly used mortality laws. Statistical inference for life history data; Maximum likelihood estimation for parametric models, non-parametric methods (Kaplan-Meier and Nelson-Aalen), regression models for intensities including the semi-parametric Cox model and partial likelihood estimation; Various forms of censoring; The technique of occurrence-exposure rates and analytic graduation; Impact of the censoring scheme on the distribution of the estimators; Confidence regions and hypothesis testing.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.
Students on this course will have a reading week in week 6 where they will be given review exercises to work on based on the first 5 weeks of the course.
Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to two sets of problems.
Indicative reading: S Ross, Stochastic Processes; R Norberg, Risk and Stochastics in Life Insurance; The Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT4. For full details of the syllabus of CT4, see http://stats.lse.ac.uk/angelos/guides/2004_CT4.pdf.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST300 Half Unit
Regression and Generalised Linear Models

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Xinghao Qiao
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed:
EITHER Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) OR Probability and Distribution Theory (ST206)
AND Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Course content: A solid coverage of the most important parts of the theory and application of regression models, generalised linear models and the analysis of variance. Analysis of variance models; factors, interactions, confounding. Multiple regression and regression diagnostics. Generalised linear models; the exponential family, the linear predictor, link functions, analysis of deviance, parameter estimation, deviance residuals. Model choice, fitting and validation. The use of a statistics package will be an integral part of the course. The computer workshops revise the theory and show how it can be applied to real datasets.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Week 6 reading week in MT will be for revision of taught materials, while week 6 reading week in LT will be for your project completion.
Indicative reading: D C Montgomery, E A Peck & G G Vining, Introduction to Linear Regression Analysis; D C Montgomery, Design and Analysis of Experiments; A J Dobson, An Introduction to Generalised Linear Models; P McCullagh & J A Nelder, Generalized Linear Models; A C Atkinson, Plots, Transformations and Regression; A C Atkinson & M Riani, Robust Diagnostic Regression Analysis; JJ Faraway, Linear Models with R; JJ Faraway, Extending the linear Model with R. Related items from the Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT6. For full details of the syllabus of CT6, see http://stats.lse.ac.uk/angelos/guides/2004_CT6.pdf.
Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (15%) in the LT.

ST301 Half Unit
Actuarial Mathematics (Life)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angelos Dassios COL 6.14
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed:
EITHER Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) OR Probability and Distribution Theory (ST206)
AND Survival Models (ST227).
Course content: Single life mortality models, assurance and annuity contracts and their actuarial notation, computation of their present values and variances; relations among the present values of the various contracts.
The equivalence principle: computation of net premiums for the main assurance policies.
Prospective and retrospective reserves, Thiele's differential equation as the main tool for the computation of reserves.
Expenses: gross premium and gross reserves. Selection effect and how it affects mortality tables.
Multi-life assurance contracts: joint life and last survival life, computation of premiums and reserves for the main two-lives contracts.
Multi-states mortality models: basic notions of continuous-time Markov chains, Kolmogorov backward and forward equations, application to multiple decrements and disability models, computation of transition intensities.
Thiele differential equation for multi-states models, computation and analysis of reserves for main multi-state policies.
With-profit policies, unit-linked assurance policies, pensions.
Interplay between assurance and finance: embedded options, market consistent actuarial valuation.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 will be a reading week.
Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to one set of problems.
Indicative reading: R Norberg, Basic Life Insurance Mathematics; The Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT5. Dickson, Hardy, Waters, 'Actuarial Mathematics for Life Contingent Risks'. Wutrich, Buhlmann, Furrer, 'Market Consistent Actuarial Valuation'
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST302 Half Unit
Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umut Cetin COL.6.08
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science and BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) or Probability and Distribution Theory (ST206).
Course content: A second course in stochastic processes and applications to insurance. Markov chains (discrete and continuous time), processes with jumps; Brownian motion and diffusions; Martingales; stochastic calculus; applications in insurance and finance. Content: Stochastic processes in discrete and continuous time; Markov chains: Markov property, Chapman-Kolmogorov equation, classification of states, stationary distribution, examples of infinite state space; filtrations and conditional expectation; discrete time martingales: martingale property, basic examples, exponential martingales, stopping theorem, applications to random walks; Poisson processes: counting processes, definition as counting process with independent and stationary increments, compensated Poisson process as martingale, distribution of number of events in a given time interval as well as inter-event times, compound Poisson process, application to ruin problem for the classical risk process via Gerber's martingale approach; Markov processes: Kolmogorov equations, solution of those in simple cases, stochastic semigroups, birth and death chains, health/sickness models, stationary distribution; Brownian motion: definition and basic properties, martingales related to Brownian motion, reflection principle, Ito-integral, Ito's formula with simple applications, linear stochastic differential equations for geometric Brownian motion and the Ornstein-Uhlenbeck process, first approach to change of measure techniques, application to Black-Scholes model. The items in the course content that also appear in the content of ST227 are covered here at greater depth. However, ST227 is not a pre-requisite for this course.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Week 6 will be a reading week left free for students to revise by themselves.
Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to two sets of problems.
Indicative reading: R Durrett, Essentials of Stochastic Processes; T Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus with Finance in View; Institute of Actuaries core reading notes.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the LT week 0.

ST303 Half Unit
Stochastic Simulation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angelos Dassios COL6.14
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
As numbers might need to be capped if it proves too popular, students from the Statistics and Mathematics departments should be given priority. Given the prerequisites, it is unlikely we will get many students from other departments anyway.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed:
EITHER Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202)
OR Probability and Distribution Theory (ST206)
AND Stochastic Processes (ST302).
While the course ST306 is not a formal pre-requisite some examples from this course will be used. Students that have not taken ST306 might have to do a bit of extra reading to familiarise themselves with them.
Course content: An introduction to using R for stochastic simulation as well as methods of simulating random variables, complicated quantities involving several random variables and paths of stochastic processes. Applications will focus on examples from insurance and finance.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.
- Introduction to R with an emphasis on stochastic simulation.
- Monte-Carlo integration.
- Generating continuous random variables; inverse distribution function method.
- Generating continuous random variables; acceptance rejection method.
- Generating continuous random variables; sums of random variables.
- Generating continuous random variables; other methods. Normal and Inverse Gaussian distributions.
- Generating discrete random variables.
- Generating the paths of stochastic processes; Insurance loss process; Brownian motion; Ornstein-Uhlenbeck process.

• Various applications in insurance and finance.
There will be a Q&A session on practical issues in week 11.
Formative coursework: Weekly exercises usually involving computing.
Indicative reading:
• Introducing Monte Carlo methods with R (main reference), by G. Robert and G. Casella.
Useful reading:
• Asmussen
• Glasserman
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (25%) in the LT.
Project (25%) in the ST.

ST304 Half Unit
Time Series and Forecasting

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Barigozzi COL.7.11
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: 2nd year statistics and probability
Course content: The course introduces the student to the statistical analysis of time series data and simple models. What time series analysis can be useful for; autocorrelation; stationarity, trend removal and seasonal adjustment, basic time series models; AR, MA, ARMA; invertibility; spectral analysis; estimation; forecasting; introduction to financial time series and the GARCH models; unit root processes.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
There will be a reading week in week 6.
Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.
Indicative reading: Brockwell & Davis, Introduction to Time Series and Forecasting; Brockwell & Davis, Time Series: Theory and Methods. C Chatfield, The Analysis of Time Series.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST306 Half Unit
Actuarial Mathematics (General)

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luciano Campi
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) and Stochastic Processes (ST302).
Course content: An introduction to actuarial work in non-life insurance. Decision theory concepts: game theory, optimum strategies, decision functions, risk functions, the minimax criterion and the Bayes criterion. Loss distributions with and without limits and risk-sharing arrangements; suitable, moments and moment generating functions, the gamma, exponential, Pareto, generalised Pareto, normal, lognormal, Weibull, Burr and other distributions suitable for modelling individual and aggregate losses; statistical inference. Risk models involving frequency and severity distributions; the basic short-term contracts, moments, moment generating functions and other properties of compound distributions. Reinsurance treaties; proportional, excess of loss, stop-loss, deriving the distribution, moments, moment generating functions and other properties of the losses to the insurer and reinsurer under all the models above. Ruin theory for continuous and discrete models. Fundamental concepts of Bayesian statistics; Bayes theorem, prior distributions, posterior distributions, conjugate prior distributions, loss functions, Bayesian estimators. Credibility theory; Bayesian models. Experience rating models and applications. Claims reserving: run-off triangles. Monte-Carlo simulation and applications in insurance.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
There will be a reading week and a take home mock exam in week 6.
Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to one set of problems. There will also be a mock exam during week 6.
Indicative reading: Notes are given out in the lectures. The Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT6.
For full details of the syllabus of CT6, see:
http://stats.lse.ac.uk/angelos/guides/2004_CT6.pdf.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the LT week 0.

ST307 Half Unit
Aspects of Market Research

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Probability and statistics to the level of ST107.
Course content: The main ideas and applications of market research techniques. Topics covered are introduction to market research, defining the market research problem, research design, internal secondary data and the use of databases, qualitative research: focus group discussions, projective techniques, survey and quantitative observation techniques, measurement and scaling: fundamentals, comparative and non-comparative scaling, questionnaire design, sampling: design and procedures, final and initial sample size determination, cross-tabulation and hypothesis testing, analysis of variance and covariance, correlation and regression, and discriminant analysis.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Lectures will run in weeks 1-10 and classes in weeks 2-11.
Formative coursework: Students are given weekly exercises to work on for discussion in class.
Indicative reading: Malhotra, N.K., D.F. Birks and P.A. Wills (2012) Marketing Research: An Applied Research (Fourth edition), Pearson (earlier editions are also fine)
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST308 Half Unit
Bayesian Inference

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wai-Fung Lam COL 6.09
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102). ST202 is also recommended.
Course content: Statistical decision theory: risk, decision rules, loss and utility functions, Bayesian expected loss, Frequentist risk. Bayesian Analysis: Bayes theorem, prior, posterior and predictive distributions, conjugate models (Normal-Normal, Poisson-Gamma, Beta-Binomial), Bayesian point estimation, credible intervals and hypothesis testing, Bayes factors and model selection. Comparison with Frequentist approaches.
Implementation: Asymptotic approximations (Laplace approximation, Monte Carlo methods, stochastic simulation), Markov Chain Monte Carlo (MCMC) simulation (Gibbs sampler, Metropolis-Hastings algorithm). Computer tools (R, WinBUGS).
Illustration via applications in Regression (Linear, ANOVA, Multiple, Generalized Linear Models), Hierarchical/ Multilevel Models and Time Series.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
There will be no reading week in week 6, but there will be no lectures and classes in week 11.
Formative coursework: Optional problem sets and computer exercises.
Indicative reading: P.M. Lee, Bayesian Statistics. An introduction. J.O. Berger, Statistical Decision Theory and Bayesian Analysis. D. Gamerman, H. F. Lopes, Markov Chain Monte Carlo: Stochastic Simulation for Bayesian Inference. A. Gelman, Bayesian data analysis.
Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (20%) in the ST.

ST312 Half Unit
Applied Statistics Project

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wicher Bergsma COL.6.06
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).
Course content: Students will produce a project involving a critical investigation and collation of statistical data on a topic of their own interest.
Teaching: 9 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the MT. 7 hours of workshops in the ST.
Students on this course will have a research week in week 6 where they can look up data sources for their assessed project.
Formative coursework: Oral presentation at the end of MT.
Indicative reading: ukdataservice.ac.uk, www.google.com/publicdata, data.worldbank.org
Assessment: Project (90%) and presentation (10%) in the ST.

ST326 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Financial Statistics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pauline Barrieu COL.6.03
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: ST202 Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference.
Course content: The course covers key statistical methods and data analytic techniques most relevant to finance. Hands-on experience in analysing financial data in the "R" environment is an essential part of the course. The course includes a selection of the following topics: obtaining financial data, low- and high-frequency financial time series, ARCH-type models for low-frequency volatilities and their simple alternatives, Markowitz portfolio theory and the Capital Asset Pricing Model, statistics and machine learning in financial forecasting, Value at Risk, simple trading strategies, statistics of fixed income finance, derivative instruments from the statistical viewpoint.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 problem sets in the MT.
Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided
Lai, T.L. And Xing H. (2008) Statistical Models and Methods for Financial Markets. Springer. Tsay, R. S. (2005) Analysis of Financial Time Series. Wiley. Ruppert, D. (2004) Statistics and Finance – an introduction. Springer. Fan, Yao (2003) Nonlinear Time Series. Hastie, Tibshirani, Friedman (2009) The Elements of Statistical Learning. Haerdle, Simar (2007) Applied Multivariate Statistical Analysis.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST327
Market Research: An Integrated Approach

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09 and Mr Karsten Shaw
Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed one of the following: Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102), Statistics for Management Sciences (ST203), Econometrics: Theory and Applications (MG205), Analytical Methods for Management (MG202), or equivalent. Not to be taken with ST307.
Course content: The main ideas and applications of market research techniques. ST327.1 Topics covered are introduction to market research, defining the market research problem, research design, internal secondary data and the use of databases, qualitative research: focus group discussions, projective techniques, survey and quantitative observation techniques, measurement and scaling: fundamentals, comparative and non-comparative scaling, questionnaire design, sampling: design and procedures, final and initial sample size determination, cross-tabulation and hypothesis testing, analysis of variance and covariance, correlation and regression, discriminant analysis, factor analysis, cluster analysis and conjoint analysis. ST327.2 Case Studies: Students use the information and techniques gained from ST327.1 to carry out a co-operative Market Research Case Study. Individual write up of the Case Study forms part of the assessment.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 6 hours of lectures in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.
Lectures will run in weeks 1-10 and classes in weeks 2-11.
Formative coursework: Students are given weekly exercises to work on for discussion in class
Indicative reading: Malhotra, N.K., D.F. Birks and P.A. Wills (2012) Marketing Research: An Applied Research (Fourth edition), Pearson (earlier editions are also fine)
Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Coursework (25%) in the ST.
Presentation (15%) in the LT.

The assessed Case Study work is split into two parts; a group presentation and an individual piece of coursework.

ST330
Stochastic and Actuarial Methods in Finance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pauline Barrieu COL 6.03 and Dr Erik Baurdoux COL 6.04
Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed:
EITHER Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) OR Probability and Distribution Theory (ST206)
AND Stochastic Processes (ST302).
Course content: Applications of stochastic processes and actuarial models in finance. Utility theory. Stochastic dominance and portfolio selection. Measures of investment risk. Mean-variance portfolio theory. Single and multifactor models. The Capital Asset Pricing Model. The efficient market hypothesis. Stochastic models for security prices and estimating their parameters. Option pricing: general framework in discrete and continuous time, the Black-Scholes analysis and numerical procedures (binomial models and Cox-Ross-Rubinstein models). The term structure of interest rates: the Vasicek, the Cox-Ingersoll-Ross and other models. Introduction to credit risk.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Students will work on and submit formative coursework towards the end of MT and a second set of formative coursework towards the end of LT. Feedback and solutions will be provided
Formative coursework: Two sets of hand-in exercises will also be given during the year.
Indicative reading: N H Bingham & R Kiesel, Risk Neutral Valuation; A Cerny, Mathematical Techniques in Finance: Tools for Incomplete Markets; J Hull, Options, Futures & Other Derivatives; R Jarrow & S Turnbull, Derivative Securities; D Luenberger, Investment Science; Institute of Actuaries core reading notes, Subject CT8.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MSc in China in Comparative Perspective

Programme code: TMCHCP
Department: Anthropology
This information is for the 2017/18 session.

Full-year programme. Students must take one compulsory course, select optional courses to the value of two units, and write a dissertation, as shown below. Attendance at seminars and at non-assessed tutorials is compulsory.

Students intending to use this degree to convert to a discipline in which they hope to qualify to do a research degree, should choose all their options (Papers 2 and 3) in that discipline. At least one option should be a general introduction to that discipline (e.g. Paper 2 courses) and others can be found on the departmental website the student is interested in.

Otherwise students select courses from Paper 3 (these courses expect students from this MSc) or they can choose other options not listed below. In either case, the student must email the teacher responsible for the course, backing up their request to join it.

MSc in Economics (Two Year Programme)

Programme code: TMECT
Department: Economics
For all first and second year students in 2017/18.

Students without a strong background in economics are required to take the MSc programme over two years. The first year of the programme is governed by the 'Regulations for Diplomas'; students who successfully complete the examinations at the end of the first year will be awarded a Diploma in Economics. In order to progress to the second year, which is governed by the 'Regulations for Taught Master's Degrees', students must attain or exceed the progression threshold for each of the four courses they have taken. The progression threshold is 60% for courses EC201, EC210, EC220, and MA100, while the progression threshold is 55% in courses EC202, EC221, MA212 and other advanced MAXXX options. The Sub-Board of Examiners may, at its discretion, consider for progression candidates who fall marginally short of this requirement. However, students gaining the Diploma in a re-sit attempt are not eligible for progression onto the MSc, nor are students entitled to re-sit first year examinations already passed in order to achieve the progression standard.

Notes: * With the approval of the Programme Director, students who have already completed the equivalent of EC411 in their prior studies may be permitted to take EC413 Macroeconomics.
 This course is not for credit and can be taken in addition to courses to the value of one full unit selected from Paper 4.
Students may, with the approval of the Programme Director, Associate Programme Director and relevant Course Leaders, take half-units in Macroeconomics and Micreconomics, instead of the full unit EC411, Microeconomics. Students would be required to complete the EC400 introductory course, Maths for Macroeconomics, and must meet the relevant pre-requisites for the Macroeconomics half unit.
 This element is not for credit, but is a requirement for students on the Work Placement Pathway and must be taken in addition to courses to the value of two full units selected from Papers 3 & 4. Successful completion of FM411 is a requirement for students to be eligible for the award of the degree.

The Bologna Process facilitates comparability and compatibility between higher education systems across the European Higher Education Area. Some of the School's taught master's programmes are nine or ten months in duration. If you wish to proceed from these programmes to higher study in EHEA countries other than the UK, you should be aware that their recognition for such purposes is not guaranteed, due to the way in which ECTS credits are calculated.

MSc in Finance and Private Equity

Programme code: TMFIPE
TMFIPEW (Work Placement Pathway)
Department: Finance
This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Academic-year (10 month) programme (TMFIPE). Students must take three compulsory courses (FM410 Private Equity includes a dissertation) and optional courses to the value of 1.5 units. Admitted students are required to attend the Quantitative Methods September course. The dissertation must be submitted by the third week in June.
Students who choose to transfer to the Work Placement Pathway must undertake a work placement and assessment in addition to the courses listed above. Transferring to the Work Placement Pathway extends the duration of the programme to 12 months. Students have the option to transfer to the Work Placement Pathway upon receipt of an offer to undertake an internship placement, which must be approved by the Department. Students on this pathway are required to undertake a full-time internship or work placement during the summer and to submit an essay of 2000 words following the placement (see FM411 for details). The essay will be assessed on a pass/fail basis and students must pass the essay to graduate from the programme..

LLM

Programme codes: TMLL2 (Full time)
TMLL2EPT (Extended part time)
Department: Law
This information is for the 2017/18 session.

The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Master's Programmes on the online Calendar apply to the LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the LLM take priority.

In order to obtain the degree, students must complete courses (see Courses list below) to the value of four full units, which will normally comprise eight half unit courses. One of these eight half units will be the compulsory half unit Legal Research Skills course, which will be assessed by a 10,000 word dissertation. This stand-alone dissertation will provide the element of extended writing for all LLM students. Students will be required to sign a statement on plagiarism when submitting this dissertation.

Students can complete the LLM course requirements in either one full-year programme, or as a part-time student in two years, or by extended part-time study within a maximum of six years. Courses should be chosen from the list below. Subject to availability and with the permission of the Programme Director of the LLM, one complementary course from other Master's courses at the School may be selected to replace one from the list below to the total equivalent of one half unit. Exceptionally, and subject to the same conditions courses to the total value of one full unit may be selected to replace two courses from the list below.

Part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Part-time students must take courses to the value of two units in their first year and courses to the value of two units in their second year.

Extended part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Students must take courses to the value of one unit in the first year and successfully complete this. Students who successfully complete four units within a period of six years will satisfy the requirements for the degree.

Students registered before 2013-14

The LLM programme regulations for students entering in or after 2013-14 differ from those in force in previous years. This reflects a move to half unit courses in 2013-14. Students registered before 2013-14 are covered by the regulations which were in operation at the time of their initial registration on the programme. For earlier editions of the regulations please refer to the page for previous academic sessions lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/

PreviousAcademicSessions.htm. This page contains links to reference copies of programme regulations for years 2009-10, 2010-11, 2011-12, 2012-13 and 2013-14. If continuing students have any queries on these matters they should consult their Academic Adviser.

Examination

Students will be examined in courses to the total value of four full units.

An oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine.

For courses assessed by written examination (which will be the norm on the LLM apart from the Legal Research Skills course), the examination will normally be held in January, May or June. Questions may be set on recent legislation and current proposals for law reform within the scope of the syllabus. No materials may be brought into the examination room except in accordance with the regulations for the particular course.

Degree certificate

Students who successfully complete the LLM examination may elect to have one of the following titles attached to their degree certificate if, in the opinion of the Programme Director of the LLM, the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. This would mean taking a minimum of 4 courses within a specialist area. The possible titles are listed below with the courses attached to those areas listed with them. If no such election is made, the LLM degree certificate will state 'LLM' without further specification.

Global MSc in Management (2 Year Programme)

Programme code: TMGLMG2
Department: Management
For all first and second year students in 2017/18. These regulations apply to students entering in or after the 2016/17 academic year.

A two-year programme. Students take courses to the value of eight units.
The second year includes a dissertation. Students complete the course MG488 GMiM Capstone Course - Management in Action (H) over both years, Part A (unassessed) in Year 1 and Part B (assessed) in Year 2.
All students are required to attend MG4A1 Introduction to Studying for GMiM.
Students may choose to concentrate their electives in a certain topic area and may elect to have one of the elective titles attached to their degree certificate if the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. The possible titles are listed as headings within the Elective Courses below with the courses attached to those areas listed beneath them. If no such election is made, the degree certificate will state 'Management' without further specification.

Year 1

Core Courses

Paper	Course number and title
1	MG431	Managerial Economics (H)*
	MG461	Quantitative Analysis in Management (H) **
2	MG434	Organisational Behaviour (H)

	MG459	Foundations of Management II (H)
4	MG4E2	Marketing Management (H)
	Students also take the compulsory unassessed part of MG488:
	MG488A	GMiM Capstone Course - Management in Action

Optional Courses

5 Students take courses up to the value of one half unit from the Elective Courses listed below.
It is not compulsory for students to take a half unit of optional courses under Paper 5 in the first year. Instead, students can elect to take a half unit of optional courses in Year 2, in addition to their second year optional courses taken under Paper 8. +

Notes * Upon satisfactorily demonstrating that they have a degree in economics and have passed, as part of that degree, a course in managerial economics, microeconomics or industrial organisation, students may be exempted from this course and will be free to take an elective course, subject to the approval of the Programme Director.
 Upon satisfactorily demonstrating that they have already taken statistics at university level, students may be exempted from this course and will be free to take an elective course, subject to the approval of the Programme Director.

Year 2

The Bologna Process facilitates comparability and compatibility between higher education systems across the European Higher Education Area. Some of the School's taught master's programmes are nine or ten months in duration. If you wish to proceed from these programmes to higher study in EHEA countries other than the UK, you should be aware that their recognition for such purposes is not guaranteed, due to the way in which ECTS credits are calculated.

The Bologna Process facilitates comparability and compatibility between higher education systems across the European Higher Education Area. Some of the School's taught master's programmes are nine or ten months in duration. If you wish to proceed from these programmes to higher study in EHEA countries other than the UK, you should be aware that their recognition for such purposes is not guaranteed, due to the way in which ECTS credits are calculated.

Executive Global Masters in Management - Progression Rules
Candidates who attain at least a Pass grade in MG440, MG441 and MG443 will be eligible to proceed into the second year. FM475 and MG445 are not required for progression.
A student who does not meet this criterion must resit all failed/deferred papers in accordance with the resit process detailed below. If, following the resit attempt, a student:
- has attained at least a Pass grade in each of the first year papers, he/she will be eligible to proceed into the second year.
- has attained at least a Pass grade in at least one of the first year papers, he/she will be eligible to proceed into the second year:
  - at the discretion of the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners; and
  - subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners (GSBE).
- Has failed all of the first year papers, he/she will not be eligible to proceed into the second year, as he/she will no longer be able to successfully complete the programme according to the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).

The marks of any student who fails up to two papers over the course of the programme will be subject to the penalty rules stipulated at paragraph 3.2 of the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).

Executive Global Masters in Management - Resit Process
A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion).
For first year courses required for progression, where the individual assessment takes the form of an assignment or take home exam, once grades have been ratified, the faculty member responsible for the failed first year course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible and before the beginning of the second year. Results for resits and any subsequent progression will be agreed by the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course.
The results of first year courses FM475 and MG445 will be formally ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners and Graduate School Board of Examiners in November. If it is determined that as a result of a fail in one or both of these courses an award cannot be made the faculty member responsible for the failed course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible. A candidate resitting these courses cannot graduate until the July Sub-Board and Graduate School Board of Examiners has met to ratify their results.
For second year courses, once grades have been ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners and it is determined that an award cannot be made, the faculty member responsible for the failed second year course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible. Results for resits and subsequent classification will be agreed by the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course. Resits for second year courses will result in delayed Graduation.

Executive LLM

Programme Code: TMLL2EX
Department: Law
This information is for the 2017/18 session.
1. The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Masters Programmes in the online Calendar apply to the Executive LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the Executive LLM take priority.
2. In order to obtain the Degree, students must complete eight Executive LLM courses (see list below). Students must complete the requirements as a part-time student over a period of four years, or with the approval of the Programme Director within a period of six years. The minimum period within which the Degree can be completed is three years.
3. Alternative exit points are available to students who are not able to complete the Degree. An LSE Diploma in Legal Studies is available on completion of six courses and a Certificate of Legal Studies on the completion of four courses. There is no minimum period for completion of the alternative exit points of Certificate of Legal Studies or Diploma in Legal Studies.
4. Courses should be chosen from the list below and are subject to availability as not every course will be offered each year. Subject to the availability of teaching staff, it is intended that every course be offered at least once within the four year degree period. No other courses at LSE or elsewhere may be taken as part of the Executive LLM programme.

Intensive Teaching
5. The Executive LLM courses will be taught in short intensive week-long sessions, which will typically be taught in the first half of April, September and December. Each course will provide between 24 and 26 hours of contact teaching time. Teaching will normally run from Monday to Friday. However, in the exceptional event where a course cannot be taught on the set weekday/s (e.g. due to last minute teacher illness), teaching may be extended to the Saturday and Sunday morning of that week. Accordingly, students are expected to book trains or flights for the day before teaching commences and should, where possible, book return trains or flights on the Sunday afternoon or evening following the completion of the course.
6. Where there is student demand we may elect also to offer some courses in two intensive weekends. The two weekends will not be more than four weekends apart. Where courses are offered in the intensive weekend format the same course will also be offered in week-long intensive format at least once every four years.

Payment of Fees
7. All Executive LLM offer holders will be required to pay a Registration Fee within 14 days of receiving their offer of admission. The registration fee is non-refundable. Only on receipt of the registration fee, may students register onto the programme. Registered students are then required to pay a per course tuition fee in advance of their chosen course date, to secure their place. Students will only be permitted to attend a module if payment is received in time. Fee payment deadlines can be found at: lse.ac.uk/intranet/LSEServices/financeDivision/feesAndStudentFinance/Payingfees/Executiveprogrammes.aspx#llm
8. The registration fee is non-refundable. If you withdraw from the course before starting a session or are unable to attend a session for which you have registered, all module fees will be credited to a module in a later session. You must inform the Programme Manager if you are unable to attend a module you are registered for. In exceptional circumstances, at the Director's discretion, the funds paid for that session will be refunded. Changes in fee levels may occur over the course of the programme. The student will remain liable for any difference between the fees chargeable at the later session and the fee credit from the module which the student withdrew from. Module fees are non-refundable, and will not be credited to another session, if you have attended classes but withdraw before the assessment.
9. It is our intent to offer each advertised module at least once during the four year degree period. This may not always be possible due, for example, to teacher illness or resignation. It is possible that a module may need to be cancelled at short notice, such as where the teacher is unavailable or participant numbers are very low. If this happens, students will be given the option of taking another module during the same session or, alternatively, the fees paid towards that module will be held in credit for your next chosen module/session or refunded if preferred. Students will be informed of the withdrawal of a module no later than two weeks prior to the commencement of the module.

Assessment
10. All Executive LLM courses are assessed by either take-home examination or 8,000 word extended essay.
11. To comply with the Department's writing requirement at master's level, all students are required to write one extended essay of 8,000 words as the assessment for one of their courses to obtain the Degree, the Diploma or the Certificate. Students are not permitted to take more than three courses assessed by extended essay to obtain the Degree or the Diploma or more than one course assessed by extended essay to obtain a Certificate.
12. Extended essays must not exceed the set word limit and must be submitted by a set deadline. Students must provide evidence of original work or a capacity for critical analysis. Students will be required, at the time of submission of their work, to sign a statement on plagiarism. An oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine.

13. The take-home examinations will be set two months after the completion of the intensive teaching. The date of the examination will be provided at the date courses are available for selection. They will be uploaded and submitted electronically.
14. All students are required to write an extended essay of 8,000 words as the assessment for one of their courses to obtain the Degree, the Diploma or the Certificate. Students are not permitted to take more than three courses assessed by extended essay to obtain the Degree or the Diploma or more than one course assessed by extended essay to obtain a Certificate. The extended essay topic will be set by the course teacher. The student may propose essay topics and ideas to the teacher.
15. All students will be required to be online during the examination period in case there is any need to contact them.
16. Students will be able to re-sit a course examination once. A re-sit examination will be set as soon as possible after the student is notified of the failure. At the Programme Director's sole discretion in lieu of a re-sit or deferred examination the student may be required to submit an 8,000 word essay. This can only occur when the student has not already completed the maximum of three 8,000 word essays.
17. Any student who fails an exam twice in the same course will not be able to proceed to complete the Executive LLM programme. Students will not be able to proceed to take further courses if at the first sit and the re-sit examination are both bad fails or if the failure is not a bad fail but the student has failed another course following the re-sit. If such a student has already successfully completed 4 courses or 6 courses prior to such a failure, the student will be awarded a Certificate of Legal Studies or Diploma of Legal Studies.

Registration

18. The maximum period of registration on the programme is six years. Therefore completion of all the degree requirements (or Diploma, Certificate) must be within a six year period.

Course Completion Rate

19. Students will be expected to take one to two courses per year. Any student who fails to take a course for a two year period will be asked to provide reasons for the failure to complete courses. Any student who following such a request either fails to provide a response to the Programme Director or fails to complete a course in the year following the giving of these reasons, may be deregistered from the programme.

Degree Certificate

20. Students who successfully complete the Executive LLM examination requirements may elect to have one of the following titles attached to their degree certificate if, in the opinion of the Programme Director of the LLM, the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. This would mean taking a minimum of 4 courses within a specialist area. The possible titles are listed below with the courses attached to those areas listed with them. If no such election is made, the LLM degree certificate will state 'LLM' without further specification.

Executive Master of Public Administration

Programme code: TMMPAEX
For all first and second year students in 2017/18.
The EMPA is a 19 month programme. Students must take courses to the value of eight half units as set out below.

Year 1 and 2 at LSE

Paper	Course number and title
Year 1
1	GV4G8E	Public Policy in Practice Workshop I (EMPA) (H)
2	GV478E	Political Science and Public Policy (H)
3	EC455E	Empirical Methods for Public Policy (H)
4	GV4G9E	Public Policy in Practice Workshop II (EMPA) (H)
Year 2

5 EC440E Economic Policy Analysis (H)
6 & 7 Two of the following:
EC410E Public Economics for Public Policy (H)
EC421E Global Market Economics (H)
EC454E Development Economics (H)
GV488E Regulatory Analysis (H)
GV4E4E Fiscal Governance and Budgeting (H)
GV4V8E Policy Paper (H)
8 EC409E Public Policy in Practice Workshop III (EMPA) (H)

An LSE Diploma is available on the completion of six courses and an LSE Certificate on the completion of four courses.
Candidates who attain at least a Pass grade in each of the Year 1 courses GV4G8E, GV478E and EC455E will be eligible to progress to Year 2. The Year 1 course GV4G9E will not count towards progression but the grade will count towards the final degree classification.
Students wishing to defer the submission of one or more assessment components must seek permission according to the Regulations for Taught Masters Degrees prior to the assessment due date, except in the case of unforeseen and exceptional circumstances. Students deferring one or more assessment components in Year 1 may exceptionally progress to Year 2 and submit any deferred assessment at the next normal opportunity, if they complete and pass two of the three half units GV4G8E, GV478E and EC455E in Year 1.
Students failing one but not more than one of GV4G8E, GV478E and EC455E in Year 1 will normally be able to progress to Year 2, although this fail will count toward their degree classification according to the Scheme for the Award of a Taught Masters Degree. Students failing more than one of GV4G8E, GV478E and EC455E in Year 1 have to re-sit relevant assessment components and pass the required number of half units before they can progress to Year 2. Students are permitted to re-sit failed exams in line with the School's Regulations for Taught Master's Degrees.
The Sub-Board may recommend to the Graduate School Board of Examiners (GSBE) that a student can progress to year two of the programme even if they have not met the normal application of the progression rules. This can only be done on an exceptional basis where:
(a) the Sub-Board has determined that a student has demonstrated that their progression has been affected by circumstances beyond their control through the exceptional circumstances procedure and;
(b) the GSBE approves the Sub-Board's recommendation.

Taught Master’s Course Guides

AC411 Half Unit
Accounting, Strategy and Control

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Wim Van der Stede OLD 2.18
Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor if they have sufficient relevant background knowledge.
The course is capped to three sections of around 55 students; ie 165 total.
Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.
Course content: This course provides an advanced overview of current theoretical and practical developments in the area of organisational control, which is an essential function of management to ensure that the organisation's objectives and strategies are carried out effectively. Good management control increases the probability of organisational success.
Specifically, the course discusses what it means to have an organisation be in control, what alternatives managers have for ensuring good control, and how managers should choose from among various control system alternatives. Then we will focus on each of the elements of financial control systems, which provide the dominant form of control in the vast majority of decentralised organisations. These elements include financial target setting, performance measurement and evaluation and the assignment of various forms of organisational rewards, such as bonuses and promotions. The latter part of the course extends these key notions of management control from the intra-organisational level to the inter-organisational level, highlighting some of the difficulties involved in organisational control of new, fluid, inter-organisational settings and configurations, such as joint-ventures and various types of alliances, often involving global alliance partners.
The course will cover the following topics:
• Strategy and the design of management control systems, including strategic and operational plans and budgets
• Management control alternatives, including results controls, and organisational architecture
• Decision rights and results accountability in decentralised organisations
• Incentive compensation systems, including short-term and long-term incentive plans
• Performance measurement and evaluation, including objective and subjective performance evaluations
• Management control in inter-organisational relationships, including joint-ventures
As a final note, the discipline of management accounting is often partitioned into (1) management control systems and (2) cost and management accounting systems, where the latter is the key focus of another course, AC415. AC411 can, but is not required, to be taken with AC415. Students can take either AC411 or AC415, or both.
Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.
Note: Week 1 of MT is reserved for an intensive pre-session course for MSc Accounting and Finance students; therefore, main courses, including AC411, start in Week 2 of Michaelmas term; hence, teaching is during 10 weeks from Week 2 through 11. Specifically, AC411 consists of 10 principal topics delivered in two sessions of 1.5 hours each week. The first session each week typically provides an introduction, conceptual analysis, and discussion of the key facets of the topic. The second session offers a further discussion and expansion of the issues through case study analysis and real-world applications. Each session is conducted in groups of about 55 students. The case study discussions permit the exploration of management control issues in a broad range of settings. The case method of instruction, however, requires good advance preparation by the students, and every person should be ready to contribute to the case discussion when called upon. Students should expect to be "cold called" and not count on being able to hide behind classmates who volunteer to participate. Active participation is also expected and encouraged during non-case sessions.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each session prepared having done the assigned readings and having prepared the assigned cases.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is laid out for each session on the syllabus.
Reference textbook: Merchant & Van der Stede, Management Control Systems: Performance Measurement, Evaluation and Incentives, 3e (Prentice Hall, 2012).
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the LT week 0.
Essay (15%) in the MT.
Project (15%) in January.
Students are required to complete two essays during term-time (totalling 15% of the mark for the course), a group project, due in January (15%), and a final exam (70%).

AC412 Half Unit
Accountability, Organisations and Risk Management

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Martin Giraudeau KSW 3.08
Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society , MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor.
Course content: This is an advanced course focusing on the organisational and institutional settings within which risk is managed.
The first five lectures explore the intersections of risk and corporate governance, by focusing on the risks that arise at top management and board of directors level, including lack of external oversight, executive pay issues, board interlocks, and strategic irreversibility. The last five lectures deal with key issues in organisational responses to risk and uncertainty, including the impact of disasters and accidents and the growing formalisation and standardisation of risk management practice. The overall purpose of the course is to provide students with a critical appreciation of the management of risk as an organisational and social process. The course is necessarily cross-disciplinary, drawing on scholarship within accounting, organisational sociology and regulation studies.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.
2 hours of lectures in the ST.

In week 6 there will be a reading and feedback week.
Formative coursework: Two pieces of written work will be assessed during the term but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.
Indicative reading: No single book covers the entire course. Key readings include: Bebchuk & Fried, Pay Without Performance (Harvard, 2004); Coffee, Gatekeepers: The Professions and Corporate Governance (Oxford, 2006); Hutter & Power (eds) Organizational Encounters with Risk, (Cambridge, 2005); Power, Organized Uncertainty: Designing a World of Risk Management (Oxford, 2007); Turner & Pidgeon, Man-Made Disasters, (Butterworth/Heinemann, 1997); Vaughan, The Challenger Launch Decision, (Chicago, 1997); Short & Clarke (eds) Organizations, Uncertainties and Risks (Westview, 1992); Weick & Sutcliffe, Managing the Unexpected: Assuring High Performance in an Age of Complexity (Jossey-Bass, 2007).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

AC415 Half Unit
Management Accounting for Decision Making

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Bjorn Jorgensen Old 2.17
Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
This course cannot be taken concurrently with AC490 Management Accounting, Decisions and Control.
Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor if they have sufficient relevant background knowledge.
The course is capped to two sections of around 50 students; ie, 100 total. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.
Course content: This course is focused on management accounting, which is a key function in organisations that involves developing and using financial and non-financial information to support decision making, not only in a technical sense, but bearing in mind that the way in which management accounting systems are designed and implemented often determines whether employees will be motivated to act in ways that are congruent with the objectives of the organisation.
The discipline of management accounting is often partitioned into (1) cost and management accounting systems and (2) management control systems, where the latter is the key focus of another course, AC411. AC415 can, but is not required to, be taken with AC411. Students can take AC411 or AC415, or both.
Returning to AC415, while financial accounting requires that product cost information be accumulated in particular ways for external reporting, the focus in AC415 is on cost and other accounting and non-accounting information systems that aid managerial decision making. This includes the study of management accounting systems in widespread use today as well as an analysis of the problems associated with these systems in today's business environment (such as their tendency to provide distorted product cost information), as well as approaches to mitigate these problems (eg, activity-based costing; use of non-financial information).
With the above brief overview in mind, this course analyses key concepts which form the discipline of management accounting:
- Product costing and pricing
- Activity-based costing/management (ABC/ABM)
- Profitability and variance analysis
- Transfer pricing including tax considerations for international transactions
- Performance measurement and incentive compensation systems
- ROI, EVA, and other performance metrics

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the LT.
That is, AC415 is delivered in two sessions of 1.5 hours each week. Each session is conducted in groups of circa 55 students and is almost exclusively taught by way of the case method of instruction. Case studies permit the exploration of management accounting issues in a broad range of settings. The case method of instruction, however, requires good advance preparation by the students, and every person should be ready to contribute to the case discussion when called upon. Students should expect to be "cold called" and not count on being able to hide behind classmates who volunteer to participate.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each session prepared having done the assigned readings and having prepared the assigned cases.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is laid out for each session on the syllabus.
Reference textbook: Horngen, Sundem, Burgstahler, and Schatzberg, Introduction to Management Accounting, 16e (Prentice Hall, 2014).
Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Other (10%) and other (15%) in the LT.
Other: Case Assignment (10%) during LT and Project (15%) during LT. Thus, students are required to complete two assignments during term time (totalling 25% of the mark for the course) and a final exam (75%).

AC416 Half Unit
Topics in Financial Reporting

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Manuel Correia OLD 3.12
Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Other students may be admitted if they have knowledge of financial accounting acquired at undergraduate level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting and Finance) Course Tutor.
The course is capped to four sections of around 50 students; ie, 200 total. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.
Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance (AC480).

Prior knowledge of financial accounting is assumed. AC480 is a pre-requisite for students with no/little prior knowledge of financial accounting.
Course content: Corporate financial statements are a key source of information about the economic activities of a firm. This course is intended to enhance the student's ability to relate economic events to financial statements and disclosures. It also seeks to aid in developing a coordinated set of concepts and principles to serve as a framework for analysing a wide variety of financial reporting issues. The goal is to enable students to understand the mapping between underlying economic events and the information in financial statements, and how this mapping affects inferences about the economic activities and position of the firm. The course also explores the regulatory environment and political climate, and how these link with the introduction of new standards and their underlying theories. Students are encouraged to relate economic events to diverse practices in financial statements, and to think critically of ongoing controversies and debates.
The emphasis of this course is on understanding and critical thinking, rather than bookkeeping. The course draws heavily on academic literature on the suggested topics.
The course objectives are achieved through teaching a variety of financial reporting issues and topics including the following: standard setting with respect to the conceptual frameworks; accounting for business combinations; accounting for value creation with special emphasis on cash flows statements and revenue recognition; capital markets efficiency; corporate disclosure; and corporate governance. Most topics are covered from an International Financial Reporting Standards and/or United States Generally Accepted Accounting Principles perspective. Detailed choice of subjects will be determined by those lecturing on the course and many vary to some extent from year to year. Knowledge of basic accounting is assumed.
Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.
Teaching is delivered in two one and a half hour sessions each week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 55 students, often involving case study analyses and group discussions. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 problem sets in the MT.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are handed out at the start of the course, and will be largely based on papers in academic journals. Relevant books covering specific parts of the course are: Beaver WH, Financial Reporting: An Accounting Revolution, 3rd edn, Prentice-Hall, 1998; Scott W, Financial Accounting Theory, Prentice Hall, 1997; Watts RL & Zimmerman JL, Positive Accounting Theory, Prentice-Hall, 1986; Financial Reporting and Analysis, by Revsine, Collins, Johnson and Mittelstaedt (McGraw Hill, 5th ed.).
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the LT week 0.

AC417 Half Unit

Corporate Financial Disclosure and Investor Relations

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Vasiliki Athanasakou OLD 2.20 and Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07
Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Other students may be admitted if they have knowledge of financial accounting and finance acquired at undergraduate level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting and Finance) Course Tutor.
The course is capped to two sections of around 55 students; ie, 110 total. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, “must have” courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.
Course content: Investors view firms through the lens of financial accounting and reporting. This course aims to examine this lens by covering topics on the interaction of financial accounting and reporting with capital markets with a focus on corporate disclosure and communication strategies. The course views corporate financial reporting as an information system and reviews the theories and empirical regularities on the demand for and supply of accounting information in capital markets while also assessing the stock market impact of communication strategies.
Some of the topics covered in the course include: Determinants of accounting choices; Capital markets and the earnings game; Voluntary disclosure theory and practices; The signalling role of accounting information; Capital market consequences of accounting and disclosure choices; Financial reporting and corporate governance; The course is based on a number of theories, empirical applications, and case studies, so that students gain an understanding firm’s corporate information environment and communication strategies.
Detailed choice of subjects will be determined by those lecturing on the course and many vary to some extent from year to year. Knowledge of basic accounting and finance is assumed.
Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the LT.
Teaching is delivered in three hour sessions each week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 50 students, often involving case study analyses, application exercises and group presentations and discussions. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 case studies in the LT.
Formative assessment will be in the form of class exercises and case-studies on topics covered during the course. Students will be expected to hand in two assignments in the LT.
Indicative reading: The course relies mostly on journal articles and chapters from relevant books supplied in study packs. Relevant books covering specific parts of the course include Gibbons, R (1992) ‘A Primer in Game Theory’, Scott, W (2011) Financial Accounting Theory (Prentice Hall) and Lev, B (2012), ‘Winning Investors Over’, Harvard Business School Publishing Corporation. Study packs will include detailed reading lists and lecture notes.
Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the main exam period.
Project (20%) and class participation (20%).

Accounting, Organisations and Institutions

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not available to other students except in special circumstances and with the written permission of the Course Director.
Pre-requisites: There are no specific pre-requisites and the course does not require a background in accounting. Pre-sessional training in the form of various intensive sessions prior to the start of term will be offered for those who need a brief 'technical' preparation for the Progamme.
Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with an advanced, social science based understanding of the changing role and position of accounting practices in organisations, both public and private, and in societies more generally. Students will be exposed to advanced thinking about how accounting practices are more than a collection of routine self-evident techniques but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. We will focus on how the fundamental assumptions of internal and external accounting practices are institutional in nature and are shaped by social and political aspirations. The role of accountants and other agents involved in the production and consumption of accounting numbers will also be addressed.
The course will emphasise the inter-relations between technical, organisational and institutional issues. While some technical accounting knowledge will be helpful, it is not essential and each lecture will provide the necessary technical foundations.
Indicative topics, include: Foundations: Reporting, Calculation and Transparency; The Users of Accounting; Accounting and the Notion of "Entity"; Audit and Assurance: The Audit Society; Organisational Boundaries, Structure and Control; Accountability, Incentives and Performance; Accounting for Sustainability; Organisational Failure. Risk Management, Accountability and Corporate Governance;-Disasters, Accidents and Errors; Organisations and the Management of Uncertainty; The Risk Management Process; Mapping and Communicating Risk in Organisations; Organisations, Security and Resilience; Corporate Governance: Board Functioning, Gatekeepers, Executive Compensation, Regulation.
Teaching: 30 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.
This course has a reading and feedback week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two pieces of written work per term. This may take the form of either an essay, or the analysis of a case, and may also include in-class presentation and team-based work. This work will be assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.
Indicative reading: Chapman, Cooper & Miller (eds.), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford, 2009); Hopwood & Miller (eds.), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice (Cambridge, 1994); Power, The Audit Society (Oxford, 1999); Roberts, The Modern Firm (Oxford, 2004); Power, Organized Uncertainty: Designing a World of Risk Management (Oxford, 2007); Hutter & Power (eds.), Organizational Encounters with Risk (Cambridge, 2005);Coffee, Gatekeepers: The Professions and Corporate Governance (Oxford, 2006); Bebchuk & Fried, Pay Without Performance (Harvard, 2004); Power, Riskwork: Essays on the Organizational Life of Risk Management (Oxford, 2016)
Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.
The Essay will be due early in the ST.

MSc Accounting, Organisations and Institutions: Pre-sessional course

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
The course is normally only available to MSc Accounting, Organisations and Institutions students. The purpose of this pre-sessional is to acquaint students without any prior, or little, background in accounting to the basic approach to be adopted on the core course AC424. Students with some prior background in accounting will find the session to be useful as a "refresher" about accounting fundamentals, but are also advised to take AC480 Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance if they wish to take advanced accounting options.
Course content: Introduction to Accounting, Organizations and Institutions
Teaching: The sessions are held in September before the start of MT.
Formative coursework: Study materials for the pre-sessional will be made available by means of selected handouts
Assessment: There is no assessment.

AC444 Half Unit
Valuation and Security Analysis

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07 and Mr Jose Carabias Palmeiro OLD 2.13
Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Other students may be admitted to the course if they have a reasonable knowledge of financial accounting and finance acquired at undergraduate or equivalent level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the teacher responsible for this course.
Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, “must have” courses. Late registrations or late changes to this course choice may be unsuccessful.
Pre-requisites: Students will be assumed to have a solid understanding of corporate finance as well as financial accounting principles, techniques and methods. Completion of AC416 is recommended for this course.
Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to security analysis and valuation from both theoretical and empirical perspectives. Students are furthermore provided with an opportunity to apply their skills by valuing, in small groups, from the point of view of a "sell-side analyst", a firm's equity of their choice using technologies based on the present values of free cash flows and economic value added. The course should appeal to students interested in investment analysis and fund management.
The course is presented in three parts. The first part, financial analysis, focuses on past and present performance evaluation, which is used by financial analysts to generate expectations about future performance (prospective analysis). The second part, security valuation, focuses on the determination of intrinsic security prices, which, in efficient markets, reflect prospective performance. The third part, returns to fundamental and technical analysis, provides empirical evidence on returns to trading strategies based on either financial analysis or past stock returns.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.
Teaching is delivered in three hour sessions each week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 55 students, often involving case study analyses, individual or group presentations and discussions. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.
Indicative reading: Lectures are based on Beccalli E and Frantz, P, Valuation and Securities Analysis, 2017. Other books recommended include Penman S, Financial Statement Analysis and Security Valuation, McGraw-Hill, 2012, as well as Palepu K, Healy B & Bernard V, Business Analysis and Valuation, South-Western College Publishing, 2012. For background reading for the corporate valuation project: Koller T, Goedhart M & Wessels D, Valuation: Measuring and Managing the Value of Companies, Wiley, 2010, The course also relies on journal articles published in the financial analysis and financial markets literatures.
Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (30%) in the LT.

AC470 Half Unit
Accounting in the Global Economy

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Mennicken KSW 3.09
Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Development Management, MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Regulation and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is capped to one section of 55 students. Students on the waiting list will be admitted on a first-come first-served basis.
Pre-requisites: There are no specific pre-requisites and the course does not require a background in accounting.
Course content: This course examines the fast changing practices and institutions of accounting in the global economy, with a particular emphasis on the roles of accounting in global financial governance. International accounting and auditing standards have been advocated as a way of enhancing global financial stability, so as to stimulate the flow of cross-national investment, expand the scope for market-oriented development, and integrate local enterprises into global financial markets. This course critically examines dynamics of accounting regulation, including international standard-setting and consequences for financial statement users, business entities and wider local and global stakeholders.
Topics include: Political, institutional and economic influences in changing national and international financial reporting frameworks. The political economy of accounting standard-setting. The work of the International Accounting Standards Board (IASB), the European Union, national accounting bodies, and their political and economic environments.
The effects of national financial reporting requirements and International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) on business entities and economic development, particularly developing and emerging economies (including the BRIC countries: Brazil, Russia, India, China). The enforcement of financial reporting requirements through auditors, securities regulators, the World Bank and others. Specific technical challenges (for example, impairment tests, derivatives and other financial instruments, fair value accounting and intangible assets).
The course explores issues from different theoretical perspectives through comparative empirical analysis.
Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. (Note: Week 1 of MT is reserved for an intensive pre-session course for MSc Accounting and Finance students; therefore, main courses, including AC470, start in Week 2 of MT; hence, teaching is for 10 weeks from weeks 2-11.)
A 2-hour essay workshop and also a revision session in week 11 of MT.
It is intended to run a small number of additional sessions with invited speakers who are centrally involved at a senior level in the setting, enforcement and convergence of international accounting regulations. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each session prepared having done the assigned readings and having prepared the assigned class discussion questions. In addition, students are required to write an assessed essay of 3,500-4,000 words, to be submitted after the Christmas break. The word limit excludes the bibliography. This written work forms 40% of the overall assessment. A workshop will be held in preparation for the essay assignment. Individual feedback will be given on essay outlines. Further readings, exercises and case studies are set for class discussion each week.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be given out at the start of the session, and are largely based on academic journal articles. Other readings include policy briefings, regulatory documents, green and white papers, World Bank reports (ROSC). Relevant books: Camfferman & Zeff, Aiming for Global Accounting Standards, 2001-2011 (Oxford University Press, 2015); Botzem, The Politics of Accounting Regulation (Edward Elgar, 2012); Ramanna, Political Standards: Corporate Interest,Ideology and Leadership in the Shaping of Accounting Rules for the Market Economy (University of Chicago Press, 2015); Chapman, Cooper & Miller, Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford University Press, 2009); Djelic & Quack, Transnational Communities: Shaping Global Economic Governance (Cambridge University Press, 2010); Doupnik, International Accounting (McGraw-Hill, 2014); Nobes & Parker, Comparative International Accounting (Prentice Hall, 2016); Walter, Governing Finance: East Asia's Adoption of International Standards (Cornell University Press, 2008).
Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.
Essay (40%) in the LT.
Essay: (40%, 3,500-4,000 words) in LT. The 4,000 words exclude the bibliography.

AC480
Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Stefano Cascino OLD 3.32
Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is not available as an outside option.
Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with the necessary background required for core accounting and finance courses. The course is organised in three sections:
Section 1 - "Accounting: Disclosure Principles and Practice" provides an overview of fundamental accounting concepts, practices and the main financial statements. This section emphasises users' perspective rather than preparers' perspective on financial reporting (eg, for valuation purposes).

Section 2 - "Finance: Quantitative Methods" provides the basic quantitative tools needed for technical MSc courses. This section consists of an introduction to Basic Calculus, Probability and Statistics.
Teaching: Teaching takes place over a 9-day period before the start of MT.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.
Assessment: This course is not assessed. However, students will be given a number of application exercises to complete on their own or in groups.

AC490 Half Unit
Management Accounting, Decisions and Control

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Alnoor Bhimani OLD 3.08
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
This introductory course may also be taken by MSc students who have not previously studied accounting subjects. Students in the MSc Accounting and Finance programme are not permitted to enrol in this course or in AC491. This course cannot be taken concurrently with AC415 Management Accounting for Decision Making.
The course is capped at 115 students.
Course content: Enterprises must today tackle markets that are affected by global economic and social forces and the extensive advances in internet-based technologies. They must seek success in the face of intense competition including the ever more sophisticated corporate strategies of their competitors. At the same time, the interface between business decisions and management accounting is regarded as becoming more complex and a more significant determinant of high corporate performance. This course provides students with an introduction to issues of accounting information and cost management, managerial decision making and performance measurement. It discusses also the interface between management accounting and technology, corporate strategy, e-business and marketing. The course includes both qualitative and quantitative material. Students should not expect the course to be purely calculations based.
The course will cover:
- established managerial accounting concepts such as cost-volume-profit relationships, overhead cost allocations, activity based costing, the balanced scorecard, target cost management and quality costing;
- the implications for accounting of flexible organisational technologies such as just-in-time systems, enterprise resource planning, computer integrated system and collaborative manufacturing;
- operational, marketing and corporate strategy issues including cost management, e-business and internet-based business models;
- organisational arrangements such as functional and multidivisional firms as well as strategic alliances, joint ventures and virtual enterprises;
- comparative international management accounting systems;
- accounting controls and organisational designs including responsibility centres, financial performance measurements, variance analysis, and incentives;
- strategic accounting tools and practices.

The course will provide participants with:
- an understanding of strategic, market and technological links to management accounting and control practices;
- the ability to apply cutting edge management accounting techniques within competitive business environments;
- a knowledge of interrelationships between behavioural, organisational and cultural issues and management accounting systems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in week 6 of LT. A 2-hour revision lecture will be held in ST or extra office hours will be held.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises, analyses of case studies, and essays. At least two pieces of written work will be collected for feedback during the course. Students are also required to participate actively in a variety of discussions and debates as part of the class activities.
Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be given out at the start of the course. Bhimani A, Horngren C, Datar S and Rajan M Management and Cost Accounting (Pearson, 2015), Bhimani A, and Bromwich M, Management Accounting: Retrospect and Prospect, Elsevier/CIMA, 2010.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours and 15 minutes) in the main exam period.
The first 15 minutes will be reading time.

AC491 Half Unit
Financial Accounting, Reporting and Disclosure

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Alnoor Bhimani
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Law and Accounting and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
The course may also be taken by MSc students who have not previously studied accounting subjects to a significant extent. Students on the MSc Accounting and Finance programme are not permitted to enrol in this course or in AC490.
This course cannot be taken in conjunction with AC414 Financial Reporting, Capital Markets and Business Combinations or AC420 Financial Reporting in Capital Markets.
The course is capped at 115 students.
Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to financial accounting, and highlights aspects of reporting that are important to users of financial information. The course covers the preparation of key financial statements and the frameworks of accounting regulation. The course will also cover accounting issues related to depreciation, goodwill, intangible assets, equity, debt, fair value measurement and consolidation. Students will be introduced to financial statement analysis and research on the use of accounting information in financial markets.
Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. There will be a reading week in week 6 of MT. 2 hours of lectures in ST.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be made available at the start of the course. Illustrative texts: Tracy and Tracy. How to Read a Financial Report. 8th edn, Wiley, 2014. Weetman P, Financial Accounting: an Introduction, 7th edn, Pearson, 2016.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Students answer four questions (one compulsory question; two from four questions; and one out of two essay questions).

AC493 Half Unit

Financial and Management Accounting for Managerial Decision Making

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Henry Eyring, OLD 3.10
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.
Course content: This course covers introductions to both financial accounting and management accounting. The first part of this course provides students with an introduction to financial accounting, and highlights aspects of financial reporting that are important to users of financial information. It covers the preparation of key financial statements and the frameworks of accounting regulation. The second part to the course provides students with an introduction to management information and cost management, managerial decision making and performance measurement.
Specifically, then, the first half of AC493 is focused on financial accounting, which aims to familiarise students with the principles and some of the techniques of financial accounting and financial reporting as well as some aspects of current regulatory debates on the subject. After the first half of the course, students should be able to:

- Distinguish between cash accounting and accrual accounting, and explain traditional accounting concepts and conventions.
- Draw up simple balance sheets, income statements, cash flow statements, and group accounts, and understand how they are affected by different accounting treatments.
- Use these financial statements to perform financial analysis.
- Discuss the issue of "creative accounting" and frameworks of accounting regulation and the standard-setting process.
- Discuss market influences of accounting information and theories of accounting choice.

The second half of AC493 focuses on management accounting, which is a key function in organisations that involves developing and using financial and non-financial information to support decision making, not only in a technical sense, but bearing in mind that the way in which management accounting systems are designed and implemented often determines whether employees will be motivated to act in ways that are congruent with the objectives of the organisation. The discipline of management accounting is often partitioned into (1) cost and management accounting systems and (2) management control systems, and both components are covered in the second part of the course. While financial accounting (covered in the first part of the course) requires that product cost information be accumulated in particular ways for external reporting, the focus in the second half of the course is on cost and other accounting and non-accounting information systems that aid managerial decision making.
This includes the study of management accounting systems in widespread use today as well as an analysis of the problems associated with these systems in today's business environment (such as their tendency to provide distorted product cost information), as well as approaches to mitigate these problems (e.g., activity-based costing; use of non-financial information).
Through the second half of the course, students should be able to:
1. Analyse key concepts which form the discipline of management accounting:

- Product costing and pricing;
- Activity based costing/management (ABC/ABM);
- Profitability and variance analysis;
- Performance measurement and evaluation;
- ROI, EVA, and other performance metrics.

2. Possess the skills necessary to use management accounting information to make business decisions.
3. Illustrate how management accounting information can be used to formulate and implement strategy in a variety of organisational settings.
4. Understand how the design and use of management accounting systems affect human behaviour in organisations.

Teaching: 33 hours of lectures in the LT.
This course consists of 11 principal weeks with topics delivered in sessions of 1½ hours twice a week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 65 students. Most sessions make use of case study analyses and real-world applications to bring the materials to life and to apply conceptual knowledge to problems faced in practice. The case study analyses and discussions permit the exploration of accounting issues in broader management perspectives (e.g., large and small firms, manufacturing and service firms, multinational firms, startups). The case method of instruction, however, requires good advance preparation by students, and every student should be ready to contribute to the case discussion when called upon. Students should expect to be 'cold called' and not count on being able to hide behind classmates who volunteer to participate.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to be prepared for the cases and/or other tasks for each session as indicated on the syllabus. Two of these (in Weeks 4 and 8) will be collected and graded as shown below under Assessment.
Indicative reading: Reference Textbook:

AC499
Dissertation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Vasiliki Athanasakou OLD 2.20
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students will normally elect to take this as an option in paper 3 or 4. Permission to select the long essay option must be obtained from the Programme Director by the end of the third week of MT. Students wishing to select this option must first identify and secure agreement from a member of faculty who is willing to provide supervision for the dissertation. Approval for this option will not be granted if such an agreement is not obtained from an academic staff member.
Course content: The dissertation usually consists of an empirical investigation of a selected problem. Occasionally, the dissertation may consist of a survey and critical evaluation of the relevant literature.
The dissertation must identify relevant issues, sustain reasoned argument, and draw supportable conclusions. It must be arranged in an organised manner and include a full bibliography.
Teaching: There is no teaching associated with the dissertation, but students who select this option are encouraged to attend the dissertation workshop sessions organised by the Teaching and Learning Centre.
Arrangements for supervision: Students writing a dissertation will be supervised by a member of faculty who will not necessarily be their academic supervisor. Students are responsible for identifying an appropriate member of staff to supervise their dissertation essay, and for ensuring the member of staff agrees to provide supervision. As a general rule, supervisors of dissertations will not comment on the work after a discussion of the first draft.
Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.
Two typewritten copies of the dissertation must be submitted to the MSc Programme Manager, due by 31 May. The dissertation should be double-spaced, on A4 paper, with a maximum world limit of 10,000 words, not including Appendices. Mark penalties will apply if the word limit is exceeded.

AN402
The Anthropology of Religion

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12
Dr Michael W. Scott OLD 6.16
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course covers selected topics in the anthropology of religion, focusing upon relevant theoretical debates. In the Michaelmas term, the focus will also be on understanding through specific ethnographic and empirical case-studies, the ways in which lived religious practice, and the understanding of religion, get constituted inside and outside 'Western' and modern contexts. We will also pay attention to cases in which Western and non-Western definitions are emerging in interplay with each other, including their relation to understandings of modernity and the secular. Current approaches to and reconsiderations of classic topics in the anthropology of religion are also presented; these may include ritual, belief, sacrifice, and the fetish. In the Lent term, we will consider topics such as shamanism, cargo cults, initiation, witchcraft and sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 in MT and LT.
Indicative reading: H. H. Gerth and C. Wright Mills (eds.) 1946 (and later editions), From Max Weber: essays in sociology; E. AN404
Anthropology: Theory and Ethnography

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.07 and Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The main aim of this course is to examine the relationship between theory and ethnography in modern social and cultural anthropology; the course focuses mainly on the development of anthropology before circa 1980 during the MT, and after that date during the LT. The course starts with a mapping of the geneaologies of British, French and American Anthropology. Tracing the origins of anthropology in social theory (Durkheim, Marx, and Weber), linguistic analysis (Boas, Sassure) and geography (Bastian, Fischer). It covers topics such as the origin of the concept of the social sciences as a distinct branch of knowledge, and key concepts and themes (for instance, 'kinship,' 'religion' 'capitalism' or the 'environment'). It also explores specific schools of thought such as functionalism/structural functionalism; methodological individualism; conflict and the critique of functionalism; class consciousness and ideology, ethnic group and social stratification; and 'elective affinities' between cultural predispositions and economic action. It locates these in the historical experiences and debates of the time. The significance of foundational concepts for an understanding of current anthropology and key stages in its development is also a focus of the course. The second term covers topics which may include structuralism; practice theory; interpretive anthropology; postmodernism, affect and actor network theory. The precise emphasis and distribution of topics may vary from year to year.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of workshops in the ST.
The course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Formative coursework consists of participation in weekly seminars, and the opportunity to work on formative essays with the student's academic tutor, as per normal departmental arrangements.
Indicative reading: A. Callinicos 2007 Social Theory; a historical introduction; A Kuper, 2005, The Reinvention of Primitive Society: transformations of a myth; H L Moore and T Sanders (eds.), 2006, Anthropology in Theory: Issues in Epistemology; D Mclellan, 1977, Karl Marx: Selected Writings; W Runciman, 1978, Weber: Selections in Translation; S Lukes, 1973, Emile Durkheim: His Life and Work; B Malinowski, 1922, Argonauts of the Western Pacific; EE Evans-Pritchard, 1971, Nuer Religion; E Leach, Political Systems of Highland Burma; M Gluckman, 1958, Analysis of a Social Situation in Modern Zululand; M Sahlins, 1976, Culture and Practical Reason; M Bloch, 1983, Marxism and Anthropology; C Lévi-Strauss, 1966, The Savage Mind; A Kuper, 2000, Culture: the Anthropologists' Account; M Sahlins, 2000, Culture in Practice; P Bourdieu, Outline of a Theory of Practice; C Geertz, 1973, The Interpretation of Cultures; D Schneider, 1968, American Kinship: a cultural account. The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14 and Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13
Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Gender, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems, gender roles, personhood and human sexuality, analysed through ethnographic examples from a diverse range of settings. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'marriage', 'gender', 'sex', 'the person', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture', as well as exploring how the experiences of kinship, sex and gender vary according to the regimes of politics, law and materiality in which they are embedded. The course charts the history of anthropological debates on kinship, relatedness, sex and gender, and familiarises students with a range of contemporary approaches to these themes, placing ethnographic materials into a critical dialogue with recent developments in feminist theory, queer theory, the anthropology of colonialism, cognitive science, and psychoanalysis.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 in MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare material for discussion in the seminars. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Christianity

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The ethnography of local Christianities in the light of differing cultural and social situations including colonial conditions. The relationship between Christianity and the discipline of anthropology. The course examines a number of anthropological and historical studies of local forms of Christianity, from a range including local forms of Catholicism, Mormonism, contemporary and historical Protestantisms including American Protestant forms and 'heretical' and other unorthodox Christianities. The course asks why anthropologists shied away from analysing Christianity long after studies of other world religions, such as Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism, had become widely established. It looks at the relationship between Christianity and the history of anthropological thought, and locates the place of Christianity in the writings of Mauss, Durkheim, Foucault and others, in order to defamiliarise the religion which Europeans and Americans especially often take for granted. Issues examined may include the nature and experience of belief, conversion and the appropriation of Christian doctrines by local populations, the problems of writing about religion, Christianity and the state, the nature of religious confession, Christian texts, and Scriptural reading practices, Christian objects and materialities, Christianity and women's religious and social experience (from Medieval women mystics to women priests), inquisitions and heretical beliefs, priests and alternative forms of mediation with divine power, miraculous saints, incorrupt bodies and 'non-eaters' and changing ideas about death, Heaven and Hell. Where possible, the course will include a student fieldwork weekend and forms of reflection and reporting on that experience. Please check with the course teacher in any given year whether this is planned as part of the year's programme.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars. Students are asked to participate in the fieldwork trip in years when this is available (please note that costs will be kept to a minimum and consideration will be given in any cases of financial hardship). Fieldnotes and other materials will be prepared by fieldtrip participants.

AN420 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
The Anthropology of Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course will introduce students to selected theoretical and ethnographic issues in the history and contemporary life of Southeast Asia (including Burma/Myanmar, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, The Philippines, and Vietnam).
The alleged distinctiveness of Southeast Asian gender relations, political leadership, and experiences of self and emotion have led to ethnographic studies of the region making major contributions to the anthropology of the state, sovereignty, globalisation, gender, identity, violence, and mental health. By providing a strong grounding in regional ethnographic materials, this course will equip students to critically evaluate such contributions and to consider possible further contributions that studies of Southeast Asia might make to anthropological debates. The course will also examine how anthropologists have responded to the interpretive challenges presented by selected aspects of Southeast Asia's social and political life, such as the legacies of mass violence (e.g. the Cambodian genocide, the Vietnam War, or Indonesia's massacre of suspected communists), its ethnic and religious pluralism, and the impact of international tourism.
The course also contains a strong visual anthropology element: each week's lecture will be paired with a film screening, and students will be encouraged to examine whether and how this visual material contributes to, o indeed reframes, the theoretical debates at hand.
Upon successful completion of the course, students will be able to:
1. Describe the key features of Southeast Asian social and cultural systems, and identify their similarities and differences with social and cultural systems in other world regions.
2. Describe key events and patterns in Southeast Asia's history, and evaluate the extent to which these influence contemporary social phenomena in the region.
3. Describe and evaluate the most influential paradigms that have been developed in anthropological studies of Southeast Asia over the past 60 years.
4. Apply anthropological concepts and theories to ethnographic materials from Southeast Asia, and evaluate the results.
5. Apply anthropological research findings and theories to social and policy issues in Southeast Asia.
6. Locate and use research findings from Southeast Asia in order to participate in, or advance the terms of, wider disciplinary debates.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Film screenings will also take place throughout the Lent Term.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare material for discussion in the seminars. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

AN424 Half Unit
The Anthropology of Melanesia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W Scott, OLD 6.16
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course provides an introduction to selected themes in the anthropology of the region in the Southwest Pacific Ocean known as Melanesia. It gives students a grounding in the contemporary anthropology of the region, primarily through a close reading of three book-length ethnographies.
The three ethnographies, which are all new since 2013, are Christopher Wright's The Echo of Things, an account of what photography means to people in the western Solomon Islands; Alice Street's Biomedicine in an Unstable Place, an analysis of how persons and diseases are made visible or invisible in a hospital on the north coast of Papua New Guinea; and Alex Golub's Leviathans at the Gold Mine, a study of the relationship between indigenous landowners and a large international gold mine in their valley in the highlands of New Guinea.
These ethnographies not only provide students with focused accounts of three very different contexts in Melanesia, they also address histories, dynamics, and concerns familiar to people living throughout the region. Furthermore, because the three authors draw on different intellectual antecedents and disciplinary traditions, their work provides an entree into the most influential theoretical debates animating Pacific anthropology today.
Topics to be traced throughout the course include personhood and bodies, kinship and sociality, religion and cosmology, technology and infrastructure, development, globalization, and the state. The readings will be supplemented by ethnographic films and a visit to the British Museum.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in seminars.
Indicative reading: Christopher Wright, The Echo of Things: The Lives of Photographs in the Solomon Islands (2013); Alice Street, Biomedicine in an Unstable Place: Infrastructure and Personhood in a Papua New Guinean Hospital (2014); Alex Golub, Leviathans at the Gold Mine: Creating Indigenous and Corporate Actors in Papua

New Guinea (2014). Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

AN436 Half Unit
The Anthropology of Development

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Professor Katy Gardner OLD 5.07
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development and MSc in Anthropology and Development Management. This course is available on the MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in African Development, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course explores how anthropologists have evaluated, criticised and contributed to development. Focussing on both 'Big D' development (schemes of improvement or projects) and 'little d' development (change which occurs as the result of economic growth or modernisation) the course shows how anthropological insights have been used to change practices from within as well as critique development from the outside. From anthropological work which seeks pragmatic engagement to that which deconstructs development as an oppressive and power laden discourse, the course aims to give students a broad background to the field. Topics covered include the role of the state, participation and farmer first approaches; gender and development; development as discourse and 'aidnography'; neo liberalism and global capital; corporate social responsibility; markets and micro credit; and the relationship between 'tradition' and modernity. Throughout, the course will draw upon a broad range of ethnographic examples.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars.

Anthropology of Learning and Cognition

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD 6.11 and Prof Charles Stafford OLD 6.02
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The course will start by examining the contribution that the study of human psychology can make to anthropology. After discussing why anthropologists should pay attention to psychology and why psychologists should pay attention to anthropology, we will examine a range of psychological findings (for example, on infants' knowledge of the physical and mental world) and their relevance to anthropology. Throughout, the course will focus on the relationship between mechanisms of cultural transmission, both informal and institutional, and what anthropologists have called 'culture' and 'society'. We will look at the way universal human capabilities develop and are used during different stages of life to create unique cultural understandings. Topics covered include 'innateness', 'theory of mind', informal and formal education, emotions, expertise, and the nature of different types of beliefs. We will consider how themes of this kind - elaborated in cognitive anthropology and in cognitive science more generally - lead to a reconsideration of classic anthropological concerns, including kinship, religion, politics and economics.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Anthropology and Human Rights

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The tension between respect for 'local cultures' and 'universal rights' is a pressing concern within human rights activism. For well over two decades, anthropologists have been increasingly involved in these discussions, working to situate their understandings of cultural relativism within a broader framework of social justice. This course explores the contributions of anthropology to the theoretical and practical concerns of human rights work. The term begins by reading a number of key human rights documents and theoretical texts. These readings are followed by selections in anthropology on the concepts of relativism and culture as well as other key frameworks, such as identity and violence. Students will then be asked to relate their understandings of human rights to the historical and cultural dimensions of particular cases, addressing such questions as the nature of humanity, historical conceptions of the individual, colonialism and imperialism, the limits of relativism, and the relationship between human rights in theory and in practice. Case studies focus on Africa and Latin America.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.
Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for seminars
Indicative reading: E Messer, 'Anthropology and Human Rights' Annual Review of Anthropology 1993; J Cowan et al (Eds), Culture and Rights: Anthropological Perspectives; R Wilson (Ed), Human Rights, Culture, and Context: Anthropological Perspectives; T Turner, 'Human Rights, Human Difference: Anthropology's Contribution to an Emancipatory Cultural Politics' Journal of Anthropological Research 1997; T Asad, Formations of the Secular; P Farmer, 'On Structural Violence', Current Anthropology 1999; M Mamdani, When victims become killers; C Taylor, Sacrifice as Terror; R Menchu, I, Rigoberta Menchu. AN442
Supervised Reading Course and Fieldwork Preparation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Members of staff of the Anthropology Department (students' supervisors).
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.
Course content: The programme of supervised reading aims to give students a detailed knowledge of the regional ethnographic literature relevant to their proposed research project, as well as providing them with a firm grounding in the theoretical literature relevant to their research objectives. The programme also aims to aid students in the practical organization of their field research (eg organizing language training, obtaining research permits and academic affiliations) through their supervisors' personal guidance. The programme of supervised reading will be specific to each student. It will be agreed with his/her supervisors at the beginning of the academic year and it will be closely reviewed during the course of the academic year.
Teaching: Students should expect to meet with at least one of their supervisors at 2-3 weekly intervals during term time, and to submit essays relevant to the preparation of their Research Proposal (AN443).
Formative coursework: Students will be required to write essays for their supervisors throughout the academic year.
Assessment: Other (100%).
Students' progress will be monitored by their supervisors through verbal discussion of the submitted written work. The work they undertake for this course is expected to feed directly into the preparation of the Research Proposal (AN443) and will be formally examined through it.

AN443
Research Proposal

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Members of staff of the Anthropology Department
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.
Course content: All students must prepare a formal Research Proposal of 8,000-10,000 words (excluding references) for submission to the Department on or before the deadline in June. The proposal is written under the guidance of their supervisors (as set out in AN442), and will normally draw on material studied as part of AN471 Qualitative and Quantitative Methods for Anthropologists and AN472 Evidence and Arguments in Anthropology and Other Social Sciences. It will be expected to demonstrate knowledge of the regional ethnography, and theoretical and methodological literatures, relevant to the proposed research.
Assessment: Research proposal (100%).

AN444 Half Unit Not available in 2017/18
Investigating the Philippines - New Approaches and Ethnographic Contexts

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD6.07
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Pre-requisites: Graduates taking this course will normally have taken or be taking a foundational course in anthropology. However, topics may be of interest to those in several disciplines. Exemptions may therefore be sought from the lecturer, e.g. for students external to the department, who wish to explore what anthropology can bring to bear on their own fields.
Course content: This course offers the chance to look at the ethnography of one country in more detail than is usual for regional courses. It considers topics taken from the ethnography of the lowland and highland Philippines, with a focus on exciting new high quality writing, drawing on the recent rennaissance in Philippine Studies. The course will balance works by expert non-Filipino ethnographers with the new writing of 'native ethnographies' by Filipino scholars resident both in the Philippines themselves and in the US.
The course will be framed within the colonial, religious and social history of the archipelago, and will consider both new interpretations of Philippine history, and topics on contemporary social issues, as well as using classic works on the Philippines. Teaching each week will normally be organised around the reading of one outstanding ethnography, allowing students to look closely at particular cases. Topics in any year are likely to be drawn from the following list (although obviously only ten topics can be offered in one year) ; Migration, 'mail-order' brides, and the Philippine diaspora ; New religious movements: Philippine colonialism and the processes of conversion: Healing, spirit possession, midwifery and local medicine: The contemporary Catholic Church; Violence in the Philippines; Ecology, landscape and environmental politics: Kinship and its transformations; Gender, Philippine queer theory and Philippine transvestitism: Ritual, drama and local performance traditions: Philippine architecture and material culture.: Philippine cinema: Colonial politics, tribal politics and issues of self-representation: Magic, sorcery and "anitismo"; Tourism, symbolic economies and the impact of international capitalism.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students may be required to prepare discussion material for seminars.
Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course, these are a selection: Michell Rosaldo, Knowledge and Passion;Vicente Rafael, Contracting Colonialism; Fenella Cannell, Power and Intimacy in the Christian Philippines; Sally-Ann Ness, Where Asia Smiles; Heather L Claussen, Unconventual Sisterhood; M F Manalansan, Global Divas: Filipino Gay Men in the Diaspora; Vicente Rafael, White Love and Other Events in Filipino History; Nicole Constable, Maid to order in Hong Kong; Albert Alejo, Generating Energies in Mount Apo.
Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

AN447
China in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Stephan Feuchtwang SHF 3.01 and Dr Andrea Pia KGS 3.07
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Places are limited and priority is given to MSc China in Comparative Perspective students.
Course content: The main object of the course is to help students develop ways of putting the politics, economy and social life of China into a framework in which they can compare and juxtapose it with other major examples. Students will bring whatever theoretical approaches they have already learned and are continuing to learn in the disciplines they bring to the course. They will be expected to demonstrate and explain how they are using them as well as to listen to other approaches and disciplinary perspectives. The topics for each week are as follows: 1. Introduction; 2. The Imperial Bureaucracy; 3. Great and Little Tradition; 4. Chinese religions; 5. Long-term history and political economy comparisons; 6. Economic and demographic transitions; 7. Nationalism and the Modern State; 8. Revolution and Maoism; 9. Socialism; 10. Postsocialism; 11. The Countryside; 12. The City; 13. Family and Gender; 14. Property rights; 15. Consumerism; 16. School and ideology; 17. Civil society; 18. The Rule of Law; 19. Democracy and Political Reform; 20. Transnational China.
Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST. This course has reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Those who have registered for this degree (but not those who take this as a unit in another degree) will attend tutorials in groups of three to five every two weeks, starting in week 2. For these tutorials, students will write four essays, two in Michaelmas Term and two in Lent Term. These essays will not be assessed for the degree.

Anthropology of Politics

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD 5.09
Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course focuses on the notion of power and its cross-cultural application. Using Marxist, Weberian, and Foucauldian approaches it explores how power travels through different socio-cultural contexts, paying attention to issues such as domination and resistance, patron-client relations, the mafia, revolution and violence. A recurring theme throughout the course concerns the state. How should the state be studied anthropologically? Processes of state formation and disintegration, nationalism in its various guises, and state-society relations will be reviewed in order to understand how European, post-colonial, and post-socialist societies are governed.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.
Formative coursework: Students will undertake collaborative discussion duties during seminars for which they will receive formative feedback. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

Anthropology of Economy (1): Production and Exchange

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys OLD 6.08
Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Anthropology, MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition) and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course examines 'the economy' as an object of scholarly analysis and a domain of social action. We start by asking how scholars have measured, described, modeled, and predicted its behaviour; what forms economic institutions take cross-culturally; and how these institutions were transformed as a result of their incorporation into a wider capitalist markets, state systems, and development initiatives. For example, we will examine the central place of households within capitalist economies, largely overlooked by mainstream economic analyses, and the role that money can play in both dividing and uniting human societies. The course will familiarise students with fundamental aspects of the field and with core concepts used in anthropological analyses of economic life, such as production, consumption, exchange, property, alienation, scarcity, and value. But we will also try to break open the standard frames of the debate by highlighting, for example, the entanglement of nature in the capitalist expansion, and how economic life is rarely stable. What progress have anthropologists made in understanding booms, busts, prolonged pauses and delays? What can ethnography tell us about how people cope with crises and instabilities, individually and collectively, and how they seek to anticipate what the future may hold? Throughout the course, students will engage both with theoretical writings and with a range of select ethnographies to gain a rounded understanding of relevant debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students will do presentations during seminars for which they will receive formative feedback. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

Anthropology of Economy (2): Transformation and Globalisation

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.09
Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Anthropology, MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition) and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The course addresses topics in the anthropology of globalisation. Scholars in a wide range of disciplines have sought to understand the new forms of production, consumption, exchange and financial circulation that have emerged since the 1980s. Some emphasise post-Fordist methods of flexible production and neo-liberal elite projects. Others focus on trans-state processes of globalisation. For other theorists shifts in state policies such as austerity, decentralised planning, public-private partnerships and the deregulation of financial markets are at the centre of analysis. Others address new forms of consumer society, popular desires for social mobility and transnational migration. Drawing from ethnographies and anthropological theory this course equips students to evaluate these arguments. Importantly it also revisits classic topics in economic anthropology from the perspective of present realities — for example production and intimate economies; formal markets in relation to informalised, violent economies; circulation in relation to financial debt and risk; and consumption and consumer citizenship.

Children and Youth in Contemporary Ethnography

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: For much of its history, and with some notable exceptions, anthropology has paid little serious attention to children. However, recent years have seen a growing interest in both 'childhood' as a historical and social construction, and in children's engagement with their own social worlds. This course aims to introduce students to emerging ethnographic work on children and youth, in order to explore both its theoretical and methodological challenges. Ethnographic studies will cover a wide range of societies and regions, including anthropological work on children and childhood in the US and UK. The course will begin with an investigation of children's place in anthropology, including early anthropological work on 'Culture and Personality' and 'child socialisation'. The course will then move to consider a variety of topics that have been the focus of recent ethnographic study. These may include: children's play, childhood identities and kinship, education and schooling, youth cultures and globalization, children's work, street children and children's competencies in contexts of crisis, including war.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of film screenings in LT. 1 hour revision session in ST.
Formative coursework: In addition to preparing discussion material for seminars, students will normally write one tutorial essay for the course. Students will be supplied with a mock exam paper.

Anthropology and Media

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course introduces students to anthropological analyses of media, including books and other printed texts, photography, radio, television, film, and the internet. Although 'the anthropology of media' is often understood to be a relatively new subfield, there has been a long-standing interest in media technologies within the discipline. There is also an important manner, from an anthropological point of view, in which 'media technologies' have to be understood not only as these cultural artefacts (radio, film) but also the more elementary senses they express (hearing, sight, etc). We therefore investigate media both as a broad conceptual category and as specific technologies of communication. The course begins with a historical overview of anthropologists' investigations of media technologies, broadly construed. We then move on to consider ethnographic case studies of media in context. Examples may include: photography in India, radio in Zambia, television and cassette circulation in Egypt, mobile phones in Jamaica, book groups in England, and 'indigenous video' in Brazil and Australia. Throughout the course the case studies are framed in relation to some of the key theoretical debates that have shaped media studies in anthropology and related disciplines since the 1930s. Some attention is also given to the methodological problems involved in studying media, especially the extent to which it challenges the possibility of conducting fieldwork by participant observation.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay will be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Ontology

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott OLD6.16
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: In Western thought, the study of the nature of being itself (Greek ontos), including theories about how things come into being and how they are related to one another, is known as ontology. Building on, but broadening the scope of this Western tradition, the growing anthropological literature on questions of being seeks to document ethnographically and model theoretically the many different ontologies, or lived realities, that shape social practice in diverse historical, geographic, and cultural contexts. Twenty-first century anthropology has seen an 'ontological turn', or more broadly, the emergence of 'the anthropology of ontology' as a recognized sub-field. Increasingly, there is a convergence of anthropological discourses around the concept of ontology, yet there is no unified approach to this topic. The anthropology of ontology remains a set of loosely linked discussions. Working in different geographical regions and drawing on different intellectual antecedents, anthropologists interested in questions of being have developed different analytical vocabularies and models that are now in need of comparison and mutual interpretation. This course provides an orientation to the various backgrounds and points of similarity and difference that constitute this emergent sub-field. Through ethnographic readings from such contexts as Aboriginal Australia, Amazonia, Central Asia, China, Melanesia, Native Alaska, Polynesia, and the history of science, the course takes a comparative approach to the exploration of different ontologies and their relationship to practice, cultural change, ethics, and social conflict.
Questions and topics covered include: the relationship between ontology and cosmology; where and how - beyond myth and ritual - ontologies are available to ethnographic observation; theories of animism versus Western nature/culture dualism; Amazonian perspectivism; relationship to place and the environment as indices of ontology; the ontological status of 'things'; dreams, illness, and curing as indices of different modalities of being; conflicting ontological assumptions in intercultural contexts; processes of ontological transformation; scientific ontologies; the ontological assumptions that have informed anthropology.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Borders and Boundaries: Ethnographic Approaches

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: How do territorial borders influence human behaviour and thinking, and how, in turn, do people create, manage and manipulate such borders? These questions have become pressing with the intensification and politicisation of global interconnectedness. While a few decades ago the tearing down of the Berlin Wall seemed to herald a border-less world, today the loudest politicians promise to create "huge, great, great,beautiful walls." This course studies the numerous tensions accompanying global interconnectedness. Why is it so difficult to make borders impermeable? How do smuggling networks operate? What does the world look like from the perspective of undocumented migrants? What are the effects of new border fortification technologies? What is it like to live in a gated community? Are people boundary-drawing creatures? Why do borders play a central role in images of utopia? Why is it silly yet productive to ask: where is the border between Europe and Asia? These and other questions will be discussed by situating ourselves ethnographically in the borderlands, potentially making us realise that "the frontier is all around us."
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.
Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

Understanding Religion in the Contemporary World

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07, Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.09 and Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The course will consider the distinctive definition and understanding of 'religion' within the social sciences, asking the key question ' what is the object of "religion" for the social sciences?' . The course will introduce students to the classical social science sources on religion (including, but not limited to, Durkheim, Weber and Marx) and the particular problematics which their views on religion imply. There will be discussion of the different traditions of social scientific thinking about religion which flow from these foundational thinkers into current debates. Secondly, the course will focus on a range of empirical and ethnographic case studies, which illustrate some of the diversity of religious practice around the world, and some of the consequences which may flow from adopting particular definitions of what 'religion' is. One underlying theme in the course, will be the need to pay attention to ways in which the category and the domain of religion are redefined, or claimed to be redefined, in modernity, in relation to other domains of life including politics, kinship and economy. The focus will be on understanding through specific ethnographic and empirical materials, the ways in which lived religious practice, and the understanding of religion, may differ radically inside and outside 'Western' and modern contexts. We will also pay attention to cases in which (as in all post-colonial settings, and in relation to so-called fundamentalisms) 'Western' and the 'non-Western' definitions are emerging in interplay with each other. The first term considers key themes and theoretical topics in the anthropology of religion literature in the light of these framings. The second term will include sustained case-studies drawing on current research within the LSE, and comparative thematic discussions. Students have the opportunity to work with their lecturers through lines of analysis and problems in evidence and reasoning drawn from the lecturers' primary research, and to see at first hand how professional anthropologists move towards their conclusions. The second term therefore encourages students to begin to think like research anthropologists themselves, while also consolidating key theoretical and ethnographic bodies of knowledge. There will be a focus on contemporary issues in the study of religion including the organization of religion in a range of different societies, its relationship to broad social change including the rise of modernity/capitalism, global political-economy, and its codification in institutions such as the family, law, gender and the state.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
In LT the format is one two-hour interactive seminar per week.
Formative coursework: Formative coursework will include 1) discussions and presentations during the dedicated seminar and 2) the writing of non-coursework essays which will be discussed in small-group tutorials within the anthropology department as described above.

The Anthropology of South Asia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD5.09
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development

Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: This course will aim to address issues of citizenship, inequality, political participation and democratic governance in rural and urban India. The course will cover both classic and current literature and weekly sessions will be organised thematically. We will start by looking at India's place in the world as a democracy and emerging economy and the many paradoxes that the country throws up - alongside some of the highest rates of economic growth, India also has one of the lowest performances on development indicators; despite 40% adult illiteracy, India has among the highest voter turnout rates in the world; despite local institutions having the least power compared to state level or the central government, ordinary people feel most invested in local elections; India remains largely rural yet India will hold the largest urban population in the world in less than ten years...and so on. In order to understand these paradoxes, it is essential that issues of caste and class be examined in some detail, through the anthropological literature produced on these topics over the past 60 years or so. The changing caste dynamics will be examined through everyday practices of discrimination, violence and endogamy as well as institutional innovations of affirmative action for jobs and education. Class relations have also dramatically changed with land reforms in rural India as well as a substantial middle class has emerged in urban India. Economic reforms introduced since the 1990s have altered modes of retail and consumption in both urban and rural India creating new inequalities and entrenching old ones. In the political arena, these changing practices and dynamics have led to a democratic upsurge from below, leading to a greater participation in the electoral process by members of the lower castes and classes of India.
All these issues and more will be addressed in this course through the rich corpus of anthropological literature on the subject alongside examples from India's vibrant media and popular culture.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in MT as well as film screenings (to be scheduled at the start of term). One revision session in ST.

The Anthropology of Amazonia

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Agustin Diz OLD 6.06
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.
Course content: The course will introduce students to selected themes in the anthropology of Amazonia. It will provide a grounding in the ethnographic literature of the region while seeking to engage with current theoretical debates, highlighting their potential importance to the discipline of anthropology. Topics to be covered include history, indigenous social movements; sexuality and gender; trade and inter-ethnic relations; politics and power; illness, well-being and death. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the broader relationship between ethnography and theory, to challenge common stereotypes of Amazonia and its inhabitants, and to explore ways in which the region has inscribed itself on the imagination of anthropologists and laypersons alike.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.
Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees will have the opportunity to prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting formative essays to the course teacher.

Anthropology of Religion: Current Themes and Theories

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott OLD 6.16
Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is not available as an outside option.
Course content: Through readings in contemporary ethnography and theory, this course will explore phenomena and questions classically framed as the anthropology of religion. We will consider topics such as shamanism, cargo cults, initiation, witchcraft and sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.
Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT.
Formative coursework: Discussions and presentations during seminars.

Qualitative and Quantitative Methods for Anthropologists

This information is for the 2017/18 session.
Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08
Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.
Course content: The twofold aim of this course is to provide students with insights into the process by which anthropological knowledge is produced, and to train them in the collection and analysis of qualitative and quantitative data. In doing so it offers students a methodological framework for conceptualising and designing their own PhD research projects. The course discusses the nature of ethnographic data and evidence, its implications for research, and ways of incorporating empirical data in ethnographic texts. Special attention is paid to statistical analysis and sampling methods as a means to strengthen and enhance qualitative insights.
Teaching: 40 hours of seminars in the MT.
This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.
