The Emergence of Modern Iran: State, Society and Diplomacy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Roham Alvandi SAR M.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Please note that students taking this course cannot take GV4E7 Islamic Republic of Iran: Society, Politics, the Greater Middle East (H).

Course content: This course examines the emergence of modern Iran against the backdrop of Iran's political, social and diplomatic history from the 16th century to 2003. It covers three inter-related topics: the history of the modern Iranian state; the interaction between state and society in modern Iran; and Iran's diplomatic history. The course is divided into three sections. The first section examines the emergence of modern Iran under the Safavid and Qajar dynasties, with a particular focus on reform, revolution and Iran's encounter with European imperialism. The second section deals with the Pahlavi era and the attempts by both Pahlavi monarchs to strengthen the Iranian state while confronting social resistance at home and asserting Iran's power abroad. The third section deals with the origins of the Iranian revolution of 1978/79 and the transformation of the Iranian state under the Islamic Republic. Here we consider how war and peace shaped the domestic politics and foreign policy of revolutionary Iran, with a particular focus on US-Iran relations and the rise and fall of the reform movement.

Islam, State and Conflict in Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kirsten Schulze SAR 2.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course looks at Indonesia, Malaysia, and the Philippines from the colonial period to the present day. It focuses on Islam, state and conflict, starting with a broader discussion of the Islamisation of Southeast Asia and the entry of the European colonial powers. This is followed by a closer analysis of the relationship between Islam and the colonial state with seminars on the Dutch East Indies, 'British' Malaya, and the 'Spanish' Philippines. The course then looks at the rise of nationalism and the interplay of Islam and nationalism in the Muslim-majority states of Indonesia and Malaysia as well as the Muslim-minority state of , the Philippines. In the second term this course studies the dynamics of Islam, the state, and local society in the Darul Islam rebellions (Indonesia), the Aceh conflict (Indonesia), the Mindanao conflict (the Philippines), as well as the Poso and Ambon conflicts (Indonesia). It also looks at Islam and social conflict in Malaysia and Indonesia as well as the rise of regional and international jihadism with Jemaah Islamiyya and the Southeast Asian affiliates of ISIS.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The Cold War in Latin America

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anna Cant

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar is designed to introduce students to new historical approaches to the Cold War in Latin America. It responds to new research and debates that have arisen in recent years regarding the meaning of the Cold War in a Latin American context. Students will examine the conflict's origins, who its protagonists were, the extent to which the superpowers were involved in it and its significance at a local, regional, and global level. The course places particular emphasis on the role of ideas and ideological struggles; the intersection between these ideas and the challenges of modernity and economic development; the causes of revolutionary and counter-revolutionary upheaval; the manifestations of violence and its effects; and the cultural Cold War. Students will be especially encouraged to explore the intra-regional and transnational dynamics of the Cold War in Latin America. They will study how events in one part of Latin America (for example, the overthrow of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala, the Cuban Revolution, the Brazilian and Chilean coups or the Central American crises in the 1980s) impacted upon other areas of region. The seminar will also devote three weeks to looking at Latin America's experience of the Cold War from a global comparative perspective, particularly in contrast to other parts of the Third World. Although the seminar will mostly involve intensive reading and discussion of secondary sources, students will also be encouraged to reflect on new online archival material, published writings of principal thinkers and oral histories as a means of understanding key concepts and ideas.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write one 3,000 word formative essay in the Michaelmas Term and one formative discussion post at the beginning of the year.

Indicative reading: Gilbert Joseph and Daniela Spenser (eds.), In From the Cold: Latin America's New Encounter with the Cold War (2007); Greg Grandin and Gilbert Joseph (eds.), A Century of Revolution: Insurgent and Counterinsurgent Violence During Latin America's Long Cold War (2011); Michael Löwy (ed.), Marxism in Latin America from 1909 to the Present: An Anthology (1992); Thomas C. Living with the Bomb: An International History of Nuclear Weapons and the Arms Race from the Second World War to the end of the Cold War

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Jones SAR 3.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course takes as a prime focus the nuclear policies pursued by some of the major powers in the international system from the initial use of nuclear weapons against Japan in 1945 until the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991. It introduces and explores three main themes: how the advent of nuclear weapons came to influence national strategies and crisis behaviour; why the development of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems fuelled an arms race that became one of the defining features of the Cold War; and how major powers have attempted to curb the testing of such weapons, the numbers contained in their arsenals, and their spread, through measures of arms control and non-proliferation. After examining the controversy over the atomic bombing of Japan in 1945, including the moral and ethical questions raised by nuclear use, the course includes consideration of some of the most important events and debates in post-war nuclear history – the course is not designed or intended to be a potted history of the Cold War, but rather looks at the influence and role of nuclear weapons (and the strategic thinking that accompanied their development). The movement to ban the testing of nuclear weapons is also covered, and attention given to the Chinese, British and French national nuclear programmes, as well as those of the Soviet Union and United States. The last portion of the course offers close analysis of the international negotiations over arms control and non-proliferation that have featured since the late 1960s. Throughout the course students will engage with contemporary writings and study primary source documents which will accompany each topic.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly class, to deliver presentations, and to participate in seminar discussions. Reading week will take place in week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce a 2,000 word formative essay during week 6 of the Michaelmas Term.

LSE-Columbia University Double Degree Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Taylor C. Sherman, SAR M.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: During their first year at Columbia University, students will identify a topic for the dissertation and will submit a detailed dissertation proposal form to their LSE supervisor. They will also have undertaken substantial research over the course of the summer, have written a Dissertation Research Report before arriving at LSE and be in a position to talk in a detailed manner with regards to their dissertation. These and the completion of other formal requirements for year one of the Double Degree will be needed before students can proceed to the second year of the programme at LSE.

Course content: The individual dissertation will be supervised and assessed at LSE in accordance with the Department's MSc regulations. It will be in the form of a thesis of no more than 15,000 words. The dissertation workshop will complement this by offering sessions on methodological topics, and 7 sessions in which the students will each present updates on their research over the summer (MT) and a 3,000 word extract from their dissertations for group discussion, evaluation and analysis (LT).

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be requested to submit a Dissertation Research Report for discussion in the MT. Students are also required to circulate a 3000-word extract of their dissertation for discussion in the LT.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course but will include the following introductory surveys: Berger, Feldner and Passmore, Writing History; D Cannadine (Ed), What is History now?; L Jordanova, History in Practice; R Evans, In Defence of History; J Tosh, The Pursuit of the Past; M Bloch, The Historian's Craft; R G Collingwood, The Idea of History.

The Ottoman Empire and its Legacy, 1299-1950

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Noemi Lévy-Aksu

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Ottoman Empire (1299-1923) was one of the longest lasting and most territorially extensive of all empires in history. Yet today few know about its nature, whether in Turkey or abroad. Who were the Ottomans? How did they run their empire? How did they manage diversity? How did their understanding and practice of Islam change over time? What was the secret of their success, and what ultimately caused the empire's fall? How do the Ottomans compare to other contemporary empires? What is the Ottoman legacy, especially in Turkey and Greece? What is the significance of the Ottoman Empire for world history? In order to answer these questions we will study the following topics: three pillars of Ottoman inheritance: Byzantium, Islam, Mongols; the origins and rise of the Ottoman Empire; the conquest of Constantinople and its significance for world history; Ottoman state institutions in the "classic age," gendering Ottoman History; the Ottomans and the Renaissance; the Ottomans and the Age of Exploration; the Ottoman-Safavid-Habsburg struggle for supremacy; Ottoman Jews: model minority?; sixteenth- and seventeenth-century transformations; pietism, conversion, and interreligious relations; reform and repression, 1839-1908; Orientalism and the Ottomans; the Young Turks and the revolution of 1908; World War I and the Armenian genocide; Atatürk: the "Father" of Modern Turkey and the new Turkish Republic; the Kurdish issue; the legacy of the Ottoman Empire in comparative perspective; and the Ottoman past in Turkish historical fiction.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms and a revision session in the Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Weekly written and oral reading reports in MT and LT. Completion of these is mandatory, in order to facilitate good seminar discussions.

Indicative reading: Jane Burbank and Frederick Cooper, Empires in World History: Power and the Politics of Difference (Princeton 2010); Marshall Hodgson, Rethinking World History: Essays on Europe, Islam, and World History (Cambridge 1993); Caroline Finkel, Osman's Dream: The History of the Ottoman Empire (London 2005); Giancarlo Casale, The Ottoman Age of Exploration (Oxford 2011); Marc David Baer, Honored by the Glory of Islam: Conversion and Conquest in Ottoman Europe (Oxford 2008); Marc David Baer, The Dönme: Jewish Converts, Muslim Revolutionaries, and Secular Turks (Stanford 2010); Mark Mazower, Salonica City of Ghosts: Christians, Muslims, and Jews 1430-1950 (Vintage 2006).

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (15%) and class participation (15%) in the MT and LT. The participation grade will be based on the quality of the student's contribution to seminar discussions, and weekly posting of reading responses.

The Origins of the Cold War, 1917-1962

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Vladislav Zubok SAR 3.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the origins of the Cold War and the dynamics of its rise during the period from World War II to the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962. It looks at long-term trends as well as specific events in order to elucidate how the Cold War originated and evolved. It deals with the Cold War as international history, covering the period from a wide variety of geographical and national angles: while some meetings necessarily centre on an individual state or a bilateral relationship, there will be others that deal with a wider region or with global trends. Intellectually, therefore, the course stresses the transformation of the field from the study of (primarily American) national foreign policy to a broader international approach.

There are seminars on the following topics: Introduction. The Origins of the Origins, 1917-1943; The Breakdown of the Grand Alliance, 1943-1946; The Division of Germany, 1945-1952; The Sovietisation of Eastern Europe and the Yugoslav Exception; The Marshall Plan and the Foundation of NATO; Nuclear Weapons, Science, and Technology at the Start of the Cold War, 1945-1952; The Communist Victory in China and the Origins of the Korean War; The Korean War; Grand Strategy I: The Soviet Union and the Post-War World, 1945-1953; Grand Strategy II: The United States and the Post-War World, 1945-1953; Cold War Liberalism and McCarthyism: Anti-Communism and the Cold War in American Politics and Culture, 1947-1954; The Sino-Soviet Alliance, 1954-1962; Indochina Wars: From the French Indochina War to the Eve of American Intervention; Eastern Europe from 1953 to the Aftermath of the 1956 Revolutions; The Berlin Crisis, 1958-1962; From the Cuban Revolution to the Cuban Missile Crisis, 1958-1962; Grand Strategy III: Soviet Foreign Policy from Stalin's Death to the Cuban Missile Crisis; Grand Strategy IV: US National Security Policy from Eisenhower to Kennedy; Nuclear Arms Race and the Crisis of Bipolarity, 1953-62; The World Economy, Identities, and the Cold War, 1917-1962.

There are lectures (joint with HY206) covering the following topics: The Breakdown of the Grand Alliance, 1943-1946; The Division of Germany; The Iron Curtain; The Marshall Plan and the Foundation of NATO; The United States and Japan, 1945-1965; The Outbreak of the Korean War; The Sino-Soviet Alliance; The 1956 Hungarian Revolution; Technologies, Weapons, and the Arms Race; The Cuban Revolution and the 1962 Missile Crisis; Culture and Mindsets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Twenty two-hour hour seminars and twenty one-hour survey lectures. The twofold emphasis of the seminars is on working with primary sources and working with the historiography, in particular the recent 'New Cold War History', in order to understand how historians have interpreted (and re-interpreted) the origins of the Cold War in light of their access to new sources. The lectures are joint with HY206.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms and a revision session in the Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students are required to make brief historiographical notes for each seminar starting from week 3, to give two oral presentations during the year and to submit one 3000-word formative essay in the Michaelmas Term (the second essay is assessed, see below).

Indicative reading: M.P. Leffler/O.A. Westad (eds), The Cambridge History of the Cold War; J.M. Hanhimäki/O.A. Westad (eds), The Cold War: A History in Documents and Eyewitness Accounts; J.L. Gaddis, The Cold War: A New History; V.M. Zubok, A Failed Empire.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (25%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The International History of the Balkans since 1939: State Projects, Wars, and Social Conflict

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Svetozar Rajak SAR.3.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the history of the Balkans in the second half of the Twentieth century and on the threshold of the Twenty First century. It is not, however, designed to provide a simple historical overview of the region during this period. The course aims to integrate broader themes and interpretations of the Cold War and its legacy, and of deeper civilizational undercurrents of the second half of the Twentieth Century, with the study of the region and its only federation, Yugoslavia. To do so, it will invoke three main themes that will also facilitate insight into the interaction between the global, regional, and country specific. Firstly, the course will explore the regional and inter-bloc dynamics within the structured Cold War system by looking at the impact the Cold War had on the region and, in turn, at the influence the Balkans, in particular the Greek Civil War and Yugoslavia's conflict with the USSR exercised on the institutionalization and the dynamics of the Cold War during its nascent decade. Secondly, the course will look into the unique role Yugoslavia played in the creation of the alternatives and challenges to the bipolar structure and rigidity of the Cold War world, namely the Non-aligned Movement, and the ideological heresy, the so called "Yugoslav road to Socialism" that created a schism within one of the ideological poles of the Cold War, the Soviet Communism. Thirdly, the course will offer insight into the dramatic impact the end of the Cold War on the developments in the region, in particular on the collapse of the Yugoslav federation; at the same time, it will assess the role that the disintegration of Yugoslavia and the subsequent wars of secession had on the creation of the concepts that became the building blocks of the post-Cold War international system, namely nation-building, humanitarian intervention, international community, conflict-resolution, limited sovereignty, decreasing role of the UN, American hegemony, etc.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Course content: How did past societies and cultures understand the world around them? How did those societies use maps to represent physical, social and imaginative spaces? Do maps merely reflect particular mentalities and social practices, or do they actively shape the experience and perception of the world? Maps, History and Power addresses these and other questions by exploring mapping practices and spatial thought in several European and non-European contexts from the medieval to the modern periods. The course explores how past societies have used maps to serve a number of practical and ideological purposes: to express religious belief, to aid navigation and commerce, to assert cultural superiority, and to enable state formation or imperial control. Alongside readings in history and cartography, the course will make extensive and innovative use of the latest digital resources, allowing students to view and discuss historical maps from the world's great research libraries and collections.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course operates reading weeks in the MT and LT. There will be a revision session in Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit two 3,000 word formative essays (one per term). They will also have the opportunity to sit a mock exam.

European Empires and Global Conflict, 1935-1948

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the history of the European empires in the Second World War. It covers the history of the war fought in the imperial world and its impact on the lives of millions of colonial civilians; the political, military, and social history of colonial soldiers who fought in Europe's multi-ethnic and multi-religious armies; the history of anti-colonial movements during the war, from Ho Chi Minh's Viet Minh to Gandhi's Quit India movement; and the history of the war's impact on decolonisation and the twentieth century world order. Overall, the course explores the non-European experience of the Second World War, examining the ways in which the conflict shaped societies and political orders in Africa, Asia, and beyond. Drawing on key secondary texts, primary sources, and visual material, the course provides a broad introduction to the most destructive and cataclysmic conflict in modern global history.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be capped at one group. Places are limited and priority will be given to International History students over those of other departments.

Course content: This course provides an overview of the history of Qing China from the early eighteenth to the mid-nineteenth centuries, tracing political, institutional, cultural, and social continuities and changes, particularly in China's land and maritime frontiers. Beginning in the Qianlong period, the Qing Empire became involved in an ever-growing network of commerce and cultural exchange, extending from Manchuria to Inner Asia, and from the East Sea to the Indian Ocean. Following the bloody suppression of the Lhasa riots in 1750, a series of events further connected China to the external world: the infamous Dzungar genocide, China's invasion of Burma, European encroachment in Asian seas, the rise of port cities in Southeast Asia that were dominated by Chinese entrepreneurs, and increasing tension between China and Western powers over sea lanes and maritime boundaries. This course will use China's shifting frontiers as a fulcrum to re-examine Chinese history in the modern era, factoring in the movement of people, commodities, ideas, cultural meanings, and imaginaries, which clearly indicate "China's outwardness." This challenges the common perception of China as isolated and inward-looking.

Slavery and Emancipation in the British World

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Padraic Scanlan SAR.3.05

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course explores the history of slavery and freedom in Britain and the British world from 1600 to 1900. In the liberal tradition, slavery and freedom are framed as theoretical and rhetorical opposites. In practice, the lines between slavery and freedom were blurry and ambiguous. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, sugar grown and processed in the British colonies of the Caribbean by enslaved African workers was a cornerstone of the imperial economy. Britain's North American colonies were caught in the economic and political orbit of the sugar islands. At the end of the eighteenth century, the American, French and Haitian Revolutions transformed, but did not end, the political economy of slavery in the British world. In 1807, Britain abolished its slave trade. In 1834, slavery was abolished in the British empire. Abolition did not, however, end Britain's close association with slavery. Cotton produced by enslaved people in the American South provided Britain with crucial raw material during the industrial revolution. British investments kept the empire imbricated in the global trade in enslaved people and the commodities their labour produced. And yet, even as the British empire became entrenched in the nineteenth-century world of slavery, reformers placed ever greater faith in liberal ideas of freedom, bureaucratic transparency, free labour, and free markets. This course offers an opportunity to examine the place of slavery and emancipation in the history of the British world, and the ambiguities and paradoxes of a liberal empire built on the backs of enslaved people.

Race, Gender and Reproduction in the Caribbean, 1860s-1980s

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Imaobong Umoren SAR 3.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In the wake of slavery, debates about the intersecting politics of race, gender, and reproduction arose in the Francophone, Anglophone, and Hispanic Caribbean and continued well into the 1960s. This module explores the ways in which the formerly enslaved as well as former planters, imperial officials, newly indentured labourers from South Asia, philanthropists, medical professionals, and welfare workers contributed to and shaped colonial social welfare, health policies, and ideas surrounding racial uplift and improvement. Students will engage in comparative intellectual and social history by drawing on primary and secondary sources to consider the influence of European and American imperialism in the Caribbean. A range of topics will be explored including post-emancipation population decline; infant mortality; illegitimacy; venereal disease; birth control; inter- and extra regional migration; eugenics; tropical medicine; interwar population increase and the impact these issues had on the First and Second World Wars, decolonisation, departmentalisation and other independence struggles. Each week students will focus on a topic in relation to different Caribbean islands. All primary sources will be available in English.

The Origins of the Modern World: Europe, China and India, 1600-1800

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gagan D. S. Sood SAR 2.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is about the developments which led to the emergence of our modern world. A variety of conditions have been highlighted by historians as responsible for this, including government reform, agricultural practices, empirical rationality, consumption patterns, military conflict, property rights, family arrangements, territorial conquest, revenue administration, and sheer accident. Although scholarly consensus on the leading-edge conditions still eludes us, there is broad agreement that the polities of northwestern Europe, eastern China and northern India played critical roles, and that the fateful step change occurred between the seventeenth and early nineteenth centuries.

We will examine the main polities of these regions - Early Modern Britain, Qing China and Mughal India - and the relations between them from two distinct but complementary perspectives, which define the two terms of the course. One is historiographical and centres on received interpretive frameworks, the other is historical and builds on our best current knowledge of Eurasia in the period. In the Michaelmas Term, we will study the paradigms and narratives that have been elaborated by historians to make sense of the step change which occurred from the seventeenth century. Each crystallises a specific set of structures and gives primacy to different polities of Eurasia, with a particular stress on Early Modern Britain, Qing China and/or Mughal India. In studying these frameworks, we will gain familiarity with the most significant attributes of these polities, and how they have been interpreted by scholars for their general import. In the Lent Term, we will study the ways in which the three polities addressed the near-universal problems faced in all complex states and societies. The solutions that were historically proposed, attempted and enacted powerfully shaped their future trajectories, and had a direct bearing on relations between Europe, China and India. By recovering the most consequential structures and solutions over the two terms of this course, there then arises the prospect of apprehending the origins of the modern world.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in both the MT and the LT. As no prior knowledge of the course's subject is either assumed or required, it is essential for students to do the set readings and assignments, attend the seminars and engage actively in discussion. It is also strongly recommended that students meet informally outside the class setting to compare notes and learn from each other.

Formative coursework: A 3000-word essay will be due towards the end of MT on a historiographical topic decided in consultation with the instructor. Each week, students will work through a core reading that provides important background information, as well as selected further readings in line with their developing interests. These tasks will be supplemented with short response papers or memos to be posted on Moodle before the weekly seminars and unassessed debates and oral presentations during the seminars themselves.

Indicative reading: For general surveys, students may consult: David B. Abernethy, The Dynamics of Global Dominance: European Overseas Empires, 1415-1980 (New Haven, CT, 2000); Christopher A. Course content: This course will consider how environmental ideas and practices have shaped relations between nation-states and the wider world throughout history. Diplomatic and environmental historians have struggled to speak to each other despite a shared interest in the world—a world defined largely by political boundaries in one vision and by environmental features in the other. However, recently, historians have begun to explore how environmental ideas and processes, from resource scarcity to climate change, became an object of international relations, as well as how environmental conditions shaped the field of possible action in the enactment of foreign relations. This course will therefore consider how industrialized nations, especially the United States, thought about nature and impacted ecosystems at home and abroad in the modern era. It briefly reviews early colonial encounters between peoples and environments across the Americas and Asia, before turning to late-nineteenth and twentieth-century attempts to engineer and conserve nature across the globe in the image of Western modernity and postwar debates about over-population, resource scarcity, nuclear contamination, chemical toxins, and Anthropogenic climate change. We will engage an array of topics of relevance to international history, including colonialism, imperialism, war, modernization, development, multilateral institutions, and nongovernmental organizations and examine a growing array of scholarship in U.S. Environmental History, International History, Globalization Studies, Political Economy, and Postcolonial Studies that have brought the environment from the background to the center of their analyses. Students will be prepared to analyse historical debates over how humans, corporations, and governments have interacted with nonhuman nature on a global scale, and how nonhuman nature shaped interactions over time. Along the way, we will ask, how did officials and decision-makers try to define and manage a borderless nature? How might an environmental lens help us to better understand historical relationships between nations?

Cold War Public Diplomacy: United States Cultural Battles Abroad

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Victoria Phillips

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course is intended for students with or without a detailed knowledge of the Cold War and public diplomacy. However, students without a detailed knowledge of Cold War history are advised to undertake preliminary background reading.

Course content: Because the Cold War was a series of ideological battles for the "hearts and minds of mankind," culture became a weapon. This seminar examines the United States' export of its ideals to counter communism abroad. Although the course focuses on American-led projects, soft power, and psychological warfare, the reach was global and thus offers the opportunity to examine nations world-wide. The class opens with an examination of American political power from the 19th-century's claims about the frontier through the American Century and Cold War conceptions of "truth," "propaganda," and "informational" practices. The intersection of American governmental branches and clandestine operations with international private foundations, the press, advertising agencies, universities, corporations, and private individuals unpack the complexity of export operations. The course continues to explore cultural diplomacy through radio, music, modernist art, dance, literature, books, magazines, film, television, architecture, and sports. It examines the power of race, gender, and religion. The concept of soft power is challenged by its intersection with military operations, hot wars, or the threat of nuclear attacks in case studies of Korea, Berlin, Cuba, and Vietnam. Cultural exports are examined in the context of secondary source readings and primary sources including conventional archival documents as well as examples of art, film, and performances.

A Gender History of National Socialism – History, Memory, Debates

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Johanna Gehmacher

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Women's- and Gender history of National Socialism, which has developed into a differentiated field of research in the last four decades, has clearly shown that Gender is highly relevant to the analysis of National Socialist ideology and politics in many respects. This applies to gendered hierarchies of the political public, to gendered strategies of the war economy, as well as to the racial politics of reproduction that affected women's lives in unequivocal ways. Gender is also extremely relevant to analysing specific forms of participation of men and women in crimes against humanity, war crimes and genocide. When, however, gender policies of the National Socialist regime are addressed in a broader public phantasmatic images that identify submission with femality are widespread and in popular TV documentaries voyeuristic perspectives on the wives and mistresses of Nazi leaders often figure rather prominently. This course will contrast such popular perceptions with a reflexive approach to the wide range of scholarly literature on the gender history of the National Socialism. It will also address gender as a category for the analysis of National Socialism which cannot be discussed without regard to the category of race—to which it is subordinated in National Socialist ideology and politics. The course will reflect the vibrant and controversial field of research from its beginnings in the 1970s up to the present, and thereby combine the approaches of social and gender history, discourse analysis and the history of memory.

The course will both address the historiography of the field and discuss central analytic concepts. It will look into the history of fascist movements in Germany and Austria and examine the participation of women as well as the movements' gendered concepts of society. Students will learn about different aspects of the installation of the National Socialist regime in Germany in the 1930s and discuss various aspects of the gender history of the regime (eg. the intersection between racial laws and family policies, the changing policies on the female work force during the war, the gendered history of genocidal extermination policy or gendered strategies of resistance) using a variety of analytical texts as well as (translated) original sources. The course will also confront the history of public memory of National Socialism and tackle the peculiar role of specific gendered images in memory politics as well as in popular history.

HY499

Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Padraic Scanlan SAR 3.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation and MSc in History of International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The HY499 dissertation is an exercise in using primary sources to write on a precise topic in International History. The only formal limit on the choice of subject is that it must fall within the syllabus - i.e. it has to be a topic in International History, and the dissertation has to be a study in the discipline of history. Dissertations that represent contributions to disciplines outside history, such as International Relations or Politics, will not be approved or accepted. Dissertations must therefore be based substantially on a critical analysis of primary sources, and candidates should aim to include an element of originality in the argument and/or the treatment of the evidence. The subject must involve an element of engagement with the analysis of relations between states and/or societies; alternatively it may involve the study of the history of attitudes and/or policies in one society towards others or comparative studies involving at least two states and/or societies. The topic must not be confined purely to the domestic affairs of one society or state. The dissertation supervisor is the final judge of whether a particular topic falls within the syllabus.

Teaching: 4 one-hour sessions in MT.

HY499 teaching is provided through HY499 Dissertation workshop sessions and through the individual supervision of dissertation projects by supervisors in the Department of International History. Students should use the Michaelmas Term to find, decide on, and develop a suitable dissertation topic and consider possible dissertation supervisors. Help with this process is available from the students' personal advisers. Students are then required to complete the HY499 Dissertation Proposal Form and to seek approval for their project from their dissertation supervisor. It is the students' responsibility to locate a supervisor. They should meet with the potential supervisor in late Michaelmas term (every member of staff has weekly office hours) to discuss their dissertation proposal, and then ask the supervisor to sign the HY499 Dissertation Proposal Form before the published deadline. It is the students' responsibility to contact their supervisor to arrange at least one but no more than three meetings in the Summer Term to discuss their dissertation. At this stage the supervisor will be prepared to read and give feedback on a draft table of contents and a draft chapter, or a section or a detailed plan of the dissertation of no more than 1,000 words. Students should note that if they submit a dissertation proposal after the deadline the Teacher Responsible for the course may need to allocate them to a non-subject-specialist supervisor, if no specialists are available.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. 100% by dissertation. A Fail cannot be compensated, and a degree cannot be awarded unless HY499 has been passed. Dissertations must not exceed 10,000 words, including text and footnotes but excluding the cover page, the table of contents, the list of abbreviations, the bibliography and appendices. Two bound copies and one electronic copy must be submitted by the published deadline.

International Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Wilson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Relations and MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course has 5 objectives: (i) to enquire into the nature of international politics and the role of general theory in advancing our understanding of it; (ii) to introduce the main contributions to the general theory of international politics; (iii) to provide students with a range of concepts, ideas, and perspectives to enable them to widen and deepen their understanding of international politics; (iv) to encourage critical, independent, thought; (v) to ascertain the extent to which progress has been made in our understanding of international politics, and more tentatively to what degree international politics itself can be deemed intrinsically or latently progressive. The primary pedagogical device of the course is a close reading of 13 seminal IR texts. Students are encouraged to investigate the epistemological assumptions underlying these texts, the methods of analysis they employ, their importance in the canon of IR, and their value for thinking about international politics today.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students deliver seminar papers and write three 2,000-word essays for their seminar teachers on topics notified at the beginning of the session.

Indicative reading: H. Bliddal. C. Sylvest and P. Wilson (eds.) Classics of International Relations: Essays in Criticism and Appreciation (2013). E. H. Carr, The Twenty Years' Crisis, 1919-1939: An Introduction to the Study of International Relations (1939). V. Woolf, Three Guineas (1938). H. J. Foreign Policy Analysis III

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christopher Hughes 95A.1.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students taking the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University) may be able to take this course if there is space but on previous years experience this is unlikely.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for

You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: Students need not have studied Foreign Policy Analysis before, but some familiarity with theories of International Relations and modern international history is essential.

Course content: The ways in which states formulate decisions and strategies for dealing with other members of the international community.

Critical examination of theoretical perspectives on foreign policy, involving the analysis of the foreign policy behaviour of a broad range of states through selective use of case studies.

Development of the discipline of Foreign Policy Analysis; the interplay between domestic and external forces; the organisation, psychology and politics of decision-making; the impact of public opinion and state type upon foreign policy; the foreign policies of the major and middle powers as well as small/weak states; conventional and critical theories of FPA; ethical foreign policy. Seminars discuss and expand on these topics, covering also questions of choice, rationality and identity and the significance of history and culture in foreign policy, as well as methodological issues, as appropriate. Students are expected to combine an interest in theoretical and comparative aspects of the subject with a solid knowledge of the main foreign policy issues and events of the contemporary era and the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. A detailed programme of lectures will be provided at the start of the session. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR411-FPA-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: All students who attend the seminar will be expected to write three 2,000 word essays for their seminar leader. Each student will also be expected to present at least one seminar topic.

Indicative reading: The following books are a necessary but not sufficient reading requirement. They provide access to most of the main themes of the course as well as to a considerable amount of empirical material: Chris Alden and Amon Aran, Foreign Policy Analysis: New Approaches: Understanding the diplomacy of war, profit and justice, Routledge, 2011; Valerie M. Hudson, Foreign Policy Analysis: Classic and Contemporary Theory, Rowman and Littlefield, 2007; Graham Allison and Philip Zelikour, Essence of Decision, 2nd ed, Longman, 1999; Christopher Hill, The Changing Politics of Foreign Policy, Palgrave, 2003; Yuen Foong Khong, Analogies at War: Korea, Munich, Dien Bien Phu and the Vietnam Decisions of 1965, Princeton University Press, 1992; Steve Smith, Amelia Hadfield and Timothy Dunne (Eds), Foreign Policy: Theories, Actors, Cases, Oxford University Press, 2012; A more detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

International Relations of the Middle East

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fawaz Gerges CLM.4.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is intended primarily for students on programmes run by the Department of International Relations (IR). Students on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Global Politics may take the course, but this is subject to students demonstrating that they have a grasp of International Relations theory, or have made efforts to cover this ground before starting the course.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed; students external to the IR department must clearly outline the extent to which they are familiar with IR theory/ efforts they will make to familiarise themselves with this area before the course begins.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of the international political system, of the major issues in its contemporary development, and at least a basic understanding of core International Relations theory, is required. Background in IR and/or political science and/or history is a prerequisite.

Course content: The course is intended to provide an analysis of the regional politics of the Middle East since 1918, and of their interaction with problems of international security, global resources and great power/super power/hyperpower politics.

Topics covered include: The emergence of the state system in the Middle East during the inter-war period; the interplay of domestic politics, regional conflicts and international rivalries; the Cold War and post-Cold War significance of the Middle East in global politics; the importance of oil and other economic factors and interests; conflict in the Gulf and the Arab-Israeli conflict; the foreign policies of major Middle Eastern states and the Lebanese civil war; the role of ideologies and social movements: Arab nationalism, militarism, political Islam and global jihadism; state and non-state actors; democracy and human rights issues, the Arab Spring uprisings; and international relations theory and its significance for the study of Middle East politics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Seminar attendees will be expected to submit three 2,500-word essays, based on past examination papers, to be marked by their seminar teacher, and to give presentations in both the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Students are strongly advised to read before the beginning of the course: F. Halliday, The Middle East in International Relations: Power, Politics and Ideology; Fawaz A. Gerges, The Superpowers and the Middle East: Regional and International Politics; M.E. Yapp, The Near East Since the First World War; Fawaz A. IR433 Half Unit

The International Politics of EU Enlargement

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM.4.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Affairs

(LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE4You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course examines EU enlargement from the point of view of International Relations. The principal aim is to understand the interplay between enlargement, EU (foreign) policy and wider geopolitics. With this in mind enlargement is considered both as an act of European foreign policy and as a phenomenon impacting on the (foreign) policies of other states and actors. The course begins with a discussion of the theoretical issues of the international dimension of EU enlargement, including: size; diversity; pace of change; reach; external reactions; and the widening v. deepening dilemma within the EU. It moves on to a broadly chronological discussion of the various phases of enlargement from 1973 to the present, examining the inputs from key Member States as well as from the EU institutions, and analysing the extent to which strategic policy-making characterised each round. In the last part of the course attention switches to more thematic concerns: the impact of EU enlargement on the self-excluded states (Norway, Switzerland, Iceland, and the UK); security, NATO and the post-Cold War European order; the geopolitical issue of Europe's final border; and the view from outsiders, such as the United States and Russia. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR433-EUE-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Two 2,000-word essays.

IR434 Half Unit European Defence and Security

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Spyridon Economides COW 2.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE4You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course examines the role of defence and security issues in European integration. It traces the evolution and nature of decision-making with respect to European defence initiatives, and examines the structures and institutions of EU defence and security. It also seeks to understand the relationship between foreign policy and security/defence policy in the EU especially in the context of transatlantic relations, and NATO, and the EU's wider international role. The course is divided into two parts. Part one provides a theoretical overview of the role of defence and security issues in European integration. It addresses the question of defence and European identity, the relationship between European defence and the national objectives of Member-States, the link between collective defence and collective security as well as the role of defence in the EU's evolution as a civilian, normative and global actor in international relations. It also looks at the historical evolution of the plans, structures and institutions of European defence and security. It places this evolution in the context of the early post-Second World War era, the Cold War and German rearmament and the issues of extended deterrence, burden-sharing within NATO and the emergence of a European pillar to Western defence. Part two examines the more contemporary developments in European defence and security and concentrates on the relationship with European Political Cooperation/Common Foreign and Security Policy, moves to institutionalise defence and provisions for crisis management and conflict prevention. Included in the second part are examinations of the EU's 'comprehensive approach', and recent CSDP missions and the implications of this on the EU's role in the world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

China and the World

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Callahan CLM.5.07 and Prof Christopher Hughes 95A.1.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Relations (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course will provide students with an historical overview of the development of Chinese foreign and security policy, the theoretical concepts used for analysing the making of Chinese foreign policy, and an up-to-date consideration of China's evolving relations around the world. The first five weeks will be dedicated to providing a long historical perspective, and use a number of case studies to show how basic factors used in foreign policy analysis shape policy outcomes, including economic factors, the role of perception, geopolitical influences, bureaucratic politics, nationalism, and socialisation into the international system. The remainder of the course will involve analysing case studies of how China uses its economic, military and soft power in its relations with the United States, Asia, Europe, and middle powers (Australia, Norway, Canada), and with international institutions such as the WTO, the UN and various regional organizations. The course also examines China's foreign policy in terms of alternative world orders.

Political Economy of International Labour Migration

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Covadonga Meseguer

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: No pre-requisites

Course content: The mobility of workers is one of the pillars of globalization. However and surprisingly, international political economists have paid less attention to the political causes and consequences of international migration in comparison to that paid to other aspects of globalization such as trade or finance. In this course, we shall employ a political economy perspective to study the historical evolution of migration policy, the relationship between trade and migration, and the political causes and consequences of migration flows. I shall place special emphasis on the study of the political consequences of migration for sending (rather than receiving) countries. We shall also pay attention to an important capital flow associated to international migration: remittances. Rather than focusing on the economic/developmental consequences of remittances, we shall discuss how remittances impact political outcomes as diverse as democratization, the survival of dictatorships, political clientelism, corruption, political participation, and political accountability.

Course Outline

Week 1. Overview and Introduction.

Week 2. Labor Flows and Economic Theory.

Week 3. Causes of International Labor Flows: Economics and Politics.

Week 4. International Labor Flows in Historical Perspective.

Week 5. The Making of Migration Policy (I): Interests and Institutions.

Week 6. Reading Week

Week 7. The Making of Migration Policy (II): Immigration, the Economy, and Public Opinion.

Week 8. International Migration and International Cooperation.

Week 9. Economic Consequences of International Migration for Sending Countries: Remittances.

Week 10. Political Consequences of International Labor Migration for Sending Countries (I): Autocracies.

Week 11. Political Consequences of International Labor Migration for Sending Countries (II): New Democracies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay (2000 words).

Students are expected to make one class presentation.

IR448 Half Unit American Grand Strategy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz CLM 4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will explore American foreign policy at the broadest level of analysis - the level known as grand strategy. The course will showcase the main theoretical perspectives that inform the study of US grand strategy and apply them to historical and contemporary cases of American statecraft. In this connection, we will assess the relevance of the US experience for theorizing about power politics and the implications of alternative theories for thinking critically about American behavior. Students will gain an appreciation of the debates and controversies that animate the study of US foreign policy, as well as of the unique challenges posed by making foreign policy in the American political, economic, and cultural context.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. Students in this class will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will write one short (1,500) words formative essay based on questions from previous exam papers. The essay will be due in Week 7 of the LT. Students will be able to use the essay to explore ideas that they might wish to develop in their assessed essay.

Students will provide a 1-2 page outline of their assessed essay by the end of Week 9 LT. This will be returned with comments and feedback by the end of the LT.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Students will write a 4,000-word assessed essay selecting from a list of topics and questions provided by the course coordinator. The essay will be due at the end of Week 1 of the ST.

IR449 Half Unit Conflict and Peacebuilding

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Rampton

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies,

MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: A basic background knowledge of the subject would be an advantage.

Course content: This course is intended for those interested in theoretical and practical approaches to the question of peace, the problems of conflict and violence, and responses to them particularly in the form of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The course is divided into three unequal but interconnected parts. The first part examines ideas and debates about the causes, contexts, dynamics and characterisations of conflict. The second explores and problematises the nature and meanings of peace and peacebuilding. This leads into the third section which is concerned with a critical engagement with the range of international responses to conflict associated with the discourses and practices of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The seminars explore the nexus between theory and practice. Although the course and its readings are mainly theoretical and conceptual rather than empirical, students are encouraged to apply the ideas to actual cases, past and present.

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR422-CPS-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One mandatory 2,000-word essay, marked by the seminar teacher. One two-page outline of assessed essay.

IR452 Half Unit Empire and Conflict in World Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tarak Barkawi CLM 4.07

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict, MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Many peoples and places in modern world politics have been shaped by histories of empire. This course explores the violent dimensions of the imperial past and present. It covers armed conflict in imperial context from "small war" to "counterinsurgency" and the War on Terror; it looks at the ways in which warfare shapes (and is shaped by) the societies, cultures and politics that populate world politics; and it considers some of the intellectual traditions that have arisen out of the experience of colonial violence, from the thought of resistance leaders to subaltern and postcolonial studies. The premise of the course is that warfare and violence have been generative forces in shaping world politics.

This course aims to familiarise students with scholarship on empire and conflict in International Relations and related disciplines. This involves, first, understanding the limitations of the sovereign nation-state as the basic unit of world politics. For most people in most times and places, international relations have taken imperial form of one kind or another. What would it mean to take empire seriously in international thought and inquiry? The course approaches this question by looking at the relations between empire and globalization in historical and theoretical context. Second, although much scholarship on empire concerns economy and culture, the history of empire is a history of continual warfare and armed resistance. Such "small wars" have shaped society and politics in both the core and periphery of the international system, and often continue to do so long after the guns fall silent (as for example in the case of the US and the Vietnam War). The course will cover the histories, strategies and theories associated with such wars and their effects. Third and finally, the course will explore the intersection between empire and knowledge in political theory and social inquiry. Not only did anti-colonial resistance produce its own theorists, such as Frantz Fanon and Mao Zedong, but in recent decades empire has been the site of new turns in social and political theory, as for example in subaltern studies and postcolonialism. The course will introduce students to this work and its applications to understanding world politics.

Lectures

- 1) Introduction: Empire and International Relations
- 2) Empire/History/Globalization
- 3) Empire, the Regions, and World Politics
- 4) Politics/Strategy/War
- 5) War and Society in Global Perspective
- 6) Orientalism and 'Small war'
- 7) Revolutionary Guerrilla War
- 8) Counterinsurgency
- 9) Conflict and Development
- 10) The War on Terror in North/South Perspective

MSc Seminars

The seminars will develop students' abilities to read, digest, and critique monograph length texts. Each will be based upon a single book. Students will be expected to read the assigned book in its entirety before each seminar. Every student will be expected to come to seminar prepared to participate. There will be no individual seminar presentations. Every student is expected to speak in every seminar. Students should be prepared to comment on the main argument of each book; to place each text in a wider intellectual context, concerning for example the debates and audiences the book is speaking to; and to offer a critical assessment of the book's contributions.

There will be some variation in the texts assigned to MSc students each year.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. Additionally, there will be weekly film viewings starting in Week 2. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT.

IR453 Half Unit

Global Business in International Relations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Falkner TOW2.11.01F

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Relations (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the role of global business as an actor in international relations. It reviews the political and economic theories that seek to explain the rise of global business, paying attention in particular to International Relations and International Political Economy theories (realism, liberalism, Marxism), but also covering the main economic explanations of MNCs. Thereafter, the course examines the interaction between global business and states in international relations. This involves the study of corporate power and how to conceptualise it in IPE, the study of state-firm bargaining over investment decisions, and the regulation of global business by states and international governance institutions. The final part of the course considers the role that global business plays in selected global policy areas: economic development, environmental protection and human rights.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

10 lectures and 10 seminars on the following topics:

1. Introduction: global business in international relations
2. Globalisation and the rise of MNCs
3. Economic theories of the global firm
4. The political economy of MNC-state relations
5. International rules for MNCs I: trade and investment
6. International rules for MNCs II: taxation and offshore finance
7. The UN and global business regulation
8. MNCs, FDI and developing countries
9. MNCs and environmental protection
10. MNCs, corporate social responsibility and human rights

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the LT.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

A 2-hour final examination. Students will be asked to answer 2 out of 8 questions.

IR454 Half Unit

Governing International Political Economy: Lessons from the Past for the Future

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Morrison 95 ALD 1.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Relations (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: History has always been central to the study and practice of international political economy. The most influential scholars and practitioners of international political economy have repeatedly turned to history both to explain, and to offer a fresh perspective on, the great challenges of their day. This course is designed to help students cultivate that invaluable skill and habit of mind.

Proceeding from the seventeenth century to the present, it examines:

- seminal theorists' particular treatments of international political economy
- the ongoing, timeless debate between these theorists
- the major shifts in the global economic order
- the interaction between theories and policy in each shift

The course begins with mercantilism and the 'age of empires.' It then explores the great critics of mercantilism—Adam Smith and David Hume—and the relationship between their critique and the revolutions in IPE that followed. It goes on to analyse the rise of so-called 'English' political economy and the 'First Era of Globalisation' in the 19th Century.

The course then pivots to consider two major challenges to this hegemony of thought and practice. First, it traces the development of socialism from an internal critique through the writings of Marx & Engels to an instantiated alternative system in the early Soviet Union. Second, it considers the German Historical School's return to mercantilism and the ascent of the American Empire onto the global stage. The clash of empires then leads to the cataclysm of the First World War.

In the interwar period, the course analyses the failed attempts to restore the global order. It analyses the radical challenge posed by fascist political economy. It also considers the variety of responses issued by different types of liberals. The course then transitions into a discussion of the several postwar orders, from Keynes's neoliberal institutionalism to Gandhi's rejection of Eurocentric political economy.

Last, the course turns to the modern era. It analyses the trajectories of the postwar global trade and financial systems. It then turns to contemporary issues, such as the post-Cold War order, the 2008 Global Financial Crisis, and the rise of emerging markets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 2 presentations in the MT.

Indicative reading: Thomas Munn. England's Treasure by Foreign Trade. Adam Smith. An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. Karl Marx. Communist Manifesto. JM Keynes. General Theory of Employment, Interest, & Money. Gandhi, Mohandas K. Hind Swaraj or Indian Home Rule.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students will be required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for you. Admission to the course is not guaranteed. The course is primarily for students on the IPE Masters and LSE-Sciences-po Double Degree masters.

Course content: The course introduces students to the theories and analytical frameworks relating to decision-making and negotiation in international economic relations and to apply these to cases. It includes coverage of the respective roles of the main actors, institutional settings and processes involved in domestic decision-making and international negotiation, and their interaction with each other.

The course provides students with both academic and practitioner perspectives of economic diplomacy through the integration of practitioner analysis of case studies into the course.

The course is concerned with the process of international economic negotiations. This focus distinguishes it from other optional courses that cover more on the substance of trade, finance, money, environment, etc. No prior knowledge of economics is required to take this course. The course is concerned with decision-making and negotiation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

There will also be a series of speakers on cases in economic diplomacy in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Islam in World Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sidel CON 4.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict, MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: The course focuses on the role of Islam in world politics, posing two inter-related questions: First, how can we explain the varying nature and strength of Islam as a discursive and mobilizational force in world politics? Second, how should we understand the impact of changes in world politics on the institutions, authority structures, and identities associated with Islam? In this course, the approach to these questions is comparative. The course begins with an examination of the distinctive transnational structures of Islam as compared with another major world religion: Christianity. The trajectory of Islam as a force in international relations since the late 19th century is examined across successive periods in world history. The course covers the rise of transnational Islamist networks from the late Ottoman era through the tumultuous years of mass mobilisation in the interwar era, demobilisation with the formation of new nation-states in the early Cold War era, and the revival of Islam in world politics by the 1970s with the Iranian Revolution and developments elsewhere in the Muslim world. But most of the course covers the contemporary post-Cold War era, examining the varying role of Islam in diverse regional settings - Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Europe - and in the contexts of globalization and democratization, mass migration, separatist struggles and regional conflicts. Close attention is paid to the role of Saudi Arabia and Iran and the rise of sectarian conflict between Sunnis and Shi'a. The course also focuses important cases like Al Qa'ida and the Taliban in Afghanistan and Pakistan, civil wars in settings as varied as Chechnya and Somalia, the rise of the so-called 'Islamic State' in Iraq and Syria, as well as important trends in Western Europe, including the UK.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Professor Sidel will be solely responsible for the lectures and the seminars. Students will be divided into seminar discussion groups at the beginning of the course.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit two essays of 2,000-3,000 words in length - one in Michaelmas term; one early in Lent term. These essays will help students develop their knowledge of specific topics of particular interest to them and to receive feedback and guidance from Professor Sidel. Students will also produce a 2-3 page outline of their assessed essay in Week 7 of the Lent Term. The outline should include a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Advice and approval will be provided within two weeks of submission of essay outlines.

Course content: This seminar course provides an introduction to the study of genocide. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, it explores major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role(s) of genocidal campaigns in international politics, inter alia, their origins, development, and termination; the manner of their perpetration, progression, and diffusion; their impact on the maintenance of international peace and security; their consequences for the reconstruction and development of states and the building of nations; and their adjudication in domestic and international courts and tribunals. Empirical cases to be discussed include Australia, Cambodia, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, East Timor, Nazi Germany, Guatemala, Iraq, Northern Ireland, the Ottoman Empire, Rwanda, Uganda, the Soviet Union, Sudan, and the former Yugoslavia, among others. The course is designed to equip students with the analytic tools necessary for making sense of the evolution of the international system from the nineteenth century to the present and for critically assessing the promise and limits of responding to collective violence.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course is designed as a component of the study of a global system in which the management and mismanagement of money and finance are matters of fundamental consequence for international relations. It is intended to be of particular relevance to students specialising in international political economy. This is a course in applied international political economy theory. It deals with the basic concepts regarding the creation, use and management of money and finance in the global system. Students are then introduced to the political foundations of international monetary governance. Issues covered include the use of national currencies as international money, the politics of exchange rate adjustment, the operations of banks and other institutions in international money and capital markets, the evolution of global financial markets, the relationship between states and markets in the arena of global finance, international monetary cooperation, and the choices of monetary and financial policies open to developed and developing countries. The course emphasises that contemporary issues, such as international financial crises, international financial regulation and the politics of IMF conditionality, are best understood in a broader theoretical and analytical context.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students intending to take the course should have a strong background in monetary economics.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students are expected to make presentations on topics of their choice and to write one 2,000-word essays, to be marked by the seminar teacher.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus, but the following general works provide a useful introduction: B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital (2008); S Strange, Mad Money (1998); T Porter, Globalization and Finance (2005); D Andrews (ed), International Monetary Power (2006); J Frieden, Currency politics: the political economy of exchange rate policy (2015); E Helleiner, The status quo crisis: global financial governance after the 2008 meltdown (2014); C. Norloff, America's global advantage: US hegemony and international cooperation (2010); B Cohen, Currency power: understanding monetary rivalry (2015)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

There is a two-hour formal examination in the ST based on the lecture course and work covered in the seminars. The paper contains about 10 questions, of which two are to be answered.

International Political Economy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Morrison

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Political Economy (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An advanced introduction to concepts and contending theoretical, analytical, and methodological approaches in international political economy, and an overview of contemporary issues in international economic relations.

This course is the core course for MSc International Political Economy. It aims to introduce students to various approaches to the study of international political economy (IPE), and to apply theories to important contemporary empirical issues. The first part of the course introduces students to the main theoretical concepts in and analytical approaches to political economy, emphasising the overlap between international and comparative approaches.

After surveying the main schools of thought in the subject, it examines more recent theoretical developments, including the comparative and domestic approaches that have become increasingly prominent in the literature. The second part of the course addresses contemporary issues related to multinational corporations, globalisation and developing countries. The third part of the course focuses on methodological approaches to international political economy, exploring research design and qualitative and quantitative methods. Previous background in international relations, international economics, comparative politics and history is helpful but is not a requirement. Students with no previous background in the subject should read Walter and Sen, 'Analyzing the Global Political Economy' (2009), Oatley, 'International Political Economy' and Ravenhill, 'Global Political Economy' by the end of the first term.

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse>.

ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR450-IPE-video.aspx

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

There will be a lecture course on International Political Economy commencing in week one of the MT, with an examination preparation and expectations lecture in week 2 of ST. Students will be assigned to International Political Economy seminar groups which accompany the lecture series; each seminar group will be run by a teacher involved in the MSc IPE programme.

Students on this course will have a reading week in week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay will be set and marked by the seminar teacher.

Students will also give a presentation delivered during the seminars.

Indicative reading: It is advisable to begin reading before the lectures start, and the following general texts are recommended. A more complete source-list is provided in the course outline.

Oatley, 'International Political Economy' (2012); Ravenhill, 'Global Political Economy' (2011); Walter and Sen, 'Analyzing the Global Political Economy' (2009); J Frieden, D Lake and JL Broz (eds), 'International Political Economy' (2009); J Frieden, 'Global Capitalism' (2006); Robert Gilpin, 'Global Political Economy' (2001); Susan Strange (1998), 'States and Markets'.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Students will be asked to answer two out of eight questions.

The Situations of the International Criminal Court

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 609

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to the course selection on LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This taught seminar introduces students to the practices of the International Criminal Court (ICC). Focusing on the ICC's ongoing investigations and prosecutions - its so-called 'Situations' - the course exemplifies the politics of international law in the context of one of the most embattled international organisations in the international system. On the foundation of 'practice theory', it blends methodological approaches from law, the social sciences and the humanities. By adopting an evolutionary perspective to the ICC, the seminar raises - and answers - pertinent theoretical questions about institutional design and development of in international politics. Empirical cases to be discussed include the settings of the ICC's nine Situations (the DRC, Uganda, the Central African Republic, Sudan, Kenya, Libya, Cote d'Ivoire, and Mali) as well as the territories of the ICC's preliminary examinations (Afghanistan, Columbia, Georgia, Guinea, Iraq, Nigeria, Palestine, and Ukraine). Students will learn to work with both court documents and theoretical texts.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students will also receive feedback on their seminar participation. Students are required to research and write one essay (2,500 words). In addressing a given essay topic, students must integrate theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen. Essays must be fully - and carefully - referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Week 8 and must be in hard copy. Feedback is provided by the course teacher, who is responsible for marking essays.

Several criteria are applied in the evaluation of student essays, notably: (1) originality of argument. (2) use of literature: has relevant scholarship been digested and put to good use? (3) soundness of analysis: is the inquiry comprehensive and logically consistent? (4) organisation of evidence: have argument and evidence been introduced and presented in a compelling manner? (5) validity of findings: does the argument remain valid when applied empirically? (6) clarity of presentation: are grammar, punctuation and references flawless?

Advanced Topics in International Politics - 'The International Relations of the Asia-Pacific'

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof. Stephan Haggard

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option. All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to the course selection on LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course provides an overview of the international relations of the Asia-Pacific. It is oriented around a consideration of core IR theories, particularly power transition models and their critics. The course begins with a consideration of US grand strategy toward the Asia-Pacific before turning to key alliance and other bilateral relationships and the Southeast Asian system centred on ASEAN. It closes with a consideration of a number of functional issues, including the political economy of the region, the military balance and emerging issues such as the cyber domain.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the LT.

IR473 Half Unit China and the Global South

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Alden CLM 513 and Prof Christopher Hughes 95A 115

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course focuses on the substantive role that China plays in the Global South where its preponderance of material power and putative developing country status confers upon it a dominant position in bilateral and regional political economies. China's economic position, coupled to an astute use of finances flowing from its mercantilist policies, has enabled it to become the leading trading partner and a significant investor in the developing world. Moreover, the Global South is increasingly figuring in Beijing's expanding security interests and soft power provisions. Interpretations embedded in prevailing academic discussions like socialisation, threat and peaceful rise take on new meaning when studied through the lens of ties with developing countries. Understanding how dynamics in this relationship are impacting upon a host of global and contemporary issues (BRICs, multilateralism, peacekeeping, the environment) is crucial to the shape of the 21st century. Students will acquire a deeper appreciation of the concept of agency linked to the varied response of countries and regional organisations in the Global South, from policy elites to local communities, to China's growing structural power, as well as placing Chinese engagement within the context of other 'traditional' and emerging powers. This will offer a deeper analysis of the way in which the dynamics of China's economic and political model impact on its relationship with the Global South.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

A 1,500 word essay will be due in Week 7 of the term. The essay can be used to develop ideas for the summative essay.

Students will submit a 2 page outline of the assessed essay in Week 10, receiving comments and feedback in Week 11.

IR474 Half Unit Revolutions and World Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Lawson CLM 512

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option. All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: Revolutions are often considered to be a 'side order' to the 'main course' of International Relations. But as this course explores, the lack of attention paid to revolutions is a mistake - revolutions have played a major part in the making of the modern international order. From the 'Atlantic Revolutions' of the late 18th and early 19th centuries to the 'colour revolutions' of the early 21st century, revolutions have been constitutive of notions of sovereignty, order, justice, and more. Revolutions have also been tightly bound up with dynamics of war and peace. This course explores both the theory and practice of revolutions, teasing out their effects and examining the prospects for revolutionary change in the contemporary world.

List of Topics:

Part 1: Thinking about revolutions

1. What are revolutions?
2. Key themes in the study of revolutions
3. Revolutions in world politics

Part 2: The experience of revolutions

4. The Atlantic 'age of revolutions'
5. Socialist revolutions
6. Reading week
7. 'Third World' revolutions
8. The 'last great revolution'?
9. 'Colour' revolutions

Part 3 Revolution today

10. The Arab uprisings
11. Rethinking revolutions

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The main aim of the course is to provide an opportunity for students to make informed judgements about how and in what ways revolutions have impacted on core features of modern international order. Additional aims include assessment of the place of revolutions in the contemporary world and, more generally, the ability to connect theoretical arguments about revolutions with the substantive experience of revolutions.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students will also submit a 2-3 page outline of the assessed essay in Week 10, receiving comments and feedback in Week 11.

Indicative reading: Hannah Arendt, On Revolution (Penguin: 1963). Colin Beck, Radicals, Revolutionaries and Terrorists (Polity: 2015). Assessment: Essay (70%, 4000 words) in the ST. Presentation (15%) and blog post (15%) in the LT. Assessment for the course is composed of a 4000 word essay (70%); weekly blog posts of 250 words each (15%) and a group seminar presentation (15%).

IR475 Half Unit Gender/ed/ing International Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katherine Millar CLM 410

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option.

All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course foregrounds gender - as noun, verb and structure - in understanding the practices/events studies as global politics and the discipline/study of international relations. The course is grounded in feminist theory and provides students with an introduction to feminist epistemologies and methods. It proceeds in two sections, moving from theoretical foundations to an examination of gender and the macro, transnational and historical processes of global politics. Each 'macro' examination of the gendering of international politics is followed by a corresponding examination of several substantive areas of international politics, including security, development, NGOs and transnational social movements and international law/organisations. These overarching topics are balanced with issue-specific case studies (eg sexual/sexualised violence in conflict; gendering of the informal economy), derived from current events, to be discussed in seminars. Particular thematic attention will be paid to the on-going construction (and transmission) of global/transnational hierarchies that are gendered and gendering.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

Indicative reading: B Ackerly, J True and M Stern (eds), Feminist Methodologies for International Relations (CUP: 2006). C Enloe, Bananas, beaches and bases: making feminist sense of international relations, rev'd 2nd ed (University of California Press: 2014). International Relations: sovereignty, sexuality and the will to knowledge (OUP:2016)

Assessment: Essay (90%, 4000 words) in the LT.

Coursework (10%) in the MT.

The coursework entails weekly short reaction pieces (300 words maximum) engaging with the week's topics/readings to be submitted in advance of the seminar. These will prepare students to fully engage with the seminar discussions. Most importantly, they will familiarise students with the feminist epistemological commitments to critique and self-reflection.

IR477 Half Unit Sub-Saharan Africa: Governance, Peace, and Security

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Milli Lake

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course examines contemporary sub-Saharan African politics and society in three parts, exploring some of the toughest challenges the continent has faced in the post-independence period. It begins with a review of twentieth century African politics, exploring the experiences and legacies of colonial occupation, and what these tell us about the present day. Following this, it turns to the common challenges of the post-independence period, as newly created states struggle to establish and maintain authority at home while finding their place in the international system. Finally, it explores humanitarian governance and development aid in the twenty-first century, drawing from literature spanning a wide variety of subfields and epistemological traditions. This component of the course considers the nature of public and private authority, as well as the role played by countries in the global north in intervening in the domestic political affairs of sovereign states.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 6 other pieces of coursework in the LT.

For six of the ten sessions, students on the course will submit a one-page reading memo of approximately 600 words, pulling together key themes from that week's discussions.

In addition, students will produce an assessed essay outline in week 10 consisting of a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Feedback will be provided via email and/or individual sessions with students.

IR478 Half Unit Critical War Studies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tarak Barkawi CLM 407

Tarak Barkawi is Professor in the Department of International Relations at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He studies warfare between the West and the non-European world, past and present. He writes on the pivotal place of armed force in globalization, imperialism, and modernization, and on the neglected significance of war in social and political theory. He is author of Soldiers of Empire, Globalization and War and many scholarly articles.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: War transforms the social and political orders in which we live, just as it obliterates our precious certainties. Nowhere is this more obvious than in the fate of truths offered about war itself. War regularly undermines expectations, strategies and theories, and along with them the credibility of those in public life and the academy presumed to speak with authority about it. This course begins with the recognition that the unsettling character of war has been a profound opportunity for scholarship. For it is precisely in war's disordering and unsettling of politics and identities that the socially and historically generative powers of war are exposed. In bending, stretching and even breaking institutions and societies, war reveals them to us anew and offers perspectives obscured in times of peace. At the same time, these disruptions shape and inform the course and character of war. This violent but fecund juncture between war, society and politics is what this course seeks to understand.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the LT. This course consists of ten lectures, nine seminars and eight film evenings. It is primarily a book-based graduate seminar. The lecture series provides concepts, ideas and histories—intellectual scaffolding—against which to read the course books. Each of the nine seminars for this course will be based upon a single book. The seminars will develop students' abilities to read, digest, and critique monograph length texts. Students will be expected to read the assigned book in its entirety before each seminar. Every student will be expected to come to seminar prepared to participate. There will be no individual seminar presentations. Every student is expected to speak in every seminar. Students should be prepared to comment on the main argument of each book; to place each text in a wider intellectual context, concerning for example the debates and audiences the book is speaking to; and to offer a critical assessment of the book's contributions.

The optional film series provides an opportunity for sociability and the exploration of course themes in popular cultures. Films are an important way in which war has shaped modern culture. The course coordinator will briefly introduce each film and a short discussion will follow the screening.

Formative coursework: To help them prepare for their summative essay, students will write two 2000 word book reviews of seminar books of their choosing.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

The course will be 100% assessed by essay due after the end of term and based on a topic of the student's choice.

IR479 Half Unit Russia in World Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Tomila Lankina

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in EU Politics, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course offers an analysis of key issues in the development of Russian foreign and security policies and the role that it plays in global politics. It is primarily intended for the courses listed above and is available as an outside option on the MSc in Comparative Politics students with permission from the course convenor.

Pre-requisites:

There are no formal prerequisites but some knowledge of social science methods and an interest in Russian politics will be taken for granted.

Course content: The course covers the various factors shaping Russian foreign and security policy. It will explore both the traditional foreign policy and security issues, such as Russia's recent military build-up, economic power projection, the geopolitics of oil and gas, as well as soft power and soft security aspects of Russia's foreign policy, including the role of the media and propaganda; hybrid warfare; the role of ideas and norms; we will also explore the historical legacies influencing how Russia sees the world and its neighbours. Each of the ten topics covered will speak to the major theoretical debates on the factors shaping security and foreign policy and students will be encouraged to evaluate the merits of the various theories based on available evidence. The background seminar focuses on the domestic and international context preceding Russia's emergence as a successor to the Soviet Union. The subsequent sessions analyse post-communist Russian foreign policy with a special focus on foreign policy under President Putin, including the military interventions in Georgia and Ukraine, the securitisation of Russia's media and Russia's attempts to influence politics in the EU and beyond.

Some of the questions to be addressed in the course of the ten seminars are: How have domestic institutions and political regime change following the collapse of the USSR impacted on foreign policy making and thinking? How has Russia sought to use traditional security mechanisms, hard power and soft power to influence the "near abroad"? What explains the failure of "reset" policy between the US and Russia? Has Russian engagement with Europe and its main institutions, the EU and NATO, suggested that it is part of or apart from Europe? What are the key mechanisms of Western influence on Russia's foreign policy? What kind of a relationship has Russia forged with China and what are the factors shaping this relationship? What drives the nuances of Russia's policy in the Middle East? What role do energy politics play in Russia's relations with its neighbours and in Russia's foreign policy globally? The final section will address the question of the other longer-term historical influences shaping the foreign policy of Russia.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

1. There will be ten two-hour student-led seminars. An outline of the seminar topics is posted separately on the Moodle site. Please confirm details of scheduling on the Sessional Timetable. The seminars are organised around topics, listed on the Seminar Program document on the Moodle site and at the end of the consolidated reading list. The allocation of topics for student presentations and book / article reviews will be agreed at the first, organisational, session. All seminars are compulsory, as is active class participation.
3. Students who are new to international politics are advised to attend the lectures for IR202, Foreign Policy Analysis.
4. Students are expected to engage in independent study, using the reading list to deepen their knowledge and understanding of the subject.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation, 1 other piece of coursework and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

Each student will write a review of one of the required readings in no more than 500 words.

In the course of the academic term, each student will be also expected to make one presentation on a given topic. Presenters will be expected to distribute, via email, a 1 paragraph summary of the main points of their presentations to Professor Lankina and students in advance of the seminar.

Students will also produce a 2-3 page outline of their assessed essay by Week 6 of the Lent term, in the week following the Reading Week. This will include a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Students will receive approval of their research question and feedback on the outline by the end of Week 7.

Class participation (20%) in the LT.

By week 2 of ST, students should submit 1 essay of 5,000 words (including notes and citations). Students will also produce a 2-3 page outline of their assessed essay by Week 6 of the Lent term, in the week following the Reading Week. This will include a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Students will receive approval of their research question and feedback on the outline by the end of Week 7. The purpose of the essay is to provide experience of summarising arguments succinctly and engaging with complex material.

Criteria for assessment of essays: The extended essay will be assessed based on demonstration of ability to summarise the key arguments in the debate around particular topics covered in the class, and to present and defend evidence supporting a given perspective, in a succinct manner.

A guide to essay questions will be provided at the beginning of the term and students will choose 1 out of 4 questions.

The essay will constitute 80% of the summative assessment mark.

Students are expected to participate actively in class discussions.

Class participation will constitute 20% of the summative assessment mark.

IR480 Half Unit

Globalisation and the State in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Natalya Naqvi

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: What role should the state play in economic development? How has globalisation effected what the state can still actually do to promote economic development? Between the 50s and 80s, the East Asian 'developmental state' model delivered rapid industrialisation through extensive state intervention, seemingly refuting not only the claims of free market economics, but also of dependency theory: that poor countries could never develop due to the very nature of the capitalist world system. Since the 80s, the applicability of the East Asian model was challenged in new ways. Structural changes in the global political economy, including the end of fixed exchange rates, increased capital mobility, the development of international financial markets, privatisation of the commanding heights of the economy, the proliferation of restrictive trade and investment agreements, and the rise of global value chains, led many to argue that even if it was economically beneficial for other countries to implement the East Asian model, this was no longer possible because globalisation had dramatically constrained the power of the nation state. Others argued that concerns over the constraints posed by globalisation were overblown, and that domestic interests, institutions, and ideas were responsible for holding back structural transformation of the economy.

This course will combine debates in IPE, over how the process of globalisation has transformed the capacity for state action, with debates in the political economy of development over the role of the state in the process of late development. Students will gain an understanding not only of the debate over how much domestic policy autonomy developing countries have after globalisation, but also of the kinds of policies they need this policy space for. Problems of underdevelopment are approached through the prism of both core-periphery power relations, and power relations arising from the domestic productive structure.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT. The 10 weekly writings (see summative assessment) also contain a formative element.

Indicative reading:

- Kicking Away the Ladder, Ha Joon Chang
- States and Markets, Susan Strange
- States Versus Markets, Herman Schwartz
- Globalisation in Question, Hirst, Thompson and Bromley
- The Myth of the Powerless State, Linda Weiss
- Reclaiming Development Economics, Chang and Grabel
- The Developmental State, Woo-Cummings
- Business and the State in Developing Countries, Maxfield and Schneider

Assessment: Essay (90%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Other (10%) in the LT.

Weekly writings: 10%

10 Weekly 1-page bullet point outlines answering one of the assigned seminar questions.

Essay (4000 words): 90%

Students choose one region or country and discuss how changes in the international system in one of the above issue areas has impacted on prospects for development – relying on the theoretical perspectives we discussed in week 2.

IR481 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Europe, the US and Arab-Israeli Relations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Federica Bicchì CLM. 4.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict, MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of post-1945 world history of the European Union governance system and of Middle East politics is required.

Course content: The course focuses on the foreign policy of the EU and of EU member states towards Arab-Israeli relations (with a special emphasis on Palestinian-Israeli relations), in comparison with the US foreign policy. The main focus will be on the European perspective, but it would be impossible to analyse this subject without taking into account the US position and, to some extent, Transatlantic relations. After an overview of Palestine during the British mandate, the course will cover the period from 1948 to nowadays with a particular emphasis on contemporary issues. The British mandate on Palestine. The partition of Israel and the birth of Israel. Early support for Israel. The Suez crisis. The evolution of European and US policy towards Israel. The birth of the "special relationship" between the US and Israel. The 1973 war, the energy crisis and the Euro-Arab Dialogue. The Venice Declaration. The US and European contribution to the Arab-Israeli peace process in the 1990s. The Euro-Mediterranean Partnership and the European Neighborhood Policy. Western democracy promotion and trade. Western aid to the Palestinians. The legalisation of relations with Israel. The collapse of the peace process and attempts at reviving it.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay during the course and one presentation (or alternatively two 2000-word essays), to be marked by seminar teachers. These do not count towards the final mark.

Indicative reading: Students will be expected to read widely in appropriate books and journals. A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. The following provide a general background to the topic: Bicchì, Federica, European Foreign Policy Making toward the Mediterranean, New York: Palgrave (2007); Fawcett, L. (2013) International Relations of the Middle East, 3rd ed., Oxford: Oxford University Press; Lesch, David, ed. The Middle East and the United States. Boulder: Westview (2012), 5th ed.; Pardo, S. and J. Peters (2009), Uneasy Neighbours: Israel and the European Union, Lexington Books; Quandt, W.B. (1993) Peace Process. American Diplomacy and the Arab-Israeli Conflict Since 1967, Washington /Berkeley/Los Angeles: The Brookings Institution/University of California Press; Roberson, B.A. (1998) The Middle East and Europe. The Power Deficit, London/New York: Routledge; Spiegel, Steven, The Other Arab-Israeli Conflict: Making America's Middle East Policy from Truman to Reagan, Chicago, (1985); Youngs, Robert, Europe and the Middle East. In the Shadow of September 11. Boulder/London: Lynne Rienner, (2006).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

The normal length of the examination paper is eight questions, of which candidates are invited to answer any two.

IR499 Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katharine Millar CLM.4.10, Dr Katerina Dalacoura CLM.4.11 and Dr James Morrison 95A.1.14
Dr Chris Alden CLM.5.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Refer to Assessment below.

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT.

Additional dissertation advice and support sessions will be arranged by MSc Programme Directors during the Lent Term. Details will vary by Programme and students will be notified by email towards the end of the Michaelmas Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the LT. MSc IR, MSc IR (Research), MSc IPE, and MSc IPE (Research) and MSc IRT students are required to write a 10,000-word Dissertation on a topic within the field of IR/IPE/IRT approved by the student's academic adviser. The Dissertation need not be an account of original research and may rely on secondary sources. Dissertation supervision consists of oral feedback at two points in the dissertation writing process: first when students submit the initial topic and research question in early LT; and second when students have submitted a more detailed 4-5 page plan in late LT. The Department will further supplement this supervision with a series of bespoke dissertation workshops focusing on research design, methodologies and the writing up process.

LL440Corporate Law and Accounting

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Morley and Ms Sarah Paterson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to examine areas in which law and accounting intersect in promoting an efficient market economy. It is interdisciplinary in focus, and provides students from varying backgrounds with new perspectives and leads to in-depth study by way of a Dissertation.

Topics in Michaelmas term may include: An introduction to law and regulation in the accounting context; the legal requirement for accounts and audit, and the role of accounting standards; "true and fair view" as the cornerstone of financial reporting and auditing; the strategic report; tax and accounting; groups in law and group accounting; auditor liability; law, accounting and equity: capital maintenance; law, accounting and debt: financial covenants; the regulation of the professions. Other issues in accounting and the law may be substituted/added during this term.

Lent term will focus on preparation for the Dissertation. It will start with a series of seminars on the research process, which may include: overview and finding a title; developing a research question; methodology; finding and using sources. Other topics relating to the research process may be substituted/added during the first part of the term. The second half of the term will comprise a series of seminars in which students will present their preliminary research proposal and receive feedback from the course convenors and their peers.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Two meetings with each individual student's Long Essay supervisor.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students will be expected to contribute to class discussion. Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during class, on two written homework assignments, in two formal meetings with individual student's Dissertation Supervisor, and during office hours.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus.

Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course and will include articles from law, accounting, economics and sociology journals and books. Students will also be provided with relevant examples of practitioner reports, policy papers, and referred to relevant websites.

Some illustrative references to texts and primary materials are: Baistrocchi E and Roxan I (eds.), Resolving Transfer Pricing Disputes: A Global Analysis (2012, Cambridge University Press); Botzem S, The Politics of Accounting Regulation: International Standard Setting in Financial Reporting (2014, Edward Elgar); Dezalay Y & Sugarman D (Eds), Professional Competition and Professional Power: Lawyers, Accountants and the Social Construction of Markets (1995); Ferran E, Moloney N, Hill J & Cofee J, The Regulatory Aftermath of the Global Financial Crisis (2012, Cambridge University Press); Freedman J and Power M (eds.), Law and Accountancy: Conflict and co-operation in the 1990s (1992, SAGE); Kershaw D, Company Law in Context: Text and Materials (2012, Oxford University Press); Parkinson, Corporate Power and Responsibility (1995, Oxford University Press); Power M, The Audit Society (1999, Oxford University Press)

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 10000 words) in August.

Law and Accounting Prize

The international law firm Herbert Smith Freehills sponsors a prize for the best examination performance on the MSc Law and Accounting. The prize is awarded at the Herbert Smith Freehills reception in November each year.

LL468 Half UnitEuropean Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dalia Palombo

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: This course will provide an overview of the origin, development and current standing of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Its primary focus will be on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, though the cases of other jurisdictions will also be referred to where appropriate. The course will analyse the Convention from the perspective of selected rights within it, but will also engage with the subject thematically, subjecting such concepts as the 'margin of appreciation' and proportionality to close scrutiny. The goal of the course is to give students a good critical understanding of the Convention, the case-law of the Strasbourg court and the Convention's place within the constitutional and political structure of 'Greater Europe'.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: There will be a formative assessment, its format to be confirmed at the start of the course.

Indicative reading: It is imperative that students read BEFORE the seminar and come to class prepared. There is no single text covering the course and required readings will be uploaded on Moodle before the seminar. However, the following background readings may be useful: Jacobs, White and Ovey, The European Convention on Human Rights 6th edn (OUP, 2014) Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2014). Also useful is Mowbray, Cases and Materials on the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2012). A strong European perspective is to be found in van Dijk, van Hoof, van Rijn and Zwaak (eds), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights 4th edn (Intersentia, 2006). Very good edited books include Brems and Gerards (eds), Shaping Rights in the ECHR (Cambridge, 2013) and Follesdal, Peters and Ulfstein (eds), Constituting Europe (Cambridge 2013). C A Gearty, On Fantasy Island. Britain, Strasbourg and Human Rights (OUP 2016) will also be referred to so far as it covers ECHR law. The course will involve textbook reading but will primarily entail analysis of case-law read for the lecture and discussed in class. The European Convention on Human Rights 6th edn (OUP, 2014) and Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2014). Also useful is Mowbray, Cases and Materials on the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2012). A strong European perspective is to be found in van Dijk, van Hoof, van Rijn and Zwaak (eds), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights 4th edn (Intersentia, 2006). Very good edited books include Brems and Gerards (eds), Shaping Rights in the ECHR (Cambridge, 2013) and Follesdal, Peters and Ulfstein (eds), Constituting Europe (Cambridge 2013). The course will involve textbook reading but will primarily entail analysis of case-law read for the lecture and discussed in class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least six questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL469 Half Unit

UK Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB.6.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: This course will be made up of a detailed study of the UK Human Rights Act. The origins and the political background to the Act will be explained, and the structure of the measure will be fully elaborated, relying on the text of the Act itself but also on the burgeoning case law that accompanies the measure. The course will identify the principles that underpin the Act and explain its proper place in English law. It will also explore the wider constitutional implications of the measure, looking at its effect on the relationship between courts and Parliament. The political context in which the measure has had to operate will be considered, and the relationship with the change to human rights protection likely to follow the UK's proposed departure from the EU will be considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: The key text is now C A Gearty, On Fantasy Island. Britain, Strasbourg and Human Rights (OUP, 2016). See also R Costigan and R Stone, Civil Liberties and Human Rights (11th edn, OUP, 2017); Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (Cambridge, 2009); Hickman, Public Law After the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010); Gearty, Principles of Human Rights Adjudication (Oxford University Press, 2004). While these books will be referred to, students will also be expected to read cases: they will receive a detailed Reading list for each topic.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least six questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL475 Half Unit

Terrorism and the Rule of Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB.6.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available across all courses and potentially suitable for all but is particularly designed for LLM, MSc Conflict Studies, MSc Human Rights students.

This course is capped at 60 students.

Course content: This course will provide a theoretical and historical introduction to the concept of terrorism. It will critically consider definitions of terrorism, and analyse the relationship between terrorism and the right to rebel, and the right to engage in civil disobedience. The historical development of the idea of 'terrorism' from the late eighteenth century through to the present will then be traced, with the emphasis on locating the practice of political terror in its political and military/quasi-military context. The role of international law generally and international human rights law in particular in the context of terrorism and anti-terrorism action will be considered in detail. The course will teach the material in context, so the subject will be analysed by reference to particular situations where necessary, eg Northern Ireland, the Palestine/Israel conflict and the post 11 September 'war on terror'. The recent extension of state controls from terrorism to 'extremism' will be analysed. The aim of the course is to give the student a good critical understanding of this most controversial of subjects, and also to impart an understanding of the role of law in shaping the fields of terrorism and of counter-terrorism.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: There is no set text though reliance is made on the work of authors such as Richard English, Adrian Guelke, Lawrence Freedman, Igor Primoratz, Paul Wilkinson and the course teacher Conor Gearty. Students will receive a detailed Reading list for each topic, which will include legal cases from time to time. Two recommended texts are Gearty, Liberty and Security (Polity Press, February 2013) and English, Terrorism How to respond (Oxford 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least six questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL499

Dissertation: MSc Regulation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regulation. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Refer to assessment below.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

The dissertation is due by 5:00 pm on Tuesday 20 August 2019.

LL4A6 Half Unit

Climate Change and International Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB.6.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course covers the international law dealing with climate change with a view to assessing how the harms and burdens associated with climate change are governed and allocated in different legal regimes. The course adopts the stance that the political and legal questions raised by climate change cannot be addressed by reference to climate change law or international environmental law alone. Climate change gives rise to a series of profound problems touching upon a range of bodies of law (trade, human rights, migration, investment, state responsibility) in a complex political and ethical environment. In approaching climate change as a concrete concern relevant to these various bodies of law and practice, the course will address the normative bases for choosing between actions designed to prevent and/or manage climate change and its consequences, given developmental imperatives and the concerns raised by the 'fragmented' nature of international law. Projected seminars include: climate change science, politics and ethics; the theory of international law; international environmental law; trade law; human rights law; migration law. The course includes two case studies, from among the following: climate technology transfer; carbon markets; food security.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 1,800 word essay to be submitted by the end of week 6.

Indicative reading: IPCC, Fifth Assessment Report, Cambridge UP (2013-14); Rosemary Rayfuse and Shirley Scott (eds), International Law in the Era of Climate Change, Edward Elgar (2011); Stephen Gardiner, Simon Caney, Dale Jamieson and Henry Shue (Eds.), Climate Ethics: Essential Readings, Oxford UP (2010); Nicholas Stern, The Economics of Climate Change: The Stern Review, Cambridge UP (2007); Stephen Humphreys (ed.), Climate Change and Human Rights, Cambridge UP (2010); Larry Lohmann, Carbon Trading, Dag Hammerskjöld Foundation (2006); Lavanya Rajamani, Differential Treatment in International Environmental Law, Oxford UP (2006); Margaret Young (ed.), Regime Interaction in International Law: Facing Fragmentation, Cambridge UP (2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4A8 Half Unit

International Law and the Use of Force

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Devika Hovell NAB6.32

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Women, Peace and Security and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: This half-unit course examines the law relating to when it is permissible to use force (jus ad bellum). The aim of this course is to develop an understanding of the principles of international law that regulate the use of force in international society. It concentrates on the prohibition of resort to force in Article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter and the exceptions to that prohibition. It looks in detail at the right of self-defence, humanitarian intervention and the responsibility to protect, pro-democratic intervention, the protection of nationals and the criminalization of aggression. The use of force by or with the authorization of the United Nations is also considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the first seminar. See, in particular: Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence (5th ed, 2011); Gray, International Law and the Use of Force (3rd ed., 2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4A9 Half Unit

Law in War

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB6.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Women,

Peace and Security and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential. LL4A8 is useful but not essential.

Course content: This course covers the international law governing the conduct of hostilities (jus in bello, also known as the law of armed conflict (LOAC) or international humanitarian law)—as distinct from the law on the resort to force (jus ad bellum), which is covered in a separate course (LL4A8). The course will take a critical and historical approach to the international regulation and facilitation of armed conflict. As well as the laws governing the means and methods of war ('Hague' law), the 'protected' groups hors de combat ('Geneva' law), and the distinction between international and non-international armed conflict, the course will cover 'lawfare' more generally: the recourse to law as a means of waging war. It will examine the application of the laws of war, including occupation law, in historical, actual and ongoing conflicts, including recent wars in Iraq, Afghanistan and Syria, the 'war on terror', and the Occupied Palestinian Territories. Students can expect to have a thorough grasp of the principles and regulations governing the conduct of hostilities, the context and efficacy of enforcement mechanisms, and a critical understanding of the normative and political stakes of international law in this area.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of submitting a 1,800 word essay to be submitted at the end of week 6.

Indicative reading: It is worthwhile acquiring the following book: Yoram Dinstein, The Conduct of Hostilities Under the Law of International Armed Conflict (Cambridge UP, 3rd ed., 2016). Other useful books include: Roberts and Guelff, Documents on the Laws of War (Oxford UP, 2000); Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars (Basic books, 4th ed. 2006); David Kennedy, Of Law and War (Princeton UP, 2006); Geoffrey Best, War and Law Since 1945 (Oxford UP, 1997). Detailed readings for each seminar will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AA Half Unit Not available in 2018/19

Global Copyright Policy: Contemporary Issues

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation, and Trade Law; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law; Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Students must take Principles of Copyright Law (LL4N6) in parallel with this course unless exempted by the course convenor.

Course content: The aim of this course is to equip students with the skills to reflect critically on global copyright policy today. 'Global copyright policy' in turn is interpreted broadly to include not only the purposes and strategies underlying the formal treaties and trade arrangements that shape national copyright laws, but also those motivating the many alternative (and radically alternative) agendas for copyright's future that are currently under consideration around the world. Discussion in seminars will be theoretically informed but organised around particular topics of contemporary concern.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 2 hours of help sessions in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy. A help session is however offered in week 6 to assist with planning the summative essay. The help session will be designed to support students' summative essay-writing work. All students will be invited to attend this session, during which expectations for the essays will be explained.

Formative coursework: One 1500 word essay.

Indicative reading: There is no set text. Readings will be assigned week-by-week and most will be available electronically via the Moodle site that accompanies this course. Students will be expected to read a wide range of material drawn from a number of disciplines. The following sources are indicative: Peter Baldwin, The Copyright Wars: Three Centuries of Trans-Atlantic Battle (Princeton UP, 2014); Yochai Benkler, The Wealth of Networks (Yale UP 2006); Ronald Bettig, Copyrighting Culture (Westview Press, 1996); James Boyle, The Public Domain (Yale UP, 2008); Patrick Burkart, Pirate Politics: The New Information Policy Contests (MIT Press 2014); Julie E. LL4AD Half Unit

Rethinking International Law: International Law and Contemporary Problems

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB 7.14

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is part of the following LLM specialism: Public International Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal prerequisites.

Course content: This course is primarily designed for students who have already had some exposure to public international law and wish to deepen their understanding of the international legal dimensions of contemporary problems. Each week the relation will be explored between international law and a different global issue or theme, such as war, poverty, terrorism, humanity, and territory. Course readings will encompass both legal scholarship and relevant writing by scholars from other disciplines (geography, anthropology, philosophy, literary studies, etc.).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students are expected to have done the set reading and be willing to participate in seminar discussion.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Relevant readings are likely to include: David Kennedy, Of War and Law; Sundhya Pahuja, Decolonising International Law: Development, Economic Growth and the Politics of Universality; and Balakrishnan Rajagopal, International Law from Below: Development, Social Movements and Third World Resistance.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AE Half Unit

Rethinking International Law: International Legal Thought

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gerry Simpson NAB 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is part of the Public International Law specialism.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course can be thought of as an historical companion to the Rethinking International Law course from Michaelmas Term. Its overarching argument is that international law is a literary and historical project that has come to represent the "last of the humanities": a space (enclausal, utopian, imaginative) where a different politics might be conjured – even perhaps advanced and defended – amidst the drive to technique and professionalisation often/sometimes found in the humanities in general. So, we begin with this idea before tracing a history commencing in 1919 with the apparent revitalisation of international law (and the re-colonisation of The Levant) at Versailles and in Geneva (Weeks 2 and 3). In Weeks 4 to 6, we turn to the Cold War as a legal project and international law as a Cold War project by de-centring the UN (Week 4), re-inhabiting nuclear war as a lawful moment (Week 5) and understanding neutrality or non-alignment as an international legal doctrine and a Cold War ideal. The course ends with three thematic classes on international law as lived experience, international law as historical (anti-) method, and international law as imaginative bet.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students are expected to have done the set reading and be willing to participate in seminar discussion.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Readings likely to be set include a selection of international legal texts (including work-in-progress and "new authors") and readings from the fields of intellectual history, 18th century literature and political theory. The key works, apart from the usual contemporary international lawyers, are by Paul Fussell, Carl Schmitt, Friedrich Schiller and David Scott

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AF Half Unit

Principles of Global Competition Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Niamh Dunne

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This module provides an overview of the major features of contemporary competition law regimes. This is a discipline that has gone through a remarkable process of expansion in the past two decades. Competition law is actively enforced in a growing number of jurisdictions. Instead of focusing on a particular regime, the module puts an emphasis on the fundamental debates underlying the adoption and evolution of this field, addressed in comparative perspective. Examples drawn from EU and US competition law will be generally used by way of illustration, with references to other regimes where relevant. The course assumes no prior knowledge of competition law or economics, but aims to equip students to understand and analyse the key substantive elements found within most competition regimes, including:

- Competition Policy and Economics;
- Anti-competitive agreements, including cartels and vertical restraints;
- Unilateral conduct rules, including refusal to deal and exclusionary practices;
- Merger control, including horizontal and vertical mergers;
- Institutions and enforcement

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 3 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 1,500-word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Whish & Bailey, Competition Law (9th ed., 2018); Jones & Sufrin, EU Competition Law: Cases and Materials (6th ed., 2016); Roger van den Bergh, Comparative Competition Law and Economics (2017); and Hovenkamp, The Antitrust Enterprise (2005).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Competition Law: Challenges and Prospects

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Prior knowledge of Competition Law is desirable, but not essential.

Course content: This module addresses some of the most topical and intellectually challenging aspects of contemporary Competition Law. The emphasis will be put on US antitrust and EU Competition Law, but developments from other jurisdictions are discussed where relevant. The module examines, inter alia, the application of competition law in high-technology industries as well as its intersection with intellectual property (standard-setting agreements, patent pools, issues arising in relation to the enforcement of patents in the pharmaceutical sector) and sector-specific regimes.

Topics may include the following:

- Competition Law and Intellectual Property

- Competition Law in High-Technology Markets
- Competition Law and Sector-Specific Regulation (Telecommunications and Energy)

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

International Business Transactions: Conflict of Laws, Extraterritoriality, and Global Governance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jacco Bomhoff NAB 6.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of conflict of laws (private international law) would be useful but is not essential.

Course content: States often aim to regulate activities that transcend their own borders. When such measures are challenged or enforced through litigation, domestic courts become important sites of global governance. This course brings together perspectives from tort & company law, private international law (conflict of laws), public law, and regulation theory, to study such forms of extraterritorial and transnational regulation. Questions for discussion include: What law should a court in England apply to a case involving environmental damage allegedly caused abroad by a multinational mining company? Should companies operating in China ever be bound by US competition law rules or other US regulations? Should the UK Human Rights Act apply to actions by British soldiers in a foreign country? Topics to be studied throughout the course are: (1) Choice of law in tort law and in company law (especially in Europe and the US); (2) Extraterritorial application of statutes (incl. competition law and environmental regulations); (3) extraterritorial application of constitutional- and human rights law; (4) theories of transnational regulation (e.g. institutional roles of courts, regulatory arbitration).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

International Criminal Law: Core Crimes and Concepts

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gerry Simpson NAB 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Public International Law, Human Rights Law. This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: The course looks at the rules, concepts, principles, institutional architecture, and enforcement of what we call international criminal law or international criminal justice, or, sometimes, the law of war crimes. The focus of the course is the area of international criminal law concerned with traditional "war crimes" and, in particular, four of the core crimes set out in the Rome Statute (war crimes, torture as a crime against humanity, genocide and aggression). It adopts a historical, philosophical and practical focus throughout, though the course is mainly directed at the conceptual problems associated with the prosecution of war criminals and, more broadly, legalised retribution. Attention, in this respect, will be directed towards the moral and jurisprudential dilemmas associated with bureaucratic criminality and individual culpability. Topics include Pre-History (Vitoria, Grotius, Gentili, Cicero), Versailles, Nuremberg and Tokyo, the Trial of Adolf Eichmann, Crimes Against Humanity, the Crime of Aggression, Anti-Anti-Impunity, International Criminal Law's Historical Method.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Gerry Simpson, Law, War and Crime, (2007). Philippe Sands, East-West Street, (2017). Georg Schwarzenberger, International Law and Totalitarian Lawlessness, (1943). Judith Shklar, Legalism, (1964). Maurice Hankey, Politics, Trials, Errors (1950). Christine Schwobel, Critical Approaches to International Criminal Law: An Introduction (2015). Sam Moyn, The Last Utopia, (2010). Mark Lewis, The Birth of the New Justice: The Internationalization of Crime and Punishment, 1919-1950 (2014).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AS Half Unit

International Criminal Law: Prosecution and Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Devika Hovell

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Public International Law, Human Rights Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the practice and procedure of international criminal law. Rather than examining the history and core crimes, the course focuses on the fora for prosecution of international crimes and the practice, procedure and politics of international prosecutions.

In terms of the forum for prosecution, we examine the ad hoc international criminal tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia and hybrid tribunals such as the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia and the Special Court for Sierra Leone. We then consider the opportunities for prosecution of international crimes in domestic courts, looking in particular at the principle of universal jurisdiction. Finally, we turn to the International Criminal Court. We consider the foundation of authority of international criminal tribunals, the relationship between the various international criminal tribunals and controversial questions about jurisdiction in current cases. In terms of practice and procedure, we examine the modes, limits, exclusion and enforcement of individual criminal responsibility. We will look at questions, theory and case law surrounding modes of liability, immunities, defences and state cooperation.

Finally, we will consider future challenges for the prosecution of international crimes. The course will respond to current controversial issues in international criminal law, such as Palestine's accession to the Rome Statute, the selectivity of international criminal prosecutions, the relationship between domestic legal systems such as Libya and the ICC and the implications of these issues for the legitimacy of the international criminal law project.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each week's seminar on Moodle. Indicative reading includes Jose Alvarez, 'Crimes of States/Crimes of Hate: Lessons from Rwanda' (1999) 24 Yale Journal of International Law 365; Henry Kissinger, 'The Pitfalls of Universal Jurisdiction', Foreign Affairs (July 2001); Dapo Akande & Sangeeta Shah, 'Immunities of State Officials, International Crimes and Foreign Domestic Courts' (2010) 21(4) European Journal of International Law 815. Students may wish to refer to Robert Cryer et al., An Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure (Cambridge, 2010), 2nd edition.

Global Trade Governance: Contemporary Issues

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Lang NAB 6.19

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. LLM Specialisms. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovations and Trade Law, Public International Law, International Business Law.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Foundations of International Economic Law (LL4B1).

Course content: The aim of this course is to allow students with a particular interest in global economic governance to explore a greater diversity of topics than is possible in one term only. At one level, this involves covering a greater range of WTO agreements, including this TBT Agreement, Subsidies Agreement, SPS Agreement, the GATS, TRIPs and others. In addition, however, there is a much greater emphasis in this course (as compared to the Core Principles course) on using issues of contemporary trade governance to explore broader questions concerning the modalities of contemporary economic governance at the global level. Core themes of concern will include: international legal pluralism; the role of knowledge practices and the aesthetics of expertise in international economic governance, international economic law 'after the crisis', the emergence of new 'developmentalism' and its prospects, and spaces and modalities of contestation in contemporary global economic governance. Class Schedule (Indicative Only) 1. The WTO and global food governance: the SPS Agreement and the Agreement on Agriculture 2. Contemporary issues in subsidies regulation 3. Trade remedies and contingent protection 4. The TBT Agreement 5. Advanced issues in WTO dispute settlement 6. The new regionalism: TTIP and TPP 7. The new developmentalism 8. The WTO and the global financial crisis

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists and class outlines for each week are available through the Moodle page for this course. You are expected to come to class having read the Essential Reading for that week, all of which is readily available either in electronic form, or in hard-copy in the library. The items listed under Further Reading will assist those of you who wish to research more deeply into a particular topic, either in the context of exam preparation or the writing of a dissertation.

There are two textbooks for this course, and you may purchase either. One is Trebilcock and Howse, The Regulation of International Trade, 4th ed., (Routledge, 2013). The other is Van den Bossche, The Law and Policy of the World Trade Organization: Texts, Cases and Materials, 3rd ed., (Cambridge University Press, 2013). You must also purchase a copy of The Legal Texts: The Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, (Cambridge University Press). This contains most of the basic documents required for the course. An unmarked version of this text will be the only text allowed into the examinations. Students should ensure that they refrain from marking the text.

You may find it helpful to own or have ready access to a copy of Lester and Mercurio, World Trade Law: Text, Materials and Commentary (2nd ed, 2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Foundations of International Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB 7.14

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is part of the following LLM specialisms: Public International Law, Human Rights Law.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course provides an introduction to the historical developments, institutional arrangements and central principles that have given shape to the regime of international human rights law. We consider enduring debates around the foundations and universality of human rights, and look at a range of issues relating to the interpretation and application of human rights treaties. We also examine ongoing efforts to reform the institutions and procedures of international human rights law. Through the study of relevant concepts, norms, processes and debates, students are encouraged to develop an informed and critical assessment of the significance of international human rights law as a force for emancipatory change.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Relevant readings may include: Charles Beitz, The Idea of Human Rights (2009); Conor Gearty and Costas Douzinas (eds.), The Cambridge Companion to Human Rights Law (2012); and Philip Alston and Frédéric Mégret, The United Nations and Human Rights: A Critical Appraisal (2017).

LL4AY Half Unit International Tax Systems

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB 7.33

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: International Business Law, Taxation.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students should have at least a basic knowledge of a tax system of a country (not necessarily the UK) or be studying LL4Z1 Business Taxation.

Course content: This course examines how taxation applies to transactions in the international context. The focus is on rules that operate at an international or supra-national level, though we will look at some domestic rules that are important to international taxation and that can be found in a number of important tax systems. The course will look at a series of international transactions, starting with the very basic example of an export and import of goods and culminating with the treatment of some complex and artificial structures. The features of tax systems will be studied through these transactions, particularly those features found in double tax conventions and in the law of the European Union. In the first part of the course this will be supplemented by introductions to some key foundation concepts that are needed in the study of international taxation. Throughout the course examples will be drawn from the tax systems of a range of countries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

This will be based on a format of lecture-discussions with the possibility of guest speakers where appropriate and depending on numbers. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are asked to submit one 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle. Recommended preliminary reading: Avi-Yonah, Reuven S., 'Double Tax Treaties: An Introduction' (2007). For the LLM (Specialisms: European Law, Public Law, Human Rights Law)

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge (at an undergraduate level) of EU law is required.

Course content: "If the euro fails, Europe fails", warned the German chancellor Angela Merkel in 2011 at the (first) apex of the sovereign debt crisis. Since then the European Union has faced many more potential failures – and crises.

The course has two aims: first, to analyse the crises and challenges Europe is facing and prospects of the Union to stand up to them. Second, in order to understand the many crises in Europe, we need to understand Europe and European integration. We will therefore study some of its foundational values and concepts that form its legal and political vocabulary.

What kind of crises and challenges? Which values and concepts? Financial crisis, of course – but that has given way in public discourse to another crisis: the "refugee crisis". So far the European states – and their Union – were not capable to deal with it and the Union is more and more seen as a source, and not the solution to it. But there is a deeper issue here as well, going to the very heart of what Europe stands (or wants to stand) for: irregular migrants "are treated as both security threats to Europe and as lives that are threatened and in need of saving". How this tension is (not) being solved suggests something about the importance of borders and security for the legitimacy of the government, "governmentality" and technologies of power in today's Europe.

With the border crisis another boundary re-emerged in the political discourse: that between West and East, or liberal-democratic Europe and Europe at the "end of post-communism". Easterners are yet again being told to learn the terms of their membership in the EU, which contain also "solidarity": with the refugees ("the lives to be saved") and the states that bear a disproportionate burden ("lives as liabilities"). What does solidarity mean in today's Europe and which place it does it have in the whole integration project?

There are other problems in the East: after the Union failed to prevent the rise of an illiberal (and increasingly authoritarian) regime in Hungary, it wants to do better this time: on 13 January of this year the Commission decided to start "the structured dialogue under the Rule of Law Framework" with Poland – a first step which may eventually end with imposing sanctions on Poland for the violation of the Union's foundational values prescribed by Article 7 TEU.

Is this Europe's role, however, given its own problems with democracy and political legitimacy? Isn't this yet another sign of the German dominance in Europe, something the integration project had been succeeding in preventing, but today seems rather to contribute to? Do we have German Europe today rather than European Germany?

Is not the Union best understood as a cooperative enterprise among the member states aimed principally at securing economic prosperity through free trade promotion, as many people in the UK seem to believe? The debate around Brexit, as well as the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) currently negotiated between the Union and the United States both provide a focal point for such debate.

We will therefore discuss the challenge of Europe's purpose, identity and its relationship to the people of Europe too – all related to the issues mentioned above.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. The formative essay serves as a basis for the assessed essay.

Indicative reading: G de Búrca and JHH Weiler (eds), The Worlds of European Constitutionalism (CUP 2012), P Lindseth, Power and Legitimacy: Reconciling Europe and the Nation-State (OUP 2010); F Scharpf, Governing in Europe (OUP 1999); K and K Tuori, The Eurozone Crisis (CUP 2014). Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL4BK Half Unit

Corporate Crime

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jonathan Fisher

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms:

Banking Law and Financial Regulation Corporate and/or Commercial Law Corporate and Securities Law Criminology and Criminal Justice International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on crime committed within the commercial and business environment. The law is responding to the challenges presented by corporate crime; as the primary vehicle for commercial activity, unacceptable corporate practices are increasingly made the object of criminal sanction and causes of action in civil law. The course considers the principles of corporate criminal liability and the consequences of conviction for a corporation. The exercise of prosecutorial discretion in corporate crime cases, with a consideration of options such as deferred prosecution agreements, is examined in the context of multi-agency and cross-border investigations. The course proceeds to address the enormous challenges in the international fight against corruption. As well as exploring the nature, extent and consequences of corruption, the course examines international responses and their implementation into domestic law. In addition, the course considers other significant areas of potential corporate criminality involving accounting misstatements, cartels and tax offences. The multiple tensions triggered by internal investigations into corporate criminality are also explored in the context of a director's duties to preserve the company's assets in a manner consistent with disclosure obligations owed to its stakeholders and the financial markets. The increasing emphasis placed by the law on a company's obligation to prevent the occurrence of corporate crime is also examined. The course concludes with an exploration of the various ways in which a corporation can be abused by fraudulent trading and trading whilst insolvent, and as well as by organised criminals to conceal the proceeds of their criminal activity. There is no overlap between this course and the course on Financial Crime in the Lent (second) Term.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The first half of the session is lecture format, the second half seminar format. Students have an opportunity to work with other students in the presentation of seminars. Week 6 is a reading week. There is one revision session in the summer term.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading is prescribed for each lecture and seminar. There are no core textbooks available for the course; however, all the reading material is available from resources easily accessible through LSE Moodle, LSE Electronic Library and the internet. Preliminary reading is not required but for an understanding of the areas covered in the course students may read Wells: Corporations and Criminal Responsibility, 2nd edition, 2001, Oxford University Press; Gobert & Punch: Rethinking Corporate Crime, 2003, Butterworths LexisNexis; Green: Lying, Cheating and Stealing: A Moral Theory of White Collar Crime, 2007, Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Financial Crime

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jonathan Fisher

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Banking Law and Financial Regulation Corporate and/or Commercial Law Corporate and Securities Law Criminology and Criminal Justice International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on financial crime committed within the commercial and business environment and explores current perspectives in the detection, investigation and prosecution of these cases in the wake of the global financial crisis. The introductory session explores the taxonomy of financial crime, examining the nature and extent of financial crime, its social and economic impact and the perceived ambivalence to the prosecution of financial crime offenders. The course explores a definition of fraud through a consideration of notions of dishonesty and deception, examining the role of consent and the interaction between the criminal law and civil law notions of property and trust. Cybercrime is the most prevalent way in which fraud is committed today. In addition to exploring its nature and scale, the course considers how the criminal law is deployed to combat cybercrime. The engagement between financial crime and the global financial crisis is a critically important topic and the course examines offences such as insider dealing and misleading the financial markets. In addition, the course explores the potential criminality of other practices such as manipulating the financial markets, short selling and reckless risk taking. International initiatives to promote asset confiscation and penalise money laundering have featured heavily in the fight against financial crime. The course examines the tensions which arise when these initiatives are implemented into domestic law. Finally, the course explores the difficulties encountered by the enforcement authorities when investigating financial crime cases and the potential incompatibility between the exercise of compulsory interrogation powers and privacy issues. The course concludes with a session on the principles of sentencing in financial crime cases. There is no overlap between this course and the course on Corporate Crime in the Michaelmas (first) Term. Corporate Crime is not a pre-requisite for this course.

LL4BM Half Unit

The Legal Protection of Inventions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Siva Thambisetty NAB 7.29

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Information Technology, Media and Communications Law, Intellectual Property Law, Corporate and Commercial Law, International Business Law, and Competition, Innovation and Trade Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course provides an advanced and comprehensive introduction to the legal protection of invention through patents. Legally defined inventions are everywhere - in the velcro used to fasten a gym bag, in the tap or touch of a smartphone, in the food we eat, the medicines we take, the clothes we wear and in the buildings we live in. There are yet more inventions in the innovation pipeline and some that live only in our fertile technical imagination. Patent rights over such inventions increasingly intersect with diverse values such as competitive innovation, income equality, universal healthcare, regulation of risky technologies and the autonomy to pursue scientific prospects. In this course we will study the basics of patent prosecution as well as the theoretical and actual relationship between patents and innovation, both in law and in economics. Students will address central patentability criteria as well as patent eligibility for inventions that incorporate software, biotechnology or morally controversial technologies. These topics often call for a comparative approach based on UK, EU and US patent law. The aims of this course are to gain in-depth knowledge of patent law doctrine, familiarity with widely different contexts of innovation and a sound critical approach to the general principles of the legal protection of inventions. Students do not need a scientific background and will be supported in learning the relevant technical aspects.

Topics covered include: Novelty, inventive step, person skilled in the art, industrial applicability, sufficiency of disclosure, computer implemented inventions and business methods, biotechnology, exclusions (such as animal varieties, diagnostic methods, on grounds of morality) and the fundamentals of claim construction. This course is a pre-requisite for LL4BN and students are encouraged to consider taking both courses.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

This is a Michaelmas term course, and consists of 10 weekly two-hour seminars in variable format including lecture-discussions and student-led seminars. There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Weekly reading will include core chapters from books, cases and articles from law reviews. Bentley and Sherman Intellectual Property Law Oxford University Press 2014. This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Information Technology, Media and Communications Law, Intellectual Property Law, Corporate and Commercial Law, International Business Law and Competition, Innovation and Trade Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed The Legal Protection of Inventions (LL4BM).

Course content: This course will build on the comprehensive and advanced introduction to patent law provided in LL4BM to address sophisticated issues of law and public policy through multiple perspectives. Thematic focus in seminars may include institutional theory, understanding of technology cycles, competition policy, international powers of norm-setting and trade related coercion, the reasonableness and confusion surrounding the demands of the global pharmaceutical industry, the utilitarian balance between patent rights and the freedom to conduct research, the meaning of efficiency in patent law and bioethics. Some of the case studies that will be covered include infringement and the freedom to repair, plant variety rights, synthetic biology, TRIPS and access to patented medicines, the research use exception, patent offices, patent litigation and the need for a unitary patent court, competition law and policies in the technology and pharmaceutical sector. This course complements several areas of national and international law and policy.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

This is a Lent term course, and consists of 10 weekly two-hour seminars in variable format including lecture-discussions, student-led seminars and guest lecturers where appropriate. students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Not available 2016/17

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law; Legal Theory and Competition, Innovation and Trade Law

Course content: This course takes a broadly historical, theoretical and contextual approach to the study of intellectual and cultural property law. It focuses on a set of topical questions that illuminate paradigms, institutional models and social and economic formations that cut across the diversity of intellectual and cultural property regimes; questions about the nature of property in intangible things, about the implications of the transnational expansion of intellectual property forms and institutions, about the role of comparative analysis in the study of intellectual property, or about how regimes forged in the era of industrialization have adapted to new modes of production and distribution. These expansive questions are not asked in abstraction. Seminars will focus on specific case studies of institutions, transactional forms and social effects. Many of these studies are chosen for their topicality, so the contents of the course will evolve from year to year, but seminar topics might include: the emergence of new regimes of open source biotechnology, the evolution of non-conventional trade marks such as scents, textures and shapes; the effects of regime-shifting between different international frameworks for the regulation of questions of intellectual property; the bases of emerging markets in cultural property and heritage; the re-emergence of old tensions between droit d'auteur and copyright in the context of open source licensing or human rights negotiations; the nature of 'negative spaces' (the fashion industry, magicians, manga and stand up comedy) within the otherwise pervasive order of intellectual property; the nature of the link between legal incentives and technological innovation; the usefulness of economic models in understanding the proprietary value of patents. The object of the course is to introduce key themes in critical debates about intellectual property, and to offer a set of conceptual resources that might be drawn upon in more specialized LLM courses in intellectual property.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Trade Marks, Brands and Branding: Contemporary Issues

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Anne Barron

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms:

Competition, Innovation and Trade Law, Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law; Intellectual Property Law.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course situates the key concepts of trade mark law in relation to analyses of brands and branding offered by leading contemporary social scientists. Topics to be covered include: histories of brands, branding and trade marks; connections and disconnections between trade marks and brands; the new salience of non-traditional trade marks; sensory marks and sensory marketing; offensive marks and banned brands; trade marks and 'distinction'; the consumer psychology of trademark law; the role of trademark law in propertising brands; limits to propertisation; and legal implications of 'alter-branding' and related phenomena. Throughout, emphasis is placed on the law's role in underpinning marketing processes that now structure everyday life in ever more intense and intimate ways, and consideration is given to the links between these processes and wider changes in economy and society such as globalisation, financialisation and informationalisation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 2 hours of help sessions in the LT.

The help session will be designed to support students' summative essay-writing work. All students will be invited to attend this session. Expectations for the essays will be explained, and sample essays discussed.

Formative coursework: One 1500-word essay.

Indicative reading: There is no set text: readings will be assigned on a weekly basis. The core reading will include legislative texts and leading cases, but also journal articles and book chapters, and these will range across a number of disciplines including media and communication studies, cultural studies, economic sociology, business studies and anthropology. Cultural Property and Heritage Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB.5.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms:

Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course looks at cultural property and heritage law from legal, social theoretical and practice-oriented perspectives. It provides an overview of existing and emerging cultural property and heritage legislation (domestic and international). We will be looking in particular at the development of cultural property legislation in the 20th century and emerging international cultural property and heritage initiatives under the auspices of the UN and UNESCO. Topics to be covered include the origins of cultural property law, the problems in defining cultural property and heritage, current issues and cases in repatriation and restitution of cultural objects, the National Trust and other heritage protection regimes, and intangible cultural heritage. The course also addresses the creation and management of museums and heritage sites, primarily within the UK, but also including sites in North and South America, Europe and Asia. We consider how the issues that we've identified throughout the course arise in the ongoing construction, protection, and (primarily economic) uses of heritage. Along with specialist seminars, the course includes visits to museums and contact with practising experts in the field.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 2 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

LL4BU Half Unit Art Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB.5.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course engages in a discussion of specific cases and issues regarding acquisition, ownership, and restitution of works of art, and the problems that arise in regulating markets in art and cultural artefacts. We will look at domestic (UK and US) and international legislation regulating the art trade. Against this legislative background, the course examines important cases in disputes regarding commodification and sale of cultural goods, including the issues that arise in the operation of the art market (dealers, museums, collectors and auction houses). 'Art Law' is a specialized area of practice and an emerging area of theory and scholarship. We will look at some of the cases and theory of art and law, including the practices of dealers and auction houses in valuing (and mis-valuing) art for sale; the recent developments in addressing the restitution of art taken during the Nazi era; museum loans and the cross-border movement of art; the restoration and conservation debate(s) and then turn to a scholarly and interpretive approach to the issues that arise in considering the art market. We will also return to the questions that arise in dealer, auction house and museum policies more generally. Finally, practitioners in these areas, museum and auction house professionals, archaeologists, and art experts will be contributing to the seminars on the emerging legal issues in this area.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: The course instructs students on key issues in environmental law and governance beyond the state. Through the study of recent developments in international environmental law, regional law (including EU law) and private environmental regulation, the course investigates how new transnational environmental laws are made, what the role is of science in environmental decision-making and dispute resolution, how transnational environmental law is implemented and enforced, and whether transnational corporations can be held accountable for environmental damage. The questions are illustrated through case studies relating to, among others, climate change, biodiversity protection and chemical risk control.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

The students are given an opportunity to sit a mock exam at the end of MT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided for each seminar. The overwhelming majority of readings are electronically available as e-books or in e-journals. Essential reference works include the journal Transnational Environmental Law; Kingston, Heyvaert & Cavooski, European Environmental Law (CUP, 2017); Lee, EU Environmental Law, Governance and Decision-Making (2nd ed, Hat, 2014); Sands & Peel, Principles of International Environmental Law (3rd ed, CUP, 2012); Bodansky, The Art and Craft of International Environmental Law (2010, Harvard University Press); Bodansky, Brunnee & Hey, The Oxford Handbook of International Environmental Law (OUP, 2007); and the Stern Review Executive Summary (online).

LL4C2 Half Unit World Poverty and Human Rights

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon Law Department

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Some knowledge of public international law is required.

Course content: This course examines world poverty and inequality in light of international law aimed at the protection of human rights. Drawing on rights and obligations, the course considers the duties of states and non-state actors and the ways in which they may be implicated in the deprivation which has 2.7 billion people concentrated in the South, and many in the North, unable to exercise even their minimum essential levels of human rights. The course is interested in studying conceptual, normative, and critical approaches to human rights today and will draw on literature that situates human rights and development in broader interdisciplinary contexts. It will explore the role of international actors and institutions that impact positively or negatively on human rights today, as well as examine the global developments and the application of legal standards to some areas of outstanding concern. Topics to be covered may include: Poverty as a human rights issue

- Human rights, economics, and development
- The right to development and claims against the public international order
- The scope, content and limits of the obligation of international cooperation
- Inequality and democracy
- The work of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
- Human rights and the World Bank, IMF, international trade, investment, and finance
- Interrogating the Sustainable Development Goals.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

In 2015-16 this course will have two seminars every two weeks, instead of one seminar per week. Please see timetables for further details.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on work completed during the course.

LL4C5 Half Unit

Fundamentals of International Commercial Arbitration

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 students.

Course content: This course offers the fundamentals of international commercial arbitration, the most important dispute settlement mechanism for international commercial transactions. The course provides a complete introduction to the functioning of arbitration in theory and in practice. London being one of the main centres of arbitration in the world, this course focuses mainly on English arbitration law which is put into a comparative perspective and contrasted especially with the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration and French law. Special attention is given to the different types of rules that may have to be taken into consideration in an international arbitration. This course prepares for LL4C6 Advances Issues of International Commercial Arbitration and provides for some of the procedural basics for LL4E7 Investment Treaty Law.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Reading week in week 6

Formative coursework: One 2,500 word essay after week 6 on previous exam questions (choice of 1 out of 3).

Indicative reading: M. Moses, The Principles and Practice of International Commercial Arbitration (3rd edn, CUP 2017); G. Born, International Arbitration: Law and Practice (2nd edn, Kluwer 2015); N. Blackaby & C. Partasides, Redfern and Hunter on International Commercial Arbitration (6th edn, OUP 2015); J.-F. LL4C6 Half Unit

Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Fundamentals of International Commercial Arbitration (LL4C5).

Or a course on arbitration in previous studies or solid practical experience in the field.

Course content: This course aims at giving students who already are acquainted with the fundamentals of arbitration the possibility to go into depth into selected problems of international commercial arbitration. The course is based on student presentations and intense discussions of these problems in order to raise the sensitivity for the issues at stake. The course is highly relevant for those wanting to specialise in arbitration practice, as the theoretical problems have a significant impact on practical solutions. The course will treat a selection of topical contemporary issues of international commercial arbitration, such as the law applicable to arbitration agreements; the scope of the competence-competence principle; the role of internationally mandatory rules of law arbitration & insolvency, arbitration and fraud and corruption,; or the enforcement of awards set aside abroad. The course seeks to be as topical as possible, so that content may change in the light of new developments.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6

Formative coursework: One group presentation in the seminar and an essay of 2,500 words.

Law and Social Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umberto-Igor Stramignoni NAB 7.34

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. LLM Specialisms This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialism: Legal Theory

Course content: Social theory is rapidly evolving into a key cross-disciplinary field of inquiry exploring both philosophical analyses and social science descriptions about, in one important case, the place of law in modern societies.

The focus of such an inquiry in this course is on the interplay of law and space. Often unexamined notions of "space" at the heart of some of today's hottest debates, such as the politics of place, our engagement with nature, globalisation, and the city and its complexities. However, how does the law understand the link between itself and the space in which it operates? Does it understand it in the same way as do architects, urban planners, geographers, governments, policy makers, advocacy groups, or economists, for example, when speaking of the natural or the built environment, such as mountains, rivers, roads, airports, prisons, courtrooms, or immigration detention centres? Moreover, do we understand space in the same way? What if bodily habits, traits of character, idioms, and abiding habits of thought, have a role in shaping our individual and collective sense of space? What would it mean to frame talk about space in terms of “dwelling”, for example, or “embodiment”, or “emplacement”, and so on? Could it be that the very attempt of making sense of law's place in society, is problematically caught up with a specific cultural heritage no longer necessarily able to unpick the full complexity of the topos of law, its visibility, or even its materiality? Put it simply, is space always and everywhere the same place, as Copernicus, Galileo, Newton, Bacon and Descartes once thought, or is it something potentially so diverse as to call for new ways of going about it and, from there, about the place of law in society?

In this course, we will survey several perspectives on the elusive spatiality of modernity, debating the extent to which we can continue to treat space as the impassive repository of human affairs portrayed by tradition. Could it be that, if law is everywhere in space, on an altogether different level space is – paradoxical though it might sound at first – everywhere in law?

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the LT.

LL4CB Half Unit

Modern Legal History: Private Law and the Economy 1750-1950

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof. Michael Lobban

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

LLM Specialisms This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory.

Course content: This course will examine how the common law aided or hindered economic growth in the era between 1750 and 1950, by focusing in particular on the development of doctrines of private law. The course will concentrate on a number of themes and topics. It will begin with a discussion of the nature of the common law, and the modes of common law reasoning, to establish what kind of legal system economic actors were dealing with. It will then look at the developing law of contract, to explore how far the ideology of ‘freedom of contract’ assisted growth. It will further explore the law relating to civil wrongs (including the law relating to compensation for accidents and pollution) and unjust enrichment (particularly in the context of business failures). It will also explore some specific topics, including the law relating to corporate enterprise, bankruptcy and insurance.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: J. Oldham, English Common Law in the Age of Mansfield (Chapel Hill, 2005). W.R. Cornish et al, The Oxford History of the Law of England vols. 11-13 (Oxford, 2010). W.R. Commercial Remedies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Solene Rowan NAB 7.26 and Dr Charles Webb NAB 6.26

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is not available as an outside option.

Specialisms: Corporate and/or Commercial Law; International Business Law

Pre-requisites: Undergraduate contract law

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with a detailed understanding of remedies in a commercial context. The reading addresses both case law and academic commentary. Here is an indicative list of the issues that will be considered on the course:

1. The aims of commercial remedies: What interests and other policies may be served by the law when remedying commercial disputes?
2. The function of contract damages: How do the courts assess damages for breaches of contract? Should the courts do more to protect the claimant's interest in performance? What limits are placed on the recovery or measure of damages?
3. Punishment: Is punishment of a defaulting defendant ever a legitimate aim in commercial remedies? Should punitive damages be given a greater role in English commercial law?
4. Agreed remedies: To what extent are commercial parties free to fix the remedies available to them in the event of breach? Does freedom of contract extend to the parties' secondary obligations?
5. Unjust enrichment: What is the law of unjust enrichment? What is its relationship to the law of contract? What can commercial parties recover under the law of unjust enrichment?
6. Comparative law: How do other jurisdictions deal with these questions? What might the common law learn from civil law systems?

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. Formative assessment opportunities will be provided (essay or problem questions)

Indicative reading: Rowan, Remedies for Breach of Contract: A

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Corporate and Securities Law; European Law.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal prerequisites, but some understanding of European law and EU law-making is of advantage.

Course content: This course will examine the EU harmonization programme for companies. It will analyse the framework of primary EU law within which companies and national legislators must operate (the Treaty provisions on the right of establishment and the free movement of capital), as well as secondary measures of EU law regulating companies and relevant soft law initiatives. The course will also deal with the most important European forms of company, notably the SE (Societas Europaea or European Company) and investigate the implications that corporate mobility within the EU has for regulating companies at the national level. Topics include:

- EU company law harmonization programme
- 1st Company Law Directive: formation and disclosure
- Right of establishment: primary and secondary establishment, transfer of seat, jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice (in particular: Centros, Überseering, SEVIC, Cartesio, VALE)
- Free movement of capital: golden shares jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice, BAA, KPN/TPG, VW; proportionality principle in the EU
- 2nd Directive and capital structure: minimum capital; payment for shares; publicity; distributions; stock repurchase; increases in capital and capital reductions; serious loss of capital; case law interpreting the 2nd Directive; reform initiatives (e.g., SLIM Working Group)
- Corporate governance regulation in the EU: abandoned 5th Directive; Recommendation on the role of non-executive or supervisory directors of listed companies; remuneration policies; Shareholder Rights Directive
- European Company Law Forms: European company (SE) and European private company
- State of European company law harmonisation; potential for regulatory competition and regulatory arbitrage

LL4CE Half Unit Security and Criminal Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Ramsay NAB 6.27

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduate study of criminal law (or equivalent).

Course content: This is a course in advanced criminal law theory. The central concern of contemporary criminal justice policy is public protection. The course examines leading texts in Anglo-American criminal law theory in order to investigate the interests that are protected by the structure of the criminal law.

Seminars cover:

- the concept of security;
- the concept of criminal law;
- state punishment;
- the presumption of innocence;
- actus reus;
- criminal responsibility;
- criminal defences;
- public welfare offences;
- pre-emptive offences;
- security and human rights.

The reading materials for this course are primarily philosophical and theoretical. The course contrasts the different perspectives of moral and political theories of criminal justice and criminal law, and investigates what they tell us about the scope and limits of criminal law as a security system. The course therefore provides an introduction to normative criminal law theory in the common law world. At the same time, this introduction adopts an innovative approach to that theory by situating it in the context of the contemporary policy pressures on criminal law.

Each seminar consists of a student presentation on a key question, class discussion and a teacher presentation. There is a reading week in Week 6.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: A Ashworth and L Zedner Preventive Justice (OUP 2014); I Dennis and GR Sullivan (eds), Seeking Security: Pre-empting the Commission of Criminal Harms (Hart, 2012); A Brudner, Punishment and Freedom (OUP, 2009); RA Duff, Answering for Crime (Hart, 2007); P Ramsay The Insecurity State: Vulnerable Autonomy and the Right to Security In the Criminal Law (OUP, 2012); A Ashworth (et al), Prevention and the Limits of Criminal Law (OUP, 2013).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4CG Half Unit Understanding Tax Law and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Roxan NAB 7.25 and Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB 7.33

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is required for the following LLM specialism: Taxation.

NB: The monthly Taxation Seminars are available to all with an interest in taxation including LLM and MSc students. Students wishing to attend the Taxation Seminars are very welcome. For more information, see the Law Department or LSE Financial Markets Group web pages.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students will be expected to be taking other tax courses or to have a good background in taxation.

Course content: Taxation is fundamental to modern government and is pervasive in society. Lawyers in many fields have to be aware of the impact of taxation on their work, and tax lawyers have to consider the operation of tax law in many fields: corporate and commercial law, family law, labour and employment law, law of wills and trusts, environmental law, intellectual property law and law relating to the digital economy. In addition, as taxpayers seek to minimise their tax burdens, whether legally or by less than legal means, tax law becomes more complex in response.

How can tax lawyers better understand tax law so that they can apply it with sophistication and creativity for their clients, whether private clients or governments? How can those interested in tax policy achieve social goals effectively through tax law?

This course will explore the key principles of tax policy, and different perspectives through which tax law and policy can be understood, such as law itself, economics, economic analysis of law, politics, sociology and anthropology. Seminars discussing these principles and perspectives will be integrated with the monthly LSE Taxation Seminars during the Michaelmas Term, which will provide students with direct exposure to leading speakers from a wide range of backgrounds on current debates in taxation. The LSE Taxation Seminars series, established since the 1960s, brings together a wide variety of participants, including lawyers, economists, accountants and government officials.

The Seminars provide an important forum for topical discussion on taxation. This course will give students the opportunity to participate actively in the Taxation Seminars and to link insights from them to the methods of understanding tax law and policy studied in the course.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Weekly two-hour seminars in the Michaelmas Term in a variable format, including seminar-discussions and monthly Taxation Seminars attended by a range of tax professionals. 1 X 2 hour seminar in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit one 2,000-word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading: Avi-Yonah, et al., Global Perspectives on Income Taxation Law (Oxford: Oxford Univ. For more information, see the Law Department or LSE Financial Markets Group web pages.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students will be expected to be taking one or more other tax courses (LL4AY, LL4CJ, LL4CO, LL4Z1 or LL4Z3) or to have some background in taxation.

For more information please contact the course convenor Dr Ian Roxan: Telephone:020-7955-7469 Email: i.roxan@lse.ac.uk

Course content: This course provides an opportunity to look in depth at some of the most important current issues in taxation and tax policy, both from a legal perspective and with a wider interdisciplinary approach. The issues to be looked will be chosen according to what is topical at the time. Often a single theme is chosen for the term. Recent themes have included, for example, the G20/OECD BEPS (Base Erosion and Profit Shifting) Project. Seminars discussing these issues will be integrated with the monthly LSE Taxation Seminars during the Lent Term, which will provide students with direct exposure to leading speakers from a wide range of backgrounds on current debates in taxation. The LSE Taxation Seminars series, established since the 1960s, brings together a wide variety of participants, including lawyers, economists, accountants and government officials. The Seminars provide an important forum for topical discussion on taxation. This course will give students the opportunity to participate actively in the Taxation Seminars and to link insights from them to the other issues studied in the course.

Explaining Punishment: Philosophy, Political Economy, Sociology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Ramsay NAB 6.27

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: The course aims to provide students with a comprehensive overview of the theories that explain the practice of punishment, a practice that defines the criminal law. It will do this by introducing students to philosophical, sociological, political economy and comparative approaches to punishment. It will involve the discussion of all the major philosophical justifications and critiques of state punishment, and sociological and political economy explanations and critiques of punishment. After an introduction discussing the different approaches to punishment, three seminars will discuss the classical philosophical justifications of punishment and a fourth the contemporary critiques of those classical approaches. Seminars 5 and 6 will discuss punishment from the perspective of sociology and political economy. Seminar 7 will consider comparative approaches to punishment. Seminars 8 and 9 will look at two key aspects of the sociology of punishment, punishment as a cultural phenomenon and punishment as an exercise of power and authority. The final seminar considers the relation between these different perspectives.

Law in the Economy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Lang NAB6.19

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Legal regimes of market regulation are based on particular ideas about the nature of 'markets': what markets are, how they arise, what forms they take, and what dynamics they exhibit. As our ideas about the nature of markets have evolved over the course of the last two centuries, the way we govern the market through law has evolved with them. In the period since the global financial crisis of 2007, we are currently living through another period of ideational change, as mainstream ways of thinking about markets have been discredited and policy-makers look explicitly for new and better ways of understanding how markets work and what they are.

The aim of this course is to enable students to engage with this intellectual moment, by introducing them in a systematic way to the major competing traditions of thought about the nature of markets, with particular attention to the question of the relationship between markets and law, and the proper purposes to which law should be deployed in economic life. In what sense are markets 'spontaneous' social forms, and to what extent do they rely on the prior creation of complex legal and other institutions? Are economic actors naturally 'rational' or do they have to be taught to be rational, and if so how? What is the role of social networks and social norms in shaping the dynamics of markets, and what can that teach us about the proper forms of law in the market?

Students will be introduced to a wide variety of economic schools of thought from the early 20th century onwards, including mainstream neoclassical economics, behavioural economics, institutional economics, new institutional economics, as well as varieties of economic sociology and economic anthropology. We will consider the reception of these schools of thought within legal scholarship, from the legal realists, to law and economics. The focus will be on canonical texts from across the spectrum, drawing from writers such as Hayek, Polanyi, Friedman, North, Bourdieu, Foucault, Hale, Veblen, Knight, Callon and many others. The course will therefore involve close engagement with core theoretical texts, but care will be taken to ground the discussion of such texts with illustrations taken from contemporary spheres of regulation. These are likely to change from year to year.

LL4CO Half Unit Taxation of Wealth

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Summers NAB.6.02

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites:

This course is suitable for students who have not previously studied taxation. Some prior familiarity with principles of tax design is advantageous but not essential.

Course content: The course examines the taxation of wealth from a variety of interdisciplinary perspectives, drawing on research from political theory, economics, sociology and law. The main aims of the course are to explain why taxes on transfers, returns and holdings of wealth currently play a relatively minor role in most tax systems (compared, for example, with taxes on labour income and consumption), and to evaluate the options for taxing wealth. The focus is on the UK and US contexts although comparisons are also made with other jurisdictions.

Part I of the course introduces key debates from across the social sciences relevant to the taxation of wealth. Seminars 1-5 cover:

(i) defining and measuring wealth; (ii) inequality and distributive justice; (iii) property rights; (iv) economic perspectives; and (v) social and political perspectives. Part II applies these debates to specific wealth tax policies. Seminars 6-10 cover: (i) taxes on transfers: inheritance or estate tax, gift tax, comprehensive income tax; (ii) taxes on returns: capital gains tax, capital income tax and (iii) taxes on holdings: property tax, land-value tax, annual wealth tax.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 MT.

Formative coursework: Students will receive formative feedback on two essay-plans (comprising 300-word abstract, outline of sub-headings, and bibliography) based on past or sample summative essay titles.

Indicative reading: Atkinson, Inequality: What can be Done? (Harvard University Press 2015); Graetz & Shapiro, Death by a Thousand Cuts: The Fight over Taxing Inherited Wealth (Princeton University Press 2005); Hills et al, Wealth in the UK: Distribution, Accumulation and Policy (OUP 2013); Institute for Fiscal Studies, The Structure and Reform of Direct Taxation: The Meade Report (Allen & Unwin 1978); Institute for Fiscal Studies, Tax by Design: The Mirrlees Review, Vols 1 & 2 (OUP 2011); Murphy and Nagel, The Myth of Ownership: Taxes and Justice (OUP 2002); Piketty, Capital in the Twenty-First Century (Harvard University Press 2014); Sandford, Taxing Personal Wealth (Allen & Unwin 1971); Scheve & Stasavage, Taxing the Rich: A History of Fiscal Fairness in the United States and Europe (Princeton University Press 2016); Waldron, The Right to Private Property (OUP 1991); Young, The Myth of Millionaire Tax Flight: How Place Still Matters for the Rich (Stanford University Press 2017)

Assessment: Essay (50%, 3000 words) and exam (50%, 3000 words) in the ST.

For each essay, students will choose a title from a set of options published at the end of the MT.

LL4CP Half Unit Tax Avoidance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Blackwell (NAB 7.30)

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, Master of Public Administration and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will provide a comprehensive overview of the phenomenon of tax avoidance and of the attempts by states to combat it: both unilaterally and multilaterally. Whilst using examples predominantly from the UK and USA the issues addressed by the course are general across many jurisdictions and so will be applicable to those with interests beyond the UK and USA. The course will be multi-disciplinary, in that the course will draw on accessible social-science literature.

Taxpayers have always sought to minimise their tax burden. However recent decades have witnessed a sharp rise in popular and governmental concern with tax shelters and other tax avoidance. Traditional strategies of tax avoidance have included postponement of taxes and tax arbitrage, in addition to attempting to exploit 'loopholes' through a formalist interpretation of legislation. In recent years the proliferation of complex financial instruments has increased the opportunities for such avoidance. Additionally, globalisation and the development of the digital economy have facilitated tax avoidance strategies of base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS). This rise in opportunities for tax avoidance has been accompanied by an increased public concern that individuals and companies pay their 'fair share' of taxation: which states have responded to both through unilateral and multilateral actions (including the OECD's project on BEPS and the EU's Anti Tax Avoidance Package).

Particular topics covered will include (i) defining avoidance; (ii) strategies of tax avoidance; (iii) statutory interpretation and judicial approaches to tax avoidance especially with reference to the UK and USA; (iv) General Anti-Abuse and Anti-Avoidance Rules and Specific and Targeted Anti-Avoidance Rules; (v) reporting rules and other policies to deter avoidance; (vi) the OECD response to BEPS; (vii) BEPS and the EU; and (viii) corporate social responsibility, professional ethics and public attitudes with regard tax avoidance.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students should submit a detailed essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises and act as either a presenter or discussant during seminars.

LL4CQ Half Unit

Legal Aspects of Private Equity and Venture Capital

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Sarah Paterson New Academic Building 6.06 and Dr Simon Witney N/A

Sarah Paterson and Simon Witney will co-teach this course.

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will equip students with a detailed understanding of the legal structures and issues arising in international private equity and venture capital. It is founded on deep academic analysis of pertinent theoretical and legal issues complemented by insights from relevant practitioners. It will have a pan-EU focus, but with comparative global perspectives.

Class 1: Introduction to private equity and venture capital
This introductory session will include a critical discussion of the academic research suggesting that private equity outperforms other asset classes.

Optional practitioner talk: "Why we invest in private equity: a leading UK investor explains the attraction of the asset class"

Class 2: Fund structures: the limited partnership and other international structures

This class looks at the structures adopted, and the reasons why, with particular emphasis on the legal, tax and regulatory characteristics of limited partnerships.

Class 3: Management vehicles and the UK LLP

This class will look at the objectives in structuring the management entity for the fund, with a particular emphasis on the legal and tax characteristics of LLPs, including the UK LLP Act and recent case law.

Class 4: Private equity fund (and manager) regulation

This session looks at UK and EU regulatory initiatives, and critically evaluates the provisions of the Alternative Investment Fund Managers Directive which affect private equity funds

Class 5: Venture capital investments

Starting from a theoretical perspective, we will analyse the terms of a typical venture capital investment into a portfolio company by reference to example documents. We will also examine various aspects of contract and company law which have particular relevance to VC structures

Class 6: The VC deal: feedback from a practitioner

This week the students will discuss the key points arising from a venture capital investment case study with a leading VC lawyer. We will focus on key points which have a legal as well as a commercial aspect, and connect these to the theoretical discussions in Class 5.

Class 7: The leveraged buyout: corporate governance issues

This class will examine the structure of a buyout and how it differs from a VC investment. We will focus on pertinent company law rules and academic corporate governance theory.

Class 8: Financing

This class will look at the leveraged finance model, advantages of leverage, the LMA Leveraged Loan Agreement, High Yield Bonds, the Inter-creditor Agreement and "covenant-lite" and incurrence covenants

Optional lunchtime talk: "The anatomy of a buyout deal: a leading private equity lawyer talks about a recent high profile deal."

Class 9: Distress

Discussions on the implications of distress for the PE firm, valuation, the new money decision, the role of the inter-creditor agreement and the PE firm as the loan-to-own investor

Optional practitioner talk: "Case study of a recent buyout deal: the general counsel from a leading private equity firm explains key issues arising on a recent transaction"

Class 10: This week we will analyse a suite of leveraged loan deal documentation for a typical private equity buyout. Students will be provided with a fact pattern and asked to apply the theory that they have studied in weeks 8 and 9 to the deal documentation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course will consist of 10 x 2 hour seminars in LT, together with a revision class in ST. There will be a reading week in Week 6. There will also be optional talks by practitioners which students may choose to attend, but which will not be examined.

Formative coursework: A formative essay will be due in Week 7 and detailed feedback will be provided shortly after. The essay will have a word limit of 1,500 and will provide invaluable preparation for the summative assessment.

Indicative reading: Example core readings:

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

Students will be given a period of time in which to complete and return a take home exam, with penalties for late submission. Students will be asked to complete 2 questions from a possible 6 (with a requirement to choose one question from Part 1 and one question from Part 2) and each answer will be limited to 1,500 words, with penalties for exceeding the word limits. For more information regarding penalties, please refer to the LLM Handbook.

LL4E6 Half Unit

International Dispute Resolution: Courts and Tribunals

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Devika Hovell NAB6.32

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: Increasingly, international law is developed, applied and amended through litigation in international, regional and domestic courts. Richard Goldstone, former Prosecutor of the Yugoslav Tribunal, has gone so far as to say, 'it seems to me that if you don't have international tribunals, you might as well not have international law'. In this course, we examine key courts and tribunals operating on the world stage, including the International Court of Justice, the International Criminal Court, the European Court of Human Rights and the WTO Dispute Settlement Body. We look at the theory, politics and practical difficulties of international dispute resolution in these courts.

The course has practical and theoretical aspects. For those interested in a career in international law, we will have the opportunity to hear from a range of interesting and eminent practitioners currently working in the courts and tribunals we study. Interested students can engage in a 'mini- moot' before our guest speakers, providing an opportunity to hone their advocacy skills.

The theoretical dimension of the course involves three main elements:

1. First, the course examines the structure and work of the International Court of Justice, the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, focusing on jurisdiction/admissibility, contentious cases and advisory opinions.
2. Secondly, the course introduces a variety of other international courts and tribunals, such as the International Criminal Court, domestic and regional courts dealing with international law and human rights, including the European Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Justice, the WTO Dispute Settlement Body and investment treaty arbitral tribunals. Using contemporary and controversial case studies, the course will critically analyze and contrast the institutional design and jurisdiction of these courts and tribunals.
3. Thirdly, throughout the course we explore key theoretical controversies surrounding the adjudication of international law, focusing in particular on (a) how these courts and tribunals relate to one another (hierarchy, specialization and fragmentation); (b) what criteria should be used in assessing the legitimacy and effectiveness of these courts and tribunals; and (c) whether and how these courts and tribunals create international law.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas term.

Formative coursework: Students are asked to choose from EITHER an oral moot presentation and written submissions OR one 2,000 word formative essay

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each week's seminar on Moodle. Indicative reading includes Karen Alter, The New Terrain of International Law: Courts, Politics, Rights (2014 Princeton); Gleider Hernández, The International Court of Justice and the Judicial Function (2014 OUP); Yuval Shany, 'No Longer a Weak Department of Power? Reflections on the Emergence of a New International Judiciary' (2009) 20(1) European Journal of International Law 73; Frederic Megret and Marika Giles Samson, 'Holding the Line on Complementarity in Libya: the Case for Tolerating Flawed Domestic Trials' (2013) 11 Journal of International Criminal Justice 571.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4E7 Half Unit

Investment Treaty Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Christopher Thomas NAB7.18 and Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to international investment law and dispute settlement, the latter emphasizing developments in investment treaty arbitration. The course focuses on the public international law rules and institutions that govern investments and investment treaty disputes. The course has four components: (1) the historical, theoretical and policy background behind investment treaties and dispute settlement by arbitration; (2) the rules governing jurisdiction and admissibility of investor-state arbitration cases; (3) the substantive principles and standards - such as national treatment, most-favoured-nation treatment, expropriation, and the minimum standard in international law - that may apply to the investor-state relationships; and (4) recognition and enforcement of investor-state arbitral awards and interaction between international tribunals and national courts.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay after week 6 on previous exam questions.

Indicative reading: C.L. Lim, J. Ho, M. Paparinskis, International Investment Law and Arbitration (CUP 2018); R. Dolzer and C. Schreuer, Principles of International Investment Law (2nd edn, OUP 2012); G. Van Harten, Investment Treaty Arbitration and Public Law (OUP 2006)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Law in Society: A Joint Course in Law and Anthropology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Pottage NAB 7.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society. This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course offers a foundation in those elements of anthropological and social theory essential to an understanding of law in society. This course draws on anthropological themes and texts to develop an innovative perspective on contemporary legal norms and institutions. It aims to document legal institutions and practices as concrete ethnographic phenomena, focusing on the techniques of writing and documentation, the legal production of persons and things, and the legal framing of institutions. It combines abstract social theory with concrete ethnographic method in the study of ritual, kinship, property and communicative technologies in formal law.

The course may include the following topics: Law, anthropology, and the production of the social: an introduction to the links between legal and anthropological scholarship, exploring juridical concepts of power, agency and social personality and anthropology's models of society; Legal and political ritual: selected theoretical analyses of modern legal ritual examined against the background of anthropological debates concerning the general nature of ritual; The communication of power in writing: the representation and construction of social institutions in administration; Legal time and evidence: ethnographic analysis of narrative, evidence and proof in different legal cultures; Persons and things: legal forms of personification and objectification in systems of ownership and inheritance, with particular attention to the law governing reproductive resources; Legal collectivities, the modern corporation and its others: ethnographies of the social and legal construction of collective agency; The uses of anthropology in law and politics: the role of anthropology in contemporary contests over indigenous title, cultural property, common property resources, and alternative dispute resolution.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of MT.

Indicative reading: Bruno Latour, The Making of Law, 2009, Niklas Luhmann, Observations on Modernity, 1998 and Law as a Social System, 2004; Sally Engle Merry, Getting Justice and Getting Even: Legal Consciousness Among Working-Class Americans, 1990; Brinkley Messick, The Calligraphic State: Textual Domination and History in a Muslim Society, 1993; Martha Mundy (Ed), Law and Anthropology, 2002; W T Murphy, The Oldest Social Science?, 1997;

Secured Financing in Commercial Transactions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: An examination of the proprietary and security aspects of commercial transactions. This course considers the significance of property and the special protection the law affords to proprietary interests (mainly in movable property). It examines various types of commercial transactions involving the transfer of property, the use of property, the taking of security and certain quasi-security transactions having a similar effect to security. It explores the different types of security and other transactions that may be available in the context of various types of asset, as well as priority issues when there are conflicting interests. The course will also consider proposals for reforming the law and alternative approaches that might be taken. The course is based upon the principles of English law but reference may also be made to other systems of law and to international initiatives sponsored by Unidroit and UNCITRAL.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed during the course. For preliminary reading on the basic principles see M Bridge, Personal Property Law (3rd Edn.) (especially chapters 6-7); M Bridge, The English Law of Real Security [2002] European Review of Private Law 483-508, and E McKendrick, Goode on Commercial Law (4th Edn) (especially chapters 22-25).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

One two-hour open book examination paper.

LL4F2 Half Unit

The Law and Practice of International Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joanne Braithwaite NAB7.28

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 90 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: LL4F2 examines the legal issues which arise in international financial markets based in London. This course looks at various types of financial transactions and structures which are widely used in the financial markets, such as derivatives and syndicated loans. We make reference to certain sets of trade association drafted terms throughout the course. With an emphasis on private law, the course considers the relevant legal, commercial and regulatory background and the risks and protections available to participants in the global financial markets. The course is based upon an analysis of the relevant issues under English law with some reference to other systems for comparative purposes. The subject matter ties in well with the LLM evening seminars in financial and corporate law. The course will be underpinned by discussion of the legal principles involved in international finance, but the case studies referenced will be topical. In this sense, the content of the course will be adapted to the fast moving developments affecting international markets in capital and in risk (for example, in recent sessions the course has examined the legal basis of prime brokerage relationships, the related Lehman Brothers litigation and the ongoing regulatory reform of the OTC derivatives markets, including the new requirement of mandatory CCP clearing, triggered by the G20 statement in 2009).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of LT

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one essay, which may be completed in exam conditions. The course also involves group presentations and other classwork.

Indicative reading: Examples of texts which will be referenced on the course: J Braithwaite, 'Law after Lehman's' (LSE Law Working Paper 11/2014); J Braithwaite 'Standard form contracts as transnational law' (2012) 75(5) MLR 779; L Gullifer and J Payne, Corporate Finance Law: Principles and Policy (Hart, 2nd edition, 2015); J Benjamin, Financial Law (OUP, 2007). A full reading list will be distributed via Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Assessment is by closed book written examination.

Mergers, Acquisitions and Restructurings in Europe

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Edmund-Philipp Schuster NAB6.30

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 90 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: In this course, we will explore the regulation of mergers, acquisitions and restructurings in Europe. The course will examine the available legal techniques for the combination and restructuring of business operations in Europe, with a particular focus on cross-border transactions. Areas covered will include corporate mobility in Europe, domestic and cross-border mergers, de-mergers, spin-offs, public takeovers, and the European Company, and how it is used for business restructuring and reorganisation. Particular attention will be paid to the interaction between the relevant legal concepts and the economic and financial environment firms operate in.

Content overview

- The market for corporate control, corporate ownership structures and transaction structures for takeovers and restructurings in Europe
- European takeover regulation
- Domestic mergers
- Divisions & spin-offs
- Cross-border mergers in Europe

LL4F9 Half Unit

Legal Research and Writing Skills

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the LLM (extended part-time) and LLM (full-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course on Legal Research and Writing has a taught component focusing on research and writing skills and a stand-alone dissertation (details about which may be found in the LLM Handbook), to be written in a substantive law area of the student's choice.

The two components will be carefully integrated. Over the taught part of the course, students should gain a better understanding of:

- the nature of research in general; the distinctive features of legal research and the range of questions and research methodologies to be found within legal scholarship;
- how to conduct legal research, including research design, refining a research question, resource identification and searching for relevant materials; legal referencing and citation skills;
- how to develop legal writing skills, relating to both the process of writing, as well as the end-product; integrating a literature review; and presenting findings to a scholarly audience, etc.

Topics for the lectures will be: (1) Choosing your dissertation topic; (2) Research methods; (3) Writing skills; (4) Library skills, referencing and plagiarism.

The two tutorials will have a small group format (usually 4-5 students in each tutorial) and will focus on: (1) developing your research proposal; and (2) writing skills. One of the aims of the tutorials will be to prepare students for their two dissertation supervisions with faculty members.

The course will also offer the opportunity to participate in workshops. For example, there are skills sessions run by the LSE Library designed for students on this course to develop their legal research skills and awareness of the resources on offer in the LSE Library and beyond. The course also links in closely to the programme of workshops and events offered by the LSE Life centre, and the most relevant of these support sessions will be referenced on this course.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Other Workshops and drop-in sessions as may be advertised during the course.

Formative coursework: Students will be invited to prepare a short writing samples and dissertation plans, etc., for their tutorials.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

See the LLM handbook for full details and regulations about the dissertation.

International Commodity Sales

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The course is concerned with the international sale of goods where English law is the applicable law by virtue of well-established standard form contracts used extensively in the trade, such as GAFTA 100 (a CIF contract form). English law plays a dominant part in the international sale of commodities, especially in the case of dry commodities (wheat, soya etc) produced in North America and transported to a northern European destination. It is usually the case that such contracts have no physical connection with England. There is a rich case law dealing with sales on FOB, CIF and similar terms and there are interesting comparisons to be drawn between forward physical sales and futures sales. Interesting questions are also posed by the intersection of various allied contracts concluded to give effect to the international venture, notably, sale, letters of credit, insurance and carriage (or charter parties). Extensive consideration is given to the UCP600 Customs and Practice on Documentary Credits 2007.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Michael Bridge, The International Sale of Goods (Oxford, 3rd ed 2013); Michael Bridge, The Sale of Goods (2nd ed 2009); A Slabotsky, Grain Contracts and Arbitration (Lloyd's London, 1984); M Bridge (ed), Benjamin's Sale of Goods (Sweet & Maxwell, 9th ed 2014); D Morgan, Merchants of Grain (Penguin, 1980); E McKendrick (ed), Goode on Commercial Law (Penguin, 4th ed 2010); International Chamber of Commerce, Incoterms 2010; International Chamber of Commerce, UCP Rules on Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (UCP 600, 2007). Plus a substantial list of cases and some articles.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Media Law: Regulating Publication

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of mass media publication (principally the press, the broadcast media, and institutionalised Internet publication). The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media publication practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines potential restrictions on publication that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests considered are those in reputation (defamation), privacy, and confidentiality. The key public interests considered are the integrity of the judicial process (contempt and reporting restrictions), the impartiality of political representations, the avoidance of offence (obscenity and religion), and national security.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

10 weekly two-hour seminars in MT. The course is also supported by a series of specialist seminars with outside speakers, and by an online discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students must submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 1,500 word essay.

Indicative reading: Supporting texts for the course include Parkes and Mullis (eds) Gateley on Libel and Slander (Rev 12th edn, Sweet & Maxwell, 2015), and Barendt et al, Media Law: Texts, Cases and Materials (Pearson, 2013); Leveson, An Inquiry Into the Culture, Practices and Ethics of the Press: Report, HC 780, 2012. These and other materials relevant to the course are generally made available via the BLPES electronic resources or online.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words).

Media Law: Regulating Newsgathering

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the legal and administrative regulation of newsgathering and content production practices undertaken by journalists and others working in the media sector. The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media newsgathering practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines a number of newsgathering practices that are either facilitated or proscribed by law and/or other forms of regulation. These include the protection of sources and journalistic materials; 'cheque-book journalism' (including payments to witnesses and to criminals); access to information held by the state (freedom of information); access to courts and legal documents; media-police interaction; harassment and media intrusion, and the regulation of surreptitious newsgathering practices (hacking, tapping and subterfuge).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There is a reading week in week 6.

The course is also supported by a series of specialist seminars with outside speakers, and by an online discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students must submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 1,500 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Supporting texts for the course include Millar and Scott, Newsgathering: Law, Regulation and the Public Interest (Oxford University Press, 2016); Leveson, An Inquiry Into the Culture, Practices and Ethics of the Press: Report, HC 780, 2012, Warby, Moreham and Christie (eds), Tugendhat and Christie: The Law of Privacy and the Media, (3rd ed, OUP, 2015), Flat Earth News (Chatto & Windus, 2008); de Burgh, Investigative Journalism (Routledge, 2nd ed, 2008). Many of these and other materials relevant to the course are made available via the BLPES electronic resources or online.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL4H4 Half Unit

International Financial Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Paech NAB7.05

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 on a 'first come first served' basis.

Course content: The traditional financial market sectors of insurance, commercial banking, derivatives, capital markets and asset management are converging in practice, but their academic analysis is still largely sector-based. This course offers a cross-sectoral, functional analysis, permitting students to grasp the big picture. It highlights certain anomalies in differing legal treatment of the respective sectors, and considers key trends. The course provides an overview of the substantive law aspects (UK, EU and international) of international financial and business transactions. The focus is mainly on broad principles and policy issues rather than a detailed examination of statute, case law and drafting. However, where appropriate, legal concepts and market practice will be explained by reference to case law and other legal sources. The course is designed to be as topical as possible, and the content may change in the light of developments. While the precise topics covered will vary from year to year they typically will include the following:

- Introduction:
 - Logic and players of the financial market
 - Overview of types of financial transactions
 - Reasoning and sources of financial law and regulation

- The types of risk and the role of financial law
- European and global legal and regulatory architecture
- Raising capital: taking risk through funded positions
 - The nature of banks, deposit taking, loans, syndicated loans
 - Issuance of debt securities, eurobonds and equity
 - Investment funds
 - Cross-comparison of funded positions, common patterns and differences
- Mitigating financial risk: simple financial positions
 - Guarantee and insurance
 - Derivatives and credit default swaps
 - Structured finance, securitisation
 - Cross-comparison and the risk of recharacterisation
- Mitigating financial risk through net and asset-backed positions
 - Set-off and netting
 - Security interests, quasi-security and financial collateral
 - Insolvency policy and preferential treatment of financial firms
- Cross-jurisdictional analysis
 - Private international law analysis in financial law
 - Example 1: intermediated securities and cross-border collateral
 - Example 2: cross-jurisdictional netting
 - Common patterns and difficulties

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

The course will comprise a two hour weekly lecture in MT and small group follow-up seminars in weeks 3,5,7,9 and 11. There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of the MT. There will be a revision lecture in ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit a 2,000 word essay during LT. A voluntary mock exam is also offered.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be made available on Moodle prior to teaching.

Recommended general reading: (a) Joanna Benjamin, Financial Law, Oxford University Press, 2007; (b) Colin Bamford, Principles of International Financial Law, Oxford University Press, 2011; (c) Philip Wood, Law and Practice of International Finance (University Edition) 2007, Sweet&Maxwell; (d) S. Valdez, Ph. Molyneux, An Introduction to Global Financial Markets, 6th ed., Palgrave-McMillan, 2010 (this last one is not a legal work but ideal for understanding market practice).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Assessment is by closed book written examination. The exam is two hours plus 15 minutes reading time.

LL4H7 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Foundations of Legal Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: Drawing on major themes of modern European philosophy, this course re-frames the questions that have been taken as defining jurisprudential inquiry: What accounts for the foundations of legal orders and their durability across space and time? How and why do legal norms change? What explains the normativity of law? What is the connection between sovereignty and legal validity? Is there a connection between democracy and legal validity? Is it part of the definition of a legal norm's validity that it advances morality or the common good? Is it part of law's essence that it institutionalizes individual rights, and if so, which ones? Throughout, these questions are addressed in relation to the philosophical tradition that links Kant, Hegel and Habermas; hence the focus of the course is on how, and how far, modern law enables the realisation of the ideals of autonomy and mutual recognition.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Jürgen Habermas, Between Facts and Norms (Polity Press 1996); G.W.F. Hegel, Elements of the Philosophy of Right (trans. H. LL4J1 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19

Critical Perspectives on Legal Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed LL4H7 (Foundations of Legal Theory) unless exempted from this requirement by the course convenor.

Course content: The aim of this course is to consider aspects of the phenomenon of law that have arguably been insulated from critical scrutiny by traditional jurisprudence. The questions structuring the seminars will accordingly include the following: What are the material conditions for law's existence as a putatively legitimate structure of authoritative norms? What are the connections between law and other modalities of power that are not encoded in the form of sovereignty? What is the relationship between law and violence? What is the relationship between law and freedom? Are the forms of subjectivity and mutual recognition institutionalized by the legal order always linked with emancipatory social change, or can they also be complicit with processes of domination and exploitation? Is law necessary for individual and collective self-determination? These questions are approached from a variety of critical perspectives, including Marxist, post-Marxist, post-structuralist, and post-colonialist perspectives. Accordingly, the course will encourage reflection on the normative grounds for social criticism generally, and in particular on the role that ideas of progress and emancipation can or should play in a critical legal theory.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Amy Allen, The Politics of Our Selves: Power, Autonomy and Gender in Contemporary Critical Theory (Columbia University Press 2007); Amy Allen, The End of Progress: Decolonizing the Normative Foundations of Critical Theory (Columbia University Press, 2016); Luc Boltanski, On Critique: A Sociology of Emancipation (Polity Press 2011); Diana Coole and Samantha Frost (eds.) New Materialisms: Ontology, Agency, and Politics (Duke UP 2010); Mitchell Dean, Governmentality: Power and Rule in Modern Society 2nd ed. LL4K4 Half Unit

The International Law of Self-Determination

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Irving

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: This course will provide a general introduction to the doctrine of self-determination in international law. Self-determination will be historically contextualised from its intellectual progenitors in the Enlightenment through to its political birth at the 1919 Paris Peace Conference and its formal induction into international law by virtue of the 1945 UN Charter. Both the detail of the doctrine's content and the dynamic governing its development will be explored. The relationship between self-determination and state formation (including decolonisation and secession), minority rights, aboriginal rights, women's rights and the nascent right to democratic governance will be central topics. Reference will also be made to the interplay between self-determination and economic rights, including permanent sovereignty over natural resources, the right to development and the "third generation rights" movement more generally. Self-determination's influence upon the international rules governing the use of force will be discussed, but these rules will not be a primary focus. Upon completion of the course students will be in a position to legally analyse contemporary fact patterns and to identify both strengths and weaknesses in the existing legal framework. Students will have considered new and novel approaches to self-determination and will be able to situate the doctrine in relation to international law and human rights. Those taking the course will gain an appreciation for self-determination's particular contribution to political and economic liberty.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

(Please note that week six will be a reading week.)

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Introductory reading: James Crawford, "The Right of Self-Determination in International Law: Its Development and Future" in Philip Alston, ed., People's Rights (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001) 7. Additional sources: Philip Alston, ed., Peoples' Rights (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001); S. Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words).

LL4K5 Half Unit

International Commercial Contracts - General Principles

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites:

Firm knowledge in contract law and/or international sale of goods from previous studies.

Course content: The course treats what can be called the general part of transnational contract law, i.e. the general principles of law which are of relevance in any kind of international contract, be it sale, construction, shipping, financing, or joint venture. These general principles relate to contractual formation and negotiations, interpretation, transversal general principles, changed circumstances and hardship, agency, third parties, assignment, self-help and set-off, direct performance and damages and penalties. At present, such contracts are governed either by uniform rules of international conventions or by the national laws applicable by virtue of conflict of law rules. The course puts the existing national and international solutions in a comparative perspective so as to work with the sources of such generally accepted principles. Where there are divergences between existing solutions, the course focuses on the elaboration of new efficient solutions that are internationally acceptable and have the potential of becoming general principles in the future. For these purposes, special attention is given to the UNIDROIT Principles on International Commercial Contracts and, where appropriate, the European Principles of Contract Law. Other national laws, however, are drawn upon from time to time. Students are also encouraged, in both classes and examination, to reflect upon the similarities and differences between their own national laws and the UNIDROIT Principles.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 word essay after week 6 on previous exam questions (choice of 1 out of 3).

Indicative reading: S. Vogenauer & J. Kleinheisterkamp, Commentary on the UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts (1st edn, OUP 2009); H. Kötz, European Contract Law (OUP 1997); K. Zweigert & H. Kötz, An Introduction to Comparative Law (3rd edn, OUP 1998); H. Beale et al., Ius Commune Casebook on the Common Law of Europe: Cases Materials and Text on Contract Law (2nd edition, OUP 2010); T. Kadner Graziano, Comparative Contract Law (Palgrave 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4K7 Half Unit

Mental Health Law: The Criminal Context

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jill Peay NAB.5.08

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: This course aims to integrate a practical and theoretical understanding of mental health law, as it relates to mentally disordered offenders. It is not intended to provide a comprehensive understanding of the detail of the relevant law in England and Wales, but rather aims at broader conceptual understanding of the problem areas that are likely to bedevil law relating to those with mental disabilities who have offended across many jurisdictions. The course makes reference to both the Mental Health Act 1983 and the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6. Summer term is a review and revision session.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: J. Peay (2011) Mental Health and Crime, Routledge. P Bartlett & R Sandland, (2014) Mental Health Law. Policy and Practice, Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Two-hour unseen examination in ST (100%).

Law of Corporate Finance: Securities Regulation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Niamh Moloney NAB6.08

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 students.

Course content: The course examines the legal issues arising out of the operation of the capital markets as intermediaries between investors and issuers; it focuses on the regulation of capital-raising through the markets. The topics covered include: disclosure theory; the role of trading markets in finance-raising and their regulation; prospectus disclosure; ongoing disclosure; market abuse; and the internationalization of capital-raising and harmonization. The course will focus primarily on English law. Course coverage may vary slightly from year to year.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT. Teaching on this course takes the form of weekly two-hour lectures in LT. Five classes/seminars (of one-hour duration) will also take place as scheduled in the LL4K8 timetable.

Formative coursework: A mock examination will be held at a time to be advised during LT.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided in advance for each session. Sample texts include: Ferran and Ho, Principles of Corporate Finance Law, 2 ed 2014; Payne and Gullifer, Corporate Finance Law, 2011.

Preliminary reading: Ferran and Ho, Principles of Corporate Finance Law, 2 ed 2014, Chapters 1 and 13.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4K9 Half Unit

European Capital Markets Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Niamh Moloney NAB6.18a

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The course examines the EU's regulation of the capital markets. It considers the harmonized regulatory regime which applies to capital market actors across the Member States and which supports the integrated market. The topics which may be covered include: the rationale for integration and the role of law and the evolution of the integration project, including the impact of the financial crisis; the deregulation, liberalization, harmonization, and re-regulation mechanisms used to integrate and regulate the EU market; market access and the passport for investment services; the liberalization of order execution and the regulation of trading markets; the UCITS mutual funds regime; retail investor protection; the prospectus and disclosure regime; the regulation of gatekeepers; and the institutional structure supporting regulation and supervision, including the role of the European Securities and Markets Authority. Course coverage may vary slightly from year to year.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the LT.

The teaching for this course takes the form of 10 X 2 hour seminars held weekly across LT in weeks 1-5 and weeks 7-11. In week 6, the teaching will take the form of a mandatory in-class formative assessment. An additional one hour revision session will be held in week 11. More detail will be available on the LL4K9 timetable.

Formative coursework: A mandatory in-class formative assessment (in the form of a timed exam question) will be held in week 6.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided in advance for each seminar. Sample texts include: Moloney, EU Securities and Financial Markets Regulation, 3rd edition (2014); Mugge (ed), Europe and the Governance of Global Finance (2014); Schammo, EU Prospectus Law (2011); Ferran, Building an EU Securities Market (2004).

The Theory and Practice of Dispute Resolution

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB 7.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms:

Legal Theory

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: None, but The Theory and Practice of Dispute Resolution is a pre-requisite for Advanced Mediation

Course content: This course focuses on the dynamics of disputes and distinctions between the principle methods of dispute resolution. Students on this course will be asked to look at a variety of theories of dispute resolution which draw on insights offered by law, sociology, anthropology, psychology and economics. Topics include 1. What prompts and fuels disputes? 2. Typologies of third party roles in disputes 3.. Negotiation theory and practice: bargaining in the shadow of the law 5. International civil justice reforms and their impact on the litigation process 6. Histories of informalism and ADR movements 7. Facilitative Mediation 8. Mediation role plays. The course is designed to complement the option on Commercial Arbitration and Advanced Negotiation and Mediation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Simon Roberts and Michael Palmer's 2005 (second edition) Dispute Processes: ADR and the Primary Forms of Dispute Resolution, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. Genn, Hazel, (2009) Judging Civil Justice (The Hamlyn Lectures) Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4L5 Half Unit

Socio-legal Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Meredith Rossner NAB 6.33

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Law (Socio-Legal Theory). This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Proposed +4 ESRC PhD students registered in the law department (and in other departments with permission).

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course will explore the interface between social theory, methodology and socio-legal practice. After an initial engagement with literature on the history, scope and nature of doctrinal, realist, critical and socio-legal approaches to law, the course will focus on seminal empirical studies of law and legal phenomena. In particular students will be asked to identify how specific theoretical frameworks for research have influenced choice of methodology, methods and the subsequent interpretation of data. Empirical studies exploring central legal concepts such as rights, regulation, access to justice, judgment, neutrality, due process and equality will be selected for in-depth analysis. An important feature of the course is that authors of leading socio-legal research outputs will be invited to lead 'master classes' in order to discuss the intellectual origins of their work and how this impacted on design and implementation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to prepare a poster presentation outlining the theoretical framework, methodological choices, ethical implications and practical obstacles for a research project they would like to undertake. The 'ideas map' they present will be used as a plan for the formal summative assessment. Each student will present their poster to the class before week seven of the term and will receive detailed feedback on their presentation by the end of the same term. This will give students the time to reflect on the comments made before writing up their ideas in their course dissertation. A fuller version of the presentation will later be submitted as the coursework component of the course. This is an unusual form of assessment for law students but is used extensively in other disciplines. Students will be directed to websites which provide guidance in preparing a poster presentation and will also be given the opportunity to study examples of posters collected by the course convenor.

Indicative reading: Roger Cotterrell, Why Must Legal Ideas Be Interpreted Sociologically? (1998) 25 Journal of Law and Society pp171-92; David Nelken, Blinding Insights? The Limits of Reflexive Sociology of Law (1998) 25 Journal of Law and Society 407-26; Simon Halliday and Patrick Schmidt (eds) Conducting law and Society Research: Reflections on methods and Practices, Cambridge University Press, 2009; Max Travers, The sociology of law in Britain The American Sociologist, Vol 32, no 2, June 2001.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST. The essay will take the form of a research proposal (100%).

LL4L6 Half Unit Theory of Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some knowledge of human rights law of any jurisdiction may be helpful, but is not essential. A knowledge of philosophy is not required.

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to the philosophy of human rights and theoretical issues in human rights law. The emphasis is on a combination of law and theory; to this end, each seminar will rely on a mixture of cases from various jurisdictions and theoretical and philosophical materials. The overarching questions to be examined are to what extent current philosophical theories of human rights can illuminate our understanding of the cases and legal doctrines, and to what extent the cases and doctrines can help improving the theoretical and philosophical understanding of human rights. Topics to be discussed will include: James Griffin's Theory of Human Rights; Ronald Dworkin's Theory of Rights as Trumps; Balancing and Proportionality; Human Rights and Judicial Review I (The American Perspective); Human Rights and Judicial Review II (The European Perspective); Absolute Rights.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: The course will rely on both cases from various jurisdictions and articles and book chapters from authors including Ronald Dworkin, Robert Alexy, James Griffin, Matthias Kumm, Jeremy Waldron and Frances Kamm.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4L7 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Advanced Mediation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB7.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory. This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Students wishing to take Advanced Mediation must have taken The Theory and Practice of Dispute Resolution

Course content: This course examines the various models of mediation and the contexts in which each is used. It also considers contemporary debates about power in mediation. Practicing mediators will be invited to a number of the classes in order to facilitate discussion of the interface between theory and practice. Topics include 1. Distinguishing between different models of mediation e.g., facilitative, evaluative, narrative/transformational and transactional 2. The cultural context of mediation 3. Gender and mediation 4. Power and mediation 5. The lawyer's role in mediation 6. Case studies of the use of mediation in particular fields may include commercial, family, personal injury international and community mediation. 7. The shift towards compulsory mediation. The course is designed to complement the options on Commercial Arbitration and Advanced Negotiation and Mediation and The Theory and Practice of dispute resolution.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Seminars will take the form of a mini lecture followed by in-depth discussion of the reading. In addition students will undertake a series of role play exercises and analyses of filmed mediations in which they are asked to explore the interface between theory and practice.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Simon Roberts and Michael Palmer's 2005 (second edition) Dispute Processes: ADR and the Primary Forms of Dispute Resolution, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press; David Luban, Settlements and the Erosion of the Public Realm, 83 Geo LJ 2619 1994-5; Abel, Richard L (1982) 'The Contradictions of Informal Justice', in Richard L. LL4N6 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Principles of Copyright Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade Law, Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law; Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course provides an introduction to copyright law aimed at those who have not studied the subject in detail before. The starting point will be UK copyright law (as shaped to date by relevant EU Directives and international agreements), but US, French and German law will serve as occasional bases for comparative analysis. Topics to be covered will include the history and evolution of copyright, copyright's protected objects ('works') and subjects (authors, publishers and producers of works), the principles governing the ownership of copyright, and the nature and scope of the rights comprised in copyrights and authors' moral rights.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be issued on a weekly basis. UK and EU legislation, cases and soft law instruments will make up most of the required reading for this course. All of this material is available in electronic form via the Moodle site which supports the course. Useful texts include Lionel Bently and Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law 4th ed. (OUP, Oxford 2014); Thomas Dreier and P. Bernt Hugenholtz (eds.) Concise European Copyright Law (Kluwer, 2016); and Paul Goldstein and P. Bernt Hugenholtz, International Copyright Law 3rd ed. (OUP 2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4S1 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Cyberlaw

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Andrew Murray (NAB 7.11)
Dr Orla Lynskey (NAB 6.23)

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: This course does not require an in-depth understanding of contemporary computer technology.

Course content: This course critically analyses the regulation of the Internet and digital devices (such as smart devices and tablets).

It begins by providing a theoretical framework for the regulation of the Internet, examining questions such as whether the internet is capable of regulation, whether such regulation should be neutral and who should assume the task of regulating the online environment. Students taking the course will be expected to develop knowledge and understanding of the different values and interests brought to bear in the regulation of information technologies and communities.

Armed with this theoretical background, students will then be asked to consider how these values are reflected in the regulatory design of the online environment. This examination will be conducted by considering a number of case studies relating to online privacy, defamation, criminal activity and market power. The course concludes by examining the topical and politically charged question of whether Internet Service Providers should be allowed to vary service conditions by types of content.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students should submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Murray, Information Technology Law: The Law and Society (OUP, 3rd ed, 2016). Edwards & Waelde (eds), Law and the Internet 3rd ed (Hart, 2009). Murray, The Regulation of Cyberspace (Routledge, 2007). Lessig, Code Ver, 2.0 (Basic Books, 2006). Zittrain, The Future of the Internet (Penguin, 2009). Benkler, The Wealth of Networks (Yale UP, 2007). Sunstein, Republic.com 2.0 (Princeton UP, 2009).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL4S2 Half Unit E-Commerce Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Murray NAB7.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course is to introduce students from a legal background to the specialised legal structure which surrounds e-commerce. The course looks at the specific problems an e-commerce start-up must overcome in order to begin trading, including arranging hosting agreements, designing terms and conditions of service and delivery, and arranging distribution agreements. From here the course will develop to examine the problems of more mature e-commerce businesses including jurisdiction, payment systems and rules on marketing and privacy. Special classes on internet auctions and social networks will complete the analysis. The course is designed to act as an interface between ICT law and commercial law and practice in that it examines in detail the close sub-set of online transactions which are clearly commercial in nature.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students should submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Murray: Information Technology Law: The Law and Society 3ed (OUP, 2016) Edwards & Waelde (eds): Law and the Internet 3rd ed (Hart, 2009) Hörnle: Cross-Border Internet Dispute Resolution (CUP, 2009) Law of Electronic Commercial Transactions: Contemporary Issues in the EU, US and China (Routledge 2014) Wang: Law of Electronic Commercial Transactions: Contemporary Issues in the EU, US and China (Routledge, 2010)

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words).

LL4S4 Half Unit Digital Rights, Privacy and Security

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Orla Lynskey NAB 6.23

Professor Andrew Murray NAB 7.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students and priority is given to LLM and MSc in Regulation students when allocating places. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of EU law is desirable but not essential for this course.

Course content: Personal data is an important factor of production in data-driven economies, and the processing of personal data can generate significant economic and social benefits. However, personal data processing can also have a detrimental impact on established rights and values, such as autonomy, privacy and data protection. As a result, legal frameworks to regulate personal data processing have been enacted across the world, with the EU legal model used as a blueprint. Yet, despite the development of such legal frameworks, critical questions remain unanswered. For instance, the objectives of data protection frameworks differ with some prioritising a fundamental-rights approach to data protection regulation while others frameworks are based on an economic free-trade rationale. Disagreement also persists regarding how the balance should be struck between effective data protection and other rights (such as freedom of expression and freedom of information) and interests (such as innovation and national security).

This course will critically evaluate the legal framework applicable to personal data processing. It will do this predominantly with reference to the EU framework, as this has served as a model for over 100 other jurisdictions. Participants will be introduced to techniques and technologies for monitoring and processing personal data in the information society. In order to bring key issues to life, a number of case studies will be considered, including the application of data protection rules to online behavioural advertising and the right to respect for private life to State surveillance.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to contribute to a series of class exercises and to submit one piece of formative work for assessment.

Indicative reading: Bygrave: Data Privacy Law: An International Perspective (OUP, 2015). Kuner: Transborder Data Flows and Data Privacy Law (OUP, 2013). Lynskey: The Foundations of EU Data Protection Law (OUP, 2015). Murray: Information Technology Law, The Law and Society (OUP, 2nd ed, 2013)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period. This is an open-book exam.

LL4S5 Half Unit

Piracy, Content and Ownership in the Information Society

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Murray NAB7.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: One of the most contentious and complex areas of online activity is the conflict between content providers and consumers. Providers spend considerable amounts on developing and delivering a variety of content, including entertainment content, branded content and business content. Consumers often erroneously, feel "information ought to be free" and take content without payment, an activity known as piracy. This is an embedded schism in internet society and this course will examine key flashpoints including: proprietary vs. open software; file sharing and aggregation; trade mark disputes including ADR for domain name disputes; software patents and the database right. At the end of the class students should have a valuable insight to, and understanding of, the legal foundations of these disputes and the attempts of regulators to broker a resolution. This class will take a critical approach to both the problem and the proposed legal/regulatory solutions.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit to one one-hour mock exam.

Indicative reading: Murray: Information Technology Law: The Law and Society 3ed (OUP, 2016); Waelde et al, Contemporary Intellectual Property: Law and Policy 3ed (OUP, 2013) Lessig: Free Culture: The Nature and Future of Creativity (Penguin, 2005) Patry: How to Fix Copyright (OUP 2012) Boyle: The Public Domain: Enclosing the Commons of the Mind (Yale UP, 2009) Netanel: Copyright's Paradox (OUP, 2010) Johns: Piracy: The Intellectual Property Wars From Gutenberg To Gates (Chicago UP, 2011)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4Y9 Half Unit

Comparative and Transnational Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jacco Bomhoff NAB 6.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course looks at three related themes: (1) approaches to comparing laws and legal institutions from different legal systems and traditions (comparative law); (2) understanding legal regulation beyond the state (transnational law); and (3) ideas about what it is that makes legal phenomena 'legal' (legalism). Combining these three elements allows to ask questions like: "Why are courts in some legal systems more powerful or more trusted than courts in other systems?"; "Why do people go to court more often in some countries than in others?"; "Why do some countries send far more people to prison than others?"; "How is 'law' in non-state contexts similar to and different from state law?"; "How did lawyers come to be such powerful actors in organizations like the European Union?"; "What sorts of problems of 'translation' can arise when lawyers from one country look at law in another country?"; "What might happen when forms of 'Western' law are transplanted to other parts of the world?".

The course combines attention to theory - theories of legal comparisons, and of the 'transnationalization of law', in particular - with detailed practical case studies in selected areas from different fields of law (comparative constitutional law, comparative private law, comparative criminal justice, EU law; and commercial arbitration, among others). The course might be especially interesting for students already taking other courses with a comparative- or a transnational law dimension, and for all students interested in the ways law works and does not work, and in how lawyers think, in different parts of the world.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. This essay is due in Week 7.

Indicative reading: Adams, Maurice & Bomhoff, Jacco, Practice and Theory in Comparative Law (Cambridge, 2013). Cotterrell, Roger, What is Transnational Law?, LAW & SOCIAL INQUIRY (2012). Frankenberg, Gunther, Critical Comparisons: Re-thinking Comparative Law, 26 HARVARD INTERNATIONAL LAW JOURNAL (1985). Pirie, Fernanda, The Anthropology of Law (Oxford, 2013). Reimann, Mathias and Zimmermann, Reinhard, The Oxford

Handbook of Comparative Law (Oxford, 2006). Ruskola, Teemu, Legal Orientalism (Harvard, 2013). Shaffer, Greg, Theorizing Transnational Legal Ordering, ANNUAL REVIEW OF LAW AND SOCIAL SCIENCE (2016). Special Issue: 'Comparative Socio-Legal Studies', INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF LAW IN CONTEXT (2017)

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

The take home exam will consist of 2 essay questions (out of 6 set), each with a 3000 word limit. Students will be given their exam questions at 9:00 am on Wednesday morning of Week 1 Summer Term, via Moodle, and will have until 5:00 pm on Thursday afternoon of Week 2 Summer Term to submit the exam. The length of time set for this assessment already takes into account that students may also have one or more other exams during this period.

LL4Z1 Half Unit Business Taxation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Roxan NAB.7.25 and Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB.7.33

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: The course is suitable both for those who have not studied taxation before and for those who have. It is recommended for those studying LL4CJ Comparative Corporate Taxation or LL4CK Taxation of Corporate Transactions who have not studied taxation previously.

Course content: This course looks at how businesses are taxed in the UK. The course focuses on the key elements of the taxation of the income of businesses, including:

- taxation of trading income
- corporation tax, the nature of taxes on companies and the taxation of dividends
- capital allowances - relief for depreciation
- capital gains taxation
- partnership taxation
- tax relief for losses

The course is suitable for students who are interested in taking one course in taxation, including students who have not studied taxation before. It will be a good background course on UK business taxation for students taking LL4CJ Comparative Corporate Taxation or LL4CK Taxation of Corporate Transactions who do not previously have a sufficient background in UK taxation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the MT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading: Loutzenhiser, Tiley's Revenue Law; Fairpo and Salter (formerly Lee), Revenue Law Principles and Practice; Salter, Lee and Snape, Revenue Law: Text and Materials. Legislation: Tolley's Yellow Tax Handbook, or CCH The Red Book. Current editions need to be used. Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Relevant legislation may be taken into the examination room (Tolley's Yellow Tax Handbook or CCH The Red Book) if un-annotated.

LL4Z2 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Principles of Taxation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB7.33

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: The course is suitable both for students who have not studied taxation before and for those who have. It is recommended for students who have not studied taxation previously, as well as for those who are studying any of the other tax courses offered at LLM/MSc level.

Course content: This course looks at how tax systems work and the principles that lie behind tax systems. Topics covered include the reasons for taxation and the main types of tax, how income is taxed, how the tax administration operates, the interpretation of tax legislation and tax avoidance. The course uses examples from the tax systems of the UK and other countries to illustrate the issues discussed. The course is suitable for those who have not studied taxation before, as well as for those with a background in tax who are interested in studying the principles of taxation in greater depth.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Appropriate readings from journal articles and from books including: Avi-Yonah, Sartori and Marian, Global Perspectives on Income Taxation Law; Messere et al., Tax Policy: Theory and Practice in OECD Countries; Tanzi and Zee, Tax Policy for Developing Countries; Ault and Arnold, Comparative Income Taxation: A Structural Analysis; Thuronyi, Comparative Tax Law; James and Nobes, The Economics of Taxation; Mirrlees et al., Tax by Design. Further materials include: Morse and Williams, Davies Principles of Tax Law; Kay and King, The British Tax System; Thuronyi, Tax Law Design and Drafting. Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle.

Recommended preliminary reading: Avi-Yonah, Sartori and Marian, Global Perspectives on Income Taxation Law (Oxford University Press, 2011).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4Z3 Half Unit Taxation of Consumption and Income

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Roxan NAB7.25

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The main sources of tax revenue in nearly every country are taxes on income and consumption in one form or another. This course looks at these two important tax bases to understand their differences, advantages and disadvantages, as well as looking at the taxes they give rise to. Most economists have consistently advocated the taxation of consumption for many years. We will look at the validity of these arguments, how consumption can be taxed both in income taxes and sales taxes. The most dramatic change that has followed from the focus on taxing consumption has been the rise in value added taxes, also called goods and services taxes. First implemented sixty years ago, the great majority of countries in the world now have a VAT, with the significant exception of the United States. The second part of the course will focus on this important tax, examining how it has been implemented in a range of countries, including the European Union, since the EU VAT has been an important model for other countries. We will look at the main features of VATs (the taxpayers, supplies of goods and services subject to tax, amount of consideration for supplies subject to tax), and key current issues, such as cross-border transactions and applying VAT in the digital economy.

The course is suitable for students who are interested in taking one course in taxation, including students who have little previous background in taxation, as well as for tax specialists.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word formative essay or an equivalent assignment.

Indicative reading: Schenk et al., James and Nobes, The Economics of Taxation; Tanzi and Zee, Tax Policy for Developing Countries; Mirrlees, et al., Tax by Design: the Mirrlees Review, (Oxford: Oxford Univ. Press, 2011), Edward J. McCaffery, 'A New Understanding of Tax' (2005), 103 Mich. L. Rev. 807; J. McNulty, 'Flat Tax, Consumption Tax, Consumption-type Income Tax Proposals in the United States: a Tax Policy Discussion of Fundamental Tax Reform' (2000), 88 Cal. L. Press, 2015); Ebrill et al., The Modern VAT (IMF, 2001); Bird and Gendron, The VAT in Developing and Transitional Countries (Cambridge Univ. Press, 2007); Alan A. Tait, Value Added Tax: International Practice and Problems; Mirrlees et al., Tax by Design. Detailed reading lists will be provided during course via Moodle.

Recommended preliminary reading: James and Nobes, The Economics of Taxation or Tanzi and Zee, Tax Policy for Developing Countries; Ebrill et al., The Modern VAT (International Monetary Fund, 2001), or Alan A. Tait, Value Added Tax: International Practice and Problems (IMF, 1988).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4Z5 Half Unit EU State Aid Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo NAB5.16

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: Member States of the EU are not free to award subsidies to companies or to support them in a comparable way (by, inter alia, granting them loans at favourable rates or by providing unlimited guarantees). In the wake of the recent financial crisis, for instance, bailout measures adopted across the EU had to be cleared by the European Commission in accordance with Articles 107 and 108 TFEU. The first part of the course explores the economic rationale underpinning the principle whereby State aid is incompatible with the EU internal market (the reasons why similar regimes are not implemented at the national level in federal countries facing similar issues, such as the United States, will also be explored). The second part is devoted to (i) the notion of State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU (that is, the range of measures that are subject to ex ante control by the European Commission) and to (ii) the conditions under which such measures may be declared to be in the interest of the EU as a whole. The third part provides an overview of the application of the law in some sectors (including the energy or the communications sectors) or for some purposes (e.g. research and development, regional aid). The fourth part is devoted to the procedural aspects of the discipline and to the application of similar rules outside the EU (in particular in the context of the WTO and of the trade agreements concluded by the EU).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Quigley, European State Aid Law and Policy (3rd Edition, 2015); Jones and Sufrin, EU Competition Law (online Chapter, 6th Edition, 2017); Bacon (ed), European Community Law of State Aid (3rd Edition, 2017).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4Z6 Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jo Murkens NAB7.31

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the central issues in comparative constitutional law across a range of jurisdictions and from a variety of perspectives. The course opens with an introduction on the purpose of comparative constitutional law. The first substantive part discusses various approaches to the study of CCL as well as the migration of constitutional ideas (and related notions of constitutional borrowing, transplants etc). The second part of Term 1 deals with key constitutional concepts (constitution; rule of law; presidentialism, parliamentarism) which are discussed from a historical and comparative perspective. The point of these sessions is not to compare for the sake of comparing, but to equip you (the researcher) with the conceptual tools to do insightful, critical, and original comparative work of your own. The third part challenges the assumptions of liberal constitutionalism by examining constitutions in divided societies as well as authoritarian constitutionalism. The overall aim of the course is to develop students' understanding and use of many general theoretical explanations surrounding debates in CCL, and to develop students' critical/analytical approach to many of the questions facing judges and scholars in the next decade.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: There is not set book for this course. All materials will be made available in advance on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4Z7 Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Rights

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines a range of controversial issues in human and constitutional rights law from a comparative perspective. These issues include: abortion; "deviant" sexual practices; same sex marriage; religion in the public sphere; hate speech and denial of the holocaust; obscenity. We will approach them by comparing and contrasting judgments from courts all over the world, with a certain emphasis on cases from the U.S. Supreme Court, the Canadian Supreme Court, the South African Constitutional Court, the European Court of Human Rights, the U.K. Supreme Court, and the German Federal Constitutional Court. The goals of the course are, first, to introduce the students to the jurisprudence of those extremely powerful and influential courts, and, second, to invite them to think about and critically analyse some of the most controversial, difficult, and important rights issues of our time.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly case-based; however, interested students may find the following book helpful: V Jackson and M Tushnet, Comparative Constitutional Law, 3rd edition, 2014.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4Z9 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Banking Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joanne Braithwaite NAB7.28

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on the private law of banking as it relates to the core banking activities not covered elsewhere on the LLM (ie, on courses about the financing activities of banks and the regulation of banking activities). In particular, we look at the deposit-taking relationship, and the legal issues surrounding bank payment services. The course aims to be both domestic and international in perspective, though the emphasis will be on English law. Topics include: 1. The deposit-taking relationship; 2. Money, transfers of money and payment including the development of new digital currencies and decentralised payment systems; 3. Bank payment methods: funds transfers and unauthorised payments; and 4. Bank payment services in international trade.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one essay, which may be written in exam conditions. Students will also be expected to take part in group presentations during the course.

Indicative reading: For introductory purposes, students are referred to Ellinger, Lomnicka and Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law (5th ed, 2011). Full reading lists will be distributed during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics and Quantitative Methods for Risk Management)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mihail Zervos

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students who wish to select this course as an outside option must have a quantitative background.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to review some key concepts of probability used in finance. The course develops the common mathematical background that is assumed by the MSc Financial Mathematics and addresses some aspects of the mathematical theory that is central to the foundations of the programme: probability spaces, random variables, distributions, expectations and moment generating functions are reviewed; the concepts of conditional probability and conditional expectation as random variables are introduced using intuitive arguments and simple examples; stochastic processes, martingales, the standard Brownian motion are introduced; Itô integrals, Itô's formula and Girsanov's theorem are discussed on a formal basis.

Teaching: 30 lectures and 6 classes over two weeks during September, prior to the start of the academic year. There will be an informal examination.

Formative coursework: Exercises are assigned and form the basis of class discussion.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. S. Shreve, Stochastic Calculus for Finance II Continuous-Time Models, Springer. D. Williams, Probability with Martingales, Cambridge University Press.

Assessment:

This course does not form part of the degree award.

MA402 Half Unit Game Theory I

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Olivier Gossner and Dr Paul Duetting

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is not available to students who have taken Game Theory (MA300) or Game Theory I (MA301).

Pre-requisites: Students must know basics of linear algebra (matrix multiplication, geometric interpretation of vectors) and probability theory (expected value, conditional probability, independence of random events).

Course content: The course studies the theory of games, its approach is mathematical, with some applications to economics. Topics studied include: Game trees with perfect information, NIM, combinatorial games. Backward induction. Extensive and strategic (normal) form of a game. Nash equilibrium. Commitment. Zero sum games, mixed strategies. Maxmin strategies. Nash equilibria in mixed strategies. Finding mixed-strategy equilibria for two-person games. Extensive games with information sets, behaviour strategies, perfect recall. If time permits: The Nash bargaining solution. Multistage bargaining.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises are set and marked.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. Supplementary reading: K Binmore, Playing for Real: Game Theory CUP, 2007; E Mendelson, Introducing Game Theory and Its Applications, CRC 2004

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA407 Half Unit

Algorithms and Computation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konrad Swanepoel

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Operations Research & Analytics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is compulsory for students on the MSc Applicable Mathematics who are not taking MA421 Advanced Algorithms; it is optional for students on the MSc Applicable Mathematics who take the advanced course.

Pre-requisites: Good general knowledge of mathematics, including familiarity with abstract concepts. A willingness to cope with technical details of computer usage, and with a rapid introduction to programming.

Course content: Introduction to programming in Java. Introduction to the theory of algorithms: running time and correctness of an algorithm. Recursion. Data structures: arrays, linked lists, stacks, queues, binary search trees. Sorting algorithms. Greedy algorithms. Dynamic programming. Inheritance and Generics in Java.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 20 hours of seminars, 9 hours of workshops and 10 hours of help sessions in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Workshops will be held before the start of MT.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises are set and marked. Many of these will require implementation of programming exercises in Java.

Indicative reading: T H Cormen, C E Leiserson, R L Rivest and C Stein, Introduction to Algorithms; R Sedgwick, K Wayne, Introduction to programming in Java; D Flanagan, Java in a Nutshell.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours and 30 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (25%) in the MT.

MA408 Half Unit

Discrete Mathematics and Graph Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jozef Skokan

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should be taking the course MA407 Algorithms and Computation or have taken an equivalent course to provide a basic knowledge of algorithms, and should have experience with proofs and proof techniques used in pure mathematics.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to discrete mathematics, particularly graph theory. Emphasis will be placed on the algorithmic aspects of the area.

Topics to be covered include: Brief Introduction to discrete mathematics and graph theoretic terminology; Ramsey's Theorem; matchings and Hall's Theorem; graph search algorithms; stable marriages and the Gale-Shapley Theorem; network flows and the Ford-Fulkerson Theorem; connectivity and Menger's Theorems; graph colouring and Brooks' Theorem; and other topics that may vary from year to year.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 exercises in the MT.

Weekly exercises are set and marked.

Indicative reading: Norman L. Biggs, Discrete Mathematics, Oxford University Press; T H Cormen, C E Leiserson & R Rivest and C Stein, Introduction to Algorithms, Cambridge University Press; R Diestel, Graph Theory, Springer; H S Wilf, Algorithms and Complexity, Prentice Hall. Several of these texts are available online. More information, plus additional notes, will be provided during the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (25%) in the MT.

MA409 Half Unit

Continuous Time Optimisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Adam Ostoja-Ostaszewski

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Operations Research & Analytics and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students will need adequate background in linear algebra (facility with diagonalization of matrices for the purposes of solving simultaneous first-order differential equations is key here; knowledge of the relation between the range of a matrix transformation and the kernel of its transpose would be helpful), and in advanced calculus (manipulation of Riemann integrals such as 'differentiation under the integral' and the associated Leibniz Rule). Students unsure whether their background is appropriate should seek advice from the lecturer before starting the course.

Course content: This is a course in optimisation theory using the methods of the Calculus of Variations. No specific knowledge of functional analysis will be assumed and the emphasis will be on examples. It introduces key methods of continuous time optimisation in a deterministic context, and later under uncertainty. Calculus of variations and the Euler-Lagrange Equations.

Sufficiency conditions. Pontryagin Maximum Principle. Extremal controls. Transversality conditions. Linear time-invariant state equations. Bang-bang control and switching functions. Dynamical programming. Control under uncertainty. Itô's Lemma. Hamilton-Jacobi-Bellman equation. Applications to Economics and Finance: Economic Growth models, Consumption and investment, Optimal Abandonment. If time allows: Black-Scholes model, Singular control, Verification lemma.

Teaching: 24 hours of lectures, 4 hours of seminars and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Background review of (i) elementary methods for solving differential equations, and (ii) pertinent linear algebra (diagonalization) will be included in the the seminars of Weeks 1 and 2.

Four of the 24 lecture hours are dedicated to Exam Revision

Indicative reading: A full set of lecture notes will be provided.

Reference will be made to the following books: E R Pinch, Optimal Control and the Calculus of Variations, Oxford Science Publications; G Leitmann, Calculus of Variations and Optimal Control, Plenum; A K Dixit & R S Pindyck, Investment under Uncertainty, Princeton University Press; D Duffie, Security Markets, Academic Press; D J Bell & D H Jacobsen, Singular Optimal Control, Academic Press; J L Troutman, Variational Calculus and Optimal Control, Springer; W H Fleming & R W Rishel, Deterministic and Stochastic Optimal Control, Springer; W H Fleming; H M Soner Controlled Markov Processes & Viscosity Solutions, Springer; G Hadley; M C Kemp, Variational Methods in Economics, North Holland; D Burghes; A Graham Control and Optimal Control Theories with Applications, Horwood; A Sasane, Optimization in Function Spaces, Dover.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA410 Half Unit

Information, Communication and Cryptography

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Lewis-Pye

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should be taking the course MA407 Algorithms and Computation or have taken an equivalent course to provide a basic knowledge of algorithms, and should have experience with proofs and proof techniques used in pure mathematics.

Course content: This course provides an introduction, for students with a mathematical background, to the applications of mathematics in information theory, coding theory, cryptography, and related areas. The course will cover mathematical aspects of the following topics: Noiseless coding, the Kraft-McMillan criterion, optimal coding, entropy, Shannon's first theorem; Noisy channels, capacity, system entropy; Error-correcting codes, decoding rules, bounds, construction and properties of linear and cyclic codes; Structure of natural languages, redundancy, the frequency table, making and breaking cryptosystems, historic examples; Public-key cryptography, complexity issues, the RSA system, authentication schemes, the ElGamal system, elliptic curve cryptography.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: N L Biggs, Codes, An Introduction to Information, Communication and Cryptography; G A Jones & J M Jones, Information and Coding Theory; C M Goldie & R G E Pinch, Communication Theory; D J A Welsh, Codes and Cryptography; D T Stinson, Cryptography Theory and Practice.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the MT.

MA411 Half Unit

Probability and Measure

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pavel Gapeev

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some background in real analysis is essential.

Course content: The purposes of this course are (a) to explain the formal basis of abstract probability theory, and the justification for basic results in the theory, and (b) to explore those aspects of the theory most used in advanced analytical models in economics and finance. The approach taken will be formal. Probability spaces and probability measures. Random variables. Expectation and integration. Convergence of random variables. Conditional expectation. The Radon-Nikodym Theorem. Martingales. Stochastic processes. Brownian motion. The Itô integral.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

The lecture in the Summer Term is a Revision Lecture.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful: J S Rosenthal, A First Look at Rigorous Probability Theory; G R Grimmett & D R Stirzaker, Probability and Random Processes; D Williams, Probability with Martingales; M Caplinski & E Kopp, Measure, Integral and Probability; J Jacod & P Protter, Probability Essentials.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA412 Half Unit

Functional Analysis and its Applications

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Simon

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have taken a course in finite dimensional linear algebra which includes diagonalisation and inner products. General knowledge of real analysis and calculus would be helpful.

Course content: This course aims at familiarizing the student with the basic concepts, principles and methods of functional analysis and its applications. The topics covered are: normed and Banach spaces, continuous linear transformations, inner product and Hilbert spaces, compact operators, Hahn-Banach and Baire Category Theorems, applications to differential equations, numerical analysis, and approximation theory with illustrative examples.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Jean-Pierre Aubin, Applied Functional Analysis, Wiley, 2000; A.V. Balakrishnan, Applied Functional Analysis, Springer, 1981; Erwin Kreyszig, Introductory Functional Analysis with Applications, John Wiley, 1989; David Luenberger, Optimization by Vector Space Methods, Wiley-Interscience, 1997; Walter Rudin, Functional Analysis, McGraw-Hill 1991; Nicholas Young, An Introduction to Hilbert Space, Cambridge University Press, 1988.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the LT.

Games of Incomplete Information

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Simon COL 4.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should be familiar with the related mathematics of topology and functional analysis. Some degree of mathematical maturity is expected.

Course content: The techniques and results of game theory are increasingly important to economic analysis. This course focuses on the problems of information incompleteness and information asymmetry. This is a relatively new but rapidly expanding area of game theory with connections to several areas of economic theory, for example conflict resolution, auctions, principal-agent problems, and the logic of knowledge. The course is divided into three parts, I Basic Results, II Repeated Games, III Bayesian Games. For the first part we cover the Min-max Theorem and Nash's Theorem of Equilibrium Existence, Extensive Form and Discounted Games. For the second part we cover Zero-sum Games with Vector Payoffs, The Value of the Zero-sum Repeated Game of Incomplete Information on One Side, Non-Zero-Sum Games with Incomplete

Information on One Side. For the third part we cover Common Knowledge, Zero-Sum Bayesian Games, Locally Finite Games, and Non-Zero-Sum Bayesian Games.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises are set and marked.

Indicative reading: A full set of lecture notes will be provided.

Useful accompanying texts are Robert J. Aumann and Michael B. Maschler, Repeated Games with Incomplete Information, MIT Press, 1995; L. Breiman, Probability; K. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA414 Half Unit Stochastic Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arne Lokka

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: ST409 or MA411.

Course content: This course is concerned with a rigorous introduction to the area of stochastic analysis with emphasis on Itô calculus. The course begins necessary preliminaries, followed by a construction of the standard Brownian motion and a study of its properties. Subsequently, Lévy's characterisation of Brownian motion, martingale representation theorems and Girsanov's theorem are established. The course then expands on a study of stochastic differential equations.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful: I. Karatzas and S. E. Shreve, Brownian Motion and Stochastic Calculus, Springer; B. Øksendal, Stochastic Differential Equations: An Introduction with Applications, Springer; D. Revuz and M. Yor, Continuous Martingales and Brownian Motion, Springer; L. C. G. Rogers and D. Williams, Diffusions, Markov Processes, and Martingales, Cambridge.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA415 Half Unit The Mathematics of the Black and Scholes Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Albina Danilova and Dr Johannes Ruf

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics and Quantitative Methods for Risk Management) (MA400).

Course content: This course is concerned with a mathematical development of the risk-neutral valuation theory. In the context of the binomial tree model for a risky asset, the course introduces the concepts of replication and martingale probability measures. The mathematics of the Black & Scholes methodology follow; in particular, the expression of European contingent claims as expectations with respect to the risk-neutral probability measure of the corresponding discounted payoffs, pricing formulae for European put and call options, and the Black & Scholes PDE are derived. A class of exotic options is then considered. In particular, pricing formulas for lookback and barrier options are derived using PDE techniques as well as the reflection property of the standard Brownian motion. The course also introduces a model for foreign exchange markets and various foreign exchange options.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

The MA415 course has 30 compulsory hours of teaching with an additional 10 hours which are optional and reserved for covering advanced material and/or applications chosen by students.

Students are strongly encouraged to attend the additional hours offered.

MA416 Half Unit The Foundations of Interest Rate and Credit Risk Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mihail Zervos

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: This course is concerned with the mathematical foundations of interest rate and credit risk theory. The course starts with a development of the multi-dimensional Black & Scholes theory with stochastic market data. This is then used to show how discount bond dynamics modelling can be approached by (a) the modelling of the short-rate process and the market price of risk, which underlies the family of short-rate models, or (b) the modelling of the market price of risk and the discount bond volatility structure, which gives rise to the Heath-Jarrow-Morton (HJM) framework. The course then expands on the theory of interest rate market models and credit risk.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two sets of written homework will be marked with feedback provided.

Computational Methods in Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luitgard Veraart and Dr Tugkan Batu

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics and Quantitative Methods for Risk Management) (MA400) and Programming in C++ (MA432).

Course content: The purpose of this course is to (a) develop the students' computational skills, and (b) introduce a range of numerical techniques of importance to financial engineering. The course starts with random number generation, the fundamentals of Monte Carlo simulation and a number of related issues. Numerical solutions to stochastic differential equations and their implementation are considered. The course then addresses finite-difference schemes for the solution of partial differential equations arising in finance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 4 hours of seminars and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises and practicals are set and form the basis of the seminars.

Preferences, Optimal Portfolio Choice, and Equilibrium

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Albina Danilova

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Stochastic Processes (ST409) or Probability and Measure (MA411) or The Mathematics of the Black and Scholes Theory (MA415).

Course content: This course is concerned with the theory of optimal investment and consumption. The course starts with the derivation of utility functions from the axioms of an agent's preferences. Utility functions are then used as a measure of portfolio performance in a financial market. Optimal investment and consumption strategies are obtained for various utility functions in both complete and some types of incomplete markets. Equilibrium and asset price formation are considered in the context of complete and informationally incomplete markets

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: R.A.Dana and M.Jeanblanc, Financial Markets in Continuous Time; Springer; I.D.Duffie, Dynamic Asset Pricing, Princeton University Press; I.Karatzas and S.E.Shreve, Methods of Mathematical Finance, Springer.

Search Games

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Lidbetter

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In Search Theory, a mobile Searcher tries to minimise the time T taken to find something, which we call the Hider, in a known search space Q . The Hider may be stationary or mobile. In the zero sum game context (first half of the course), the Hider does not want to be found, or at least wants to maximise T . In the second half of the course we consider the Rendezvous Search Problem, in which the Hider also wants to minimise T . In both contexts the search space Q will often be taken as a finite network.

In Search Theory, a unit-speed Searcher wishes to minimise the time T required to find (meet) a lost object or agent hidden in a known search region Q . This course concentrates on cases where the lost object is an agent who has motives of his own. The course content will be based on both Search Games (zero-sum games where a T -minimising Searcher seeks a T -maximising Hider) and Rendezvous Games (common-interest games where two lost searchers want to minimise T).

The first part of the course will consider Search Games. We begin with the case where the Hider is immobile - he picks his position in Q at the start of the game. We solve this game for the case where Q is a tree or a 'weakly Eulerian' network, assuming the Searcher starts in a location known to the Hider; then we remove this restriction. We then study Search Games where the Hider is mobile, the so-called 'Princess and Monster' games of R. Isaacs. Several special games are then studied, for example the case of an unknown search region (maze), and games in which the Searcher has to find several hidden objects.

The second part of the course studies the Rendezvous Search Problem. We begin with the player-asymmetric form of the problem, where the two Searchers may meet before the game to decide what strategy each will adopt. We then consider the player-symmetric form, where the Searchers are constrained to follow a common mixed strategy. Finally, we consider the incomplete information problem where a Searcher seeks an agent who might be a Hider (T -maximiser) or another Searcher (T -minimiser).

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: An assignment is set each week and marked by the lecturer with feedback. Problem areas will be discussed in class.

Quantifying Risk and Modelling Alternative Markets

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christoph Czichowsky

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Co-requisite: Students must also complete Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: This course is concerned with various issues arising in the context of investment risk specification as well as with the mathematical theory of so-called alternative markets, such as commodity and energy markets. In particular, the course considers the structural credit risk models and the quantification of risk by means of copulas and risk measures. Also, the course expands on the modeling of alternative markets and addresses the problem of valuation of investments in real assets.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Two sets of written homework will be marked with feedback provided.

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christoph Czichowsky

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

PhD students in the departments of Mathematics and Statistics along with other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminar ranges over many areas of financial mathematics, stochastic analysis and stochastic control theory.

Teaching: 6 hours of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of seminars in the LT.

6 x 1 hour talks by researchers in the MT and LT.

Additional seminars will be scheduled throughout the year. Please see the Timetables website for further information.

Formative coursework: This course is not assessed.

Assessment:

This is a non-assessed course.

MA423 Half Unit Fundamentals of Operations Research

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katerina Papadaki COL 2.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must know basics of linear algebra (matrix multiplication, geometric interpretation of vectors), probability theory (expected value, conditional probability, independence of random events) and calculus (derivatives, limits). This corresponds to knowledge of Mathematics and Statistics to the level of MA107 (Quantitative Methods Mathematics) and ST102 (Elementary Statistical Theory).

Course content: An introduction to a range of Operations Research techniques, covering: foundations of linear programming, including the simplex method and duality; integer programming; markov chains; queueing theory; dynamic programming; inventory models; game theory.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 problem sets in the MT.

Indicative reading: The course will be taught from lecture notes and slides.

Students may also wish to consult: F S Hillier & G J Lieberman, Introduction to Operations Research, 9th edition (2009). Wayne Winston, Operational Research; Applications and Algorithms, Fourth/International Student Edition.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA424 Half Unit Modelling in Operations Research

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Victor Verdugo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange) and MSc in Data Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must know basics of linear algebra (matrix multiplication, geometric interpretation of vectors) and probability theory (expected value, conditional probability, independence of random events).

Students taking the course as an outside option are also expected to have a basic knowledge of linear programming. For students in the MSc in Operations Research & Analytics this will be covered in MA423 Fundamentals of Operations Research.

Course content: The course will be in 2 parts, covering the two most prominent tools in operational research: simulation, the playing-out of real-life scenarios in a (computer-based) modelling environment, and mathematical optimisation, the application of sophisticated mathematical methods to make optimal decisions. Simulation (8 lecture hours): This part develops simulation modelling skills, understanding of the theoretical basis which underpins the simulation methodology, and an appreciation of practical issues in managing a simulation modelling project. Topics include Monte Carlo simulation, Markov processes, discrete event simulation, and variance reduction. The course will teach students how to use a simulation modelling software package. Optimisation (12 lecture hours): This part enables students to model and solve real-life management problems as Mathematical Optimisation problems. In providing an overview of the most relevant techniques of the field, it teaches a range of approaches to building Mathematical Optimisation models and shows how to solve them and analyse their solutions. Content includes: The modelling life-cycle and modelling environments; formulation of management problems using linear and network models; solution of such problems with a special-purpose programming language; interpretation of the solutions; limitations of such models; and formulation and solution of nonlinear models including some or all of binary, integer, convex and stochastic programming models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Computer workshops are not mandatory. They are help sessions, where an instructor is available to students in the computer cluster while they work on their assignment.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in the MT.

Feedback will be provided on the weekly homework. Additional feedback will be provided on a one-on-one basis to students attending the optional computer help sessions.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided to students for both parts.

Recommended readings:

Simulation

- M Pidd, Computer Simulation in Management Science, Wiley (5th ed., 2006);
- S Ross, Simulation, Academic Press (5th ed., 2012).

Optimisation

- W L Winston, Operations Research: Applications and Algorithms, Brooks/Cole (4th ed., 1998);
- D Bertsimas and J N Tsitsiklis: Introduction to Linear Optimization, Athena Scientific (3rd ed., 1997).

Assessment: Project (100%) in the LT.

The project will be on Simulation, Mathematical Optimisation, or a combination of the two. The deliverable is a report of at most 12 pages (main report, excluding executive summary and technical appendices), along with a soft copy of any computer code and solver output.

Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Cannot be taken with MA426 Dissertation in Operations Research & Analytics.

Course content: The student will carry out and report upon a substantial practical piece of Management Science. The project will either be found by the course leader or may be suggested by the student, with the approval of his/her teachers.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures in the MT. 6 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Each student will be assigned an internal project supervisor who will monitor his/her progress on a continuing basis and give tutorial advice as required.

Indicative reading: Detailed suggestions for reading will be provided in the course of supervision.

Assessment: Project (100%).

Assessment is based entirely on the project report.

The student is expected to work on this full-time from early June to end of August. Two paper copies and one electronic copy must be submitted on a specified date in late August/early September. The page limit for the report is 40 pages, excluding appendices.

A degree cannot be awarded unless MA425 Project in Operations Research & Analytics or MA426 Dissertation in Operations Research & Analytics have been passed.

MA426

Dissertation in Operations Research & Analytics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laszlo Vegh and Dr Katerina Papadaki

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is not available as an outside option. Cannot be taken with MA425 Project in Operations Research & Analytics.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of management science. The dissertation is a quantitative or qualitative investigation in the field. It may be either a theoretical or empirical piece of research. Students must obtain the approval of their advisor before embarking on any research.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars and 3 hours of seminars in the MT. 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST. Advisors will normally be allocated according to student dissertation proposals, and it is the student's responsibility to find a suitable dissertation adviser who will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research. Dissertation guidelines will be issued to students during MT.

The seminars are not compulsory but students are encouraged to attend the same seminar sessions as MA498. Much of the work covered in the MA498 seminars is also useful to MA426.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit Dissertation Plans to their supervisor in LT and ST.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Two paper copies of the dissertation must be submitted on a specified date in late August/early September. An electronic version of the dissertation must also be submitted. The word limit for the dissertation is 10,000 words. The dissertation is critical to assessment.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Newton

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management

MA427 Half Unit

Mathematical Optimisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Giacomo Zambelli

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have sufficient knowledge of linear algebra (linear independence, determinants, matrix inversion and manipulation) and of basic multivariate calculus (derivatives and gradients).

Course content: Introduction to the theory and solution methods of linear and nonlinear programming problems, including: linear programming duality, Lagrangian duality, convex programming and Karush-Kuhn-Tucker conditions, algorithms for linear and convex optimisation problems, theory of good formulations for integer linear programming models, integer linear programming methods (branch and bound and cutting planes).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises will be given that will be solved and discussed during the seminars. Two of those exercises will be handed in as formative coursework and the students will be given feedback on their submissions.

Indicative reading: Extensive lecture notes covering all parts of the course will be provided. Students interested in further readings can look at the books below.

- D Bertsimas and J N Tsitsiklis, Introduction to Linear Optimization (1997)
- Vandenberghe Optimization
- Conforti Cornuejols Zambelli

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the LT.

The 10% coursework will be based on marked exercise sets during LT.

MA428 Half Unit Combinatorial Optimisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katerina Papadaki COL 2.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with graph theory and some knowledge of linear programming is desirable. For students that have no linear programming background, it is recommended that they read the material of the two lectures of course MA423, which can be found on the Moodle page of MA423.

Course content: The course is intended as an introduction to discrete and combinatorial techniques for solving optimisation problems, mainly involving graphs and networks. Topics covered include: minimum spanning trees, with a brief introduction to matroids; shortest path algorithms; maximum flow algorithms; minimum cost flow problems; matching and assignment problems; and other topics that may vary from year to year.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises will be given that will be solved and discussed during the seminars. Two of those exercises will be handed in as formative coursework and the students will be given feedback on their submissions.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be supplied for most topics; otherwise reading from books will be indicated.

Most of the lectures will be based on topics from: R K Ahuja, T L Maganti and J B Orlin, Network Flows (2013).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

MA429 Half Unit Algorithmic Techniques for Data Mining

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr László Végh

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Marketing and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course will be capped to 45 students.

Pre-requisites: Students are not permitted to take this course alongside ST443, Machine Learning and Data Mining. Students must have knowledge of Statistics and the programming language R to the level of ST447, Data Analysis and Statistical Methods.

Course content: Data Mining is an interdisciplinary field developed over the last three decades. Vast quantities of data are available today in all areas of business, science, and technology. The main goal of data mining is to extract previously unknown, useful information from such massive scale data. The aim of the course is to equip the students with a theoretically founded and practically applicable knowledge of data mining. The theoretical foundations of the field come from mathematics, statistics, computer science and artificial intelligence.

The course introduces fundamental machine learning methods and algorithms for basic data analytics problems. These methods include algorithms for classification and regression problems, such as tree construction, support vector machines, nearest-neighbour methods, Bayesian networks. The course will also cover unsupervised learning methods such as association rule mining association rule mining and clustering.

The methods are illustrated on practical problems arising from various fields. The course will use data mining packages in R.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: There will be weekly homework assignments, some of which will be submitted for formative feedback, and some for summative assessment (10% of the course mark). A mock project will be given, as preparation for the summative group project.

Indicative reading: James, Witten, Hastie, Tibshirani, An Introduction to Statistical Learning: with Applications in R (2016) Torgo, Data Mining with R: Learning with Case Studies (2010) Hastie, Tibshirani, Friedman, The Elements of Statistical Learning: Data Mining, Inference and Prediction, Second Edition (2009)

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (40%) in the ST.

Coursework (10%) in the LT.

The examination is critical to assessment. In order to pass this course, students need to achieve a mark of at least 50% in the examination. A fail mark in the exam will result in an overall fail mark for the course and cannot be compensated by the mark achieved in the coursework element.

MA430 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Efficient Algorithms For Hard Optimisation Problems

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gregory Sorkin NAB 3.19

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A level of mathematical sophistication, including comfort with proofs and familiarity with limits, permutations, factorials, binomial coefficients, and rudimentary probability including expectations and independence. If in doubt, please consult the instructor or attend the first lecture.

Course content: Many problems, from the "Travelling Salesman Problem" to train scheduling, are easy to state but hard to solve, in a mathematically well-defined sense. In practical operations research, though, one must solve such problems, and the issues involved are mathematically interesting. The course will introduce the underlying computational concepts (polynomial-time computation and NP-completeness); introduce canonical problem models including graph problems and formula satisfiability; and explore various ways of addressing these problems, including heuristics, randomized and approximation algorithms, average-case analysis, and relatively efficient exponential-time algorithms.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Shmoys and Williamson, The Design of Approximation Algorithms (Cambridge Univ. Press book, free e-version). Sinclair, Randomness and Computation (U.C. Berkeley lecture notes, by kind permission of the author). Print books Fomin and Kratsch, Exact Exponential Algorithms. Mitzenmacher and Upfal, Probability and Computing: Randomized Algorithms and Probabilistic Analysis

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours and 30 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period. Coursework (15%) in the LT.

Advanced Topics in Operational Research and Applicable Mathematics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laszlo Vegh NAB3.05

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: An examination of the new trends in Operational Research. The topics selected differ year to year; the topic for 2014/15 will be Data Mining. Information is available on Moodle or from the Management Science Group administration office.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Details will be provided at the start of the course.

Indicative reading: Detailed suggestions for reading will be given before the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period. Project (50%) in the ST.

MA432

Programming in C++

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tugkan Batu COL.4.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

There may be limited availability to students in MSc in Applicable Mathematics and other programmes, subject to resource constraints such as computer room capacity.

Course content: This course is an introduction to programming with the C++ programming language. We will cover the lexical basis of C++, fundamental types and basic operators, control structures, functions, pointers and arrays, dynamic memory management, classes, data hiding, constructors and destructors, operator overloading, single inheritance, templates, standard library, exception handling, input and output.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will work through worksheets provided in the computer workshops.

Indicative reading: D.M. Capper, Introducing C++ for Scientists, Engineers and Mathematicians, Springer.

B. Stroustrup, The C++ Programming Language, Addison Wesley.

MA498

Dissertation in Mathematics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Andrew Lewis-Pye

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Dissertation in Mathematics is an individual, substantial project as an introduction to mathematical research methods. The student will investigate and study an area of mathematical research or application of advanced mathematical techniques, and to write a report on their findings. The project may include some programming. The dissertation topic will normally be proposed by the Department.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars and 3 hours of seminars in the MT. 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST. The seminars include a mixture of lecture time, presentations and discussion. The ratio of lecture time and seminar time varies each week. Seminars do not include personal supervision time, which is scheduled independently with student supervisors.

Several seminars will include presentations by members of the Department of Mathematics on proposed topics for dissertations that they would be interested in supervising. Additional seminars will cover important aspects of writing a dissertation in mathematics, including: what plagiarism is and how to avoid it, the use of libraries for research, electronic research, general aspects of writing mathematics, and preparing a manuscript using mathematical text processing software (in particular, LaTeX). Each student will be assigned a supervisor who will monitor their progress and provide appropriate guidance thorough the LT, ST, and over the summer.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce an initial report (in LT) for which feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Detailed suggestions for reading will be provided by the supervisor.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%) in the LT and ST.

Oral examination (10%) in the ST.

Assessment is primarily based entirely on the Dissertation, three hard copies and one electronic copy of which must be submitted by 1st September 2018. (The report may include some software relating to the project.) Detailed information about the required format for this submission will be provided during the Seminars. At the end of summer term, each student will give a presentation to an audience including their supervisor on the topic of their dissertations. This will be graded and worth 10% of the course grade. Students will be given support in the seminars on how to prepare, how to present and what is expected.

MC401 Half Unit

Mediated Resistance and Activism

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bart Cammaerts FAW-601c

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to examine the various ways in which citizens, activists and social movements use, appropriate media and communication technologies to resist and mobilise for resistance, but also how resistance is represented and mediated, by activists themselves through movement media as well as by the mainstream media. The course will address several aspects of the intricate relationship between media and communication, resistance and activism. The course is organised around the core concept of the 'mediation opportunity structure' referring to the opportunities for agency through media and communication, as well as the structural constraints preventing agency and stifling dissent. Both Information and Communication Technologies (ICT's) and more traditional media will be considered and a dialectical perspective on power and the relationship between agency and structure is adopted with a particular emphasis on strategies of resistance. The different lectures will focus on various aspects of the mediation opportunity structure, including mainstream media representation, self-mediation, counter-hegemony, networked opportunities - using examples from various regions in the world. Some case-studies will be situated at a local level of analysis, others at a national, while again others might relate to regional contexts or even transnational levels of governance.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advanced reading, prepare seminar presentations and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading:

MC402 Half Unit

The Audience in Media and Communications

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sonia Livingstone FAW.7.01L

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Marketing, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course examines a variety of social, cultural and psychological issues as they relate to the audiences for mass and social media. It analyses people's everyday engagement with a mediated world. We will review the history of audiences and audience research from the vantage point of the present digital age, also examining key theories of audiences' and users' interpretation, engagement, fandom and creativity in a global and cross-media perspective. Students will be encouraged to read widely, to forge links with other aspects of media, communications and cultural studies in order to critically examine the positioning of audiences and users within the field, and to debate the nature and future of audiences in a changing media landscape.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Abercrombie, N. & Longhurst, B. (1998) Audiences: A Sociological Theory of Performance and Imagination, Sage; Athique, A. MC403 Half Unit

Contemporary Issues in Media and Communications Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Damian Tambini FAW.7.01J

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Marketing, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Politics and Communication and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be particularly beneficial to students with some background knowledge of media policy, regulation and governance. You are advised to consult the course teacher if you have not taken MC424, or if you do not have relevant professional experience.

Preparation for the course could include:

- Seeking additional reading in discussion with course teacher, or

• Auditing MC424 course materials and lectures from Moodle. In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course examines live issues in internet, broadcasting, press and telecommunications policy with a focus on current debates and an innovative format including practical exercises in policy engagement and guest speakers who are active in media policy. The aim will be to develop a practical approach to current debates at the same time referring to the longer term normative and theoretical background to intervention in this sector. After the first session, discussion will focus on a current issue each week, and the reading contains items relating to that issue. There may be some changes to the order of the sessions depending on availability of guest speakers, and supplementary readings may be advised during seminars or by email. Students will be encouraged to debate current policy issues including those that regulators and the government are currently consulting on, and develop a critical understanding of policy intervention, the policy process and strategy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advanced reading, prepare seminar presentations and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided for each topic. General works relevant to the course include: Baker, C.E. (2006). Democracy at a crossroads: Why ownership matters. MC404 Half Unit Political Communication in Democracies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nick Anstead PEL.7.01F

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research),

MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to other students from the Department of Media and Communications, and students from other departments at the LSE. Students from the Department of Government are particularly welcome.

Please note however that places are limited. In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped. This means that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. While we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee places on the course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to examine the relationship between the media and political processes in comparative perspective. It offers a critical review of key aspects of contemporary theory and research in political communications, examining a range of interconnected issues concerning the relationship between politics and media including: the political influence of the media; public opinion; election and referendum campaigning; political marketing and branding; political reporting; media and public knowledge; and public diplomacy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC405 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Policy and Practice in ICTs and Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Savita Bailur s.bailur@lse.ac.uk

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. Whilst we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee you a place on this course.

Course content: Policy and practice in ICTs and development do not always align. What are day-to-day ICT practices of users, particularly in the Global South? And how does one design an ICT (information and communication) policy which is as inclusive as possible? What are the decision-making processes involved in policy - for example, in mobile regulation, digital labour, payments and transfers and e-waste, just to take a few examples? This course will examine ICT policies and their relationship with society and development, drawing on multi-disciplinary theories and mutual learning from other modules (for example, MC424, MC403, MC421). We discuss issues including competition and regulation, ICTs and development, overcoming affordability barriers, information rights, the value of data, data sovereignty and privacy, mobile internet use, and ICT waste. For example, some of the topics we have discussed in the past include competition and regulation in Bhutan, mobile internet and income generation for women in China, policy-making surrounding the political economy of billing in South Africa and international practices and (lack of) policy on global flows of e-waste. .

Course objectives are: to examine the juxtaposition and gaps between current common ICT practices (e.g. using Whatsapp to sell homemade goods), and formal policies and accountable stakeholders (who regulates this?); to understand current experience and the application of policy development and research methods in these areas; and to illustrate these issues from practical experience.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. This class is taught in flexible way and requires every student to attend a two-hour seminar each week and a one-hour guest lecture every other week. The guest lecture series is shared with MC405/403 and students are strongly encouraged to attend all 10 guest lectures.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one mid-term formative 1500 word formative essay.

International Media and The Global South

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shakuntala Banaji FAW.7.01F

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course challenges students to raise questions about the power and role of international media - including media originating in the global south - in shaping global discourses about development, citizens and the global south. Building on empirical examples, the lectures aim to demonstrate that the reporting and discussion of poverty, disasters, political unrest, underdevelopment and development by international media organizations has implications, not only for the way the global south and its diverse populations are imagined and represented, but also for the arena of international and national policy and politics. From different theoretical perspectives, the course critically investigates key questions concerning the role of international, national, NGO and subaltern media in development, including the failure of the dominant modernization paradigm to 'pass away'. The course offers insight into how to approach the study of media constructions, discourses and representations of, and about, the global south and its citizens. The objectives are to: (a) Introduce debates about how media power shapes international development discourses and political realities for citizens in the global south; (b) Link dominant development theories to the paradigms of mediated NGO development interventions; (c) Provide a postcolonial critique of the study of representations of poverty, development, participation and the global south; (d) Critically assess aspects of the political economy of international media production within the contexts in which both local media groups and NGOs research, package and produce information about international development, especially in and about the global south and (e) Investigate whether and in what ways new and mobile technologies, and small and participatory media formats enable alternative voices and critical frameworks from the global south to be heard. The course is organized into three sections: 1) a historical and theoretical overview of international media, development and the global south locating the debate(s) around development and communication within postcolonial and other critical frameworks, 2) Critical perspectives, drawn selectively from studies of development theory, political economy and cultural studies and pertaining to identity, ideology, representation, regulatory frameworks, good governance and democracy and 3) Cases and practices in reporting development, poverty, inequality and humanitarian issues. Cross-cutting themes will include a consideration of gender, NGO communications, ethnic and social conflict, tourism campaigns, social media and ICTs in the context of international media and change in the global south.

Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications I (Key concepts and interdisciplinary approaches)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bart Cammaerts FAW.6.01C

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. Whilst we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee you a place on this course.

Course content: This course addresses key theoretical and conceptual issues in the study of media and communications, within a broadly interdisciplinary social science perspective. It grounds the analysis of media and communications phenomena within broader sociological and political theories of social order and social change, thereby revealing the shifting significance of the media environment for relations among the state, market and public sphere in a globalising knowledge society. The course is divided into two main sections. The first part examines what we study, which ranges from content, infrastructures to audiences. The second part explores selected critical perspectives which have proved influential in the field of media and communications and which provide answers to the question why we study what we study.

As a team-taught course that combines weekly lectures and seminars, its purpose is to expose students to a range of research-led debates at an advanced level, and to enable students to develop their understanding and critical appraisal of the relation between media and power at the levels of institutions, culture and social processes.

The course also includes an invited speaker series ('Media Agenda Talks') which addresses the interface between academic issues taught on the Media and Communications programmes and professional issues facing the media and communications industry. Speakers will normally include a mix of journalists and executives working for UK and global media companies or in the NGO-sector in London. The purpose is to provide an opportunity for students to relate the topics and themes addressed within their academic studies to the debates and concerns currently facing practitioners.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Media, Technology and Everyday Life

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leslie Haddon

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: The course aims to explore how information and communication technologies are experienced in everyday life. This includes examining how ICTs are socially shaped, through looking at current theoretical frameworks as well as historical and contemporary examples. The course covers such matters as the domestication of ICTs, their place in social networks and their implications for time and space. Finally, a range of potential social consequences are considered, from the specific implications for parent-child relationships to broader questions about the extent to which these technologies are changing social life.

MC413 Half Unit Information, Communication and Knowledge Systems

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Mansell FAW.6.01E

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. Whilst we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee you a place on this course.

Course content: This course examines how innovation and policy influence the development of digital technologies and the information, communication and knowledge environment they support. It critically assesses media and communications (and internet) policy and practice which aim to secure public benefit that is equitable, just and inclusive. Policy and practice influence, and are influenced by, institutional arrangements in distinctive political, social and cultural contexts. This course offers an opportunity to acquire an understanding of critical approaches to policy analysis in relation to information / knowledge societies and their contributions to the Sustainable Development Goals. It explores dominant and alternative perspectives, comparing and contrasting their discourses and consequences. Students will critically assess developments in their own regions/countries and examine the reasons that policy formation and implementation are contested in this area, resulting in both empowering and disempowering outcomes.

Provisional Lectures:

- 1) Introduction: What are information or knowledge societies?
- 2) Digital Technologies and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs): Mainstream Views
- 3) Dominant Strategies for Assessing the Contribution of Digital Technologies to the SDGs
- 4) What is Critical Policy Analysis?
- 5) Using Critical Policy Analysis to Critique Mainstream Views of the Contribution of Digital Technologies to the SDGs - Reading Week
- 7) Critical Reflections on Digital Applications and SDGs I: Policy Communities and the Capabilities Approach
- 8) Critical Reflections on Digital Applications and SDGs II: Power Relations and Discourse Analysis
- 9) Applying Critical Policy Analysis to Digital Divide Debates

10) Applying Critical Policy Analysis to Governance of the Digital Environment Environment Debates

11) Conclusion: Influencing Digital Policy and SDG Debates for Equity, Inclusion and Justice.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, participate in seminar role playing tasks, and submit one essay of 1,500 words. Students will be encouraged to draw upon policy documents developed in their own countries as resources to inform their role playing.

MC416 Half Unit

Representation in the Age of Globalisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shani Orgad PEL.7.01G

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. Whilst we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee you a place on this course.

Course content: Images and stories circulated in the media play a central role in informing how we imagine the world, others and ourselves. We become increasingly dependent, often exclusively, on what we see, read and hear in the news, on social media, our favourite television drama series, in advertisements, and films, or on the radio. This course focuses on the way media representations are implicated in the exercise of power over how we think and feel through the construction of meaning. It explores the opportunities that media representations present for the creation of a global and interconnected space, which enables the people living in it to conduct their social, cultural, political and economic lives in positive, just and inclusive ways. At the same time, the course discusses some of the critical challenges, limits and threats those visual and textual representations present. The discussion focuses on the representation of the Other and the production of difference, the representation of gender, suffering and migration - timely issues which are ever more urgent in contemporary public life. It examines how transformations in the contemporary media landscape, such as the expansion of social media platforms, the increasing commodification and global scope of communication, shape the ways in which public issues are framed, imaged, and constructed, the consequences this may have for the moral judgements people make and the possibilities for disrupting dominant narratives and imaginaries.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC418 Half Unit

Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications II (Processes of communication in modern life)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Myria Georgiou FAW.7.01G

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media and Communications. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

In order to accommodate academic staff leave, and in order to maintain smaller group sizes, this course is capped, meaning there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course examines key concepts and critical perspectives on the processes of communication that underpin social, economic and cultural relations across diverse spheres of modern life. It takes an interdisciplinary and theoretical perspective, comparing the claims and contribution of selected key theories of communication in order to understand and critique the symbolic and material power of communication media. With a substantive focus on the shifts from mass to networked media and from national to globalised communication processes, the course offers a selective introduction to key theories in communication. It examines a series of critical perspectives, drawing on current research debates in the field of media and communications and beyond. The course is team taught by active researchers in the field of media and communications and aims to enable students to develop their critical understanding of the communication processes central to the contemporary media and communications environment.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit an essay of 1,500 words. In addition, there will be a one-hour theories and concept mapping exercise in class in last week of term.

MC419 Half Unit

Modern Campaigning Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Anstead Pethick-Lawrence House, 7.01.F

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The focus of this module is the intersection between practical politics and academic research. The course is taught by a series of invited guest lecturers who are experts in the field of political campaigning for political parties and NGOs. It will connect with theory taught on other courses in the department and will enable students to see how theory is relevant and applied to the practice of modern political campaigns in the context of the evolving nature of contemporary political communication. It will examine core and general concepts in campaigning including political strategy and how it is developed; the shaping and measurement of public opinion; and the role of data targeting in modern campaign.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: This formative coursework for this course is a reduced length version of the summative assessment (see below for further details):

- A 500 word campaign memo advocating a specific strategy for a campaign of your choice (this might be for a candidate, a political party or a campaign / protest group).
- A 1000 word academic reflection on the strategy memo, where you will justify and explain your strategic recommendations with reference to relevant academic research.

Indicative reading: Campbell, A. (2007). The Blair years: extracts from the Alastair Campbell diaries. Knopf. Chadwick, A. 2013. The Hybrid Media System: Politics and Power. Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

This summative assessment for this course is a two-part piece of coursework.

- A 1000 word campaign memo advocating a specific strategy for a campaign of your choice (this might be for a candidate, a political party or a campaign / protest group).
- A 2000 word academic reflection on the strategy memo, where you will justify and explain your strategic recommendations with reference to relevant academic research.

NB. One additional requirement of the summative coursework is that it cannot be on the same example used in the formative coursework.

Identity, Transnationalism and the Media

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Myria Georgiou FAW.701.G

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. Whilst we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee you a place on this course.

Course content: This course examines the relation between identity and the media in the context of diaspora and transnationalism. The course explores meanings of identity at present times, especially as these are formed through experiences of mediated and physical transnational mobility. As migration and symbolic mobility, especially through the media, inform each other it becomes almost impossible to understand identity outside the context of mediation. The course is organised in three main thematic units. The first unit provides the conceptual entry point to the course. The second unit focuses on the modes of transnational communication: television, cinema and the internet. The third unit focuses on the spaces of transnational communication: the city, the nation and the transnational space. Each unit and lecture contributes to the understanding of identity in a world that is increasingly interconnected and networked.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

Critical Approaches to Media, Communication and Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shakuntala Banaji FAW.7.01F

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available on the MSc in Inequalities and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: The content of the course addresses the history of and tensions between 'media for development' and 'communication for development', while challenging mainstream development perspectives on aid, modernisation, and the role of media and communication in low income countries and unequal social contexts. It achieves this aim by emphasising the conflictual relationships between economic and political power structures and the empowerment of individuals, as well as among collective groupings within their local and regional contexts. In particular, paying attention to issues of history, colonisation, race and gender, this course questions the epistemological basis of modernisation approaches to Media, Communication and Development. It explores the ways in which the concepts of ideology, discourse, orientalism, reflexivity and power can enable a critical understanding of social life, participation and change in the global south. The course also offers a sharp critique of scholarly and policy oriented literature that regards the media, information, and communication strategies, and information and communication technology applications, as obvious means of alleviating poverty and fostering democracy and human rights in low-income countries. It offers alternative theorisations of the contested way in which developments in these areas become embedded in the cultural and social fabric, especially where poverty and unequal power relations influence the capacities of individuals to make changes in their lives.

Critical Studies in Media and Journalism

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charles Beckett FAW.7.01K

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: The news media is vital not just for the dissemination information but as a forum for debate. Journalism shapes our individual and community lives. It frames ideological disputes and is a site of contestation. But journalism and the news itself is changing because of technological, social, economic and political forces. This course led by a media professor with 20 years of experience as a journalist, takes an ethical perspective on media change. It asks what impact journalism has, what kind of journalism do we want, and how will journalism reconstruct itself according to competing national, cultural, or political contexts. On completion of this course, students should be able to: understand the role of journalism in society today; critically discuss different theoretical conceptions of journalism as practiced in a wide variety of social and political contexts; compare and contrast the role of journalism in contexts ranging from mainstream to alternative media outlets; evaluate the normative and empirical connections between media journalism, the production of news and ethical considerations; critically assess contemporary debates about the changing nature of journalism and its implications for cultural understanding and democracy.

Global Media Industries

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bingchun Meng FAW.7.01H

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course aims to present a critical view of theories, research and practices of media industries in the context of globalization. The central theme of the course is how media industries have been transformed by the recent political economic, cultural and technological changes on a global scale and how such transformation impact the content circulating across media platforms. Topics of interest include: new ways of organizing media production and distribution; digital media as a potential source of both resistance and control; media industries and creative cities; media policy and regulation at the global level. We will not only discuss key issues of media industries such as convergence, commodification, digital platforms, creative labour etc., but will also utilize different approaches such as political economy, cultural studies and sociology to analyze cases of media production.

Course objectives:

This course aims to help you:

- Understand different approaches to the study of media industries
 - Examine the transformation of media industries in the context of globalization
 - Critically analyse the relationship between institutional arrangements of media industries and the content being produced and disseminated
 - Critically evaluate global regulatory attempts to establish a new communication order and the dynamics of alternative media
- Topics are structured as follows:
- Media production and distribution in a globalised era
 - The many lives of media commodities
 - Creative labour in media industries
 - Convergence: Top-down and bottom-up
 - Policy and regulation
 - Political economy of film industry
 - The neoliberal theatre of Reality TV
 - Media industries and creative cities
 - Sociology of news production
 - Summary and reflection

MC424 Half Unit

Media and Communication Governance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Damian Tambini FAW.7.01J

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Should the internet be governed? How should law and policy on the press and the media be reformed in the light of technological change? This course lays the foundation to enable students to approach these and related questions in an informed, authoritative way. Communication governance includes all attempts by public bodies to fund, licence or otherwise regulate or govern communication services or the providers of those services, usually for an alleged public benefit. The process of governance includes public policy debate and discussion and the processes of self-regulation and legal regulation. The term 'governance' refers to the norms, rules and resources together with their theoretical underpinnings that inform the production and consumption of media and communication services. The course covers the key concepts required to gain an understanding of the processes through which public authorities, corporations and the public are involved in setting rules, building institutions and providing public resources for the provision of media and communication services. This course begins from the assumption that media and communication can only be fully understood if their governance and its implications for citizens and consumers as well as producers, are understood. Illustrations are drawn from UK, European and international developments, thereby presenting a multi-levelled analytical approach to governance issues in the field. The first half of the course maps key elements of communication governance including key concepts and institutions. The second half of the course examines contemporary issues and debates in communication governance.

MC425 Half Unit

Interpersonal Mediated Communication

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ellen Helsper FAW.7.01E

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Communication media have been blamed for a breakdown of social relationships and have simultaneously been hailed as powerful social tools that can connect people from all walks of life. This course addresses the ways in which interpersonal relationships and communication are influenced by mediation. The aim of this course is to provide students with a critical understanding of mediated communication within small groups and dyadic relationships. The course examines the influence of media on three key fields of interpersonal interaction which are identified as personal, social and professional communication.

The first half of the course addresses the history of media in interpersonal communication as well as general interpersonal communication and relationship theories. The second half looks in more detail at how the interaction between media and interpersonal communication has been studied in relation to the cross-cutting themes of privacy/trust, isolation/socialisation and multi-modality. These central concepts of the course are reflected upon through theories of social norms, affordances, social capital and supplementation/substitution, and discussed from the perspective of different disciplinary and methodological paradigms. Application of theory to practitioner and policy examples will give students the tools to understand what the practical implications are of the ways in which these different paradigms suggest that interpersonal communication processes vary depending on the type of platform this communication takes place on as well as the type of relationship that is under investigation and the context in which this relationship develops. As a result of the course the students will be able to evaluate the weaknesses and strengths of the theories that aim to explain apparently contradictory observations about the practise of interpersonal mediated communication. This can be applied to professional areas such as User Experience Design, intra-organisational communication, moderation and regulation of social media and discussion forums.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, participate in the creation of a course wiki, prepare group seminar presentations and write an individual essay (1500 words) based on the presentation and the material provided for the wiki (due the week after the week in which the student is responsible for the wiki).

Film Theory and World Cinema

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shakuntala Banaji FAW.7.01F

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course is designed to enable a consistent, informed and plausible reading of popular film representations, discourses and cultures of consumption in specific geopolitical contexts. Introducing theories from the humanities and the social sciences, lectures offer alternative approaches to theorising sexuality, gender, race, class, religion, national identity, childhood, history and politics in popular commercial films and their interpretation by audiences. The impact of unequal power relations - on how representations are reproduced, spectatorship is theorised and censorship policies are formulated - will be demonstrated and analysed. While the course offers a particular focus on Bollywood, Hindi commercial cinema, as an example of World cinema, it refers more widely to examples from other National Cinemas such as those of China, Korea, Australia, Spain and Iran. A key learning method is the extensive interrogation of audiovisual materials. To this end, there will be five film screenings alongside the lectures and seminars. Additionally, films referred to on the course will be made available through the library or can be downloaded and watched from popular film sites on the internet.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

MC427 Half Unit

Digital Media Futures

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alison Powell PEL.7.01J

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted. Whilst we do our best to accommodate all requests, we cannot guarantee you a place on this course.

Course content: This course provides an historical, theoretical and methodological basis through which to assess the social and cultural transformations related to digital media infrastructures and related social practices. It focuses on the materiality and affordances of new media, as well as on the social transformations that have co-evolved, including open source media production practices and peer to peer organizing practices. It critiques and questions the assumptions about the transformation of social and cultural life but also attempts to help students develop conceptual strategies beyond critique. A central focus of the course will be the claims made about the implication for collaborative work and culture of the qualities of digital data, considered through topics including but not limited to: peer to peer and open source cultural movements, the political economy and ecology of digital media, the politics of algorithms, remembering and forgetting, as well as the shift towards 'data as media' and its implications for media publics and media power. Students will be invited to consider the broader contexts of all of these media futures, including those related to policy and governance.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a 1,500 word formative essay based on a case study. They will also receive formative feedback on class participation and on participation in creating a shared, online 'Encyclopedia of Media Futures' modelled on Wikipedia.

Media Culture and Neoliberalism in the Global South

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wendy Willems PEL.7.01G

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Course content: This course offers a comparative perspective on changing national media cultures in the global South in the context of the neoliberal turn. The course not only considers neoliberalism as a crucial factor that has brought media industries such as private broadcasting stations and mobile phone companies into existence but also examines the extent to which these new forms of media have played a role in reproducing neoliberalism as a process, it aims to offer an understanding of how shifting economic policy regimes have impacted on the way in which people engage with media and how media engage with people in the global South. The first part of the course introduces the key concepts of 'media culture', 'neoliberalism' and 'global South' which will be deployed throughout the course. The second part of the course discusses how key processes of social change in the global South are linked to changing media cultures, including the commodification of national imaginaries, informality, crime and the rising middle class, religion and the prosperity gospel, self-help media and the neoliberal subject, and mobility and social relations. The course examines these themes through a series of empirically-grounded, mostly ethnographic case studies that include sport in Chile, popular video in Nigeria, reality television in India, crime and media in South Africa and India, Pentecostal media in Ghana, mobile phones in China and the Philippines, and plastic surgery in South Korea. The course encourages students to critically evaluate the extent to which the three key concepts in the course are helpful in gaining an understanding of changing media cultures in the global South.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a formative 1,500 word essay based on a case study, usually submitted in LT7.

MC429 Half Unit

Humanitarian Communication: vulnerability, discourse and power

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Samuel Mejias

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Today more than ever, images and narratives of vulnerable people in zones of disaster, violence and conflict routinely populate everyday lives in the West. Taking our starting point on these images and narratives produced by a number of actors (NGOs, journalists, citizens, militants or regular armies) and appearing in a large number of digital platforms (NGO websites, news networks, social media and celebrity advocacy), we explore the changing practices of humanitarian communication in the 21st century – broadly understood to encompass disaster communication and conflict reporting (but also increasingly human rights appeals). We do so by addressing questions such as: What are the histories of humanitarian communication? How is it changing today and why? What are the tensions and dilemmas that organizations face as they struggle to communicate the plight of distant others? What kind of politics of visibility and voice is played out in the mediation of distant suffering? Which ethical norms inform the digital narratives and spectacles of vulnerable others in those zones? And finally, which are the challenges of 21st century humanitarian communication and can we do it better? To explore these issues, the course adopts an interdisciplinary and case-based approach that enables students both to debate the theoretical links between vulnerability, discourse and power and to reflect on concrete examples of the communication of humanitarian messages and conflict news today. The course consists of three parts: the politics of mediating distant suffering; humanitarian communication in disaster zones; conflict reporting in 'humanitarian' wars.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare reading-based seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course investigates the significance of data in communications, social and cultural life. It introduces core theoretical perspectives on data and information from a social scientific perspective, and outlines research approaches that take account of the contemporary influence of data within communication and society. The course begins with the social history of data, providing a strong baseline from which to analyse the contemporary position of data. The course will provide students with conceptual tools that will help unpack the logic of data, and train them to critically analyse phenomena such as big data, algorithmic regulation and augmented civic space. Its focus on contemporary issues allows an investigation of the politics and culture of data production, and the use of data as evidence in a range of fields including politics, advocacy and audience research. Some of the questions addressed through the course include: Who owns data? Who makes data? Who makes sense of data? Is data public or private? How do different actors get access to data? How is data protected and regulated? What significance do new analysis methods have for the influence of data? These and other questions reflect the course's focus on developing a critical account of how data is implicated in the structures that shape social life. How does culture both rely upon and push back against data-based communication?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation (group project, student-led session) in the MT, along with written formative work.

There are two options for written formative coursework on this course.

Students can choose:

Strategic Communication in Practice: Professional Perspectives

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lee Edwards, PEL.7.01.B

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will be delivered as a combination of academic lectures and presentations from leading industry practitioners, in order to facilitate a cross-fertilisation between professional experience, academic perspectives, public debates and research. Students will be expected to critically engage with ideas from practice in the seminars, developing reflexivity and analytical skills through the course.

The professional lecturers will be experts working on various forms of strategic communication in a wide range of sectors, including the corporate sector; the not-for-profit sector such as global NGOs and activist organisations; the voluntary sector; government and public sector organisations; and journalists. The course will culminate in a group-based practical presentation from students of their own campaigns, which will form part of the course assessment. The topics covered will change each year depending on speaker availability, but as an illustration, the range of topics could include: connecting with elusive audiences; social marketing/nudge marketing; global media industries: global NGOs; fundraising and strategic communications; communicating in complex contexts; communicating change; communicating government policy; crisis communication; communication, consultation and citizenship.

Technology and Justice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Seeta Gangadharan FAW 7.011

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Apply by answering a few questions during Course Choice.

Course content: This course addresses questions of justice and inequity in relation to communication technologies of the 20th and 21st centuries. It begins with two premises: 1) communication technologies are critical in shaping the conditions for individual and collective self-government, and 2) policies that regulate such technologies influence the nature of democracy and inclusion in society today. The course engages historical perspectives, normative theories of justice and democracy, and legal theories of technology and innovation to assess the power of communication technologies and consider their costs and benefits to historically marginalized groups. In so doing, this course questions the adequacy of regulation in the development and deployment of technologies which exacerbate existing social, political, and economic divides, on the one hand, or address or alleviate such divides, on the other. The course will primarily focus on histories and contexts of marginalized groups in the United States and the Global South.

The first part of the course will introduce students to the theoretical and historical frameworks for the course and concentrate on mass communication technologies of the 20th century, such as print and broadcasting, and policy debates highlighting issues of justice and inequity. The second part of the course will centre on digital communication technologies in the late 20th and early 21st centuries and examine the intersection between networked communication, justice, and rights in historically marginalized communities. The third part will investigate innovations in automated technologies with respect to redistribution and recognition, issues core to the notion of social justice. By the end of the course, students will be able to evaluate differences between justice-based and rights-based approaches, explore the nature of digital inclusion, and compare the nature of communication inequalities across technologies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

The formative essay will consist of an annotated outline (of approximately 1000-1200 words), which will form the basis of the summative essay, and a reflective supplement (300-500 words) that asks students to comment on what they learned from the process.

Digital Platforms and Media Infrastructures

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jean-Christophe Plantin, PEL.701.i

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In order to accommodate academic staff research leave and sabbaticals, and in order to maintain smaller seminar group sizes, this course is capped, meaning that there is a limit to the number of students who can be accepted.

Pre-requisites: No pre-requisites

Course content: This course analyses digital platforms through their complex interactions with existing media infrastructures that organise the circulation of media, knowledge and information in society, through a process we present as "platformisation." It relies on key readings in media & communications studies and on contemporary examples of digital media platforms to provide an historical account on the rise of platforms, to analyse their material properties, and to reflect on the social and political consequences of their increasing use alongside existing media infrastructures. It provides students with both theoretical and empirical resources to critically assess the complexity of media transformations induced by platforms.

Students will explore the multiple facets of this process, by critically analysing how platforms replace, conflict with, or influence existing media infrastructures, and what are the social, political and epistemological consequences of these tensions. This focus on the relations between existing and emerging media configurations will invite students to investigate how platforms constitute ubiquitous media in everyday life, and how they increasingly shape communication, knowledge production, circulation of data, online participation and mobility. The first part of the course will introduce the theoretical framework, based on media and communications scholarship analysing the rise of platforms through their relations to existing media infrastructures. The second part illustrates these interactions through case studies, for example social media platforms and news production, platforms data used for scientific research, or geolocated platforms for urban mobility. The third part addresses current social debates around platformisation: such as the transformation of online participation, new forms of platform-based activism and citizenship, and the alternatives to corporate platforms in access to knowledge. At the end of the course, students will be able to critically assess what platformisation is and to identify the challenges platforms bring in terms of access to communication, knowledge and democratic life.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: -EITHER a 1,500-word formative essay on current theoretical debates around media platforms and society. -OR a 1,500-word proposal for a case study analysis of a media platform.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (100%) in the ST.

Final summative essay (100%)

-EITHER (1) a 3,000-word essay on current theoretical debates around media platforms and society. Five questions, addressing key issues around the topic, will be distributed in advance, and this essay will constitute a response to one of them.

-OR (2) a 3,000-word case study analysis of a current media platform. It will consist of a detailed investigation of a digital platform, using relevant literature and original research design to contribute to the general analysis of the platformisation of social life.

and Communications Governance). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Two important trends are expected to influence the world economy over the next decade - rising income and wealth disparity and increasing dependency on digital systems. This course will help students to understand responses to these developments. There is little agreement about the consequences of high levels of digital industry concentration, job losses due to artificial intelligence, whether citizens and consumers can control their digital environment, or how to respond. For some, digital transformation is a welcome sign of progress; for others, it brings the risk of threats. Growing dependency on digital platforms, automation, the Internet of Things, online monitoring, and big data analytics, is often depicted as inevitable and as a sign that market reform is needed, or it is claimed that radical change is needed to protect citizens and consumers. Examples of failures to protect citizens/consumers abound in everyday life, e.g. compromised bank accounts, large breaches in the security of social media user data, and the release of mobile operator customer records. Students will learn about the differences between free market (neoclassical), market reform (institutional) and political economy theories of disruptive digital transformation. They will learn how to critically read and interpret the claims of companies, policy makers and citizen advocacy groups and the claims in the academic literature and the popular and trade press. Students will compare and contrast the questions asked and assumptions made in different approaches to disruptive innovation and the consequences of the different approaches for the kinds of changes that may be advocated by different stakeholders.

The course will consider the history of and expectations about the future of digital platforms, social media and mobile services. Does everyone have to adapt to rapid technological change? What is the link between rising inequality and digital technologies? Who, if anyone, has the power to change contemporary trends in the digital world? Are the goals of economic growth in the digital industry in conflict with the goals of equity, inclusive socio-economic outcomes and preserving human dignity?

Lecture topics:

Week 1: Introduction: Why Digital Disruption Matters

Week 2: Digital Transformation History and Future Expectations - Theoretical Perspectives

Week 3: Digital Platforms Everywhere - What They Do and Why it Matters

Week 4: Old Media Industries and New Big Players - Business Strategies and Market Concentration

Week 5: Digital Service Quality Standards and and Consumer/Citizen Protections

Week 6: (reading week - students will receive support for the preparation of team project presentations)

Week 7: Case 1: Artificial Intelligence, Automation and Employment
Week 8: Case 2: Investment in Digital Capacity (Networks and Services): Catching Up and Falling Behind

Week 9: Case 3: Transformation in the Audio-visual Digital Market

Week 10: Case 4: Transformation in Mobile Service Markets

Week 11: Conclusion: Comparing Economic Perspectives on Digital Transformation

MC436 Half Unit Mediating the Past

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Omar Al-Ghazzi

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Week 1 Collective memory & nostalgia

Week 2 History & historiography

Week 3 Colonial, de-colonial & post-colonial time

Week 4 War, trauma & temporality

Week 5 Nationalism & commemoration

Week 6 – Reading Week

Week 7 Collective action, generations & the mobilization of time

Week 8 Speed, technology & experiences of time

Week 9 Journalism pasts & futures

Week 10 Social media time

Week 11 Popular culture & the representation of time

Course content: This course starts with the premise that the understanding of the past and the future is socially-constructed, mediated, and shaped by power relations within the present. It critically explores cultural, political and technological issues in relation to the passing of time. It addresses questions such as: How do different kinds of media represent and structure collective notions about time whether in relation to the present, the past or the future? How do power relations shape understandings and experiences of time? How do we learn about history through media and why does that matter? How did the experience of colonialism impact collective understandings of history and national futures? In addressing these questions, this course makes creative connections between various topics in media and communication studies. It introduces students to the field of collective memory, differentiating it from history and historiography. It then considers critical issues within the relation between history, memory and politics, which are colonialism/postcolonialism, trauma, nationalism, and collective action. The second part of the class focuses on the analysis of technology and media in the ways they contribute to the social construction of time. It addresses how privilege and access to technology regulate the speed and slowness of people's lives. It moves on to exploring how particular media conventions represent temporality, with a focus on news media and social media. The course concludes with a discussion of the social and political significance of popular culture representations of the past and the future. By the end of the course, students will be able to identify key debates in the study of time and temporality, particularly as approached from the disciplinary perspective of communications and media studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

MC499 Dissertation: Media and Communications

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Omar El Ghazzi FAW.7.01.C

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of media and communications following the guidelines provided in the MSc Dissertation Guide and the instructions by the School's staff members. The dissertation is usually a combination of theoretical enquiry and original empirical enquiry concerning an issue in the field of media and communications. On rare occasions it is based on a theoretical interrogation. Students are encouraged to select a topic that reflects the content of their MSc programme. In all cases, students must obtain the approval of their supervisor before embarking on any research. The dissertation must be not less than 10,000 words and not more than 12,000 words in length.

Teaching:

MC499.1: Compulsory Teaching and Supervision

MC499.1A

Two lectures in LT for all students.

MC499.1B

(ii) Group Supervision Sessions (three): each supervisor holds group supervision sessions for their supervisees in LT and again in ST.

(iii) Individual Supervision Sessions: ad hoc sessions for each student with their supervisor that can be organised during feedback and consultation hours in LT and ST.

MC499.2: Dissertation Skills – Optional Sessions

MC499.2A

A lecture in LT on dissertation preparation skills (literature reviews, ethics, etc).

MC499.2B

Workshops led by Graduate Teaching Assistants in MT and LT. Places in these workshops are limited.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit Ethics Checklist, Literature Review and Dissertation Plans to their supervisor in LT and ST.

Indicative reading: There are no formal reading lists, but students are encouraged to consult departmental handbooks on how to write dissertations.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 12000 words).

The dissertation must be submitted in August.

MC4M1 Half Unit

Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ellen Helsper (MT) and Dr Jean-Christophe Plantin (LT and ST)

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aims of the course are to provide students with a general training in research methods and techniques, including research design, the collection, analysis and interpretation of data, and to enable students to evaluate critically their own research and that of professional researchers. The course has three components:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: a series of lectures offered by media and communications staff in MT. The lectures will normally cover the following topics central to research design across the social sciences, with a specific emphasis on their application to media and communications contexts: the general nature of research as social inquiry, interviewing, critical discourse analysis, social network analysis, content analysis, visual analysis, survey design/questionnaires, case studies, ethnography and participant observation, as well as research ethics.

ii. Principles of Social Research: a series of five three-hour workshops (each comprised of two 1.5-hour sessions) offered by media and communications staff in the LT. Students are required to participate in two of the workshops.

iii. Quantitative Analysis: Students have to take the following course offered by the Department of Methodology: MY464 Introduction to Quantitative Methods for Media and Communications. Please note that this course is compulsory and automatically included within the MC4M1 course.

Teaching:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: Lecture (one hour) x 10 MT; Lecture on Writing Methodological Critiques (one hour) x 1 LT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: Workshop (three hours) x 2 LT (each comprised of two separate 1.5 hour sessions).

iii. Quantitative Analysis MY464: Lecture (two hours) x 10 MT and x 1 ST; Computer class (one hour) x 9 MT.

iv. Methodology pilot drop in clinic: Workshop (two hours) x 1 LT and ST.

Formative coursework:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit one essay of 1,500 words to their supervisors in week 11 of MT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit workshop assignments.

iii. Quantitative Analysis: Most statistics courses require weekly assignments

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Exam (20%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (80%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Description of assessment:

1. Coursework: One written assignment of not more than 3,000 words, relating to the combination of Principles of Research in Media and Communications and Principles of Social Research to be submitted in ST Week 1 (80%).

2. A two-hour examination in the ST relating to Quantitative Analysis (MY464M) (20%).

Students have to complete both assessments (written assignment and statistics exam) on this course.

This course confronts you with your own biases; it shows how using different methodologies and ways of observing the world lead to asking different questions and, therefore, different answers and relates this to the ethical and moral implications of doing research.

MC4M2

Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ellen Helsper

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students taking non-research track media and communications MSc programmes may take this course instead of MC4M1 subject to their own degree regulations and with the agreement of the teacher responsible.

Course content: i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications:

a series of lectures offered by media and communications staff in MT. The lectures will normally cover the following topics central to research design across the social sciences, with a specific emphasis on their application to media and communications contexts: the general nature of research as social inquiry, interviewing, social network analysis, critical discourse analysis, content analysis, visual analysis, survey design/questionnaires, experiments, ethnography and participant observation, as well as research ethics.

ii. Principles of Social Research: A series of ten three-hour workshops (5 comprised of two x 1.5 hour sessions and 5 comprised of one x 3 hour sessions) offered by media and communications staff in LT. Students are required to participate in all ten workshops.

iii. Quantitative Analysis: Students have to take two statistics courses offered by the Methodology MY464 Introduction to Quantitative Methods for Media and Communications; MY452L Applied Regression Analysis. Please note that these courses are compulsory and automatically included when you register for the standard MC4M2 course. (Students may be permitted to substitute a more advanced course offered by the Methodology Department in place of MY464 and/or MY452L, with the approval of the MC4M2 course convenor and subject to timetabling constraints.)

Teaching:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: Lecture (one hour) x 10 MT; Lecture on Writing Methodological Critiques (one hour) x 1 LT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: Workshop (three hours) x 10 LT.

iii. Quantitative Analysis: MY464: Lecture (two hours) x 10 MT and x 1 ST; Computer class (one hour) x 9 MT; MY452L: Lecture (two hours) x 10 LT; Computer class (one hour) x 10 LT.

iv. Methodology pilot drop in clinic: Workshop (two hours) x 1 LT and ST.

Formative coursework: i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit one essay of 1,500 words to their supervisors in week 11 of MT.

MG401 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Operations Management for Management Consultancy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Steinberg NAB3.08

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There is a pre-assignment that is due at the first lecture of Lent term 2018. The specification of the pre-assignment will be posted to Moodle on the last day of Michaelmas term 2017. Note that the pre-assignment is compulsory and cannot be accepted late.

Course content: The course covers eight topics: (1) Process Flow Analysis, (2) The Toyota Production System, (3) Inventory Management, (4) Assembly Line Balancing, (5) Project Management, (6) Quality Management for Services, (7) Forecasting, and (8) Scheduling. The course is structured in three parts. Part I is called 'Cases', and is based around a set of 5 readings: three Harvard Business School cases and two articles. Part II is called 'Techniques'. Part III is called 'The Goal', which takes place during the final 2-hour session, and consists of an in-depth discussion of the book, The Goal, by E.M. Goldratt and J. Cox.

Teaching: 16 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: In addition to the pre-assignment students will have six assignments throughout the term covering the material in the course, and will be expected to work as a group on each assignment. The problems comprising each assignment will be discussed in the seminar classes, and each student will be individually responsible for answering all the problems for each assignment.

Indicative reading:

- (1) Case: 'National cranberry cooperative (abridged)'
- (2) Case: 'Toshiba: Ome works'
- (3) Case: 'Toyota Motor Manufacturing, U.S.A., Inc.'
- (4) Article: 'Controlling variation in health care: a consultation from Walter Shewhart'
- (5) Article: 'Monitoring patients using control charts: systematic review'
- (6) Book: The Goal, Fourth revised (30th anniversary) edition, E.M. Goldratt and J. Cox, 2014.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MG402 Half Unit

Public Management: A Strategic Approach

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Michael Barzelay NAB 3.19

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not available to students registered on Strategy and Change in Public Sector Management. Students should take either MG402 Public Management: A Strategic Approach or Strategy and Change in Public Sector Management. Students are prohibited from taking both together.

Course content: The course provides a management dimension to the study of public administration and public program planning. The course focuses on using purposive theories of directing, planning, coordinating and controlling – plus design-precedents from case studies – to devise jointly-enabling mechanisms to tackle challenges in performing the management function in public programs and organizations. Through class discussions and case assignments, the course develops the intellectually-disciplined competences of design-focused problem-solving, including sense-making, scenario and system designing, holistic practical reasoning, and written and in-person presentation. It also develops an ability to broker usable knowledge about managing in public programs and institutions, resulting from combining rigorous analysis of purposive theories of mechanism-intent phenomena with methodical interpretation of research case studies. The course also considers the past and future of public management as a professional discipline.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Indicative reading: M.H. Moore, Creating Public Value: Strategic Management in Government (1995); H. Mintzberg, Designing Effective Organizations: Structures in Fives (1983); J. Tandler, Good Government in the Tropics (1997); M Barzelay & C Campbell, Preparing for the Future: Strategic Planning in the U.S. Air Force (2003); J Bryson, Strategic Planning for Public and Nonprofit Organizations (2011); Eugene Bardach, The Extrapolation Problem: How can We Learn from the Experience of Others? (2004); Joan E. van Aken, et al, Problem-Solving in Organizations (2007), Victor Bekkers, et. al., Jurian Edelenbos, and Bram Steijn (eds.), Innovation in the Public Sector: Linking Capacity and Leadership (2011); Booth, Colomb, and Williams, The Craft of Research (2006).

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2500 words) and class participation (10%) in the LT.

Case analysis (40%) in the ST.

The assessment for this course consists of the following:

A 2,500 word individual essay (50% of overall mark)

A 2,000 word case analysis (40% of overall mark)

Class participation (10% of overall mark)

MG403 Half Unit

Pricing Strategy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Om Narasimhan NAB5.06

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA

Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Marketing. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The content of the course is organised into two principal modules: (1) pricing strategy and fundamentals and (2) pricing tactics and implementation. The first module of the course covers the fundamental analytical tools, theories, and conceptual frameworks needed for price strategy formulation. Basic principles from marketing, economics, and psychology will be briefly reviewed and extended. The module provides an in-depth treatment of the role of price in the firm's value proposition to the customer and the determination of customer response to price. The second module of the course covers pricing tactics and opportunities for achieving price customisation.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be engaged in analysing a number of cases, doing numerical problems, as well as analysis data sets using the techniques learned in class. This will set the stage for their group project (gathering and analysing data) as well as the take-home assignment (which will involve numerical problems, case analysis, and analysing data sets).

Indicative reading: The Strategy and Tactics of Pricing: A Guide to Growing More Profitably (2010): Nagle, Hogan, and Zale, Prentice Hall. Pricing Information: How to customize both the product and the price (1998): Carl Schapiro and Hal Varian, Harvard Business School Chapters. 'How to Fight a Price War' (2000): Akshay Rao, Mark Bergen, Scott Davis, Harvard Business Review. 'Is it time to rethink your pricing strategy?' (2012): Andreas Hinterhuber and Stephan Liozu, Sloan Management Review. 'Pricing as a Strategic Capability' (2002): Mark Bergen, Shantanu Dutta, Mark Ritson, Sloan Management Review

Assessment: Coursework (45%), project (45%) and class participation (10%) in the LT.

Individual Take-home assignment (45%), due within 1 week of when it is assigned.

Group project (45%)

Individual Class participation (10%)

Consumer Insights: Behavioural Fundamentals

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Heather Kappes NAB5.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Marketing. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: For many companies, non-profit organisations, and political figures, success relies on understanding the "consumers." What is it that they really want, and why? What information will they attend to, and what will they ignore? How do they make decisions, why do they sometimes make bad ones, and how can we help them make better ones? It can be tempting to answer these questions intuitively, based on your own experiences as a consumer. However, intuitions about human psychology are often wrong.

- Chronic and temporary sources of customer needs, desires, and motivations
- How customers search for information, acquire, and process information
- How customers allocate attention and how to attract it
- Customer decision-making processes, and the heuristics and biases that play a role
- The formation of attitudes and intentions, and processes for persuasively changing them
- Social influences on intentions and behaviour, including unconscious determinants

- Why intentions are or are not translated into behaviour, and what strategies can be used to narrow the intention-behaviour gap.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: One essay prior to the summative essays; one quiz prior to the summative quizzes.

Indicative reading: Consumer Behavior, 6th edition. Hoyer, MacInnis, & Pieters. South-Western Cengage Learning, 2010; Consumer Behavior: Science and Practice. Kardes, Cronley & Cline. South-Western Cengage Learning. Influence: The Psychology of Persuasion. Cialdini, Robert. Collins Business, 2006. Further references, especially for journal articles and HBS case studies, will be provided at the commencement of the course.

Assessment: Essay (30%, 1500 words), essay (30%, 1500 words) and in class assessment (40%) in the MT.

Two essays (30% each; 1500 words each) in the MT.

Two quizzes (20% each) in the MT.

Auctions and Game Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Steinberg NAB 3.08

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), MBA Exchange, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 45. Students on the waiting list will be selected based on their academic background.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a course equivalent to the LSE course Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107), which covers techniques of calculus (differentiation, partial differentiation, optimisation and integration), methods of linear algebra (use of matrices), with emphasis on their application to economic problems. Students should also have some knowledge of probability.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to auctions and game theory. Topics covered are: noncooperative games, cooperative games, social choice, sequential games, auctions, and combinatorial auctions. There is also a case study, 'Auction Vignettes', which will form the basis of a class discussion. Finally, there will be a research presentation by the course leader.

Teaching: 16 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

A reading week will take place during Week 6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Very full lecture notes are provided, and every week a set of problems is given out in the lecture. These are discussed in the following seminars.

Indicative reading:

- Book: P. Cramton, Y. Shoham, and R. Steinberg, eds., Combinatorial Auctions.
- Book chapter: 'Auction Pricing', R. Steinberg, Chapter 27 in O. Ozer and R. Phillips, eds., Oxford Handbook of Pricing Management.
- Case study: 'Auction Vignettes', Harvard Business School Publishing.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MG411

Firms and Markets

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sutton

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A graduate course in microeconomic analysis, geared towards those parts of the subject that are of primary importance in the Management area. The first section focuses on competition between firms, using standard game theoretic models. This leads to a general treatment of market competition by reference to the concept of firms' capabilities. The next section traces the basis of firms' capabilities to the set of elements of know-how possessed by the individuals comprising the firm, and by the mode of internal organization of those individuals. The analysis draws on the several strands in the modern literature on the theory of the firm. The final section of the course deals with the link between strategy and structure, and with the formulation of strategies in environments characterized by complexity and uncertainty.

The course syllabus covers Walrasian Equilibrium: Supply and Demand. Beyond the Walrasian model: Nash Equilibrium. Applications of Nash Equilibrium: options and bargaining. General approaches to the analysis of competition in oligopolistic markets. Applications in Industrial Organisations. The concept of capabilities. The roots of firms' capabilities : individuals and their collective know-how. The internal organization of firms. Contract theoretic approaches to the theory of the firm. The Chandlerian nexus: from strategy to structure.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. A weekly seminar devoted to problem sets. A weekly seminar devoted to case studies.

Indicative reading: Milgrom and Roberts, Economics, Organization and Management; Sutton, Sunk Costs and Market Structure

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

MG412 Half Unit

Globalization and Strategy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sutton

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course studies the strategies of multinational corporations in an international context, with reference to make or buy, organization, and location choices. It studies current developments in the global economy with a focus on the key decisions that multinationals make in framing their global strategies:

- 1 Economic analysis of globalization process. Assessing the growth of Chinese and Indian manufacturing, 1990-2010. Evidence from benchmarking studies.
- 2 Production: What determines the strategies multinationals adopt - product range; generic strategies.
- 3 Location: Competitive advantage of different countries; growth in outsourcing and Offshoring; particularly emphasizing India and China and analyzing their increasing role in the global economy.
- 4 Organization: how multinationals combine the necessary local adaptation with the need to standardize to achieve efficiency.
- 5 The Globalization Debate.
- 6 The Prospects for sub-Saharan Africa.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to make two class presentations and submit written reports on selected case studies

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

MG417 Half Unit Extended Essay

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Various (depending on title chosen).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake an extended essay which should normally be based on one of the two option courses taken. Students can, with special permission, base this piece of work on one of the compulsory courses.

Teaching:

A supervisor will be allocated to individual students based on the essay title chosen who will provide students with supervision for this piece of work.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words) in the ST.

Extended essay of no more than 6,000 words to be submitted the week before Summer Term commences.

MG418 Half Unit Open Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nadia Millington NAB 3.14

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Open innovation is a fresh take on innovation whereby a firm looks beyond its boundaries to exploit the creative power of users, communities and customers to co-develop new products, services and processes. Whether it is the fortune 500 companies that have used open innovation to transform their businesses (e.g. Procter and Gamble and IBM) or even start-ups (such as iStock Photo); Open Innovation, through tools like crowdsourcing or open sourcing is disrupting markets and altering the nature of industries.

This course is divided into 2, a lecture stream and a consulting stream.

During the lecture stream (roughly the first 5 weeks of the course) students will:

- (1) Learn about the emergence of OI and how OI differs from other sources of external innovation.
 - (2) Learn to differentiate between the different types of OI tools (Crowdsourcing, Lead Users, Innovation Intermediaries, Design intermediaries, Innomediaries, Open Source) and to choose the right OI tool for different problem sets.
 - (3) Explore an emerging range of companies using open business models (e.g. Google, Facebook) in contrast to more traditional business approaches.
 - (4) Learn about the challenges of implementing OI and the drivers of success, not only based on practitioner sources but also in the context of organisational behaviour, innovation and network theory.
- During the consulting stream (roughly the last 5 weeks of the course) students work on a real live OI project for a for-profit client (eg PWC, KPMG, IBM, Barclays) or not-for-profit client (e.g. Barnados, Hope and Homes), developing solutions via the implementation of one or more open innovation tools. These last five weeks will be guided by our Innovation partners (from companies like Ludic Group/ KPMG) and in the final week of the term students will present their final solution to their clients and classmates.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

In addition, students will also be expected to attend

- Two 30-minute group sessions to help them scope their project and develop their solutions
 - A meet and greet session with their client partners which lasts approximately 2 hours after class. This is usually held after class in the 4th week of the semester and refreshments are provided.
- Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be provided with a formative essay, either in week 3 or 4 of the semester and grades and comments will be provided during week 7.

Indicative reading: Chesbrough, H.W. (2003). Open Innovation: The new imperative for creating and profiting from technology. Boston: Harvard Business School Press (chapter 1-3). Brabham, D. (2008). (1996) 'Ambidextrous Organizations: Managing Evolutionary and Revolutionary Change', California Management Review, vol. 38, no. 4, pp. 8-30

Assessment: Essay (45%, 2000 words), project (45%, 5000 words) and class participation (10%) in the LT.

Students will undertake a peer assessment during the course, providing feedback on the other members of their project group.

MG419 Not available in 2018/19 Public Management - Strategy, Innovation and Delivery

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Barzelay

Dr Alberto Asquer

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course develops the practical knowledge and analytical skill to make sense of field problems faced by public managers, and to design and implement strategic and effective practical action in the public sector. In Michaelmas Term, the course focuses on making sense of the fuzzy problem-messes faced by public managers, and introduces students to the graphical and theoretical tools used to represent and reverse engineer the dynamic social systems involved. In Lent Term, the course focuses on the strategic design, evaluation and implementation of various organisational activities, such as policy interventions, managerial control systems, and strategic planning. Overall, the course provides a foundation for further coursework about management in the public sector as well as the ability to engage constructively and critically in the development of public management practise.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two essays - one in MT and one in LT.

Indicative reading: MH Moore, Creating Public Value: Strategic Management in Government (1995). KE Weick, 'The Collapse of Sense-Making in Organizations: The Mann-Gulch Disaster' (1993). C Heath and N Staudenmayer, 'Coordination Neglect: How Lay

Assessment: Essay (30%, 3000 words) in the LT.

Essay (40%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Presentation (30%) in the MT and LT.

The 30% presentation mark is composed of two group presentations, one in MT and one in LT (15% each).

MG420 Half Unit Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Liebenau NAB.5.14

In addition, all students will be allocated an individual dissertation supervisor in year two.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Students on other Department of Management postgraduate programmes are welcome to attend the preparation sessions.

Course content: Dissertations are based on a research question which students are required to agree with their assigned dissertation supervisor in year two.

Research questions may be investigated by:

- (a) Framing the question via a literature review and examining the problem in more detail through a small scale empirical research project, using either primary or secondary data sources; OR
- (b) Carrying out an extended literature review to provide a rigorous analysis of existing research investigating the problem.

Teaching: 3 hours of lectures in the MT. 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the LT.

Students are required to attend a course of five lectures during MT and LT.

Students on this course will have reading weeks in Week 6 of MT and Week 6 of LT, in line with departmental policy

MG421 Half Unit International Business Strategy and Emerging Markets

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB4.32 and Dr Christine Cote NAB4.05

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: An undergraduate or graduate course in micro-economics or competitive strategy. Pre-requisites to be assessed by teacher responsible.

Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. It will combine the development of conceptual frameworks primarily through the lectures with the analysis of key cases in the classes. There will also be some external speakers from large international firms and from the banking and consulting community to bring contemporary views and arguments to bear.

Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused to developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The "new institutional economics" has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies' performance.

This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concept such as the resource based view. We will provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economics and working with a large variety of data sets and sources. The course will then turn to key topics. These will include the determinants of FDI; the effects of FDI on the host economy; entry mode choices; measures of institutional and cultural distance; and the growing importance of multinationals from emerging markets.

Students will work with case material as well as the required reading, and the group project will comprise a case write up, which will be presented prior to submission in class for comment and discussion.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write a 1,000 word essay and will be provided with feedback. They will also be required to present their group project in class.

Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. Thinking Strategically

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ignacio Palacios-Huerta NAB5.24

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of basic algebra is necessary to take this course.

Course content: This course is concerned with strategic thinking. The course is an interaction of game theory, economics and business strategic management. The focus is the study of situations in which two or more decision-makers (e.g., individuals, firms, political parties, etc) interact in a strategic manner. Understanding strategic situations that involve conflict and/or cooperation has proven critical in many areas of economics, business, political science, sports, law and other areas. The emphasis is to provide the fundamental thinking of good strategic making in these situations, rather than a mathematical and formal analysis.

The purpose of this course is threefold: (1) first, to introduce relevant tools of game theory in order to capture the key elements of different strategic situations and determine the most likely outcome in each situation; (2) second, to study various real-life applications and case-studies where thinking strategically has proven critical; (3) third, to cover modern developments in behavioural game theory, in particular in the areas of intertemporal choices and strategies, decision-making under risk and uncertainty, and experiments in strategic interaction. Students should note that this course will involve weekly calculations and numerical reasoning.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will have to complete 5-8 written assignments throughout the course, handing in 1-2 of them, and feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Thinking Strategically: Competitive Edge in Business, Politics and Everyday Life, WW Norton, 1993, by Avinash Dixit and Barry Nalebuff. Global Business Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leslie Willcocks NAB3.23 and Dr Susan Scott NAB3.12

Availability: This course is available on the MBA Exchange, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Marketing. This course is not available as an outside option. Added CEMS Exchange and MBA Exchange (08.08.17 JO)

Course content: This course studies the varieties of management practices across regions, and how business management can be conducted internationally. Our teaching approach is, within dynamic global, regional and national contexts, to emphasise the interrelationship between international strategy and global operations. Having identified distinctive global business management strategies, and market entry approaches, we explore how these are enabled through organizational structures and information infrastructures, and implemented through marketing, human resource, R&D, and sourcing operational sub-strategies. The course provides an examination of how emerging trends in strategy and operations are entangled with current processes of globalization (including technological capabilities) and what these conditions of possibility mean going forward. The course focuses on: Perspectives on Globalization; Political Economic, Cultural and Legal Environments and Differences; Strategy in Global Context; Organization Foundations; Technological Architecture; Entry Strategy and Strategic Alliances; Global Sourcing and Logistics Strategy; International Management Challenges especially Projects, Technology, R and D and Innovation; Global Information Systems and Digital Business Management; Managing Across Boundaries; Corporate Social Responsibility and Business Ethics; Regional Business Strategies and International Trade; Regional Strategies and International Trade; Global Digital Business.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 3 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: In classes students will be making presentations of course readings or cases in small teams of two or three as practice for the assessed group presentations, and they will receive feedback on these class presentations.

MG430 Half Unit

Strategy, Organisation and Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Rocco Macchiavello NAB.5.28

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course applies tools from microeconomics, industrial organisation and organisational economics to the analysis of strategy. The emphasis is on the application of these concepts to business situations, and as such the course relies heavily on the analysis of case studies.

The course is divided into two parts. The first part focuses on the external context of strategy. It first reviews basic tools for understanding industry economics and the determinants of industry-wide profitability, focusing on positional aspects. It then applies basic game theory to analyse competitive interactions when the number of players is small and the industry profitability is largely determined by these players' interactions. This tool is used to analyse issues such as bargaining power, price competition and entry and exit decisions.

The second part studies the internal content of strategy. Topics vary from year to year and include, among others, strategy in the presence of standard setting and network effects, the scope of the firm, outsourcing and supply chain organizations, corporate governance in adding value and capturing synergies, internal management practices. This part relies on the application of both game theory, principal-agent problems and the analysis of empirical academic papers.

The course is heavily based on case discussions. For each class meeting, study questions will be assigned concerning a case study. We will discuss these questions and the material in the case during the class discussions. Students will need to prepare for class discussions by reading the assigned case and analysing it in view of the assignment questions. For each case, students are expected to prepare short slide deck discussing the case and be ready, if asked, to present their slides in the classroom to lead the discussion. Required cases and supplementary readings will be available on Moodle. The textbook, together with the lectures, contains the concepts necessary to analyse the cases.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 15 minutes of classes in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of LT, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare for classes and actively participate in case discussions. Students will receive feedback on their class participation. Students might be asked to present during the class discussion to practice in view of the assessment. They will also be given the opportunity to discuss their preparation for the individual and group cases that count toward assessment during office hours devoted to this.

Indicative reading: A primary text will be: Saloner, G., Shepard, A. and Podolny, J. Strategic Management. New York, NY: John Wiley, 2001.

As mentioned above, cases and additional readings will be made available online.

Assessment: Other (40%) and class participation (10%) in the LT. Other (50%) in the ST.

Individual case assignment (40%) and class participation (10%) in the LT.

Group case assignment (50%) in the ST.

(Class participation will be evaluated based on the quality and quality of the student's participation in class.)

MG431 Half Unit Managerial Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ignacio Palacios-Huerta

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A graduate-level introduction to the foundations of managerial economics. Topics include:

1. Economics as a theory of organisation.
2. Economic Agents: Rationality and the co-ordination powers of the market (Demand and supply and equilibrium: the determinants of consumers' and firms' market responses and the nature of non-strategic interaction).
3. Strategic interaction and dynamic competition.
4. Information and efficiency.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of MT, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: A problem set will be assigned and is due two weeks later. It will be marked for feedback purposes only.

Indicative reading: Main textbooks: T van Zandt; Firms, Price and Markets, available online (2006); S. Estrin et al, Microeconomics, Prentice Hall (2008). Students can also consider: D M Kreps, Microeconomics for Managers, W. W. Norton (2004); B. Douglas Bernheim and Michael D. Whinston, Microeconomics, McGraw Hill (2008). Reading lists will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MG434 Half Unit Organisational Behaviour

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Uta Bindl NAB 4.01 and Dr Emma Soane NAB 4.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course seeks to understand individual attitudes and behaviour in an organisational context. It does this by reviewing psychological theories, demonstrating the contribution of a psychological perspective to understanding behaviour at work, and critically evaluating empirical evidence. The course will balance theory and practice by applying the theories to organisations.

Topics covered will include personality and individual differences; work motivation; rewards systems and the design of work; performance; health and well-being at work; creativity and innovation; groups and teams; leadership; power and politics at work; organisational culture; managing organisational decision processes and risk.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The teaching includes lectures and seminars. The teaching style is highly participative. Group work in seminars is an integral part of the course and students are expected to actively contribute to all group exercises. The course requires student commitment and willingness to engage fully with the readings and with class activities.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of LT, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: All course readings are articles from leading journals such as the Academy of Management Journal, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour. A full reading list is provided at the start of the course. There is no set textbook for this course, however students may wish to consult one of the following: Colquitt, J., LePine, J. A., & Wesson, M. J. (2012). Organizational Behaviour: Improving Performance and Commitment in the Workplace (3rd edition). McGraw-Hill; Robbins, S. P., Judge, T., & Campbell, T. (2010). Organizational Behavior. Prentice Hall; Barling, J., & Cooper, C. (Eds.). (2008). The SAGE Handbook of Organizational Behavior (Volume 1: Micro Approaches). Sage.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (25%) in the LT.

Students will work in groups to prepare and deliver a presentation that applies organisational behaviour concepts to a real organisation. Each group will select one specific organisation to focus on. Presentations must cover two topics from the course and must include clear application of a minimum of three OB-related theories. Presentations will be evaluated on the depth of subject knowledge; quality of theoretical application; structure and style of the presentation, including quality of the materials and delivery of the presentation.

MG439 Half UnitOrganisational Behaviour for Master's in Management*This information is for the 2018/19 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Shoshana Dobrow Riza NAB 4.14Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is a core course for the one year MiM.

Course content: This course is about the people side of business. Although skills in finance, accounting, marketing and operations are crucial for organisational success, the ability to manage and understand an organisation, its groups, and its individuals is equally crucial. Technical skills may help you land a job, but people skills are likely to determine whether or not you keep it, and how much you can accomplish in your career.

In this course, we will explore a variety of perspectives and theories that explain the dynamics of individual, interpersonal, group, and organisational processes. Learning about these ideas will help you develop and apply insights about human behaviour in organisational settings. The course material will be useful in planning careers, managing relationships with other people, making complex decisions, designing jobs, becoming a leader, and making sense of today's – and tomorrow's – corporate world. This course will also help you understand some of the challenges involved in both managing and being managed. Ultimately, the tools and skills developed in this course should equip you to become more effective contributors to the organisations that you join. Much of our learning in this course will be through case studies, exercises, and class discussions.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

The format of the course is highly participatory and interactive and will involve a combination of case studies, interactive exercises, discussions and readings. Students are expected to attend course sessions and to participate actively in the discussions. Students' learning in this course is directly related to their willingness to expose their ideas and conclusions to the critical judgement of the class, and to their efforts to build on and evaluate the comments of classmates.

Full preparation for each session is essential. Students are to complete readings prior to the session for which they are assigned. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

The formative assignment will be to write an outline version of a case analysis. Details of the assignment will be provided during the teaching term.

Indicative reading: There is no set text for this course. The following are examples of articles that will be assigned: Harvard Business School case studies, academic journal articles, Harvard Business Review articles. Students will be given electronic access to cases, texts and articles during the teaching term.Assessment: Project (35%), take home exam (50%) and class participation (15%) in the LT.

The summative project (35%), called the Reflected Best Self Exercise, will be directly related to all stated learning goals of the course.

The Take Home Exam (50%) will be a written case analysis, details of the case analysis will be provided in the teaching term. This will be a 48 hour exam.

MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Economics and Management and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Graduate level Microeconomics, Game Theory or Managerial Economics, Graduate level Econometrics or Quantitative Analysis is required.Course content: The course covers formal (mathematical) models of behavioural economics and discusses both experimental and field evidence that motivate and test various aspects of these models.

This course is a post-graduate introduction to behavioural economics and strategy. The topics to be discussed are

1. Risk Perceptions, Loss Aversion and Reference-Dependence.
2. Procrastination, Self Control and Choice over Time.
3. Social Motivation: Image, Reciprocity and Inequity.
4. Processing Information and Mistakes in Cognition
5. Naïve and Heuristics in Strategic Thinking
6. Happiness and Welfare

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: A mock exam comprising of problem sets.Indicative reading: Camerer, Colin, Linda Babcock, George Loewenstein, and Richard Thaler (1997) "Labor Supply of New York City Cabdrivers: One Day at a Time," Quarterly Journal of Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

The information in this course guide pertains to the 2018-2020 cohort.

Course content: This course will provide you with insights into the foundations for leadership, how leadership skills can be developed, and you can create optimum environments for effective leadership and performance. Sessions will be interactive and participative. There will also be group exercises within the sessions to encourage debate and reflection upon how to put these concepts into practice.Teaching: Five 3.5-hour sessions spread out over three LSE modules.

The course will run between the following dates:

26 August - 08 September 2018

MG452 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19
Behavioural Economics for ManagementThis information is for the 2018/19 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Kristof Madarasz NAB5.36Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global

15-20 December 2018

01 - 13 April 2019

Formative coursework: There is an optional assignment that will provide an opportunity to reflect upon the leadership style and skills assessments covered in module 2. This 1000-word assignment will discuss personal leadership style and skills, and will be submitted after Module 2.

Indicative reading: To be confirmed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: This is a non-assessed course. Some of the material for this course will form part of the MG443 Organisational Behaviour assessment. The relevant material will be specified for the assessment.

MG455 Half Unit

Decisions, Biases and Nudges

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Barbara Fasolo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Marketing and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available as an outside option to students on all other Management and LSE programmes (both post-graduate and advanced undergraduate) where regulations permit, and is complementary to other behavioural courses offered at LSE.

Pre-requisites: It is an advantage to have had an introductory social science course in one of these fields: economics, management, psychology or sociology.

It is important to be comfortable with multi-disciplinary research

Course content: This course introduces students to Behavioural Decision Science: the science that explains and predicts how humans make decisions (the decision 'process') and how well (the decision 'outcome'). The course will focus on the process, and unveil the subtle and sometimes unconscious influences played by our mind (biases) and the context in which decisions are faced: is there risk and uncertainty? What has been chosen in the past? Is the decision maker in a positive or negative mood? Is the decision made offline or online, from a "menu" or from memory? All of these (and more) are factors that often determine how information is searched before choosing, how decisions are made and the quality of the decision made.

The course is entirely seminar-based, and will alternate teaching with interactive activities designed to experience first-hand the process of decision making, before reviewing behavioural decision theories and evidence from lab and field studies. Teaching will cover experiments and applications across different 'domains' (managerial, policy, organisations, consumer, and even personal, like choice of career or a partner). The aim of the course is to offer a balanced view of the strengths and weaknesses that humans have when making any decision and cover successful interventions of "nudges" which are being implemented around the world in private and public organisations to help consumers and the public make it easier to make good decisions without complex systems or support. The assessment will give students the opportunity to apply their skills to spot strengths and weaknesses of a decision of their choosing, as well as to produce a "state-of-art behavioural report" that reviews in a rigorous and scholarly manner the literature and empirical evidence on a specific aspect of the intuitive decision process under scrutiny.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 exercise in the LT.

1. A short and timed group presentation (after Reading Week). You will work as a group and spot the biases in a real decision that you will select. You will give a brief group presentation of the biases and the mechanism that requires correction (via debiasing or nudging). After the presentation you will receive feedback as a group. This feedback will help you prepare for the summative assessment.

2. Individual review of an anonymous essay (End of LT). Students will play the role of the "assessor" and review an anonymous behavioural report (submitted by one of the students from a previous year) by implementing the different evaluation criteria which are used in this course. This exercise will help you review your and your course-mates' behavioural reports, and improve your summative assessment.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Summative (due beginning of ST): The summative assessment will be a 'Behavioural Report' which comprises two parts. In the first part (no more than 1000 words), you will be asked to report on the decision, the bias and the nudging or debiasing intervention designed by you and your group. In the second part of the report (no more than 2000 words), you will focus on one of the processes/aspects that you covered in the first part of the essay and complete a scholarly review on it, with reference to behavioural literature, theories and concepts. The first part of the essay will count for 25% of your mark while 75% will come from the second part. You will be required to provide full essay-style referencing. Although the summative assignment will tackle decision makers' presented in groups, all students will write both parts of the summative essay on their own and receive an individual mark.

MG456 Half Unit

Analytics for Strategic Decisions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Valentina Ferretti NAB 3.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and MSc in Marketing. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is complementary to any behavioural course offered at LSE.

Pre-requisites: Elementary statistical and mathematical concepts.

Course content: How to choose in tough situations where stakes are high, and there are multiple conflicting objectives? How do we perceive risk, and how to act when there are risks and uncertainties involved in a decision? How can we create options that are better than the ones originally available? Decision making is a central aspect of virtually every management and business activity, including marketing, strategic planning, project management, resource allocation, operations management, and investment. The ability to make better decisions is thus an invaluable part of everyone's toolbox, particularly for rising stars that will be in positions of leadership in the future. It is this ability that will be developed in this course, which introduces students to the use of Risk and Decision Analysis as a form of analytics that integrates hard data and judgments to develop winning strategies. Through this course students will learn how to better understand, represent, communicate and take decisions across many different contexts, both private and public. They will discover what are the key behavioural traps that prevent smart decisions to be made and what are the corresponding cutting edge analytical solutions. The course uses real-world Risk and Decision Analysis applications in organisations and public policy making, and employs several case-studies to build students' skills in decision modelling and analysis. It covers structuring and modelling decisions involving multiple stakeholders and conflicting objectives (multi-criteria decision analysis) as well as uncertainty (decision trees, influence diagrams, and risk analysis). This course is open to anyone with a keen interest towards discovering the vital ingredients to smart decision-making processes.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

A reading week will take place in Week 6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 essay in the LT.

There are two pieces of formative assignments:

1. Group project plan presentation (i.e. personal decision context selected, due in week 7)
2. Individual review of an anonymous technical report developed from students who took this course last year. Students will have to review the report by following specific criteria and by completing a set of both descriptive and evaluative tasks (e.g. indicating the strongest part of the report, indicating sentences or paragraphs that seem out of order, incompletely explained or in need of revision, etc.). This review assignment will help students to improve their reading, writing and collaborative skills. The topic of the project (i.e. a decision making problem to be modelled and analysed by means of Multicriteria Analysis) can be a personal decision (i.e. which job offer to accept when confronted with multiple ones, which master to apply for, etc.) or a real world case. Students will have to collect data, develop and apply a quantitative model, interpret the results and refer to the key scientific literature for the main steps in the development of the model. Students are allowed to work in groups of maximum 4/5 people. In the individual technical report of the group project, students will have to report on the developed process. This assignment will help students develop their operational problem solving skills by demonstrating their ability to apply a quantitative model to solve a strategic problem, interpret its results, and develop sound recommendations.

Foundations of Management 2: Financial Control and Governance (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yally Avrahampour NAB 4.37

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

The information in this course guide pertains to the 2018-2020 cohort.

Course content: This course teaches, over two modules, topics relating to financial accounting and management accounting. In so doing the course also examines the relationship between the exercise of financial control within organizations and the setting of external standards relating to governance, and the implications of this for the organization of firms. In the first module the course covers topics such as the construction of the financial statements, and then considers topics relating to measurement, for example the contrast between historical cost and fair value and the recognition of intangible assets. In the second module the course examines topics relating to the determination of the cost of a product or service, balanced performance measurement, economic value added and strategic control.

Teaching: 8 sessions of 3.5 hours each, composed of lecture and case discussion spread out equally over two LSE modules.

The course will run between the following dates:

26 August - 08 September 2018

15-20 December 2018

Formative coursework: Formative assignment after module 2.

Indicative reading: Kaplan, R. & Atkinson, A. (2014) Advanced Management Accounting, Weetman, P. (2011) Financial Accounting: An Introduction

Assessment:

This course will not be assessed.

MG458 Half Unit

Foundations of Management I

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alexander Pepper NAB.4.30 and Mr Armando Castro NAB.4.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is designed to equip students with a holistic understanding of the evolution of management theory and organisational forms and practices since the emergence of modern industrial organisations in the 19th century. Students will be provided with an overview of the development of management as a practice and as a subject of study, and will develop an understanding of the disciplinary anchors in Sociology, Psychology and Economics. Within each field we will cover origins, disciplinary boundaries, triggers for growth, core concepts and the current state of play and debate. Weekly topics cover:

1. Course Introduction and the Origins of Management
2. Management and the Firm
3. Taylorism, Motivation, and Performance
4. The Rise and Decline of Labour
5. The Rise of Human Resources Management
6. Decision Making
7. Understanding Organisational Structures
8. The Origins of Modern Strategy
9. Contemporary Strategic Management: Firms as Bundles of Resources
10. Financialisation and Capitalism's Crisis

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 15 hours of classes in the MT.

Lectures will cover theoretical materials and concepts. Case discussions (classes) will apply content covered in lectures to a business situation.

Seminars will cover the assigned readings in more depth and develop critical thinking and writing skills for postgraduate study. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Willman, P. (2014) Understanding Management: Social Science Foundations. Oxford University Press. Wallace, M and A. Wray (2012). Critical Reading and Writing for Postgraduates (Second Edition). London: Sage.

A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Coursework (75%, 3000 words) in the LT.

In class assessment (25%) in the MT.

The 'in class assessment' takes the form of a group presentation of a case.

Foundations of Management 2

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yally Avrahampour NAB 4.37

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aims of this course are to provide a basic grounding in the management literatures covering disciplines relating to financial control and management science, and of the literatures on the evolving managerial, organisational and professional contexts within which these disciplines are practiced. Students will be provided with an overview of each discipline with the aim that they acquire a basic working knowledge of each. The course will cover origins and disciplinary boundaries, the foundations of these disciplines in the social sciences, core concepts, practical applications and current state of play and debate. Weekly topics include:

- 1: Making Business Decisions that Commit Capital
- 2: Representing a Firm's Financial Condition: 1
- 3: Valuing and Managing Costs
- 4: Balanced Performance Measurement
- 5: Measuring Shareholder Value

6. READING WEEK

7: Representing a Firm's Financial Condition: 2

8: Occupations, Professions and Expertise

9: Individual and Institutional Investors in a Historical Context

10: Organisation and Management Theory

11: Origins of Management Science

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 30 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Weeks 1-11: LT: 1 two hour lecture and 1 three hour case discussion, weekly. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of LT, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Weeks 1-7: Kaplan, R. & Atkinson, A. (2014) Advanced Management Accounting; Weetman, P. (2013) Financial Accounting: An Introduction; and Berk, J. & DeMarzo, P. Handling Disruption: Humanitarian Emergencies Management and Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Atta-Amakye Addo NAB 3.04 and Dr Shirin Madon NAB 3.36

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course content is anchored on two observations: First, disasters and humanitarian emergencies are most frequent and most challenging and have the most devastating and long lasting socio-economic effects in poor counties with weak physical and institutional infrastructures. Therefore the course studies the management of emergency interventions in the broader context of socio-economic development. Second, information and communication technology (ICT) continues to open new possibilities for the mitigation, preparedness and response to disasters, but its effective use requires change in the collaboration of humanitarian organisations and affected communities. In this course we will examine critically the potential opened by ICT innovation for the handling of disruptions.

More specifically, the course will cover the following thematic areas:

- a) The challenge of humanitarian emergencies and our capacity to address it: the link of episodic emergencies and long term development; ICT innovation and the development of organisational capabilities for effective emergency action.
- b) Managing emergencies: emergency logistics and supply chains; ICT innovations in humanitarian emergencies and information systems infrastructures to address mitigation, preparedness and response. Case studies and readings will examine emerging topics such as crowdsourcing and geographic and geodetic intelligence.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1

essay in the LT.

The formative essay is intended to help students explore available literature on the topic of their summative essay and give them feedback on how to proceed.

Operations and Managerial Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ricardo Alonso

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course will explore the fundamental foundations of management theory and practice, with a focus on Operations and Managerial Economics.

The first part of the course, Managerial Economics, will teach a rigorous way of thinking about problems, issues and decisions that managers face in each of the functional areas of the organisation, as well as enabling a better understanding of the external business environment in which an organisation operates. This part of the course develops tools that are the foundation of courses in Marketing, Business Strategy, and Finance, which students will take in core courses throughout the rest of the year.

The second part of the course, Operations, will first cover how Operations developed out of Scientific Management, and then focus on productivity and quality. Productivity is concerned with the relationship between inputs and outputs, and how to develop strategies for increasing productivity. Specific topics will include the Seven Sources of Waste, the Financial Value of Productivity, Key Performance Indicators and KPI Trees. Quality covers the common reasons for defects, and implementation techniques for addressing problems of quality and ensuring reliability and standards.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 problem sets in the MT.

MG472 Half Unit

Global Strategy, Management and Information Systems

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leslie Willcocks NAB 3.23 and Dr Susan Scott NAB 3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A basic understanding of business strategy and management and a basic knowledge of information and communication technologies. Students are expected to have a basic understanding of the challenges of implementing and managing information systems in organisations.

Course content: The objective of this core course on the MSc MISDI programme is to address how organizations formulate global strategy and manage its execution in a rapidly digitizing business world. Whether organizations operate globally, regionally or nationally they are highly dependent on digital innovations produced by information and communication technologies for fulfilling their missions. This course reviews the foundations of global business management and examines key insights about the emerging roles of ICTs and digital innovation in contemporary organizations operating internationally. To manage effectively it is important to recognize the varieties of management practices across regions and the different approaches involved in international business management.

On this course we examine how the interrelationship between international strategy, digitization and global operations plays out in dynamic global, regional and national contexts. Having reviewed distinctive global business management strategies and market entry approaches, we identify contemporary issues of critical importance for information systems management including: the relative importance of culture versus institutions in conducting international digital business; the need to identify practices that enable us to manage across boundaries; the challenge of corruption and role that CSR/stakeholding play in sustainable business ethics; the effects of information security breaches; the decisions points in formulating robust sourcing operational sub-strategies; and how international project management can support learning in organizations. The course provides a strategic overview of the management of information systems and innovation. We review frameworks and approaches used in practice and consider them alongside the academic literature on processes of globalization, information systems strategy, organization studies and institutional theory. Students studying this course will gain an understanding of how trends in strategy and operations are entangled with current processes of digitization and what these conditions of possibility mean going forward for globalizing. At the end of the course participants will be able to:

1. Understand global, business and digital issues in strategy formulation
2. Analyse business environments at competitive, country, regional and global/societal levels
3. Understand and analyse regional differences and how regional and international trade is conducted
4. Use analytical frameworks for arriving at business and digital strategy
5. Recognise and make recommendations on the strategic potential and impact of information systems and digital innovation in different organizational contexts.
6. Decide how organizations can best enter and evolve in new international markets.
7. Analyse international management issues in operational areas of human resources, marketing, logistics, sourcing, R&D, and project management
8. Apply ethical standards to issues of corporate social responsibility, sustainability, and digital security and privacy.
9. Participate in managing culture, difference, diversity, across borders.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST. A reading week will take place in W6. There will be no teaching on MG472 during this week.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course reading list. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. A mock examination, with questions from MG472, MG481 and MG487 will be held.

Indicative reading:

1. An in-class presentation of a key course reading. The student will be assessed on the presentation, the Powerpoint slides and a two page summary of the reading submitted in advance of the presentation.
2. An in-class presentation of a key class case study. The student will be assessed on the presentation, the Powerpoint slides and a two page summary of the case study submitted in advance of the presentation.

MG473 Half Unit Negotiation Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Marsden NAB4.22

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course highlights the importance of power, tactics, strategy, information and trust in shaping the structure and outcomes of negotiations. It covers basic negotiation concepts such as distributive and integrative bargaining, sometimes called pie-slicing and pie-expanding approaches, two-party and multi-party negotiation, as well as more advanced issues such as the impact of culture and the psychology of judgement and decision-making. Students will engage in weekly negotiation simulation exercises to help them understand the concepts and develop their negotiating skills.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will compile a weekly learning log reflecting on their experience in the negotiation exercises and linking that to the concepts and theories in the literature. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. Students will also complete a formative essay.

Indicative reading: The main text, covering most of the material in the course is: Leigh Thompson, The Mind and Heart of the Negotiator, 6th edn, Pearson, Harlow, 2014. The following are also useful: Roger Fisher and William Ury, Getting to Yes: Negotiating Agreement Without Giving In, Penguin Books, New York, 1981; Ken Binmore, Game theory: A Very Short Introduction, Oxford University Press, Oxford, 2007; and Andrew M. Colman, Game Theory and its Application to the Aocial and Biological Sciences. Routledge, Hove, 1999. Students will be expected to read widely in appropriate journals, and a list of references will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 2000 words) and other (25%) in the LT. The other assessment (25%) is a Learning Log due in LT.

MG475 Half Unit Organisational Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mariana Bogdanova

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources) and MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Organisations exert a central force in contemporary work and society. From the rise of large, machine-like bureaucracies in the 19th century to the flat, networked firms of nowadays, different assemblages of people and technology have produced a rich ecology of organisational forms – multinationals, social enterprise and charities, R&D laboratories etc. Organisational theory examines these multifarious arrangements with respect to their internal and external environment elements and dynamics - e.g. organisational culture and identities, power and politics, inter-organisational collaboration, effect of globalisation on organisational activities etc. The course readings include a selection of classic views and more recent research on organisation theory with the aim of helping students understand organisations as entities, how they influence the life of their members, and how they affect work and society more generally.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a formative assessment using a sample exam question. Details will be provided in class.

Indicative reading: Hatch, M.J., 2018. Organization theory: Modern, symbolic, and postmodern perspectives. Oxford University Press. Clegg, S.R., Hardy, C. and Nord, W.R., 2003. Handbook of Organization Studies. SAGE Publications Ltd.

Assessment: Exam (65%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period. Project (35%).

The project is composed of two parts (individual and group work) and is submitted in the MT and the LT.

MG476 Half Unit Corporate Social Responsibility and International Labour Standards

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sarah Ashwin NAB 4.19

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/CIPD), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Human Rights and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Any social science background.

Course content: Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is becoming an expected element of business strategy. This course critically evaluates CSR from a number of perspectives, drawing on material from a variety of different disciplines. Students analyse the emergence of CSR, its theoretical basis, the business case for the adoption of CSR programmes, as well as the social impacts of such policies. The opening lectures of the course focus on globalisation and international labour standards, and provide an understanding of how CSR relates to international regulatory institutions such as the International Labour Organisation. Subsequent lectures focus on the different aspects of CSR mentioned above, as well as topics such as comparative CSR. In terms of the impact and design of CSR policies, the course mainly focuses on issues relating to labour standards, but supplementary material on sustainability is also included. As well as traditional academic readings and case studies, students will critically examine publically available material such as corporate policies and reports. Seminars will follow a mixture of formats including group activities and presentations. The course will include one lecture from a CSR professional.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay in LT.

Indicative reading: Vogel, D. (2005) The Market For Virtue: The Potential and Limits of Corporate Social Responsibility, Washington D.C.: Brookings Institution Press. Crane, A. et al. MG478 Half Unit

Globalisation and Human Resource Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sarosh Kuruvilla NAB3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/ CIPD) and MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management). This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour) and MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on the management of human resources in global corporations. The central theme in the course is the link between HR strategy and business strategy. The course involves an examination of how diverse global firms articulate and execute global HR strategies and how these strategies are reflected in a variety of HR practices such as global compensation, global talent management, global performance management, global value chains and labour standards, global diversity policies, global employment relations, and the management of HR in global mergers and acquisitions. Given the absence of empirical studies of HR practices in global corporations, the method of instruction is through the analysis of cases, supplemented by lectures and guest lectures from Global HR leaders. This is a more practical course, but informed by HR theories that students would have been exposed to in the introductory HRM course (MG480 Management of Human Resources: Strategies and Policy), as well as other courses. Students without the required theoretical background will be provided with supplemental readings.

In the course modules, we will:

- Evaluate the strategic choices facing global corporations, including the choice between adopting highly centralized or predominantly decentralized HR policies, with regard to a range of HR issues such as performance management, compensation and diversity.

- Understand HR considerations in the outsourcing and offshoring of work; and the role of HRM in managing international mergers and acquisitions.
- Analyse how institutions and culture affect the HR practices and employment relations in diverse global corporations from advanced and emerging market countries.
- Analyse the challenges faced by global corporations in structuring global assignments with specific reference to global mobility (expatriation and repatriation of global managers), and how corporations are dealing with global talent management.
- Taking a global value chain approach, examine how global firms extend their HRM/ER policies to their supply chain, and evaluate the efficacy of methods to improve labour standards and human rights in global supply chains.

Teaching: 11 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. Teaching will be supplemented by guest lectures from leading industry practitioners. These are optional but highly recommended. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: During the first week of classes, students will be instructed in the art of case analysis, and will be instructed as to what is required in case memos. Students may elect to write case memos for Week 2, which will be unassessed, but instructors will provide collective feedback.

A formative take-home case analysis will be given in Week 4, which will be graded during the reading week and written feedback provided by the marker. This case analysis is a time-limited project that requires an analysis of the case problem, a solution to the case, and a statement of broad take-aways (anchored in either practice or theoretical literature). In particular, students should be able to articulate what are the key lessons from the case for HR theory and practice. The case will be made available to the students on Monday morning of Week 4. The deadline for submission will be Friday afternoon of Week 4 at 4pm.

The objective of the case analysis is to develop students' ability to analyse concrete company experiences in order to generate insights for both the practice of HRM in global companies and the development of new theory.

David Marsden. A Theory of Employment Systems: Microfoundations of Societal Diversity. Oxford University Press, 1999.

Assessment: Class participation (10%), case analysis (30%) and take home exam (60%).

For the case analysis memos, each student will be expected to provide an individual solution to the case and articulate the lessons learned from the case. The take home exam will consist of a case and a comprehensive reflective essay question.

The take home exam questions will be released to students in Week 1 of ST and will be due for submission the following week.

Information Systems for the Public Sector: Digital Government and Service Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antonio Cordella NAB3.30

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy,

MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/ PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Strategic Communications and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Digital government and digital public sector services are the result of the widespread adoption of ICTs, Web processes and social media in public sector organisation - which cumulatively transform and may 'producize' the nature of public services delivered to citizens. This course covers the recent and likely-future major organizational and technology change processes in the government sector. Core topics include: the distinctive aspects of the public administration context for technology-enabled innovation; digital government and public sector reform; public sector ICT innovation and public value creation; the use of ICTs to streamline public services as part of wider business process changes; measuring and growing productivity via digital changes; 'digital by default' services and social media in government; and next-generation shifts to EDGE (Essentially Digital Governance).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 4 hours of workshops in the LT.

A reading week will take place in W6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

One 1000-word formative essay to be submitted in week 7.

Formative feedback is also provided on class participation with seminars based around reading and discussing selected journal articles.

Management of Human Resources: Strategies and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Booth NAB4.20

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/ CIPD), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management) and MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course examines central issues pertinent to the theory and practice of Human Resource Management (HRM). It introduces students to a range of theoretical perspectives which underpin the ways in which organisations manage the employment relationship through the deployment of HRM strategy and policy. From a practice perspective, it reviews challenges involved in the design, implementation and evaluation of both overall HRM strategy and specific practice areas. In this respect we review HR policy and practice in the areas of recruitment and selection, job redesign, pay and rewards, training and development, employee voice and conflict, engagement, retention and attrition, performance management and appraisal, and strategic HRM.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Students are expected to read widely in the appropriate journals; a detailed reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Torrington, et al. (2017). Human Resource Management. 10th edition. If you already have an understanding of Human Resource Management foundations, we recommend the following textbook as it encompasses more than a fundamental text: Boxall, P.; Purcell, J.; & Wright, P. Innovating Organisational Information Technology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Sorensen NAB 3.11 and Dr William Venters NAB 3.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MSc in Operations Research & Analytics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A basic knowledge of computing, including hardware and software. Students are expected to have a basic understanding of the challenges of implementing and managing information systems in organisations.

Course content: The course provides students with a practical and theoretical insight into the processes and practices of developing contemporary Information Systems. The course reflects the diversity of contemporary information systems contexts; discussing how we should manage the development of complex Internet enabled systems and services. The course focuses on new technologies and practices including cloud, open-source development, Software as a Service, Web2.0 mashups, mobile and ubiquitous information technology, technology to support knowledge work, innovating customer relationship management, mediating mutual adjustment and mass-scale mediated communities. The changing architectures of information systems towards an Internet based cloud are key themes of the course. Attention is however also given to the development of traditional ERP and information management systems which remain important in enterprises. The course also discusses the development challenges in small start-ups leveraging existing development platforms. Particular attention is given to problem structuring and problem design issues within such complex settings using Soft Systems Methodology and the Unified Modeling Language as a toolkit. Agile methods form a core part of the teaching, with Extreme Programming, Rapid Application Development and Internet-speed development contrasted with development formalism such as the Rational Unified Model and Capability Maturity Models. To ensure that students gain practical experience we include a one-week intensive "bootcamp" group Sprint project run during reading week in which outside consultants present a "real-world" case study of systems development and the groups undertake to rapidly analyse and design a proposal for a technical solution. This allows students to support their theoretical understanding with a strong practical experience of the pressures and difficulties of systems development today. The "bootcamp" group sprint project provides a realistic experience of developing systems within a consulting role, and is supported by classes and question and answer session and face to face discussion. Students gain an understanding of the benefits and difficulties of working within a small team under pressure.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 5 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

8 hours of these lectures, and 5 hours of classes will occur be during the "Bootcamp" Sprint week which runs during reading week (Week 6) of MT.

Formative coursework: Students discuss articles, practice systems development techniques, and critically evaluate their success. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. A mock examination, with questions from MG472, MG481 and MG487 will be held.

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The main focus of this course is on how innovative technologies are managed and their consequences. It includes technological innovation in areas such as telecoms, hi tech industries, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, space technology, financial technologies. Aspects covered are how new industries are created, how existing industries can be transformed by new technologies, linkages between technological development and the creation of wealth, and implementation success and failure of technological systems. Topics include: technology and entrepreneurship, technology strategy, R&D management, patents and intellectual property, disruptive technologies, project escalation, technological disasters. Economic, systems, managerial and sociological approaches will be compared using a variety of case studies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles and case studies available on or through the course Moodle site. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students will present an essay plan in preparation for the final case-based essay, on which formative feedback will be provided.

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation) and MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites. Students should have some appreciation of information management and systems implementation issues, and some understanding of healthcare systems. A short set of readings will be provided for students who require this background understanding.

Course content: This course explores the principal issues faced by healthcare policy makers, healthcare organizations, entrepreneurs and supplier organisations as they plan for and develop healthcare information systems and infrastructures. The course considers systems oriented towards both administrative and clinical activities from the simplest apps to national eHealth infrastructures.

The course is organised as follows: A survey of the history of computer-based systems in healthcare and some comparison with other sectors. The evolution and current state of information systems in primary and secondary care with international comparisons. The electronic patient record and national information infrastructures for health. The development of healthcare policies for systems and infrastructures. Assessing the transformative potential of health information systems. Issues of systems implementation. Selected application domains including electronic prescribing, computers in medicines management, Big Data, telehealth and telecare and new patient roles. Issues of evaluation and building of an evidence base.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

A reading week will take place in W6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Seminars are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students complete a formative proposal for their essay on which written feedback is provided. Feedback on the first coursework will inform the second coursework (essay).

Management and Economics of E-Business

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Smithson NAB3.31 and Dr Antonio Cordella NAB3.30

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None, but a basic understanding of information systems within organisational contexts is assumed. Students are expected to have a basic understanding of the challenges of implementing and managing information systems in organisations.

Course content: The course discusses managerial, economics and innovation aspects of online business. History and foundations of online business are introduced to discuss the managerial challenges of the different e-business practices: Business-to-consumer (B2C) and Business-to-business (B2B) systems; e-marketing; intermediation; and IT in supply chain management. Economic theories, such as transaction costs and principal agent, are used to discuss the impact of e-business on market structure and organisation. The course introduces practical and management aspects of the impact of diverse technologies on interorganisational relationships, new organisational forms, such as networked organisations, and electronic markets. Strategies for e-business innovation including web 2.0 and similar developments are also discussed.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. A reading week will take place in W6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course reading list and case studies. Formative feedback is provided through class presentations and a formative essay of 1000 words on which feedback will be provided.

Social Computing, Data and Information Service

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB 3.24

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is about the growing importance ordinary users assume in spinning the fabric of the Web and supporting the operations of social media platforms and networks. This social transformation of the Web that is often referred to as social computing is closely associated with the diffusion of potent lightweight technologies such as smart phones, tablet computers and wearables and the continuing development of advanced interactive software applications. It is also linked to architectural and other software-based innovations that help construct interoperable information systems and infrastructures. Taken together, these trends set the stage for the transition from a transaction-based Web (e.g. buying items) to a Web in which online interaction, talk and communication become the backbone activities for the production of data and the generation of economic value.

In this context, social media platforms emerge as key entities that mark the social transformation of the Web and the production of services that accommodate a great deal of stakeholders, such as platform owners, platform users and third parties such as advertisers and digital analytics companies. The course deals with the ways by which social media platforms operate as data platforms by analysing the ways by which they engineer user participation to produce a computable data footprint that is subsequently used to develop a range of data-based resources and services. The course also shows how social media deploy personalization strategies and how personalization is inherently connected to big data and, more particularly, social data. The course takes a unique approach to social media by examining the data-work they perform and the innovative economic practices they promote. Social media powered networks, platforms, and infrastructures are at the heart of today's digital economy. The course blends theories, ongoing research insights and real-life examples to analyse the social and economic implications of these significant developments.

- Explain the drives behind social computing
- Describe the technological developments and the architectural principles that govern social computing and the growing involvement of lay publics in the Web
- Link data-based practices with social systems and the digital economy
- Explain how social media platforms operate as business organisations
- Understand information infrastructures and the role they play in sustaining social media platforms and the digital economy
- Describe social media as important actors in the digital economy
- Understand personalization strategies and their implications
- Acquire critical awareness of social data and big data

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. There is a Reading Week in Week 6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles and case studies from the course reading list.

Formative coursework: Written formative feedback is provided on the 500 words proposal for the summative essay.

Innovation and Information Systems: Concepts and Perspectives

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chrisanthi Avgerou

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course explores the theoretical foundations for the study of organizational and social innovation and the particular role of information systems in such change. It integrates concepts and perspectives of innovation from a range of disciplines. In completing this course students should be able to draw critically from existing theories in order to address issues of technology-based innovation, organizational change and information systems management.

The lectures cover literature related to three broad themes: innovation and organizational change; information technology and organizational change; and information technology innovation and socio-economic change. For each of these themes we identify and discuss relevant theoretical concepts and perspectives. The discussion of theories is structured in terms of technical/rational and socially embedded approaches.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 18 hours of seminars and 5 hours of workshops in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

A reading week will take place in W6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Seminars are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles Workshops assist students to develop their critical literature review essay, summative essay. Formative feedback is provided on seminar and workshop participation.

In addition, students will complete a formative essay of 2000 words on which feedback will be provided.

A mock examination, shared with MG472 and MG481 will be held.

GMiM Capstone Course - Management in Action

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emma Soane NAB4.02 and Dr Rebecca Newton

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The GMiM Capstone Course builds connections between management theory and practice and equips students with the skills necessary to succeed in their managerial careers. MG488 runs throughout the Global Master's in Management's first and second years.

The MG488A programme comprises ten Capstone lectures throughout the first year. Capstone lectures run fortnightly in MT and LT, and will include sessions led by the course teachers and guest speakers from a range of organisations. Lectures will cover a range of topics such as leadership, strategy and entrepreneurship. Each lecture will contribute to the overall goal of achieving a deeper understanding of how to apply theory to organisational practice.

The remaining five sessions per term comprise optional one to one meetings with a member of the Capstone team from the Department of Management to discuss issues relating to Capstone lectures. In addition to attending sessions, in the first year, each student is assigned to a group of approximately 5 students.

Each group will produce a blog on one of the Capstone lecture topics. A schedule for the group blogs will be made available at the start of the first year. Each group will receive feedback on their assignment. There will also be one 20-minute session for each blog group to discuss the development of their blog with a member of the Capstone team. A schedule of blog group meetings will be made available at the start of the first year.

In the second year, students will attend sessions that will introduce the term's business projects. Students are also encouraged to attend at least one business project presentation by another team. Second year students apply the theoretical knowledge and business management skills gained in the first year by working on a business project. This takes place in either MT or LT and culminates in a presentation by each project team to their company sponsors, LSE faculty and student peer group. At the start term of students will be allocated to a client project team, typically comprising 5 or 6 students, supported by a sponsoring executive and a faculty coach, to carry out research on a business question posed by the client company. The actual topic is for the sponsoring organisation to decide and questions have historically been very diverse.

Students have the option of proposing companies as business project company sponsors ("self-sponsored projects") or of developing a viable business plan for an entrepreneurial idea ("entrepreneurial business projects"), although these options must be agreed in advance with the faculty member responsible for business projects to ensure their suitability.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of help sessions in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of help sessions in the LT. GMiM Capstone Lectures run once a fortnight throughout the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. First year students are expected to attend all sessions. Second year students may choose to attend sessions.

Additionally there is a 60 minute Q&A session in Lent Term to help students prepare for their essays.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of MT and week 6 of LT, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students will produce an individual essay which considers the links between theory and practice. Essay titles will be made available in MT of the first year. Essays will be submitted in LT of the first year.

Indicative reading: Recommended readings will be provided for Capstone lectures when relevant.

Assessment: Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Project (65%) and class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.

Attendance at Capstone lectures - 10% of total course marks.

Students are required to attend 10 Capstone lectures over the two years of the programme, with credits for attendance attached pro-rata to each session. Students must engage fully with session activities in order to receive attendance credit. It is recommended that students attend the 10 Capstone lectures in the first year of the programme.

Individual Summative Assignment – 25% of the total course marks. In year 2 students will write an academic essay on one of the Capstone lecture topics. Essay questions will be provided by the MG488 course team and will be made available in LT of the second year. Essays must consider application of management theory and practice. Students will submit their essays in MT of the second year.

Group Business Project - 65 % of total course marks. All business projects take place during the second year of study. Business projects are assessed on a group basis under three headings: quality of group presentation; quality of research (including application of theoretical concepts); quality of outcomes (recommendations and solutions) and other deliverables.

Presentations for students working on their business projects in MT take place during LT. Presentations for students working on their business projects in the LT take place during the first week of ST.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is available on the Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed GMiM Capstone Course - Management in Action (MG488A).

Course content: The GMiM Capstone Course builds connections between management theory and practice and equips students with the skills necessary to succeed in their managerial careers. MG488 runs throughout the Global Master's in Management's first and second years.

First year students are prepared for MG488B by attending MG488A sessions during the first year of the programme. The MG488A programme comprises five speaker-led sessions for each of MT and LT. The remaining five sessions per term can be used by students to have one to one meetings with a Careers Consultant or a member of the Capstone team from the Department of Management. Second year students are welcome to attend MG488A sessions.

Second year students in MG488B apply the theoretical knowledge and business management skills gained in the first year by working on a business project. This takes place in either MT or LT and culminates in a presentation by each project team to their company sponsors, LSE faculty and student peer group. Data Governance: Privacy, Openness and Transparency

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Edgar Whitley NAB3.32

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides a detailed consideration of the key elements of the concept of informational privacy, the open data movement and transparency. These topics lie at the intersection of diverse contemporary issues including, public sector reform, human rights, digital ecosystems and social networking, and the global and national regulation of business. The course content is international in focus, and reviews contemporary issues arising from new technologies, new policies of governments, new practices and business models in the private sector. Topics include personal privacy and identity systems; motivations for information sharing and transparency and its potential for driving beneficial change; transformations in the management of government information and processing practices; the technological and regulatory challenges faced by public sector and business; the protection of sensitive personal data including medical and financial information; data-mining in the context of national security and anti-terrorism policies; communications surveillance policies; behavioural studies of privacy attitudes and the evolution of trust and consent in online environments. The course enables students to develop their understanding of the challenges presented by new informational regimes, their regulatory development and emerging governance structures.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. A reading week will take place during Week 6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students will complete a formative essay plan on which feedback will be provided.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Various

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/CIPD), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management) and MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course consists of an academic dissertation in which students explore a research question that is grounded in the academic literature. While students will be assigned a dissertation supervisor, the supervisor will only provide guidance as needed – students are expected to take the lead and demonstrate their ability to conduct independent research. Students can also apply for a Links project and, if accepted, will conduct research on an HR question posed by the Links sponsor. More information about Links projects will be provided in class.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures in the MT. 4 hours of lectures in the LT. 12 hours of lectures in the MT during Weeks 1 to 4 inclusive. Lectures will explain dissertation requirements and expectations. 4 hours of lectures in LT will introduce students to quantitative and qualitative research methods. Students will be expected to work independently on preparing a dissertation proposal, to be submitted at the end of MT. Supervisors will be assigned during the first few weeks of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will work with their dissertation supervisors in order to gauge their progress.

Indicative reading: Students will be instructed on how to conduct literature searches in order to find readings relevant to their research project.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%).

MG496

Study Skills and Research Methods

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Smithson NAB3.31

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course provides students with both a broader context for the study of information systems as well as the essential skills relevant to the MISDI programme. Various views of the changing nature and environment of information technology. Research and study skills, team working and other practical skills. Guidance for the dissertation. Seminars by various visiting speakers from academia and industry who discuss a wide range of issues relevant to contemporary information systems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT.

Indicative reading: T Cornford & S Smithson, Project Research in Information Systems, Macmillan, 2nd edn, 2005.

Other books and journal articles will be recommended.

Assessment: The course is not formally assessed.

MG497 Half Unit

Dissertation: MSc Management and Strategy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe NAB5.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation consists of a research project within the subject of management. Students work on this project individually under the guidance of a dissertation advisor. The dissertation should make a contribution towards understanding a topic or question related to management based on original analysis and empirical evidence.

Teaching: There will be an introductory meeting, which will set out the requirements for the dissertation, the process, caution of plagiarism, etc. After this meeting students are welcome to approach staff with preliminary ideas in one-to-one meetings.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on a preliminary proposal (to be submitted by the end of Michaelmas Term) and will be allocated a dissertation advisor, under whose guidance they will complete a detailed project proposal by the end of Lent Term. Students work on their dissertation over the summer, with supervision available until the end of the Summer Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term.

Introduction to Studying for GMiM

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alexander Pepper NAB 4.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM) and Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is divided into three separate subjects: Statistics, and Quantitative and Writing Skills for Postgraduates.

The Statistics course is for all students and covers basic probability and statistics; hypothesis testing; analysis of variance; association, correlation and regression.

Students in the final portion of the course can opt for one of two options: Quantitative Skills, or Writing Skills for Postgraduates.

The Quantitative portion of the course is an introductory mathematics course which covers the following topics with application reference to economics and business: Functions, Linear Equations, Natural Logarithm, Comparative Statics Analysis. The Writing Skills sessions are intended to help students who have backgrounds outside the social sciences and humanities make the transition to postgraduate work. Topics covered will include identifying and making an argument and the fundamentals of essay writing.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the two weeks prior to the Michaelmas Term. There will also be some workshops and tutorial sessions for the statistics portion of the course, to support students preparing practical exercises. Rounding out the schedule is a full programme of talks and activities designed to smooth your transition to postgraduate study at LSE.

Operational Research and Decision Science in Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Lawrence Phillips and Prof Jonathan Rosenhead

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course focuses on the key skills needed to be an effective practitioner in Operational Research (OR) and Decision Sciences (DS), and the structured approaches available for formulating (as opposed to solving) problems of complexity, uncertainty and conflict. It is designed to complement the technical methods introduced in the operational research and decision science compulsory courses with both facilitation and process skills, and methods for handling 'wicked' problems. Students will acquire an appreciation of the different conditions under which OR & DS applications take place in practice, and the skills and methods that are needed to make effective interventions in the decision making of organisations. The history and development of OR & DS, as well as its current practice, will be examined to identify key issues affecting the practice of OR & DS and the role of the OR and DS consultant. Students will identify different kinds of organisation in which OR & DS make important contributions. The structure of these organisations will be studied together with organisational behaviours. The nature of decision making at both the strategic and operational levels will be examined. Students will be provided with an opportunity to explore their own work preferences enabling them to understand how they can best contribute to a work group so it becomes a high-performing team. Students will be introduced to the range of participative problem structuring methods appropriate to problem situations with multiple stakeholders facing uncertainty and conflicting objectives. These methods are aimed at developing a shared view of the problem among the clients, and a joint commitment to action. Students will have opportunities to develop their skills in problem structuring, and to identify the contributions that they can make when working in teams as well as individually.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: There will be opportunities in MT to provide answers to test examination questions.

Incentives and Governance in Organisations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Simon Bowmaker

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Marketing and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of Mathematics and Economics.

Course content: The course uses economic theory to gain insight into issues related to internal organisation, structure, and management of firms. The course will draw on various fields including management science, industrial organisation and microeconomics. The course deals with three main topics: (i) the provision of incentives in organisations, (ii) the use of information in markets and firms, and (iii) the relationship between corporate finance and organisational decisions. A major theme concerns the question of how to provide incentives efficiently in organisations. Other important themes include efficiency, coordination, incompleteness of contracts and the use of the market versus internal exchange. A section of the course deals with capital structure. The implications of asymmetric information are examined. Corporate governance is discussed in a principal-agent framework.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

Indicative reading: Main texts: Roberts J (2004), The Modern Firm. Organizational Design for Performance and Growth, Oxford University Press, UK; Brealey, RS, Myers, and F Allen (2006), Corporate Finance, 8th edition (older editions are fine too), McGraw-Hill International Edition (US edition is titled "principles of corporate finance"; older versions by Brealey and Myers only).

Empirical Research Strategy for Managerial Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Yona Rubinstein NAB 5.31

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course addresses the link between a research question, the nature of the available data, the appropriate statistical and econometric methods and the interpretation of the empirical findings.

Using datasets from current research in managerial economics, the course will explain how conceptual ideas are transformed into an empirical research project, and how this project is then implemented.

Topics will include:

1. The statistical modelling of research questions; (formulation, reduced forms and structural parameters of interest)
2. Identification in controlled experiments;
3. Identification strategies in observational data:
 - a. cross section: instrumental variables, regression discontinuity design;
 - b. panel data: fixed and random effects models, differences-in-differences
 - c. sample selection: structural models and non-parametric approach

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One formative essay (review of an empirical paper, 1000 words), one problem set, mock exam.

economics and game theory relevant for strategic management.

These two courses will help students to understand how managers in the real world ought to read situations from an economic and strategic angle. Attention will be given to conceptual underpinnings.

The course focuses on decision making in individual and strategic settings also through the lens of behavioural economics. It is an amalgam of insights from economics, game theory, and strategic management. Some lectures will discuss key aspects of choice under uncertainty, risk perceptions, choice over time, and the social aspects of value. A powerful tool to study strategic situations is game theory. Lectures will then also be devoted to developing the basic concepts of game theory including Nash and sub-game-perfect Nash equilibrium. These issues will be deepened further in the accompanying seminars.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

MG4A6 Half Unit

The Analysis of Strategy B

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe NAB5.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed The Analysis of Strategy A (MG4A5).

Course content: In this course we continue, deepen and extend the analysis of strategy. The success of a firm depends on the decisions it makes, and these decisions have to take the behaviour of competitors into account who themselves try to make optimal decisions. Thus the firm faces a problem of strategic interaction, and game theory takes this interaction consistently into account. This course aims at a strategic understanding of these situations and the decisions firms face. We will study general principles of strategic thinking, the application of these principles to specific problems and general conclusions we can draw in these situations. This part of the course focuses on the strategic aspects of competing against other firms within the same industry. We start by analysing market structure and various dimensions of competition - pricing, capacity choices, research and development and advertising. We will then discuss different aspects of strategic commitment and the commitment aspects of pricing, investment and financing decisions. We then focus on the dynamic aspect of pricing rivalry, in particular collusion and price wars. We will finally discuss the incentives for innovation and market entry and exit decisions. Our approach will emphasise both the power and the limits of a game-theoretic approach. We will use simple models to clarify the logic of strategic reasoning, and case studies to illustrate the link between the analysis of strategy and managerial decision making.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

Indicative reading: There is no fully adequate textbook for this course. Strategy for the Information Economy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of economics.

Course content: The internet has created many new market opportunities. Web-based technology allows for new kinds of market interactions and products. Understanding the design and functioning of these new markets is central for business strategy. This course develops the relevant economic principles and applies them to the formulation of strategies for the provision of information goods and the design of online market platforms. The first part of the course is concerned with strategic aspects of the provision of information goods (such as music, software, product reviews, search results). Topics include the pricing of information goods, versioning, switching costs, network effects, lock-ins and the discussion of e-commerce institutions and business models. The second part of the course covers the use and design of online-market transaction mechanisms for business-to-consumer and business-to-business e-commerce. Topics include principles of market engineering, design of standard (online-)auction markets and multi-unit auction markets, reputation and collusion in online markets and matching markets. The course provides a theoretical background and relates theory to various examples and case-studies (such as the design of Google's ad-auctions).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students will need to have some understanding of microeconomics and knowledge of basic statistical methods would be an advantage

Course content: This course is an introduction to the strategic management of modern diversified firms. It studies how the firm's portfolio of products and its internal organisation can be designed to maximise corporate performance.

The course addresses the following questions facing modern managers: what products and activities should the firm focus on? Which tasks should be subcontracted and which should be carried out inside the firm? How should the firm be organised internally in order to coordinate and motivate employees, managers and other stakeholders? How should the firm's scope and internal organisation adapt to changes in the environment?

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to undertake the analysis of two Corporate Strategy problems which will be marked and handed back with feedback.

International Marketing: A Strategic Approach

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB5.13

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Operations Research & Analytics, MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is a rigorous examination of the key analytical frameworks, technical tools, and concepts that are essential in building an effective marketing strategy. Participants are introduced to the subject at both strategic and operational levels. This course combines LSE's premier standing in the social sciences with cutting-edge management practices. By using a wide range of concepts, interactive lectures, videos, hands-on exercises, and case studies, we will share key analytical frameworks and tools that are essential to a good marketing strategy. The aim is to develop a widely applicable analytical tool-kit that relies on: (a) anticipating decisions that managers frequently face, (b) bringing to bear a wide range of fundamental, often competing social science theories to inform these decisions, (c) knowledge about empirical generalizations, and (d) knowledge about moderating conditions. Also, emphasis is placed on the use of a simulated case study to develop participant's skills at analysing and making sense of complex real world business situations.

Design and Management of Organisations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Yona Rubinstein NAB 5.31

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we investigate aspects of management and the internal organisation of the firm from birth to end.

What makes a successful entrepreneur? Are managers subject to human biases in decision making?

Our starting point is that entrepreneurs and managers are human. We neglect neither general heuristics nor biases exhibited by individuals and groups and their impact on firms' performance. We further recognise that they make decisions in situations in which information is not perfect and not symmetrically shared, neither internally with their employees nor externally. We also consider the capabilities of organisations to design management strategies to cope with that.

How can firms attract and select the 'right' employees? Can pay and promotions be structured to screen the best workers and extract their efforts? Should firms develop employees' talent and if so, how? Why do firms form teams and how these are used most effectively? Do experts follow the crowd? Why they turn to be "yes-men"? Can pay incentives be structured to motivate experts to share their private knowledge?

Design and Management of Organisations introduces students to a set of conceptual tools to cope with these key managerial challenges and critically evaluate contemporary management approaches.

The organising principle of much of the content of the course has its conceptual origins in economic strategy and behavioral economics applied to issues that are relevant to management. Additionally we draw upon findings from psychology and sociology. The course complements MG4A3 (Incentives and Governance in Organisations) but can be taken as a stand-alone course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem sets in the LT.

Multiple exercises will be provided throughout the term and will be discussed during lectures and review sessions. In addition a major problem set will be circulated at the end of the week 5. This problem set will be discussed in class for feedback purposes only.

Indicative reading: The first set of slides will be provided during lecture 1 and subsequent sets will be posted online. These slides constitute the backbone of the course. You are expected to flesh out the slides using models, graphs, and examples discussed during the lectures.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course adopts a psychological framework to explore the content, process and outcomes of organisational change. The aim of the course is to provide students with different psychological theories to understand the process and consequences of organisational change and in doing so addresses the following issues: type of organisational change, creating readiness for organisational change and leading change, the change agent, strategies for change, resistance to change and evaluation of and institutionalization of organisational change. Models and frameworks for analyzing and diagnosing change; the role of the change agent, leading change from the top, bottom up change specific interventions; strategies of change; a justice perspective on organisational change; understanding recipients reactions to change; theory and methods of evaluation of organisational change and reinforcing change interventions.

Teaching: 21 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 5 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures and seminars. Group working is an integral part of the course and students are expected to actively contribute to their syndicate group throughout the year. The course is demanding of students and depends partly upon commitment and willingness to participate fully. The course is taught in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will take part in a mock exam in the LT.

Indicative reading: The course relies heavily on journal articles (for example, Academy of Management Journal, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour, and Journal of Applied Behavioural Science) and the use of case studies. The following book is also useful: Oreg, S., Michel, A., & By, T. B., (Eds.) (2013), The psychology of organizational change: Viewing change from the employee's perspective, Cambridge University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Course content: Principles of evolutionary psychology. The nature and limitations of the human brain as an evolved and adapted organ. Evolutionary origins of cognitive biases, and their effects on organisational behaviour. Sex differences in organisational behaviour. The importance of physical attractiveness and general intelligence in organisational behaviour. "Discrimination" in labour market. Evolutionary psychological perspectives on cooperation, reciprocity, altruism, hierarchy, and leadership in modern corporations. Evolutionary origins of organisationally relevant emotions such as envy, spite, and positional bias. This course introduces the evolutionary psychological perspective on business and management. The emerging science of evolutionary psychology sheds entirely new light on, and offers different solutions to, old problems of management, such as glass ceiling, occupational sex segregation, sexual harassment and suboptimal decision making, and points to new potential problems.

Pre-requisites: Basic Knowledge of Mathematics and Economics

Course content: The course studies a key component of the "globalization" process: the negotiation, implementation and implications of international trade agreements (ITAs). These include the World Trade Organisation and the fast-growing web of regional trade agreements. We analyse the challenges and opportunities faced by companies engaged in the global economy in this context. The course relies on recent theoretical and empirical research to gain insight into the motivations for ITAs and their consequences for consumers and firms. Globalisation - trends in the international economy and overview of their causes and effects. The sources of international trade. Trade barriers - restrictions to international trade and their consequences. The economics and politics of international trade agreements. The rules, accomplishments and shortcomings of the GATT/WTO system. Regional trade agreements - motivation, implications, and recent trends. The costs and benefits from exporting for individual firms. Challenges and opportunities for national and multinational firms in the global economy.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/ CIPD) and MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Marketing and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available in the Michaelmas Term only.

Course content: This course seeks to understand individual attitudes and behaviour in an organisational context. Specifically, we primarily take a psychological perspective to understanding human behaviour at work by reviewing psychological theories as they apply to organisations and critically evaluating the associated empirical evidence.

Key topics include: personality and individual differences, work motivation, decision-making, rewards systems, leadership, group processes and organisational culture.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures and seminars. The course is demanding of students and its success depends partly upon student commitment and willingness to participate fully.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: The course relies heavily on journal articles (from, for example, Academy of Management Journal, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behavior). An extensive reading list is provided at the start of the course. No suitable textbook exists but students may wish to consult one of the following: Kolb, D. A., Osland, J. S., & Rubin, I. M. (2007). The Organizational Behavior Reader (8th ed.). Pearson. Porter, L. W., Bigley, G. A., & Steers, R. M. (2002). Motivation and work behavior (7th ed.). McGraw-Hill. Staw, B. M. (2004). Psychological dimensions of organizational behavior (3rd ed.), Prentice-Hall.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Information Technology and Service Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Sorensen

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is limited to 60 students.

Course content: The course aims to give the students theoretical and practical insights into the key issues informing the design of contemporary digital technology (IT). The course relates the diversity of the design challenges facing contemporary IT development. It embraces the shifting conditions for small teams of developers to design significant services in the context of technology-based startups, or as part of entrepreneurship within an existing enterprise or public institution. The design challenges relate to constantly shifting possibilities, for example, for the capture and processing of digital data previously beyond reach, the ability to leverage existing boundary resources (APIs, SDKs etc), and the expanding possibilities for reaching end-users in new ways. The course is constructed as the meeting of theory and practice. The former is constituted by the presentation and discussion of theoretical themes aimed at sharpening the student's ability to reason fundamentally about contemporary design challenges and opportunities. This aspect is also examined through an individual essay. The practical design skills are primarily honed through a group design project running throughout the course. Conducting this group design project will engage students in highly detailed and constructive design discussions leading to the submission of a designed IT artifact. The practical design skills sought practiced in the course are related to but largely independent from skills solely aimed at setting and analysing requirements on the one hand, and expressing the design through programming, on the other. The course, therefore neither requires, nor teaches detailed programming techniques, but instead focuses on teaching design skills through practices and to sensitise these design skills through the discussion of pertinent theoretical themes. These themes take their outset in the increasing complexity of designing IT artifacts as the granularity of technology and data capture is decreasing to enable increasing tracking of more and more granular aspects of human activities. These relate to a variety of personal-, local-, and global communications infrastructures, as well as a variety of possible multi-sided platforms, and software middleware layers enabling rapid prototyping of complex designs. Topics addressed will be: Digital infrastructure innovation; Digital platform strategies; Designing technology affordance diversity; Understanding technology performances; Individual interaction intimacy; Amplified teams; The technological organisation; Global crowd innovation with IT; Global technology innovation tussles; Business innovation with information technology; and decentralised consensus arrangements through blockchains. The weekly seminars will consist of presentations and discussions offering students opportunity to critically reflect on theoretical and pragmatic issues related to the subject matter of the course, such as; the IT artifact and ecosystem, the role of IT in business innovation, understanding the paradoxes of technology performances, intimate technology experiences, IT mediated team-working, the IT-enabled organisation, innovating global IT mediated crowds, innovation as organisational tussles, and the role of IT-based innovation for business development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. A reading week will take place in W6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around both the design group projects, as well as reading and discussing selected journal articles. Formative feedback is provided on class participation.

Assessment: Project (50%) and coursework (50%).

The course has two summative elements: an individual essay (50%), and from the group design project, a technical report and a separate submission of a designed artefact jointly comprise one summative component (50%).

MG4D2 Half Unit

International Employment Relations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Carola Frege - NAB 5.20

Dr Frido Wenton - NAB.4.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange and MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A general knowledge of the social sciences is required.

Course content: The course aims to provide an introduction to the comparative analysis of work and employment relations at national, firm and workplace level throughout the world. It will introduce the dynamics of employment relations across the increasingly global markets, the key concepts and topics surrounding it (such as employee voice, dignity of work, outsourcing, labour conflicts, labour productivity, skills), and the theories required to understand it. The strategies and policies of the main actors will be explored through cross-national comparative analysis. The course will also introduce the main 'models' of employment relations: the US/British, Japanese and European Social Models, as well as models of employment relations in the transitional economies.

The aim of the classes will be to provide an introduction to the comparative analysis of employment relations in a global world. It also ensures that students have both the conceptual and empirical grounding they need to take the options offered in international comparative human resource management and cross-cultural management.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures and seminars. Group working is an integral part of the course and students are expected to actively contribute to their class groups. The course is demanding of students and depends for its success partly upon their commitment and willingness to participate fully. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit an essay outline by the end of week 4, matching the topic of their first summative essay.

Indicative reading: C Frege & J Kelly (Eds) Comparative Employment Relations in the Global Economy, Routledge, 2013; G Bamber, R Lansbury & N Wailes (Eds), International and Comparative Employment Relations, 5th edn, Sage, 2011; R Hyman, Understanding European Trade Unionism: Between Market, Class and Society, Sage, 2001; M J Morley, P Gunnigle & DG Collings (Eds), Global Industrial Relations, Routledge, 2006.

Assessment: Essay (40%, 2500 words) in the MT.

Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the LT.

Class participation (10%).

The Dark Side of the Organisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Booth NAB4.20

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/CIPD), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management) and MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Introductory OB course required. MG4C2, MG434, MG105, or equivalent course in another institution. Students will be required to write a paragraph about their motivation for taking this course.

Course content: In this seminar, students will learn about a variety of topics related to the dark side of the organisation, (e.g. workplace aggression, retaliation, discrimination, substance abuse, corporate corruption, extreme stakeholder responses to organisations, and the dark side of impression management/emotional intelligence). In organisational behaviour courses, topics generally cover the 'light side' of the organisation and often explore how employee motivation and behaviour can promote beneficial outcomes for the organisation, as well as investigate the precursors to these more positive behaviours. However, not all workplace behaviours and outcomes are beneficial and positive for employees and their organisations. Dark side behaviours typically lead to negative outcomes. Those who engage in these negative behaviours generally are aware that their actions can cause harm to others, their employer, and/or to them; hence, the instigator usually has intent. It is imperative that we more fully understand these behaviours and their antecedents and consequences so that we can identify these behaviours, as well as control, prevent, mitigate, or ameliorate their occurrences.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Cross Cultural Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hyun-Jung Lee NAB4.12

Availability: This course is available on the MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/CIPD), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some background in psychology and organisational behaviour, and/or international business is useful, but not required.

Course content: The ability to communicate cross-culturally and to understand the diverse perspectives of people from different cultures is a necessity in order to achieve a competitive advantage in the global economy. The aims of the course are to understand the impact of culture on management; to identify the areas in which cultural differences pose challenges as well as opportunities in managing people across cultures; and, to become more self-aware of our cultural conditioning, individual biases and assumptions.

Topics include i) understanding my own and others' cultural conditioning, ii) analytical frameworks of cross-cultural comparisons, iii) multicultural teams, iv) managing global organisations, v) ethical dilemmas and global responsibility of multinational corporations, vi) cross-cultural communication and negotiation, vii) global leadership and cultural intelligence, viii) international assignments and global careers.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Experiential learning is emphasised and team working is an integral part of the course. The teaching is highly participative. Students will be asked to make presentations and participate in exercises. The course is demanding of students and success depends partly upon student commitment and willingness to participate fully. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: The following reading list contains some easily accessible introductory discussions. Most of the course reading is taken from journals. A full reading list will be issued at the start of the course. B. Gerhke and M-T. Claes (eds.) (2014), Global leadership practices: A cross cultural management perspective, Palgrave Macmillan. R. Assessment: Essay (50%), project (40%) and class participation (10%).

The essay is completed individually, and the project is completed as part of a group.

MG4D7 Half Unit

Dissertation: MSc MISDI

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: All members involved with MSc MISDI are involved in dissertation support.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of information systems. The dissertation is a quantitative or qualitative, theoretically informed, piece of research of IS-related questions. Students must obtain the approval of their advisor before embarking on any research. The course MG496 Study Skills and Research Methods and the course MY401 on research design provide guidance and background material on undertaking dissertation work.

Advisors will normally be allocated according to student dissertation proposals. The dissertation advisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research.

Referencing: Details on Group requirements for referencing and paraphrasing and the presentation of the dissertation are given during the MG496 Study Skills and Research Methods course. Students with any queries on this area should contact their dissertation advisor or the MSc Tutor.

Teaching: Teaching for the dissertation comprises two components: MY401: Research Design for Studies in Digital Innovation and MG496: Study Skills and Research Methods. Students must follow both of these courses.

Formative coursework: Students will present their research question, conceptual framework and research design. They will receive feedback from their supervisor and fellow peers.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 8000 words) post-summer term. Two paper copies of the dissertation must be handed in on a specified date in late August. An electronic version of the dissertation must also be submitted. Penalties will be applied to any late submission. The word limit for the dissertation is 8000 words. The dissertation is critical to assessment on the programme.

Marketing Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Haider Ali

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange) and MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is a rigorous examination of the key analytical frameworks, technical tools, and concepts that are essential in building an effective marketing strategy. Participants are introduced to the subject at both strategic and operational levels. This course combines LSE's premier standing in the social sciences with cutting-edge management practices. By using a wide range of concepts, interactive lectures, videos, hands-on exercises, and case studies, we will share key analytical frameworks and tools that are essential to a good marketing strategy. The aim is to develop a widely applicable analytical tool-kit that relies on: (a) anticipating decisions that managers frequently face, (b) bringing to bear a wide range of fundamental, often competing social science theories to inform these decisions, (c) knowledge about empirical generalizations, and (d) knowledge about moderating conditions. Also, emphasis is placed on the use of case studies to develop participant's skills at analysing and making sense of complex real world business situations.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Course instruction will be conducted using lectures, case discussions, readings, and analysis of data sets.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

The formative will be an in-depth case analysis, with two components to it. One component will help prepare participants for the Marketing Project (i.e., more conceptual applications, using social science theories and frameworks to make sense of real-life "messy" cases), and the other component will help prepare participants for the Final Exam (i.e., application of theoretical as well as more analytical frameworks and data analysis that has a more clear pattern of right or wrong answers).

Business Fundamentals

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB 5.13 and Prof Om Narasimhan NAB 5.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Marketing. This course is not available as an outside option. This is a non-assessed introductory course.

Course content: The aim of the introductory Core is to deliver some critical business prerequisites to incoming MSc Marketing students. Broadly, there will be four kinds of course materials covered during these two weeks: (1) Some modules are intended to strengthen participants' analytical skills. These modules comprise sessions on microeconomics/business economics that enables participants to analyze firms and markets in more depth, and sessions that impart basic knowledge in analytics/statistics that is becoming absolutely essential in the current age of Big Data; (2) Some other modules will expose participants to the fundamentals of other functional areas like Accounting, Finance, & Controls, Leadership, Organizational Behavior, and Team Building; (3) Some modules will look deeper into one of the fundamental skills that marketing managers try to hone—understanding and eliciting consumer insights; and finally, (4) The remaining modules will assist in career planning, coaching for marketing problem solving (e.g., as is common in consulting and/or case study-based interviews), with a broad understanding of the numerous options for internships, employment, companies, functions, and roles.

Teaching: 20 hours of teaching over two weeks prior to the Michaelmas Term. Full details of this will be sent to offer holders as part of their offer pack. The schedule will also include a full programme of activities and talks designed to welcome you to the LSE and the MSc Marketing programme.

Formative coursework: No formal assessment.

Marketing Analytics I: Consumer Analysis Fundamentals

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Smith

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Marketing. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites:

Completion of the MSc in Marketing pre-session course, MG4E7 Business Fundamentals.

Course content: This course lays down the foundations of Marketing Analytics which is an absolute essential in the age of Big Data. The broad objective of this course is to provide a fundamental understanding of marketing analytics and research methods employed by well-managed firms. The course focuses on integrating problem formulation, research design, questionnaire construction, sampling, data collection and data analysis to yield the most valuable information. The course also examines the proper use of statistical applications as well as qualitative methods, with an emphasis on the interpretation and use of results. Since analytics is the discovery and communication of meaningful patterns in data, this course will also provide students with an analytics toolkit, reinforcing basic probability and statistics while throughout emphasizing the value and pitfalls of reasoning with data. Applications will focus on connections among analytical tools, data, and business decision-making. Advanced analytical tools will be discussed in-depth in the follow-up course Marketing Analytics II.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the MT.

Indicative reading:

MG4F1 Half Unit

Marketing Action Learning Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB 5.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Marketing. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Completion of the MSc in Marketing pre-session course, MG4E7 Business Fundamentals.

Course content: For the Marketing Project, each team selects a target issue for an organization and uses the marketing techniques developed in the course to arrive at a recommendation. The Marketing Project is aimed at producing an in-depth report that provides two critical classes of information: (a) Section 1 tells us how a "live" business is being run and what makes it tick (or not) from a marketing value-creation point of view, and (b) Section 2 provides data-based, scientific analysis of what the firm could do better for a more sustainable and competitive future.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the LT.

One formal lecture, plus individual appointments through LT and ST with groups to discuss their chosen projects.

Indicative reading:

- Building a Marketing Plan, by Ho Yin Wong; Kylie Radel; Roshnee Ramsaran-Fowda, Harvard Business School Publishing.
- Writing Great Marketing Plans, 2005, by T. Caulkins, Kellogg's/ Northwestern University.
- The Marketing Plan Handbook Paperback – 1 Sep 2011 by Alexander Chernev

Assessment: Project (95%) in August.

Class participation (5%) in the LT and ST.

Students will undertake a peer review providing feedback on the other members of their project group.

Marketing Analytics II: Analytics for Managing Innovations, Products and Brands

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Om Narasimhan NAB.5.06

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Marketing and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Marketing managers make ongoing decisions about product features, prices, advertising (online and offline), distribution, sales compensation plans, and so on. In making these decisions, managers choose from among alternative courses of action in a complex and uncertain world. Increasingly, in this age of Big Data, companies that emerge as market leaders tend to be the ones that employ sophisticated Marketing Analytics. This sequel course in Marketing Analytics will entail a deep-dive into the state-of-the-art Marketing Analytics models that allow managers to make scientific decisions regarding launching new products or innovations and managing more mature products and brands. This course will focus upon the use of cutting-edge data analytic techniques to understand and inform managerial decision making with a primary focus on the formulation of dynamic marketing policies. The course is structured to enable the student to gain familiarity with techniques for scraping the web for data, sentiment analysis, multivariate regression, discrete choice modelling, probability models for customer management, causal inference through A/B testing, classification and regression trees, and introductory machine learning.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be engaged in analysing a number of data sets using the techniques learned in class. This will set the stage for their group project (gathering and analysing data) as well as the take-home assignment (which will involve analysing data sets given to them).

Indicative reading:

New Media Marketing: Managing Online and Social Media

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mareike Möhlmann

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Marketing and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: For MSc in Marketing students - completion of the first term of the programme.

For non-MSc in Marketing students - completion of either MG4B3 International Marketing: A Strategic Approach or MG4E2 Marketing Management.

Students taking this course are expected to be able to demonstrate a strong foundation in quantitative analysis.

Course content: Marketing is evolving from an art to a science and decisions in new media are on the forefront of this transformation. This course is aimed at developing state-of-the-art knowledge in the area of online marketing (e.g., display ads and search ads, SEO, mobile marketing etc.) and social media (e.g., Twitter, Facebook, etc.). Furthermore, important topics of cross-cutting relevance to online marketing and social media will be addressed, including big data, data science, analytics, and integrative marketing. Many firms have extensive information about consumers' choices and how they react to marketing campaigns, but few firms have the expertise to intelligently act on such information. In this course, students will learn the scientific and strategic approach to marketing with hands-on implementation of online marketing and social media strategies (e.g., strategic design and launch of a website, implementation of SEO strategies, design and manage of a corporate social media account). Using simple yet powerful hands-on interactive models and exercises, the course will cover both theory and applications.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students have the opportunity to submit a formative coursework in the LT. The formative course work might be an in-depth case analysis of a new media company. Students might be requested to use theory and frameworks to make sense of a case. Students might also be requested reflect on analytics and conduct simple data analysis.

Indicative reading: Larsen and Draper (2015): Internet Marketing Essentials, Digital Textbook. Chaffey, D. and Ellis-Chadwick, F. (2012): Digital Marketing. Strategy, Implementation, and Practice. More readings in form of academic research papers and media outlets (e. g., The Economist) will be added for each week.

Assessment: Other (50%), other (40%) and class participation (10%) in the LT.

Individual Take Home Assignment (50%, end of LT). You will be expected to write an essay. You will have one week to complete your assignment. The essay questions will be made available at the end of the term. Group Project (40%, assessed presentation, in the LT)

Class participation (10%)

MG4F4 Half Unit

Strategy and Innovation in a Global Context

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lourdes Sosa NAB 5.19

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course focuses on understanding the drivers of differences in profitability among firms in our economy, both in the short and long term. The overarching teaching objective is to learn to design managerial recommendations that can help a firm improve and defend its competitive advantage both immediately and for its future. Consequently, the course's topics are in a necessary sequence moving from short-term concepts such as industry factors to long-term concepts such as disruptive innovation.

A suggested list of topics to be covered by lecture is as follows:

1. Introduction and the Concept of Business Model
2. Average Industry Profitability and Competition
3. Value Proposition and Strategic Resources
4. Cumulative Resources and Internal Organization
5. The Effect of Innovation on Competition and the Concept of Value Innovation
6. Disruptive Innovation and Competence Destruction
7. The Concept of Value Chain and Business Model Innovation
8. Organizational Ambidexterity and Dynamic Capabilities
9. Organizational Complexity and Strategy as "Simple Rules"
10. Fundamentals of Corporate Strategy and Final Remarks

This course provides an introduction to strategic analysis aiming to explain the design of managerial recommendations to improve and defend the competitive advantage of a firm both immediately (cross-sectional analysis) and in the future (longitudinal analysis). It requires significant use of analytical reasoning as well as the ability to switch between considering the big picture and the fine-grained detail. A key step for the learning objectives of the course is the completion of a 1-week trip to an economy where students will be able to see strategy in the making in its full natural context.

Teaching: 10 x 180 minute seminars in the period after exams and summer term plus a week study trip abroad.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in July.

Indicative reading:

5. Winter, S.G. 2003. Understanding Dynamic Capabilities. Strategic Management Journal.

Assessment: Essay (90%, 2000 words) post-summer term. Class participation (10%) in the ST.

This course is assessed on a report that makes use of the concepts from the course and their application illustrated in the international trip. Details will be discussed during lectures.

Business in the Global Environment

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veronica Rappoport-Redondo NAB 5.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: In this course we study two key components of the process called 'globalisation'. First, we consider the negotiation, implementation and implications of international trade agreements. These include the World Trade Organisation and the fast-growing web of regional trade agreements. Second, we look at the process of globalisation at the level of industries, firms and nations. We seek a solid understanding of the external, economy-wide factors that affect the performance and management of firms in today's global economy. The course relies on recent theoretical and empirical research. Topics include the changing structure of industries, the response of companies, both those based in the advanced industrial countries and those based in emerging markets, to increasing international competition; and the differences between countries in their institutions and policies.

Course topics:

- 1) Globalisation: trends in the global economy, overview of their causes and effects
- 2) The workings, accomplishments and shortcomings of the GATT/WTO system
- 3) Trade barriers: causes and consequences of restrictions to international trade
- 4) The economics and politics of international trade agreements
- 5) Implications of trade agreements for national and multinational firms
- 6) Location of Production: Theory of Comparative Advantages
- 7) Location of Production: Factor Endowments across countries
- 8) Location of Production: Testing empirically the predictions of the theory
- 9) Location of Production: Empirical Analysis, institutions as a source of competitive advantage
- 10) Foreign Direct Investment and International Contracts

Teaching: 10 x 180 minute seminars in the period after exams and summer term

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in July.

Indicative reading: Giorgio Barba Navaretti & Anthony J Venables, Multinational Firms in the World Economy, Princeton, 2004. Assessment: Continuous assessment (15%), research project (20%), research project (20%) and in class assessment (45%) in the ST.

The in-class assessment will be run under exam conditions and it will take place at the end of the course.

The two projects will be group projects based on the core syllabus.

Leadership in Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Dan White

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

This is a core, non-assessed module in the summer.

Course content: This is a leadership development course intended to build specific skills required by leaders in organisations. Each session of this course will focus on a different skill, including coaching, team leadership, performance management, presentation skills, upward management, giving and receiving feedback, and facilitating creativity. The instructor will provide a framework for learning the skill, then students will engage in interactive exercises to practice the skill and give each other feedback. By the end of the course, students will have acquired a set of leadership skills along with individual feedback from their peers that helps them gauge how well they have learned those skills.

Teaching: 6 x 180 minute seminars in the period after exams and summer term.

Formative coursework: Students will practice the leadership skills in class and receive feedback from their peers and the instructor. They will keep a learning log and use that information to complete a personal development plan (PDP) at the end of the course.

Indicative reading: There is no required textbook for this course.

For students who are interested, a recommended textbook is: Yukl, G.A. (2012) Leadership in Organizations, 8th ed. Essex: Pearson Education Limited.

Assessment:

This is a non-assessed course.

MG4F7 Half Unit Business Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Noam Yuchtman

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is designed to achieve an understanding of fundamental notions of data presentation and data analysis and to use statistical thinking in the context of business problems. The course deals with modern methods of data exploration (designed to reveal unusual or problematic aspects of databases), the uses and abuses of the basic techniques of inference, and the use of regression as a tool for management and for financial analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in the MT.

The formative will be an in-depth coursework, with two components to it. One component will help prepare participants for the Project (i.e., an application of a statistical technique to solve a company problem or research question), and the other component will help prepare participants for the Final Exam (i.e., a small problem set on which they will be tested).

Indicative reading:

- Basic Econometrics, Oct 8, 2008 by Damodar Gujarati and Dawn Porter
- Multivariate Data Analysis (7th Edition), Joseph F. Hair Ronald L. Tatham Rolph E. Anderson William Black

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (35%, 3000 words) and class participation (15%) in the MT. The coursework will be due in week 10 of MT

MG4F8 Half Unit Managerial Economics and Quantitative Measurement for Social Entrepreneurs

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB 4.24 and Dr Yally Avrahampour NAB 4.37

Professor Saul Estrin - Managerial Economics

Dr Yally Avrahampour - Quantitative Measurement

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course comprises an Economics and Accounting stream.

A: Managerial Economics

The course will start with an introduction to economics for social entrepreneurs, with attention focused on markets and market failures, notably externalities and public goods. Questions of social welfare and income inequality will also be discussed. We then move to a series of economics topics of particular relevance in analysing the problems of social entrepreneurs, namely the representation and analysis of firm costs, revenues and profits; measures of efficiency and company performance; analysis of consumer demand and finally firm strategy.

B: Quantitative Measurement

The course will continue by introducing topics relating to the measurement and disclosure of information regarding the performance of the social enterprise. We will introduce techniques used to measure and monetize social impact, adopted by performance measures such as Social Return on Investment (SROI). We will critically assess the SROI performance measure by introducing topics such as investment appraisal, costing and performance measurement. We will also consider alternative performance measures to SROI.

Course Objectives

Students should learn:

- Key theoretical approaches in two streams, namely, economics and accounting, which includes related quantitative methods, to understanding social innovation and entrepreneurship;
- Empirical findings - typically from recent economics, accounting and management research.
- The most important economic, accounting and quantitative/statistical insights, concepts, theoretical approaches required to set-up, manage, and scale up social innovation and enterprises;
- To relate theoretical and methodological insights, concepts and frameworks for social innovation and enterprise to real world phenomena and social problems through the use of case studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Theoretical material and analytical frameworks from accounting and economics respectively of relevance to social entrepreneurs will be taught in the lecture slots, while the seminars will cover a relevant case study each week. Although the course covers two distinct disciplines, there will be an effort, where possible, to treat the issues in an integrated manner.

In addition students are expected to attend:

- Two introductory sessions, for the quantitative measurement part of the course, each lasting two hours
- An exam revision session in ST

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

The formative essay is a voluntary 'pre-run' of the examination questions, where the academic insights of the course are combined and synthesised with new insights sourced from academic literature by the student. Students receive feedback on their formative essay.

Indicative reading: Each week we draw on a variety of required and further readings. We also make suggestions regarding textbooks that provide background for the concepts outlined in the course.

For Quantitative Measurement the textbooks representing these background readings are:

Weetman, P. (2013) Financial Accounting: An Introduction.

(Available as an e-book through the LSE library). Kaplan, R. &

Atkinson, A. (2014) Advanced Management Accounting 3rd edition.

The following books provide an introduction to accounting for social entrepreneurship and social accounting:

Barman, E. (2016) Caring Capitalism: The Meaning and Measure of Social Value. Epstein, M. & Yuthas, K. (2014) Measuring and Improving Social Impacts: A Guide for Nonprofits, Companies and Impact Investors. Mook, L., Quarter, J. & Richmond, B. (2007) What

Counts: Social Accounting for Non-profits and Cooperatives

For Managerial Economics, people without an economics background might start with the textbook by D.Begg, G. Vernasca, Fischer, Dornbusch (11th Edition) Economics, McGraw Hill. A more advanced treatment is contained in S. Estrin, D. Laidler and M. Dietrich, Microeconomics (5th Edition), Pearson.

Introductory Reading

There are also a number of books that inform the field, that students might wish to read in advance or during the course as background material.

A. Sen, 2009, The Idea of Justice, Harvard University Press

A.V. Banerjee and E. Duflo, 2011, Poor Economics, BBS Publications

R.L. Martin and S.R. Osberg, 2015, Going Beyond Better, Harvard Business Review Press

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Class participation (10%) in the LT.

MG4F9 Half Unit

Organisational Behaviour and Marketing for Social Entrepreneurs

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Haider Ali and Dr Uta Bindl

Dr Haider Ali - Marketing

Dr Uta Bindl - Organisational Behaviour

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is a rigorous examination of key insights, concepts and theoretical frameworks that are essential in understanding social innovation and enterprises from the perspectives of Marketing and Organisational Behaviour (OB). Students learn to understand, synthesise and relate these insights, concepts and theoretical frameworks to real-life phenomena and problems through interactive lectures, cases, empirical studies and videos. In a very practical sense, students will test this knowledge in a group marketing project as well as will apply it to effecting social change in relation to such topics as motivation, team management, and organizational culture, in the OB portion of the course.

More specifically, students learn:

- Key theoretical approaches (through the lenses of organisational behaviour and marketing) to understanding social innovations and entrepreneurship;
- Empirical findings - typically from recent management research and related fields; this is a young field - on how Marketing and OB aspects of social innovations and enterprises are associated with social impact;
- A rigorous synthesis of the most important marketing and organisational behaviour insights, concepts, theoretical approaches to set-up, manage, and scale up social innovation and enterprises;
- Relating theoretical and methodological insights, concepts and frameworks for social innovation and enterprise to real world phenomena and social problems, through a group project (in Marketing), as well as through applied case-related individual essays (in OB);
- Also importantly this course provides essential knowledge for the individual design or consulting projects on actual management problems for social innovation and enterprise in the capstone/ dissertation course.

This course comprises a Marketing and Organisational Behaviour stream.

A: Marketing

- Application of marketing concepts to social enterprises
- Evaluating stakeholder exchanges
- Attitudes, beliefs & values; models of buyer behaviour
- Segmentation, targeting and positioning strategy for ventures
- Developing a product & promotion strategy

B: Organisational Behaviour

- Personality and Individual Differences

- Motivation and Rewards
- Organisational Culture, Ideological Currency & Making a difference
- Well-being at Work
- Leadership and Self-Initiative

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 3 hours of workshops in the MT.

Five weeks (15hrs) will focus on Marketing and five weeks (15hrs) will focus on core insights from Organisational Behaviour, with the aim of imparting key managerial knowledge and skills required to catalyse the changes required to launch and lead successful entrepreneurial ventures in social innovation. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The topic of the formative essay will be based on the Marketing section of the course.

Assessment: Project (45%, 2500 words) and class participation (10%) in the MT.

Essay (45%, 2000 words) in the LT.

MG4G1 Half Unit

Understanding Social Problems for Innovation and Entrepreneurship

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Harm Barkema NAB 4.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A key insight of social innovation and enterprise is that the type of management solution (unlike traditional management solutions) depends entirely on – and varies with – the type of social problem at hand. Hence, social innovation and enterprise starts with understanding the social problem it seeks to address. This course starts with a rigorous examination of key insights, concepts and theoretical frameworks (economic, psychological, sociological perspectives) that are essential in understanding social problems for social innovation. Applied to globally identified core challenges: the Sustainable Development Goals (on poverty, health, education, and the natural environment). The theory will be taught through interactive lectures, FB discussions where students post and discuss new contributions, cases, empirical studies, and so on.

Next, the course continues with classes teaching (qualitative) methodologies, methods and tools, which are applied by student teams to a real-life case/problem in one of the SDG domains in an emerging economy and presented and discussed in class as a pedagogical device. Students go over in the reading week for actual field work and data collection (i.e., roughly half of the team; the other half will go over in the Lent Term for additional field work and data collection, as part of the Social Design course, MG4G2). Finally, we will have integration classes, where student teams synthesize and further apply theory (insights, concepts, frameworks) and methodology (methods, tools) to their real-life case/problem and develop an initial proposal for social innovation and enterprise, anchored in an evidence-based understanding of the relevant social problem, to be presented and discussed in class, for feedback.

During the course, students will also be introduced to core ideas and insights about the social entrepreneur's 'learning journey' towards achieving major social impact.

More specifically, students learn:

- Key theoretical approaches (economic, psychological, sociological) to understanding social problems underlying social innovation and entrepreneurship;
- How to apply these core theoretical approaches to a broad but important class of real life challenges, as addressed by the Sustainable Development Goals;
- Empirical findings – from social science research – on how social problems differ across contexts (cultural, economic, sociological, political); Core methodological approaches (methods and tools of qualitative analysis) to analyse real-life social problems; Synthesizing and relating theoretical and methodological insights, concepts, and frameworks, to understanding social problems, as applied to a real-life case;
- More fundamentally, learning how and why management solutions in the domain of social innovations and social enterprise are not generic but always 'contextualized,' and depend on the specific social problem, and how core theoretical approaches and methodologies can be used to develop an evidence-based understanding of the local social problem at hand, as a starting point for designing social innovations and enterprises (developed further in MG4G2 Social Innovation Design).
- Core insights regarding the social entrepreneur's learning journey towards major social impact: learning from successes but also from failures (how, why, and when: under which conditions), learning from others (vicarious learning), and so on.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. In addition to 15hrs of lectures and 15hrs of seminars of standard teaching, students will attend a 3hr group dynamics workshop.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

MG4G2 Half Unit

Social Innovation Design

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Harm Barkema NAB 4.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course provides a rigorous overview of insights, concepts, frameworks, methods, tools and evidence for social innovation design. The pedagogy implies interactive class and FB discussions (with other students and our social innovation and enterprise alumni), cases, and most importantly, applying and synthesizing insights and relating them to real life social (or environmental) problems by designing a new social enterprise, with your group. This course – in the Lent term – directly builds on the MT courses MG4G1 Understanding Social Problems for Innovation and Entrepreneurship. The course will have the same student teams as in MG4G1 Understanding Social Problems for Innovation and Entrepreneurship that culminated in developing an actual, initial idea/ proposal for problem-based intervention, based on an in-depth understanding of a key social problem. This proposed idea is the starting point for the management design project in this course. Student teams also present parts of their social design in class at subsequent stages, for feedback. As part of their evidence-based design, students will have the opportunity to go over for field work and data collection (i.e., those students who did not go on the first field trip in MG4G1).

More specifically, students learn:

- Key theoretical approaches (insights, concepts, methodologies/ frameworks, tools) related to social and economic goals, value propositions, revenue models, partners/alliances/ ecosystems, own organizational characteristics) for designing innovative social organizations for major social impact;
- Empirical findings and evidence-based insights – typically from recent management research and related fields; this is a young field – on social implications of a variety of social innovation designs; moderators; how these implications differ across contexts (cultural, economic, sociological, political);
- A rigorous framework synthesizing insights, concepts, methodologies/frameworks, and tools for social innovation design, including for extreme affordability (based on the course material developed at the LSE over the past ten years in MG437 and MG438, and other LSE courses);
- Synthesizing and relating theoretical and methodological insights, concepts, and frameworks for social innovation and enterprise to real world phenomena and problems, by designing an actual social enterprise;
- How social innovation designs are contingent – and can vary strongly – depending on the identified social problem.
- How to scale up your social enterprise for major social impact.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. In addition to 15hrs of lectures and 15hrs of seminars of standard teaching, students will attend a 3hr group dynamics workshop.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

MG4G7 Half Unit

Contemporary Topics in Advanced Technology Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Edgar Whitley NAB 3.32

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society) and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: This course has a strong management focus and assumes a general knowledge of information systems and their management equivalent to MG472 Global Strategy, Management and Information Systems.

Course content: This course introduces students to two Contemporary Topics in Advanced Technology Management. It uses academic perspectives on the topics to provide a detailed contextualisation of technology's historical and intellectual development and combines this with practitioner perspectives to highlight the management challenges associated with these technological developments.

The topics are expected to be Artificial intelligence and Machine learning and Financial Technologies including Open Banking, Distributed Ledgers and Blockchains.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. Lecture durations vary by week and a detailed schedule is available on Moodle.

A reading week will take place during Week 6. There will be no teaching during this week.

Formative coursework: Students will be present two draft presentations and evolving essay plans in the LT.

Indicative reading: The reading list will be technology specific, and determined by the guest academics. As such, they are likely to vary from year to year. Detailed readings will be made available on Moodle.

Human Resource Management Skills and Practitioner Speaker Series

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Juan Lopez-Cotarelo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Human Resource Management/ CIPD). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course has a taught component, which is compulsory for all students in the stream, and a free-configuration component where students can choose among a variety of sessions that target specific skill development needs they have identified through their Skills Development Portfolio. There is also a Group Project that runs between weeks 2 and 5 in MT.

Group project

The group project is intended to build skills that will be useful in the workplace: the ability to work in culturally-diverse teams, think critically about a work-related issue, and make realistic and achievable recommendations. These are relevant to several of the 7SBL learning outcomes, and will therefore contribute to your Skills Development Portfolio. The group project is assessed through a group submission due in week 5, and an individual reflective statement due in week 7. Additionally, there will be a peer assessment survey where students can provide feedback to their fellow team members on their team working skills. All details, including team allocations and the project brief will be disclosed during a compulsory project launch session in week 2.

Taught sessions

There are six 2-hour weekly sessions during Michaelmas Term (weeks 5 and 7-11). A prospective list of topics includes the following: Evaluating and Costing HR initiatives, Project Management for HRM, Diversity and Inclusion Management, Selection Interviewing, Difficult Conversations, and Ethics in HRM.

Skills Development Portfolio

Students will plan their own individualised skills development, including the MG4G8 free-configuration sessions, through the Skills Development Portfolio. The aim of this tool is to help each student identify gaps in their general and HRM management skills (as defined in CIPD's 7SBL module), plan for their development during their studies, and document achievements and newly developed skills at the end of the programme. Two submissions are required:

- A self-assessment and development plan, due in MT week 7 (formative).
- A portfolio documenting skill development and attainment, due in September 2018 (summative).

Free-configuration sessions

Students will be able to attend their choice of sessions within the HRO Practitioner Panel series and LSE LIFE workshops to suit their development needs. Attendance to a minimum of 15 hours between the two is required.

- HRO Practitioner Panel Series: The HRO team will arrange 5 sessions with external speakers on topics that are relevant to our subject. These will be 2-hour evening sessions, and will run during LT. A prospective programme will be announced in MT, and detailed arrangements publicised in due course.
- LSE LIFE workshops: LSE LIFE runs a broad range of 1-hour and 2-hour workshops on many topics that are relevant to the 7SBL module. Many of these sessions are run several times during MT and LT. Students will need to book a place in the relevant sessions themselves.

External activities

Where appropriate, students may apply to receive credit for attending an external session that is relevant to the 7SBL module and conducive to significant skill attainment. The decision to grant such credit will remain fully at the discretion of the MG4G8 Course Leader and the HRO Programme Director, so students will be strongly advised to make their application before enrolment. No individual student will receive credit for external activities for more than 20% of the free-configuration requirement (i.e. 3 hours). We will not offer to fund external activities.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures in the MT. 10 hours of lectures in the LT.

Please note that the LT sessions will take the form of a Practitioner Panel Series.

Formative coursework: Students will receive written formative feedback on two pieces of work:

1. Students will be set in groups of about 5 to work on an applied HRM problem. Each group will submit a short presentation with their analysis and recommendations due at the end of MT Week 5, for which formative feedback will be provided. Additionally, students will be asked to provide anonymous written feedback to their team peers.
2. Students will submit Sections 1 and 2 of the Skills Development Portfolio (Self-Assessment and Development Plan), due in MT Week 7. Formative feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: N/A (this is a practical skills course)

Assessment: The course is not formally assessed as part of the MSc Human Resources and Organisations. However, a pass is needed on the summative submission of the Skills Development Portfolio, due in September, for attaining CIPD accreditation.

Topics in Management Research

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Diane Reyniers NAB5.22

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Economics and Management and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students must have prior knowledge of microeconomics and econometrics.

Pre-requisites: Microeconomics and econometrics (equivalent to LSE UG courses MG207 and MG205).

Course content: This course addresses various topics in management research which will be used to encourage creative and logical thinking, structuring of clear arguments and critical assessment of evidence. The focus is on interpretation of findings rather than statistical or econometric techniques.

The intellectual backbone of the course is applied and empirical economics (including behavioural economics) and finance but wherever appropriate contributions from the psychology, sociology and management literature will be discussed. We will mainly deal with issues which are amenable to rigorous empirical investigation. The course is designed around a set of empirical research papers.

Examples of questions considered are whether pain killers are more effective when they are expensive, whether creative people cheat more, whether steeper incentives lead to better performance. The main objective of the course is to enable students to comprehend and critically assess the literature on selected management topics, to evaluate statements in terms of evidence and to detect false reasoning or logic.

Topics vary each year (based on student feedback) but examples are Racial discrimination, Negotiation, the IKEA effect, Placebo effects of price, Leadership.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with Departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Two mock exams in the MT.

Indicative reading: A course pack containing all materials (lecture slides, articles, seminar sheets) will be available to students taking the course. The following readings are indicative only as topics vary:

Lecture 1: The IKEA effect and ideas

Hooshangi, S. & G. Loewenstein (2016) The impact of idea generation and potential appropriation on entrepreneurship: an experimental study. Management Science.

Lecture 2: Choking

Introduction to Mathematics and Data Analysis for Managers

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ricardo Alonso NAB 5.31

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is divided into two separate subjects: Data Analysis (Statistics) and Mathematics for Managers.

The Data Analysis (Statistics) course is for all students and covers basic probability and statistics; hypothesis testing; analysis of variance; association, correlation and regression. It also includes basic training on data analysis software (STATA). It provides students with the basic analytical tools required in MG4F7 Business Analysis to analyse business data for decision making.

The Mathematics for Managers course is an introductory mathematics course which covers the following topics with application reference to economics and business: Functions, Linear Equations, Basic Calculus, and Comparative Statics Analysis. It provides students with the basic analytical tools required in MG465 Operations and Managerial Economics to analyse supply chain models and models of product market and factor markets competition.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the two weeks prior to the Michaelmas Term. There will also be some workshops and tutorial sessions for the statistics portion of the course, to support students preparing practical exercises. Rounding out the schedule is a full programme of talks and activities designed to smooth your transition to postgraduate study at LSE.

Indicative reading: Statistics: Statistics: Anderson, D., Sweeney, D., Williams, T., Freeman, J., Shoesmith, E. (2009). Statistics for Business and Economics (2nd edition), Hampshire: Cengage Learning. Huff (1991). How to Lie with Statistics. Penguin. Quantitative Skills: Hammond, P. and Sydsaeter, K. (2002). Essential Mathematics for Economic Analysis. Prentice Hall; and Jacques, I. (2010). Mathematics for Economics and Business. (7th edition), Pearson. Writing skills: Wallace, M. and Wray, A. (2011). Critical Reading and Writing for Undergraduates (2nd edition), London: Sage.

Assessment: No formal assessment. Students will sit a mock exam at the end of the statistics course based upon the material to aid learning.

MY400 Half Unit

Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Benjamin Lauderdale COL8.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods, MPhil/PhD in Sociology, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Research students please see MY500.

Course content: Research design necessitates trade-offs between the strengths and weaknesses of different feasible options. This course aims to introduce the broad range of design options and to foster an appreciation of these alternatives for particular research objectives. Drawing on a variety of examples from the social scientific literature, this course will explore design considerations and options across quantitative and qualitative research, including issues of data quality, analysis, reporting and reproducibility. At the end of the course, students will be able to read a wide variety of empirical social science with a critical and balanced perspective and will be better equipped to implement and make arguments defending the methods they use in their dissertations.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT.

Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their first assignment.

Indicative reading: Robson, Colin and McCartan, Kieran (2015, 4th edition). Real World Research. London: John Wiley.

Assessment: Research proposal (30%) and class participation (10%) in the MT.

Other (60%) in the ST.

Research Proposal assignment (1500 words), submitted in week 11 of MT (30%). Research Design (4000 words), submitted in Week 1 of ST (60%).

Research Design for Studies in Digital Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chrisanthi Avgerou NAB 3.22 and Dr Eleanor Power COL7.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation.

Course content: This course will deliver the core methodological training for students completing a dissertation for the MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation. It covers issues of research design and research methods for information systems studies, including sessions on the collection and analysis of both qualitative and quantitative data. Lectures will introduce the principles of a range of research design issues and methodological approaches, while classes will contextualise this teaching in relation to information systems research. Drawing on a variety of examples in Information Systems, the course will provide the platform for students to consider a range of design options, as well as methodological techniques, to adopt in their own dissertations. By the end of the course, students will be familiar with a range of research design options and will be better equipped to not only design, but also to collect and analyse data for, their own dissertations.

The list of topics covered would consist of:

1. Introduction
2. Inference, causation, and treatment controls
3. Relationship between theory and data
4. Operationalization and measurement
5. Overview of Fixed versus flexible designs (survey of qualitative and quantitative strategies)
6. READING WEEK
7. Case study methods
8. Interviews and focus groups
9. Thematic analysis
10. Quantitative inference
11. The Analysis of Online and social media

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

Students will also be encouraged to attend additional non-compulsory workshops in LT which will offer more specific advice for their research proposals.

Lectures for this course will be delivered by staff by the Department of Methodology. To help to contextualise the materials covered in the course for the students, and to ensure a good fit with the requirements of the MISDI dissertation, the seminars will be led by staff from the Department of Management.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

A formative assignment will be assigned for the middle of the teaching term (LT) for which students will be expected to submit a 1,000 word initial proposal for their dissertation.

Indicative reading: Agresti, A. and Finlay, B. (2009) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences [4th edition]. Prentice Hall. Bauer, M. and Gaskell, G. Research Methods for Evaluation in Health, Development and Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Hendry COL7.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Marketing and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some familiarity with qualitative research methods is expected. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the methodological knowledge and research skills to be able to design and critically appraise evaluation research. In the context of the rise of evidence-based policy, the course is designed to extend students' abilities to use evaluative information carefully and critically. The course takes a mixed methods approach. It covers the major quantitative designs, including randomized experiments and observational (i.e. non-randomized) research designs such as selection on observables, difference-in-differences, and the regression discontinuity design. It covers qualitative and participatory research designs and their contribution to formative research, process evaluation, process evaluations, interpreting outcomes, and assessing transferability to other settings. As well as the major design issues, the course addresses practical and ethical issues of evaluation research, how to write a study protocol, and how to draw lessons from a body of evidence through reviewing and synthesising evidence. Examples from the fields of health, international development and public policy will be used throughout the lectures and seminars.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

10 x 1.5 hour lectures

9 x 1.5 hour seminars

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students write a critical review (1,500 words) of a published evaluation report.

Indicative reading: Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J-S. (2014) Mastering Metrics: The Path from Cause to Effect. Princeton University Press. Bell, S. & Aggleton, P. (2013) Running Randomized Evaluations: A Practical Guide, Princeton University Press. Patton, M. Q. (2015). Qualitative Research and Evaluation Methods. (4th Edition). London: Sage.

Assessment: Coursework (50%, 2500 words) in the LT.

Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.

50% group-based coursework. Students work in groups to develop an evaluation design, and write it up individually (2,500 words).

50% essay. Students are given a choice of essay questions, in response to which they write one essay (2,500 words).

Fundamentals of Research Design for International Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09 and Dr Diana Weinhold CON7.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is compulsory for all MSc students in International Development.

Pre-requisites: No prerequisites are required.

Course content: This course introduces MSc students in the Department of International Development to theoretical and practical foundations of social science research design. It is neither qualitative nor quantitative in focus, but rather is concerned with core interdisciplinary principles of research design that span disciplinary and methodological traditions.

Grounded in examples from International Development research, the logic of the course is to start with principles of research design for narrowly-defined questions. As the course proceeds we then build from these foundations to consider design approaches for ever more broadly-defined questions. Each week we expand the scope of inquiry, considering increasingly flexible and exploratory research designs and "bottom-up" approaches to research and theory.

The course will provide a platform for students to consider a range of research design options, as well as methodological techniques, to adopt in their own dissertations. By the end of the course, students will be familiar with a variety of research design options and will be better equipped to embark on their own research projects. The course is not designed to provide students with all the skills and techniques they need, i.e. it is not an explicitly "methodology" course, but it will familiarize students with the trade-offs involved in adopting particular approaches and incorporating various forms of evidence and information into their dissertations. In doing so, it should also help students become more informed consumers of research, and thus make positive contributions to students' learning experience in other courses they take in ID (and elsewhere at LSE).

The teaching on the course is premised on the idea that how we do research ultimately depends on the nature of the particular research question and the type and kinds of evidence that are available. There are strengths, weaknesses, and trade-offs to most of the decisions we make when planning and doing research, and as the weeks of the course progress, the strengths and weaknesses, and thus the implicit trade-offs, of the research designs we consider will vary. Our goal is for students to better understand the consequences of these research design decisions, both in the published research that they read, and that they will need to make in their own research.

The precise topics to be covered, including the order and readings, is to be finalized during the LT and ST 2018 by a team ("content committee") consisting of staff from ID, MY, and the Teaching and Learning Centre. For now, here is a list of potential topics:

- Introduction: Overview of research questions and research designs
- The challenges of understanding causality in social science research
- Observational research designs
- The challenges of defining concepts and making observations in quantitative and qualitative research
- Exploratory and "flexible" research designs
- The insights gained from case study research
- Why and how do some researchers use mixed-methods approaches
- The role and position of the researcher
- The relationship between theory and data
- The contributions of primary and secondary sources
- The role of literature reviews in dissertations
- Research ethics and writing-up

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Lectures for this course will be delivered primarily by staff from the Department of Methodology (though some lectures may be delivered by ID staff).

To help contextualize the materials covered in the course for the students, and to ensure a good fit with the requirements of student needs in International Development, the seminar materials and research examples will be co-developed by MY and ID.

Seminars will be led by LSE Fellows employed by MY but recruited jointly by ID and MY, to assure experience in and familiarity with international development research. Some seminars may be led by ID core academic staff too, in lieu of or in addition to ordinary teaching duties.

Formative coursework: Students receive two types of formative assessment:

- Written formative assessment will be provided on in-class exercises, such as annotated bibliographies and short essays that analyze the research design choices of course readings, in the MT.
- Oral formative assessment will be provided on the first draft of the dissertation proposal, in the dissertation workshops in the ST. (Formally this latter assessment is DV410, but this should be regarded as an illustration of the integration of these two modules, MY410ID and DV410.)

Indicative reading: As indicated above (3.1), the content of the course is being finalized by a group of staff from MY, ID, and the TLC. What follows is an indicative list of some key texts:

65 percent: dissertation proposal (3000 words, due ST3)

MY421 Half Unit

Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleanor Knott COL.7.08 (MT) and Dr Jennifer Tarr COL.8.06 (LT)

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies, MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Marketing and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None.

Course content: This course presents the fundamentals of qualitative research methods. The course has the dual aims of equipping students with conceptual understandings of current academic debates regarding qualitative methods, and with practical skills to put those methods into practice. It prepares students to design, carry out, report, read and evaluate qualitative research projects. First, students learn how to collect data using methods including interviews, focus groups participant observation, and selecting documents and new media data. Second, we cover analysis, using thematic, content, and discourse analysis. Issues of research design, quality indicators, epistemology and ethics are addressed.

This is a generalist, introductory course and we invite students who have little previous experience of qualitative methods. Students with prior training in qualitative methods might be interested in more specialist alternatives offered by the Department of Methodology, such as MY425 Case Studies and Comparative Methods for Qualitative Research, MY426 Doing Ethnography, MY427 Qualitative Research with Non-Traditional Data, or MY428 Qualitative Text Analysis.

Lectures introduce the main conceptual and practical issues.

Seminars provide practical experience with the methods.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

The course runs twice per year: in MT (MY421M) and again in LT (MY421L). The content of the course is exactly the same in each term. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignments.

Formative coursework: Students submit a portion of their practical work, with some written commentary, for formative assessment in Week 7.

Indicative reading:

- Maria J Mayan (2009) Essentials in qualitative inquiry, Walnut Creek, CA: Left Coast Press.
- M Bauer & G Gaskell, (2000) Qualitative Researching with Text, Image and Sound, London: Sage.
- U Flick, (2009) An Introduction to Qualitative Research, 4th edition, London: Sage.
- C Seale, G Gobo, JF Gubrium, & D Silverman, (2004). Qualitative Research Practice. London: Sage.

Please Note: No single publication covers the whole content of the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

The summative assignment is a small project, demonstrating skills in using some of the qualitative methods covered during the course. It takes the form of a project report, with detailed appendices documenting the methods of data collection and analysis used.

MY425 Half Unit

Case Studies and Comparative Methods for Qualitative Research

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleanor Knott COL.7.08

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is freely available to any MSc, MRes or PhD student interested in case study research designs.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: This course focuses on the approach and practice of designing and conducting case study and comparative research. Thinking outside of the areas of interest and specialisms and topics, students will be encouraged to develop the concepts and comparative frameworks that underpin these phenomena. In other words, students will begin to develop their research topics as cases of something.

The course will cover questions of design and methods of case study research, from single-n to small-n case studies including discussions of process tracing and Mill's methods. The course will address both the theoretical and methodological discussions that underpin research design as well as the practical questions of how to conduct case study research, including gathering, assessing and using evidence. Examples from the fields of comparative politics, IR, development studies, sociology and European studies will be used throughout the lectures and seminars.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Students will receive 10 lectures (1.5 hours) and 9 seminars (1.5 hours) with a reading week in week 6. Lectures will provide students with the key concepts, ideas and approaches to case study and comparative research. Seminars will provide students with practical experience of assessing the approaches of case study and comparative research design, as well as opportunities to design and develop their own research projects.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation, 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

1 presentation: every week 1-2 students will present on a key reading and lead subsequent discussion of the reading and its research design

1 formative paper: literature review and project outline (1-2 pages) due in week 8. Students will receive written feedback on this by week 11.

1 peer marking exercise: in-class oral peer feedback session for students to exchange ideas on formative assignment (week 9)

Assessment: Project (90%, 4000 words) in April.

Class participation (10%) in the LT.

Research design proposal (Project 4000 words) due at the beginning of ST (90%). It is recommended that students base the research design proposal on their dissertation topic (or a related topic, e.g. a PhD proposal). Where students also take MY400 (which has a similar summative assessment), students will be guided towards a modified version of the research proposal (e.g. a different research question) to avoid self-plagiarism between assignments.

Weekly participation grade (10%) preparation and active participation in seminars and group presentation.

Doing Ethnography

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chana Teeger COL7.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Marketing, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some prior training in qualitative research methods is expected. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: Doing ethnography enables us to examine how social order is produced as people go about their everyday interactions. Multiple sources of naturally-occurring data are used to understand how communities, organisations and institutions work, informally as well as formally. Contemporary conditions of globalisation, individualisation, bureaucratisation and digitisation introduce new challenges for such fieldwork. This interdisciplinary course equips students with a practical understanding of how to do, and to think about, contemporary ethnography. Core conceptual, ethical and methodological debates are introduced through in-depth engagement with book-length exemplars, and through students' experience of fieldwork. Fieldwork is a key component of the course, with students collecting data locally (interesting sites are chosen each year, e.g. the Occupy encampment at St Paul's, protests around London, volunteering activities), followed by data analysis and presentation activities. Methodological concerns regarding case selection, establishing rigour, reflexivity, representing others, and ethical issues are addressed in detail. Practical issues addressed include identifying and accessing study sites, studying elite and marginalised groups, innovative sources of data, and writing field notes. Emphasising that ethnography relies on the researcher-as-research-instrument, the course aims to develop students' sensitivity and rigour as ethnographic researchers.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignments.

Formative coursework: An excerpt of field-notes from the field visit undertaken as part of the course (up to 2,500 words). Field-notes should record rich details of observations (the data), researcher reflections, and brief interpretations of the significance of these observations. Written feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Bourgois, P.; Schonberg, J. (2009). Righteous Dopefiend. University of California Press. DeWalt, K. M.; DeWalt, B. R. (2002). Participant observation: A guide for fieldworkers. AltaMira Press. Emerson, R. M., Fretz, R. I., ; Shaw, L. L. (1995). Writing ethnographic fieldnotes. University of Chicago Press. Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.

MY427 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19

Qualitative Research with Non-Traditional Data

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Marketing and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to PhD students, please see MY527.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some prior training in qualitative research methods is expected, equivalent to the level of MY421. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: Most qualitative research is in the form of written or spoken texts, produced through interviews and field notes or collection and analysis of documents. However, new technologies now offer a range of new tools for producing, gathering and analysing new kinds of data. This course will focus primarily on digital and visual methods and how they are reshaping qualitative research. Topics will include mobile methods, social network analysis; social media; emojis, memes and gifs; photo elicitation; video; and visual analysis. Key example readings will be assigned, discussed and assessed each week. Seminars provide practical skills through hands on exercises of data collection and analysis, closely tied with the lecture content. These skills will be developed further in a final research project on a topic of the students' choosing to be submitted at the beginning of summer term.

The course aims to understand how qualitative methods can be used in relation to these emerging streams of data. The course is aimed at students who are considering one or more of these elements as part of their dissertation research design and/or who are interested in gaining more advanced skills in qualitative research.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 will be a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignment. An optional enrichment activity will be assigned.

Formative coursework: Seminar activities will receive in-class feedback. A brief proposal for final summative coursework (c. 1000 words) should be submitted and will receive formative feedback and guidance.

Indicative reading: Note: No one text covers the whole course. Büscher M, Urry J, Witchger K (2011) Mobile Methods. Abingdon and New York: Routledge. Rose, G, 2016. Visual methodologies: An introduction to researching with visual materials. London: Sage. Rogers, R, 2013. Digital methods. Boston: MIT press. Pink, S, Horst H, Postill J, Hjorth L, Lewis T, Tacchi J. (2016) Digital Ethnography: Principles and Practice. London: Sage.

Assessment: Project (100%, 4000 words) in the ST. One 4000-4500 word research project related to the course material, on a topic selected by the student (100%).

MY428 Half Unit

Qualitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Audrey Alejandro COL7.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is also available to PhD students, please see MY528.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some prior training in qualitative research methods is expected. Please contact the course convenor if unsure

Course content: The goal of this course is to provide students with the skills to systematically identify and extract information from texts and discourses for social scientific purposes. While acquiring those skills, students also learn how to interpret textual data by exploring the concepts and case studies developed across disciplines. The course both establishes a theoretical foundation for text/discourse analysis and takes a practical and applied approach, so that students can acquire greater independence and confidence when conducting their research project.

The first part of the course discusses the major paradigms and traditions of qualitative text analysis and focuses on the application of specific analytical techniques to qualitative data. The main methods of qualitative text analysis, including content analysis and thematic analysis, will be explored with specific emphasis on discourse analysis. The second part of the course places the in-depth analysis of texts in the broader context of research methods. It aims to help students in building critical thinking around qualitative text analysis by familiarising them with a variety of mixed-methods research designs that can be used when studying texts and discourses.

Lectures introduce the main conceptual and practical issues. Seminars provide practical experience of implementing the methodology. Students will be working directly with qualitative data and performing their own analyses on a diverse range of materials, such as political speeches and news articles, as well as cultural texts such as movie scripts and songs.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their Summative Assignment.

Formative coursework: A project proposal (c.1,000 words). Students write a proposal for the project that will comprise their summative assessment.

Indicative reading: Dunn K. and Neumann I. B. (2016). Undertaking Discourse Analysis for social research, Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press. Baker, P. and Ellece, S. (2004). Qualitative research practice. London: Sage, chapters 11-12.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.

MY451 Half Unit

Introduction to Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson Col.8.05 and Dr Eleanor Power Col.7.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is also available to research students as MY551.

Course content: An intensive introduction to quantitative data analysis in the social sciences. The course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical estimation and inference. At the end of the course students should be able to carry out univariate and bivariate data analysis and have an appreciation of multiple linear regression. The computer classes give 'hands-on' training in the application of statistical techniques to real social science research problems. No prior knowledge of any statistical software is necessary.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of the term. This course is given twice per session, starting in the first week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY451M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY451L which is taught in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the weekly computer classes can be submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online and can be purchased as a hard copy. Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data. Pearson Education. Or Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. Pearson Education (note that the second book is more advanced and is particularly useful if you are planning to take MY451 and MY452).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

A two hour unseen examination in ST. Students are permitted to bring a limited quantity of written notes into the examination.

MY452 Half Unit

Applied Regression Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Indraneel Sircar COL7.04 and Dr Daniele Fanelli COL7.07

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies, MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. MY452 is open to any and all post-grad students around the School who have already have a grounding in quantitative methods.

Pre-requisites: Students are required to have completed MY451 or an equivalent level statistics course

Course content: The course is designed for students with a good working knowledge of elementary descriptive statistics; sampling distributions; one and two sample tests for means and proportions; correlation and the linear regression model with one or more predictor variables. The course is concerned with deepening the understanding of the generalized linear model and its application to social science data. The main topics covered are linear regression modelling and binary, multinomial and ordinal logistic regression.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the first week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY452M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY452L which is taught in Lent Term.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the weekly computer classes can be submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: A Agresti & B Finlay, Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. A course pack will be available for download online. Additional reading will be recommended.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Two hour unseen examination in ST. Students are permitted to bring a limited quantity of written notes into the examination.

MY454 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Applied Statistical Computing using R

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL.8.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to research students, as MY554.

Pre-requisites: Students must have taken Applied Regression Analysis (MY452) or an equivalent intermediate regression course.

Course content: This course will cover basic statistical programming for social science research as well as several associated data analysis methods. Programming topics include basic programming, data structures, optimisation, and simulation. Applied statistical topics include nonparametric density estimation and regression, additive models, cross-validation, the bootstrap, and permutation/randomisation inference. Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets in the LT.

Each problem set is associated with a computer classes, and may be submitted for marking and feedback.

Indicative reading: Keele, L. Semiparametric Regression for the Social Sciences

Matloff, N. The Art of R Programming

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 5 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (50%) in the ST.

MY455 Half Unit Multivariate Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.04

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies, MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Marketing, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to research students as MY555.

Pre-requisites: The course will assume a knowledge of standard linear regression models, to the level covered in MY452 (Applied Regression Analysis).

Course content: An introduction to the application of modern multivariate methods used in the social sciences, with particular focus on latent variable models for continuous observed variables, and their application to questions of measurement in the social sciences. At least the following topics will be covered: principal components analysis, exploratory factor analysis, confirmatory factor analysis and structural equation models. In addition, a selection from the following topics will be covered: cluster analysis, correspondence analysis, multidimensional scaling, latent class models, latent trait models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki; J I Galbraith (2008) Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data (Second Edition).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MY456 Half Unit Survey Methodology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.04

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Marketing, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of basic descriptive and inferential statistics, to the level of MY452 or equivalent. MY456 can also be taken in parallel with MY452L. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the methodology of the design and analysis of social surveys. It is intended both for students who plan to design and collect their own surveys, and for those who need to understand and use data from existing large-scale surveys. Topics covered include basic ideas of target populations, survey estimation and inference, sampling error and nonsampling error; sample design and sampling theory; methods of data collection; survey interviewing; cognitive processes in answering survey questions; design and evaluation of survey questions; nonresponse error and imputation for item nonresponse; survey weights; analysis of data from complex surveys; accessing, preparing and working with secondary data from existing social surveys. The course includes computer classes, using the statistical computer package Stata; no previous knowledge of Stata is required.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from some of the seminars and computer classes are submitted for feedback

Indicative reading: Groves, R M, Fowler, F J, Couper, M P, Lepkowski, J M, Singer, E, and Tourangeau, R (2009). Survey Methodology (2nd ed.). Wiley.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (50%, 2500 words).

The project is a report of approximately 20 to 30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 2,500 words, reporting the data analysis of a given research question and data set.

MY457 Half Unit

Causal Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Hendry

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of multiple linear regression and some familiarity with generalised linear models, to the level of MY452 or equivalent. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to statistical methods used for causal inference in the social sciences. Using the potential outcomes framework of causality, topics covered include research designs such as randomized experiments and observational studies. We explore the impact of noncompliance in randomized experiments, as well as nonignorable treatment assignment in observational studies. To analyze these research designs, the methods covered include matching, instrumental variables, difference-in-difference, and regression discontinuity. Examples are drawn from different social sciences. The course includes computer classes, where standard statistical computer packages (Stata or R) are used for computation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes are submitted for feedback.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

MY459 Half Unit

Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Quantitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Barbera Aranguena COL7.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to research students as MY559.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY452).

Course content: The course surveys methods for systematically extracting quantitative information from text for social scientific purposes, starting with classical content analysis and dictionary-based methods, to classification methods, and state-of-the-art scaling methods and topic models for estimating quantities from text using statistical techniques. The course lays a theoretical foundation for text analysis but mainly takes a very practical and applied approach, so that students learn how to apply these methods in actual research. The common focus across all methods is that they can be reduced to a three-step process: first, identifying texts and units of texts for analysis; second, extracting from the texts quantitatively measured features - such as coded content categories, word counts, word types, dictionary counts, or parts of speech - and converting these into a quantitative matrix; and third, using quantitative or statistical methods to analyse this matrix in order to generate inferences about the texts or their authors. The course systematically surveys these methods in a logical progression, with a practical, hands-on approach where each technique will be applied using appropriate software to real texts.

Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

MY461 Half Unit

Social Network Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleanor Power COL7.09 and Dr Milena Tsvetkova COL8.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Priority will be given to students in the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Data Science, the MSc in Social Research Methods, and then to students from Statistics and Media and Communications (in particular the MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society) track).

Course content: This course focuses on data about connections, forming structures known as networks. Networks and network data describe an increasingly vast part of the modern world, through connections on social media, communications, financial transactions, and other ties. This course covers the fundamentals of network structures, network data structures, and the analysis and presentation of network data. Students will work directly with network data, and structure and analyze these data using R. Social networks have always been at the centre of human interaction, but especially with the explosive growth of the internet, network analysis has become increasingly central to all branches of the social sciences. How do people influence each other, bargain with each other, exchange information (or germs), or interact online? A diverse array of deep questions about human behaviour can only be answered by examining the social networks encompassing and shifting around us. Network analysis has emerged as a cross-disciplinary science in its own right, and has in fact proven to be of even greater generality and broader applicability than just the social, extending to ecology, physics, genetics, computer science, and other domains.

This course will examine the key papers in the development of social network analysis, and will develop the theory and methodological tools needed to model and predict social networks and use them in social sciences as diverse as sociology, political science, economics, health, psychology, history, or business. The core of the course will comprise the essential tools of network analysis, from centrality, homophily, and community detection, to random graphs, network formation, and information flow. Alongside this we will read a series of substantive and seminal papers, shaped in part by the interests of the students and their various backgrounds, with a particular focus on the difficult task of causal inference in social networks. The course will also provide an introduction to network modelling, analysis and visualisation using R.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets in the LT.

Type: Structured problem sets which will be marked in Weeks 3, 5, 8, 9 and 10 with a beginning component to be started in the staff-led lab sessions, to be completed by the student outside of class. Answers should be formatted and submitted for assessment.

Indicative reading: Newman, M.E.J. (2010). Networks: An introduction. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press. Scott, J. (2017). Social Network Analysis. Los Angeles: SAGE. 4th edition. Assessment: In class assessment (50%) and take home exam (50%) in the LT.

Student problem sets will be marked in weeks 3, 5, 8, 9 and 10. These will constitute 50% of the final overall mark.

Introduction to Quantitative Methods for Media and Communications

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson COL.8.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An intensive introduction to quantitative data analysis in the social sciences, with illustrative examples and class exercises drawn from the field of Media and Communications. The course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical estimation and inference. At the end of the course students should be able to carry out univariate and bivariate data analysis and have an appreciation of multiple linear regression. The computer classes give 'hands-on' training in the application of statistical techniques to real social science research problems using the SPSS computer package (no prior knowledge of SPSS is necessary).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 exercises in the MT.

Exercises from the weekly computer classes can be submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online.

Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data, and Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours).

You are allowed to bring to the examination one A4 sheet (both sides) of your own notes.

MY465 Half Unit

Intermediate Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson COL8.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science and MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Participants should have studied introductory statistics or quantitative methods before, up to an introduction to descriptive statistics and basic statistical inference. Students with no previous studies in quantitative analysis should take instead Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY451).

Because of the overlaps between these courses, it is not possible to take both this course and either of Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY451) or Applied Regression Analysis (MY452) as assessed courses.

Course content: The course is intended for students with some (even if limited) previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. Using examples from psychological research, it covers first a review of the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical inference, in the context of the analysis of two-way contingency tables and comparisons of means between two groups. The main topic of the course is linear regression modelling and related methods, including scatterplots, correlation, simple and multiple linear regression, and analysis of variance and covariance. An introduction to binary logistic regression modelling is also included. The computer classes give hands-on training in the application of these statistical techniques.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6. On-line quizzes will be provided on Moodle to aid revision during the reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 exercises in the MT.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online.

Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data, and Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Students are permitted to bring a limited quantity of written notes into the examination.

MY470 Half Unit Computer Programming

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Milena Tsvetkova COL8.03 and Dr Pablo Barbera Aranguena COL7.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science. This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Data Science and MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Compulsory unit for MSc in Applied Social Data Science and MSc Data Science who will be given priority. Available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and places are available.

Course content: This course introduces students to the fundamentals of computer programming as students design, write, and debug computer programs using the programming language Python and R. The course will also cover the foundations of computer languages, algorithms, functions, variables, object-orientation, scoping, and assignment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. Students will learn how to design algorithms to solve problems and how to translate these algorithms into working computer programs. Students acquire skills and experience as they learn Python and R, through programming assignments with an approach that integrates projectbased learning. This course is an introduction to the fundamental concepts of programming for students who lack a formal background in the field, but will include more advanced problem-solving skills in the later stages of the course. Topics include algorithm design and program development; data types; control structures; functions and parameter passing; recursion; data structures; searching and sorting; and an introduction to the principles of object-oriented programming. The primary programming languages used in the course will be Python and R.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.

Type: Weekly, structured problem sets with a beginning component to be started in the staff-led lab sessions, to be completed by the student outside of class. Answers should be formatted and submitted for assessment.

MY472 Half Unit Data for Data Scientists

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Barbera Aranguena COL7.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students in the MSc in Applied Social Data Science and the MSc in Data Science, followed by students from the MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society) track.

Course content: This course will cover the principles of digital methods for storing and structuring data, including data types, relational and nonrelational database design, and query languages. Students will learn to build, populate, manipulate and query databases based on datasets relevant to their fields of interest.

The course will also cover workflow management for typical data transformation and cleaning projects, frequently the starting point and most timeconsuming part of any data science project. This course uses a project-based learning approach towards the study of online publishing and group-based collaboration, essential ingredients of modern data science projects. The coverage of data sharing will include key skills in on-line publishing, including the elements of web design, the technical elements of web technologies and web programming, as well as the use of revision-control and group collaboration tools such as GitHub. Each student will build one or more interactive website based on content relevant to his/her domain-related interests, and will use GitHub for accessing and submitting course materials and assignments.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

In this course, we introduce principles and applications of the electronic storage, structuring, manipulation, transformation, extraction, and dissemination of data. This includes data types, database design, data base implementation, and data analysis through structured queries. Through joining operations, we will also cover the challenges of data linkage and how to combine datasets from different sources. We begin by discussing concepts in fundamental data types, and how data is stored and recorded electronically. We will cover database design, especially relational databases, using substantive examples across a variety of fields. Students are introduced to SQL through MySQL, and programming assignments in this unit of the course will be designed to insure that students learn to create, populate and query an SQL database. We will introduce NoSQL using MongoDB and the JSON data format for comparison. For both types of database, students will be encouraged to work with data relevant to their own interests as they learn to create, populate and query data. In the final section of the data section of the course, we will step through a complete workflow including data cleaning and transformation, illustrating many of the practical challenges faced at the outset of any data analysis or data science project.

Online publishing and collaboration tools forms the second part of this course, along with the tools and technologies that underlie them. Students will develop interactive, secure and powerful projects for the World Wide Web using both client and server side technologies. Collaboration and the dissemination and submission of course assignments will use GitHub, the popular code repository and version control system. The course begins with an indepth look at the markup languages that form the foundations of building web sites with a study of HTML and CSS. Students next study basic programming in JavaScript, to provide client and server side tools including the customization of web content using Bootstrap and Jekyll to publish web pages, which will provide the basis for a class project.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.

Type: Weekly, structured problem sets with a beginning component to be started in the staff-led lab sessions, to be completed by the student outside of class. Answers should be formatted and submitted for assessment.

Capstone Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Barberá (COL 7.10)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The Capstone course is a dissertation project that represents the final element in the construction of a student's data science masters education. Work with a staff supervisor, and developed in a seminar, the dissertation provides students the means to combine all they have learned and embark on a self-guided project that will serve as their MSc study's crowning achievement.

Teaching: A series of around 4 dissertation seminars during MT and LT. The seminars cover methodological issues such as the literature review, sources of secondary quantitative data, topic guides for interviews, and sources of textual material.

There is no teaching for the Capstone project outside of supervision and our development seminars (currently MY499).

Formative coursework: Each student will be required to give a short presentation outlining the subject of his/her dissertation and the proposed argument of the dissertation in a session organised for all students during ST.

Indicative reading: NA - will differ with every student project

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. The dissertation will be a 10,000 word Capstone project to be submitted by 5pm August 8th 2019.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleanor Knott COL7.08

Dissertation supervisors.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students are required to write a 10,000 word dissertation. The dissertation is based on an empirical investigation of an issue relevant to the programme content and on a topic within the field covered by their specialist subject and agreed with their supervisor.

Teaching: A series of 3-4 dissertation seminars during MT and LT. The seminars cover issues pertinent to writing a dissertation such as reviewing the literature, using secondary quantitative data, and research ethics.

Formative coursework: Each student will be required to give a short presentation outlining the subject of his/her dissertation and the proposed argument of the dissertation in a session organised for all students during ST (usually May).

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

The 10,000 word dissertation must be submitted via Moodle by 5pm on Thursday August 8th 2019.

MY4M1

Foundations of Social Research 1

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleanor Power MT/Prof Jon Jackson LT (MY451), Prof Ben Lauderdale (MY400) and Dr Jen Tarr MT/Dr Eleanor Knott LT (MY421).

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is designed to give students a good introduction to quantitative and qualitative methods and to acquaint them with the strengths and limits of different methodologies. The course has three main components: 1. MY451 (MY451M in Michaelmas Term or MY451L in Lent Term) in Introduction to Quantitative Analysis - this course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. Students who have already studied statistics and data analysis should take MY4M2. Plus: 2. MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design 3. MY421 Qualitative Research Methods (MY421M in Michaelmas Term or MY421L in Lent Term).

Teaching: See separate course outlines.

Indicative reading: See separate course outlines.

Assessment: Examination is by three pieces of assessed coursework (67%) and one two-hour paper (33%). Students registered on this course will submit assessed coursework covering MY400 (1000 words due in MT, 5000 due in ST), assessed coursework covering MY421 (3000 words) due in ST, and will take the exam paper MY4M1a (based on the MY451 syllabus) in ST.

PB400

Psychological and Behavioural Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sophie von Stumm QUE 3.22

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is a compulsory component of courses: PB401 Contemporary Social and Cultural Psychology; PB402 Organisational and Social Psychology; PB404 The Social Psychology of Communication; and PB403 Psychology of Economic Life.

Course content: What is the relevance of psychological and behavioural science for research and society today? How can psychological and behavioural science help us to understand people, economic life, organisations, culture and communication? What are key developments, ideas and findings from psychological and behavioural science?

Each week we tackle key questions and debates in psychological and behavioural science through an examination of its central theories, approaches and findings. For example we ask: Do attitudes predict behavior? Do people change in the way they think, feel and behave across the lifespan? Is intergroup conflict inevitable? Are there cultural differences in how we think? Are some people more pro- social than others? How should we promote effective social change?

These questions will be addressed through the introduction of the main theories and research paradigms in psychological and behavioural science, including cognition, communication, societal psychology, individual differences, attitudes and participation. The course will provide a comprehensive background to contemporary psychological and behavioural science, as well as covering advanced materials and critiques of recent developments.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: None.

Indicative reading: Hogg, M., & Vaughan, G. (2013) Social Psychology. Harlow: Pearson.

Assessment: The material covered in this course contributes to the formal assessment of the PB401, PB402, PB403, and PB404. There is no independent assignment associated with this course.

PB401

Contemporary Social and Cultural Psychology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sandra Jovchelovitch QU.3.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Availability as an outside option is also dependent on numbers.

Course content: Selected topics in cultural and modern social psychology. The interface mind, society and culture, with a core focus on: 1) the relationship individual-society and 2) culture as a universal and as a particular context for human cognition, emotion and behaviour. In addition: cultural transmission; ontogenesis and sociogenesis; intersubjectivity, perspectivity; thought and language; action and joint intentionality; mediation and artefacts; culture and the cross-cultural; global identities; intergroup relations; self and community; theory and research relevant to different fields of application including communication, education, racism and multiculturalism, health community development, social exclusion and disadvantage, mass media, amongst others. Topics are explored at different levels of analysis of social and cultural psychology: ontogenetic (individual self); sociogenetic (social interaction, inter-group relations); phylogenetic (evolutionary history of homo sapiens). Central to the syllabus is to sensitise and train students' to understand and manage cultural and societal variation in cognition, emotion and behaviour. Please note that fields of application and applied content may vary depending on faculty research.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students taking PB401 will also be required to attend PB400 lectures, 10 x 120 mins (MT), and 9 x 60 mins discussion groups.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the MT.

PB402

Organisational Social Psychology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tom Reader QUE.3.10 and Dr Lucia Garcia QUE.3.23

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course addresses both the social psychology of organisations and social psychological processes within organisations. It also provides multidisciplinary coverage of the organisational contexts in which social psychologists may work in a variety of professional domains. A basic familiarity with social psychological methods is assumed, but their application within organisational processes and contexts will be examined in detail within the course. Issues and techniques in organisational analysis, discourse, decision-making and change management are covered with emphasis on their social psychological aspects.

Lectures/seminars in the MT: These will cover key social psychological concepts and theories and their application to the understanding of organisations and the implementation of change processes. The specific topics covered include: 1) Introduction: critique of the tradition and logic underlying organisational psychology; history and frameworks in organisational analysis; "Scientific" management; Taylorism and Fordism; the Human Relations movement and the Socio-Technical approach; 2) Frameworks for analysis: for example, the cultural image of organisations; culture and identity in organisations; power, knowledge and organising; 3) People organising: for example, motivation; work groups and teams; decision-making; leadership, networking and collaborative work; 4) Implications for practice: for example, managing organisational change.

Professional Seminar Series in the MT: These will centre on discussion of practical and research applications in domains where organisational social psychological investigation and analysis may play a leading role. Each topic will be presented by an external expert working practically in the domain.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students taking PB402 will also be required to attend PB400 lectures 10 x 120 minutes (MT) and seminars/discussion groups 9 x 60 minutes (MT).

Formative coursework: Formative essay to be submitted in MT.

Indicative reading: Reading lists on specific topics will be distributed during the course. Texts which are recommended for general use throughout the course are: S Clegg & C Handy, Studying Organisations: Theory and Method, Sage, 1998; E H Schein, Organisational Psychology (3rd edn), Prentice Hall, 1988; G Morgan, Images of Organisation (2nd edn), Sage, 1997; A Bryman (Ed), Doing Research in Organisations, Routledge, 1988; Hosking, D.-M., & Morley, I. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the MT.

PB403

Psychology of Economic Life

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saadi Lahlou QUE 3.26
Dr Frédéric Basso QUE 3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Psychology of Economic Life. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Human activity is goal-oriented and social; it is evaluated at individual level in terms of emotions and well-being. –a heritage of our Primate nature. Humans have now grown outside of the initial "natural" ecological condition of small tribes of hunters-gatherers to which their body and psyche were adapted. They have socially constructed socio-economic systems ("Production-Consumption Systems" –PCS). In these PCS, individual satisfaction and resources are obtained through participating into a labor division following institutional rules. While this institutionalized system enables canalizing positively some explosive characteristics of humans (competition, hierarchy, preference for the present etc.), the growth of such PCS in a limited world poses urgent problems of sustainability.

Some of the most blatant limitations to the current system come from human drives (competition, aggression, desire for more, inter-group rivalry, short-termism, etc.).

The problem addressed by the Psychology of Economic Life is therefore to explore new ways of constructing sustainable PCS, and to manage the transition from the current state to a more sustainable one. This exploration must be informed by a realistic psychology, which is the object of this course.

Teaching: The course is delivered in Michaelmas Term over 10 lectures of 2h (2 per week, over weeks 1 to 5); 5 weekly seminar sessions of 1.5 hours (weekly over weeks 1 to 5) and three special seminar sessions of 2 hours (weeks 7, 8, 9). Students taking PB403 will also be required to attend PB400 lectures, 10 x 120 mins (MT), and 9 x 60 mins seminars/discussion groups (MT).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 mini-essay in the Michaelmas Term.

Indicative reading: There is no single text for PB403 but one may find the following texts useful. Barkow, J., Cosmides, L., & Tooby, J. (1992). The adapted mind: Evolutionary psychology and the generation of culture. New York: Oxford University Press. Diamond, J. (2005). Collapse. How societies choose to fail or succeed. (2001). The Economic Psychology of Everyday Life. Hove & Philadelphia: Psychology Press Assessment: Essay (80%, 5000 words) and essay (20%, 1000 words) in the MT.

The 5000 word essay is written in groups, which will be marked collectively (i.e. all students in one group will receive the same mark). The 1000 word essay is an individual essay which will be marked separately.

Assessment is part of the learning process. Students must demonstrate their knowledge of theories learned in the course, and apply them to analyse a real case of economic phenomenon (business model, organization, public policy...) -and eventually propose realistic recommendations for an improvement of sustainability. The case must be different from cases studied in the option courses, and from the dissertation. This work is collective. The students will be assembled in groups and produce a case study collectively.

Both assessments are prepared by an unmarked formative.

PB404

The Social Psychology of Communication

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bradley Franks QUE.3.05 and Prof Martin Bauer QUE.3.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science and MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines core theories towards a social psychology of communication. Issues raised will refer to verbal and non-verbal, face-to-face, rumours and mass mediated, as well as private and public, communal and strategic forms of communication. The second half of the course will provide an overview of applied communication research in various professional areas of public communication. Theories of communication covered in the course include evolutionary theory, classical rhetoric, diffusion research, pragmatics and relevance theory, semiotics and system theory and the theory of communicative action. Issues will be raised as to the critical analysis and the design of communicative action. Issues will be raised as to the critical analysis and the design of communication efforts in professional fields such as business corporations, NGOs, scientific professional bodies, health promotion, governments and political parties, police campaigns, and international organisations.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students taking PB404 will also be required to attend PB400 lecture and discussion groups. (PB400 lecture 10 x 120 mins (MT) and 9 x 60 mins discussion groups).

Formative coursework: Students will complete one formative assignment in the MT.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; students will be expected to read widely in appropriate journals, and a list of references will be provided at the start of the course. J Habermas, Theory of Communicative Action, Vol 1 + 2, Polity Press, 1997; R Heath & B Jennings, Human Communication Theory and Research: Concepts, Contexts, and Challenges (2nd edn), Lawrence Erlbaum, 2000; A Mattelart & Mattelart, Theories of Communication: a Short Introduction, Sage, 1998; D McQuail, McQuail's Mass Communication theory (4th edn), Sage, 2000; R Rice & C Atkin, Public Communication Campaign, Sage, 2000; E Rogers, Diffusion of Innovation, Free Press, 1995; D Sperber & D Wilson, Relevance: Communication and Cognition, Cambridge, 1995. Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Frederic Basso QUE.3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available on the MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation is an empirical investigation, carried out by the student, under the supervision of a member of staff. Research topics and methodologies vary considerably, but they must relate to the student's MSc Programme. All dissertation topics will need to be approved by a supervisor who is a faculty member of the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science. By the end of the Michaelmas Term students will be introduced to the Dissertation module and members of staff will outline the research areas in which they would be keen to supervise projects. In the first instance students should approach the member of staff whom they would like to be supervised by. Students then submit a Dissertation Plan, outlining their project, and the supervisor who they have discussed the project with. Students are then allocated to supervisors. The supervisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography, and provide feedback on the research.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 7 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students will be supervised primarily in group laboratory meetings/seminars (15 hours); individual support will also be available as appropriate and necessary.

All students should attend all components timetabled as part of PB411

Formative coursework: Students will receive formative feedback from their supervisor on the following coursework (1,000 max words): A Dissertation Progress Report

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Methods for Social Psychology Research: Qualitative and Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ilka Gleibs

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

All components of this course are compulsory for students taking MSc in Organisational Social Psychology

MSc in Psychology of Economic Life

MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology

MSc in Social and Public Communication

Course content: This course is for MSc students in the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science. It will:

- 1) provide an overview of methodological issues for Psychological research;
- 2) cover core skills in research design in Psychology; and
- 3) provide training in core psychological methods of analysing quantitative and qualitative data.

By the end of the course as a whole, students will be equipped with methodological skills that will enable them to conduct empirical research for their MSc dissertation and possibly research after the MSc.

Teaching: Teaching takes place in the MT, LT and ST. The course has four components:

- 1) 13 hours of lectures on methodological issues and research design, as preparation for completing the course, PB410 Dissertation (LT)
- 2) MY421M Qualitative Research Methods (MT)
- 3) MY465 Intermediate Quantitative Analysis (MT)
- 4) A series of non-compulsory and non-assessed specialist workshops in LT and ST on specific research methods that students can choose to attend for preparation of their dissertation.

Formative coursework: Students will follow the formative work requirements on the MY course(s) that they take under each stream.

Indicative reading: Bauer, M. and Gaskell, G. (2000) Qualitative researching with text, image and sound - a practical handbook London, Sage. Breakwell, G. Foot, H. and Gilmour. Experimental Design and Methods for the Behavioural Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi

Dr Dario Krpan

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Behavioural science is the scientific study of human behaviour, and it combines research techniques from psychology and economics. The course offers an integrated training in advanced behavioural science methods by introducing students to state-of-the-art techniques that stretch across the spectrum of both disciplines. The course covers the following topics: randomised controlled experiments in behavioural science, causality, selection bias; behavioural science experiments spanning the continuum spectrum from the lab to the field; principles of experimental design; best practices in modern behavioural science experiments; measuring preferences, attitudes, beliefs, willingness-to-pay; behavioural game theory and experimental games of strategic interaction; designing behavioural priming experiments and measures that tap into implicit cognition; state-of-the-art physiological research techniques; tests of hypotheses and sample size calculations for experiments in theory and practice; p-curve; regression analysis of experimental data in theory and practice; understanding the mechanisms behind behavioural effects by employing experimental-causal-chain, measurement-of-mediation, and moderation-of-process designs.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

The course is delivered in Michaelmas Term over 10 lectures of 1 hour (1 per week, over weeks 1-5, and 7-11) and 10 weekly seminar sessions of 1 hour (1 per week, over weeks 1-5, and 7-11). Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Lectures and Seminars:

Week 1

Lecture 1: Introduction to the Course [MG, DK]. The Beauty of Behavioural Science Experiments: Why Randomization Solves the Selection Bias [MG].

Seminar 1: Building a Simple Behavioural Science Experiment Using Qualtrics [DK].

Week 2

Lecture 2: Behavioural Science Experiments: from the Lab to the Field [MG]. Best Practices in Modern Behavioural Science Experiments [MG, DK].

Seminar 2: Best Experimental Practices in Practice [MG, DK].

Week 3

Lecture 3: Principles of Experimental Design [MG].

Seminar 3: Introduction to z-Tree [MG].

Week 4

Lecture 4: Strategic Decision-Making: Introduction to Behavioural Game Theory [MG].

Seminar 4: Building a Simple Game of Strategic Interaction Using z-Tree [MG].

Week 5

Lecture 5: Behavioural Priming Techniques [DK].

Seminar 5: Designing Behavioural Priming Experiments [DK].

Week 6

No lecture: Reading week

Week 7

Lecture 6: System 1 in Action: Capturing Implicit Cognition [DK].

Seminar 6: Building a Simple Task to Measure Implicit Cognition [DK].

Week 8

Lecture 7: Beyond Economics and Psychology: State-of-the-art Physiological Research Techniques [MG, DK].

Seminar 7: Physiological Research Techniques in Practice [MG, DK].

Week 9

Lecture 8: Tests of Hypotheses and Sample Size Calculations for Experiments. Useful Rules of Thumb. P-hacking [MG, DK].

Seminar 8: Statistical Tests and Sample Size Calculations for Experiments in Practice Using Stata. P-curve analysis in practice [MG, DK].

Week 10

Lecture 9: Understanding the Mechanisms Behind Behaviour Change: Experimental-Causal-Chain, Measurement-of-Mediation, and Moderation-of-Process Designs [MG, DK].

Seminar 9: Analysis of Experimental Data in a Regression Framework Using Stata [MG, DK]. Experimental-Causal-Chain, Mediation Analysis, and Moderation-of-Process in Stata 1 [MG, DK].

Week 11

Lecture 10: Measuring Preferences, Attitudes, Beliefs, Willingness-to-pay: State-of-the-art Measures [MG].

Seminar 10: Experimental-Causal-Chain, Mediation Analysis, and Moderation-of-Process in Stata 2 [MG, DK].

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

For the formative assignment, you will work in small groups (3-4 students) to produce a presentation in which you will need to propose a design and implementation of a behavioural science experiment entailing the use of (at least) two different software packages introduced in the seminars. The structure of the presentation will be as follows: a) Introduce a viable research question (on a topic of your choice) that will guide your experimentation; b) Describe how you would design and implement behavioural science research to answer the question; and c) Explain which statistical approaches covered in lectures and seminars you would use to analyse the data. For the presentation, you will need to follow the lines of a pre-analysis plan (PAP) which is increasingly common in behavioural science (for an example, see www.psychologicalscience.org/publications/psychological_science/preregistration).

At the end of the presentation, each of you will need to clarify your exact contribution to the group work. This will involve specifying the aspect of the formative assignment that was under your lead. You will be expected to divide the groupwork amongst yourselves in such a way that each of you has a different task and leads the contribution to the whole groupwork in relation to that task. The expected length of the presentation is 15 minutes. The presentation will be delivered in a video format: you will be given a clear step-by-step guide describing how to produce a video presentation (we will go through this guide during a seminar to make sure it is clear to everyone how the video file should be produced). Where needed, we will be able to secure webcams for producing the presentations as well as the space for recording them. You will be expected to submit the formative assignment by the end of Week 7 in the Lent Term.

To assist you throughout the group work process and increase the effectiveness of your teamwork experience, we will provide you with resources that will make the organizational part of the group work easier. The resources will involve a teamwork checklist and guidelines for managing the groupwork process.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

You will be expected to write a 3,000 word report to be submitted at the end of Summer Term. The reports will need to be submitted individually and will require you to report on your own contribution to the groupwork undertaken as part of the formative assignment. More precisely, you will start by giving a brief overview of how your group tackled the three points crucial to the formative task: a) Introduce a viable research question (on a topic of your choice) that will guide your experimentation; b) Describe how you would design and implement behavioural science research to answer the question; and c) Explain which statistical approaches covered in lectures and seminars you would use to analyse the data. Then, you will proceed by providing an in-depth exposition of your own contribution to the groupwork in relation to the task you oversaw. In the report, we will expect you to use in-text scholarly citations and provide a reference list at the end. You will be expected to submit the summative report by the beginning of the Summer Term.

PB415 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Behavioural Science

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology, MSc in Social and Public Communication and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations and room sizes permit.

This is a capped course. In teaching Week 1 places will be allocated to students from the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science on a first come first served basis. At the start of Week 2 any remaining places will be allocated to students from other departments, again on a first come first served basis.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to the main concepts and tools of behavioural science. To achieve this aim, the course is based around ten lectures covering: 1) what is behavioural science?; 2) choices under risk and uncertainty; 3) intertemporal decisions; 4) social and moral preferences; 5) biases and heuristics and rules of thumb; 6) the role of emotions in decision making; 7) dual-process models of behaviour; 8) the power of nudges; 9) compensating behaviours; 10) ethical considerations.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

There are ten topics, and the seminars allow for in depth discussion and analysis of the issues raised in the lectures.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay (1000 words) in the MT.

PB416 Half Unit Cognition and Culture

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bradley Franks QUE.3.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World), MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines recent directions in research relating to the relationships between mind and culture. Specific content will include a variety of theoretical issues, for example: relationships between social facts and psychological facts; naturalistic and non-naturalistic concepts of culture; symbolic culture; cultural relativity and universals; evolutionary and developmental constraints on the relations between mind and culture; communication, cultural transmission and change. These issues will be discussed with reference to specific domains of investigation, such as: emotions, representations of religion, race and natural kinds; pragmatics and communication; and social divisions of labour in meaning and representation, including deference and expertise.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 presentations, 1 quiz and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT. Will consist of:

- i. a plan for an answer to an essay or case study question
- ii. group presentations of core readings over the term
- iii. a self-administered multiple choice quiz

Indicative reading: Detailed references and a synopsis of lectures and class topics are distributed in the first lecture of the series, and are available in S315 and in Outlook/Public Folders/Departments/Social Psychology. Students may choose to write EITHER a 3000 word essay OR a 3000 word case study

PB417 Half Unit Consumer Psychology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Muthukrishna QUE.3.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped.

Course content: The objectives of the course are: 1) to provide students with an understanding of the social psychological and cognitive processes behind the consumption of goods and services; 2) to explore alternative modes of relationship with users/ consumers than the current ones which are based mostly on market and competition; and 3) to prepare students to build better business models (e.g. social entrepreneurship, more sustainable, and so on) for the provision of goods and services.

The course will address the psychology of consumption at different levels of analysis: individual, group and societal. It will try to ground this psychology in fundamental theories that will allow students to develop a mental model of human behaviour as it relates to consumption.

This is not a standard marketing or consumer research course. It is not just about brand territories and market shares, but about how understanding various psychological processes in conjunction with these other forces can provide us with tools to improve the world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 4 hours of seminars and 6 hours of seminars in the LT.

The course is delivered in Lent Term over 10 lectures of 1h (2 per week, over weeks 1 to 5); 4 weekly seminar sessions of 1 hour (in weeks 2, 3, 4, and 5) and three special seminar sessions of 2 hours (weeks 7, 8, and 9). The special seminars occur after all lecture material has been delivered and will focus on applying this knowledge to real world case studies.

Formative coursework: Essay plan submitted in the LT.

Indicative reading: Griskevicius, V. & Kenrick, D.T. (2013).

Additional readings will be recommended throughout the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The assignment is understood as part of the learning, to provide the transferable skills of analysing a real case and making sound recommendations to make the world a better place. In the first part, 'memorandum' (1,000 words), you will be asked to prepare a memorandum or open letter to the head of an organisation of your choice, with recommendations that improve the organisation in a way that makes the world a better place. The recommendations must be realistic, including making being achievable and making business sense. In the second part of the essay, 'justification' (2,000 words), you will justify the specific recommendations presented in the memorandum with reference to the theoretical and empirical literature and concepts. You can read examples of previous years assignments at <http://www.lse.ac.uk/DPBS/videos/PS456.aspx>. We encourage the best essays to be published as open letters.

PB418 Half Unit Corporate Communications

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ben Shenoy, KSW.5.13

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology, MSc in Social and Public Communication and MSc in Strategic Communications. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students from other programmes may access this course subject to availability.

Course content: The different activities encompassed by the concept of corporate communication affect each one of us in various guises: as employees, customers, citizens, investors or, more generally, as observers of today's world. It is therefore essential to develop a critical understanding of the different practices associated with corporate communication. Future practitioners also need this critical perspective so as to understand better the challenges involved in the development and implementation of corporate communication programmes. The objectives of the course are two-fold: 1) to provide an introduction to corporate communication, here understood as a set of activities undertaken by organisations in order to establish favourable corporate images and reputations with all of an organisation's stakeholder groups; and 2) to underline how a better understanding of key social psychological concepts can contribute to the overall management and effectiveness of organisations and corporate communication.

This course is designed to apply relevant social psychological theory to gain insight into the changing world of corporate communication.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

PB419 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Creativity and Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alex Gillespie QUE.3.03

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Marketing, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to any graduate student within the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students' on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: An undergraduate degree in a social science related discipline or equivalent.

Course content: This course examines creativity and innovation from a social psychological standpoint. The first lectures of the course examine creativity, focusing on the social conditions which lead to new ideas. Then we will examine the way in which new ideas and technologies are instituted and resisted. The role of play and materiality in creative production are discussed next, followed by creative problem solving and the societal transmission of innovation. The course will end with a focus on societal creativity, utopias and imagining the future. Guiding questions will be: How do new ideas and technologies come about? What social contexts are conducive to creativity and innovation? Can the resistance to innovation lead to innovation? What is the human imagination? Why do humans enjoy play, games and fiction? What leads to insightful problem solving? How does perspective-taking help us understand if something new is creative, productive or useful? The course will cover the social conditions (i.e., face-to-face or online, one-to-one or group, autocratic or democratic, specialisation or integration, etc.) conducive to creativity and innovation, including the social conditions for socialisation creative individuals and the social and institutional factors which enable productive novelty to be recognised and instituted. Specific topics will include: theories of creativity, play & imagination, insight and problem solving, identifying good ideas, materiality, cultural evolution, the resistance to innovation, user innovation, utopias and how people imagine the future.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Sheehy-Skeffington QUE.3.20

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Population Health, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course centres on the application of social psychology to the challenge of health communication in a global context. While considering both health and communication in their widest sense, it focuses primarily on the practice of health promotion and its conceptual underpinnings. We will begin with an introduction to health psychology and expert-led approaches to health communication, before moving on to consider health and illness in their wider social and societal context. The final section of the course considers community development and social justice approaches that put empowerment and participation at their centre, enabling us to close with a critical yet hopeful appraisal of the future of health communication. Throughout, we will view the individual as a bio-psycho-social system, located within families, workplaces, communities, local and global cultures, unequal power hierarchies, and rapidly changing social settings. Through lectures, readings and seminar discussions, we will encounter theoretical debates about determinants of health and health-related behaviours, the nature of health communication, and the processes through which communication impacts on health. At the same time, we will consider the implications of these debates for health promotion campaigns and policies, learning about real-world examples through guest lectures, and gaining hands-on experience in designing and critiquing health communication campaigns through practical exercises.

PB423 Not available in 2018/19 Health, Community and Development

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Campbell STC.303 and Dr Jenevieve Mannell STC.367

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the psycho-social determinants of community health and social development, in the context of health inequalities and social marginalisation in the global North and South. In particular it explores the role of participation, partnerships and collective action in facilitating health, well-being, the management of illness (including prevention, service access, care and treatment) and health-enabling social change. Attention is given to promoting behaviours that facilitate both physical and mental health and well-being more generally, viewing health as a phenomenon that spans the individual, community and social levels of analysis. The challenges of facilitating health, and health-enhancing collective action, are explored with reference to social identities, social representations and local knowledge, dialogue, empowerment, critical thinking, gender, social capital and social change. All this material is contextualised within wider debates about the global nature of public health, mainstream vs. alternative development policy, the respective roles of local and global social movements, and the potential for participation to alleviate the negative health impacts of social inequalities. Particular attention is given to the links between health and inequalities related to poverty, gender and sexuality, ethnicity, age (children and the elderly) and disability.

The over-riding ethos of the course is an interest in the links between theory and practice. Attention is given to providing students with actionable conceptual tools for the challenges of designing and evaluating community-focused programmes in the fields of public health, health promotion and health-supporting social transformation.

Issues in Organizational and Social Psychology: Organizational Life

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Barry Rogers, KSW.5.13 and Ms Elsbeth Johnson, QUE.3.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible. This course is capped at 25 students.

Course content: In recent years, much has been made of the demise of the traditional work organisation and with it, traditional organisational life. In popular rhetoric, globalisation, the rise of the knowledge economy, ICT and the credit crunch have all trumpeted the dawn of a very different world. The reality of the situation would seem to be far more complex.

So how do we understand and explain this complexity? This basic question has prompted huge soul searching within the social sciences as comfortable assumptions about the analysis of our world have been shown wanting. For many the current behavioural 'turn' throughout many of our disciplines act as an alternative lens for making sense of our reality - this has as its core the tools and approaches of social psychology.

The aim of the course is to give a social psychological perspective on the elements of continuity and change surrounding contemporary organisational life. It will focus in particular on the blurring of boundaries within our key organizational relationships: with employees, customers, clients, and stakeholders. Its primary objective is to facilitate students in developing a critical and reflective understanding of these emerging processes.

The course is informed throughout by a dual mandate. A rigorous approach to theory will be developed within the context of contemporary organisational issues, and current topics of debate. This essential relationship between theory and practice is a central feature of the course - outside speakers and practitioners are used throughout to supplement the learning for each topic and various forms of social media are employed to connect with an extended community of practice.

The course will address emerging organisational questions such as:

Perspectives: how do we make sense of the complexity of organisational life?

Why do we work? How do different generations engage with work?

The rise of the BlackBerry: have we moved from the workplace to the 24/7 workspace?

Organisational time: is work life-balance a pipe dream?

After multiculturalism where now for organisational equality, diversity and inclusion?

Corporate Social Responsibility: how do organisations relate to wider stakeholders?

Customer, client or 'partner'? Co-creation as the dynamic for growth.

Beyond the 'ivory tower': how do we relate organisational theory to practice?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One formative piece of coursework to be submitted in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed references and class topics are distributed in the first lecture of the series. The following represents some key readings from the course:

Issues in Social Psychology: Group Dynamics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ilka Gleibs, QUE 3.21

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible.

Pre-requisites: Students who come to this course without any background in social psychology are expected to familiarise themselves with the relevant literature. To this end, we strongly suggest that those students read the following books:

Hogg, MA & Vaughan, G. (eds) (2014). Social Psychology. 7th edition. Harlow: Prentice Hall.

Brown, R. (2000). Group processes: Dynamics within and between groups. 2nd edition. Oxford: Blackwell Publisher.

Course content: Group dynamics and interpersonal skills are an essential element in any successful organisation (in the broadest sense) and often provide a competitive advantage in managing organisations. Group dynamics directly affect the ability of a team to think, learn, and innovate together.

This course provides students with a critical understanding of the different theories and practices associated with group dynamics. The objectives of the course are two-fold:

- To introduce past and present theories of group dynamics by introducing concepts used by psychologists to understand and improve group behaviour.
- To apply and critically evaluate how group dynamics theories help us to explain and predict real-life experience

Therefore the course aims at highlighting that a better understanding of key social psychological concepts can contribute to the overall management and effectiveness of organisations and groups in various settings.

Some topics that will be covered: Why group dynamics? Influence and Power; Identity and Inclusion; Crowds and collective behaviour; The 'Social Cure'- importance of groups for health; Performance and Decision-making; Diversity management

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: Introduction to the topic:

Knowledge Processes in Organizations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lucia Garcia-Lorenzo QUE.3.23

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course focuses on the processes of knowing and learning to examine the varied ways in which people work together in a number of contexts, from project teams within single organisations to inter-organisational partnerships, networks and alliances. It offers students' a theoretical and practical understanding about how organisations construct, disseminate and share knowledge in those settings.

Concretely, the course addresses the following questions: 1) What is organisational knowledge? Lectures will explore the differences and overlaps between personal, social/organisational and cultural knowledge and between the processes of learning and knowing.

2) How do we create new knowledge in organisations? To answer this question we will look into processes of learning, creativity, innovation and entrepreneurship. 3) How can we efficiently share/transmit knowledge in organisations? The course will address the challenges generated through the use of new technologies in the work place, the use of stories and narratives as a mode of knowledge transmission, the development of collaborative practices, power relations in organisations, etc. 4) How do we 'store' and use current organisational and personal knowledge?

To answer this question lectures will address the uses of organisational history and memory as well as look into how we practice knowledge in every day organisational work.

The focus of the course is both theoretical and practical. Students will be expected to engage with both current theoretical debates and emerging practical issues in organisational life.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students will be expected to make extended use of the course intranet - for on-line discussions and group presentations.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each topic, the following are introductory texts of general use: Amabile, T.M. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible.

Course content: This course teaches on theory and research from the field of organisational and social decision-making. It is primarily focused on high-risk organisational settings, and explores contexts where there is uncertainty, high-consequences for failure, and complex social systems. PB427 provides a historical introduction to decision-making, and introduces the core concepts used by social psychologists to understand (and improve) decision-making processes in organisations. It draws upon the social, cognitive and organisational psychology literatures, and considers the core concepts and tools used to understand, research, and support decision-making in organisations. These theories and tools are contextualized through empirical and case study examples taken from domains such as finance, healthcare, the energy industry, government, and the military. Students will be encouraged to take a critical perspective, and to consider how the principles taught on the course can be applied to (and used to improve) a variety of social or organisational scenarios. The course will cover psychology (or 'Human Factors') concepts such as: intuitive and analytical forms of decision-making, individual traits and cognitive factors that influence decision-makers (e.g. biases and emotions), human error and decision-failures, rule breaking, and group decision-making processes (e.g. teamwork, leadership). It will teach on methods for analysing decision errors, identifying decision-making competencies, observing decision-making, and supporting group decision processes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

PB428 Half Unit

Political Psychology: Inequality & Prejudice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cathryn Nicholson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students from all departments may attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the teacher responsible

Course content: The course concerns the social psychological underpinnings of contemporary inequality and conflict between groups. It introduces students to political psychology through theories focused on individual attitudes, intergroup dynamics, and ideological discourse. It then applies these theories to the understanding of contemporary issues concerning intergroup inequality. We will explore the psychosocial processes underpinning racism and prejudice, asking why some conflicts are so intractable, and why some people turn to extremism and violence. We will consider political participation in its conventional and non-conventional forms, asking why people vote the way they do, and when they will turn to the streets to protest. We will also apply a political psychology lens to examine contemporary challenges such as migration, populism, and economic inequality. Students will be equipped with the conceptual tools to consider the psychological antecedents and consequences of inequality in its various forms: to understand why intergroup hierarchy is so persistent, and how it might change.

Lectures aim to achieve a balance between theoretical and applied issues, critically investigating the ways in which psychology can enhance our understanding of intergroup relations and inequality, and also contribute to broader social and political debates.

Through integrating evolutionary, cognitive, social, ideological, and societal perspectives, we will be in a position to take stock of the field of political psychology and where it might go.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two response papers (each 600 words), in which students provide their reflection on and critical reaction to material encountered in the course.

Science, Technology and Resistance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer QUE.3.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Tarde (1980) famously argued that creativity and invention have none or little regularity, while the diffusion of new ideas and practices follows the 'laws of imitation'. This idea remains very influential in the models of diffusion of innovation and the linear model of science translated into technical engineering and marketing. The course will examine critically how this model is only valid when there is no or little resistance in the process which, however, is rare. More common are efforts of techno-scientific mobilisations that encounter resistance, and resistance changes the process by focussing attention where needed; enhancing the 'collective we-image', evaluating on-going efforts of mobilisation and urging strategic adaptation and delays to the plan. We will explore various conceptions of 'resistance' across the social sciences and develop the functional analogue to 'pain' in relation to collective activity (Bauer, 1991, 1995 and 2015). In this light, we will examine public resistance, public engagement with science and its debates and impact on the developments of nuclear power, genetic engineering and information technology leading into current mobilisations for Nanotechnology, synthetic life forms, and robotic automation. Students are expected to appreciate theory driven empirical research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

PB430 Half Unit Social Influence

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer QUE.3.04

This is taught jointly with Dr Gordon Sammut, Lecturer at University of Malta, and Visiting Fellow to the Department of Psychological and Behavioural Science.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course is primarily intended for MSc and PhD students in Social Psychology, in particular those who follow PB404 Social Psychology of Communication or equivalent core modules in Social Psychology. But, conditional to available space, it will be open to any interested MSc or Research Student from across the school.

Course content: This course explores the many modes and modalities of social influence which social psychology has studied and developed concepts for. Modalities of social influence cover processes by which social groups and actors normalise, assimilate and accommodate private and public opinion, attitudes, social stereotypes, institute normative expectations and ways of life, and achieve recognition and social change. We will discuss the social psychological traditions such as rhetoric, crowd behaviour, public opinion, leadership, norms, opinion and attitude formation, majority and minority influence, resistance and obedience to authority, dual-processes of persuasion, mass media effect models; fait-accompli, inter-subjectivity and inter-objectivity. This discussion will unfold under three parallel perspectives: 1) the theoretical and empirical grounding of influence models; 2) the socio-historical context of their formulation, many models came out of WWII and Cold War; and 3) in the mirror of current formulations which often deploy new language without necessarily treading new ground. The course will discuss current ideas and models in comparison with canonical paradigms in order to assess 'real progress' of what often seems 'old wine in new bottles'. The course builds a theoretical integration of modalities of influence in the 'cycle of normativity and common sense' including the normalisation, assimilation and accommodation of social diversity (Sammut & Bauer, 2011). The moral ambiguity of social influence treads a fine line between promoting wellbeing and social recognition, and manipulating beliefs, opinion and attitudes. This raises ethical issues involved in the study and exercise of social influence in the modern public spheres.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Teaching arrangement: the course will be taught as a combination of weekly lecture and discussion seminar. Participants are expected to prepare at least one seminar discussion.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.

Participants will contribute to the reading seminars with a presentation, and they will be able to present an essay plan for formative feedback before the end of term.

Social Psychology of Economic Life: Advanced Topics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Frederic Basso, QU.3.14

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the teacher responsible.

Course content: The course takes the position that social psychology is the key to understanding real-world economic life by taking in account cognitive, affective and social processes. Main concepts: analytic/experiential systems in decision-making, metaphors, images, stories/storytelling, self/extended self in consumption, dramaturgy/staging, social roles, face-to-face interactions, emotional labour/dissonance, gift economy, sharing economy, social group (inclusion/exclusion), stigma, social norms, nudging, disenchantment of the economic world, post-modern hyper-realities, experience economy, resistance to persuasion (inertia, scepticism, reactance), resistance to consumption (avoidance, minimisation, boycott/active rebellion).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each topic, the following are of general use; S E G Lea, R M Tarpy & P Webley, The Individual in the Economy, Cambridge University Press, 1987; A Lewis, P Webley & A Furnham, The New Economic Mind: The social psychology of economic behaviour, Harvester, 1995.

Social Representations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sandra Jovchelovitch QUE.3.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on social representation as a theory in social and cultural psychology and as phenomena in social life. It explores concepts, empirical studies and fields of application of social representations. The course aims to equip students with in-depth understanding of the production, transformation and contestation of representations in public spheres. Through an examination of concepts and key studies in the field, the course explores the dynamics of social thinking and the power of representations to construct meanings and social realities. It highlights process of communication and contestation between different knowledge systems and the dynamics of social change. The course covers: 1) origins and theoretical roots of social representations in the field of socio-cultural psychology and situated cognition; 2) processes and functions of social representation, including dialogicality, cognitive polyphasia, relating to the unfamiliar, semantic enablers and barriers, and the future of common sense vis-a-vis systemic encroachment and artificial intelligence; and 3) ongoing research on how communities think and the transformation of common sense in contemporary societies, in areas such as self and community, cultural encounters/cultural conflict, health, professional practices, urban transformations, social exclusion (these can vary depending on research at hand).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: An essay plan of not more than 500 words is required.

Theory and Practice of Organisation Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caryn Solomon, KSW.5.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The organisation is a social system that is complex, dynamic and ever changing. This course attempts to explore the management of organisational change and development in a practical way. It does this by recognising that there are research-based methodologies for ensuring that the potential inherent in change is harnessed, and that the capacity and potential of the organisation, in the pursuit of a broad range of organisational objectives, are enabled. While it is informed by a number of key theoretical frameworks, Organisation Development comes into its own in application. The aim of the course, therefore, is two fold: first to explore the body of core theory underpinning the practice; second, to examine the practice of Organisation Development as a 'process' (not a 'product' or a 'programme') which fundamentally influences and is influenced by the specific organisational context within which it takes place. Drawing on key theoretical frameworks and the approaches of major practitioners, the course also examines a range of current, best practice socio-psychological interventions. Students will be actively encouraged to relate key theoretical perspectives to organisational challenges covering a range of contemporary issues and contexts.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Lecture and seminar sessions will be fully integrated, combining theory and practice throughout. This means that, in order to cover all the material required for this course, the entire class will be required to attend all sessions – morning and afternoon. There will be no separate, small-group seminars.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Behavioural Science in an Age of New Technology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dario Krpan

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: When psychology and economics got "married", the product was behavioural science. Although this discipline has elevated theoretical and practical understanding of human behaviour to previously unseen heights, recent technological developments have produced new insights in understanding and predicting people's actions that not only supplement traditional tools of behavioural science but also go beyond them. The future of the discipline will therefore likely depend on how effectively behavioural scientists can harness new developments in technology to understand and change the way people act. The aim of this course is to a) Introduce major technological advancements that are relevant for predicting, influencing, and understanding human behaviour; b) outline how they supplement and extend commonly used tools of behavioural change; and c) examine how they can be used to propel behavioural science into the future. The course will tackle behavioural science in relation to motion tracking, virtual environments, social robotics, social networks, and other relevant developments in information technology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. The course is delivered in Lent Term over 10 lectures of 1 hour (1 per week, over weeks 1-5, and 7-11) and 10 weekly seminar sessions of 1 hour (1 per week, over weeks 1-5, and 7-11). Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Formative coursework will serve as your preparation for the summative assignment. You will need to create a 5-minute presentation on the topic of the summative assignment: Propose an intervention that relies on technological tools that were either covered throughout the course or that you identified through personal search to create behavioural change in an applied setting of your choice (e.g. your organisation, personal life; you can select any setting you desire). In the presentation, you will need to a) Introduce the behaviour you want to tackle and argue why changing this behaviour would be important; b) Present your intervention that uses technological tools to change the behaviour and c) argue why this intervention would be effective based on your knowledge of behavioural science gained through the class material and personal literature search.

Similar to the summative assignment, the presentation will be delivered in a video format: you will be given a clear step-by-step guide describing how to produce the presentation in a video format (we will go through this guide during a seminar to make sure it is clear to everyone how the summative assignment should be produced). The main aim of the formative assignment is for me to evaluate your approach to tackling points a), b), and c) mentioned above so I can give you relevant feedback that will help you when preparing the summative presentation, and also for you to get comfortable with producing the video presentation.

The deadline for submitting the formative assignment will be during week 11 (Lent term). The exact date of submission will be given to you closer to the start of the course.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

The aim of the summative assessment will be to propose an intervention that relies on technological tools that were either covered throughout the course or that you identified through personal search to produce behavioural change in an applied setting of your choice (e.g. your organisation, personal life; you can select any setting you desire). This intervention will be conveyed in the form of a 15 minute presentation that will count as your summative assignment. More precisely, in the presentation, you will need to a) Introduce the behaviour you want to tackle and argue why changing this behaviour would be important; b) Present your intervention that uses technological tools to change the behaviour and c) argue why this intervention would be effective based on your knowledge of behavioural science gained through the class material and personal literature search.

The presentation will be delivered in a video format: you will be given a clear step-by-step guide describing how to produce the presentation in a video format (we will go through this guide during a seminar to make sure it is clear to everyone how the summative assignment should be produced). Together with the video presentation, you will need to submit an annotated bibliography that contains a) a list of scientific references you used for the presentation; and b) a short text below each reference (1-2 sentences) describing why exactly the reference is important in the context of your presentation. The main purposes of the annotated bibliography will be to demonstrate the academic background upon which your presentation was built.

The deadline for submitting the summative assignment will be in Week 4 of the summer term. The exact date of submission will be given to you closer to the start of the course.

PB452 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Behavioural Science for Health

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi Old 2.35

Dr Matteo M Galizzi

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Psychology of Economic Life, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: No pre-requisites required.

Course content: The course aims to introduce to students the main tools and principles of behavioural sciences and the key state-of-the-art applications to health economics, policy, practice, and management. The course is designed to enhance students' abilities to apply rigorously and critically behavioural science tools to concrete challenges in the health area, to critically identify and measure the behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change, and to account for them in the design and interpretation of the behavioural science intervention. It covers principles of behavioural science; behavioural health economics and policy, and behavioural experiments in health; behavioural principles for information policies in health; financial and non-financial incentives in health; nudging behavioural change in health; behavioural principles for regulation of health and healthcare; risk preferences and health; time preferences and health; social preferences and health; behavioural spillovers in health.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

The course is delivered in Lent Term over 10 lectures of 1 hour (1 per week, over weeks 1-5, and 7-11) and 10 weekly seminar sessions of 1 hour (1 per week, over weeks 1-5, and 7-11).

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

This extended content has been included for the information of the GSSC. A shortened version of this content will be provided for the published course guide:

Lectures and Seminars:

Week 1

Lecture 1: Introduction to the course. Principles of behavioural science. Dual processing models: system 1 and system 2.

Emotions and affect heuristic in decision-making. Fluency and priming. Mental accounting. An overview of the key principles of behavioural science.

Seminar 1: How to practically use principles of behavioural science in health and healthcare contexts: the MINDSPACE, EAST, and SALIENT mnemonics.

Week 2

Lecture 2: Behavioural health policy: an operational definition.

Behavioural insights and behavioural methods. Randomised controlled experiments in health: a taxonomy and a toolkit spanning the lab to the field. Behavioural experiments in health: online, lab, lab-field, artefactual field, framed field, natural field, and naturally occurring experiments. Population-level randomised controlled natural field experiments in health: the RAND Health Insurance experiment, the Oregon Health Insurance experiment, the China Rural Health Care and Health Care Reforms experiments. Ten misunderstandings about behavioural experiments in health, and ten directions for research and policy applications.

A taxonomy of behavioural health policies: information policies, financial and non-financial incentives, nudges, and behavioural regulation in health.

Seminar 2: When and how to practically use the different types of behavioural experiments in health and healthcare contexts: guidelines, examples, tips, rules of thumb.

Week 3

Lecture 3: Behavioural principles for information policies in health. Designing information policies in health around behavioural principles: saliency, framing, labelling, anchoring, priming, simplification, curiosity, information avoidance, default options. The role of reminders. Behavioural experiments on health informational policies: a review of lab and field evidence on nutrition, weight loss, physical exercise, smoking cessation, flu vaccination, HIV prevention, cancer screening, medications adherence, drugs and treatment compliance, attendance of medical and diagnostic appointments, health insurance behaviour, blood and organs donation, physicians' decisions and behaviour.

Seminar 3: How to practically use behavioural science principles for information policies in health: saliency, framing, labelling, anchoring, priming, simplification, curiosity, information avoidance, default options, reminders.

Week 4

Lecture 4: Financial and non-financial incentives in health.

Incentives for health behaviours and for healthcare professionals. Monetary incentives (e.g. cash payments, deductions, matching) and non-monetary incentives (e.g. in-kind transfers, vouchers) in health. Linear and non-linear monetary incentives in health. One-off and repeated monetary incentives in health. Short-run and long-run incentives in health. Monetary, 'symbolic', and 'behaviourally super-charged' incentives in health. Designing incentives in health around behavioural principles: saliency, risk aversion, loss aversion, bracketing, social norms, peer pressure, regret aversion, overweighting of small probabilities, over-confidence, over-optimism, time-inconsistency, curiosity. Behavioural experiments on incentives in health: a review of lab and field evidence on nutrition, weight loss, physical exercise, smoking cessation, flu vaccination, HIV prevention, cancer screening, medications adherence, drugs and treatment compliance, attendance of medical and diagnostic appointments, health insurance behaviour, blood and organs donation, physicians' decisions and behaviour, healthcare management and financing.

Seminar 4: How to practically use incentives in health applications: incentive design, saliency, risk aversion, loss aversion, bracketing, social norms, peer pressure, regret aversion, over-weighting of small probabilities, over-confidence, over-optimism, time-inconsistency, curiosity.

Week 5

Lecture 5: Nudging behavioural change in health. Designing nudges in health around behavioural principles: choice architecture, saliency, priming, reference dependence, anchoring, simplification, default options. The role of time-inconsistency, commitment, and pre-commitment devices, implementation intentions, and habits formation. Behavioural experiments on nudges in health: a review of lab and field evidence on nutrition, weight loss, physical exercise, smoking cessation, flu vaccination, HIV prevention, cancer screening, medications adherence, drugs and treatment compliance, attendance of medical and diagnostic appointments, health insurance behaviour, blood and organs donation, physicians' decisions and behaviour, healthcare management and financing.

Seminar 5: How to practically use nudges in health applications: choice architecture, saliency, priming, reference dependence, anchoring, simplification, default options, commitment and pre-commitment devices, implementation intentions, habits formation.

Week 6

No lecture: Reading week

Week 7

Lecture 6: Behavioural principles for regulation of health and healthcare. Behavioural experiments on health and healthcare regulation: lab and field evidence on sin taxes (e.g. 'fat taxes', 'soda taxes'), 'thin subsidies', food super-sizing, food advertising, smoking bans, vaccination and prevention policies, generic drugs, transport and urban planning, health insurance behaviour, blood and organs donation, end of life decisions, healthcare management and financing. Behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change: risk preferences, time preferences, social preferences, behavioural spillovers.

Seminar 6: Group presentations.

Week 8

Lecture 7: Risk preferences in health. Measuring expected utility theory (EUT) and non-EUT risk preferences models in health. Incentive-compatible and self-reported measures of risk preferences in health. Domain-specificity, convergent validity, temporal stability, and external validity of risk preferences measures. Risk preferences, risk perception, prudence, temperance, over-confidence, and locus-of-control in health. Neurobiological aspects of risk preferences. Evidence on risk preferences in health: a review of lab and field experiments, with a special attention on external validity. Risk preferences as behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change. Accounting for risk preferences heterogeneity when designing information policies, financial and non-financial incentives, nudges, and behavioural regulation in health.

Seminar 7: How to practically measure risk preferences in health and healthcare contexts: the Domain-Specific Risk Taking scale, the scale-based self-assessed measure for willingness to take risks, the trade-off method, the multiple lotteries choice, the balloon task, the binary choice battery, the investment game, the binary lotteries multiple price list method, the bomb risk elicitation task.

Week 9

Lecture 8: Time preferences in health. Measuring exponential and non-exponential discounting models in health: hyperbolic, quasi-hyperbolic, fixed-cost, and Weibull discounting models.

Time-inconsistent preferences, self-control, impulsiveness, and habits formation in health. Incentive-compatible and self-reported measures of time preferences in health. Domain-specificity, convergent validity, temporal stability, and external validity of time preferences measures. Time preferences and subjective time perception in health. Neurobiological aspects of time preferences. Evidence on time preferences in health: a review of lab and field experiments, with a special attention on external validity. Time preferences as behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change. Accounting for time preferences heterogeneity when designing information policies, financial and non-financial incentives, nudges, and behavioural regulation in health.

Seminar 8: How to practically measure time preferences in health and healthcare contexts: the smaller-sooner larger-later binary options multiple price list approach, the converting delay into risk method, the convex time budget method, the binary lottery method, the inter-temporal design of the binary lotteries multiple price list approach, the direct method.

Week 10

Lecture 9: Social preferences in health. Physicians' and healthcare professionals' social preferences. Social preferences, motivations, responsiveness to incentives, and social value orientation in health. Social, distributional, and re-distributional preferences in health and healthcare. Measuring altruism, fairness, reciprocity, trust, and cooperation in health and healthcare contexts. Domain-specificity, convergent validity, temporal stability, and external validity of social preferences measures. Neurobiological aspects of social preferences. Evidence on social preferences in health: a review of lab and field experiments, with a special attention on external validity. Social preferences as behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change. Accounting for social preferences heterogeneity when designing information policies, financial and non-financial incentives, nudges, and behavioural regulation in health.

Seminar 9: How to practically measure social preferences in health and healthcare contexts: dictator game, ultimatum game, trust game, public good game, and coordination games in health.

Week 11

Lecture 10: Behavioural spillovers in health. A definition and a taxonomy: promoting, permitting, and purging behavioural spillovers in health. Unintended consequences and spillover effects of informational policies, incentives, and nudges in health. The untapped potential of longitudinal lab and field experiments and of 'behavioural data linking' for testing and measuring behavioural spillovers in health. Behavioural experiments on behavioural spillovers in health: a review of lab and field evidence on nutrition, physical exercise, smoking, health insurance behaviour. Behavioural spillovers as behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change. Accounting for behavioural spillovers when designing information policies, financial and non-financial incentives, nudges, and behavioural regulation in health. Wrap-up of the course.

Seminar 10: How to practically test and measure behavioural spillovers in health applications: longitudinal lab, field, and lab-field experiments; linking behavioural experiments to longitudinal surveys, administrative records, online panels, biomarkers banks, smart cards and scan data, and other big data sources.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 15 presentations in the LT.

For the formative assignment, you will work in small groups (3-4 students) to produce a presentation in which you will need to propose a design and implementation of a possible behavioural science intervention in health. The structure of the presentation will be as follows: a) Introduce the healthcare settings and institutional constraints, the health policy or management challenges, and the specific research question; b) Describe how to design and implement a behavioural science intervention to answer that question; and c) Explain which research design, which specific behavioural science principles, and which practical implementation tools will be employed.

At the end of the presentation, each of you will need to clarify your exact contribution to the group work. This will involve specifying the aspect of the formative assignment that was under your lead. You will be expected to divide the groupwork amongst yourselves in such a way that each of you has a different task and leads the contribution to the whole groupwork in relation to that task. The expected length of the presentation is 15 minutes. You will be expected to submit the formative assignment in the last seminar of the course.

To assist you throughout the group work process and increase the effectiveness of your teamwork experience, we will provide you with resources that will make the organizational part of the group work easier. The resources will involve a teamwork checklist and guidelines for managing the groupwork process.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

You will be expected to write a 3,000 word report to be submitted at the end of Lent Term. The reports will need to be submitted individually and will require you to report on your own contribution to the groupwork undertaken as part of the formative assignment. More precisely, you will start by giving a brief overview of how your group tackled the four points crucial to the formative task: a) Introduce the healthcare settings and institutional constraints, the health policy or management challenges, and the specific research question; b) Describe how to design and implement a behavioural science intervention to answer that question; and c) Explain which research design, which specific behavioural science principles, and which practical implementation tools will be employed; d) Discuss the behavioural mechanisms potentially leading to heterogeneity in behavioural change, and how the behavioural science intervention aims at measuring them and accounting for them; e) Discuss the contribution of the behavioural health intervention in the context of the evaluation and synthesis of the existing evidence on the effectiveness of similar behavioural interventions. Then, you will proceed by providing an in-depth exposition of your own contribution to the groupwork in relation to the part you oversaw. In the report, we will expect you to use in-text scholarly citations and provide a reference list at the end. You will be expected to submit the summative report by the end of the Lent Term.

PH400

Philosophy of Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Roman Frigg LAK 101

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: None.

Course content: Science is chock full of miraculous predictions, shocking revolutions, and unexpected results that few science fiction writers could have ever dreamed of. What makes science so special? This course is a tour of the philosophical underpinnings of modern science. No background in any science is needed for this course; everything you need to know will be covered.

Indicative topics include: Theory and Observation: Hume's problem of induction and Goodman's new riddle of induction, Popper's falsificationism, underdetermination of theory by evidence, the positive instance account of confirmation, Bayesianism. Laws of Nature: the regularity view of laws, laws as universals, the best systems account, instrumentalism. Explanation: the DN model of explanation, statistical explanation, causal explanation, unification. Intertheory relations: reductionism and pluralism. Realism versus Antirealism: Scientific realism and antirealism, the no miracles argument, inference to the best explanation, the pessimistic meta-induction, reductive empiricism, constructive empiricism, the natural ontological attitude, entity realism, structural realism, Kuhn and scientific revolutions. Sociological approaches to science: Social constructivism, feminism. Causation: Hume's, Mill's, Mackie's accounts of causation, counterfactual theories, probabilistic causality and manipulability accounts, transference accounts. Philosophy of a special science: Space and Time in Newton's physics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write four essays (two in MT and two in LT), submit a few short answers before each seminar, and participate in seminar discussion.

Indicative reading: T S Kuhn, The Structure of Scientific Revolutions; K R Popper, Conjectures and Refutations; B van Fraassen, The Scientific Image; N Cartwright, How the Laws of Physics Lie.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Scientific Revolutions: Philosophical and Historical Issues

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course examines a number of fundamental issues in philosophy of science, as they arise from instances of important theory-changes (so-called 'scientific revolutions') in the history of science. It is therefore by no means a 'straight' course in history of science: it looks at historical episodes to test and/or illustrate philosophical theses about science and its development.

1. The Copernican revolution: the switch from the Ptolemaic geocentric view of the world to the Copernican heliocentric one was probably the greatest revolution in human thought ever: What justified the switch? Was Ptolemaic theory definitively refuted by the data? Was Copernican theory simpler? Was the Church's view that Copernican theory should only be thought of as an instrument for calculating astronomical data purely theologically motivated or does it have some scientific rationale? What role was played in the eventual acceptance of the Copernican view by predictive success? Do we need to invoke social or other non-intellectual factors to explain why this 'revolution' occurred?

2. Galileo: Galileo and the telescope: are all observations 'theory-laden' and does this mean that there is a subjective element to all theory-choices? Galileo and the argument for his law of free fall: can theories be 'deduced from the phenomena'?

3. The Newtonian revolution: What was the relationship between Newton's theory and Kepler's and Galileo's laws? What does this tell us about theory-change in general?

4. The chemical revolution: What were Priestley and Lavoisier's experiments, and what exactly lead scientists to supplant phlogiston by oxygen? What does this tell us about theory change in general? In particular, in what sense was the replacement of phlogiston by oxygen rational?

5. 19th Century revolutions in Optics: the switches from the corpuscular theory to the wave theory of light and from the wave theory to the electromagnetic theory. What do these cases of theory-change tell us about the twin theses of scientific rationality and scientific realism?

6. The Darwinian Revolution: This revolution certainly ranks alongside the Copernican one in terms of its impact on man's view of herself. But debates about the scientific credentials of Darwin's theory began immediately on the publication of Darwin's work and continue to this day. Is Darwinian theory unfalsifiable (or even just one big tautology)? Can 'scientific' creationists explain everything that Darwin can? What objections were raised by Darwin's critics to particular aspects of Darwinian theory? Were these valid objections and, in so far as they were, have they now been resolved?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework: 2 x 1500 word essays per term.

Indicative reading: Background reading: T S Kuhn, The Structure of Scientific Revolutions; I Lakatos 'Falsification and the Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes' in his The Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes, Philosophical Papers 1; G Holton (revised by S Brush): Theories and Concepts in Physical Science; P Duhem The Aim and Structure of Physical Theory; P Kitcher Abusing Science: The Case against Creationism, K R Popper, Conjectures and Refutations; P Feyerabend Against Method. Recommended reading: The central text for the first part of the course is T S Kuhn, The Copernican Revolution, Harvard University Press. The central text on the Darwinian revolution will be P Kitcher, Abusing Science, the Case Against Creationism. MIT Press.

There will be lecture slides on each topic including (i) a list of essential reading and suggestions for further reading and (ii) 'study questions' to guide your thought. Aside from the above reading for the section of the course on the Copernican revolution and the Darwinian revolution, reading for particular topics will be in the form of articles and selections from books. These will be made available electronically on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Philosophy of the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mattia Gallotti

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines philosophical problems of social science concerning the nature of social facts and social scientific theory. The first part of the course will focus on traditional questions of scientific method about the nature of understanding and the kind of knowledge the social sciences should, or can, aim for; as well as on questions of ontology pertaining to the nature of the social world and the classic dispute about 'what there is' in society. The overarching goal is to provide an intellectual geography of the philosophy of the social sciences, to which students will refer in the second part of the course when specific philosophical issues will be closely analysed and discussed. Contents to be covered in the second term will be structured around three main themes: action, rationality and intelligibility; the relationship between mind and society; the scope, aim and prospects of critical and normative approaches to social science theory and practice.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write three essays: two in Michaelmas term and one in Lent term.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Indicative readings include: Alex Rosenberg, Philosophy of Social Science (Fifth edition); Harold Kincaid, Philosophical Foundations of the Social Sciences; Daniel Steel and Francesco Guala (eds.), The Philosophy of Social Science Reader; Michael Martin and Lee McIntyre (eds.), Readings in the Philosophy of Social Science.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the LT.

PH413

Philosophy of Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johanna Thoma LAK 4.02
Dr Campbell Brown

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics A (EC100) or an equivalent university-level introductory course in economics.

Course content: This course provides a philosophical discussion of the methods and normative commitments of contemporary economics.

The first term will focus on economic methodology and the foundations of utility theory, with an eye to important current debates in economics. We will discuss questions such as: What is utility, and how do economists measure it? Does evidence of widespread 'irrationality' from behavioural economics undermine standard microeconomic theory? Can idealised models teach us anything about real-world phenomena? If yes, how? How should we measure important economic variables, such as inflation? How do we best find out what interventions work in development? Does macroeconomics need microfoundations? Is the economics profession to blame for its failure to predict the financial crisis? The second term will focus on welfare economics, and the ethical assumptions and implications of economics. We will cover questions such as: Is getting what you want always good for you? Can you be harmed by something if you never know about it? Does it make sense to say that eating pizza gives me more happiness than going to the movies gives you? Is it possible to combine the preferences of individuals into an overall 'social' preference? Does it matter if the well-being of some people is less than that of others? When and why are markets desirable? Is paternalism always bad, and does welfare economics really avoid it? How should we resolve collective action problems? What is a fair way to distribute the tax burden?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: D. Hausman, The Philosophy of Economics: An Anthology; J. L. Bermudez, Decision Theory and Rationality; J. Cohen and W. Easterly, What Works in Development: Thinking

Big and Thinking Small; H. Davies, The Financial Crisis - Who is to Blame?; D. Hausman and M. McPherson, Economic Analysis, Moral Philosophy, and Public Policy; D. Gauthier, Morals by Agreement; D. Satz, Why Some Things Should Not Be for Sale.

Assessment: Exam (65%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Presentation (10%) in the LT.

Philosophy and Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Campbell Brown

This course is taught by Prof. Alex Voorhoeve (weeks 1-5 of Michaelmas Term); Prof. Michael Otsuka (weeks 6-10 of MT); Dr. Johanna Thoma (weeks 1-5 of Lent Term); and Dr Campbell Brown (weeks 6-10 of Lent Term).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course offers critical reflection on the design and evaluation of public policies from the perspective of moral and political philosophy. To this end, we study a range of theories and concepts that are used in policy evaluation. We often discuss and evaluate them by focusing on specific policy proposals. The course addresses questions such as the following.

- What is a correct public measure of well-being?
- Should we distribute resources in health care to produce the most well-being overall or should we also aim to limit inequalities?
- Should people be left to bear the consequences of their free choices?
- May the government force you to buy health insurance?
- Is torture ever justified?
- Do prosperous countries have a right to close their borders to immigrants from poor countries?
- Should hate speech be protected by freedom of speech?
- Should the development of new drugs be left to private companies rewarded by patent protection?
- What is the optimal population size and what policies may the state pursue in order to achieve it?
- Should higher education be financed by student loans or general taxation?
- Should we be free to act as we choose so long as we do not harm others?
- Is killing morally worse than letting die?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed list of readings will be available on moodle. The following is an indicative sample of readings that may be discussed in the course.

- Greg Bognar and Iwao Hirose (2014). The Ethics of Health Care Rationing.
- A. Voorhoeve (2018) 'May a Government Mandate More Comprehensive Insurance than People Want for Themselves?' Oxford Studies in Political Philosophy.
- Michael Rustin (2016), 'The neoliberal university and its alternatives', Soundings
- Ronald Dworkin et al (1997) 'Assisted Suicide: The Philosophers' Brief'

- Carol Kates (2004). 'Reproductive Liberty and Overpopulation' Environmental Ethics.
- John Stuart Mill (1859), On Liberty
- Jonathan Wolff (2011), Ethics and Public Policy: A Philosophical Inquiry
- Joseph Carens (1987), 'Aliens and Citizens: The Case for Open Borders', The Review of Politics
- Jeff McMahan (2008), 'Torture in Theory and Practice', Public Affairs Quarterly

Philosophy, Morals and Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Otsuka LAK.3.03

The course is taught by Prof. Michael Otsuka (weeks 1-5 MT and 1-10 LT) and Dr. Campbell Brown (weeks 6-10 MT).

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Michaelmas Term: Morals (Michael Otsuka weeks 1-5; Campbell Brown weeks 6-10)

In weeks 1-5 of MT, Michael Otsuka will discuss the following topics in normative ethics regarding the morality of harming and saving from harm: (i) Should one save the greater number from harm?; (ii) Can contractualism justify the saving of the greater number when and only when we ought to?; (iii) Should one be solely concerned with how badly off people are, or should one also care about inequality?; (iv) Does it make a moral difference that a person is less well off than she could have been? (a.k.a. 'the non-identity problem'); (v) Why is it permissible to divert a tram so that it runs over one rather than five, whereas it is impermissible to kill a single individual in order to redistribute his vital organs to save the lives of five? (a.k.a. 'the trolley problem').

In weeks 6-10 of MT, Campbell Brown, will provide an introduction to metaethics. This branch of philosophy explores the fundamental nature of morality. When we contemplate 'first-order' moral questions – e.g., 'Is torture always morally wrong?' – we are often led to 'second-order', or metaethical, questions. Do first-order questions have objectively correct answers? If one person believes torture is always wrong, while another person denies this, must one of these people be mistaken? Can such disagreements be resolved by rational argument and scientific investigation? Or are these merely 'matters of opinion', where one person's belief is no more or less 'true' than any other's? Can the members of one culture legitimately criticise the moral norms of another culture? If morality is not objective, does it follow that public policy should not be based on morality?

Lent Term: Politics (Michael Otsuka all ten weeks)

Lent Term will be devoted to the topics of justice and legitimacy. We will begin with the following questions: What does justice require? Does it demand the redistribution of income from rich to poor in order to create a more egalitarian society? We'll discuss the answers to these questions that John Rawls and Robert Nozick have provided. Rawls argues that such taxation is just, since it would be endorsed under fair conditions in which people are deprived of knowledge of whether they happen to be rich or poor, talented or unskilled. Nozick argues that redistributive taxation is unjust because on a par with forced labour. In addition, we'll consider their answers to the following questions: When is it unjust to constrain the liberties of some in order to prevent harm to others? What sort of equality of opportunity for jobs and university places does justice require? Are people entitled to compensation for historical injustices? What are the just conditions of acquisition of unowned natural resources? In answering the last question, we will also draw on the writings of John Locke, whose related views in his Second Treatise on the legitimacy of government we will also consider, along with the Locke-inspired views of Thomas Jefferson.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Seminars PH416 20 x one-and-a-half hours (MT, LT); Students are strongly advised to attend PH214 Morality and Values lectures, 20 x one hour (MT, LT).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: John Taurek, 'Should the Numbers Count?' Philosophy & Public Affairs, 6 (1977): 293-316; Derek Parfit, 'Equality and Priority', Ratio, 10 (1997): 202-221; Derek Parfit, Reasons and Persons; Geoff Sayre-McCord, 'Metaethics', The Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy <<http://plato.stanford.edu/archives/sum2014/entries/metaethics/>>; Michael Smith, The Moral Problem; J.L. Mackie, Ethics: Inventing Right and Wrong; John Rawls, A Theory of Justice, revised edition; Robert Nozick, Anarchy, State and Utopia; John Locke, Second Treatise of Government.

Dissertation Seminar - Economics and Philosophy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley LAK.203

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is intended to develop the ability to make philosophical arguments, to write good philosophical essays, and to present ideas effectively. It covers topics in the philosophy of economics and will serve to prepare students for research and for writing their dissertation.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the MT, 1 presentation in the LT and 1 essay in the ST.

Indicative reading: Readings will be chosen by the seminar participants.

Assessment:

This course is not assessed.

Set Theory and Further Logic

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor David Makinson, LAK 3.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Introductory level logic to a level equivalent to a grade of at least 65 in either Logic (PH101) or Formal Methods of Philosophical Argumentation (PH419).

Course content: The aim of the course is to familiarize students of philosophy with the essentials of naive set theory and formal logic. From set theory, the course covers both 'working' set theory as a tool for use in formal reasoning, and 'conceptual' set theory of philosophical interest in its treatment of infinite sets, cardinals and ordinals. From logic, it begins by reviewing and extending basic material on propositional and first-order logic from both semantic and axiomatic viewpoints, continues with the celebrated limitative theorems of Tarski and Gödel, and ends with introductions to modal, intuitionistic and relevance logics. Throughout, a balance is sought between formal proof and intuition, as also between technical competence and conceptual reflection.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: In each term, students are required to submit solutions to two problem-sets, and write one 1,500 word essay on a topic from a list or proposed by the student and approved by the instructor.

Indicative reading: Textbooks: Makinson, David Sets, Logic and Maths for Computing (2nd edition 2012 Springer); Halmos, Paul Naive Set Theory (Springer reprint 2011); Sider, Theodore Logic for Philosophy (OUP 2010). Specific sections of these textbooks that are relevant to the weekly topics will be indicated on the Moodle page for the course.

Complementary reading: Cameron, Peter Sets, Logic and Categories (Springer 1999); Crossley, John What is Mathematical Logic? (Dover reprint 1991); Goble, Lou (ed) The Blackwell Guide to Philosophical Logic (Blackwell 2001). Additional material on specific topics (notable Gödel's theorem, relevance logic) will be posted on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Dissertation Seminar - Philosophy and Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Susanne Burri

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Aim: This course helps students on the MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy develop their philosophical research and writing skills. It clarifies expectations surrounding the MSc dissertation, which is an extended piece of writing that students are expected to complete over the summer. One of the course's main aims is to help student settle for a relevant dissertation topic that they feel comfortable with.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The course starts with a five hour module on argumentative writing in philosophy (weeks 1-5). This is followed by discussions of past MSc dissertations, and short student presentations on possible research ideas (weeks 6-10). During Lent Term, students are required to present their MSc dissertations as work in progress.

Formative coursework: Presentation of own dissertation as work in progress

Optional draft of up to 6000 words due at the end of June

Indicative reading: None.

Assessment:

Dissertation Seminar - Philosophy of Social Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof. J. McKenzie Alexander, LAK 5.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is intended to develop the ability to make philosophical arguments and to write structured philosophical essays. It will serve to prepare students for research and writing their dissertation. In Michaelmas term, the first few meetings will cover philosophical and argumentative writing, with a number of in-class exercises. Then we will discuss the structure and content of an MSc dissertation in Philosophy and the grading rubric used for marking dissertations. The remainder of Michaelmas term will cover possible thesis topics in the philosophy of social science, with group presentations. In Lent term, seminars will cover topics that are chosen by MSc students for their theses.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A number of assignments whose completion will aid the writing of the dissertation will be set over the course of MT and LT.

Assessment:

This course is not assessed.

Scientific Method and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katie Steele

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also open to all LSE MSc and research students.

Course content: Policy decisions should be responsive to our best evidence. But what does this mean? How should we negotiate conflicting sources of evidence? And whose responsibility is it to link policy and evidence?

These questions reflect the two main topics of the course.

The first topic concerns the quality, strength and relevance of the available evidence with respect to a given policy question. This is a central issue in the 'evidence-based' policy-and-medicine movement. Are randomised controlled trials really the gold standard? Can evidence be statistically significant without being scientifically or practically significant, and vice versa? What is the role of quantitative versus qualitative evidence in establishing causal claims? How do general causal laws bear on individual cases, and vice versa? Can some evidence be disregarded due to cultural and political biases?

The second topic concerns the roles and responsibilities of scientists, policy-makers and citizens alike in enhancing evidence-based policy making. What does it mean to say that there is a scientific consensus? Does expert knowledge of scientists constitute a threat to democratic processes? What is the 'Precautionary Principle' and does it provide a way forward when there is little evidence available? To what extent should individual rights be compromised to enable scientific research? What issues arise when scientists interpret and measure ethically-loaded concepts like poverty, well-being or bio-diversity? Is science a 'public good' and what does this mean for how it should be managed?

Examples referred to in the course are drawn from various areas of science in policy-making, including climate, conservation, international development, poverty, education, and health.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful background readings are: Cartwright, N. and Hardie, J. (2012) Evidence-Based Policy: A Practical Guide to Doing it Better; Mackie, J.L. (1980) The Cement of the Universe; Howson, C. and Urbach, P. (1993) Scientific

Business and Organisational Ethics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Susanne Burri

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MSc in Risk and Finance and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Some tough-minded people believe that "business ethics" is a contradiction in terms. They argue that business is like a game where winning means making as much money as possible. These tough-minded people claim that whoever thinks otherwise — whoever thinks that business is also about treating others respectfully — is either naive, or deluded, or both. What people who argue in this way don't usually realise is that they are, in fact, making an argument within business ethics while they are denying that "business ethics" exists. To assert that business is a game where winning means making as much money as possible is to claim that when it comes to business, everyone should, or is at least permitted to, pay attention only to their personal gain. This statement may be correct, or it may be false. But it is definitely an ethical statement, simply because it makes claims about how people may permissibly behave.

In this introductory course to business ethics, we look at different types of ethical theories, and we apply them to problems that tend to arise in business contexts. The primary aim of the course is not to present you with solutions or dogmatic guidance, but to teach you to think critically, so that towards the end of the course, you will no longer be satisfied with simple answers to difficult problems. Participating in this course will help you sharpen your analytical skills. You will also become more experienced at expressing your thoughts clearly and concisely, both in writing and in discussion.

Topics discussed in the context of this course include:

- What are the moral responsibilities of managers? Is Milton Friedman correct that the main purpose of business is to increase profits?
- What, if anything, is wrong with exploitation? If sweatshop workers voluntarily choose to work under bad conditions because it is their best shot at having a decent life, isn't it wrong to outlaw sweatshop labour and rob the workers of this opportunity?
- If you want to live a morally good life, what career should you pursue? Is William MacAskill right that you should consider working for a hedge fund, and then give a large part of your earnings away to charities?
- Do employers have a duty to promote employee happiness? According to the ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle, happiness is the ultimate goal of all human beings. But is everyone responsible for their own happiness, or are employers required to make their employees happy as well?
- To what extent are the large pay packages that CEOs receive justified? What makes a wage fair?

Required readings amount to about two to three papers per week.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One essay of 2000 words.

Genes, Brains and Society

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Birch

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None.

Course content: This course examines, from a philosophical perspective, the ways in which recent developments in genetics and neuroscience challenge our conceptions of what we are — and what we could become.

Topics covered include:

Human nature: Does the concept of 'human nature' have any biological basis? Can we distinguish between those traits which are part of 'human nature' and those which are not? Should we attempt to improve human nature by means of technologies such as gene editing?

Gender and the brain: Are 'sex' and 'gender' the same thing? Are gender categories natural or social? Are there robust psychological differences between men and women? If so, are they explained by genes or by culture? Is gender 'hardwired' into the brain or the product of socialization?

Race and the genome: Do races exist? Is there any objective biological basis for racial categorization, or are races socially constructed? Does the concept of 'race' have a legitimate role in medicine?

Animals and people: What is the evidence for animal sentience? What are the ethical issues surrounding the use of animals in biomedical research? If we could reduce animal suffering through gene editing, should we? If we could replace animal-based meat with artificial meat, should we?

Right and wrong: Has neuroscience shown that morality is more a matter of emotion than reason? Can we use neuroscience to help us choose between ethical theories, or even to help us improve our own moral behaviour?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Lectures: Weeks 1 - 10

Seminars: Weeks 1 - 10

Formative coursework: A critical analysis exercise (1000 words)

Indicative reading: Suggested introductory readings:

Glover, J. (2008) Choosing Children. Fine, C. (2005) Delusions of Gender. James, M. (2011) "Race", in the Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy [online]. Greene, J. D. (2013) Moral Tribes.

Assessment: Essay (45%, 2000 words) and wiki entry (10%) in the LT.

Emotion, Cognition and Behaviour: Science and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Adrian Boutel

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the (i) philosophical and (ii) scientific foundations of contemporary cognitive science with a particular focus on its (iii) ethical, social and political implications. No background in either philosophy or cognitive science is required.

Topics covered include:

Folk psychology and its discontents: We tend think of ourselves, and of others, as more-or-less rational instrumental deliberators, choosing actions that further our goals in light of our beliefs. But is this common-sense understanding a good psychological theory? Or is it, at best, a useful heuristic for dealing with something much more complex?

Cognition as computation: Is the brain (like) a computer? Is computation sufficient for thought? Could computers potentially do all the things our minds do?

Dual-process theories: Do our cognitive processes come in 'fast' and 'slow' varieties? Is the mind partitioned into two systems?

Implicit bias: Could we be unaware of our own racial, gender and other biases? If so, are we responsible for the decisions they influence? What can we do about them?

Thought outside the body: Are thoughts wholly 'in the head'? How might they extend beyond it? Will augmented reality paint our minds onto the world?

Happy societies: Should policymakers aim at increasing the happiness of society? What would this mean, and how would we go about it?

Nonhuman thought: Do we share cognitive capacities with animals? What kind of value judgements are involved in answering that question? And if AI is possible, what happens to us when machines can think better than we can?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Lectures: Weeks 1 - 10

Seminars: Weeks 2 - 11

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word formative essay (which can serve as a draft of the summative essay).

Indicative reading: Suggested introductory reading:

Einstein for Everyone: From time travel to the edge of the universe

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts LAK 5.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites for this course; it is accessible to students of all backgrounds.

Course content: Does the universe have an edge? Is time travel possible? What is a black hole, and in what sense are space, time and gravity a matter of "geometry"? The modern theory of spacetime introduced by Einstein provides a precise framework in which to ask these questions. This course makes their analysis accessible to everyone.

Students will have the opportunity to engage with Einstein's theories of relativity, to use them to analyse philosophical problems, and to examine their philosophical and practical implications. Students will learn to apply these conceptual tools to the analysis of space, time and gravity, as well as to formulate and argue for their own perspectives on the philosophical implications of relativity theory.

One is often faced with unsubstantiated declarations about the implications of Einstein's theories, by both scientists and non-scientists. This course will equip non-scientists with the conceptual tools needed to critically analyse these claims for themselves. It will also provide students with the tools needed to discuss the philosophy of space and time from a modern perspective.

Einstein for Everyone requires absolutely no background in physics or maths.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

In addition to this formative essay, which is due mid-term, students must complete a few short reading questions each week to prepare for discussion in class.

Indicative reading: All weekly readings will all be made available to students on Moodle. As an indicative reading, see Norton, John D. (2017) Einstein for Everyone.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 1500 words) in the MT.

Essay (50%, 1500 words) in January.

Physics and the City: From Quantum Jumps to Stock Market Crashes

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts LAK 5.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites for this course; it is accessible to students of all backgrounds.

Course content: One of the most surprising discoveries of the 20th century is that many things can be described by tiny atoms moving randomly about. Thinking about the physical world in this way led to the invention of modern particle physics. Thinking about the financial world in this way led to modern financial modeling. This course is about some of the philosophical issues underlying the relationship between physics and finance.

Students in this course will explore some of the most important conceptual and philosophical questions underlying physics and finance, like: How are assumptions about randomness compatible with observed forms of determinism? What does it mean to be an atom? How does the quantum world differ from the everyday world? What explains why physical models have unexpected applications in finance? To what extent do such applications help to underpin how the prices of financial instruments are set?

The course will proceed at a conceptual level that is suitable for students of all backgrounds.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

In addition to the formative essay due mid-term, students must complete 2-4 short weekly reading questions to prepare for discussion in class.

Indicative reading: Weekly essential readings will be provided on Moodle, selected individually from various book chapters and journal articles. Some indicative readings include:

- Malkin, Burton G. A random walk down Wallstreet, excerpts.
- Norton, John D. Einstein for Everyone, Chapters 34-37 on Brownian motion and the origins of quantum theory.
- Weatherall, James O. The Physics of Wallstreet.
- Derman, E. My Life as a Quant. Excerpts.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 1500 words) in the LT.

PH432 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Effective Philanthropy: Ethics and Evidence

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Luc Bovens and Mr Stephan Chambers
Professor Bovens will deliver the weekly lectures and the seminars based on lecture material; Stephan Chambers, Marshall Institute Director, will arrange and chair the bi-weekly discussion with leaders in philanthropy.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None.

Course content: The course will address key questions in philosophy and social science concerning philanthropy, including:

- Which motives actually drive philanthropy and which motives should drive it?
- What is the nature and extent of our moral obligations to philanthropy?
- Is the proper aim of philanthropy to 'do the most good'?
- How should the good aimed at be conceived of and measured?
- How, if at all, should people's rights and the risks of causing harm constrain the pursuit of the good?
- What are a charitable organisation's duties of accountability towards its stakeholders, that is, the donors, the recipients and its employees?
- Do we need Randomised Controlled Trials as evidence for the efficacy of philanthropic interventions?
- Which career and personal choices should one make in order to further philanthropic aims?
- Which moral principles govern the relationship between the state and private philanthropy? Between corporations and charities?
- What is the role of foundations in support for the arts?
- How should the recipients of aid be represented in media campaigns of charities addressing global poverty?
- What behavioural techniques can be invoked to increase charitable giving and are these techniques respectful of the freedom and autonomy of the targeted donors?

Learning aims:

- Students will learn about key contemporary debates in the ethics of philanthropy through critical engagement with the philosophical literature.
- Students will learn to employ both social scientific research and normative (ethical and methodological) reasoning to assess philanthropic organisations.
- Students will develop independent research skills. In particular, they will learn how to search for relevant social scientific data and cases.
- Students will develop skills in independent and original philosophical questioning and argumentation. In particular, they will be encouraged to set their own research question and develop independent and original perspectives on existing philosophical theories.

- Students will learn team research for a joint summative research presentation.
- bi-weekly seminars

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

1 hour lecture per week (x 10), fortnightly 1 hour additional 'philanthropy in practice' guest lecture and seminar with leading figures in philanthropy organised by the Marshall Institute; seminars: 1 hour per week (maximum of 15 per seminar).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

This formative essay has a word limit of 2000 words.

Dissertation Seminar - Philosophy of Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Roman Frigg

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy of Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is intended to develop the ability to construct sharp analytic philosophical arguments and to write structured philosophical essays. It will help students to choose the topic of their dissertation, help with how to go about researching the topic and how to write the dissertation (by presentation and criticism of preliminary drafts). The course starts with reviewing the structure and content of an MSc dissertation in Philosophy, and the grading scheme used for marking dissertations. This is followed by presentations by students on topics intended as possible topics of their dissertations. The presentations will be extensively discussed in the seminar by fellow students and in subsequent private meetings with the seminar leader. In Lent Term each student will read two former MSc dissertations with topics close to the interest of the student, and each student will report in the seminar on the merits and weaknesses of the selected works, trying to understand why the chosen dissertations received the marks they did. In the final part of the seminar students will again give presentations on the progress of their research.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A number of assignments - at least one per term - whose completion will aid the research into and writing of the dissertation will be set.

Assessment:

The course is not assessed.

PH456

Rationality and Choice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the theory of rationality and rational decision making. It is in two parts (i) Probability and Decision: Probabilistic thinking, different interpretations of probability, decision making under risk, ignorance and uncertainty, the measurement of belief and desire, paradoxes of expected utility theory. (ii) Social Choice: May's theorem and arguments for majority rule; Arrow's Theorem; the Gibbard-Satterthwaite theorem; interpersonal comparability and Utilitarianism; the theory of judgement aggregation.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will submit a piece of written work each term and/or complete a number of exercises.

Indicative reading: Richard Jeffrey, The Logic of Decision, Michael Resnik, Choices: an introduction to decision theory, Martin Peterson An Introduction to Decision Theory, Amartya Sen Collective Choice and Social Welfare, Duncan Luce and Howard Raiffa Games and Decisions, Wulf Gaertner A Primer in Social Choice Theory, J. S. Kelly Social Choice Theory. An Introduction.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Evidence and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Liam Kofi Bright

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Although the emphasis throughout will be on ideas rather than formal techniques and although all the ideas will be explained simply and intuitively, some of the evidence relevant for policy is evidence about probabilities and so the course will involve issues about the correct interpretation of probability and statistics. Although no detailed formal manipulations will be required, students will need to feel happy thinking about the intuitive ideas underlying probability and statistics.

Course content: Good policy decisions - whether concerning climate, conservation, international development, poverty, education, medicine, or health - require rational deliberation over whether the proposed policy will (or is likely to) bring about the intended outcome. For instance, we might wonder if lowering CO2 emissions will reduce global warming? Or whether smaller class sizes enhance scholastic achievement? The obvious suggestion is that answers to such questions are the result of rational deliberation just in case they are based on good evidence and appropriate reasoning. But what counts as good evidence and appropriate reasoning? And what happens when different kinds of evidence pull in opposite directions? Are certain types of evidence more telling than others? And if so, why? Does evidence that the policy works in one country mean that we should have confidence that it will work in another country? Can the requirements of democracy conflict with respect for expertise? Do the competing value judgements that are at stake in our political or social decisions make a difference to the forms of reasoning that is appropriate? These are some of the central issues addressed in the course. In this course, you can learn how to be 'evidence-savvy', how to ask the right questions about evidence and reasoning as well as how to think about risk-assessment and its relation to policy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful initial readings are: Gigerenzer, G. (2002) Reckoning with Risk: Learning to Live with Uncertainty; Cartwright, N. and Hardie, J. (2012) Evidence-Based Policy: A Practical Guide to Doing it Better; Worrall, J. (2007) 'Evidence in Medicine and Evidence-Based Medicine', Philosophy Compass.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Susanne Burri, Prof Richard Bradley, Prof Miklos Redei and Dr Campbell Brown

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students are required to write a 10,000-word dissertation (7,000 for MSc Economics and Philosophy) on a topic within the field covered by their course of study and approved by the Department of Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

The course is assessed 100% by Dissertation. Dissertations must be submitted on a specified date in late August in the academic year registered. (Part-time students are required to submit their dissertations in the August of their second year of part-time registration). All details are given in the Departmental course booklet.

Introduction to Quantitative Methods for the MPA Programme

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Also available to other MPhil/PhD students with the agreement of the course tutor.

Course content: An introduction to basic mathematical and statistical concepts for use in MPA courses in economics and quantitative approaches. The course covers the following topics: Statistics: Discrete and continuous random variables, jointly distributed random variables, the Normal distribution, sampling and the Central Limit Theorem, properties of estimators, introduction to hypothesis testing. Mathematics: Linear functions, quadratic, logarithmic and exponential functions, the derivative of a function and rules of differentiation, unconstrained optimization with one variable, functions of several variables and their differentiation, unconstrained optimization with several variables, constrained optimization.

Teaching: The course runs over 8 days, during the two weeks prior to the start of the Michaelmas Term. In total, students will attend ten lectures and six classes during the two weeks of the course.

Indicative reading: Notes covering the course material will be made available at the beginning of the course. Students are strongly encouraged to read Charles Whelan's 'Naked Statistics' prior to the start of the course. It provides a readable and accessible background to the statistics portion of the course. Two widely used introductory statistics books that can be used as background reading for the statistics part are Newbold, Carlson and Thorne 'Statistics for Business and Economics' (6th edition) and Wonnacott and Wonnacott 'Introductory Statistics for Business and Economics' (4th edition). However, there are also many other introductory statistics textbooks that cover the same material.

Two widely used introductory mathematics books that can be used as a background reading for the mathematics part are Ian Jacques' 'Mathematics for Economics and Business' (5th edition) and Wisniewski's 'Introductory Mathematical Methods in Economics' (2nd edition). Also in this case there are a large number of excellent alternative textbooks that cover the same material. Those who want a more advanced treatment of the same material can use Simon and Blume's 'Mathematics for Economists', but this treatment is more formal than what we require for this course. We do not recommend buying a new textbook for this course, if you already own a textbook that covers similar material.

Assessment: In class assessment (100%) in September.

The course will be assessed with a one hour in-class assessment at the end of the second week of teaching. The assessment result does not count towards the MPA final degree, but can be used by students to identify their key areas for future learning. All students are expected to take the assessment.

PP410 Half Unit

Public Economics for Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Reck

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have taken PP440 (formerly EC440) Macro and Microeconomics (for Public Policy) or an equivalent course.

Course content: This is a course in theoretical and applied public economics using intermediate economic theory. Topics include issues of equity and efficiency and alternative theories of the role of the state. Models of public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. Who really pays taxes: issues of tax incidence and tax evasion. Income inequality, poverty alleviation and the role of welfare programmes in theory and in practice. Health and education policy. The effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply and migration; The optimal taxation of commodities and incomes. Current topics in public finance. The main institutional references will be to the UK and the US, but some attention will also be given to broader international experience.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Indicative reading: J Gruber (2011) Public Finance and Public Policy, 3rd edition, Worth Publishers. [CC HJ141 G88] [or Gruber (2007), 2nd edition].

Students wishing to review their microeconomic theory should consult a textbook on intermediate microeconomic theory, such as Morgan, Katz and Rosen (2006) Microeconomics, McGraw Hill (CC HB172 M84) or J Perloff (2008) Microeconomics: Theory & applications with calculus, Pearson (CC HB172 P45).

On the structure of taxation in the UK, see IFS (2011) A Survey of the UK Tax System, Briefing Note no. 9 (<http://www.ifs.org.uk/bns/bn09.pdf>) and the HM Revenue and Customs website, (<http://www.hmrc.gov.uk>). The Institute for Fiscal Studies is an independent policy research institute and its website (<http://www.ifs.org.uk>) has a wide range of useful publications. The HMRC website includes information on the tax structure and statistics on tax payments (by income group, by type of tax, etc.) and overall revenues raised. The UK Treasury website (<http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/>) provides a range of documents on economic policies and the public finances, including the annual publication, Financial Statement and Budget Report (the 'Red Book'), published each year on Budget Day.

For comparative international fiscal data, information and analysis, useful sources include the International Monetary Fund, IMF (<http://www.imf.org/>), the World Bank (<http://www.worldbank.org/>) and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, OECD (<http://www.oecd.org/>).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

PP418 Half Unit Globalisation and Economic Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The expectation is that students will have previously taken PP440 (formerly EC440) and PP455 (formerly EC455) or other equivalent courses. Students that have not taken PP440 (or the former EC440) and PP455 (or the former EC455) will require permission from the course lecturer to attend the course.

Course content: Over the past fifty years the global economy has become increasingly interconnected. This course studies the policy implications of globalisation. The course considers both theoretical and empirical analyses of the causes and consequences of increasing international economic integration focusing particularly on the challenges and opportunities that globalisation creates for policy makers. Key areas covered include: international trade, capital flows, migration, technology diffusion and the relationship between globalisation and national sovereignty. The course builds on the knowledge developed in PP440 (formerly EC440) and PP455 (formerly EC455).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: The formative coursework will comprise a graded problem set. The formative coursework will take place during the first half of term.

Indicative reading: There is no textbook that includes all the material covered in this course. Lectures and readings will primarily focus on journal articles. Two books that will be used during the course are: Paul R. Krugman, Maurice Obstfeld and Marc J. Melitz, "International Economics: Theory and Policy" 10th Edition (Global Edition), Pearson Education, 2015. Dani Rodrik, "The Globalization Paradox", Oxford University Press, 2011

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (50%)

The 50% coursework will consist of two graded problem sets worth 25% each.

PP419 Half Unit Methods of Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Daniel Sturm

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The expectation is that students will have previously taken PP440 (formerly EC440) and PP455 (formerly EC455) or other equivalent courses. Students that have not taken PP440 (or the former EC440) and PP455 (or the former EC455) will require permission from the course lecturer to attend the course.

Course content: This course provides an advanced treatment of the empirical methods that are used to evaluate the effectiveness of public policies. The course builds closely on the course Quantitative Approaches and Policy Analysis (PP455) and also Micro and Macroeconomics for Public Policy (PP440). Topics covered include the problem of causality, the theory and practice of randomised experiments, difference-in-differences, synthetic controls, regression discontinuity, robust and clustered standard errors, and calibration.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: The formative coursework will comprise a graded problem set.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for the course and many of the key readings are journal articles. James Stock and Mark Watson "Introduction to Econometrics" remains a useful reference particularly for the material at the beginning of the course. A very good source for background reading is Joshua Angrist and Jörn-Steffen Pischke "Mastering 'Metrics: The Path from Cause to Effect". A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Project (25%, 2000 words) in the MT.

PP440 Micro and Macro Economics (for Public Policy)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ethan Ilzetzki and Professor Daniel Sturm

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo) and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is an introductory graduate course providing an economics background suitable for high-level public policy-making. The emphasis is on acquiring sound models and methods suitable for appraising policy-making issues in a wide variety of contexts. The first term (MT) covers microeconomics and the second term (LT) covers macroeconomics.

MT (Microeconomics): demand and supply in competitive markets: consumer optimisation and demand for goods: firms, optimisation and the supply of goods; market power; externalities in consumption and production; provision of public goods; asymmetric information and market failure

 LT (Macroeconomics): understanding macroeconomic data; long-run economic growth; business cycles; aggregate demand; money, inflation and monetary policy; stabilization policy; fiscal policy and government debt; the labour market and unemployment; exchange rates and international economic policy; the financial system and the macroeconomy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete weekly problem sets. Some of these will be marked to provide indicative assessment.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Policy memo (10%) in the MT.

Policy memo (10%) in the LT.

Continuous assessment (10%) in the MT and LT.

PP448 Half Unit Political Economy of Development I

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lloyd Gruber CON.6.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This half-unit MT course explores why governments and organisations pursue the development policies they do. Whenever experts get together to debate development policy, attention usually focuses on what all the relevant actors should be doing: Which policies should the leaders of developing countries be adopting (or discarding) to stimulate growth and reduce poverty? What new trade or aid strategies should policymakers in the industrialised world be implementing to help poorer countries develop? What should world leaders be doing to address climate change? In practice, however, people in positions of power do not always pursue the policy agendas that well-intentioned development experts say they should. Rather than let this be a source of frustration, students who take this course will come away with a deeper understanding of the political incentives that drive development forward, or sometimes backwards, in the real world. Attention will focus on the political pressures that motivate and constrain development policymakers at all levels of government - local, national and global - and across all sectors of the economy - public, private and non-profit. Students will be exposed to a wide variety of political economy concepts along the way. There will also be opportunities for students to apply these concepts to concrete cases of development management and mis-management. Why do the governments of some developing countries take good care of poor rural families and their children, for example, while other governments privilege urban elites? Why have inclusive democratic institutions taken root in some developing countries but not in others? If you are curious about the larger political forces driving some developing countries ahead while others stagnate or decline - and you want more experience putting cutting-edge political economy theories to work in solving current development problems - this course is for you.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

There will be a revision session before the take-home timed assessment.

Formative coursework: Each student will be expected to deliver one practice presentation during the first few weeks of the course. Students can expect detailed feedback on the substance of these presentations as well as their delivery (presentations will be videoed where possible). Each student will also be invited to submit an individually-authored policy memo on one of two different questions distributed in week 2. These memos will be handed back - with comments - shortly thereafter.

7 Lloyd Gruber and Stephen Kosack, 'The Tertiary Tilt: Education and Inequality in the Developing World', World Development 54 (2014) pp 253-272

Assessment: Presentation (15%) and policy memo (15%) in the MT.

Other (70%) in the LT.

All students will be required to take part in a Development Policy Application (DPA) project stretching over several weeks of the course. A specific – and current – issue of major importance to developing countries will be introduced in the first week of this exercise. Each student will then be asked to prepare an individually-authored policy memo on the topic. This memo will be worth 15% of the overall course mark.

In the second part of the exercise, students will be randomly assigned into small groups and begin preparing a jointly-delivered oral presentation outlining and defending their group's preferred policy. These presentations will take place towards the end of the term and will count for a further 15% of the overall course mark. The 'other' 70% will be a final take-home timed assessment administered via Moodle on a nominated day during week 0 of Lent Term. Students will have a 12-hour window (from 09.00-21.00 GMT) within which to access the assessment questions and complete the assessment. Once they have logged into Moodle and downloaded the assessment questions, students will have 2 hours and 30 minutes to prepare and upload their answers. The assessment will consist of two equally-weighted essay questions, one from Part A (broad thematic questions) and one from Part B (specific topics). Both questions will encourage students to think creatively about the ideas and arguments presented in the course. No outside research will be required. This last component of the assessment will count for 70% of the overall course mark.

PP449 Half Unit Political Economy of Development II

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tasha Fairfield

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines key issues in comparative political economy, with an emphasis on developing countries and the politics of policymaking. Who get the policies they want, when, and how? Throughout, we will pay close attention to actors, interests, institutions, and power. Understanding the politics of policymaking is critical for development specialists and policy practitioners. Policies recommended by technical experts are not always politically feasible, and progress may require implementing second-best solutions. Moreover, approaches that work in one case may not work in another. Drawing on real-world examples from a range of policy domains including taxation and social spending, we will discuss strategies for enacting pro-development reforms that might otherwise be politically infeasible. The course will also introduce students to key issues in conceptualization and measurement by examining indices and indicators of governance and democracy that are widely used by development practitioners. Note: the subject matter complements material covered in PP448 and can be taken either in conjunction with, or separately from that course.

Upon completing the course, students can expect to (1) be able to critically engage with the key debates in comparative politics and development, (2) be able to identify political constraints that may impede implementation of pro-development policies, (3) apply political economy theories to explain 'real world' cases of development policy successes and failures, and (4) design strategies that can help make pro-development policies more politically feasible in a given country context.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on formative assignments in seminars that will prepare them for the assessed DPA at the end of the term.

The two-hour revision session in LT will prepare students for the assessed exam.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Other (40%) in the LT.

All students will be required to take part in a Development Policy Application (DPA) project stretching over several weeks of the course. An issue of major importance to developing countries will be introduced early in the term. Students will be assigned into small groups, and each group will pick a country of its choice for the project. The DPA will count for 40% of the course mark.

A cumulative, 2-hour final exam will be given in the Summer Term. The exam will count for 60% of the course mark.

(LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: A rigorous understanding of statistics, economics and econometrics is important for this course, in order to be able to absorb the economics journal articles and methods covered. Students will be required to have achieved marks of 55 or higher in EC440 and EC455 to be eligible for the course. Students with marks of 50-54 in EC440 and EC455 will be considered on a case by case basis.

Course content: This course delivers insights from cutting edge research in psychology and economics, and asks students to use these insights to design solutions to significant social challenges. Students learn how to diagnose, design, deliver, and rigorously test products and services using the principles of behavioural economics and the methods of field experimentation.

The course begins by describing the principle of coproduction: outcomes in health, education and similar fields are not simply given to end-users, but are produced by end-users themselves, interacting with supply-side factors. Drawing on the insights from behavioural economics and using qualitative methods, students learn how to diagnose end-user needs, preferences and behaviour. The course then explores how the psychological aspects of behaviour can be combined with the tools and structure of economics to induce behaviour change and improve outcomes, including the challenge of setting prices and designing incentives. Throughout the course there is emphasis upon the critical importance of effective measurement in the context of the social sector, where traditional market feedback mechanisms are typically absent and where mission-driven leaders' evaluation of organisational impact can itself be subject to cognitive bias and distortion. Appropriate measurement in turn informs improvements in diagnosis and design. The course concludes by exploring policy impact and how research can be translated into policy action. Real world case studies are used at every stage of the course.

This course is relevant to all those who wish to improve the effectiveness of social interventions and programmes across a range of diverse fields, whether such interventions are administered through the state or, increasingly, through private philanthropy and social entrepreneurship. The course tutor will be Professor of Economics and Director of Research at the LSE Marshall Institute.

Teaching: 30 hours of workshops in the MT.

Teaching sessions will include both a Harvard Business School-style case study session and a lecture on the related research articles behind the case and discussion in 10 x 3-hour workshops in Michaelmas Term. There will also be a drop-in weekly hour-long technical support session.

Formative coursework: Additional exercises which will include preparation of an essay of the discussion questions for HBS-style case discussion.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for the course. For an introduction to the field of behavioural economics, students should consult Nudge: Improving Decisions About Health, Wealth, and Happiness, by Richard Thaler and Cass Sunstein (2009, Penguin) and Thinking, Fast and Slow, by Daniel Kahneman (2012, Penguin). We will also be reading several scientific articles from top-tier economics journals. A full reading list with the readings for each topic will be made available at the beginning of the course, and a draft course syllabus is available.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Applying Behavioural Economics for Social Impact: Design, Delivery, Evaluation and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nava Ashraf

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in Social Impact. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree

PP454

Development Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Burgess 32L.3.03 and Dr Gharad Bryan 32L.3.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and EC428 Development and Growth.

Pre-requisites: The expectation is that students will have previously taken EC440 and EC455 or other equivalent courses. Students who have not taken EC440 and EC455 will require permission from the course lecturer to attend the course.

Course content: In this course, students will apply their understanding of economics and econometrics to the task of policy making in developing countries. The focus is on acquiring the necessary theoretical and empirical skills to engage in the rigorous analysis of public policies in developing countries. Topics at the forefront of development economics will be covered. These include political economy, trade liberalization, growth, access to finance, technology adoption, education, health, infrastructure, property rights, land reform, gender, environment, mass media and political accountability. The emphasis will be on combining theory and data to evaluate the effectiveness of policies in these different areas.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students to complete weekly exercises based on course readings with one of these exercises being marked in a given term.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be distributed at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Quantitative Approaches and Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jeremiah Dittmar and Prof Mark Schankerman

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po) and MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course introduces students to the quantitative evaluation of public policies with the help of regression based evaluation methods and cost-benefit analysis. The course introduces students to basic multiple regression analysis including hypothesis testing, modelling of non-linear relationships, and dummy variables. From there, the course covers a number of regression based evaluation methods to assess the causal effectiveness of policy interventions. These include the use of randomized experiments, natural or quasi-experiments, panel data, difference-in-differences estimation, instrumental variables, matching and regression discontinuity designs. The final part of the course provides an overview of cost-benefit valuation methods for public policy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 11 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete weekly problem sets. Some of these will be marked to provide indicative assessment.

Indicative reading: Particularly useful textbooks are Joshua D. Angrist and Jörn-Steffen Pischke, "Mastering Metrics"; James Stock & Mark Watson, "Introduction to Econometrics"; and Jeffrey Wooldridge, "Introductory Econometrics". The material in the textbooks will be complemented with recent research papers and chapters from other books. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (10%) and policy memo (10%) in the LT.

Policy memo (10%) in the MT.

Continuous assessment (10%) in the MT and LT.

Political Science for Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Hix

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo) and MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we develop tools to understand and analyse important political phenomena including political behaviour (such as voting behaviour, elections and lobbying), political institutions (such as electoral systems, parliamentary and presidential government and central banks) and political outcomes (such as economic policies, development aid and ethnic conflict). The course combines a review of the main empirical regularities across time and across country in each of these areas, with an introduction to key theoretical arguments about how to understand how actors interact and how institutions shape strategic behaviour, and an introduction to the latest empirical (and causal) estimation techniques for testing the key theoretical ideas.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative work includes, for example, each term a two-page reading response and a problem set that reviews core concepts in empirical and theoretical models of political economy.

Indicative reading: Analysing Politics by Shepsle and Bonchek (W.W. Norton, 2010, 2nd edition) provides an excellent starting point and can be used as the main reference for many topics. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (20%, 2000 words).

Other (20%) in the MT and LT.

The 20% 'other' assessment are application exercises carried out in groups.

MPA Capstone Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 6 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by an external organisation. Typical clients include public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations or think tanks and NGOs. The group will have from October to March to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. Teaching comprises three 1.5 hour Capstone seminars in the MT. These seminars provide guidance on planning, structuring and presenting the Capstone report and the usage of research methods. Students are asked to participate in the Capstone Professional Development exercises designed to support effective and fair group work. Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Additional guidance will be provided through drop-in surgeries based on student need relevant to the Capstone projects. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Howard White, Theory-based Impact Evaluation: Principles and Practice (3ie, 2011); Curtis Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, 'Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems', chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%, 15000 words) in the LT.

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances.

The group mark has three components:

- 1) 20% of the overall mark is assigned by the client organisation based on a group presentation and a submission of the project report.
- 2) 50% of the overall mark is given by two academic readers upon submission of the project report; and
- 3) the final 30% of the overall mark is allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties), (ii) group working and self-management as a team, and (iii) the overall output of the project (10% for each item). Additionally, each group member must complete the Capstone evaluation and feedback exercise. This will be submitted individually and separately from the report.

MPA Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Policy Paper.

This course is only available to MPA students in Year 2 of their programme.

Course content: The aim of this course is to enable students to plan, design and conduct independent substantial research and/or analysis in an area of public policy. MPA students will write a dissertation of no more than 10,000 words on a topic of their choice to be agreed with their Academic Mentor. The dissertation must be concerned with the goal of policy improvement and, at the same time, it must contribute to a broader objective of knowledge- and theory-building. The main body of the dissertation should include literature review, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion of findings, conclusions and theoretical and policy implications. Dissertations can utilise quantitative and/or qualitative data and draw on primary and/or secondary research.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Teaching comprises four seminars in the MT and LT. These seminars provide academic and practical guidance on developing a research topic and question; designing an analytical framework; structuring and presenting policy analysis; and writing policy recommendations. The student's Academic Mentor will provide advice and guidance on this piece of work.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Other (10%) in the MT.

- 1) A 1,500 word dissertation proposal consisting of the title, abstract, research question and hypothesis, justification for research, feasibility of the dissertation topic, an explanation of sources, provisional structure and analytical framework will count for 10% of the overall dissertation mark. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their Academic Mentor. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.
- 2) The full dissertation of no more than 10,000 words will account for the remaining 90% of the overall mark.

Analytic frameworks for policy evaluation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christine Cote and Prof Richard Bevan

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students from the Department of Management's MSc programmes for any outside option spaces.

Pre-requisites: Students must have previously studied microeconomics.

Course content: The course will focus on concepts and cases relevant to understanding how to assess costs and benefits of policy options to enable governments to make hard choices. This entails accounting for: costs and benefits across different criteria and at different times, risk and uncertainty, and distributional effects; and designing evaluation to relate to the political process of making decisions.

The course examines three methods of evaluation: cost benefit analysis (CBA), cost effectiveness analysis (CEA), multicriteria decision analysis (MCDA). It explains the principles of each method and examines case studies to show their strengths and weaknesses. The aim is for students to learn that, for policy analysis, that the concepts of micro-economics are necessary but not sufficient by relating the issues that emerge from the case studies to major intellectual arguments of the 20th Century. These are arguments over the nature of science, positivism, power, efficiency, equity, and justice. The objective is for students to learn what characterises policy analysis that is likely to succeed or fail in enabling governments to make hard choices.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 pieces of coursework in the MT.

A presentation as a member of a seminar group in the second week of term.

A detailed essay plan on two pages with introduction, one key paragraph and conclusion written in full on the principle of using markets to assess costs and benefits and problems with this approach.

Indicative reading: The course text is D M Hausman and M S McPherson, Economic Analysis, Moral Philosophy and Public Policy, Cambridge University Press, 2006.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 3000 words) in the LT.

Other (20%) and other (30%) in the MT.

The essay (50%, 3000 words) is a critique of the methods used in a case study relevant to an issue in the student's country.

The other (20%) consists of four group presentations as a member of a seminar group in the weekly seminars.

The other (30%) is a policy brief for a minister on a hard choice.

Innovations in the governance of public services delivery

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Simon Bastow and Professor Gwyn Bevan

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Management (1 Year Programme) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students from the Department of Management's MSc programmes for any outside option spaces. Students may find that previous study of microeconomics is helpful.

Course content: The course examines innovations in different models of governance for the delivery of public services. Governance in this sense is defined broadly as the overarching mechanisms that organise the delivery of public services, and in this course we look at variations across three key governance models in particular - hierarchy, markets and networks. We cover innovations in each of these models in recent decades, and assess their strengths and limitations. We focus on a wide range of core public services, including healthcare, education, criminal justice, public utilities, and with equal reference to developed and developing countries.

Many public sectors globally have seen a broad shift from traditional hierarchical bureaucracy towards integration of markets and networks. Markets can offer powerful mechanisms for correcting public sector failure, however governments have often struggled in recent decades with managing the new risks and problems that market failure in the public sector can bring. Many countries have experienced, and will continue to experience, extensive marketisation of public services, and we cover key innovations and their impacts. We look at the use of 'quasi-markets', voucher systems, full-scale privatisations, Private Finance Initiatives (PFIs) and Public-Private Partnerships (PPPs), Payment by Results (PBR) and Social Impact Bonds (SIBs), and assess their impact on public services. We also look at innovations in networked, mutual or collaborative forms of governance, particularly the relevance of new concepts and paradigms such as 'sharing economy', 'reputation economy', 'digital economy' and social media.

A central theme of the course is the relationship between institutions and innovative mechanisms for change. Markets and networks offer a wide range of innovative mechanisms, but their success or failure is often determined by the institutional context in which they are implemented. Looking across different models of governance, the course will consider issues around optimisation of design and integration of models, and the impact of institutional path dependence on success and failure. We explore how to align new mechanisms for change with existing institutions in complementary ways.

The course draws on a range of disciplines and analytical approaches, including transaction cost economics, political science, institutional economics, and behavioural economics. There is also strong emphasis on group-based presentation and discussion, as well as the importance of interplay between key theory/concepts and illustrative cases.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A detailed essay plan of two pages with introduction, one key paragraph and conclusion written in full in preparation for the summative essay.

Indicative reading: Students will be directed to key texts throughout the term. Course literature draws from public policy and governance, the economics of transaction costs and behavioural economics among other disciplines. Some indicative readings throughout the course include: C. Wolf (1993) Markets or Governments (Cambridge: MIT Press). Assessment: Essay (50%, 3000 words) in the ST. Presentation (20%) and policy memo (30%) in the LT.

An essay of 3,000 words critically examining governance of a public service (preferably) in the student's own country (50%). Presentations as a member of a seminar group in the weekly seminars (20%).

A policy brief for a minister, either for proposed reform or analysis of an existing market-based or network-based model of governance in action (30%).

in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students from the Department of Management's MSc programmes for any outside option spaces.

Course content: The course examines important challenges for governments and public sector organisations in being able to design and manage transformative change in public services. Two key aspects of change are considered:

- the instrumental capacity of government to design and implement policy and programme change in coherent, sustainable and successful ways, and
- the adaptive capacity of government to respond to change in their external environment, and avoid problems of obsolescence or 'out-of-touch' policies

We look at this dual challenge across developed and developing country contexts, and across core areas of government policy and public services. The course is primarily about government and public sector, rather than private or third sector, however an important element is looking at the capacity of governments to coordinate with these other sectors in designing and managing transformative change.

From the outset we discuss how governments can develop coherent responses to so-called 'wicked' public policy and management (PPM) problems. These tend to be complex, multi-faceted and intractable problems, ones that require well-designed and complementary measures. We look at the interplay of different governance factors such as the impact of politics, bureaucracy, culture, incentives and motivations, administrative capacity, amongst others, and explore the potential for and limitations on transformative change. The course works through key aspects of holistic change: including strategy, culture, motivation and coordination, leadership, social-technical systems, resilience, and policy and organizational learning.

The course aims to provide students with key concepts and approaches to designing coherent action in response to complex public policy problems. We look at these challenges primarily from the perspective of the senior government or public sector official, working at the interface of high politics, policy making, and operational delivery. The course will be useful for students who are interested in working in government, or for those who work in other 'social impact' roles that involve working closely with government and public authorities.

The syllabus draws on concepts from public policy, political science, institutional economics, and organizational and system design, and organizational behaviour. We cover a wide range of sectors and policy areas, particularly core areas of public sector services such as criminal justice, health, welfare, education and defence. The course emphasises dialogue between concepts and cases, and aims for strong applied and practical relevance.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week during Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on class seminar presentations in the MT.

Students will have the option to submit a formative essay by the end of the MT.

Indicative reading: Students will be directed to key texts throughout the term. Course literature draws from public policy and governance, management economics, public management and administration and organizational psychology amongst other disciplines. Some indicative readings throughout the course include: J van Aken (2007) 'Design Science and Organization Interventions: Aligning Business and Humanistic Values', Journal of Applied Behavioural Science, 43(1): 67-68. New Institutions of Public Policy: Strategic Philanthropy, Impact Investment and Social Enterprise

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Roberts Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields

Other teachers: Professor Julian Le Grand and Professor Stephan Chambers, Marshall Institute

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in Social Impact. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is available in the first instance to students taking the MPA in Social Impact. It is also open to students taking other MPA programmes. This course is only available to MPA students in Year 2 of their programme. The course is a collaboration between the Marshall Institute and the School of Public Policy.

Course content: Private actions for public benefit - whether called philanthropy, charity, associationalism, social entrepreneurship or social business - have long been significant within societies. This arena of private action is currently experiencing both resurgence and disruption. This course takes a policy-oriented approach towards these new dynamics of private social action. It explores innovative mechanisms of financing, organisation and delivery, including impact investing, new coalitions for social impact (for instance, social impact bonds), venture philanthropy and social enterprise. A central focus is the opportunity created by bringing together market and business mechanisms and the social – but also the consequent challenge and complexity of achieving social impact through hybrid organisations, hybrid funding streams and hybrid mechanisms of coordination. Cross-cutting themes are how to design incentive structures which respond to the complex web of motivations of actors in this field, and the organisational tension inherent in responding to double or triple bottom lines. Using analytical frameworks drawn from economics, sociology and political economy, the course will critically evaluate the challenges and advantages of these emerging institutions and mechanisms. Examples of the types of question that we will investigate include: what is social enterprise? How can social enterprises support social innovation and impact? Can we combine financial return, social impact and environmental sustainability? Why should an organisation be a non-profit, for-profit or other ownership form? How can the state, market and private altruistic action combine to achieve social impact? How can we design organisations and structures which nurture and capitalise on values and altruism? What are the differences between the culture, practice and motivations of state, commercial and charitable organisations, and what are the consequent challenges of implementation and management in hybrid organisations? The answers to these questions are contested and the course seeks to give participants the critical skills to make their own determination.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 6 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course comprises of one 90 minute lecture and one 90 minute seminar each week. In addition there will be four 90 minute 'private action in practice' workshops organised by the Marshall Institute.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.

Formative assessment will consist of one 2,000 word essay, submitted in the middle of the LT. Students will also receive formative feedback on seminar presentations.

PP4J4 Half Unit

Designing and Implementing Evidence-Informed Policies and Programmes

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: The aim of this half-unit course is to help students develop knowledge, critical analysis and skills necessary for evidence-informed policy making. It will enable students to assess, analyse, interpret and use evidence to design relevant and effective interventions. The course particularly emphasises the need to recognise the complexity of economic, social, institutional and political context and incorporate contextual analysis of social relations, gender inequalities, interests and incentives of societal actors in policy design and implementation arrangements. The course will equip students with the knowledge and skills to critically appraise how government agencies, international organisations and other actors generate and utilise evidence to design and implement policies and programmes.

The course covers evidence generation and use during three main stages of the policy cycle: policy design, implementation, and monitoring and evaluation. It introduces theory-based approaches and examines the use of social, gender, governance and political-economy analysis to inform policy design and implementation. It discusses the role of monitoring and evaluation in producing nuanced policy-relevant evidence.

The course draws on policies and programmes in the field of social policy and social development in a global context. In seminars, students will review and critically assess policy reports and research studies of actual policies and programmes. They will scrutinise different assessment tools developed and used by government agencies and international organisations (e.g. DFID, World Bank) for gathering policy relevant evidence.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

10 x 1.5 hour lectures (MT weeks 1-10)

10 x 1.5 seminars (MT weeks 2-11)

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT. Students will work in groups to deliver seminar presentations on assigned topics and contribute to seminar discussions. As well as enabling students to practise essential team working and presentation skills, this exercise is an important preparation for the final summative assessment. It will enable students to practise their ability to analyse and evaluate policies and programmes, prepare and present critiques, and use literature to frame and contextualise analysis.

Students will write a short individually-authored policy report (1,000 words, MT week 7) in preparation for the summative assessment. This assignment will develop students' ability to design and present analytical frameworks and to appraise policies and programmes. Students will receive personalised feedback and suggestions for future improvement.

Assessment: Essay (30%, 1500 words) in the MT.

Other (70%) in the LT.

Students will be required to complete two assignments designed to support the main learning outcomes of the course:

1. A three-part individually authored essay (30%), in which students answer pre-assigned questions, drawing on literature and course material (500 words for each answer, maximum 1,500 words in total, MT week 11). This assessment will support student learning of the main debates, issues and critiques and will help consolidate their disciplinary and methodological knowledge.

2. An individually-authored policy report (70%) drawing on policy documents, evaluation reports and relevant literature (maximum 3,000 words, LT week 1).

This assessment will develop students' ability to appraise policies and programmes; evaluate, analyse, interpret and use evidence; design analytical frameworks; prepare and present written critiques; and write policy reports.

PP4V8 Half Unit

MPA Policy Paper

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Babken Babajanian SAR.G.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Dissertation.

This course is only available to MPA students in Year 2 of their programme.

Course content: The aim of the course is to enable students to plan, design and conduct independent analysis in an area of public policy. MPA students will write an individually-authored policy paper of no more than 6,000 words on a topic developed in consultation with their Academic Mentor. The paper will analyse a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and propose an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. It must be addressed to a non-academic audience and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers. The main body of the paper should include methodology, results of the analysis, discussion of different policy options, conclusions and policy recommendations. The policy paper must be accompanied by an Executive Summary. Policy papers can utilise quantitative and/or qualitative data and draw on secondary and/or primary research.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Teaching comprises four seminars in the MT and LT. These seminars provide academic and practical guidance on developing the policy paper topic and question; designing analytical frameworks; structuring and presenting policy analysis; and writing policy recommendations. The student's Academic Mentor will provide advice and guidance on this piece of work.

Formative coursework: A policy paper proposal (of no more than 750 words in total) consisting of the title, abstract, research question, justification for analysis, feasibility of the topic, an explanation of sources, structure and analytical framework must be submitted in the MT. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their Academic Mentor. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.

Welfare Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29 and Dr Berkay Ozcan OLD2.32

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in European Policy-Making, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course has no formal pre-requisites. Because much of the empirical evidence referred to in the course is quantitative in nature, a familiarity with basic statistical concepts and basic calculus is useful but not essential.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the analysis and measurement of the welfare of individuals and societies, examining concepts, measurement and data, as well as providing illustrations. The aims are to provide an understanding of the main tools used to measure and monitor individuals and social welfare, and to develop skills for assessing academic research and official statistics (as produced by national or international agencies) and for undertaking one's own analysis. The first half of the course focuses on univariate monetary measures of economic wellbeing notably 'income', and on the experience of OECD countries (especially the UK, EU, and USA), but the aim is also to place these in the context of developments based on other approaches and in other countries including middle- and low-income nations. The topics covered include measurement of inequality, poverty, and mobility; setting poverty thresholds and equivalence scales; data sources and their quality; empirical illustrations considering assessments of trends within countries, cross-national differences, and global poverty and inequality. The second half of the course broadens the perspective to consider a range of non-monetary, multidimensional, and subjective measures of welfare for individuals and societies. Examples include occupational and socio-economic status (SES), anthropometric measures, the Human Development Index and related indices of development, and measures of happiness and life satisfaction.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

The course provides a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading for the course is in journal articles. Books providing overviews include Salverda W, Nolan B, Smeeding TM (eds) The Oxford Handbook on Economic Inequality (2009); and Atkinson A and Bourguignon F (eds) Handbook of Income Distribution Volume 2 (2015) and the earlier Volume 1 (2000). A full reading list is distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Criminal Justice Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leonidas Cheliotis OLD 2.51

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be capped at 30 students with preference given to MSc Criminal Justice Policy (CJP) students in the first instance. Any additional places will be given according to student statement's submitted through LSE for You upon application. Priority after CJP students will be given to students on other Social Policy Programmes; and then if there are places available, for those on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). Only after these students applications have been considered will students from elsewhere in LSE be offered a place.

Course content: The course provides a detailed and critical introduction to the study of criminal justice institutions, practices and participants. It begins with an introduction to the nature of crime and contemporary criminal justice policy. It then examines the main elements of modern criminal justice systems (police, courts, prisons, probation, the media, and private security). Special emphasis is given to current issues such as restorative justice and increasing rates of incarceration. The course combines up-to-date empirical work with theoretical perspectives and also emphasises the role of historical and comparative perspectives in understanding current trends.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Lectures: SA403.1 20 weekly one and a half hour lectures, MT and LT.

Seminars: SA403.2, 19 weekly one and a half hour seminars, MT and LT.

Workshop: SA403.3, 1 session of one and a half hours in MT

There will be a reading week in Weeks 6 of MT and LT.

There will be a revision session and mock exam in ST.

Formative coursework: Michaelmas Term – formative essay and one-to-one feedback. Summer term – mock exam (one question).

Indicative reading: There are two set texts for the course: M Maguire, R Morgan & R Reiner (eds.) (2012), The Oxford Handbook of Criminology, 5th edn; and T Newburn (2012), Criminology, 2nd edn.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

SA409 Half Unit

Social Security Policies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kitty Stewart OLD2.36

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course analyses the purposes, design and impact of social security policies, meaning policies that protect and support household income at times when income from the labour market does not suffice. The need for social security arises both from demographic factors that affect nearly everyone during their life course – childhood, parenthood, old age – and from risk factors that will end up affecting only some – unemployment, sickness and disability. The course takes a comparative approach, examining differences in the design of social security policies across welfare regimes and drawing on examples from different countries. Students will develop an understanding of the challenges and trade-offs that arise in designing social security policies to meet multiple goals, will further their knowledge about the ways systems function in practice, and will develop the tools for assessing the structure and effectiveness of social security in any given country. The course will also consider how successfully social security systems are adapting to meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century, including an ageing population, migration, and the changing nature of employment brought about by rapid technological change.

Most of the examples in the lectures and readings relate to higher- and middle-income countries, but the course aims to be of interest and relevance to students from all countries. Students will be encouraged to further their understanding of social security in their country of origin, or another country of their choice, and to draw on this knowledge in classes.

Teaching: 12 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST. Weekly lectures will set the agenda for the week and provide students with an overview of the key issues at stake. Classes will be made up of two main components. All students will be expected to give a short presentation during the course of the term on an aspect of social security or a recent social security reform in a country they are interested in (perhaps their country of origin). In the remainder of the class, students will debate propositions related to the week's required readings, which will often offer differing perspectives on the topic.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write one formative essay during the course of the term, which will enable them to deepen their understanding of the course material and practice critical thinking skills in preparation for the summative essay assignment. Written feedback will be given.

Indicative reading: Basic reading for the course includes: R Walker, Social Security and Welfare: Concepts and Comparisons, Oxford University Press, 2005; J Millar (Ed), Understanding Social Security, 2nd ed. The Policy Press, 2009; J Dixon, Social Security in Global Perspective, Praeger, 1999; J Hills, Good Times, Bad Times: The Welfare Myth of Them and Us, Policy Press, 2014; ILO, World Social Protection Report 2014/15: Building Economic Recovery, Inclusive Development and Social Justice.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period. Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

The course is currently capped at 60 places. Offers of places will be made on the basis of applicants' statements. Priority for places is given to students on Social Policy MSc programmes and to students on the MSc Inequalities and Social Science. Students from departments other than the Department of Social Policy may be accepted onto a waiting list. Places remaining available three days before the start of the course will not be held back for late applicants from Social Policy programmes but offered to students from the waiting list.

Course content: This course addresses the emergence, maintenance and dynamics of social advantage and disadvantage in different areas of life across different societies and across different social groups. It explores inequalities in income, poverty & wealth, labour market position, family resources, education, crime, and life chances, with reference to social groups defined according to their gender, class, ethnicity, citizenship and migration status, disability, and country or neighbourhood of residence. It pays specific attention to intersectional, cumulative and relational processes in the reproduction of inequalities.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A formative essay submitted in Week 6 of the Lent Term

Indicative reading: The core text for the course is: H Dean & L Platt (eds) 2016. Social Advantage and Disadvantage. Oxford University Press. Other indicative background reading: Milanovic, B. 2016. Global Inequality. The Belknap Press. McCall, L. (2005). policy evaluation (including Randomised Controlled Trials); innovations in research; longitudinal analysis; micro-simulation techniques; systematic reviews, meta-analysis and meta-ethnographies; and small area, geographical and internationally comparative research. The relationship between research and policymaking is a theme that runs throughout the course.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 12 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 15 minutes of help sessions in the LT. 2 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 15 minutes of help sessions in the ST. In the first half of the course (MT), SA451 lectures are held jointly with SA4AB Researching International Social and Public Policy. The second half of the course (LT) considers more advanced topics and is SA451 only. Dedicated SA451 seminar groups are held throughout and examine social policy applications of research exemplifying the approach and the issues raised in the preceding lecture. The help sessions are one-to-one tutorial sessions with the seminar leader to discuss feedback on essays and progress on the course.

Formative coursework: There will be three compulsory formative pieces of coursework. In addition, there will be one optional formative assignment. These formative assignments are designed to prepare students for both the summative coursework and the exam. Written and verbal feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: P Alcock et al (eds) (2016), The Student's Companion to Social Policy, 5th edn; C Robson (2016) Real World Research, 4th edn. European and Comparative Social Policy - Long Essay

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timo Fleckenstein OLD 2.60

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to study a topic in depth by researching the literature and analysing a subject. Often these essays involve original perspectives or empirical research.

Teaching: An appropriate supervisor will be appointed to advise each candidate and comment on draft elements of the dissertation.

Selection of Topic

The dissertation should conform to one of the following formats

- a study of a single EU state (or region, city etc) and one or more policy areas focusing on the impact of EU level social policy. This state should not be the student's own country. Within this format the focus may also be at the sub-national level (regions, cities etc).
- a comparative study of two or more states (or their subnational levels) focusing on one or more policy areas. The sample may include the student's own country. The sample may include non-EU countries as well as the student's own country.
- a study of an element of EU-level social policy or EU processes of social policy making.

The general subject area of the dissertation should be approved by the MSc programme director and dissertation supervisor by the sixth week of the Michaelmas Term. This will facilitate a specific research topic for the dissertation to be subsequently formalised. This topic may only be changed by agreement with programme director and supervisor and, in any case, no later than the end of the Lent Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words, bibliography and tables will not be included in this total.

Social Policy (Research) - Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tania Burchardt 32L 3.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to apply the research design, methods and critical analysis skills they are acquiring through other courses to carry out their own study addressing a social policy research question. The expectation is that empirical work will be undertaken - for example interviews or secondary data analysis - as part of the study, although the precise design will be governed by the research question. Students may opt to carry out their dissertation through a placement in another organisation such as an NGO working on social policy issues, which we can help to facilitate.

Teaching: 1 hour of help sessions in the MT. 1 hour of help sessions in the LT. 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

An appropriate supervisor will be appointed in the first half of Michaelmas Term to meet regularly, advise each student throughout the dissertation process, and to provide feedback on ideas and draft material. The number and content of meetings will be determined by agreement between the student and supervisor, but as a rough guide, students might expect two half-hour meetings each term.

Students will also receive guidance through compulsory course MY400 Fundamentals of Research Design.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST.

The student and his/her supervisor will discuss the content and timing of formative work as appropriate to the individual dissertation.

Indicative reading: Robson, C (2016) Real World Research
Bryman, A (2015) Social Research Methods

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words. Please see departmental webpage for further guidance.

Population Analysis: Methods and Models

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof. Michael Murphy, OLD.2.61

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Population Health, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have basic numeracy, but the course does not require advanced mathematical knowledge. Some practical sessions will involve use of the spreadsheet EXCEL. IT Training provides numerous self-paced student supervised workshops on EXCEL and downloadable course guides. Students with no prior experience of EXCEL are advised to attend one of these workshops before the course.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the key concepts and methods required for population analysis. The course will explain the dynamics of population change and enable students to learn basic methods for measuring population structure and the determinants of population size and change (fertility, mortality and migration). The course will also provide an introduction to population projections and describe and evaluate how demographic data are collected and used. Emphasis is placed on the understanding and interpretation of demographic data, as well as methods of population analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete exercises, write one essay and complete one multiple choice questionnaires during the term.

Indicative reading: Demography: Measuring and Modeling
Population Processes by S H Preston, P Heuveline and M Guillot,

2001. This will be used as a reference text in the course. Students may also find it helpful to consult some of the other standard texts available including: Essential Demographic Methods by Kenneth W. Wachter, 2014 (recommended); Demographic Methods by Andrew Hinde, 1998; Demographic Methods and Concepts by Donald Rowland, 2003 (less advanced); or Methods and Models in Demography by C Newell, 1988 (less advanced).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

SA4AA Half Unit

International Social & Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sonia Exley OLD 2.64

The course will be taught by a team of faculty members with complementary areas of expertise, and specialisation in both the global north and south who have all contributed to the development of the core course.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration) and MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course engages with the social & public policy challenges facing states and citizens across the world. It introduces students to core issues, concepts, actors and debates shaping our understanding of social & public policy, its drivers and impacts. It outlines the questions raised by efforts to ensure a healthy, educated and productive population, to protect those without other means of support, and to reduce inequalities of e.g. gender, class, and ethnicity. It discusses diverse policy approaches to these issues, their ideological underpinnings, and the varying configurations of actors involved in the policy process - the state, the market, civil society, the family, and international organisations. The course explores applications to a range of policy domains, such as education, urbanisation, health, family, social care, migration, inequality and redistribution, and to varied country contexts. The course is informed by an international and comparative approach that considers both rich and poor country contexts and international dimensions and locates these within a historical understanding of both national and global processes.

Teaching: 16 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

One of the lectures in the MT will be a Study Skills session at the start of term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The formative coursework in the form of 1500 word essay to be submitted before the end of the MT will require the students to apply the principles covered in the course, to a specified case. This will prepare them for the summative coursework which will require them to select and develop their own case study application.

Researching International Social & Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Berkay Ozcan OLD.2.33

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration) and MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to provide an understanding of issues associated with the research process in the context of MSc in International Social & Public Policy dissertations. It includes an examination of philosophical issues underpinning research methods in social policy, the place of different research methods (qualitative and quantitative) in international social & public policy, the use of research and the role of evidence in informing social & public policy, and the process of writing a social policy dissertation.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will undertake a group presentation during the course discussing approaches in researching social policy. They will receive written feedback on this presentation, and it will form the basis of the first part of their summative assessment. They will also undertake a short (1000 word) account of research paper aimed at summarising the key points, contributions and methods involved for a non-academic audience.

Indicative reading: Three useful texts are: Alan Bryman (2012) Social Research Methods, 4th edition Oxford University Press; C Robson & K McCartan (2015) Real world research: A resource for social scientists and practitioner-researchers, 4th edition. Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) and proposal (10%). Students will be required to submit a formative dissertation proposal and give a formative presentation based on this proposal (in the LT). They should also produce a dissertation of a maximum of 10,000 words. 10% of marks will be allocated for the combined proposal and presentation element and 90% for the dissertation.

SA4B5 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 International Planning and Children's Rights

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eileen Munro OLD2.33 and Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD1.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration) and MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is an interdisciplinary course that explores the links between child rights and child poverty at all levels of development in rich and poor countries. The social and economic as well as the civil and political rights of children, as defined in recent international laws, charters and Conventions, are examined in relation to the conditions, especially poverty and multiple deprivation, experienced by many children. Human rights theories as a basis for international and social policies will be a focus of attention. There has to be universal planning and not only specific proposals to deal with serious violations of rights. Issues of child labour, the violations of war, cultural discrimination against girl children and the right to a minimally adequate family income will be discussed in relation to the roles played by international agencies, Trans National Corporations, governments and NGOs.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

SA4B9 Half UnitEducation Policy, Reform and Financing

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sonia Exley OLD 2.64

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course considers education policy, reform and financing across a range of countries. It uses concepts and tools from a number of academic disciplines – social policy, sociology, economics, politics and philosophy – to scrutinise education. Throughout the course, there is particular focus on equity, social justice and the distribution of resources. Issues to be addressed include: the impact of social characteristics on educational outcomes (class, gender and race and ethnicity, with a cross-cutting focus on special educational needs and ideas of 'inclusion') and related policy reforms; accountability and market-oriented reforms in education; privatisation and the changing role of the state; power and the politics of educational policy making; global policy transfer in education; early years education; school-based education and post-compulsory education. Not all of these issues are covered as separate weekly topics.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One formative essay in LT.

Indicative reading: Specialist lists for each topic will be provided. The following introductory books are recommended:

Global Social Policy and International Organizations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hakan Seckinelgin, OLD.2.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration) and MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: What do the, the Catholic Church, Bill and Melissa Gates, UNICEF and the World Bank have in common? They are in one way or another involved in social policy that goes beyond the nation state. Policy could be seen as the exercise of political power and this political power has often been concentrated within the nation state. Far from the traditional study of policy this includes the effect of globalization on a variety of actors in social policy. This course examines how globalization has changed the way we perceive areas such as health, education, social care and other areas that concern social citizenship. The course examines the international policy environment, particularly intergovernmental organisations; bilateral and multilateral aid agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), which influence the social policy environment in developing countries. The impact of the inter-governmental policy process on policy outcomes is examined. The same goes for religious groups, social movements and corporations that all play a role in global social policy. The main goal of the course is not only to open up the understanding of social policy and globalization but also to show the complexity of goals and actors of social policy. It is expected that the students will devote considerable time to reading and preparing for the seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. Revision session(s) will be scheduled in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write a long essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be presented at the beginning of the term. Some introductory texts include: B Deacon Global Social Policy and Governance Sage (2007); R. Baldwin The Great Convergence: Information Technology and The New Globalization. Belnap (2017); H. Seckinelgin he politics of Global AIDS: Institutoinalization of Solidarity, Exclsion of Context. SA4D5 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Social Rights and Human Welfare

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Hartley Dean OLD.2.59

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is currently capped at 30 places. Offers of places will be made on the basis of applicants' statements. Initial priority for places is given to students on Social Policy MSc programmes and students on the MSc Human Rights. Other students may be accepted onto a waiting list. Places remaining available three days before the start of the course will not be held back for late applicants from the Department of Social Policy or the Human Rights programmes but offered to students from the waiting list.

Pre-requisites: none

Course content: The course will examine the basis of social or welfare rights as a component of human rights. It will situate social/welfare rights in an historical and comparative context and explore a range of debates concerning the relevance and effectiveness of a rights based approach to poverty alleviation and social welfare provision, both in the developed and the developing world. It will address the practical limitations of and the constraints upon social/welfare rights. Specifically, it will address: concepts of social rights and welfare citizenship; human needs and human rights; social/welfare rights in global context; critiques of social/welfare rights as human rights; the scope and substance of social/welfare rights; social/welfare rights and mechanisms of redress; rights based approaches to poverty alleviation; social development and social/welfare rights; constitutional instruments and social/welfare rights; human rights and the ethics of welfare.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of submitting a formative essay.

SA4F8 Half Unit Behavioural Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Oliver OLD.2.35

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. Places will be allocated to students on the basis of a short statement that is submitted during course choice, outlining the student's suitability for and interest in the course.

Priority will be given to Social Policy students.

Course content: The aim of the course is to explore ways of changing behaviour to achieve the aims of public policy. One half of the course will be concerned with the behaviour of professionals who work in public services. How can doctors, teachers and social workers be motivated to provide the best possible care for their patients, pupils or clients? Should we rely upon professionalism and the public service ethos? Should we set up targets and league tables for performance, penalising those who fail to achieve the target or who drop down the table? Or should we rely upon patient or parental choice and competition to provide incentives to improve? The second half of the course explores ways of changing individuals' and households' behaviour in areas of policy concern such as smoking, obesity, and the environment. How can people be persuaded to stop smoking, to take more exercise, to eat less, to reduce their carbon emissions? Should we rely upon punitive measures such as bans, on positive incentives such as financial rewards, or on 'nudge' policies that change the choice architecture? Should government intervene at all, if the only people harmed by their own activities are themselves? In trying to answer these questions, the course will draw on recent developments in behavioural economics, motivational and behavioural studies in psychology, and the philosophy of paternalism, including libertarian paternalism and the 'nudge' agenda. It will discuss evidence from a wide range of areas of public policy, but especially health care, education and social care, using illustrations and evidence from Europe, North America and Australasia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students will be required to present work in progress on their summative assignments during seminar class time. In addition, by the end of the reading weeks, students will be required to present to the course convenor a two page plan for their summative assessment, on which they will receive written and oral feedback.

Indicative reading: J. Le Grand (2006) Motivation, Agency and Public Policy: of Knights and Knaves, Pawns and Queens. Revised paperback edition. Oxford: Oxford University Press. J. Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. If it is oversubscribed priority will be given to Social Policy Students. Places will be allocated by the Course Convenor according to the 'statement' submitted by students when they apply for a place on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites to take this course.

Course content: This course introduces MSc students to the links between housing, neighbourhoods and social and public policies, in the context of housing systems in the UK, Europe and North America. It examines: how housing and neighbourhoods have evolved in UK and Europe, and contrasts in the USA; the rise of mass housing estates, the role of government and housing management; housing markets – supply, demand, need and affordability; owner-occupation and taxation; sustaining neighbourhoods through upgrading, and dangers of segregation and gentrification; housing wealth and assets, inheritance and polarisation; private renting, housing benefits and regulation; social housing, subsidies, rents and affordability; community-led and community-based housing; sustainable housing solutions, retrofit, fuel poverty and energy saving. The course uses live case studies to illustrate the main themes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There are also organised site/project visits in MT. The course provides many case study examples for students to draw on.

Formative coursework: Students participate actively in seminars, make two class presentations and complete one formative essay, drawing on case study evidence.

Students are invited to join site visits which illustrate key housing themes.

Social Movements, Activism, and Social Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD.2.54 and Dr Timothy Hildebrandt

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped at a maximum of 45 places.

Course content: The course begins by examining theories of social movements, collective action, and contentious politics. It then moves on to examine how social movements engage with the policy process and the ways in which social movement activism informs social policy formulation and implementation. It examines the nature, past and present roles of social movements and their potential capacity in shaping social policy in developed and developing countries, and in democratic, hybrid, or authoritarian regimes. The course covers theoretical arguments and examines empirical examples and case studies.

The course examines the following topics: the role and impact of social movement activism in identifying and meeting needs; the role of grassroots mobilizations and solidarity; how movements are affected by regulatory frameworks; how and when movements achieve their objectives; movements relations with other actors (including, NGOs, trade unions, political parties, etc.); populism. It considers the development, transformation, autonomy, interdependence, and probity of social movements. The course draws on examples of social movements in different periods, countries, and areas of activity to examine and analyse how change happens and the obstacles to change.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in seminars and to complete one piece of written formative coursework

SA4H7 Half Unit

Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global South

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sunil Kumar OLD.2.55

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is for postgraduate students interested in urbanisation and social policy in the Global South. The course is also open to students on other MSc Programmes dependent on spaces being available. Priority will be given to Social Policy students. Some knowledge and experience of urban issues are desirable. To apply for a place on this course, students will have to upload a statement not exceeding 250-words on LFY stating: (i) why they would like to take this course; (ii) what they can bring to the course; and (iii) how they intend to use the knowledge gained (for example, for their dissertation or future employment or research).

Course content: The course examines the social, economic and political challenges in the urban Global South from a range of theoretical and conceptual perspectives, and the policies and planning practices aimed at addressing them. Some of the themes explored in the course are urbanisation and social change, theoretical perspectives on the city, migration and the rural-urban interface, urban poverty and livelihoods, urban labour markets, urban housing and tenure, urban social movements, urban basic services and urban management and governance. Students are expected to read the essential readings and also read widely. They are expected to undertake a number of weekly activities, such as: My_City (short desk-based research pieces on key issues arising from the lecture with the view to gauge how much information is available and to refer to this information in the seminar that follows; and My_Forethought: about 100 words on what the student expects to gain from the lecture.

Teaching: 16 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

1 Dr Sunil Kumar will use the lecture slot in week 6 (reading week) to present his recent research.

2 The seminar slots in reading week will be used for students to present their ideas for the summative essay for the course. All registered students are expected to attend the lecture and seminar slots.

Formative coursework: Students taking this course will have to write a 1,000-word formative essay (excluding references) as a draft of the summative essay. The learning pedagogy and learning outcome is to receive feedback on what may become the summative essay. Given that the formative is intended to lead to a summative essay, students will not receive a grade but will receive written feedback. The deadline for the formative essay will be in week 8 or 9 of the term in which the course is taught.

Students should take part in the range of seminar activities.

Students are required to contribute to the seminars on a weekly basis by undertaking un-assessed activities called My-City and My_Forethought, details of which will be available on Moodle.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is provided for each lecture and seminar via the LSE library's electronic reading list. The following is an introductory list of texts in alphabetical order (a number of them are available as e-books via the LSE library Chant, S. (2010). Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (60%, 3500 words) in the ST.

Summative essays are required to address urban issues in the global South. They can be: (1) an academic critique of an urban policy (existing or proposed); (2) the identification of an urban issue that does not have a policy but requires one; (3) a critique of a conceptual framework that has been used to address an urban challenge. Students should note that i-iii are intended as starting points in approaching the summative essay; they are welcome to combine two or three of these starting points. Those students approaching the essay from starting points 1 and 2 are required to propose broad policy solutions and address key barriers to the adoption of the proposed policy. Those who would like to approach their essay from the perspective of point 3 will have to propose improvements to the conceptual framework being critiqued namely, how the critique changes the 'framing of the problem' and the associated policy implications. Students can also critique urban policy and conceptual frameworks in the global North as long as they use policy outcomes and concepts from the global South. In doing so, they are required to suggest policy and conceptual improvements to urban challenges in the global North. This is designed to overcome the North-South divide and foster the transfer of principles. Students who chose this option will have to demonstrate that the transfer of policy ideas or conceptual critiques, using literature from the urban South to the urban North, are feasible in terms of context, institutions and politics, for instance.

SA4H9 Half Unit

Non-Governmental Organisations, Social Policy and Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Lewis OLD2.40

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations). This course is available on the MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development) and MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration).

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to MSc ISPP students.

Pre-requisites: Students will preferably have some experience of work within NGOs and/or relevant government departments or donor agencies working with NGOs.

Course content: The course focuses on the specialised field of non-governmental organisations (NGOs) within the field of social policy and development, and considers theoretical and policy issues. Main topics include the history and theory of NGOs; the changing policy contexts in which NGOs operate; NGO service delivery and advocacy roles in policy; NGO relationships with other institutional actors including government, donors and private sector; challenges of NGO effectiveness and accountability; NGO organisational growth and change; and conceptual debates around civil society, social capital, social movements and globalisation.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will sit a mock exam held in LT. Students will receive feedback from their academic adviser on the mock exam. Weekly student led seminars which involve discussion of the assigned readings will also help to develop students' critical thinking, reading, and analytical skills

SA4K2 Half Unit

Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hildebrandt OLD2.55

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 15 students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course aims to analyse and understand the way social policies deploy sexuality categories in regulating everyday life in developing countries, both in its public and private manifestations. It aims to consider social policy and particular interventions in their historical contexts, as a way of unpacking the construction of sexuality in the intersection of colonialism, gender, race, class and international policy frameworks in developing countries. The course also aims to interrogate the relationship between particular social policy prescriptions developed in most industrialized welfare societies and the way some of these are transferred to developing countries. The major concern of the analysis is to bring out the perceptions of sexuality that underwrite these policies and how these interact with existing perceptions of sexualities and their performances (identities, desires and bodily practices) in multiple developing country contexts. These policy areas include, among others, discussions of rights, entitlements, citizenship, same-sex marriage, sexually transmitted disease, HIV/AIDS, family policies, migration/border controls, criminality and employment-related policies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay (2,000 words), which is to be handed in by the end of week eight of Lent Term.

SA4K5 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Issues in Contemporary Policing

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tim Newburn OLD 2.40a

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

While not specifically counting towards a specialism on the LLM, this course would complement the following specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Legal Theory and Public Law.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with sociology and/or criminology would be an advantage, but is not a formal prerequisite. Anyone unfamiliar with criminology can find a full introduction to the subject in: Newburn, T. (2017) Criminology, London: Routledge, 3rd Edition

Course content: The flourishing sub-discipline of 'police studies' reflects the increasing centrality of policing in political debate and popular culture, and as a major concern of government policy. This course aims to familiarise students with the formidable volume of research knowledge that has now been built up. The course will enable students to understand the development and functioning of police organisations as well as providing them with an understanding of some of the key issues and debates affecting contemporary policing. The topics covered will include: the role and purposes of policing; the media and policing; governance and legitimacy; integrity and corruption; and policing and (in)equality.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write and submit two pieces of formative coursework. The first will be an essay outline - in effect an outline of an answer to a potential examination question, including a full introductory paragraph. The second will be a written assessment of a published book review - as the basis for the summative work to come.

Assessment: Essay (80%, 3000 words) in January.

Project (20%, 1000 words) in the MT Week 7.

The summative assessment will comprise a 3,000 essay involving a critical assessment of a minimum of two substantive issues covered in the course (80%), and a 1,000 word book review (20%).

SA4L Half Unit

Illegal Drugs and Their Control: Theory, Policy and Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Shiner OLD 2.34

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

If this course is oversubscribed places will be allocated firstly to MSc Criminal Justice Policy students, then other Social Policy students and then students from other departments on a first come first served basis.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with criminology or sociology is preferable but not essential

Course content: This multi-disciplinary course draws on sociology, psychology, criminology and law to examine the place and meaning of illegal drug use in late modern societies and associated policy responses. It begins by considering drug use and subcultural formations; the 'normalisation' of drug use; drug tourism; the role of addiction; and the organisation of drug markets. It then goes on to consider the making of drugs policy; drugs, policing and the law; treatment and harm reduction; drugs as a development and human rights issue; decriminalisation and alternatives to prohibition.

Teaching: 10 x 1.5 hours of lectures and 10 x 1.5 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay (2,000 words), which is to be handed in by the end of week eight of MT.

Indicative reading: Aldridge, J., Measham, F., and Williams, L. (2011) Illegal Leisure Revisited: Changing Patterns of Alcohol and Drug Use in Adolescents and Young Adults, London: Routledge. Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT. to be handed in during the first week of the LT.

SA4L7 Half Unit

Policing, Security and Globalisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tim Newburn OLD 2.40a

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

While not specifically counting towards a specialism on the LLM, this course would complement the following specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Legal Theory and Public Law.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with sociology and/or criminology would be an advantage, but is not a formal prerequisite. Anyone unfamiliar with criminology can find a full introduction in: Newburn, T. (2017) Criminology, London: Routledge, 3rd Edition

Course content: The sub-discipline of police studies is now well-established and is flourishing. Whilst much traditional policing scholarship has focused on policing within particular societies, increasingly attention is being drawn to both international and comparative matters. Indeed, the social and economic changes associated with globalisation have affected policing as all else. This course will focus on transnational public and private policing, and on the issues and challenges raised by globalisation: from the policing of transitional societies and emergent democracies, the problems of drugs control and the policing of migration, to new social movements and the policing of public order.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one piece of formative coursework: an essay outline - in effect an outline answer to the longer summative essay, including a full introductory paragraph.

Assessment: Essay (80%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Coursework (20%, 1000 words) in the MT Week 7.

The summative assessment will comprise a 3,000 word essay involving a critical assessment of two substantive issues covered in the course (80%), and a 1,000 word critique of a selected piece of policing research

SA4L8 Half Unit

Punishment and Penal Policy (Masters)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leonidas Cheliotis OLD 2.51

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: N/A

Course content: This course will run as a half-unit option, and will explore punishment and penal policy from a range of comparative perspectives. Focusing on Anglophone jurisdictions and the rest of the world in equal measure, the course will consider in depth a wide variety of historical and international comparative studies of punishment and penal policy, both from the field of criminology and beyond. In so doing, the course will critically examine theoretical frameworks and empirical research on such issues as:

- the forms state punishment has assumed over time and in different national and regional contexts;
- the array and relative significance of the reasons why punishment and penal policy may develop, qualitatively as well as quantitatively, in particular ways at given historical junctures and in different jurisdictions;
- the relationship between political systems and punishment, with particular reference to processes of democratisation;
- the links between penal policy and different forms of economic organisation, from preindustrial capitalism to welfare capitalism and neoliberalism; and
- the role of punishment in society as explained through psychosocial theories and research

Thanks to its substantive foci and broad comparative approach, the course will enhance existing provision in the School in the field of penology (e.g., the course 'Explaining Punishment: Philosophy, Political Economy, Sociology' (LL4CL), taught by Professors Lacey and Ramsay in the Law Department).

Indicative course content

1 The Contours of State Punishment

- 2 Continuity and Change in Punishment and Penal Policy: Historical Comparative Perspectives
- 3 Convergences and Contrasts in Punishment and Penal Policy: International Comparative Perspectives
- 4 Political Systems and Punishment, Part I: Democracy
- 5 Political Systems and Punishment, Part II: Democratisation
- 6 Reading Week
- 7 The Political Economy of Punishment: Marxist and Neo-Marxist Perspectives from the Global North and the Global South
- 8 Punishment, Politics and the Economy: Institutional Perspectives from around the World
- 9 The Cultural Uses of Punishment
- 10 The Emotional Lives of Punishment
- 11 Cultural Representations of Punishment

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

In Week 6 of the term, students will be required to submit a 1,500-word essay on any of the weekly topics addressed in the course. Formative coursework will be designed to feed into later summative assessments, giving students an opportunity to develop critical thinking and presentational skills.

Indicative reading: Alexander, M. (2010) The New Jim Crow: Mass Incarceration in the Age of Colorblindness. New York and London: The New Press. Brown, M. Politics of Social Policy: Welfare and Work in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timo Fleckenstein OLD.2.60

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course explores the politics of social policy in advanced political economies. In the first part of the course, the main analytical approaches for the cross-national analysis of welfare states are introduced (such as the industrialism thesis, the power resources model, new institutionalism, feminist theory and the globalisation thesis). These will be examined in the context of the rise of modern welfare states and their transformations since the end of the 'Golden Age' in the mid-1970s. These analyses and the theoretical approaches to cross-national study of welfare states will be harnessed in the second part of the course when the focus shifts towards more recent policy developments since the 1990s. The empirical focus is on the welfare-and-work nexus. The course analyses the development of labour market and family policies in Nordic countries, Continental Europe, Anglo-phone countries and East Asia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Seminar members will be expected to make presentations to the seminar, and submit a formative essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Bonoli, Giuliano, and Natali, David, eds. (2012) The Politics of the New Welfare State, Oxford: OUP. Castles, Frances G. et al., eds. SA4N8 Half Unit

Riots, Disorder and Urban Violence

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Tim Newburn (OLD 240a)

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy, MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Development), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Migration), MSc in International Social and Public Policy (Non-Governmental Organisations), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with sociology and/or criminology would be an advantage, but is not a formal prerequisite. Anyone unfamiliar with criminology can find a full introduction to the subject in: Newburn, T. (2017) Criminology, London: Routledge, 3rd Edition.

Course content: This course focuses on urban or collective violence, or what more colloquially tend to be referred to as 'riots'. The course will consider the various approaches that have been taken to this subject - via history, psychology and sociology - and, focusing on particular examples, the course will examine some of the core issues in the field including: the causes of riots; psychological versus sociological explanations; the role of race/ethnicity; the impact of traditional and new social media on the nature and organisation of rioting; the role and changing nature of the policing of urban disorder; and how riots might be understood both historically and comparatively.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There was strong and consistent feedback from students this year (the first year of the course) to increase the lecture time from 60 minutes to 90 minutes (in line with a number of other taught MSc modules in Social Policy).

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write and submit two pieces of formative coursework for assessment and peer feedback. The first will be an essay outline - in effect an outline of a answer to a potential examination question, including a full introductory paragraph. The second will be an outline of their intended case study. Both pieces of formative coursework will be shared via Moodle and all students will be encouraged to offer constructive feedback to each other as well, of course, as receiving feedback from the course director. Peer feedback will be utilised as a means of encouraging a degree of group work and collective endeavour among course participants.

Politics and Society

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer STC.S114a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to explore some of the great debates about the relationship between politics and society. It will examine the interaction between political institutions, economic interests and cultural ideas, especially in societies that are both democratic and capitalist. The course will explore some of the classic empirical and historical controversies that have animated political sociologists. Each week, we will discuss questions like: What gave rise to states and nations? Why are some social movements more successful than others? How does social change shape parties and elections? Do repressive states give rise to radicalism? Why are welfare states more developed in some countries than others? Why is there no Labor Party in the United States? Under what conditions does democracy develop? What explains the growth of populism? And has neo-liberalism become hegemonic? The course will also look at the canonical writings of authors like Marx, Weber and Tocqueville, as well as critically explore the use of some political concepts. In addition, it will enable you to build up your knowledge of a number of countries and to assess the strengths and weaknesses of some of the main theories and approaches that have dominated the study of political sociology. These include functionalist, rational choice, and institutionalist theories, as well as historical and comparative approaches.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Reading weeks: week 6 MT and week 6 LT. Seminars: Papers will be presented by participants and, on occasion, by guest speakers. In addition to the weekly seminar, there will be a number of additional seminars specifically concerned with research strategies in political sociology. If possible, students should attend the lecture course SO203 Political Sociology when available.

Formative coursework: Members of the seminar will be required to present a number of papers during the course of the seminar. There will also be a termly essay in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: B. Anderson, Imagined Communities; R. Archer, Why is There No Labour Party in the United States?; M. Classical Social Thought

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Nigel Dodd Room STC S106 & Dr Sara Salem Room TBD

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A critical review of classical social theory. The origins and development of classical sociological theory; exploring the work of Marx, Weber, Simmel, Durkheim and De Bois through a close reading and interpretation of primary texts. This course will also explore subsequent developments within these theoretical traditions, including their elaboration into alternative 'canons' of social theory. It is not assumed that students have a basic grounding in classical social theory, although it is expected that students who register for this course will be prepared to develop their understanding through primary readings, and not rely on textbooks.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Reading week: week 6 (MT)

Formative coursework: 1000-word formative memo, due in Week 6 of MT.

Indicative reading: Relevant books that provide an overview include: A Callinicos, Social Theory; N Dodd, Social Theory and Modernity; A Giddens, Capitalism and Modern Social Theory; G Ritzer, Sociological Theory. The reading list for each seminar will be divided up into essential and additional reading. Students will be asked to read between 50 and 100 pages of primary text per week. The following is a sample list of readings: Marx, K: The Communist Manifesto & Grundrisse & Capital (sections of vols 1 & 3); Weber, M: The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism & 'Science as a Vocation'; Simmel, G: The Philosophy of Money (various sections) & various essays such as 'The Metropolis and Mental Life', 'The Stranger', etc.; Durkheim, E: The Division of Labour in Society & The Elementary Forms of the Religious Life (various sections from each). Du Bois: Souls of Black Folk & Black Reconstruction in America & The Philadelphia Negro (various sections).

Assessment: Essay (90%, 3000 words) in the LT. Other (10%).

The other assessment will be a summative seminar plan and presentation, in pairs, due throughout MT.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day. Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

S0434 Cultural Theory and Cultural Forms

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Donald Slater STC S310

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Culture and Society. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Cultural Theory and Cultural Forms is the core course for the MSc Culture and Society. The aim is to introduce you to a wide range of approaches, debates and issues that loom large in the study of cultural processes. By the end of this course you should have a reasonable map of different aspects and approaches to researching cultural processes; and you should feel able to formulate your own research questions and strategies within the diverse traditions of culture theory and cultural research. In Term 1 we introduce the diverse approaches to cultural theory and the central debates that have structured the field, with particular attention to the ways in which these link to central sociological themes. The second focuses on approaching these theoretical debates from the vantage of empirical research and a concern with methodologies for studying cultural processes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Reading weeks: week 6 (MT) and week 6 (LT)

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one piece of non-assessed written work per term and prepare seminar presentations.

City Design: Research Studio

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall STC.S212

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The City Design Research Studio is the central unit of the MSc programme, linking the critical issues raised in the core and optional lecture courses, including questions of power and social justice, with the practical analysis of issues of city design and proposals for urban intervention. This course promotes a practical understanding of the city as a social and built environment. Through a mixed-methods engagement with site-based issues, the research studio explores the different ways city design relates to policy formation, planning processes, legal frameworks, financing mechanisms, local forms of organisation and the emerging needs of complex urban societies. It will provide students with an appreciation of the complexities of urban design and development processes, and with interdisciplinary tools for addressing specific urban challenges. The course addresses design as both informed and imaginative modes of research and practice that shapes urban environments, responds to urban problems, and connects visual, social and material dimensions of the city. It aims to integrate the physical, economic, social and political aspects of urban contexts, and develop ways to analyse these visually, textually and verbally. The studio-based approach to learning is an immersion in site-based research and experimental, strategic and pragmatic forms of design intervention. The course comprises of group based fieldwork in a London site, followed by an international fieldtrip.

Teaching: The Studio course runs for one full day each teaching week in MT and LT through lectures, workshops and regular small-group tutorials; additional specialist seminars and workshops are scheduled throughout the Studio course. Studio groups are expected to work together during the scheduled Studio hours, and prepare collectively for regular workshops and tutorials. In MT, the Studio course focuses on methods and approaches of social and spatial research and analysis. In the first four weeks of LT, Studio groups work intensively on a detailed analysis of a specific urban context, and develop a practical proposal for intervention in that site. The last six weeks of LT comprise of an international field trip, and individual work on a related written assignment.

Formative coursework: Group presentations for faculty and guest critics. 1 x research presentation and site analysis. (MT)

Assessment: Other (50%), other (25%) and other (25%).

The assessment consists of:

One Studio group submission (6000 words, 50%)

Individual tutor assessment based on contribution to Studio group work (25%)

Individual field trip assignment (3000 words, 25%)

Two copies of the Studio group submission, with submission sheets attached to each, to be submitted to the Administration Office, STC S116, no later than 16:30 on the fifth Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day. Two hard copies of the individual field trip assignment, with submission sheets attached to each, to be submitted to the Administration Office, STC S116, no later than 16:30 on the eleventh Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO449

Independent Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall STC.S212

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The independent project enables students to develop an original and extended piece of work on any approved topic within the field of the MSc programme - students are encouraged, but not required, to develop work on themes or sites introduced in their Studio or core courses. The project may focus on a small-scale urban research study or on a practical proposal for urban intervention. Approval for the topic must be obtained from your academic advisor.

Teaching: In LT students attend a project workshop and then submit a provisional project abstract; academic advisors for the independent project are assigned on the basis of the abstract. In ST, each student has regular supervisory meetings with their academic advisor, and one day of final group reviews with members of faculty. Students are also encouraged to consult with other members of faculty during regular office hours.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit one project abstract, and to produce regular formative project work in consultation with their academic advisor.

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on the 15th of August 2019 if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system.

SO451 Half Unit

Cities by Design

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall STC.S212

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme, MSc in City Design and Social Science and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. SO451 is a capped course and we can only accept 32 students. If you are not registered on the MSc City Design and Social Design please submit an e-mail to Suzanne Hall motivating your inclusion on the course, ONCE you have attended the first introductory lecture where we will be available to respond to individual questions.

Course content: The course examines the relationship between built form and its political, social and cultural relations in contemporary urban landscapes. By introducing students to established and emerging approaches to design, the course investigates how the design of our complex urban environments shapes and is shaped by the people who live in them, and the urgencies of time and place. The course focuses on current urban research across diverse urban contexts and attempts to reconcile the often complex inter-connections between urban theory, research, policy and practice. A range of contemporary cities form the base for the course, and these are explored through urban design milieu and architectures including: design as ideology, design as observation, and the architectures of infrastructure, evidence and insurgency.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Reading week: week 6

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1

essay in the MT.

Written feedback is given within two weeks of the essay submission, and in addition a writing seminar is incorporated in the course in preparation for the summative assessed essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course. We simultaneously engage with literatures by architects (as a broadly defined practice) and a range of social scientists. These include architects exploring new modes of practice and research, for example: Bremner, Burdett, Davis, Easterling, Hall, Hernandez, Lokko, King, Kurgan, Mehrotra and Weizmann, as well as social scientists exploring design and city space, for example: Datta, Hayden, Holston, Jacobs, Madden, Roy, Sennett, Scott, Simone, and Tonkiss.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 5000 words) in the LT. Presentation (25%) in the MT.

An illustrated course essay of not more than 5,000 words to be submitted by 4pm on the first Tuesday of LT. Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to all copies, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day. Attendance at seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO465 Half Unit

City-Making: the Politics of Urban Form

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode FAW.8.01K and Dr Savvas Verdis FAW.8.01.D

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This case study-led course provides a critical understanding of major urban development initiatives and programmes in international city contexts. It is designed for students with a particular interest in urban development practices and how these connect with broader political debates. It will introduce students to the following knowledge and skills:

- general understanding of political theories underlying urban development models
- ability to situate major urban development initiatives within different development cultures and socio-economic policy agendas
- understanding the role of public, private and third party actors and formal and informal urban development processes
- perspectives on decision making at the strategic, pre-design stage for urban development initiatives and ability to relate urban policy to spatial outcomes, operating at different scales
- knowledge of key evaluation approaches and analytic frameworks used in the analysis of proposed and existing urban developments
- understanding of how urban development objectives, phases and processes can be integrated and how policy making, economic development, urban planning, city design, architecture, and engineering are related.

The course content is based on contemporary projects and urban trends examined in the context of cities throughout the world. These range from policies such as congestion charging (London) and Progressive City Development (Medellin) to urban development trends such as extreme urbanism in Mumbai and privatist planning (Canary Wharf, London and Santa Fe, Mexico City). Such projects will be examined through critical frameworks that include utilitarianism, cost benefit analysis, social and environmental justice, citizenship theory and the capabilities approach. The course will focus on negotiation, politics, financing, appraisals and decision-making for cities by inviting practitioners, experts and policy makers to join individual sessions for presentations and debate. Seminars and assessed project work for the course will be based on the analysis of Development Strategies and City Design briefs.

Further information on the course can be found on: www.citymaking.com

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. Reading week: week 6.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (10%) in the MT.

Exam will be held during the Summer Term exam session.

S0469 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Risk and Governance: A Sociological Approach

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter STC.S102

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Sociology and Master of Public Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students an advanced understanding of the various ways in which risk is governed in modern societies and an appreciation of the complexities of different levels of risk governance. It will consider three main areas. First, state based risk governance regimes; second, risk governance beyond the state; and third transnational risk governance. The topics under consideration include a critical discussion of what is regarded as risk evidence and the role of experts in policy making; how state regulators incorporate risk based approaches into their governance regimes; the role of insurance companies and other business organizations in risk governance; the role of the public; and attempts to governance risks which traverse national borders. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including the environment, finance, biotechnology and food.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the MT.

Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: Students should hand in one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Cashore, Ben. 2002. Legitimacy and the Privatization of Environmental Governance: How Non-State Market-Driven (NSMD) Governance Systems Gain Rule-Making Authority. Governance 15(4), 503-529; Ericson, R.V., Doyle, A. and Barry, D. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Thursday of Lent Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

S0470 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19

The Sociology of Markets

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leon Wansleben STC S208

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour), MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers an introduction to the sociology of markets. We will look at this topic from two different sides: On the one hand, we will explore different theoretical issues in economic sociology, such as market structure, valuation, and the role of the state. Here, the underlying question is what sociology can contribute to a theoretical understanding of markets. On the other hand, we will explore particular case studies, such as illegal markets or markets for fine art; students will get the chance to study one of these cases in-depth. By the end of the course, students will be versed in the sociological and larger debates about markets, and they will be equipped to contribute to these debate with small, innovative case studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.
Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: A 1500 word essay is required.

Indicative reading: Recommended texts: Callon, Michel. 1998. The laws of the markets. Blackwell Publishers: Oxford; Fligstein, Neil. 2001. The Architecture of Markets. An Economic Sociology of Twenty-First-Century Capitalist Societies. Princeton, NJ a.o.: Princeton University Press; Granovetter, Mark. 1995[1974]. Getting a Job: a Study of Contacts and Careers. "The elusive market: Embeddedness and the paradigm of economic sociology." Theory and Society 30:775-810; Swedberg, Richard. 2003. Principles of Economic Sociology. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Assessment will consist of an essay analysis of two case studies along with the submission of a portfolio (100%).

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the second Wednesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Attendance at all workshop sessions and submission of all set coursework is required.

S0471 Half Unit Technology, Power and Culture

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Judy Wajcman STC S203

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Media and Communications (Data and Society), MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a detailed understanding of sociologically informed approaches to the social studies of science and technology. It will consider how macro theories of post-industrial society (from Bell to Castells) have conceptualised the role of technology in social change. It will then look at the development of STS as a field that highlights the constitutive role of objects and artefacts in social relations. In other words, it will reflect upon sociology's traditional neglect of the social life of things or materiality. These broad themes will then be elaborated substantively. First, by considering the role of technology in reconfiguring time, space and mobility. Second, by considering power relations and social inequalities embedded in digital technologies, such as the Internet and mobile phones. Third, by treating technology as a culture that shapes gender identities, such as those that find expression in the virtuality of cyberspace. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including the environment, the internet, robotics, sex, and weapons.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT

Indicative reading: Hackett, E. et al (2008) The Handbook of Science and Technology Studies (MIT Press). MacKenzie, D. and Wajcman J. (1999) The Social Shaping of Technology (MIT Press). Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

SO473 Half Unit Crime, Control and the City

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Janet Foster

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This half unit course examines crime and disorder in city landscapes, the relationship between crime, space and place, and the complex mix of informal and formal social controls that influence different types and levels of crime. Drawing on a range of comparative literature from different cities, and using a mixture of classic and contemporary texts, we examine the importance of informal social control in maintaining social order in cities, the role of policing, and what happens when formal and informal social controls fail using the riots, gangs and homicide as examples. We also explore the principles of crime prevention – both physical and social – and use public housing as a case study to critically examine the relationship between crime and design.

SO475 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Material Culture and Design

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Donald Slater STC S310

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on designed entities in everyday life, looking at the ways in which materials are configured into things, practices, spaces and forms, and at the assemblage of objects across production, design, consumption and use. Though aiming to produce expertise in specifically social science research, the course will bring together literatures and debates that cross the social sciences, humanities and science/technology, drawing particularly on actor-network theory, material culture studies, sociology of consumption, practice theory, urban and architectural studies, cultural theory and design studies. There will also be a strong emphasis on methodology: what tools are available to social scientists to investigate the emergent properties and impacts of designed objects. Case studies will be central to the teaching, developing theoretical and methodological strategies through a (changing) set of empirical cases that are likely to include: digital objects (software, games); media objects; lights and lighting; fashion; domestic interiors.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Reading week: week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 essay applying a theoretical approach to a specific case study.

SO476 Researching Migration: research questions and research methods

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick McGovern STC.S214

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Having introduced the students to a range of possible research strategies, the students will be asked to prepare informal seminar presentations on their proposed research in the MT and LT. In addition, they will submit a one hundred word topic summary towards the end of the MT and a 400 word research proposal before the end of the LT. They will also prepare and deliver a formal presentation on their research for a workshop early in the ST. At each stage, participants will be encouraged to use feedback from the course convenors and fellow students to revise their research plans. A final proposal will be submitted after the ST workshop.

Teaching: Lectures 3 x 1 hour (3); Seminars 2 x 2 hours (4); Workshop 5 hours (5). Total 12 hours

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 presentations in the MT, LT and ST.

SO480 Half Unit Urban Inequalities

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fran Tonkiss STC.S205

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers a critical introduction to key issues and processes in the study of contemporary urban inequalities. Recent urban analysis has highlighted the growing share of the global population that now lives in cities; this course puts such growth in the context of another major urban trend: deepening patterns of inequality in many cities across the world. It examines the continuing role of 'older' bases of urban inequality - access to land and property, gender inequity, ethnic and racial discrimination, legal exclusion and informality - as well as significant emerging patterns, including extreme concentrations of wealth at the top, middle-class stagnation, privatisation and spatial secession, immigration and insecurity. It also examines the complex of ways in which urban inequality is experienced, not only in terms of income or property, but also in consumption inequalities, inequities in access to housing, transport, urban services and legal protections, spatial disparities and environmental risks and injustices. The course considers the range of social, economic, environmental and political factors that shape, and also might help to address, urban inequality in these different contexts.

The course will:

- provide a critical introduction to current and emerging patterns of urban inequality
- consider the production of urban inequalities through social, economic, political and spatial processes
- explore common themes and critical differences across cities in developed and developing economies
- address key debates in a range of urban disciplines, and situate these in specific urban contexts and examples

Key themes

- Urban growth and the growth of inequality
- Wealth, income and inequality
- Spatial injustice: segregation and access
- Environment and inequities
- Informality and insecurity
- Social inequality in the city: gender, race and legal exclusions
- Governing inequality

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

SO481 Half Unit Class, Politics and Culture

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sam Friedman STC216

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will begin by introducing traditional theories of social class and stratification before going on to examine the history and political significance of class in Britain, and how this compares with other countries throughout the world. It will then look at the place of class in a contemporary political context, critically examining the claim made by some 'postmodern' writers, and prominent politicians, that class boundaries have been irrevocably eroded. The course will then move on to look at the seminal work of French sociologist Pierre Bourdieu and his supposition that class boundaries are most clearly discernible from examining people's cultural taste, with the privileged using their preferences for 'highbrow' culture as a means of expressing their superiority over the working classes, who tend to prefer more 'lowbrow' culture. We interrogate how these arguments relate today, where the lines between high and low culture are increasingly blurred, where strong cross-cultural differences persist between Europe and the U.S, and where new taste distinctions exist even in traditionally lowbrow art forms, such as comedy and pop music. We then take a more detailed look at class-based boundaries in taste and lifestyle. In particular, we focus on the way in which the middle classes demonise sections of the working class based on what they consider to be 'pathological' consumption choices – focusing in particular on the 'Chav' phenomenon in Britain. We go on to explore both the meaning and consequences of such overt class prejudice, both in Britain but also using research from the U.S, the Netherlands and other international contexts. Finally, the module will ask to what extent class boundaries are malleable? How easy is it for people to escape their backgrounds and move upward or downward in social space? This final section of the course thus looks at contemporary patterns of social mobility, examining the social benefits and challenges that mobility implies, increasing closure within global elites, and the rise of the middle classes in developing countries like China, Brazil and South Africa.

S0483 Half Unit

Social Change Organizations

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael McQuarrie STC.S217a

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The purpose of this class is to familiarise students with organisational sociology from the perspective of organisations other than firms or governments. Organisations are one of the primary tools society has for realising values and interests. However, organisations are not simply tools. They constrain and enable action for social change in a variety of ways and shape the outcomes of our efforts. Attempting to realise social change using organisations creates a set of dilemmas that must be managed and dealt with for efforts to be successful. The course will focus on social movement organisations, NGOs, associations, cooperatives, communes, and the dilemmas that these organisations confront in attempting to realise their goal of a better society. The course will also familiarise students with the theoretical and analytical tools sociologists use to understand social change organisations.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The class format will be a combination of lectures, guest Q&A with leaders of social change organisations, and seminar discussion. Week 6 is a reading week.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework will consist of preparing and leading discussions, in-class analytical writing, and assignments meant to advance student work on the final essay.

Indicative reading: Katherine Chen, Enabling Creative Chaos

Monika Krause, The Good Project

Nina Eliasoph, Making Volunteers

James Ferguson, The Anti-Politics Machine

Timothy Mitchell, The Rule of Experts

David Graeber, The Democracy Project

Frances Fox Piven and Richard Cloward, Poor People's Movements

Charles Perrow, "A Society of Organizations"

Elisabeth Clemens and Mary Bernstein, "The Multi-Institutional Perspective"

V.I. Lenin "What is to be done?"

Joreen, "The Tyranny of Structurelessness"

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

For their assessment students will complete an essay that does not exceed 4000 words in length. The essay will either be a review essay of the sociological literature on a topic related to social change organisations or an analysis of a social change organisation using the tools learned in the class.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the first Tuesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Family and Migration

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ursula Henz STC.S100B

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the family life, family patterns and family relationships of contemporary migrant families in Great Britain and other societies. It applies three perspectives to migrant families: diversity, integration and transnationality. It examines variations in family life, patterns and relationships in migrant families; particular challenges that are associated with the migration of a family to a new country as well as transformations of family roles and intimacy in transnational families. After an overview over family forms in different cultures, the course explores selected substantive topics. Indicative topics are: migrant children and children left behind; marriage migration, transnational marriages; and intermarriage; the roles of mother and father in immigrant and transnational families; migrant families and family care.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

MSc in Political Sociology Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer STC.S114a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

These seminars are for students on the MSc Political Sociology only.

Course content: These seminars aim to help you to begin the process of writing your dissertation. At the end of MT we will have four seminars that aim to get students thinking at a meta-level about research in political sociology. The seminars can, of course, only address a small selection of approaches. Examples might include rational choice and institutionalist theories, or comparative and case study methods. But please note that the MSc in Political Sociology takes a pluralist approach and does not seek to prescribe these or any other particular theories or methods. In LT we will hold dissertation workshop seminars that aim to give individually tailored guidance on proposed research questions in small groups with fellow students who are working on similar topics or using similar methods. Every student is required to make a formal presentation once during the term.

Teaching: 6 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of workshops in the LT.

4 x 1.5 hours seminars in MT. 10 x 1.5 hours workshops in LT. There will be three workshops during MT for ALL MSc students based in the Sociology department. These will be taught in conjunction with LSE Life and programme convenors, and aim to provide some basic guidance about planning your dissertation, such as selecting a suitable topic, reviewing the existing literature, devising a research question and designing a research method.'

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Students will: (1) assess the strengths and weakness of selected theories and methods; (2) formulate a clearly specified research question and set out the rationale for researching this question and a proposed approach; and (3) give a presentation which develops one or two of the main arguments they anticipate will be important to their project.

Indicative reading: Donatella Della Porta and Michael Keating (2008), Approaches and Methods in the Social Sciences: a Pluralist Approach, Thomas Janoski et al, (2005), The Handbook of Political Sociology, James Mahoney and Dietrich Rueschemeyer (2003), Comparative Historical Analysis in the Social Sciences.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on Thursday 15th of August 2019 if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system

MSc in Economy, Risk and Society Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rebecca Elliott STC S211

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Risk, Regulation and Economic Life (S0425)

Course content: The dissertation is an extended piece of written work that is your own independent research investigation of a social issue or problem, undertaken with the guidance of your dissertation supervisor. These workshops are meant to prepare you to produce an original piece of research. We will cover the expectations for the dissertation, as well as provide general guidance for deriving a research question that is appropriately situated in the themes of the programme; for developing an empirical strategy to study topics in risk, economic sociology, and/or regulation; and for writing up conclusions that can speak to enduring questions in our area. In addition to consultation with faculty, in these sessions students will work in smaller groups to peer review their work-in-progress.

Teaching: 2 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Note also that there will be three workshops during MT for ALL MSc students based in the Sociology department. These will be taught in conjunction with LSE Life and programme convenors and aim to provide some basic guidance about planning your dissertation, such as selecting a suitable topic, reviewing the existing literature, devising a research question and designing a research method.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit two pieces of work; one topic proposal during MT, and a formal abstract at end of LT.

Indicative reading:

- Alan Bryman, Social Research Methods (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004)
- Clive Seale, The Quality of Qualitative Research (London: Sage, 1999)
- Clive Seale (ed), Researching Society and Culture (London: Sage, 2012)
- Howard Becker, Writing for Social Scientists (Chicago: University of Chicago, 1986)

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on Thursday 15th of August 2019 if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. MSc in Human Rights Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chetan Bhatt STC.S107

The Programme Convenor is responsible for overseeing the Dissertation.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Rights. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to MSc Human Rights students, and is a compulsory course for students on the programme.

Course content: The dissertation is an extended piece of written work that is your own independent research investigation of a human rights issue or problem, undertaken with the guidance of your dissertation supervisor. In the dissertation, you will critically appraise evidence, arguments and debates to reach a conclusion your research question. The key requirement is that the dissertation should demonstrate a high level of independent critical ability. You must show your ability to organise your material clearly and logically and to sustain a reasoned and cogent argument from beginning to end. Where appropriate you should explain clearly the research method(s) that you have applied and the reasons for your choice of approach. You should show awareness of any shortcomings of your study in relation to methods employed and where relevant, quality or quantity of the data, and disciplinary approach.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hour of seminars in the ST

There will be one Introductory lecture in MT for all MSc Human Rights students, on the challenges and requirements of doing independent research for dissertation purposes, and different methodologies available for an inter-disciplinary programme. The Introductory session will also cover fieldwork and research ethics. This will be followed by 5 seminars/workshops in smaller groups, in which students present and discuss possible research questions and strategies, along with preparing dissertation proposal and timeline.

There will be three workshops during MT for ALL MSc students based in the Sociology department. These will be taught in conjunction with LSE Life and programme convenors, and aim to provide some basic guidance about planning your dissertation, such as selecting a suitable topic, reviewing the existing literature, devising a research question and designing a research method.'

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit a topic proposal at the end of MT and a fuller dissertation proposal at end of LT. During the seminars and in dissertation supervisions, students receive formative feedback on their ideas and research plans. The summative assessment is the submission of a completed dissertation in August.

Indicative reading: Alan Bryman, Social Research Methods

SO499

MSc in Sociology Dissertation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fabien Accominotti STC S206

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation may be on any topic within the field of the MSc programme studied. Approval for the topic must be obtained from the relevant Programme Tutor.

Teaching:

Dissertation Preparation

The candidate should confirm a working title and prepare a brief abstract for their intended dissertation (up to one A4 page, double-spaced, including your name not your candidate number), which should be reviewed with their Academic Advisor no later than the Monday, week 8 of Lent Term. Along with the title and abstract the candidate and Academic Advisor should review and complete the Research Ethics Review Checklist by this same time. These abstracts are the basis for an MSc dissertation Workshop that is organised for each programme. Attendance at this workshop is optional but students are, of course, encouraged to attend.

Dissertation Particulars

The dissertation must be a report of a research project, whether it comprises primary empirical material, secondary empirical material or theoretical/exegetical work on a body of social thought: i.e. there must be an identifiable and clear research question governing the research project; there must be critical reflection on the methods used (including their limits and the reasons why they warrant the kinds of claims made); and substantive analysis of empirical or analytical material. Even where the topic is substantively a literature or policy-review exercise, candidates are expected to offer original reasoned argument and interpretation and to show evidence of a competence in research methods. Guidance on topic selection and methods will normally be provided by the candidate's tutor. The dissertation is primarily a reflection of the candidate's own work and so feedback will not be given on draft versions of the dissertation. The dissertation should reflect the candidate's own views.

There will be 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

There will be three workshops during MT for ALL MSc students based in the Sociology department. These will be taught in conjunction with LSE Life and programme convenors, and aim to provide some basic guidance about planning your dissertation, such as selecting a suitable topic, reviewing the existing literature, devising a research question and designing a research method.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:00 on Thursday 15th of August 2019 if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system.

S04A1 Half Unit

Governing Cities in an Urban Age: Challenges and Opportunities

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett FAW 8.01J and Prof Antony Travers CON6.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Governing Cities in an Urban Age is an intensive introduction to global urbanisation and the state of cities. The course explores different stages of urban development in cities and regions across the world. It provides students with an understanding of the key challenges facing both mature and rapidly-developing metropolitan areas. It will locate the key challenges facing large cities, notably the persistent levels of social inequality, poverty, unsustainable resource use and constraints to economic efficiency. The course introduces the key tools for intervention such as planning, governance and management of land and infrastructure in response to critical pressures linked to economic development, globalisation, migration, social inclusion, climate change, resource efficiency, and resilience. The key purpose of the course will be to give participants a comprehensive framework for understanding the challenges which cities are facing today.

Topics include: global urbanisation, development and design, urban change, population growth, urban productivity, urban expansion, urban sprawl, densification, intensification, sociability, urban governance, urban institutions, budgets and responsibilities.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 7 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. The course will be taught over a period of one week in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Submission of a 500 word non-assessed formative statement outlining the key political, environmental and socioeconomic challenges in the student's city that will shape the content of the 2,000 word assessed report.

Indicative reading: Angel, Shlomo (2011): Making Room for a Planet of Cities. Lincoln Institute of Land Policy. Barber, Benjamin R. (2013): If Mayors ruled the world: Dysfunctional Nations, Rising Cities. Yale University Press. Burdett, Ricky and Deyan Sudjic (2011): Living in the Endless City. Phaidon Press Ltd. London. Cities and Society: Design and Social Cohesion

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett 8.01J

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Cities and Society: Design and Social Cohesion looks at some of the major drivers of urban inequality and poverty and the key actions that cities are taking to reduce urban inequalities through urban design, infrastructure and policy. This is a heavily applied course providing students with tools to analyse the socio-demographic profile of households and neighbourhoods and their relation to spatial distribution and clustering in cities of the developing and developed world. Students are introduced to traditional measures of poverty and inequality such as income and wealth as well more recent multi-dimensional poverty measures such as health and education, and provided with analytical and mapping tools to identify areas of concentration of deprivation. A particular emphasis is placed on identifying spatial strategies that can alleviate the concentration of urban poverty and inequality by optimising access to jobs, housing, education, health, public space, transport and community infrastructure.

Cities and Society will also look at the macro-economic forces that are producing uneven regional and urban development and the key planning methods to reduce levels of inequality. These include spatially blind policies such as taxation and redistribution; spatially connective policies such as infrastructure links between high and low income neighbourhoods and finally spatially targeted policies where private and public investment is targeted at the most deprived urban areas.

Topics include: inequality and GINI coefficients; from income to multi-dimensional measures of poverty; the Human Development Index and its urban relevance; affordable housing, social infrastructure; equity planning (examples include London, Barcelona, Medellin and Bogota; the London model of urban regeneration; infrastructure and equity, health and well-being, migration.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 6 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course will be taught over a period of three sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Cities and the Economy: Urban Economic Development and Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Savvas Verdis FAW 8.01E

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Cities and the Economy forms part of the Executive MSc in Cities. This is an applied course looking at how cities position themselves in a competitive global economy and on the role of city government and firms in driving local economic development. The course introduces key methodologies to measure and analyse the city economy as well as policies and tools available to attract investment and finance as well as improve growth and competitiveness.

From a global economic level, we will look at the forces shaping urban development and the capacity of national, regional and local policies to influence these drivers. From a more local economic level, we will look at the make-up and sectorial composition of a city economy; how we can measure the economic impact of policies and projects and finally how we can finance and fund complex infrastructure projects.

Topics include: measuring growth and competitiveness over time, comparative vs competitive advantage, key performance indicators of a city economy, local growth coalitions, the role of infrastructure and megaprojects in driving competitiveness, managing city budgets, financing your city, global city indexes, special economic zones and other incentives, preparing an economic development strategy.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 6 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course will be taught over a period of three sessions.

Cities and the Environment: Urban Environmental Transitions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode FAW 8.01I

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: Cities and the Environment explores critical aspects of environmental sustainability in relation to both urbanisation globally and urban change in individual cities. This is an applied course giving students the relevant tools to measure, analyse and assess environmental impact. It introduces debates on different green city paradigms and focuses specifically on approaches to urban climate change mitigation and adaptation. The course further examines implications for urban planning, governance and management.

Cities and the Environment aims to provide the students with an analytical understanding of environmental challenges linked to urban development. Based on these, students are introduced to planning approaches, policy instruments and governance arrangements enabling environmental sustainability and resilience, facilitating the transition to a green economy in cities.

Topics include: environmental sustainability, green economy, environmental impact assessments, climate change adaptation and mitigation in cities, climate resilience, urban environmental transition, resource consumption, pollution, biodiversity.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 6 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course will be taught over a period of three sessions.

Urban Infrastructure and Strategic Planning

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode FAW 8.01I and Prof Antony Travers CON6.06

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities and is offered as an option.

Course content: Urban infrastructure and strategic planning is a workshop based course providing practical insights on infrastructure development and strategic planning for cities. The course combines a series of lectures with studio-based group work on a case study city. Students are introduced to all key components of urban infrastructure, cutting across transport, energy, water, waste and digital network systems. A particular focus of this course is the interrelationship of transport infrastructure and urban form. This relationship forms the basis for an inquiry into strategic planning approaches and practical applications in cities around the world. Furthermore, the course covers important aspects of infrastructure governance, finance and regulation and examines implications for large-scale physical infrastructure as well as digital, smart city technologies. Infrastructure and strategic planning aims to provide the students with a praxis-oriented understanding of urban infrastructure development and strategic planning. The workshop-based nature of the course facilitates learning and skills development in relation to strategic development planning.

Topics include: urban infrastructure, transport, energy, water, waste, digital networks, strategic planning, smart cities, finance, privatisation, municipalisation, public private partnerships, design life, lock-in, phasing

Teaching: 3 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 9 hours of workshops in the ST.

The course will be taught during the lent and summer terms through hands-on team based workshops

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

Urban Development and Master Planning

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett FAW 8.01J and Dr Savvas Verdis FAW 8.01E

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities and is offered as an option.

Course content: Urban Development and Master Planning is an applied group project based on a major regeneration site. Groups of no more than six students will be introduced to one of the regeneration sites project teams which will include: local planning officers, developers, planners, designers and financing teams. The groups will first immerse themselves in the offices of the host organisation as well as the site and understand some of the project challenges. The groups will then work in a collaborative environment in order to develop solutions to the challenges set by the project teams.

Using some of the key assessment and planning tools developed in courses SO4A1, SO4A2, SO4A3 & SO4A4 of the Executive MSc in Cities, this project will encourage students to apply the most appropriate analysis, planning and finance methods to an actual development site.

Topics covered: land ownership, development goals, developing the brief, urban design and master planning strategies, wider urban context, phasing, capturing value, mix of uses, public vs private space, financing projects, residual values, negotiations between developers and public agencies, planning constraints and policies, affordable housing, lifecycle assessment, built form, density and integration.

Teaching: 3 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures, 3 hours of seminars and 9 hours of workshops in the ST.

The course will be taught during the lent and summer terms using a mixture of hands-on workshops and lectures.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

Urban Consultancy Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Rode 8.011 and Dr Savvas Verdis 8.01E

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Cities. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is only available to students registered in the Executive MSc in Cities.

Course content: The Consultancy Project is a six-month individual consultation undertaken by a student in the Executive MSc in Cities in their own organisation or for an external organisation. Through the consultancy project, students will apply the knowledge and skills acquired in the first six courses of the programme to craft policy or program improvements for public or private agencies and non-profit organisations.

Through in depth interviews with the organisation's leaders as well as the relevant stakeholders, students will focus on a specific project and offer advice on one or more of its design and implementation phases. These may include but are not limited to the concept, feasibility, design, assessment, delivery and/ or evaluation phases in the project cycle.

Examples of projects include design briefs, assessment of master plans or strategic plans, social, economic and environmental impact assessment of projects, project finance and greening of projects and policies.

Teaching: 3 hours of seminars and 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Each student will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development. Other members of staff may also advise as required. Students will be supported with face to face or web based tutorials throughout the duration of their consultancy project.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

A 500 word proposal brief for the consultation project that will be carried out independently by each student.

Leadership and Social Change

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Beverley Skeggs PAN.8.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Inequalities and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is not available as an outside option and is available only to Atlantic Fellows for Social and Economic Equity MSc students. This is a compulsory course for these students and non-AFSEE Fellows will not be permitted to take this course.

Course content: The course responds to the needs of the AFSEE Fellows to develop critical skills and understandings of leadership within various contexts and themes indexed to transforming global inequality. This approach marries a structural analysis of global inequality and its manifestations with practical and cognitive skills that will provide our students with the tools to bring such systemic change into being. Crucially, the course is heavily rooted in theories of practice, in which Fellows are introduced to and demonstrate a sound knowledge and critical appreciation of their field and its associated practice and research techniques, and show that these techniques can be successfully applied in revealing or challenging injustice and inequality. The course will consist of lectures, presentations, seminars and workshops. Lectures will introduce Fellows to key concepts, approaches and techniques for understanding and challenging inequality. Workshops and seminars will help Fellows clarify and deepen their understanding of points and issues raised in the lectures, through practical work carried out individually and in groups.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures and 10 hours of workshops in the LT. 6 hours of lectures and 10 hours of workshops in the ST.

Week 1 - 1-5 April 2019 - Systems Change and the Regenerative Economy

Week 2 - 16-20 June - Digital Futures and Social Change

Formative coursework: The formative coursework for both assessments will comprise of presentations of ideas and works-in-progress that are critiqued and given feedback. Fellows will present abstracts for their essays/thinkpieces and offer rationale for their choice of subject, motivation and its relationship both to the themes of the week and the values of the programme, but equally its relationship to their own practice, experience and ambitions for future work, campaigns and activism. This will be presented to the class and short, 5-10 minute pitches where both the lecturers and peers will offer feedback on the ideas presented this will then form the basis for the poster design and presentation (Summative Assessment).

Similarly, for the poster presentation, Fellows will be offered feedback on their ideas once they have assembled into their project groups. They will present a vignette of their ideas and seek directional support from the lecturer on its themes, methodology, division of labour and teamwork principles and the relationship between the poster presentation and the key learning outcomes.

White Screens/Black Images: The Sociology of Black Cinema

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clive James Nwonka Room PAN.8.01A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will also be available to students from Media and Communications

Course content: The aim of this course is to consider the politics of race in contemporary Black British and American cinema and visual practice and reflect on almost 60 years of black cinema vis-a-vis the social, institutional, textual, cultural and political shifts that have occurred during this period. These considerations are to be explored through the optic of film and moving image, from sociological, political and cultural studies perspectives. From the Black-led community films of the 1980's that sought to expose British state-led racism, to the new forms of filmic representation that emerged in the 2000's, to the mainstream, Hollywood attempts to create space for cultural diversity, the term 'Black film' remains a significant, potent but contested concept with a range of interpretations and expressions within it. The course will explore these varying definitions through past, emerging and future forms of black cinema and how these forms have and continue to both penetrate and subvert mainstream definitions. But what is Black British and American cinema? How do such films, however defined, produce meaning through visual culture, and what are the political, social and aesthetic motivations and effects? How are the new forms of Black British and American film facilitating new modes of representation, authorship and socio-political engagement? Seminars will draw upon a range of case studies that reveal change and continuity in contemporary representations of race and blackness and identity, and also the socio-political and institutional agendas that underpin them.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The course will comprise of a two hour seminar each week. This will offer the students a theoretical grounding in the subject, whilst also encouraging students to critically engage with the case studies and key reading texts.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

The formative assessment will comprise of a 1000 word outline of the student's summative essay, to include a 200 word abstract. Students will be expected to refer to the key texts, readings and theoretical frameworks explored throughout the course through an analysis on a film text of their choice that is germane to the courses themes. Students will be expected to present this outline during week 10, where they will receive both verbal and written feedback for their ideas. Further, students will be expected to critically engage and discuss fellow student's outlines and offer constructive feedback, with reference to the course teachings and key readings.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

The Summative Assessment is by a coursework essay of 4000 words (worth 100%) Students will identify their own essay title (which needs to be approved by the course convenor) that will refer to the teaching, themes and readings on the course. Students will be expected to produce an essay that considers the social, political, cultural and textual dimensions that shape the making of race and blackness within film texts.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay with submission sheets on each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S116, no later than 16:30 on the specified submission date. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

ST409 Half Unit Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kostas Kardaras COL 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Operations Research & Analytics, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Good undergraduate knowledge of distribution theory

Course content: A broad introduction to stochastic processes for postgraduates with an emphasis on financial and actuarial applications. The course examines Martingales, Poisson Processes, Brownian motion, stochastic differential equations and diffusion processes. Applications in Finance. Actuarial applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Indicative reading: T Bjork, Arbitrage Theory in Continuous Time; T Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus; S I Resnick, Adventures in Stochastic Processes; B K Oksendal, Stochastic Differential Equations: An Introduction with Applications, D Williams, Probability with Martingales.

ST411 Half Unit Generalised Linear Modelling and Survival Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL.8.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Statistics, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Marketing, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Mathematics to the level of Mathematical Methods (MA100) and probability to the level of Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202). Some knowledge of linear regression.

Course content: An introduction to the theory and application of generalised linear models for the analysis of continuous, categorical, count and survival data. Topics include: linear regression, analysis of variance (ANOVA), logistic regression for binary data, models for ordered and unordered (nominal) responses, log-linear models for count data and contingency tables, and models for survival (duration) data. The Stata software package will be used in computer workshops.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned weekly based on the computer sessions and returned to students with comments/feedback.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

ST416 Half Unit Multilevel Modelling

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Miltiadis Mavrakakis

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to multilevel modelling with applications in social research. This course deals with the analysis of data from hierarchically structured populations (e.g. student nested within classes, individuals nested within households or geographical areas) and longitudinal data (e.g. repeated measurements of individuals in a panel survey). Multilevel (random-effects) extensions of standard statistical techniques, including multiple linear regression and logistic regression, will be considered. The course will have an applied emphasis with computer sessions using appropriate software (e.g. Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned fortnightly and returned to students via Moodle with comments/feedback before the computer lab sessions.

Non-Linear Dynamics and the Analysis of Real Time Series

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Edward Wheatcroft

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: It is recommended that students have completed Time Series (ST422).

Course content: An introduction to the analysis of actual time series observations of real-world processes. The course casts both modern nonlinear methods and more traditional linear methods in a geometric approach. It introduces the properties of nonlinear mathematical models, covers chaos and the dynamics of uncertainty, and demonstrates the fundamental limitations in applied analysis which arise from model inadequacy. Fundamental aspects of predictability are addressed. Decision support under uncertainty is considered, with examples of economic impacts of forecasting, including weather and climate. The student will leave with a toolkit for the analysis and modelling of real data, with insights into how to evaluate which methods to employ (linear/non-linear, deterministic/stochastic) in a given problem, how to interpret the results in context, and how to avoid over interpreting nice theorems in practical circumstances. Concrete applications in economics (price time series, electricity demand, energy futures) and environment (weather, climate) as well as analytically tractable illustration from mathematics are considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST. Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (30%) in the ST.

ST422 Half Unit

Time Series

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wai-Fung Lam

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Marketing, MSc in Operations Research & Analytics, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Good undergraduate knowledge of statistics and probability.

Course content: A broad introduction to statistical time series analysis for postgraduates: what time series analysis can be useful for; autocorrelation; stationarity; causality; basic time series models: AR, MA, ARMA, ARCH and GARCH models for financial time series; trend removal and seasonal adjustment; invertibility; spectral analysis; estimation; forecasting. We will also discuss nonstationarity and multivariate time series if time permits.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Exercises will be given out to do at home during Week 6.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises will be given.

Indicative reading: Brockwell & Davis, Time Series: Theory and Methods; Brockwell & Davis, Introduction to Time Series and Forecasting; Box & Jenkins, Time Series Analysis, Forecasting and Control; Shumway & Stoffer, Time Series Analysis and Its Applications.

Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wicher Bergsma COL.6.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and statistics to the equivalent level of ST102 Elementary Statistical Theory.

Course content: The course will provide a comprehensive coverage on some fundamental aspects of probability and statistics methods and principles. It also covers linear regression analysis. Data illustration using statistical package R constitutes an integral part throughout the course, therefore provides the hands-on experience in simulation and data analysis.

Teaching: 38 hours of lectures, 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 11 hours of seminars and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Week 11 will be used as a revision week.

Formative coursework: Students will complete weekly assessed problem sheets. They will also complete R practice following instructions from the weekly computing workshop.

Applied Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Erik Baurdoux COL.6.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course builds on material discussed in ST409 (Stochastic Processes). In particular, elements of the general theory of semi-martingales will be covered and emphasis will be given on presenting a variety of models involving processes with general dynamics, including jumps. The theory will be applied to a range of topics in mathematical finance and insurance, as well as financial economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week; exercises will be given out to students to do at home.

Formative coursework: A set of coursework similar to the exercises that will appear in the exam will be assigned. Additional formative exercise will be available through Moodle.

ST429 Half Unit Statistical Methods for Risk Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hao Xing COL 7.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Data Science, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) and Stochastic Processes (ST302).

ST202, ST302, or equivalent

Course content: A self-contained introduction to probabilistic and statistical methods in risk management. This course starts with risk factors models and loss distributions, which are illustrated via examples in stocks, derivatives, and bonds portfolios. Axioms of coherent risk measures are introduced. Value at risk and other risk measures are introduced and their relation with coherent risk measures is discussed. Multivariate factor models are introduced and analysed: covariance and correlation estimations, multivariate normal distributions and their testing, normal mixture distributions and their fitting to data. The theory of copulas is introduced: meta distributions, tail dependence, fitting copulas to data. Some limitations of copulas are also discussed. The extreme value theory is introduced: generalized extreme value distribution, threshold exceedances and generalized Pareto distribution, modelling and measures of tail risk. Applications to insurance with large loss are also discussed. Students will be exposed to financial data via sets of computer-based classes and exercises.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

A exercise/problem-solving session will take place in Week 6.

Formative coursework: A set of exercises which are similar to problems appearing in the exam will be assigned. A set of coding exercises which are similar to examples in computer lab sessions will be assigned.

Indicative reading: A. McNeil, R. Frey, P. Embrechts, Quantitative Risk Management: Concepts, Techniques, Tools; Princeton Series in Finance

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

ST433 Half Unit Computational Methods in Finance and Insurance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Umut Cetin COL6.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics and Quantitative Methods for Risk Management) (MA400).

Course content: The purpose of this course is to (a) develop the students' computational skills, (b) introduce a range of numerical techniques of importance in actuarial and financial engineering, and (c) develop the ability of the students to apply the theory from the taught courses to practical problems, work out solutions including numerical work, and to present the results in a written report.

Binomial and trinomial trees. Random number generation, the fundamentals of Monte Carlo simulation and a number of related issues. Finite difference schemes for the solution of ordinary and partial differential equations arising in insurance and finance. Numerical solutions to stochastic differential equations and their implementation. The course ends with an introduction to guidelines for writing a scholarly report/thesis.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises and practicals are set and form the basis of the classes.

Indicative reading: N. E. Steenrod, P. Halmos, M. M. Schiffer & J. A. Dieudonné, How to write mathematics (1973); D. J. Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (50%) in the ST.

ST435 Half Unit Advanced Probability Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Beatrice Acciaio COL 6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is offered as a regular examinable half-unit as well as a service to students and academic staff.

Pre-requisites: Analysis and algebra at the level of a BSc in pure or applied mathematics and basic statistics and probability theory with stochastic processes. Knowledge of measure theory is not required as the course gives a self-contained introduction to this branch of analysis.

Course content: The course covers core topics in measure theoretic probability and modern stochastic calculus, thus laying a rigorous foundation for studies in statistics, actuarial science, financial mathematics, economics, and other areas where uncertainty is essential and needs to be described with advanced probability models. Emphasis is on probability theory as such rather than on special models occurring in its applications. Brief review of basic probability concepts in a measure theoretic setting: probability spaces, random variables, expected value, conditional probability and expectation, independence, Borel-Cantelli lemmas Construction of probability spaces with emphasis on stochastic processes. Operator methods in probability: generating functions, moment generating functions, Laplace transforms, and characteristic functions. Notions of convergence: convergence in probability and weak laws of large numbers, convergence almost surely and strong laws of large numbers, convergence of probability measures and central limit theorems. If time permits and depending on the interest of the students topics from stochastic calculus might be covered as well.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Week 6 will be used as a reading/revision week.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set weekly and solutions are discussed in the lectures. There will be one set of compulsory written coursework in the MT which will be marked.

ST436 Half Unit Financial Statistics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Piotr Fryzlewicz COL 6.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Data Science and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation (ST425) and Time Series (ST422).

Course content: The course covers key statistical methods and data analytic techniques most relevant to finance. Hands-on experience in analysing financial data in the "R" environment is an essential part of the course. The course includes a selection of the following topics: obtaining financial data, low- and high-frequency financial time series, ARCH-type models for low-frequency volatilities and their simple alternatives, predicting equity indices (case study), Markowitz portfolio theory and the Capital Asset Pricing Model, machine learning in financial forecasting, Value at Risk, simple trading strategies. The course ends with an extended case study involving making predictions of market movements in a virtual trading environment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 11 will be spent working on the extended case study.

Formative coursework: Weekly marked problem sheets, with solutions discussed in class. Two marked case studies.

ST440 Half Unit Recent Developments in Finance and Insurance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Beatrice Acciaio COL 6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Recent developments in the theory of stochastic processes and applications in finance and insurance and their interface. A variety of topics will be chosen, from robust evaluation; optimal hedging; evaluation via utility criteria; optimal risk sharing; minimal capital requirement according to the Basel Accords and the Solvency Directives; life insurance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Weeks 9 and 10 will be devoted to students' presentations, using material which will have been provided in week 1 or 2; as well as to discuss in groups solutions to problems that will have been set in class.

Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: A set of coursework similar to the exercises that will appear in the exam will be assigned as well as a mock exam.

Machine Learning and Data Mining

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Xinghao Qiao

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Data Science. This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Marketing, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course will be taught from a statistical perspective and students must have a solid understanding of linear regression models

Students are not permitted to take this course alongside Algorithmic Techniques for Data Mining (MA429)

Course content: Machine learning and data mining are emerging fields between statistics and computer science which focus on the statistical objectives of prediction, classification and clustering and are particularly orientated to contexts where datasets are large, the so-called world of 'big data'. This course will start from the classical statistical methodology of linear regression and then build on this framework to provide an introduction to machine learning and data mining methods from a statistical perspective. Thus, machine learning will be conceived of as 'statistical learning', following the titles of the books in the essential reading list. The course will aim to cover modern non-linear methods such as spline methods, generalised additive models, decision trees, random forests, bagging, boosting and support vector machines, as well as more advanced linear approaches, such as ridge regression, the lasso, linear discriminant analysis, k-means clustering, nearest neighbours.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

The first part of the course reviews regression methods and covers linear and quadratic discriminant analysis, cross-validation, variable selection, nearest neighbours, shrinkage, dimension reduction methods. The second part of the course introduces non-linear models and covers, splines, generalized additive models, tree methods, bagging, random forest, support vector machines, principal components analysis, k-means, hierarchical clustering. Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets and 1 project in the MT.

The problem sets will consist of some theory questions and data problems that require the implementation of different methods in class using a computer package.

Statistical Computing

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yining Chen

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Data Science, MSc in Operations Research & Analytics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: An introduction to the use of numerical linear algebra, optimisation, numerical integration and simulation in statistical computation, with their applications in statistical methods, including least squares, maximum likelihood, principle component analysis, LASSO, etc. If time permits, more advanced topics such as kernel methods and graphical LASSO will also be covered. Throughout the course, students will gain practical experience of implementing these computational methods in a programming language. Learning support will be provided for at least one programming language, such as R, Python or C++, but the choice of language supported may vary between years, depending on judged benefits to students, whether in terms of pedagogy or resulting skills. This year, the default choice is Python.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Lectures will cover:

- (1) Introduction to Tools in Numerical Analysis: linear algebra (Gaussian elimination, Cholesky decomposition, matrix inversion and condition); numerical optimization (bi-section, steepest descent, Newton's method, Quasi-Newton methods, stochastic search); convex optimization (coordinate descent, ADMM); numerical integration.
 - (2) Introduction to Tools in Numerical Simulation: random number generation (inverse CDF, rejection, Box-Muller, etc); Introduction to Monte-Carlo methods.
 - (3) Applications in Statistics: linear regression and least squares; generalised linear models; principle component analysis (PCA); Page rank; LASSO.
 - (4) Other advanced topics if time allows: bootstrapping; kernel density estimation; Graphical models and Graphical LASSO.
- Week 6 will be used as a reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 problem sets in the LT.

Bi-weekly exercises, involving computer programming and some theory.

Indicative reading: Computational Statistics by Givens and Hoeting. Statistical computing in C++ and R by Eubank and Kupresanin. The Art of R Programming: A Tour of Statistical Software Design by Matloff. Think Python: How to Think Like a Computer Scientist by Downey

ST449 Half Unit

Artificial Intelligence and Deep Learning

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Milan Vojnovic COL 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will introduce the basic principles and algorithms used in artificial intelligence systems, with a focus on statistical and machine learning foundations, including the design and training of deep neural networks and reinforcement learning algorithms. These algorithms will be applied to classification tasks such as image recognition, speech recognition, natural language processing, as well as to strategic game playing. Use of Python and open source software libraries for machine intelligence such as Tensorflow constitutes an integral part of the course, allowing students to gain hands-on experience in data analysis and use of modern computational tools.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

The course will start with an introduction to basic concepts of artificial intelligence systems that include search algorithms, game playing, knowledge representation, and supervised and unsupervised learning. It will then cover basic concepts of deep neural network models covering the topics of deep forward networks, learning XOR, gradient-based learning, architecture of deep neural networks and the concept of hidden units. The course will also cover the topic of optimisation for deep learning including concepts such as back-propagation, parameter norm penalties, dataset augmentation, early stopping and dropout. Special architectures of deep neural networks will be studied in more depth including convolutional networks, explaining the intuition underlying their design, the concept of pooling and efficient convolution algorithms. Other architectures will be studied as well including those used for sequence modelling, such as recurrent neural networks, deep recurrent networks, the long-short term memory and other gated recurrent neural networks. The course will cover the main principles of reinforcement learning algorithms, explaining the main concepts such as rewards and punishments, exploration versus exploitation, Markov decision processes, and Q-learning and its convergence.

Examples and use cases will be drawn from various application domains including classical applications in the domains of computer vision, speech recognition, natural language processing and strategic game playing. Students will have an option to study application of deep learning using a dataset in the application domain of their interest including those in the area of social and economic systems.

The course will be based on using modern software frameworks for learning deep neural networks including open source Tensorflow library and possibly other such as Microsoft Cognitive Toolkit. Students will develop their code using Jupyter notebooks. The course will use GitHub platform for maintaining a repository of lecture material, homework and project assignments and anything related to the running of the course.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.

- The Microsoft Cognitive Toolkit, <https://www.microsoft.com/en-us/cognitive-toolkit/>

Assessment: Continuous assessment (10%), continuous assessment (10%) and research project (80%) in the LT.

Two problems sets submitted by students will be assessed (20% in total). In addition, there will be a graded take-home research project (80%) which will be completed on an individual basis in which they will demonstrate the ability to apply and train an appropriate model to a specific problem and dataset using principles they have learnt in the course. This may be done by publishing the code to a GitHub repository and GitHub pages website.

Bayesian Machine Learning

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konstantinos Kalogeropoulos

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applied Social Data Science, MSc in Data Science, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research), MSc in Statistics (Research), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge in probability and first course in statistics such as ST202 or equivalent Probability Distribution Theory and Inference; basic knowledge of the principles of computer programming is sufficient (e.g. in any of Python, R, Matlab, C, Java). This is desired rather than essential.

Course content: The course will introduce the basic principles and algorithms used in Bayesian machine learning. This will include the Bayesian approach to regression and classification tasks, introduction to the concept of graphical models, and Bayesian statistical inference, including approximate inference methods such as variational approximation and expectation propagation, and various sampling-based methods. The course will include also a module on the Bayesian modelling and inference for sequential data. The examples will include timely applications found in the context of content recommendation systems, fraud detection, and skill rating systems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Here is a tentative syllabus:

Bayesian inference concepts

- Prior and posterior distributions
- Bayes estimators, credible intervals, Bayes factors
- Bayesian forecasting, Posterior Predictive distribution

Linear models for regression

- Linear basis function models
- Bayesian linear regression
- Bayesian model comparison

Linear models for classification

- Probabilistic generative models
- Probabilistic discriminative models

- The Laplace approximation
 - Bayesian logistic regression
- Graphical models
- Bayesian networks
 - Conditional independence
 - Markov random fields
 - Inference in graphical models
- Mixture models and Expectation Maximization
- K-means clustering
 - Mixtures of Gaussians
 - The EM algorithm
- Approximate inference
- Variational inference
 - Variational logistic regression
 - Expectation propagation
- Sampling methods

- Basic sampling algorithms
- Markov chain Monte Carlo

Gibbs sampling

Sequential data

- Markov models
- Hidden Markov models
- Linear dynamical systems

If time permits also

Gaussian processes – Bayesian non-parametrics

- Gaussian processes for regression.
- Gaussian processes for classification.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.

10 problem sets in LT to prepare students for both summative assessment components. They will include theoretical exercises, targeting for learning outcomes a and b, as well as computer-based assignments (for learning outcome c) that will need to be presented in suitable form for the purposes of learning outcome d. Additionally, mostly related to learning outcome b, students will be encouraged to share and compare their responses in some challenging parts of the problem sets, through the use of dedicated Moodle forums.

Executive Taught Master's Course Guides

EC452E Half UnitApplying Behavioural Economics for Social Impact: Design, Delivery and Policy*This information is for the 2018/19 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Nava Ashraf 32L.3.18

Director of Research, Marshall Institute

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.Course content: This course delivers insights from cutting edge research in psychology and economics, and asks students to use these insights to design solutions to significant social challenges. Students learn how to diagnose, design, deliver, and rigorously test products and services using the principles of behavioural economics and the methods of field experimentation.

The course begins by describing the principle of coproduction: outcomes in health, education and similar fields are not simply given to end-users, but are produced by end-users themselves, interacting with supply-side factors. Drawing on the insights from behavioural economics and using qualitative methods, students learn how to diagnose end-user needs, preferences and behaviour. The course then explores how the psychological aspects of behaviour can be combined with the tools and structure of economics to induce behaviour change and improve outcomes, including the challenge of setting prices and designing incentives. Throughout the course there is emphasis upon the critical importance of effective measurement in the context of the social sector, where traditional market feedback mechanisms are typically absent and where mission-driven leaders' evaluation of organisational impact can itself be subject to cognitive bias and distortion. Appropriate measurement in turn informs improvements in diagnosis and design. This emphasis on appropriate measurement reinforces students' learning in earlier modules of the programme, where they will be introduced to the principles and concepts of rigorous social impact evaluation. The course concludes by exploring policy impact and how research can be translated into policy action. Real world case studies are used at every stage of the course.

This course is relevant to all those who wish to improve the effectiveness of social interventions and programmes across a range of diverse fields, whether such interventions are administered through the state or, increasingly, through private philanthropy and social entrepreneurship. The course tutor is Director of Research at the Marshall Institute.

Teaching: Ten sessions of three hours each, delivered across a two week module (teaching block).Formative coursework: Formative assessment will be through short case commentaries written by students on the basis of lecture/seminars. These will be submitted and feedback given during the course.Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for the course. For an introduction to the field of behavioural economics, students should consult Nudge: Improving Decisions About Health, Wealth, and Happiness by Richard Thaler and Cass Sunstein (2009, Penguin) and Thinking, Fast and Slow, by Daniel Kahneman (2012, Penguin).

Other indicative readings are:

- Glennerster Takavarasha randomized
- Hirschman 20th
- Kamenica "Behavioral

Further readings relevant to specific case studies will be provided during the course.

Assessment: Take home exam (85%) and class participation (15%). Assessment will be through a take home exam (85%) and class participation (15%).EU497E Half Unit Not available in 2018/19*Dissertation*This information is for the 2018/19 session.*Course content: Students in the Executive MSc Political Economy of Europe are required to write a dissertation on a topic within the field of their programme. Preparation for the Dissertation will commence with a week-long seminar (9 x 3hours) on aspects of research, writing, etc., followed by at least two research proposal drafts within two-month intervals, including (virtual) office hours, leading to a final dissertation project outline after 6 months (from December to July). The dissertation deadline is the second Monday in September of the second year.Teaching: The course will run between 4-8 January 2016.Assessment: Dissertation (100%).FM405E Half Unit*Fixed Income Securities and Credit Markets*This information is for the 2018/19 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Peter KondorAvailability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance (FM422E) and Asset Markets (FM423E).Course content:

- Interest rate modelling and derivatives
- Credit risk
- Credit derivatives and risk management

This course provides a thorough grounding in recent developments in fixed income securities pricing, hedging and portfolio management.

By the end of the course, the students will be familiar with the fixed income state of the art business practice and a variety of topics including (i) an analysis of the main products traded in the credit markets, such as Government and corporate bonds, bond options, swaps, caps, floors, swaptions, callable, puttable and convertible bonds, and an analysis of the main credit derivatives such as total-return swaps, spread options and credit default swaps; (ii) the specific tools used in the industry practice to evaluate and hedge these products, which range from no-arbitrage trees and the calibration of yield curve derivatives to the main tools used to monitor and manage credit risk; (iii) the process of securitization, with particular reference to collateralized default obligations and mortgage-based securities.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

This course is not available as an outside option.Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance (FM422E) and Asset Markets (FM423E).

Course content:

- Portfolio optimization and the Black-Litterman model
- Dynamic Investment Strategies
- Selecting and Monitoring Portfolio Managers: Mutual funds and hedge funds
- Transactions Costs and Liquidity Risk

The course covers a wide range of topics in portfolio management, with a strong focus on empirical applications. The first part of the course reviews the basics of portfolio theory and develops the Black-Litterman approach to portfolio optimization. The second part of the course introduces students to the implementation of several dynamic investment strategies and to the estimation of their performance; portfolio strategies include size, value, momentum, betting-against-beta, and quality-minus-junk. The third part of the course focuses on selecting and monitoring portfolio managers, with particular emphasis on the identification of selectivity, allocation, and timing skills for mutual funds and hedge funds. The last part of the course examines trading costs and liquidity risk, as well as their impact on the profitability of investment strategies. The course is based on recent empirical studies and applied exercises using financial data.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: Regular coursework will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

FM407E Half UnitMergers, Buyouts and Corporate Restructurings

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vicente Cuñat

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance (FM422E) and Asset Markets (FM423E).

Course content:

- Financial Analysis of Firms and Corporate Transactions
- Mergers, Acquisitions and Leveraged Buyouts
- Distress, Bankruptcy and Corporate Restructuring

This course covers advanced topics in Corporate Finance. It focuses on the strategy, valuation and execution of corporate deals. In particular, the first part of the course covers mergers, divestitures, partial-divestitures (e.g. equity carve outs) and leveraged buyouts. The second part of the course provides a framework of analysis for the resolution of financial distress and bankruptcy. Each of the topics introduced in this course covers both institutional details and results of relevant academic research. It is furthermore supported by case studies and practitioner talks.

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jean-Pierre Zigrand

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance (FM422E) and Asset Markets (FM423E).

Students will be expected to show some familiarity with calculus (including stochastic calculus) and statistics

Course content: This course provides a thorough grounding in the theory and practice of financial engineering. The emphasis is on the application of derivatives pricing and hedging methodology to equity and volatility derivatives and to structured products.

The course aims to cover the basics in derivatives theory, and to apply them to a multitude of financial securities and structured products, with a special emphasis on recent products in the equity and volatility derivative worlds. We review selected case studies in order to gain a better understanding of their practical usage. We also implement the models numerically in R and VBA.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Indicative reading: Based on a set of extensive lecture notes.

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christian Julliard

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance (FM422E) and Asset Markets (FM423E).

Course content:

- Hedging in equity and fixed income markets
- Market Risk, Value at Risk and Expected Shortfall
- Endogenous Risk and Limits to Arbitrage
- Credit risk and structured products

The aim of this course is to offer an introduction to the analysis and management of risk within financial markets. The course develops a conceptual framework for thinking about financial risk and shows how these concepts are implemented in practice in a variety of contexts. First, the course offers an overview of risk management in the context of portfolios of fixed income securities and derivatives. Next, we discuss the implementation and the merits of Value at Risk measures. We will spend some time on endogenous risk and limits to arbitrage. In the context of credit risk we will cover ratings based and structural models, as well as credit risk on portfolios and credit derivatives. A final topic covers regulation and the recent credit crisis. Throughout, the course spends a significant amount of time on practical applications of the theories that are introduced. Some limitations of current approaches are also discussed.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Problem sets. In addition, students will have the opportunity to present the results of a case study to the class.

Indicative reading: Course readings will vary from year to year depending upon the topics covered. The main reference is: John C. Hull, Risk Management and Financial Institutions, Wiley, 2015, 4th edition.

Private Equity, Venture Capital and Entrepreneurial Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ulf Axelsson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance (FM422E) and Asset Markets (FM423E).

Course content:

- Evaluating and executing Private Equity Deals
- Business Plans, Venture Capital, and Entrepreneurial Finance
- Private Equity as an asset class and the private equity landscape

The course provides a thorough grounding in the theory and recent developments in the field of private equity. Starting by examining how private equity funds are raised and structured, the course will examine how private equity can be used in start-ups, in scaling-up cash flow businesses, and in restructuring firms facing financial distress. The course explores the link between private and venture capital on the one hand and public securities markets on the other. The course will examine the process through which private equity investors exit their investments. The course will also give a detailed analysis of the types of finance used in private equity and an evaluation of the short and long-run performance of private equity investments. The course will include an evaluation of the performance of different types of private equity investment and a comparison with other forms of ownership will be undertaken.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Amil Dasgupta

Dr Dirk Jenter

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content:

- Financing
- Valuation

This core course provides a broad introduction to the key issues in corporate finance. The first half of the course, the Financing Module, investigates how companies should finance their activities by issuing securities (debt, equity, and convertible claims) and the interaction of business policy with financial policy. The aim is to understand what factors determine optimal capital structure and how the interplay of these factors can affect financing decisions in a way that creates value. The second half of the course, the Valuation Module, covers firm and project valuation and establishes how companies should select among investable assets. The module focuses on fundamental valuation techniques based on discounting future cash flows. The course goes on to introduce further valuations methods, such as real options analysis, as well as key applications of valuation concepts to major corporate decisions such as mergers and acquisition and initial public offerings. The course interweaves key conceptual material with a series of cases.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: The recommended textbooks for this course are Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance and Higgins, Analysis for Financial Management. Other recommended readings from relevant journal articles will be included in a study pack.

Asset Markets

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dong Lou and Dr Igor Makarov

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (part-time). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content:

- Investments and Securities Valuation
- Portfolio choice and performance evaluation
- Derivatives

The aim of the course is to familiarize students with the workings of financial markets, and equip them with the fundamental tools of asset valuation. The course will focus on the three main asset classes - fixed income, stocks, and derivatives - giving a unified perspective of modern valuation methods. The starting point will be the present value formula. The course will then proceed to fixed-income securities, focusing mainly on government bonds. These will be valued off the term structure of interest rates, using the present value formula. The connection with the principle of no-arbitrage will be emphasized. The course will then move to stocks, starting with portfolio theory and then deriving the relation between risk and return (CAPM). The CAPM will provide a risk-adjusted discount rate that will be used to discount stocks' cash flows with the present value formula. Alternative pricing models such as the APT and multi-factor models will also be covered, and the models will be applied to issues of asset allocation and portfolio selection. The last topic will be derivatives, especially futures and options. After familiarizing students with the use of derivatives, the course will cover the main valuation methods (binomial model, Black-Scholes) emphasizing again the principle of no-arbitrage.

FM447 Half Unit Global Financial Systems

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not open to students on the MSc Economics and Managements and students from the following departments: Economics, Finance, Mathematics, and Statistics

Pre-requisites: Students should have some background in economics, and be comfortable with formal arguments

Course content: This course examines the academic and policy debates on the operation of the global financial system. The course will aim to be topical, where the analysis of the issues will be based on economic arguments. The course begins with analysis of systemic risk, followed by an overview of important financial crisis and key institutions. The role of cryptocurrencies, fintec, artificial intelligence and machine learning on the financial system will be discussed. Several theories of financial crises are then developed in some detail, and are assessed by reference to historical experience. The course concludes by analysis of the 2008 crisis latest policy and regulatory developments (including Basel III), monetary policy and interest rate normalization and their relationship with inequality, the current situation in the European Union, Brexit, Trump and the role of China.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to attempt the problem sets and essay questions set in the classes.

Indicative reading: Most material will be provided by the book Global Financial Systems (www.globalfinancialsystems.org), by Jon Danielsson, published by Pearson

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM472 Half Unit International Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elisabetta Bertero

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not open to students from the following departments: Economics, Finance, Mathematics, and Statistics

Course content: This course examines key issues in international finance, focusing on recent developments and incorporating theoretical, empirical, policy and institutional dimensions. The course uses exchange rates as a unifying theme and considers them from four perspectives: theory, policy, global risk and international investors. The course examines models of exchange rate determination and related empirical evidence. It analyses the choice and coordination of exchange rate regimes, including the European Monetary Union. It examines exchange rates as one of the sources of global financial instability. It considers the risk exposure for investors arising from exchange rate volatility and its hedging with currency instruments. The course also explores the links, in each area, to current developments such as the internationalisation of the Chinese Renminbi, the EMU sovereign debt crisis, the recent financial crisis and global imbalances, forex carry trades and the high volatility of short term exchange rates.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to undertake a group research project on a given topic in international finance.

Indicative reading: A selection of journal articles; background reading from a textbook such as Keith Pilbeam International Finance (Palgrave, 2013, 4th edition)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM475 Half Unit Financial Management (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Daniel Ferreira CON2.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

The information in this course guide pertains to the 2018-2020 cohort.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide a comprehensive overview of firms' financial decision making. The course is designed to provide an applied and practical approach to finance, enabling the students to address topical issues that modern corporations face. In particular, the course builds on concepts in business strategy, valuation techniques, and capital structure theories, and applies those tools in a systematic and rigorous way to real-life financial management problems. After a brief introduction to financial management, the course focuses on corporate finance and business valuation. Topics such as mergers and acquisitions and initial public offerings will also be covered.

Teaching: Taught during module three - 10 interactive lectures of 3 hours each (1-13 April 2019):

1. Introduction to financial management
2. Debt and equity
3. Capital structure – Case discussion
4. Tax shields – Case discussion
5. Capital markets and the pricing of risk
6. Initial public offerings – Case Discussion
7. Valuation – Discounted Cash Flow techniques
8. Valuation – Practical aspects
9. Mergers and Acquisitions
10. Valuing companies – Case discussion

Formative coursework: Feedback on class participation.

Indicative reading: The recommended textbook for this course is Higgins, Analysis for Financial Management, 11th Edition and a pack of business case studies.

Assessment: Essay (20%, 1500 words), project (65%) and class participation (15%).

The essay is an assessed 1,500 word group essay.

The project is a take-home individual project.

Financing Health Care

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos COW.4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course aims to give students a thorough grounding in health financing policy. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in European countries, but the general principles studied apply internationally.

The course provides an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: This course will be delivered through 18 hours of lectures and 3 seminars (2 hours each).

Formative coursework: The in class group work and presentation discussed under summative assessments will be the formative coursework on this course.

Indicative reading: WHO, World Health Report 2010 - Health systems financing: the path to universal coverage (2010); E Mossialos, A Dixon, J Figueras & J Kutzin (eds), Funding health care: options for Europe, Open University Press (2002); J Kutzin, Health financing policy: a guide for decision-makers, World Health Organization (2008); T Rice, The economics of health reconsidered, Health Administration Press (3rd edn, 2009).

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle. They will be expected to read these prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

Health Administration and Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW3.05

In addition, Professor Nancy Kane and Mariam Krikorian (Harvard Business School) will be teaching on the course.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is intended to provide the student an orientation and overview on managing organizations within health systems. The governance, execution, information management, quality of care, and sustaining human resources will be discussed, including an examination of the uses of accounting and other forms of reporting to manage health services. This is an introductory course, appropriate for students with no formal inpatient health care management experience. The course will cover the following topics: principle responsibilities of a health care system and organizations within the system; issues and strategies for enabling health care organizations to be responsive to their environment; concepts for supporting and implementing governance decisions; strategies for performance measurement and information, and analytical activities related to planning, finance, and information needs; characteristics and development of systems to assure quality of clinical services.

Teaching:

10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars.

Formative coursework: In-class formative assessments.

Students will be given questions to answer to help them learn to think critically about a focal case and then asked to discuss in discussion breakout sessions.

Resource Allocation and Cost-effectiveness Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW3.05

In addition, Professor M Drummond (Professor of Health Economics, University of York) will be teaching on the course.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim is to give an overview of the theory underlying economic evaluation as applied to the health care sector; to consider the different forms of economic evaluation; to give an understanding of the techniques associated with economic evaluation as applied to health care; to give an understanding of the interpretation of the results gained from economic evaluation; to provide the main practical tools necessary to undertake economic evaluation using computer-based programs. The course will cover the following topics: Conceptual rationales for economic evaluation in the health care sector (Pareto efficiency, Social Welfare, extra-welfarism and decision-making); Introduction to the methods of economic evaluation: cost-effectiveness analysis, cost-utility analysis, and Cost-benefit analysis; Cost data; Incremental cost-effectiveness analysis; Quality Adjusted Life Years gained and other outcome measures; Discounting; Uncertainty and sensitivity analysis; Economic evaluation and clinical trials; Policy decision-making using economic evaluation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars, including computer-based practical workshops.

Formative coursework: Mock exam given after teaching session with feedback from course organiser.

Indicative reading: M Drummond et al, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, Oxford, OUP, 2015, fourth edition. Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW.G.04

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the economics of pharmaceutical markets and related policies that affect national and international markets broadly.

- To provide students with an understanding of basic features of pharmaceutical markets and how pharmaceutical markets work and how competition manifests itself in different parts of pharmaceutical markets.
- To illustrate to students how the pharmaceutical market is linked to the health care market, why it is often the focus of much regulation, and to help students understand the multidimensional goals of pharmaceutical policies.
- To introduce students to the economic and policy problems encountered in managing pharmaceutical markets and how to evaluate the impact of alternative policy approaches. The course will also give students some experience in critically evaluating the impact of policy on market outcomes.
- To facilitate consideration of various country-specific political, cultural and economic factors that may drive governments' approaches to pharmaceutical regulation. In this context, this course will help students consider the extent to which policies may be transferable.
- To enable students to analyse pharmaceutical markets from the perspectives of several main actors: governments, third party payers, the pharmaceutical industry, doctors, patients, pharmacists and wholesalers. Literature from Health Economics, Industrial Organisation and Health Policy will be incorporated into lectures, discussions and seminars.
- To introduce students to the economics of pricing and reimbursing pharmaceutical products, to explore different models of pricing and reimbursing medicines in OECD countries, including rate of return regulation, value-based pricing, cost-plus pricing, external price referencing and internal reference pricing, among others.

Teaching: The course will comprise 10 x 1-hour interactive lectures, 1 x 1-hour revision session and 5 x 2-hour interactive seminars, where students will discuss specific case studies.

Formative coursework: A 2000 word formative essay, to mirror an exam question, to be written during seminar time.

Indicative reading: E Mossialos, M Mrazek & T Walley (eds), *Regulating Pharmaceuticals in Europe. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

This is the same course as HP424 Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

HP4B2E Half Unit Health Care Quality Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW.G.04

This course will be led by Dr. Michael Holland, Medical Director and Consultant Psychiatrist, South London and Maudsley NHS Foundation Trust.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An introduction and overview of quality improvement methodology as used in healthcare settings internationally. The course will cover the following areas:

- 1) History of quality management: The course will start with an overview of key theories in quality management such as those described Taylor, Shewhart, Deming and Juran. An overview of quality assurance systems used in healthcare, such as ISO 9000, Magnet, Baldrige award and their role in quality improvement. It will also include a discussion and overview of value-based healthcare.
- 2) A critical assessment of the mainstream schools of thought of quality as part of the production process - this will include a study of the relationship between supply chain procurement management and quality as well as the requirements for good production models and the critique of evidence-based decision-making in the clinical setting
- 3) Quantitative methods in quality management - This course will examine a number of tools for quality management purposes - both how to do them as well as how they fit into the various schools of thought on quality management. It will cover statistical process control which is a method of statistical analysis of time series data that is used in quality management. This method shows whether there is variability in processes and gives the user an ability to both measure improvements and declines in performance of both processes and outcomes and to understand whether processes are performing within acceptable limits. An overview of the quality improvement methodology known as Design of Experiments will also be given. The role of case mix adjustment in quality assessment will also be discussed.
- 4) Process Mapping - Understanding the value and power of mapping processes both at a systems level and at the individual process level. They will also be given an example of a process map from a healthcare environment to work on optimising.
- 5) Theories of capacity and flow management and examples of this in both in-patient and outpatient settings will be discussed. This will also include how DRG/HRG payment has a role within organisations of capacity management.
- 6) A critical overview of Lean, Six Sigma and Model for Improvement. While these models can be useful in healthcare management, these are not deep philosophies of organisation and many of the things which make healthcare unique (e.g. asymmetry of information, difficulty of measuring quality, patient behaviour and societal preferences for fairness) are sometimes not accounted for in these models.

Teaching: 5 lectures (5 x 2 hours) and 5 workshops (5 x 2 hours). The 5 workshops will focus on analysing case studies with a view of giving students a practical understanding of approaches to quality management in healthcare settings.

Formative coursework: A case study will be provided for the students to analyse and write an essay answering questions relating to it. Feedback will be provided on this essay by the seminar leader.

HP4B3E Half Unit Measuring Health System Performance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW 3.05

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences and Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to present a framework to discuss the opportunities and challenges with performance measurement in health care, examine the various dimensions and levels of health system performance, identify the measurement instruments and analytic tools needed, and examine the implications of these issues for policy makers and regulators. Lectures generally focus on measuring health system performance in high-income countries but draw on the experience of other countries where relevant.

After taking this course students are expected to:

- understand the principles of performance measurement
- appreciate the challenges, approaches, and opportunities in performance measurement in four dimensions: population health, patient outcomes, equity, quality and appropriateness of care, and productivity
- understand the methodological issues facing performance measurement relating to risk adjustment, developing composite measures, and measuring attribution and causality
- identify key issues relevant to policy makers relating to: developing targets and reporting on progress to the public, and developing incentives to improve performance

Teaching: 2 lectures (2 hours), 4 lectures (1.5 hours) and 5 seminars (2 hours).

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time. Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: Papanicolas I and Smith PC (Eds), Health System Performance Comparison: An agenda for policy, information and research. Maidenhead: Open University Press, 2013. PC Smith, E. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 3000 words) and in class assessment (25%).

In-class assessment (25%) and assessed piece of coursework (75%). In-class assessment on a presentation where students apply principles taught to construct an argument around a theory-based question informed from real world data. They would be assessed on their presentation as well as their ability to apply the conceptual material taught in class to practical data. Coursework is the production of a report where students are asked to evaluate and interpret key performance data for a particular country.

HP4B4E Half Unit

Principles of Evidence-Based Medicine and Clinical Trials

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW3.05

In addition, Professor Allan Hackshaw (Deputy Director, Cancer Research UK and UCL Cancer Trials Centre, UCL) will be teaching on this course.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A large amount of medical research is conducted, with variable quality. Also, health claims are frequently reported in the media, and it can be difficult to determine which is based on reliable evidence and which is not. It is therefore essential to be able to interpret study results and conclusions appropriately, in order to change clinical practice or develop public health policy. This is achieved by Evidence-Based Medicine. The module will enable students to evaluate risk factors for disease or early death, and methods of disease prevention or treatment. The module will provide students with practical skills in the following key areas:

- Understanding the different types of research that can be conducted in humans and their strengths and limitations, i.e. observational studies and a focus on clinical trials.
- Interpreting research results and conclusions using aspects of epidemiology and medical statistics, and how to communicate study findings.
- Reading and understanding published journal articles or pharmaceutical company reports.
- Examining the efficacy and safety of health care interventions (an important part of a complete health economic evaluation of a clinical trial).
- Familiarity with systematic reviews (i.e. how several studies are combined, and the importance of looking at the evidence as a whole).

Teaching: 10 interactive seminars/workshops, each 2-3 hours long.

Formative coursework: Students will be given two short exercises before the course begins, via Moodle, to help prepare for the course. The tutor will go over these during the contact week, and address any queries from the students. However, detailed written answers are provided, so the students can access these if they undertake any of the exercises after the contact week. The tutor is also available for one-to-one email contact with any student.

Indicative reading: - Hackshaw A. A concise guide to clinical trials. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, first edition 2009.

- Hackshaw A. A concise guide to observational studies in healthcare. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, first edition 2015.
- Greenhalgh T. How to Read a Paper: The Basics of Evidence-Based Medicine. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, fourth edition, 2010.

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle.

Assessment: Other (50%) and other (50%) in the LT.

There will be two pieces of coursework based on a clinical trial of an intervention or a risk/causal factor, in the form of:

- a written assignment in the form of a PowerPoint slide deck (about 25 slides) and a statement of 400 words of further discussion and conclusions, based on a published paper and associated media news article of the paper (50%)
- 4-5 questions specific to a published paper with answers requiring 1-3 paragraphs each (50%).

Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Raikou

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course develops the statistical and modelling techniques necessary to apply economic evaluation to the health care sector.

Introduction to statistical methods, linear regression analysis, logistic regression analysis, survival analysis for health outcomes, survival analysis for treatment costs, economic evaluation and clinical trials. Estimation of confidence intervals for cost-effectiveness ratios. Transformation of ratios - net benefit approach. Missing data, parametric and non-parametric approaches. Presentation of analysis, acceptability curves.

Teaching:

13 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars (computer based)

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time.

Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: The following are basic reading for the course: M Drummond & A McGuire (Eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, OUP, 2002; M Drummond, B O'Brien, G Stoddart & T Torrance, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, 2nd edn, OUP, 1997; M Gold, J Siegel, L Russell & M Weinstein, Cost-Effectiveness in Health and Medicine, OUP, 1996; M Johannesson, Theory and Methods of Economic Evaluation in Health Care, Kluwer, 1996; P Johannesson, Evaluating Health Risks: An Economic Approach, CUP, 1995. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%).

This is the same course as HP425 Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

Advanced Health Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair McGuire COW4.05

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover: international comparisons of health care expenditure, health care insurance, contract theory applied to the health care sector (including principal-agent theory and incentive payment mechanisms), equity in health care, health behaviour and an introduction to econometric analysis applied to health care data.

Teaching: 19 hours of lectures.

Formative coursework: 1,500 word essay

Indicative reading: Culyer, A.J., and Newhouse, J.P., (eds.), 2001, Handbook of Health Economics Volumes 1A & 1B, (North-Holland, Amsterdam); Zweifel, P. and Breyer, F., 1997, Health Economics, (OUP, Oxford).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

HP4B9E Half Unit

Dissertation in Health Economics, Policy and Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW3.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research that will contribute to the field of health economics, health policy or health management. The contribution of the work to the chosen field must be made clear. The output will be a piece of work of 5000 words or less that is written in an article format that is suitable for submission to a peer reviewed journal. Students must obtain the approval of their supervisor before embarking on any research.

Arrangements for supervision

Students' tutors will act as their dissertation supervisor in the first instance. If the specific topic a student wishes to cover for his/her dissertation requires a different supervisor, a MSc programme director can arrange this change. The dissertation supervisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research.

Teaching: The dissertation process is supported by three teaching sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will have an opportunity to have one draft of their thesis proposal read by their supervisor in December of Year 2. In addition, they will have an opportunity to have a 1000 word outline of their thesis read by their supervisor.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 5000 words).

The dissertation paper copies must be handed in to the Department by the specified deadline of the second year of the MSc programme. An electronic version of the dissertation must be also submitted. Penalties will be applied to any late submission. The word limit for the dissertation is 5,000 words (excluding references and tables) and it must be in a journal article format.

Economic Analysis for Health Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Street COW 3.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will serve as an introduction to major issues in the economics of health and health care. It will provide participants with a strong understanding of the role economics can play in health policy and health system administration. It will provide a framework with which to understand the demands placed on the health care system, the changing nature of health care supply and delivery, the interactions between patients and providers of health care, and the performance and productivity of the health system. Participants will also be introduced to essential statistical concepts in the evaluation of clinical interventions. Seminar sessions will focus on current policy debates in health care drawing on the theory and evidence from the lectures, augmented by readings from both academic and popular sources.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

This will include 10 x 90 minutes of interactive lectures and 5 x 120 minutes of case-study based seminars.

Formative coursework: An 800-word "mock" blog entry for The Conversation, which covers policy-relevant issues and often has academic contributors. A series of topics will be provided to students to choose from.

Indicative reading: Course textbook

Iversen T, Luras H. Capitation and Incentives in Primary Care Chapter 26 Jones A (ed) Elgar Companion to Health Economics, second edition, Edward Elgar Publishing, Cheltenham 2012.

Assessment: Other (70%) and other (30%).

The two assessments will be:

1. "Journal referee report" for a health economics paper, which will include 2 elements: a summary and critical appraisal of the paper (1500 words) and a peer-review report with suggestions for improving the paper (1000 words). This assessment will evaluate the students' ability in summarising, applying, and critically appraising the relevance of health economics concepts to a health policy.
2. Individual-based video presentation. Students will be asked to record a video on their own on a topic that will be assigned to them. This will assess the students' ability to describe, summarise, apply, critically appraise, and communicate the concepts learned in class to a particular case study.

Quality and Outcomes in Cardiovascular Sciences

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Huseyin Naci COW 3.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Against a backdrop of great technological advances and delivery system innovations, healthcare systems are facing daunting challenges. Over the past half-century, research on cardiovascular diseases has manifested remarkable advances in the prevention and treatment of cardiovascular diseases. Yet, great challenges remain, primarily due to a lack of strong research evidence about how best to improve the quality, outcomes, and efficiency in health systems with a focus on cardiovascular diseases. Outcomes research aims to produce such evidence. In addition to briefly reviewing key epidemiological trends in cardiovascular diseases in Europe and globally, this course will introduce key 'evidence-practice' gaps in cardiovascular diseases. The first part of the course provides an overview of the definition of quality, its key components, and its measurement in different health care systems. The second part offers a critical perspective on the literature evaluating quality improvement interventions focused on the cardiovascular disease field. The third part focuses on the basics of study design for evaluating quality improvement interventions, programmes, and policies, distinguishing between strong and weak research designs.

The intended learning outcomes of this course are the following:

- Describe the epidemiological trends in cardiovascular disease
- Summarise the primary components of quality in health care
- Explain the main limitations of the literature evaluating quality improvement interventions

- Define the principal threats to validity in studies evaluating quality
- Design an evaluation strategy for a quality improvement policy or intervention in a group setting
- Critically evaluate empirical evaluations of quality and outcomes in health care research in oral and written form

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Formative feedback on group presentations

Economic Evaluation in Health Care

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Michael Drummond

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Health care decision makers are often faced with the challenges of resource allocation. Economic evaluation is used to formalize the process of decision-making on the basis of costs and benefits associated with multiple alternative scenarios or interventions. Decision makers use evidence from economic evaluation analyses to make specific recommendations for coverage, reimbursement, and pricing decisions for a variety of health care interventions, as well as define best practices. This course will enable students to understand and apply analytic methods in the economic evaluation of health interventions and provide a strong foundation in the several advanced concepts in economic evaluation, and in particular cost-effectiveness of interventions used in long-term chronic illnesses. The course will provide an overview of the principles and practices of measuring and analyzing costs; and estimating effectiveness in terms of quality-adjusted life years and disability-adjusted life years. Practical topics will include the design and implementation of economic evaluation models and the role of clinical data inputs to inform economic evaluation analyses.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 5 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST.

Systematic Review and Meta-analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Leeza Osipenko COW 4.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Systematic review and meta-analysis methods are increasingly used to evaluate the relative benefits and harms of healthcare interventions. A broad range of decision making bodies across the health care sector (including health technology assessment bodies, drug and medical device licensing agencies, biopharmaceutical industry, and hospitals) need experts equipped with the methods of reviewing and synthesizing the existing body of evidence.

This course will be focused on the principles of reviewing and synthesizing the existing body of literature. The course will first provide the rationale for adopting a systematic approach for evidence review and synthesis. It will then equip students with the methods to undertake risk of bias assessments of individual randomized controlled trials and also collections of randomized controlled trials. In addition to providing an overview of methods for quantitatively synthesizing multiple randomized controlled trials in meta-analysis, the course will present the opportunities and challenges of using evidence for decision-making in health care.

Learning outcomes:

- Describe the rationale for adopting a systematic approach to literature review
- Define the principal threats to validity both in individual randomized controlled trials and collections of randomized controlled trials
- randomized
- randomized
- Design and perform a systematic review and meta-analysis evaluating a health care intervention in a group setting
- Describe the opportunities and challenges of using systematic review and meta-analysis findings for decision making Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 4 hours of computer workshops in the ST.

Formative coursework:

- Course convener will provide feedback on group presentations on the last day of the in-person teaching session
- Course convener will also provide written feedback on project outlines.

Using Health Economics to Analyse and Inform Policy and Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Street COW 3.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The health care sector is extremely complex, and this gives rise to concerns about how the health system should be organised, how incentives should be designed, and how performance should be evaluated. The objective of the course is to give students an introduction to how health systems are constructed, and how the various parts of the system interact; the role of regulation, resource allocation, payment arrangements, and performance measurement; the complexities of evaluating policy and performance; and the contribution that health economics can make to the evaluation and development of health policy. Participants are introduced to variety of econometric methods as the course progresses.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: The formative assessment is a 500 word outline of the summative assessment essay question.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3500 words) in the LT.

The course will be assessed on the basis of a 3500 word essay on a specific topic. In writing this essay, students will be able to demonstrate and synthesise what they have learned from the lectures, reading material, group discussions and their own independent research and thinking. The content of the assessments will lead on from the illustrative case studies that have been used in the seminars.

Formative assessment will be based on a 500 word outline of the essay. This will give students an opportunity to develop their thoughts ahead of the summative assessment and will allow feedback from course teachers that will guide students when they work on their longer answers.

Due to the executive nature of the course and the 1 week nature of the module, this method of assessment will allow students to work away from campus alongside their professional roles.

Dissertation in Health Economics, Outcomes, and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Huseyin Naci and supervisors

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation could be on any topic in the field of health economics, outcomes research, comparative effectiveness research, policy, and management. It should attempt to integrate approaches and knowledge learned across courses and present results to address a health/clinical policy, economic issue or a problem identified through the use of either primary or secondary data. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical and empirical literature in the field. In addition, careful analysis of the policy implications and formulation of policy recommendations is essential. The main body of the dissertation should, in principle, include the background to the research, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion and policy implications and recommendations.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures in the ST.

In addition to the lectures, students will be given individual support by their allocated supervisor.

Introduction to Management in Health Care

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Brittany Jones NAB 4.04

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences and Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: No Prerequisites

Course content: The course aims to introduce students to the main principles of management and strategy and related issues that impact on organisational change, group decision making, innovation and leadership. Key models and academic tools will be presented and their application to real world situations discussed. The course aims to give students a strong academic understanding and also enable them to apply this knowledge to their practice.

The course outline is below

1. Strategy and Managerial Work

In this session, we will explore the development of the modern practice of 'strategy' and what it means today. Along the way, we will show how organisational practices like planning met emerging ideas in academia, especially in economics, to develop new tools and ways of thinking that transformed the practice of management in the late 20th century. The development of strategic management and planning tools and the competitive environment in which they emerged will be discussed and the application of these tools will be examined in competitive markets.

2. Innovation Management

This part of the course will introduce the topic of innovation management. In particular, it introduces participants to the conceptualization of innovation as a means to affect the competitive process. Participants will be introduced to the basics of the competitive process and the effect of innovation on the competitive process. Participants will be active in analysing the competitive process surrounding their organization and the competitive position their organization occupies within it and activities will be used to promote thinking about how innovations, small or large, can defend and/or improve their competitive position.

3. How Individuals and Groups Organise and Make Decisions and Take Risk

This part of the course will introduce issues related to working as individuals within an organisation and as a group. It will look at the "benefits" and "harms" of group decision making processes – especially with reference to health care where collaborative multi-disciplinary teams are commonplace – and also discuss how group decisions making can be undermined by systematic biases.

4. Behaviour Change and Social Marketing

This part of the course will introduce the drivers and mechanisms of behaviour change in organisations. In particular, we will discuss how different organizational-level factors may influence behaviour change, including resistance to change from various levels and sustainability of changes across time, and how organizational behaviour change can be measured. Models of organisational behaviour change will be introduced and the principles of managing and leading change in established systems will be discussed with a focus on the stages of planning and implementation of change. Alongside this appropriate tools and resources will be introduced to aid future organisational changes. The coverage of social marketing will deal with the formulation and execution of strategies designed to influence behaviour change amongst groups at risk of cardiovascular disease.

5. Culture and Leadership

This part of the course will explore the definition of culture within organisations and leaders' role in creating and supporting successful teams. Key components of leadership, like the ability to establish direction and motivate and inspire a workforce as well as handle relationships with external stakeholders, will then be introduced with a consideration of how they affect culture and working practices.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Given the executive nature of this course, it will be offered as an intensive, accelerated, and compressed module with a 1-week duration consisting of 5x2-hour lectures and 5x2-hour seminars (in addition to a 1x1-hour online help session).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the ST.

The formative assessment is a 500 word outline of the summative assessment essay question.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 2500 words) post-summer term. The course will be assessed on the basis of a 2500 word essay on a specific topic. In writing this essay, students will be able to demonstrate and synthesise what they have learned from the lectures, reading material, group discussions and their own independent research and thinking. The content of the assessments will lead on from the simulation exercises that have been used in the seminars and students will be encouraged to use topics they have identified during reflections on their own work. Formative assessment will be based on a 500 word outline of the essay. This will give students an opportunity to develop their thoughts ahead of the summative assessment and will allow feedback from course teachers that will guide students when they work on their longer answers.

Due to the executive nature of the course and the 1 week nature of the module, this method of assessment will allow students to work away from campus alongside their professional roles.

Principles of Health Technology Assessment

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW G.04

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences and Executive MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Health Technology Assessment a multidisciplinary process that summarises information about the medical, social, economic, and ethical issues related to the use of a health technology in a systematic, transparent, unbiased, and robust manner. Health Technology Assessment differs in its governance, data and evidence requirements, assessment methods, and operational arrangements across different settings and contexts. This course is aimed at introducing the key principles of Health Technology Assessment, its operational modalities, the different models of value assessment and how they link to decision-making.

Outline of the course is included below:

1. The role of Health Technology Assessment in health care decision making
2. Models of Health Technology Assessment and their application in different jurisdictions - a comparative perspective
3. Governance issues (position in health care decision-making, topic selection, assessment process, stakeholder involvement)
4. Data and evidence requirements for value assessment
5. Health Technology Assessment and value assessment: focus on clinical benefit assessment
6. Health Technology Assessment and value assessment: focus on clinical-cost-effectiveness
7. Assessment methods in Health Technology Assessment
8. Explaining similarities and differences in Health Technology Assessment recommendations – a toolkit
9. The role of multiple criteria decision analysis in value assessment
10. Beyond Health Technology Assessment: links to risk-sharing and special purchasing arrangements

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 1 hour of help sessions in the ST.

Given the executive nature of this course, it will be offered as an intensive, accelerated, and compressed module with a 1-week duration.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise in the ST.

Research Design for Evaluating Health Programs and Policies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elisabetta De Cao OLD 1.11

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The objective of this course is to teach students how to design and critically appraise research studies evaluating policies, programmes, and interventions.

This course will provide an overview of the principles and models of evaluation, and the role of theories, concepts, and hypotheses.

In terms of research design, it will cover study design choices in light of bias, validity and other design trade-offs. The core of the course will focus on experimental and quasi-experimental designs for evaluating health interventions, programmes and policies aimed at achieving high quality care, reducing costs, and improving health outcomes. Data and measurement considerations for quantitative studies will be discussed alongside briefly touching upon qualitative methods, mixed-methods and triangulation for interpreting findings and taking a critical approach to the results of evaluation. The course will conclude with practical and ethical issues when undertaking evaluation studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the ST. Given the executive nature of this course, it will be offered as an intensive, accelerated, and compressed module with a 1-week duration.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in June.

Students will receive feedback on their project report outlines.

Project (70%, 2,000 words)

Group presentation (30%)

Assessment is through a project that students will undertake in small groups and write up individually (2,000 word paper), to be submitted 10 weeks after the completion of the course. Group presentation will account for the remaining 30% of the grade.

HP4E1E Half Unit Global Health Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clare Wenham COW 3:07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics and Policy (LSE and Chicago). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Health policy is no longer purely a government activity, but globalisation and global organisations have impacted on the nature of global health, and the policies created to manage the health needs of the global population. This module critically examines global health policy and normative shifts in understanding global health which impact upon it. The multi-actor framework of global health actors involved in the provision and practice of health policy now includes United Nations agencies (WHO, UNICEF, UNAIDS etc), a number of NGOs, civil society organisations, private sector, foundations, public private partnerships. Each actor has their own priorities for setting the global health agenda, and this module examines the role of each and their impact on health policy at national, regional and global levels. The module will analyse a range of case studies of global health events and global health policies and the governance arrangements made by them. In doing so, this module will draw on contributions from international relations, political science, sociology and public health research

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. All students will have the opportunity to participate in additional lectures undertaken by external guests. These lectures will be run every Monday and Wednesday from 6pm to 8pm during the teaching period at LSE.

In addition, students will be given the option to participate in a three-hour webinar hosted at least 10 days before the due date of the take-home assessment. The webinar will consist of two-hours of lectures and one hour of question time.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

1 X 1000 word essay. Students will be asked to submit a short 1000 word essay (on the topic that they are writing on for the summative, but a different question) at the end of January. These will be graded and feedback given to students. This allows students to get valuable experience of writing at MSc level at LSE, and the expectations of the summative assessment. This then allows students to take this feedback and use it in their writing of the summative work. For example, if a student's formative work flagged particular concerns this could be addressed ahead of the summative submission.

Assessment: Essay (85%, 4000 words) in the LT.

Presentation (15%) in the MT.

1 x 4000 word essay due in LT (after lecture/seminar programme in December) – 85% of grade

Students will be asked to pick one essay question from a list of 8 topics. They are also given the option to choose their own essay topic (after discussion with their seminar leader) if they would prefer. The questions will be broad, allowing for student individuality to come across in their answers. For example: What role should the WHO play in the future of global health policy? 1 x seminar presentation and leading of group debate in class – 15% of grade

Students will each pick a session to lead /present on. This will be from the list of designated topics for seminars each on a particular area of global health policy. The assessment will be on the content and presentation of the topic to their classmates. Each student in the session will provide feedback (via Padlet) on the presentation which will be returned to the presenter (s). They will also offer a grade for the presentation, which will be aggregated with the seminar leader's grading.

HP4E2E Half Unit Paying for Healthcare

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos Cowdray 4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics and Policy (LSE and Chicago). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to a comparative approach to analysing the development of health care financing, both in theory and in practice, with an emphasis on critical assessment of current and future policy options and issues. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in developed countries, given these systems are the most advanced, have extensive readily available literature, and are based on best practice principles. However, healthcare system financing in developing countries will also be discussed, albeit to a lesser extent.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 6 hours of seminars in the MT. All students will have the opportunity to participate in additional lectures undertaken by external guests. These lectures will be run every Monday and Wednesday from 6pm to 8pm during the teaching period at LSE.

In addition, students will be given the option to participate in a three-hour webinar hosted at least 10 days before the due date of the take-home assessment. The webinar will consist of two-hours of lectures and one hour of question time.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students will be provided with an option to complete a practise essay (up to 1,000 words), with topics provided by the lecturer. The essay will be reviewed by a seminar tutor, which will grade the exam as if it were the final. Comments will be provided to students to assist them in their final essay.

Performance Measurement for Health System Improvement: Experiences, Challenges and Prospects. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the LT.

The assessment is a take-home assessment. It will outline six topics covering the course content. Students will be required to complete two of the six topics, which will need to be at least 1,500 words in length. Students will have 72 hours to complete the take-home exam.

HP4E3E Half Unit

Evidence Review and Synthesis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Huseyin Naci COW 3.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Health Economics and Policy (LSE and Chicago). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The content for this course will closely parallel SA4M9E and SA4P1, which are taught by the same instructor and offered on the Executive MSc Health Economics, Outcomes and Management in Cardiovascular Sciences, and the full-time MSc programmes (Global Health, International Health Policy, and Health Policy, Planning and Financing), respectively.

Evidence review and synthesis methods (such as systematic reviews and meta-analyses) are increasingly used to evaluate the relative benefits and harms of healthcare interventions. A broad range of decision making bodies across the health care sector (including health technology assessment bodies, drug and medical device licensing agencies, biopharmaceutical industry, and hospitals) need individuals equipped with the methods of reviewing and synthesising the existing body of evidence by performing systematic reviews and meta-analyses.

This course will be focused on the principles of reviewing and synthesising the existing body of literature. The course will have three components. The first will provide the rationale for adopting a systematic approach for evidence review and synthesis. It will equip students with the methods to undertake risk of bias assessments of randomised and non-randomised studies. The second component will focus on the quantitative synthesis of multiple studies in meta-analysis. The third component will discuss the opportunities and challenges of using evidence for decision-making.

The intended learning outcomes of this course will be the following:

- Describe the rationale for adopting a systematic approach to literature review
- Explain the principal threats to validity both in individual studies and collections of studies
- Critically evaluate the quality of randomised and non-randomised studies
- Assess heterogeneity in a collection of studies
- Design and perform a systematic review and meta-analysis evaluating a health care intervention in a group setting
- Describe the opportunities and challenges of using systematic review and meta-analysis findings for decision making Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 3 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

All students will have the opportunity to participate in additional lectures undertaken by external guests. These lectures will be run every Monday and Wednesday from 6pm to 8pm during the teaching period at LSE.

In addition, students will be given the option to participate in a three-hour webinar hosted at least 10 days before the due date of the take-home assessment. The webinar will consist of two-hours of lectures and one hour of question time.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

Formative assessment:

- Students will receive feedback from the course instructor on their systematic review and meta-analysis protocol.
- The word-limit for the protocol (to be developed individually) is 1,000 words.
- This protocol is based on a non-assessed presentation delivered by a group of students at the last day of class and feedback received on this presentation by the course instructor and members of other groups. This protocol closely parallels PRISMA protocols that need to be developed and registered prior to starting a systematic review and meta-analysis focused on health care subjects.

Diplomacy and Challenges

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox PAN.9.01A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Strategy and Diplomacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course looks at six key aspects of diplomacy: the tools of diplomacy and negotiation; new international security and policy challenges, such as climate change; global flashpoints, such as Brexit, the South China Sea and Syria; policy assessment on a major current international problem; simulations on crisis management and diplomatic negotiations; the future of diplomacy and international affairs.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures, 20 hours of seminars and 20 hours of workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: One formative policy paper (2,000 words) with a pre-arranged task. Feedback will involve a meeting with each student to discuss their formative policy paper. We will aim to ensure that students are able to: critically evaluate different kinds of evidence; assess the strengths and weaknesses of competing policy options; formulate arguments and policy recommendations in a coherent and balanced fashion.

Strategy in a Changing World

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox PAN.9.01A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Strategy and Diplomacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course examines five different perspectives on strategy: new approaches to strategy in international affairs; the interplay between old and new strategic actors; global strategic and economic trends; political and security developments in the world's key regions; the nature of strategic decisions.

Teaching: 40 hours of lectures and 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word formative essay with a pre-arranged title due in the MT. Feedback will involve a meeting with each student to discuss their formative essay. In the process, we will aim to ensure that students are able to: critically evaluate different kinds of evidence; assess the strengths and weaknesses of competing explanatory paradigms; formulate arguments in a coherent and balanced fashion.

Strategy in Action

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox PAN.9.01A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Strategy and Diplomacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: In this course we will be examining through lectures, seminars and workshops major foreign policy decisions, the diplomatic background to each of these and the strategic thinking behind them. We will be asking the students through group exercises to prepare a strategy and policy paper relevant to the day.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course is taught over 48 hours. This includes 3 intense sessions - a weekend of assessing strategic decisions involving drafting and crafting papers, a second weekend of formulating strategic decisions and briefing sessions on methodology. All these will lay the foundations for the dissertation plan.

Formative coursework: Group discussion and formulation of strategy/policy papers.

Indicative reading: Readings vary each year depending on the cases, scenarios and policy issues examined during each policy session. Readings will be provided to registered students in advance.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The formulation of a dissertation topic which must be in the form of a 3,000 word dissertation plan (100%). This should include the title, an abstract, a problem statement which should identify the features and theoretical concepts associated with the topic, the aims and objectives (including research questions or hypotheses), a literature review and the methodology. This module is taken in conjunction with IR496 Dissertation: MSc Diplomacy and International Strategy (1.5 units).

IR496 One and Half Unit

Dissertation: MSc International Strategy and Diplomacy (1.5 units)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox PAN.9.01A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Strategy and Diplomacy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation will address a topic in the social sciences drawn broadly from the three core courses. The topic should make central use of concepts in the study of International Relations, strategy and diplomacy and should demonstrate a good understanding of these concepts and implications. The dissertation will draw on empirical topic areas but should also demonstrate a high degree of conceptual originality. Guidance on standards of presentation will be given in the handbook and conform to the standard laid down for MSc dissertations in the International Relations Department. The subject and title of the dissertation must be approved by the dissertation supervisor.

Teaching: Arrangements for supervision. Students will receive advice on how to choose a topic and how to write a dissertation from a 1.5 hour workshop and from three half hour individual supervision sessions.

Formative coursework: Students submit a 3,000 dissertation plan on which they receive written feedback (see the details of the IR444 course, taken in conjunction with IR496).

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 15000 words) in the LT. A 15,000 word dissertation (100%) to be submitted in September. This course is taken in conjunction with IR444 Strategy in Action (H).

Using the dissertation plan (IR444), the dissertation will include an introduction, theoretical framework, a literature review and methodology followed by chapters, conclusion and bibliography.

European Capital Markets Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Niamh Moloney

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the EU's regulation of the capital markets. It considers the harmonized regulatory regime which applies to key capital market actors across the Member States and which supports the integrated market. The topics covered include: the rationale for integration and the role of law, the evolution of the integration project, and the impact of the financial crisis; the deregulation, liberalization, harmonization, and re-regulation mechanisms used to integrate and regulate the EU market and the role of the Court; market access and the passport for investment services; the Markets in Financial Instruments Directive 2004 (MiFID I) and the 2014 reforms (MiFID II and the Markets in Financial Instruments Regulation) and regulation; the liberalization of order execution and the regulation of trading venues; the 'UCITS' mutual funds regime; retail investor protection and conduct regulation; the prospectus and disclosure regime; gatekeepers (credit rating agencies and investment analysts); and the institutional structure for law-making and for supervision, including the European System of Financial Supervision and the European Securities and Markets Authority. Course coverage may vary slightly from year to year.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided in advance for each seminar. Sample texts include: Moloney, EU Securities and Financial Markets Regulation Regulation (2014); Veil (ed) European Capital Markets Law (2013); Chiu, Regulatory Convergence in EU Securities Regulation (2008); Skinner (ed), The Future of Investing in Europe's Markets after MiFID (2007); Ferrarini and Wymeersch (eds), Investor Protection in Europe. The Law of Armed Conflict

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course covers the international law governing the conduct of hostilities (jus in bello, also known as the law of armed conflict or international humanitarian law)—as distinct from the law on the resort to force (jus ad bellum), which is a separate course. The course will take a critical approach to the international regulation and facilitation of armed conflict. As well as the laws governing the means and methods of war ('Hague' law), the 'protected' groups hors de combat ('Geneva' law), and the distinction between international and non-international armed conflict, the course will cover 'lawfare' more generally: the recourse to law as a means of waging war. It will examine the application of the laws of war, including occupation law, in recent conflicts, including the wars in Iraq, Afghanistan and Syria, the 'war on terror', and the Palestinian Occupied Territories. Students can expect to have a thorough grasp of the principles and regulations governing the conduct of hostilities, the context and efficacy of enforcement mechanisms, and a critical understanding of the normative and political stakes of international law in this area.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: It is worthwhile acquiring the following books: Yoram Dinstein, The Conduct of Hostilities under the Law of International Armed Conflict (Cambridge UP, 2nd ed., 2010, or 3rd ed., 2016), Roberts and Guelff, Documents on the Laws of War (Oxford UP, 2000); Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars (Basic books, 4th ed. 2006). Other useful books include: David Kennedy, Of Law and War (Princeton UP, 2006); Geoffrey Best, War and Law Since 1945 (Oxford UP, 1997). Key Issues in Transnational Environmental Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veerle Heyvaert NAB7.06

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course focuses on key developments in environmental law beyond the State, which includes both the European and international level. It reviews the main law and policy principles that inspire transnational environmental developments, and identifies opportunities for and obstacles to the effectiveness of transnational environmental law. Then, the course turns the spotlight on the most important environmental challenges of our time and examines the role of transnational law in managing or resolving them. The course is structured as follows: 1. Environmental law in context: economic and alternative approaches to sustainable development. 2. Sources and principles of international environmental law. 3. Transnational environmental law. 4. Transnational liability: responding to global catastrophes. 5. Controlling toxic substances: risk regulation and the precautionary principle. 6. Climate change: international law and policy developments. 7. Climate change litigation. 8. Protecting biodiversity through designation: the EU example. 9. Regulating markets for ecosystem services. 10. Trade and the environment. 11. Revision.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided for each seminar. Essential reference works include Heyvaert, *Transnational Environmental Regulation and Governance. International Human Rights: Concepts, Law and Practice

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course is concerned with the international protection and promotion of human rights and its relation to a range of current global problems. The course draws on the international law and practice of human rights to examine how we might best understand the contribution and limitations of human rights to addressing contemporary ills. Through the consideration of a range of standards and thematic issues participants will learn about, and critically analyse, human rights concepts, norms, institutions and actors. The course begins by studying the ideas and objectives that underpin the post-1945 human rights legal order and then turns to consider the United Nations and regional architectures as well as standards of international human rights. We build on this foundation to examine a variety of human rights topics and to explore how international law in these areas has developed and is being applied. The lectures will explore civil and political rights, economic social and cultural rights, 'third generation' rights, the rights of particular groups as well as a selection of current issues. Subjects may include: the prohibition of torture and the war on terror; the right to privacy; the right to food; the right to self-determination; the right to development; the rights of indigenous peoples; women's human rights; transnational corporations and human rights; human rights and poverty, and; human rights and the environment.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

European and UK Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB 6:11

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course has two parts. In part one the origins, development and current standing of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms are considered. The primary focus will be on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, though the cases of other jurisdictions will also be referred to where appropriate. The course will analyse the Convention from the perspective of selected rights within it, but will also engage with the subject thematically, subjecting such concepts as the 'margin of appreciation', 'living instrument' and proportionality to close scrutiny. The goal of this part of the course is to give students a good critical understanding of the Convention, the case-law of the Strasbourg court and the Convention's place within the constitutional and political structure of 'Greater Europe'. The second part of the course is made up of a detailed study of the UK Human Rights Act. The origins and the political background to the Act will be explained, and the structure of the measure will be fully elaborated, relying on the text of the Act itself but also on the burgeoning case law that accompanies the measure. This part of the course will identify the principles that underpin the UK Act and explain its proper place in British law. It will also explore the wider constitutional implications of the measure, looking at its effect on the relationship between courts and Parliament. Linkages with the broader European framework discussed in the first part will be made by students through their reading and through class-engagement. The implications for human rights of the UK's intended departure from the EU will also be considered.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Course content: The principal focus of the course is upon methods of resolving disputes other than adjudication. The course brings together theory and observation of practice and is divided into two parts. In the first section students examine what motivates people to enter into disputes and the range of outcomes they seek, the history of the "informal justice" movement and the transformation of attitudes to dispute resolution in the UK and beyond. The emphasis in this part of the course is also on looking at the two primary forms of dispute resolution, negotiation and mediation. In the second part of the course specialist practitioners work with the class in exploring the interface between theory and practice and the different dynamics of disputes and their resolution in specific subject areas such as commercial law, community disputes, international law and family law. The course is designed to complement the option on Commercial Arbitration.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Students will also find it useful to access the following books which provide important context for debate about the civil litigation system and negotiation tactics: Henry Brown and Arthur Marriot, (2012) ADR: Principles and Practice, London: Sweet and Maxwell. This is written by practitioners but also makes reference to a number of seminal academic studies. It provides a good framework within which to position the more in-depth arguments contained in the academic articles set each week. Genn, Hazel, (2009) Judging Civil Justice (The Hamlyn Lectures) Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. This book provides a really good overview of civil justice reforms across developed legal systems and will alert you to many of the academic and policy debates which have surrounded reform. Roger Fisher and William Ury (2012) Getting to Yes: Negotiating an Agreement Without Giving In, Random House. This is a classic text in the field and very simple to read. This book will also help you when we come to study mediation which is often described as a form of facilitated negotiation. Simon Roberts and Michael Palmer's 2005 (second edition) Dispute Processes: ADR and the Primary Forms of Dispute Resolution, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. This is the most theoretical book in this list but provides extracts from many of the seminal works in the field that we will be studying. It adopts a very inter-disciplinary approach. This is useful as background reading.

the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course (Part I and Part II) examines the regulatory structures governing financial markets and investment services. It covers the main principles of international, EU and UK financial regulation, with the aim of developing a critical understanding of the dynamics and conceptual framework of financial regulation. The course does not aim to provide a detailed comparative account of financial regulation across countries, but international comparisons may be made where these are useful. In this context, students are encouraged to draw on their knowledge of their own national systems of regulation in making comparisons, and to apply the analytical perspectives suggested to those systems. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial services and markets, rather than on private law and transactional aspects. No previous knowledge of financial market regulation or background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. Indeed, the course provides a good background for further study of both financial and economic law and economic analysis of law. The course might be regarded as complimentary to a number of other courses, including Law of Corporate Finance or International Financial Law and Practice I & II.

The first part of this course will address the following topics: Anatomy of the Financial Market and the Great Financial Crisis. Building Blocks of the Regulatory World. Rationales for its Regulation: Systemic Stability, Market Integrity, Principle-Agent Competition. Key Elements of Financial Regulation: disclosure, resilience, risk modelling and regulation inside firm. Global and EU Regulatory Structures. Financial Stability – Policy Issues, Principles and Global Standard Setters. Prudential Regulation of Banks – The Basel Accords. The EU Banking Union. Deposit Guarantees. Bank Resolution and Insolvency

Course content: This course examines the regulatory structures governing financial markets and financial services. It covers the main principles of international, EU and UK financial regulation with the aim of developing a critical understanding of the conceptual framework for financial regulation. This half unit focuses on financial stability, including macro and micro-prudential regulation, regulation of trading and market infrastructure, and on new and emerging issues in financial regulation.

The course does not aim to provide a detailed comparative account of financial regulation across countries, but international comparisons may be made where these are useful. In this context, students are encouraged to draw on their knowledge of their own national systems of regulation in making comparisons, and to apply the analytical perspectives suggested to those systems. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial services and markets, rather than on private law and transactional aspects.

No previous knowledge of financial market regulation or background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. Indeed, the course provides a good background for further study of both financial and economic law and economic analysis of law. For non-lawyers, a willingness to engage in legal analysis will be necessary, although a legal background is not required. The course might be regarded as complimentary to a number of other courses, including Law of Corporate Finance or International Financial Law and Practice I & II.

Topics include:

1. Unpicking the Great Financial Crisis
2. Mapping regulation for financial stability
3. States, Banks and Global Markets: the macroeconomic Background
4. The next Financial Crisis
5. Ethics in Finance
6. Market Integrity
7. The role of Consumers

LL408E Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jo Murkens NAB.7.31

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course examines the central issues in comparative constitutional law across a range of jurisdictions and from a variety of perspectives. The course opens with an introduction on the purpose of comparative constitutional law. The first substantive part discusses various approaches to the study of CCL as well as the migration of constitutional ideas (and related notions of constitutional borrowing, transplants etc). The second part deals with key constitutional concepts (constitution; rule of law; presidentialism, parliamentarism) which are discussed from a historical and comparative perspective. The point of these sessions is not to compare for the sake of comparing, but to equip you (the researcher) with the conceptual tools to do insightful, critical, and original comparative work of your own. The third part looks challenges the assumptions of liberal constitutionalism by examining constitutions in divided societies and authoritarian constitutionalism. The overall aim of the course is to develop students' understanding and use of many general theoretical explanations surrounding debates in CCL, and to develop students' critical/analytical approach to many of the questions facing judges and scholars in the next decade.

Course content: This course examines a range of controversial issues in human and constitutional rights law from a comparative perspective. These include: Abortion; 'Deviant' Sex: Sodomy, Sado-Masochistic Sex, and Incest; Same-Sex Marriage; Religion in the Public Sphere; Hate Speech and Denial of the Holocaust; Obscenity. We will approach them by comparing and contrasting judgments from courts all over the world, with a certain emphasis on cases from the U.S. Supreme Court, the Canadian Supreme Court, the South African Constitutional Court, the European Court of Human Rights, the U.K. Supreme Court, and the German Federal Constitutional Court. The goals of the course are, first, to introduce the students to the jurisprudence of those extremely powerful and influential courts, and, second, to invite them to think about and critically analyse some of the most controversial, difficult, and important rights issues of our time.

Course content: As the recent debate on shadow banking shows, the traditional financial market sectors of commercial banking, investment banking, derivatives, capital markets and asset management are nowadays converging. However, their academic analysis is still largely sector-based. This course offers a cross-sectoral, functional analysis, permitting students to grasp the big picture of the entire financial market law. To this end, the course largely concentrates on the different activities of risk taking and risk shifting regardless of the type of financial institution involved. The course is also a novelty to the extent that it integrates both spheres of rulemaking for the financial markets, notably financial law and some fundamentals of financial regulation. Experience shows that approaching the framework for financial law without at least considering the interdependencies with risk management and capital requirements leaves us with only a fragmented picture. For non-practitioners, the market context of financial law appears sometimes confusing. Therefore, this course will first approach each subject from in a market perspective before coming to the legal framework. This is essential with a view to understanding the permanent interaction between market behaviour and the legislators' and regulators' responses to it. The legal framework will be analysed taking into account international rules and developments as well as European legislation. Since the City of London is one of the globally most important financial markets, England will be used as anchor-jurisdiction in order to develop patterns of global significance that are addressed by legislators and regulators around the world, in particular also looking at the European Union and at international rulemaking. The course also considers key trends. It is designed to be as topical as possible, and the content may change in the light of developments. While the precise topics covered will vary from year to year they typically will include the following:

- The logic and the players of the financial market. The creation and allocation of risk. The distinction between 'Law' and 'Regulation'.
- The reasoning and sources of financial law and regulation. The role of European financial law and regulation. The role of international law.
- Understanding the financial crisis.
- Banks and their nature. Assets and Liabilities. Deposit-taking and bank loans. Money market instruments. Rank of creditors in bank insolvencies.
- Raising capital. Primary market and secondary market. Issuance of debt securities (bonds). Issuance of Eurobonds. Issuance of equity (shares).
- Security interests and financial collateral.
- Repurchase agreements, repurchase agreements and securities lending. Relevant conflict-of-laws problems.
- Guarantee, indemnity, insurance.
- Derivatives. Types of derivatives. The rise of derivatives. Recharacterisation risk. Standard documentation (ISDA).
- Netting and set-off. Relation to insolvency law. Importance for derivatives, repos, securities lending. Conflict-of-laws analysis. Cross-jurisdictional problems.
- Trusts.
- Fund structures (public and alternative).
- Structured finance, securitisation and asset-backed securities.

The rationale behind it. Risks.

- Transfer of financial instruments. Stock exchanges. Trading and settlement of securities. Intermediated securities. Conflict of laws and cross-jurisdictional problems. Derivatives clearing.
- Syndicated loans.
- Regulatory arbitrage in respect of financial transactions.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to the field of international economic law: its principles, rules, practices, and institutions, and the debates which attend each. The course focuses on the public international law rules and institutions which govern international trade. Students will be given a grounding in the jurisprudence of the WTO, but will also be introduced to interdisciplinary material on the broader political, economic, institutional and normative contexts in which international economic law operates. Key themes will include the question of 'development' and developing countries, the role of expertise in global economic governance, and institutional aspects of judicial international dispute settlement. Students will be expected to engage with the principles and practice of international economic law both at the technical level, and at the level of critical reflection.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the theory and practice of international arbitration, one of the most important mechanisms for settling disputes arising from commercial cross-border transactions. The focus is mainly on English arbitration law, which is put into a comparative perspective and contrasted especially with French law, which highlights the antagonism between Paris and London as the rival centres for international arbitration. Special attention is given to the applicable international treaties, the problems of conflicts of laws, and the different types of institutional and transnational rules that may have to be taken into consideration in an international arbitration. This course prepares for 'Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration'.

Pre-requisites: Fundamentals of International Commercial Arbitration (LL415E) or equivalent course in previous studies or relevant practical experience with international arbitration

Course content: This course aims at giving students who already are acquainted with the fundamentals of arbitration the possibility to go into depth into selected problems of international commercial arbitration. The course is designed to allow intense discussions of these problems in order to raise the sensitivity for the issues at stake and to lead to a research oriented approach. Despite its academic outset, the course is highly relevant for those wanting to specialise in arbitration practice, as the theoretical problems have a most significant impact on practical solutions. The course will treat a selection of topical contemporary issues of international commercial arbitration, such as the role of internationally mandatory rules of law, arbitration & insolvency, the scope of the competence-competence principle; arbitration and fraud and corruption, or the enforcement of awards set aside abroad. The course seeks to be as topical as possible, so that content may change in the light of developments.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: Firm knowledge of contract law and/or international sales law from previous studies.

Course content: The course treats what can be called the general part of transnational contract law, i.e. the general principles of law which are of relevance in any kind of international contract, be it sale, construction, shipping, financing, or joint venture. These general principles relate to contractual formation and negotiations, interpretation, transversal general principles, changed circumstances and hardship, agency, third parties, assignment, self-help and set-off, direct performance and damages and penalties. At present, such contracts are governed either by uniform rules of international conventions or by the national laws applicable by virtue of conflict of law rules. The course puts the existing national and international solutions in a comparative perspective so as to work with the sources of such generally accepted principles. Where there are divergences between existing solutions, the course focuses on the elaboration of new efficient solutions that are internationally acceptable and have the potential of becoming general principles in the future. For these purposes, special attention is given to the UNIDROIT Principles on International Commercial Contracts and the European Principles of Contract Law. Other national laws, however, are drawn upon from time to time. Students are also encouraged, in both examination and classes, to reflect upon the similarities and differences between their own national laws and the UNIDROIT Principles.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: S. Vogenauer & J. Kleinheisterkamp, Commentary on the UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts (1st edn, OUP 2009); H. Kötz, European Contract Law (OUP 1997); K. Comparative Corporate Governance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Gerner Beuerle NAB5.08

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course will focus on the role of boards of directors in large public companies and groups of companies. It will deal with the legal regulation of agency problems arising between the board and shareholders as a class; between the board/majority shareholders and minority shareholders; and between the board and other stakeholder groups, notably creditors and employees. Although the main focus will be on board and shareholder relationships, the aim of the course is to develop and apply a framework of analysis which illuminates relations between the board and all stakeholder groups. The course will be taught largely on a comparative basis, focusing on English, US, German and French law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Reading will be prescribed for each seminar. Preliminary reading can be found in P. Davies, Introduction to Company Law (OUP, 2nd edition 2010), chapters 5-9; R. Kraakman et al, The Anatomy of Corporate Law (2nd edition 2009); D. Kershaw, Company Law in Context: Text and Materials (OUP, 2nd edition 2012), chapters 5 and 6.

Course content: This course covers the international law dealing with climate change with a view to assessing how risks and uncertainties caused by climate change are governed and allocated in different legal regimes. The course adopts the stance that the political and legal questions raised by climate change cannot be addressed by reference to climate change law (or indeed international environmental law) alone. Climate change gives rise to a series of profound problems touching upon a range of bodies of law (international economic law, human rights law, state responsibility, international migration law) in a complex political and ethical environment. In approaching climate change as a concrete concern relevant to these various bodies of law and practice, the course will address the normative and/or ethical bases for choosing between actions designed to prevent and/or manage climate change and its consequences, attentive to developmental imperatives and the theoretical concerns raised by the 'fragmented' nature of international law

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Media Law: Regulating Publication

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of mass media publication (principally the press, the broadcast media, and institutionalised Internet publication). The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media publication practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines potential restrictions on publication that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests considered are those in reputation (defamation), privacy, and confidentiality. The key public interests considered are the integrity of the judicial process (contempt and reporting restrictions), the impartiality of political representations, the avoidance of offence (obscenity and religion), national security, and the protection of children.

Course content: This course examines the legal and administrative regulation of newsgathering and content production practices undertaken by journalists and others working in the media sector.

The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media newsgathering practice, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines a number of newsgathering practices that are either facilitated or proscribed by law and/or other forms of regulation. These include protection of sources (in general; vis-a vis police and security interests; payment of sources); access to information held by the state (official secrets; news management; freedom of information); access to the justice system (secret justice / physical access to courts; access to court documents; technology and the courts - text-based reporting and broadcasting; access to prisoners); media-police interaction; harassment and media intrusion, and surreptitious newsgathering practices (hacking, tapping and subterfuge).

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course is a comprehensive study of the main features of competition law. While the focus is on EU competition law, reference will be made to the laws of other jurisdictions (e.g. the United States and the UK) when these offer relevant points for comparison. The first part of the course examines the history and aims of competition law. It considers the role of economic analysis and its limitations in the light of non-economic considerations. The second part is a review of the major substantive fields: restrictive practices; the regulation of monopolies and dominant positions; distribution and cooperation agreements and merger control. The third part addresses the public and private enforcement of competition law.

Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to the philosophy of human rights and theoretical issues in human rights law. The emphasis is on a combination of law and theory; to this end, each seminar will rely on a mixture of cases from various jurisdictions and theoretical and philosophical materials. The overarching questions to be examined are to what extent current philosophical theories of human rights can illuminate our understanding of the cases and legal doctrines, and to what extent the cases and doctrines can help improving the theoretical and philosophical understanding of human rights. Topics to be discussed will include: Interest Theories of Human Rights; Ronald Dworkin's Theory of Rights as Trumps; Balancing and Proportionality; Human Rights and Judicial Review I (The American Perspective); Human Rights and Judicial Review II (The European Perspective); Absolute Rights.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Edmund-Philipp Schuster NAB6.30

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites for this module.

Course content: In this module, we will explore the regulation of mergers, acquisitions and restructurings in Europe. We will focus on legal techniques for the combination and restructuring of business operations in Europe, with a particular focus on the legal issues arising in cross-border transactions in the EU.

There are a number of reasons for corporations wanting to restructure their operations or to make acquisitions. For instance, firms may want to acquire a strategically valuable firm or asset in order to improve the efficiency (and thus increase the value) of their business operations; they may want to implement a better governance structure, enabling them to manage their undertaking more effectively; or they may want to subject themselves to more favourable legal or tax rules – including choosing among different national corporate laws.

EU law offers a range of legal vehicles for achieving such aims, and it is these vehicles we will explore throughout the term. In particular, we will look at re-incorporations of EU companies based on the relevant Treaty provisions; takeovers of (listed) EU companies; domestic ("statutory") mergers; de-mergers and spin-offs; cross-border mergers in the EU; and the European Company. Content overview:

- The market for corporate control, corporate ownership structures and transaction structures for takeovers and restructurings in Europe
- European takeover regulation
- Domestic mergers
- Divisions & spin-offs
- Cross-border mergers
- Employee participation (board-level co-determination) and board structures, and their relevance for corporate transactions
- The European Company (SE)
- Brief introduction to taxation of corporate transactions and tax-related drivers and incentives for intra-group reorganisation and company migration

Course content: Member States of the EU are not free to award subsidies to their national companies or to support them in a comparable way (by, inter alia, securing favourable supply conditions to the companies, granting loans at favourable rates or providing unlimited guarantees). In the wake of the recent financial crisis, for instance, bailout measures adopted across the EU had to be cleared by the European Commission in accordance with Articles 107 and 108 TFEU. The first part of the course explores the economic rationale underpinning the control of State aid in the European Union (the reasons why similar regimes are not implemented at the national level in federal countries facing similar issues, such as the United States, will also be explored). The second part examines (i) the notion of State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU and (ii) the conditions under which measures falling under the scope of that provision may be deemed compatible with the internal market. The third part provides an overview of the application of the law in some sectors (including the financial and the communications sectors) or for some purposes (e.g. research and development, regional aid). The fourth part is devoted to the procedural aspects of the discipline.

Pre-requisites: Some background in public international law is helpful for this course. If an introduction or refresher is needed, a standard textbook such as Malcolm Shaw's International Law is recommended.

Course content: The course looks at the history of and background to international criminal law and at its substantive content—its origins in the early Twentieth Century, its purported objectives, and the core crimes set out in the Rome Statute over which the International Criminal Court has jurisdiction (war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide). The course will then examine in more detail a number of areas of contemporary interest (at least two from among the following: universal jurisdiction, immunity, torture, terrorism, international tribunals). The course is mainly directed at the conceptual problems associated with the prosecution of war criminals and, more broadly, legalised retribution.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL438E Half Unit Commercial Remedies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Solene Rowan NAB 7.26 and Dr Charles Webb NAB 6.26

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduate contract and tort law

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with a detailed understanding of remedies in a commercial context. The reading addresses both case law and academic commentary. Here is an indicative list of the issues that will be considered on the course:

1. The aims of commercial remedies: What interests and other policies may be served by the law when remedying commercial disputes?
2. The function of contract damages: How do the courts assess damages for breaches of contract? Should the courts do more to protect the claimant's interest in performance? What limits are placed on the recovery or measure of damages?
3. Punishment: Is punishment of a defaulting defendant ever a legitimate aim in commercial remedies? Should punitive damages be given a greater role in English commercial law?
4. Agreed remedies: To what extent are commercial parties free to fix the remedies available to them in the event of breach? Does freedom of contract extend to the parties' secondary obligations?
5. Unjust enrichment: What is the law of unjust enrichment? What is its relationship to the law of contract? What can commercial parties recover under the law of unjust enrichment?
6. Comparative law: How do other jurisdictions deal with these questions? What might the common law learn from civil law systems?

Teaching: 24 hours

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. Formative assessment opportunities will be provided (essay or problem questions)

Indicative reading: Rowan, Remedies for Breach of Contract: A Comparative Analysis of the Protection of Performance (OUP 2012). Burrows, Remedies for Torts and Breach of Contract (3rd

Digital Rights, Privacy and Security

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Orla Lynskey (NAB 6.23)

Professor Andrew Murray (NAB 7.11)

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of EU law is desirable but not essential for this course.

Course content: Personal data is an important factor of production in data-driven economies, and the processing of personal data can generate significant economic and social benefits. Personal data processing can also have a detrimental impact on established rights and values, such as autonomy, privacy and data protection. As a result, legal frameworks to regulate personal data processing have been enacted across the world, with the EU legal model used as a blueprint. Yet, despite the development of such legal frameworks across the globe, critical questions remain unanswered. For instance, the objectives of data protection frameworks differ with some prioritising a fundamental-rights approach to data protection regulation while other frameworks are based on an economic free-trade rationale. Disagreement also persists regarding how the balance should be struck between effective data protection and other rights (such as freedom of expression and freedom of information) and interests (such as innovation and national security).

This course will critically evaluate the legal framework applicable to personal data processing. It will be done predominantly with reference to the EU framework, as this has served as a model for over 100 other jurisdictions. However we will also examine the US legal framework as it differs considerably from other global legal regimes. Participants will be introduced to techniques and technologies for monitoring and processing personal data in the information society. In order to bring key issues to life, a number of case studies will be considered, including the application of data protection and privacy rules to online behavioural advertising and to State surveillance.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Lynskey, The Foundations of EU Data Protection Law (OUP, 2015). Mayer-Schönberger, Delete: The Virtue of Forgetting in the Digital Age (Princeton UP, 2009). For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: Executive version of an existing taught masters course (LL4A8).

Course content: This course examines the international law relating to when it is permissible to use force (jus ad bellum). The aim of this course is to develop an understanding of the principles of international law that regulate the use of force in international society. It concentrates on the prohibition of resort to force in Article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter and the exceptions to that prohibition. It looks in detail at the right of self-defence, humanitarian intervention and the responsibility to protect, pro-democratic intervention, the protection of nationals and the criminalization of aggression. The use of force by or with the authorization of the United Nations is also considered.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued in the course pack. See, in particular: Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence (5th ed, 2011); Gray, International Law and the Use of Force (3rd ed, 2008).

LL445E Half Unit Cultural Property and Heritage Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB7.27

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course looks at cultural property and heritage law from legal, social theoretical and practice-oriented perspectives. It provides an overview of existing and emerging cultural property and heritage legislation (domestic and international). We will be looking in particular at the development of cultural property legislation in the 20th century and emerging international cultural property and heritage initiatives under the auspices of the UN and UNESCO. Topics to be covered include the origins of cultural property law, the problems in defining cultural property and heritage, current issues and cases in repatriation and restitution of cultural objects, the National Trust and other heritage protection regimes, and intangible cultural heritage. The course also addresses the creation and management of museums and heritage sites, primarily within the UK, but also including sites in North and South America, Europe and Asia. We consider how the issues that we've identified throughout the course arise in the ongoing construction, protection, and (primarily economic) uses of heritage. Along with specialist seminars, the course includes visits to museums and contact with practising experts in the field.

Teaching: Courses are taught over 5 days (Mon-Fri) with approximately 5 hours teaching per day. There is a morning and an afternoon session, so 10 sessions in total with the overall contact time being 24-26 hours.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Art and Antiquities Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB7.27

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course engages in a discussion of specific cases and issues regarding acquisition, ownership, and restitution of antiquities and works of art, and the problems that arise in regulating markets in art, antiquities and cultural artefacts. We will look at domestic (UK and US) and international legislation regulating the art and antiquities trades. Against this legislative background, the course examines important cases in disputes regarding looting and provenance of antiquities, and questions of commodification and sale of cultural artefacts and antiquities, including the issues that arise in the operation of the art market (dealers, museums, collectors and auction houses). 'Art Law' is a specialized area of practice and an emerging area of theory and scholarship. We will look at some of the cases and theory of art and law, including the practices of dealers and auction houses in valuing (and mis-valuing) art for sale; the recent developments in addressing the restitution of art taken during the Nazi era; museum loans and the cross-border movement of art; the restoration and conservation debate(s) and then turn to a scholarly and interpretive approach to the issues that arise in considering the art market. 'Antiquity Law' is an engagement with the problems of the market(s) in antiquities and the legal and ethical burdens on the participants in this trade. We will look at the practices and constraints that arise in the context of both private purchasers/dealers and museums acquiring antiquities. We will focus on the case that the government of Italy brought against Marion True, the erstwhile Curator of Antiquities at the Getty Museum, and we will consider how that ground-breaking prosecution changed some of the practices in this area, as well as added to the toolbox for nations seeking repatriation of cultural objects. We will also return to the questions that arise in dealer, auction house and museum policies more generally. Finally, practitioners in these areas, museum and auction house professionals, archaeologists, and art experts will be contributing to the seminars on the emerging legal issues in this area.

Teaching: Courses are taught over 5 days (Mon-Fri) with approximately 5 hours teaching per day. There is a morning and an afternoon session, so 10 sessions in total with the overall contact time being 24-26 hours.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Colin Renfrew, Loot, Legitimacy and Ownership: The Ethical Crisis in Archaeology (2000 Duckworth); Neil Cookson, Archaeological Heritage Law (2000 Barry Rose); James Cuno, *Who Owns Antiquity? LL447E Half Unit

International Law: Courts and Tribunals

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Devika Hovell NAB6.32

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course introduces students to the practice and theory of international legal dispute resolution, focusing on dispute settlement before courts and tribunals. The former Prosecutor of the Yugoslav Tribunal, Richard Goldstone, resolved that: 'it seems to me that if you don't have international tribunals, you might as well not have international law'. Given the proliferation of courts and tribunals applying and enforcing international law, certain scholars have argued we are witnessing the emergence of an 'international judicial system' (Martinez). The course involves three main elements:

1. Firstly, the course examines the structure and work of the International Court of Justice, the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, focusing on jurisdiction/admissibility, contentious cases and advisory opinions.
2. Secondly, the course introduces a variety of other international courts and tribunals, such as the International Criminal Court, domestic and regional courts dealing with international law and human rights, including the European Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Justice, the WTO Dispute Settlement Body and investment treaty arbitral tribunals. Using contemporary and controversial case studies, the course will critically analyze and contrast the institutional design and jurisdiction of these courts and tribunals.

3. Thirdly, throughout the course we explore key theoretical controversies surrounding the adjudication of international law, focusing in particular on (a) how these courts and tribunals relate to one another (hierarchy, specialization and fragmentation); (b) what criteria should be used in assessing the legitimacy and effectiveness of these courts and tribunals; and (c) whether and how these courts and tribunals create international law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students are encouraged to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading includes Karen Alter, The New Terrain of International Law: Courts, Politics, Rights (2014 Princeton); Gleider Hernández, The International Court of Justice and the Judicial Function (2014 OUP); Yuval Shany, 'No Longer a Weak Department of Power? Reflections on the Emergence of a New International Judiciary' (2009) 20(1) European Journal of International Law 73; Frederic Megret and Marika Giles Samson, 'Holding the Line on Complementarity in Libya: the Case for Tolerating Flawed Domestic Trials' (2013) 11 Journal of International Criminal Justice 571.

LL448E Half Unit

Terrorism and the Rule of Law

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB 6:11

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course will provide a theoretical and historical introduction to the concept of terrorism. It will critically consider definitions of terrorism, and analyse the relationship between terrorism and the right to rebel, and the right to engage in civil disobedience. The historical development of the idea of 'terrorism' from the late eighteenth century through to the present will then be traced, with the emphasis on locating the practice of political terror in its political and military/quasi-military context. The role of international law generally and international human rights law in particular in the context of terrorism and anti-terrorism action will be considered in detail. The course will teach the material in context, so the subject will be analysed by reference to particular situations where necessary, eg Northern Ireland, the Palestine/Israel conflict and the post 11 September 'war on terror'. The aim of the course is to give the student a good critical understanding of this most controversial of subjects, and also to impart an understanding of the role of law in shaping the fields of terrorism and of counter-terrorism (and, latterly, the emerging field of 'extremism').

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: All students are encouraged to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: There are four pieces ideally to be read before we meet:

(i) Richard English Terrorism: How to Respond (Oxford 2009; pb 2010).

(ii) Conor Gearty, Liberty and Security (Polity, 2013).

(Note both of these books are in paperback, and short!)

(iii) Conor Gearty, 'Terrorism and Human Rights' in Gearty, Selected Essays on Human Rights and Terrorism (Cameron May 2008), ch 24 – I have a PDF available.

(iv) Conor Gearty, 'Terrorist threats, Anti-terrorism and the Case against the Human Rights Act' in F Cowell (ed), Critically Examining the Case against the Human Rights Act (Hart 2017) I have a word version.

Please try to ensure that you have completed this reading prior to the module.

LL449E Half Unit

Cyberlaw

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Murray NAB7.11

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course critically analyses the regulation of the Internet and digital devices (such as smart devices and tablets).

It begins by providing a theoretical framework for the regulation of the Internet, examining questions such as whether the internet is capable of regulation, whether such regulation should be neutral and who should assume the task of regulating the online environment. Students taking the course will be expected to develop knowledge and understanding of the different values and interests brought to bear in the regulation of information technologies and communities.

Armed with this theoretical background, students will then be asked to consider how these values are reflected in the regulatory design of the online environment. This examination will be conducted by considering a number of case studies relating to online privacy, defamation, criminal activity and market power. The course concludes by examining the topical and politically charged question of whether Internet Service Providers should be allowed to vary service conditions by types of content.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: All students are encouraged to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Murray, Information Technology Law: The Law and Society (OUP, 3rd ed, 2016). Lipton, Rethinking Cyberlaw: A New Vision for Internet Law (Edward Elgar, 2015). Murray, The Regulation of Cyberspace (Routledge, 2007). Lessig, Code Ver, 2.0 (Basic Books, 2006). Zittrain, The Future of the Internet (Penguin, 2009). Reed: Making Laws for Cyberspace (OUP, 2012). Sunstein, Republic.com 2.0 (Princeton UP, 2009).

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL4COE Half Unit

Taxation of Wealth

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Summers NAB.6.02

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Pre-requisites: This course is suitable for students who have not previously studied taxation. Some prior familiarity with principles of tax design is advantageous but not essential.

Course content: The course examines the taxation of wealth from a variety of interdisciplinary perspectives, drawing on research from political theory, economics, sociology and law. The main aims of the course are to explain why taxes on transfers, returns and holdings of wealth currently play a relatively minor role in most tax systems (compared, for example, with taxes on labour income and consumption), and to evaluate the options for taxing wealth. The focus is on the UK and US contexts although comparisons are also made with other jurisdictions.

Part I of the course introduces key debates from across the social sciences relevant to the taxation of wealth. Seminars 1-5 cover: (i) defining and measuring wealth; (ii) inequality and distributive justice; (iii) property rights; (iv) economic perspectives; and (v) social and political perspectives. Part II applies these debates to specific wealth tax policies. Seminars 6-10 cover: (i) taxes on transfers: inheritance or estate tax, gift tax, comprehensive income tax; (ii) taxes on returns: capital gains tax, capital income tax and (iii) taxes on holdings: property tax, land-value tax, annual wealth tax.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the ST.

24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 pieces of coursework in the ST.

Students will receive formative feedback on two essay-plans (comprising 300-word abstract, outline of subheadings, and bibliography) based on past or sample summative essay titles.

Indicative reading: Atkinson, Inequality: What can be Done?

(Harvard University Press 2015); Graetz & Shapiro, Death by a Thousand Cuts: The Fight over Taxing Inherited Wealth (Princeton University Press 2005); Hills et al, Wealth in the UK: Distribution, Accumulation and Policy (OUP 2013); Institute for Fiscal Studies, The Structure and Reform of Direct Taxation: The Meade Report (Allen & Unwin 1978); Institute for Fiscal Studies, Tax by Design: The Mirrlees Review, Vols 1 & 2 (OUP 2011); Murphy and Nagel, The Myth of Ownership: Taxes and Justice (OUP 2002); Piketty, Capital in the Twenty-First Century (Harvard University Press 2014); Sandford, Taxing Personal Wealth (Allen & Unwin 1971); Scheve & Stasavage, Taxing the Rich: A History of Fiscal Fairness in the United States and Europe (Princeton University Press 2016); Waldron, The Right to Private Property (OUP 1991); Young, The Myth of Millionaire Tax Flight: How Place Still Matters for the Rich (Stanford University Press 2017)

LL4CPE Half Unit

Tax Avoidance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Blackwell NAB 7.30

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course will provide a comprehensive overview of the phenomenon of tax avoidance and of the attempts by states to combat it: both unilaterally and multilaterally. Whilst using examples predominantly from the UK and USA the issues addressed by the course are general across many jurisdictions and so will be applicable to those with interests beyond the UK and USA.

The course will be multi-disciplinary, in that the course will draw on accessible social-science literature.

Taxpayers have always sought to minimise their tax burden.

However recent decades have witnessed a sharp rise in popular and governmental concern with tax shelters and other tax avoidance. Traditional strategies of tax avoidance have included postponement of taxes and tax arbitrage, in addition to attempting to exploit 'loopholes' through a formalist interpretation of legislation. In recent years the proliferation of complex financial instruments has increased the opportunities for such avoidance. Additionally, globalisation and the development of the digital economy have facilitated tax avoidance strategies of base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS). This rise in opportunities for tax avoidance has been accompanied by an increased public concern that individuals and companies pay their 'fair share' of taxation: which states have responded to both through unilateral and multilateral actions (including the OECD's project on BEPS and the EU's Anti Tax Avoidance Package).

Particular topics covered will include (i) defining avoidance; (ii) strategies of tax avoidance; (iii) statutory interpretation and judicial approaches to tax avoidance especially with reference to the UK and USA; (iv) General Anti-Abuse and Anti-Avoidance Rules and Specific and Targeted Anti-Avoidance Rules; (v) reporting rules and other policies to deter avoidance; (vi) the OECD response to BEPS; (vii) BEPS and the EU; and (viii) corporate social responsibility, professional ethics and public attitudes with regard tax avoidance.

Teaching: The module will provide between 24 and 26 hours of contact teaching time. Students will be provided with online and hard copy materials for the module well in advance of the intensive teaching. The teaching will take place in week-long sessions, which will typically be held in the first half of September, December and April. Where there is student demand we will also offer modules taught over two intensive weekends. For the week-long sessions, the module will run from either Monday to Friday, or Sunday until Friday with a rest day on Wednesday.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Dhammika Dharmapala, 'What Do We Know about Base Erosion and Profit Shifting? A Review of the Empirical Literature' (2014) 35(4) Fiscal Studies 421. MG406E Half Unit Behavioural Decision Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Barbara Fasolo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course introduces students to the fascinating field of behavioural "decision" science. We will explore a selection of current research topics relevant to personal and managerial decision making as well as policy-making. For each topic students will get acquainted with key psychological phenomena and principles of behavioural decision science through interactive lectures, and become alert to cognitive biases and learn how to overcome them. Students will read pre-assigned scientific articles and in class discuss lessons learned, limitations and implications of these concepts for the development of decision making competence in their organisation (e.g. via design of policies, training programmes, or tools). Topics will include: Origin of Behavioural Decision Science; the Building Blocks of Behavioural Decision Science: Preferences, Utility and Value; Probability, Uncertainty and Risk; Choice Architecture and Behavioural Change; Heuristics and Biases in Decisions about Money, Health, Consumer Products and People.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: The formative assignment will take place on the final day of the course after all the lectures and seminars have been completed. The assignment will consist of a plenary presentation in which students divided into small groups will be asked to give a short presentation discussing an intervention (de-biasing technique, nudging, or choice architecture) that can be used to tackle the most important biases in a decision making problem of their choice. Student groups will develop their plenary presentations during seminars while interacting with the course teachers and other students. The formative feedback will be given at a team level, and will focus on the rigour and use of behavioural science concepts learned in the course.

Indicative reading: Ariely, D. (2008). Predictably Irrational: The Hidden Forces That Shape Our Decisions. Harper Collins; Baron, J. (2000), Thinking and Deciding (3rd edition), Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; Bazerman, M. (2017) Judgment in Managerial Decision Making. London: Allen Lane; Melnikoff, D. E., & Bargh, J. A. (2018). The mythical number two. Trends in cognitive sciences, 22(4), 280-293. Plous, S. (1993), The Psychology of Judgment and Decision Making, New York: McGraw Hill; Russo, J. E. & Schoemaker, P. J. H. (2002) Winning decisions: How to make the right decision the first time, Piatkus Publ. Limited; Sunstein, C.R. Thaler, R.H. (2008) Nudge - New Haven, CT: Yale University Press; Yates, F. J. (2003). Decision Management: How to Assure Better Decisions in Your Company. Jossey-Bass.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 3000 words) in the MT.

The summative assignment will include two parts. In the first part (no more than 1,000 words), you will be asked to describe and critically evaluate how the decision problem as well as the intervention presented for the formative assessment came about. This part will be less academic because we will expect you to use individual reflection, and academic references will not be needed. In the second part of the essay (no more than 2,000 words), you will justify the specific nudging or debiasing intervention, with reference to behavioural literature, and theories. The first part of the essay will count for 25% of your mark while 75% will come from the second part.

MG440 Half Unit Managerial Economics (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Ricardo Alonso

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

The information in this course guide pertains to the 2018-2020 cohort.

Course content: A graduate-level introduction to the foundations of managerial economics and its application to high-level business decisions. Topics include:

Case assignment (30%) in the MT.

MG443 Half Unit Organisational Behaviour (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Connson Locke

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

This information in this course guide pertains to the 2018-2020 cohort.

Course content: The course seeks to understand individual attitudes and behaviour in an organizational context. It does this by reviewing psychological theories as they apply to organisations, demonstrating the contribution of a psychological perspective to understanding human behaviour at work, and critically evaluating the empirical evidence. The course attempts to strike a balance between theory and practice by applying the theories to practical problems in organizations.

Topics include personality and individual differences, motivation and rewards, intrinsic motivation, creativity, organizational justice, cross-cultural management, organisational culture and change.

Teaching: 35 hours of teaching spread over the first 3 modules. 10 sessions of 3.5 hours each. The teaching is highly participative and includes breakout discussions and exercises.

The course will run between the following dates:

26 August - 08 September 2018

15-20 December 2018

01 - 13 April 2019

Formative coursework: A practice exam will be provided and feedback will be given on this assignment.

Indicative reading: The course relies on journal articles (for example, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour). A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. There is no required textbook. The following textbook is recommended for students who would like further reading: French, R., Rayner, C., Rees, G. & Rumbles, S. (2011) Organizational Behaviour, 2nd edition. John Wiley & Sons, Ltd.

Assessment: Essay (20%), class participation (15%) and take home exam (65%).

Class participation - based on group presentations.

Take home exam - final essay

MG445 Half Unit Marketing Strategy (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Om Narasimhan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

The information in this course guide pertains to the 2017-2019 cohort.

Course content: This course is a rigorous examination of the key analytical frameworks, technical tools, and concepts that are essential to building an effective marketing strategy. Peter Drucker, the father of business consulting once famously remarked, "Because the purpose of business is to create a customer, the business enterprise has two--and only two--basic functions: marketing and innovation". In today's highly competitive business environment these words ring even more true: a well-designed marketing strategy can make all the difference between success and failure in the marketplace. While marketing is commonly associated with consumer goods companies (e.g., Unilever) it would be myopic to restrict the relevance of marketing to such instances alone. Marketing, ultimately, is about understanding and shaping behaviour. Accordingly, banks and other financial institutions, as well as governmental, medical, and not-for-profit organisations - from those that design and sell financial products, to those that implement public policy (e.g., those dedicated to reducing drunk driving, increasing literacy, and encouraging safe contraception), have all found that a well-thought out marketing strategy can be a critical arbiter of success even in this "ideas marketplace."

By using a wide range of quantitative as well as qualitative methods, interactive lectures, videos, hands-on exercises, and case studies, we will share key analytical frameworks and tools that are essential to a good marketing strategy. The aim is to develop an analytical tool-kit that will be applicable to a wide range of industries and functions.

Teaching: Scheduled over two modules – one of which will take place overseas. Teaching will be spread across 10 sessions of up to 4 hours each.

Module 3 (1-13 April 2019) and module 4 (9-14 June 2019).

Formative coursework: Case write up.

Indicative reading: There is no required textbook. Further references will be provided at the commencement of the course.

Assessment: Take home exam (55%), class participation (15%) and other (30%).

The other assessment consists of a Summative Group Assignment (30%).

MG446 Half Unit

Strategy, Organisation and Innovation (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lourdes Sosa

(Three sessions will be taught by a guest teacher - Dr Mia de Kuijper)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

The information in this course guide pertains to the 2017-2019 cohort.

Course content: The course seeks to understand differences in profitability across (for-profit) firms with the objective of designing strategic recommendations for managers to improve (and defend) their firms' competitive positions. To do so we will first review industry-wide as well as firm-specific determinants of short-term profitability. On that foundation we will look at long-term determinants of profitability including dynamic capabilities and innovative ability. The course aims to balance exposure to general strategic principles and specific practical applications. To that purpose, we will use theoretical frameworks to analyse practical cases from a wide array of firms in varied countries.

Topics include business models, industry structure and competition, value proposition, strategic resources and inimitability, dynamic capabilities, disruptive innovation, power nodes strategy and scenario planning.

Teaching: Taught over 10 3.5-hour sessions spread over 2 modules. The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures, breakout discussion and exercises.

The course will run between the following dates:

03 – 08 September 2018

07 – 12 January 2019

Formative coursework: Feedback will be given on one short essay, preparing students for the exam, as well as on in-class exercises.

Indicative reading: The course relies on journal articles (for example, Strategic Management Journal). A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Sample texts include the following: Porter, M.E. (2008) The Five Competitive Forces that Shape Strategy (Harvard Business Review); Christensen, C., Bower J. (1996) Customer Power, Strategic Investment, and the Failure of Leading Firms (Strategic Management Journal); Teece, D., Pisano, G., Shuen, A. (1997) Dynamic Capabilities and Strategic Management (Strategic Management Journal); De Kuijper, M. (2009) Profit Power Economics.

Assessment: Essay (30%), class participation (10%) and take home exam (60%).

MG447 Half Unit

Foreign Direct Investment and Emerging Markets (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin

Dr Christine Cote

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option. The information in this course guide pertains to the 2017-2019 cohort.

Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused on developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The new institutional economics has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies performance. This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concept such as the resource based view. We will then provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economics and working with a large variety of datasets and sources. The remainder of the course is devoted to specific topics of MNEs in emerging markets. These include the determinants and impact of FDI; entry mode choices; measures of institutional distance; outsourcing; and emerging market multinationals.

Outline of Lectures: Lectures 1 and 2: Models and Strategies of the Multi-National Enterprise (MNE) Lectures 3 & 4: Growth and Institutions in Emerging Markets Lecture 5: Trade, Trade Agreements and Investor Protection Lecture 6: The Determinants of Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) into Emerging Markets Lecture 7: The Impact of FDI on Emerging Markets Lecture 8: MNEs and Modes of Entry Lecture 9: Emerging Market Multinationals Lecture 10: FDI choices and firm strategies- case presentations

Teaching: Scheduled over three modules, one of which will take place overseas – 10 sessions of up to 3.5 hours.

The course will run between the following dates:

03 – 08 September 2018

04 – 10 November 2018

07 – 12 January 2019

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. Ghemawat, Redefining Global Strategy, Harvard Business School Press, 2007; J. Williamson, The New Institutional Economics, Journal of Economic Literature, 2000; Estrin et. al., Entry Mode in Emerging Markets, Strategic Management Journal, 2009; T. Khanna and K. Palepu, The Future of Business Groups in Emerging Markets, Academy of Management Journal 2004.

Assessment: Take home exam (60%) in the LT.

Presentation (30%) in the MT.

Class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.

MG498 Half Unit

Dissertation/Capstone Project (modular)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Various

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course consists of a project which will be undertaken throughout the second year of the degree. Students will choose between an academic dissertation or a capstone project. The academic dissertation will explore a question that is grounded in academic theory and literature. The capstone project will explore a business idea or venture. In both projects, students will collect original data relevant to their research question or business idea and must analyse the data, discuss limitations, and draw conclusions.

Teaching: Students are required to participate in 20 hours of scheduled seminar sessions from module 3 onwards which will provide guidance and support in developing their dissertation or capstone project. Separate seminars will be conducted to provide support for those who choose the academic dissertation and those who choose the capstone project. Students will be allocated a faculty advisor who will support and guide them. The course will run throughout the year.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to agree their dissertation/capstone topic with a faculty advisor and provide a plan which they will receive feedback on.

Indicative reading: Relevant reading will be provided by academic advisors.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words).

MG4H1E Half Unit Foundations of Social Business I

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Stephan Chambers Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course focuses on three critical aspects of social business: entrepreneurship; social finance; accounting for social return. It focuses on both existing organisations and start-ups, as vehicles for social change. It aims to support 'intrapreneurs' as well as entrepreneurs. Its purpose is to bring students' understanding of the worlds of opportunity and venture into clear organisational focus. It begins to sensitise students to the challenges of starting and running mission-based organisations, explores established vehicles for combining social and commercial purpose, and looks in detail at the various mechanisms for funding (impact finance, social finance, grant finance). Students will be introduced to the main elements of entrepreneurial planning including opportunity identification and evaluation, rapid prototyping and resource-gathering. They will be introduced to the business model canvas and ideas of lean start-up as well as the varieties of financing available to social ventures. They will examine ways of accounting for social value as the second and third bottom-line, and a view of managerial reporting as value-laden. Critiques of over-simplified, heroic or 'solutionist' models will be explored, as well as to both market and non-market critiques of social returns on investment.

The course draws on the literature of entrepreneurship, social entrepreneurship, social finance and social accounting.

Teaching: There will be ten integrated lecture/seminars of three hours each, delivered across two modules.

Formative coursework: A practice case analysis task midway through the course; submission of an outline plan for the group presentation summative task.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Take home exam (70%) and presentation (30%). Assessment will be through a take home exam (70%) and a group presentation (30%).

MG4H2E Half Unit Foundations of Social Business II

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Stephan Chambers Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The social business, as any other firm, has to understand its environment and undertake consequent activities to enable sustainability and effectiveness; this challenge is complicated by the requirement to achieve not only profit or financial sustainability, but also environmental sustainability and mission-driven social impact. Foundations of Social Business I is intended to provide students with the foundations of strategy and marketing for social businesses. It seeks to introduce students to the commercial opportunities that have intentional, long-term social value and to help students develop mechanisms for defining and communicating with key stakeholders beyond the usual marketing concentration on customers.

The course focuses on the opportunities for and external constraints on social business. Its purpose is to introduce students to the environment of both opportunity and threat in which pro-social business exists. It examines strategy development where the imperative is not market-capture but the reversal of market-failure. It combines overviews of strategy-making with an explicit focus on market-failure as opportunity and on marketing as scaling a theory of change.

Social businesses research, identify, and exploit opportunities just as firms do. Students will be introduced to the main techniques for planning and implementing activities to take advantage of those opportunities, including situation analysis, sources of advantage, competencies, and the resource-based view of the firm. They will be able to explain where corporate parallels apply and where they break down. They will be introduced to hybrid models (social enterprises, B-corporations) and use these emerging corporate forms to test assumptions about creating social and financial value – together with the trade-offs implicit in the models. The course draws on the literature of strategy and marketing.

Teaching: Ten integrated lectures / seminars of three hours each, delivered across two modules (teaching blocks)

Formative coursework: A practice case analysis halfway through the course; submission of an outline draft plan for the group presentation summative task.

Social Impact and Its Evaluation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Julian Le Grand Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields and Dr Jonathan Roberts Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Those who want to improve society face three immediate dilemmas – first, what is the public benefit? How can I define, with clarity, my moral purpose? Second, how can I decide between different courses of action in order to pursue the public benefit? And third, how can I know that what I do makes any real contribution to the public benefit? What is the evidence? This innovative course sets out to support students in coming to their own resolutions of these dilemmas. Its goal is to introduce the concepts and techniques of impact measurement from the perspective of – and through specific examples of interest to – organisational leaders and policymakers and those who intend to commission social business and social enterprise interventions. A first section challenges students to consider and discuss the nature of the public benefit. It introduces students to different philosophical conceptions of the good, including libertarianism, utilitarianism, Rawls' theory of justice and Sen's capabilities approach. It will also discuss whose conception of the good is the more important: the actor or agent, the beneficiary, the government or the wider society.

Our choices of outcomes and impact measures are in turn not neutral, but are infused with moral choices about the definition of the public good. The second (and larger section) of the course introduces students to key concepts and skills in developing and assessing evidence of social impact. It introduces students to a framework that will enable them to be intelligent commissioners of interventions for the public good and critical assessors of evidence and published research. Concepts to which students will be introduced include the distinction between correlation and causation, the counterfactual, opportunity costs, trade-offs, spill overs and substitution effects. Students will be introduced to techniques through which the effectiveness of social interventions can be evaluated, including randomised experiments, quantitative evaluation of non-experimental data, cost-benefit and cost-effectiveness analyses and realistic evaluation approaches; the strengths and weaknesses of these methods are considered. It will also consider the politics of impact measurement.

Teaching: Ten sessions of three hours each, delivered across one module (teaching block) of two weeks.

Formative coursework: Two formative assessments will be provided – a data analysis exercise and a short essay (1,000 words).

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Take home exam (50%) and case analysis (50%). Assessment will comprise data analysis exercises (50%) and a take home exam (50%).

MG4H4E

The Altruistic Entrepreneur Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Stephan Chambers The Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course crystallises the academic learnings from across the degree programme into an applied experience. It runs concurrently with course delivery across all modules. Students will work in groups of four or five, supported by faculty, to develop an entrepreneurial business proposal for social impact, moving through idea generation, initial design and formal proposal. The proposal may be a new organisation or an activity within an existing organisation with explicit social benefit.

The project creates a space for real world application of students' learning; development of the project concurrently with programme delivery enables substantive interaction between project work and core skills learning. The course mirrors the development of the programme overall by requiring students to address questions of context (and relation to state and private actors), questions of strategy and market development, financing, and reporting as well as personal leadership, communications and persuasion. Projects are designed in the expectation of potential real world implementation.

Working in a group is an essential component of this course. Students will be expected to reflect on how their groups form, how they establish principles for working effectively, and how they resolve conflict or disagreement. They will be asked to reflect on their own group dynamic and how it might be a function of culture, mission, and measurement. Students will be asked explicitly to reflect in their essays on the process of selecting a topic and assigning roles. Since so much of their professional life will involve impromptu and non-elective group working we consider this aspect of the course particularly important.

Teaching: Teaching will take place over the duration of the programme. There will be six whole cohort sessions of three hours, plus four tutorial meetings for each project group (one per teaching block).

Formative coursework: Formative work, through presentations and short pieces of written work, will be continual for the duration of the programme. Students will be asked to submit a draft outline of their final summative essay.

Assessment: Essay (50%), presentation (35%) and proposal (15%). Assessment will be through a group presentation (35%), group composition of a business model canvas (15%), and an extended essay of 5,000 words at the end of the project (50%).

MG4H5E Half Unit

The Altruistic Leader

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Connson Locke NAB 4.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course focuses on leadership, particularly within the context of a social business. The course draws heavily from research in organisational behaviour, psychology, and sociology in order to examine the knowledge, skills and analytical capabilities needed to exercise leadership and influence. It attempts to strike a balance between theory and practice by providing a solid grounding in theory and research which students must apply to real life scenarios.

The course examines topics such as: power and influence; organisational justice; motivation and rewards; leadership styles; cross-cultural management; organisational culture and change.

Teaching: Ten sessions of three hours each, delivered over two modules (teaching blocks).

Formative coursework: Students will be given a practice case analysis to prepare them for the summative case analysis. For the group project, groups will submit their choice of presentation topic in order to receive formative feedback.

Assessment: Case analysis (55%), presentation (30%) and in class assessment (15%).

Assessment will be done through a 1,500 word case analysis (55%), group presentation (30%) and in-class quizzes (15%).

MG4H6E Half Unit The Hybrid Economy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Julian Le Grand Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields and Dr Jonathan Roberts Marshall Institute, 5 Lincoln's Inn Fields

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Social Business and Entrepreneurship. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Following the failure of both states and markets to resolve persistent social problems, a hybrid economy is emerging in which new organisational forms and new multi-actor collaborations blend outcomes, behaviours and structures drawn from different sectors with the aim of achieving both social and financial returns. Examples of organisations and activities in this emerging economy include corporate firms that internalise social purpose, business-oriented philanthropists, private organisations that spin out of the state sector (public service mutuals), social impact investment, and complex collaborative financial instruments such as social impact bonds.

This course explores the economics and politics of this emerging phenomenon. It provides students with knowledge of the newly developing institutions, organisations and mechanisms, and with the critical and analytic skills through which to evaluate them. It assesses the historic and contemporary failures by the state, market and voluntary sector in developed and developing economies; and it considers the competitive advantage and disadvantage of the hybrid social business as a remedy for these failures. The course focuses specifically on motivation and incentive theory, exploring how we can design organisations and wider institutions that both nurture and capitalise upon altruism, but that also acknowledge more self-directed motivations. The course explores the scope and nature of the political relationship between hybrid organisations and the state, exploring whether the function of the social business is best conceived as a complement to state services, a replacement for state services in conditions of austerity and exponentially growing demand, or separately as an innovative laboratory for social interventions. It concludes by exploring ethical criticisms of the hybrid economy, focusing in particular on controversies about the introduction (or intrusion) of the market and business into the social or public realm.

Teaching: Ten integrated lecture/seminars of three hours each, delivered across two modules (teaching blocks).

Formative coursework: Two formative assessment exercises will be offered: first, a practice take home exam; second, submission of a draft plan for the group presentation summative task.

PB413E Half Unit Frontiers in Behavioural Science Methods

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi

Dr Dario Krpan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Behavioural science is the scientific study of human behaviour, and it combines research techniques from psychology and economics. The course offers an integrated training in advanced behavioural science methods by introducing students to state-of-the-art techniques that stretch across the spectrum of both disciplines. The course covers the following topics: measuring preferences, attitudes, beliefs, willingness-to-pay; determining evidential value of behavioural science research; behavioural game theory and experimental games of strategic interaction; designing behavioural priming experiments and measures that tap into implicit cognition; state-of-the-art physiological research techniques; understanding the mechanisms behind behavioural effects by employing experimental-causal-chain, measurement-of-mediation, and moderation-of-process designs.

Teaching: 2 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 2 hours of lectures, 6 hours of lectures, 6 hours of lectures, 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course is delivered over 5 intensive days of teaching:

Day 1

- Lecture 1 (2h 30min): Intro; Advances in Experimental Design; Mechanisms, Moderators, Mediators; Mediation and Moderation in a Regression Framework; Understanding the Mechanisms Behind Behaviour Change: Experimental-causal Chain, Moderation-of-process, and Measurement-of-Mediation Designs [MG, DK].
- Lecture 2 (2h): Measuring Preferences, Attitudes, Beliefs: the State-of-the-art [MG]

Day 2

- Lecture 3 (1h 30min): Strategic Decision-Making: Introduction to Behavioural Game Theory [MG]
- Lecture 4 (1h 15min): Behavioural Game Theory: Applications [MG]
- Seminars (2h, 2 groups): Moderation and Mediation Using Stata [MG, DK]

Day 3

- Lecture 5 (1h 30min): Behavioural Priming Techniques [DK]
- Lecture 6 (1h 15min): System 1 In Action: Capturing Implicit Cognition: [DK]
- Seminars (2h, 2 groups): Building a Simple Game of Strategic Interaction Using ZTree [MG]

Day 4

- Lecture 7 (1h 30min): Determining evidential value of behavioural science research: undisclosed flexibility in data collection, dance of p-values, p-curve [DK]
- Lecture 8 (1h 15min): Determining evidential value of behavioural science research: computing p-curve, p-curve vs. meta-analysis [DK]
- Seminars (2h, 2 groups): Building a Simple Task to Measure Implicit Cognition [DK]

Day 5

- Lecture 9 (1h 30min): Advances in Survey Design for Online, Lab, and Field Experiments [MG]
- Lecture 10 (1h 15min): Beyond Economics and Psychology: State-of-the-art Physiological Research Techniques [MG, DK]
- Seminars (1h 30min, 2 groups): Building a Simple Behavioural Science Experiment Using Qualtrics Survey Software [MG, DK]

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST.

For the formative assignment, you will need to produce a brief research proposal plan (500 words) that will serve as the basis for the full research proposal (3000 words) that will constitute your summative assignment. In the research proposal plan, you will propose a design and implementation of a behavioural science experiment entailing the use of (at least) two different software packages introduced in the seminars. The structure of the proposal plan should be as follows: a) Introduce a viable research question (on a topic of your choice) that will guide your experimentation; b) Describe how you would design and implement behavioural science research to answer the question; and c) Explain which statistical approaches covered in lectures and seminars you would use to analyse the data. To write the research proposal plan, please follow the lines of a pre-analysis plan (PAP) which is increasingly common in behavioural science (for an example, see www.psychologicalscience.org/publications/psychological_science/preregistration). Feedback received for the formative assignment will help you to prepare the summative assignment by identifying both strengths and weaknesses of your approach.

Assessment: Proposal (100%) in the ST.

For the summative assignment, you will be required to expand the research proposal plan submitted as part of the formative assignment into a full research proposal comprising 3000 words. Your task will be to propose a design and implementation of a behavioural science experiment entailing the use of (at least) two different software packages introduced in the seminars. The structure of the proposal should be as follows: a) Introduce a viable research question (on a topic of your choice) that will guide your experimentation; b) Describe how you would design and implement behavioural science research to answer the question; and c) Explain which statistical approaches covered in lectures and seminars you would use to analyse the data. To write the research proposal, please follow the lines of a pre-analysis plan (PAP) which is increasingly common in behavioural science (for an example, see www.psychologicalscience.org/publications/psychological_science/preregistration). In the proposal, we will expect you to use in-text scholarly citations and provide a reference list at the end. The summative assignment should allow you to not only demonstrate your knowledge regarding the present course, but also to gain deeper insights into experimental analysis and design that should help you in producing a high-quality dissertation.

PB434E Half UnitBehavioural Science in an Age of New Technology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dario Krpan

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: When psychology and economics got "married", the product was behavioural science. Although this discipline has elevated theoretical and practical understanding of human behaviour to previously unseen heights, recent technological developments have produced new insights in understanding and predicting people's actions that not only supplement traditional tools of behavioural science but also go beyond them. The future of the discipline will therefore likely depend on how effectively behavioural scientists can harness new developments in technology to understand and change the way people act. The aim of this course is to a) Introduce major technological advancements that are relevant for predicting, influencing, and understanding human behaviour; b) outline how they supplement and extend commonly used tools of behavioural change; and c) examine how they can be used to propel behavioural science into the future. The course will tackle behavioural science in relation to motion tracking, virtual environments, social robotics, social networks, and other relevant developments in information technology. Emphasis will be placed on how the technological tools covered throughout the course can be used to change behaviour in applied settings, and students will be encouraged to discuss implications for their organisations and other areas of interest.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures, 2 hours and 30 minutes of lectures, 2 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

Lecture 1 (2.5h): Course introduction. Understanding minds by reading bodies: Implications of motion tracking for behavioural science 1

Seminar 4 (2h)

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the ST.

Formative coursework will serve as your preparation for the summative assignment. You will need to create a 5 minute presentation on the topic of the summative assignment: Propose an intervention that relies on technological tools that were either covered throughout the course or that you identified through personal search to create behavioural change in an applied setting of your choice (e.g. your organisation, personal life; you can select any setting you desire). In the presentation, you will need to a) Introduce the behaviour you want to tackle and argue why changing this behaviour would be important; b) Present your intervention that uses technological tools to change the behaviour and c) argue why this intervention would be effective based on your knowledge of behavioural science gained through the class material and personal literature search.

Similar to the summative assignment, the presentation will be delivered in a video format: you will be given a clear step-by-step guide describing how to produce the presentation in a video format (we will go through this guide during a seminar to make sure it is clear to everyone how the summative assignment should be produced). The main aim of the formative assignment is for me to evaluate your approach to tackling points a), b), and c) mentioned above so I can give you relevant feedback that will help you when preparing the summative presentation, and also for you to get comfortable with producing the video presentation.

Assessment: Presentation (100%) post-summer term.

The aim of the summative assessment will be to propose an intervention that relies on technological tools that were either covered throughout the course or that you identified through personal search to produce behavioural change in an applied setting of your choice (e.g. your organisation, personal life; you can select any setting you desire). This intervention will be conveyed in the form of a 15-20 minute presentation that will count as your summative assignment. More precisely, in the presentation, you will need to a) Introduce the behaviour you want to tackle and argue why changing this behaviour would be important; b) Present your intervention that uses technological tools to change the behaviour and c) argue why this intervention would be effective based on your knowledge of behavioural science gained through the class material and personal literature search.

The presentation will be delivered in a video format: you will be given a clear step-by-step guide describing how to produce the presentation in a video format (we will go through this guide during a seminar to make sure it is clear to everyone how the summative assignment should be produced). Together with the video presentation, you will need to submit an annotated bibliography that contains a) a list of scientific references you used for the presentation; and b) a short text below each reference (1-2 sentences) describing why exactly the reference is important in the context of your presentation. The main purposes of the annotated bibliography will be to demonstrate the academic background upon which your presentation was built.

Dissertation in Behavioural Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi QUE.3.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of behavioural science. The dissertation can consist of: an empirical analysis of existing data; a collection and analysis of new data; a randomised controlled experiment (lab, field, online); a systematic review of the literature. Students must obtain the approval of their supervisor before embarking on any research.

Teaching: 3 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST.

Indicative reading: Relevant reading will be provided by supervisors.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the MT.

Pre-requisites: No prerequisites

Course content: The course aims to introduce to students the main principles, methods, measures, and insights of behavioural sciences, and the key state-of-the-art applications to health economics, policy, practice, and management. The course is designed to enhance students' abilities to apply rigorously and critically behavioural science tools to concrete challenges in the health and healthcare area. It covers principles of behavioural science; heterogeneity and behavioural economics; behavioural health economics and policy; methods of behavioural science; behavioural experiments in health (field, lab, lab-field, online, mobile); behavioural data linking; measures of behavioural science; risk preferences and health; time preferences and health; social preferences and health; behavioural insights for information policies in health; financial and non-financial incentives in health; behaviourally supercharged incentives in health; nudging behavioural change in health; behavioural spillovers in health; behavioural insights for regulation and taxation in health, healthcare, and risky health behaviours; behavioural insights for healthy behaviours (diet and nutrition, physical exercise, alcohol abuse, tobacco and drug use, medication, screening, infectious diseases, vaccination); behavioural insights for blood and organ donations; behavioural insights for health practice, management, and policy challenges.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Corporate Behaviour and Decision Making

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Grace Lordan OLD M 2.26

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Lecture 1: Introduction

This lecture will give an overview of rational decision making from an economics perspective. Rationality should already be familiar to the students (from compulsory PS468E and MG406E), so they will simply be revisiting this. Attention will also be paid to how students can identify credible empirical evidence from experiments (brief recap what was done in PS469E) and beyond (cover natural experiments). We will also recap on the interpretation, advantages and disadvantages of observational studies.

Lecture 2: Finding a Job

This lecture will cover the unconscious biases that are encountered by corporate firms in:

- 1) Job Search
- 2) Job Advertising
- 3) Interview panels

Seminar 1: Lecture 2 will be complemented with a linked seminar which focuses on how these biases in job search and hiring affect success by gender in the labour market and in top tier jobs. Particular attention will be paid to increasing diversity on interview boards.

Lecture 3: Day to Day Work

We will discuss biases in allocated bonuses, promotions, deciding who is viewed as 'great' and the allocations of prestigious projects in corporate firms. We will also cover biases in how different types of people are 'heard' and 'seen' in business, and biases in what a 'successful' person looks like. We will brainstorm, with the help of received literature in behavioural economics, viable interventions to combat blind spots in promotions and bonus allocations in the corporate setting.

Seminar 2: Lecture 3 will be complemented with a linked seminar where particular attention will be paid to empirical evidence that relates to:

- 1) In-group/out groups at work
- 2) Herding and the implications for decisions in business.
- 3) Social norms

Lecture 4: When at Work: Trading and Investment

This behavioral finance lecture will cover psychological biases in trade and high stake investment decisions in finance. It will cover the efficient markets hypothesis and outline the behavioral biases in finance that will likely disrupt its predictions. We will also cover how these biases impact on forward futures and options markets, leverage cycles and corporate stocks.

Seminar 3: So far, we have focused on cognitive biases, this lecture will have a linked seminar that will cover the potential for biology to disrupt rational decision making within financial firms when making investment choices.

Lecture 5: When at Work: Complying with the Rules

We will begin by discussing the decision to comply to a firm's policies and procedures within a cost benefit framework. In practice, compliance depends on a number of factors, including employee behavior which is subject to biases already covered. This lecture will cover the insights from behavioral science, which can be used to encourage compliance in the face of these biases.

Seminar 4: Lecture 5 will have a linked seminar which considers high profile compliance issues in finance.

Seminar 5: Wrap up – bringing together of all the messages learned in the course. Student presentations based on group work on 'what was learned' each day.

Teaching: 12 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

Case study with short questions that matches the style of the summative assessment

Policy Appraisal and Ethics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Dolan

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is one of two options.

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to the main concepts and tools of policy appraisal and yield insight into key moral and political values that are essential for policy-makers when they draw on behavioural science. The course covers the following topics: 1) Architecture of Cost-benefit analysis for market and non-market goods; 2) Elicitation of monetary values through revealed and stated preference methods, and adjustments for time discounting, risk and uncertainty; 3) Welfare analysis of policy interventions: efficiency, equity and asymmetric paternalism; 4) Evaluating welfare beyond monetary choices: the subjective well-being approach to valuation; 5) Moral problems associated with libertarian paternalism or Nudge, and how this approach compares to other policy mechanisms, such as regulation, taxation and subsidies, and social advertisement. The course offers practical examples and applications to key policy sectors, such as health and the environment.

Teaching: 17 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

PB457E Half Unit

Organisational Culture

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Reader

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: No prerequisites.

Course content: The course aims to introduce to students the concept of Organisational Culture, its relationship with behaviour in institutional settings, and methodologies for utilising this knowledge to elicit behavioural change. The course will draw on a mixture of seminal research, state-of-the-art literature, and research being conducted at the LSE. Course content will include the following:

Part 1: Organisational culture: what is it, and why does it matter? In this first phase of the course, the concept of organisational culture will be introduced. Student will be made familiar with key models on organisational culture (e.g. Schein, Hofstede, Cameron & Quinn), the distinction between organisational culture and climate, and academic literature investigating the cultural properties of organisations that lead them to be more competitive, safer, and nicer places to work. Students will be asked to reflect on the culture of their own organisation (or another that is relevant to them), and to consider where it 'fits' within the academic models being presented.

Part 2: What comes first: culture or behaviour? Here, the course will examine more precisely how organisational culture influences behaviour. In particular, we will examine how 'cultures' of decision-making, risk-taking, ethical practices, and citizenship activities emerge within organisations. Furthermore, we will examine how these behaviours in turn feed and shape the culture of an organisation. Material from the course leader's work (in aviation, heavy industries, and finance) will be used to explore this. Students will be asked to consider how their own decision-making behaviour, and the behaviour of others, is shaped by organisational culture in their organisation.

Part 3: Measuring the intangible: assessing organisational culture. In this part of the course, we examine exactly how organisational culture can be measured. First, we will examine traditional methodologies of culture measurement: including interviews, observations, and surveys. We will explore what makes a 'good measure', how you interpret culture data, and the limitations of using observations from 'within' an organisation to measure culture. Second, we explore novel and cutting-edge forms of culture measurement. In particular, we will focus on research at the LSE exploring 'unobtrusive indicators of culture' (e.g. complaints, annual reports). The purpose is to reflect on the value of utilising external observations to measure culture (and the importance of this for an 'honest' picture). Students will be asked to design a culture measurement battery for their organisation.

Part 4: When cultures collide (and fragment). Leading from culture measurement, we examine some of the nuances around organisational culture, and in particular its contested nature. Specifically, we will draw on research examining what happens to 'culture' when two organisations merge together, when managers and employees strongly disagree in their view of culture (and what should be prioritised), and when a multi-national cooperation attempts to create a 'standardised' culture in societies that are very different. We will explore how you find common ground, and the 'right' culture. Students will be asked to consider examples of culture conflict (or fragmentation), and to consider why this occurred, and how it might be ameliorated.

Part 5: Changing culture and behaviour. Finally, we will consider how culture, and through this behaviour, can be changed. Specifically, we will focus on the role of leadership, regulation and policy, and collaborative activity as a catalyst to culture change. Students will be asked to design a culture change strategy for their organisation.

Seminar 4

Day 5

Lecture 9: Leadership and organisational culture

Lecture 10: Policy and organisational culture

Seminar 5

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 brief essays in April.

Students will prepare for the summative assignment through a series of three formative tasks undertaken during seminars. Each formative task will comprise a brief 500-word essay on a pre-determined topic. Formative essay topics will be as follows: Essay 1) consider the relevance of organisational culture to your own (or a relevant) institution, Essay 2) design a culture measurement battery, and Essay 3) outline a culture change strategy. Students will work in groups of four to produce these outputs during seminar time, with each output being individual. Feedback on essay 1 will be verbal, summarising trends across the class. Feedback on essays 2 and 3 will be written, and particular to each essay.

Assessment: Case study (100%) in the ST.

The course will be assessed through a 3000-word case study produced individually by each student. Submission of the summative assessment will be at the end of the summer term. Students will be asked to i) identify a real-life institution where organisational culture is the 'ingredient' for success or failure, ii) explain - using the concepts taught on the course - why this is the case (with a particular focus on behaviour), and iii) devise a strategy for measuring (and improving) culture within that organisation.

Research Methods for Behavioural Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Galizzi QUE.3.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MSc in Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to introduce students to the main methodological concepts and tools in behavioural science. To achieve this objective, the course combines rigorous conceptual discussion with hands-on practical applications. The course covers: The beauty of experiments: how randomization solves the sample selection bias; randomized controlled experiments from the lab to the field: taxonomy, principles, best practices; online and lab-field experiments, Statistical tools: distributions and their moments, the inference problem; Experimental design: between-subjects design, block/stratified randomization, matched-pair design, within-subjects design, cluster randomization, the mechanics of randomization; Introduction to econometrics: simple and multiple linear regression models, econometric analysis of experimental data; Tests of hypothesis: principles and practices, parametric and non-parametric tests in practice; Sampling: optimal sample size calculation in practice, useful rules of thumbs; Experimental best practices and challenges: ethics, recruitment, informed consent form, attrition, non-compliance, external validity, behavioural data-linking; When randomization is not possible: before and after, matching, natural experiments, difference-in-difference, regression discontinuity design; Outcomes and behavioural measures in experiments, survey design. The seminars involve hands-on practical applications using Stata, R, and Qualtrics.

Teaching: 17 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the LT.

Students will be asked to submit a "portfolio" of hands-on practical tasks related to the main stages of a behavioural science project option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The policy workshop applies the analytical tools that are taught in the week-long modules of the Executive MPA to specific policy areas. Teaching is based on a series of case studies. The case studies are taught by specialists in a particular policy area and are complemented with group working sessions by the students and presentations by policy practitioners involved in the policy area.

Teaching: A three-day modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One optional mock policy exercise will be provided.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to each policy area will be distributed at the beginning of the course

Assessment: Essay (100%, 2000 words).

Assessment will consist of a 2,000 word reflective essay due 10 days after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

PP410E Half Unit

Public Economics for Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Camille Landais

Dr Daniel Reck

Dr Xavier Jaravel

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but the course is only available by prior agreement with Executive MPA and Executive MPP Programme Directors if students haven't completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (E455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (EC440E) prior to this course

Course content: This is a course in theoretical and applied public economics using intermediate economic theory. Topics include issues of equity and efficiency and alternative theories of the role of the state. Models of public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. Who really pays taxes: issues of tax incidence and tax evasion. Income inequality, poverty alleviation and the role of welfare programmes in theory and in practice. Health and education policy. The effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply and migration; The optimal taxation of commodities and incomes. Current topics in public finance. The main institutional references will be to the UK and the US, but some attention will also be given to broader international experience.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be offered.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed prior to the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise. Data analysis exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPP/ Executive MPA programme inductions.

PP409E Half Unit

Public Policy in Practice Workshop III (EMPA)

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Joachim Wehner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside

PP421E Half Unit

Global Market Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Andrew Bernard

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but the course is only available by prior agreement with the Executive MPA and Executive MPP Programme Directors if students haven't completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (PP455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (PP440E).

Course content: This course focuses on the economic interdependence between countries in a global economy. The first part of the course examines the structure and geography of world trade and examines popular hypothesis such as the "global village" or "flat earth". The second part of the course analyses macroeconomic issues such as the magnitude and effects of international capital flows, the debate over fixed versus flexible exchange rates and the economics of a common currency

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP440E Half Unit Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ethan Ilzetzki and Dr Sandra Sequeira

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The course is an introductory graduate course providing an economics background suitable for high-level public policy-making. The emphasis is on acquiring sound models and methods suitable for appraising policy-making issues and applicable in a wide variety of contexts. The course will cover both key microeconomic policy issues, such as externalities, public goods and principal-agent problems and macroeconomic issues such as unemployment, fiscal and monetary policies, international trade and finance and the determinants of long-run growth.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise. Data analysis exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP454E Half Unit Development Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Burgess LRB.R524 and Prof Oriana Bandiera LRB.R526

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but the course is only available by prior agreement with the Executive MPA and Executive MPP Programme Directors if students haven't completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (PP455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (PP440E) prior to this course.

Course content: The main focus of this course is on acquiring the necessary theoretical and empirical skills to engage in the rigorous analysis of public policies in developing countries. Topics at the forefront of development economics will be covered. These include growth and poverty, governance and accountability, motivation of bureaucrats, firms and markets, determinants of productivity, jobs and labour markets, shocks and insurance, infrastructure, connectivity, education and health, trade and globalization, the value of exporting, delivering public services, incentivising teachers and health workers, environment and climate change, management of natural resources, taxation and state capacity. The emphasis will be on combining theory and data to evaluate the effectiveness of policies in these different areas.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be distributed at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP455E Half Unit Empirical Methods for Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Gregory Fischer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but recommended advance readings will be distributed ahead of the course. Familiarity with the material covered in the EMPA/ EMPP Mathematics and Statistics Refresher module is assumed.

Course content: The course introduces students to the quantitative evaluation of public policies. The focus of the course is on practical applications of techniques to test the effectiveness of public policy interventions. The course begins with an overview over the key benefits of randomized experiments in the evaluation of public policies. Next the course covers a number of techniques that are widely used in the evaluation of public policies, including difference-in-differences regressions, regression discontinuity approaches and matching. It concludes with an introduction to cost-benefit analysis.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP478E Half Unit

Political Science and Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Hix CON3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites, but recommended advance reading is given below.

Course content: This course introduces students to core concepts and problems in politics and policymaking. Among the questions we address: What determines political preferences and electoral outcomes? How are interests represented? How do political institutions shape policy outcomes? We focus on tools that students should be able to apply broadly in analyzing the political world.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: Analyzing Politics: Rationality, Behavior and Institutions by Kenneth Shepsle (W.W. Norton, 2nd edition, 2010) is an excellent starting point and reference for many topics. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after the module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP488E Half Unit

Regulatory Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Lodge CON3.08

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites, but recommended advance reading is given below.

Course content: The course examines contemporary issues in regulation in OECD countries and elsewhere. The focus is on exploring competing approaches towards regulation in the context of different domains, ranging from utility, environmental to health and safety regulation. Particular attention will be paid to issues such as institutional design, enforcement and compliance, as well as the relationship between politicians, regulators, business and other actors. Topics include institutional design, development and regulation, standard-setting, enforcement, 'better regulation', and accountability.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: Managing Regulation by Martin Lodge and Kai Wegrich (Palgrave, 2012) introduces key themes. A different introduction is Understanding Regulation by Robert Baldwin, Martin Cave and Martin Lodge (Oxford University Press, second edition, 2012)

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

A 2,000 word assessed essay (50%) and an online assessment (50%). Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the EMPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP4B3E Half Unit

Executive MPP Capstone Project

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner and Dr Daniel Sturm

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 5 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by the Civil Service. The group will have a period of approximately 3 months to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during the project duration.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to project work will be distributed at the beginning of the course. Useful preliminary reading includes: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Office for Government Commerce Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Strategy Survival Guide (London: Prime Minister's Strategy Unit, July 2004); C. R. Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems, chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words).

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances.

- 1) Presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation.
- 2) Group project report. The main body of the report may not exceed 10,000 words and will be read by academic markers whose assessment will count for 60% of the final grade. Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution to the group's work, to be submitted alongside the report. The reflection should be no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project. The reflections should not be included in the report submitted to the client.
- 3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

Fiscal Governance and Budgeting

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner

Dr Paolo de Renzio

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites, but recommended advance reading is given below.

Course content: The course examines contemporary issues in fiscal governance and public budgeting in OECD countries and elsewhere. The focus is on executive and legislative actors and the institutional structures within which they make budgetary choices. Following an introduction to theoretical approaches to the study of budgeting, topics include medium-term frameworks, top-down budgeting, fiscal rules and fiscal councils, performance budgeting, legislative budgeting, fiscal decentralisation, budget transparency, audit and accountability.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: Fiscal Governance in Europe by Mark Hallerberg, Rolf Strauch and Jürgen von Hagen (Cambridge University Press, 2009) introduces an important theoretical approach and is a good reference for several topics. The OECD Journal on Budgeting <http://www.oecd.org/gov/budget/journal> discusses current issues in applied budgeting. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online assessments take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA/ Executive MPP programme inductions.

PP4V8E Half Unit

Policy Paper

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Joachim Wehner
Participating students will be assigned an academic supervisor with relevant knowledge of the topic and supervision experience.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive Master of Public Administration and Executive Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites but the course is only available by prior agreement with the Executive MPA and Executive MPP Programme Directors.

Course content: The aim of the course is to enable students to plan, design and conduct independent analysis in an area of public policy. Executive MPA/ EMPP students will write an individually-authored policy paper of no more than 6,000 words on a topic developed in consultation with an Academic Adviser. The paper will analyse a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and propose an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. It must be addressed to a non-academic audience and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers. The main body of the paper should include methodology, results of the analysis, discussion of different policy options, conclusions and policy recommendations. The policy paper must be accompanied by an Executive Summary. Policy papers can utilise quantitative and/or qualitative data and draw on secondary and/or primary research.

Teaching: The student's Academic Adviser will provide advice and guidance on this piece of work as required during the duration of the assessment.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT, LT and ST.

A policy paper proposal (of no more than 750 words in total) consisting of the title, abstract, research question, justification for analysis, feasibility of the topic, an explanation of sources, structure and analytical framework must be submitted well in advance of the assessment deadline. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of the Academic Adviser/ Programme Directors. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.

Indicative reading: A suitable programme of reading will be developed in consultation with the Academic Adviser. Useful background readings may include: Eugene Bardach, A Practical Guide for Policy Analysis: The Eightfold Path to More Effective Problem Solving, 4th ed. (CQ Press, 2012); Catherine F. Smith, Writing Public Policy: A Practical Guide to Communicating in the Policy Making Process, 3rd ed. (Oxford University Press, 2012). Charles Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Usable Knowledge: Social Science and Social Problem Solving (Yale University Press, 1979).

Philip E. Tetlock, Expert Political Judgment: How Good Is It? How Can We Know? (Princeton University Press, 2006).

Assessment: Other (100%) in the MT, LT and ST.

Award of the MRes in Anthropology

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree. For students entering in or before 2016/17: Classification for students with mark profiles falling under Paragraphs 3.3.2 or 3.3.4 will always be determined to the advantage of the student. From 2017/18 students with mark profiles falling under Paragraphs 3.3.2 or 3.3.4 shall be classified as follows: Distinction/Merit borderline (scheme paragraph 3.3.2): 3.3.2 (c) marks of a Distinction grade in courses to the value of 2.5 units and a mark of a Merit grade in a course of 0.5 unit value will obtain an overall classification of a Distinction; 3.3.2 (d) marks of a Distinction grade in courses to the value of 2.0 units and marks of a Merit grade of at least 65 in courses to the value of 2.0 units; OR, marks of a Distinction grade in courses to the value of 2.0 units, marks of a Merit grade in courses to the value of 2.0 units, and an overall aggregate mark of at least 275 will obtain an overall classification of a Distinction. Merit/Pass borderline (scheme paragraph 3.3.4): 3.3.4 (h) marks of a Merit grade in courses to the value of 2.5 units will obtain an overall classification of a Merit;

3.3.4 (i) marks of a Distinction grade in courses to the value of 1.0 unit, marks of a Merit grade in courses to the value of 1.0 unit, and marks of a Pass grade of at least 55 to the value of 2.0 units will obtain an overall classification of Merit

The marks for AN471 and AN472 will count respectively as 25% of the total mark for the year. The research proposal, worth 50% of the total mark for the MRes year, will be examined (and the examination includes a viva). In order to be upgraded to PhD registration and allowed to commence fieldwork, students (a) must earn an average of 60 or more across all units; (b) must earn a minimum mark of 60 on the research proposal.

Progression to the PhD

If the above MRes requirements are met, students will be upgraded to PhD registration and will commence the fieldwork phase of the programme. The mandatory first year progress review of PhD students will be based on written reports about the early phase of fieldwork. The mandatory third year progress review for students in Anthropology is held in the third term (or, exceptionally, in the fourth term) after their return from fieldwork; this entails a viva with both supervisors and one external examiner.

Programme Structure - PhD

Programme code: RPAN2

In the programme regulations below Years 1 and 2 are listed as "fieldwork", with Years 3 and 4 being post-fieldwork, although in practice the timing/duration of these stages may vary to some extent between students.

MRes/PhD in Economics

A PhD in Economics consists of two years of coursework, followed by a thesis which is expected to take three years. The coursework requirement involves three PhD-level core courses in microeconomics, macroeconomics and econometrics, three field courses and a supervised research paper.

A place on the MSc Economics or the MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics will include a conditional offer of progression to the MRes/PhD in Economics, subject to the attainment of a Distinction grade in the MSc. Those who meet the progression requirement and decide to progress are registered as MRes students and undertake the same two-year MRes course requirement as with all other MRes/PhD students.

First Year MResIntroductory course

All students are required to attend the following introductory course in Year 1:

EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (0.0)

Students are required to take the following MRes core courses:

Paper 1 EC441 Microeconomics for MRes students (1.0)

Paper 2 EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes students (1.0)

Paper 3 EC443 Econometrics for MRes students (1.0) or

EC484 Econometric Analysis (1.0)^f*A

Students who have completed EC484 to the required standard as part of their MSc do not have to take the course again. To substitute for EC484, students will take one course from the following Field Selection List. The EC484 mark will be carried forward to count as the Paper 3 mark for progression to PhD registration. It will not count towards the award of the MRes degree:

Field Selection List

Second year or higher MRes

Students are required to take:

Paper 4 EC599 Research Paper in Economics (1.0) B

Papers 5 & 6 Courses to the value of 2.0 unit(s) from the following:

Field Selection List

Students are required to attend:

A. The following seminar where they must present their research:

EC501 Work in Progress Seminars (0.0)

B. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Field Selection List

EC518 Topics in Advanced Econometrics for Research Students (1.0)

First year PhD Programme

Students who have been upgraded to PhD are required to work on their research and write a PhD thesis. In addition they are required to take:

Paper 7 Courses to the value of 1.0 unit(s) from the following:

Field Selection List

Students are also required to attend:

A. The following seminar where they must present their research:

EC501 Work in Progress Seminars (0.0)

B. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Second and subsequent years PhD Programme

Students are required to attend:

A. The following seminar where they must present their research:

EC501 Work in Progress Seminars (0.0)

B. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Progression to Year 2 of MRes in Economics

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration, students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in Papers 1, 2 and 3. With the permission of the MRes Programme Director, students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to one resit paper (with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams, including resits and EC599 in Year 2).

Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Master's Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and in one of the Papers 5 or 6.

The marks for Papers 1 - 4 and the highest mark from Papers 5 or 6 will be used to determine the degree classification. A fail in one of these five classification papers (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper, or an aggregate mark of 220 in the non-failed papers. If compensated, a fail shall result in a drop in the overall award classification where a Distinction or Merit would otherwise have been awarded. It shall have no further impact where a Pass is to be awarded.

Progression to PhD registration For PhD registration students are required to achieve four marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes Papers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, with at least two of the 60% marks achieved in the MRes core Papers 1, 2, and 3.

Condoning marks: A mark between 55 - 59% in one of the Papers 1, 2 or 3 can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another from Papers 1, 2 or 3. A mark between 50 - 59% in one of the Papers 1, 2 or 3 can be condoned by a mark of +70% in the EC599 research paper.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. In exceptional circumstances, the Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper at the next available opportunity. Students can resit each paper only once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit.

A student can appeal against the Department's decision on progression to PhD according to the Appeals Regulations for Research Students <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/AppealsRegulationsForResearchStudents.pdf>.

Progression to Year 2 of PhD

In order to progress to the second year of PhD registration students are required to pass the PhD qualifying field (Paper 7) with a mark of 50% or higher.

Award of the PhD in Economics

Award of the PhD is contingent on progression requirements within the PhD and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

Special provisions for students who have completed an MSc degree within the Economics Department at LSE

Students who have completed EC484 to the required standard as part of their MSc do not have to take the course again. To substitute for EC484, students will take one course from the Field Selection List. The EC484 mark will be carried forward to count as the Paper 3 mark for progression to PhD registration. It will not count towards the award of the MRes degree.

With the approval of the Doctoral Programme Director, students who have completed an MSc degree within the Economics department at LSE will exceptionally be permitted to take their PhD qualifying field course (Paper 5) in the first year of the MRes and might take Paper 7 in their second year.

For students who have taken Paper 7 in their second year the progression and award regulations are adjusted as follows:

MRes award - Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and at least one mark of 50% in Papers 5-7. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration - For PhD registration students are required to achieve four marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes Papers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, with at least two of the 60% marks achieved in the MRes core Papers 1, 2, and 3.

Progression to PhD to Year 2 of PhD - In order to progress to the second year of PhD students are required to pass all the PhD qualifying field (Papers 5-7) with a mark of 50% or higher.

MRes/PhD in Finance

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Year 1

Introductory course

Students are required to attend the following before commencing the MRes/PhD programme:

EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (0.0)

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

- Paper 1 EC441 Microeconomics for MRes students (1.0)
- Paper 2 EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes students (1.0)
- Paper 3 FM481 Financial Econometrics for Research Students (1.0)

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

- A. FM436 Financial Economics (1.0)
- B. Capital Markets Workshop

Optional (not examined):

- C. MY592 Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data (0.0)
- D. Any relevant seminars in related areas.

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

- Paper 4 FM502 Corporate Finance for Research Students (1.0)
- Paper 5 FM503 Asset Pricing for Research Students (1.0)
- Paper 6 FM482 Research paper in Finance (1.0) A

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

- A. FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance (1.0) B
- B. Capital Markets Workshop

Optional (not examined):

- C. Any relevant seminars in related areas.

Footnotes

A : The FM482 Research Paper must be 6,000 - 8,000 words in length.

B : Presentation requirements: Students are required to do an FM505 seminar presentation in the second year.

Progression and upgrade requirements

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in papers 1, 2 and 3. Students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to two resit papers, only with the permission of the MRes Programme Director, with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams in year 2, which must be the two resits, either paper 4 or 5, and paper 6.

Award of the MRes in Finance

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in 5 of full-unit papers, which must include Paper 6 (Research paper) and four papers from Papers 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 55% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve marks of 50% or higher in Papers 1, 2, and 3, marks of 60% or higher in papers 4 and 5 and a mark of 65% or higher in Paper 6.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Throughout the coursework portion of the MRes or MRes/PhD programme, students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. Students can resit each paper only once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit.

1. DV501 Development History, Theory and Policy for Research Students (0.5)
2. Methodology course choice to the value of one full unit (at the 400 and 500 level). Course choices must be approved by the supervisor and Doctoral Programme Director.
3. Methodology or Theory course choice to the value of 1.5 units (at the 400 and 500 level). Courses may be chosen from the list of optional courses below or an unlisted course. Course choices must be approved by the supervisor and Doctoral Programme Director.
4. DV510 Research Design and Proposal in International Development (1.0)
5. DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies (0.0)

Optional courses

6. The following course is a prerequisite for 400 and 500 level EC courses for students planning to make use of advanced quantitative methods in their PhD research:
EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (0.0)
7. The following courses are recommended options under Paper 3 above:
 - DV518 African Development (0.5)
 - DV520 Complex Emergencies (0.5)
 - DV528 Managing Humanitarianism (0.5)
 - DV531 Development Management (1.0)
 - DV545 Research Themes in International Development (0.5)
 - DV560 Bayesian Reasoning for Qualitative Social Science: A modern approach to case study inference (0.5)
 - DV590 Economic Development Policy I (0.5)
 - DV591 Economic Development Policy II (0.5)

Award of the MRes in International Development The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree.

Programme Structure - PhD

Programme code: RPDV2

Upgrade to PhD

Upgrade to PhD is dependent upon:

1. Pass of the MRes with an average of 65 in the coursework (except as noted above).
2. Pass of the Research Proposal with a mark equal or greater than 65.

The Research Proposal Committee will offer constructive advice and make one of four decisions:

- Unconditional approval
- Conditional approval
- Revise and resubmit
- Fail

Students who are required to Revise and Resubmit are usually expected the resubmit the proposal within three months. These students will progress to a temporary MPhil status, with the approval of the Chair of the Research Degrees Subcommittee, while they are revising their research proposal. Students who are successful will be upgraded to PhD.

The progress of each student will be reviewed at the end of each subsequent year.

MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources)

(This programme is not available in 2018/19)

For the MRes component of this programme (Years 1 and 2), students must take courses to the value of 5.0 units over two years, as shown below. Please refer to the Classification scheme160 <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf> which should be read in conjunction with these programme regulations. During the MRes, students are covered by the Regulations for taught master's degrees for students entering in or after the 2009/10 academic year <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf>. Continuation on to the PhD is dependent on meeting the progression requirements as stated below.

For the PhD component of this programme, in addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take seminars and workshops as shown below. When students progress on to the PhD part of the programme (Years 3-6) the academic regulations that apply to them change from the regulations for taught master's to the Regulations for research degrees <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForResearchDegrees.pdf>. A: FOR PROGRESSION FROM THE FIRST YEAR TO THE SECOND YEAR OF THE MRES IN MANAGEMENT (ORGANISATIONAL BEHAVIOUR)

Students must achieve marks of 65% in each first year core course in order to progress to year two of the MRes programme. Students who do not achieve this standard may progress to the second year having failed (but not a Bad Fail) or received a mark between 50-59, or 60-64 mark, in a maximum of half a unit of courses only as long as they obtain the permission of the MRes Programme Director. Where the student receives a fail mark (but not a Bad Fail mark) or a mark between 50-59, or 60-64 mark in a half unit in total, they will be required to resit this work at the end of the programme in order to progress on to the PhD unless they achieve the compensation conditions set out at 3.2.3 above.

Where a student has been awarded an MRes according to the classification scheme <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf> above but is required to resit an element of assessment in order to meet the PhD progression requirements the resit mark will not supersede the original attempt or result in an adjustment to the award.

A student who passes all courses but fails to achieve the required standard in more than half a core course unit cannot progress and fails the degree without the opportunity to resit. A student who receives fail marks (including Bad Fails) in more than half a unit cannot progress to year two until those fails have been resat and they then meet the progression requirements as set out above. A student may only resit an assessment on one occasion only.

B: FOR PROGRESSION FROM MRES TO PHD

The award and classification of the MRes shall be based on the 5 unit classification scheme <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf>. In order to progress on to the PhD registration students are required to achieve marks of 60% in all 5 course unit marks by the end of the programme.

1 failed unit (but not Bad Fails) or passed unit with marks in the range of 50-59, or a 60-64 mark can be compensated by achieving marks of at least 70% in courses of an equivalent value. Or, by achieving an aggregate mark of 260 in the non-failed courses. Students who fail to achieve marks of 60% or above and are unable to compensate these marks must resit these courses at the next available opportunity on one occasion only. Results obtained following a repeated attempt at assessment will not supersede the original attempt or result in an adjustment to the classification where a student has previously achieved a pass mark in that course or an award has already been made.

Students who progress to PhD registration can resit up to half a unit only in order to attempt to satisfy the progression requirements. They need to achieve a pass mark of 60 or above in this work to continue their PhD registration. Students failing to meet this standard will have their PhD registration discontinued. A student may only resit an assessment on one occasion only. See the Calendar lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/ for further information about Programme Regulations, Course Guides, School and Academic Regulations.

1 failed unit (but not Bad Fails) or passed unit with marks in the range of 50-59, or a 60-64 mark can be compensated by achieving marks of at least 70% in courses of an equivalent value. Or, by achieving an aggregate mark of 260 in the non-failed courses. Students who fail to achieve marks of 60% or above and are unable to compensate these marks must resit these courses at the next available opportunity on one occasion only. Results obtained following a repeated attempt at assessment will not supersede the original attempt or result in an adjustment to the classification where a student has previously achieved a pass mark in that course or an award has already been made.

Students who progress to PhD registration can resit up to half a unit only in order to attempt to satisfy the progression requirements. They need to achieve a pass mark of 60 or above in this work to continue their PhD registration. Students failing to meet this standard will have their PhD registration discontinued.

A student may only resit an assessment on one occasion only.

MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing)(This programme is not available in 2018/19)

For the MRes component of this programme (Years 1 and 2), students must take courses to the value of 5.0 units over two years, as shown below. Please refer to the Classification scheme <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/SchemeTaughtMasterFiveUnits.pdf> which should be read in conjunction with these programme regulations. During the MRes, students are covered by the Regulations for taught master's degrees for students entering in or after the 2009/10 academic year <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf>. Continuation on to the PhD is dependent on meeting the progression requirements as stated below.

For the PhD component of this programme, in addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take seminars and workshops as shown below. When students progress on to the PhD part of the programme (Years 3-6) the academic regulations that apply to them change from the regulations for taught master's to the Regulations for research degrees <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForResearchDegrees.pdf>. Students on the MRes or PhD programme must comply with the General Academic Regulations <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/GeneralAcademicRegulations.pdf>.

A: FOR PROGRESSION FROM THE FIRST YEAR TO THE SECOND YEAR OF THE MRES IN MANAGEMENT (MARKETING)

Students must achieve marks of 65% in each first year core course in order to progress to year two of the MRes programme. Students who do not achieve this standard may progress to the second year having failed (but not a Bad Fail) or received a mark between 50-59, or 60-64 mark, in a maximum of half a unit of courses only as long as they obtain the permission of the MRes Programme Director. Where the student receives a fail mark (but not a Bad Fail mark) or a mark between 50-59, or 60-64 mark in a half unit in total, they will be required to resit this work at the end of the programme in order to progress on to the PhD unless they achieve the compensation conditions set out at 3.2.3 above.

Where a student has been awarded an MRes according to the classification scheme <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf> above but is required to resit an element of assessment in order to meet the PhD progression requirements the resit mark will not supersede the original attempt or result in an adjustment to the award. A student who passes all courses but fails to achieve the required standard in more than half a core course unit cannot progress and fails the degree without the opportunity to resit. A student who receives fail marks (including Bad Fails) in more than half a unit cannot progress to year two until those fails have been resat and they then meet the progression requirements as set out above. A student may only resit an assessment on one occasion only.

B: FOR PROGRESSION FROM MRES TO PHD

The award and classification of the MRes shall be based on the 5 unit classification scheme <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/RegulationsForTaughtMasters-InOrAfter2009-10.pdf>. Award of the MRes

The award and classification of the MRes is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree

Conditions for progression to PhD

1. Award of the MRes with at least a Merit; AND 2. Award of GV599 with at least a Merit; AND 3. Successfully passing an oral hearing, consisting of a short presentation by the student and questions from the Research Prospectus Approval Committee.

The Research Prospectus Approval Committee will look for: a clear explanation of the research question(s) and motivation(s); an account of relevant related scholarly work; a discussion of methods, approaches, or challenges; and a plan to conduct the work within four years. The Department will publish more detailed guidance on assessment criteria.

The Research Prospectus Approval Committee normally consists of one supervisor or advisor of the student, at least one member of the Department's Doctoral Programme Committee, and an external assessor (usually the External Examiner for the MRes in Political Science). The Doctoral Programme Director chairs the Research Prospectus Approval Committee.

The Research Prospectus Approval Committee will make one of four decisions: Unconditional Approval, Conditional Approval, Revise and Resubmit, and Fail. Students with Conditional Approval have to submit a revised Research Prospectus to their Supervisor, normally within four weeks. The Doctoral Programme Director decides whether the conditions have been met, in consultation with the supervisor. Students who are required to Revise and Resubmit are usually expected to resubmit within three months. Resubmitted work is assessed by at least two members of the Research Prospectus Approval Committee. The Committee has discretion to conduct a second oral hearing if this is deemed necessary for the upgrade decision. If a second hearing is conducted, at least two members of the committee take part. Students who fail to pass, either at the first oral hearing or after Revise and Resubmit, will not be upgraded to PhD status.

In exceptional circumstances, the Research Prospectus Approval Committee can recommend to the Research Degrees Subcommittee to upgrade students who do not meet progression condition 1 (Award of MRes degree with at least a Merit). Such a recommendation must be based on very strong performance in certain subjects that offset weaknesses in others and an exceptionally strong Research Prospectus. Personal circumstances affecting assessment performance may also be taken into account.

Award of the PhD

The PhD is awarded according to the rules of LSE.

Award of the MRes Quantitative Economic History

The award and classification of the MSc degree is consistent with the School's scheme for the award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree. Student are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in Papers 1, 2, 3 and 4 and submit paper 5 (EH474 Research Prospectus, not examined half unit). Where a candidate receives a Fail mark in any course, the penalty rules are set out in <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/SchemeTaughtMasters.pdf> (see paragraph 3.2) apply. A Bad Fail (39% or lower) in any course of any unit value will result in an overall Fail for the degree.

Progression from the MRes Quantitative Economic History to the PhD

To progress from the MRes to the PhD programme, students need to achieve at least a Merit overall in the MRes and at least 65% in the (full unit) Research Paper in Quantitative Economic History (EH473). In addition, their Research Prospectus (EH474) needs to be approved by the departmental Prospectus Review Committee following a viva.

If a student fulfils all other progression requirements but his/her Research Prospectus does not meet the expectations set out in the EH474 course description, the Prospectus Review Committee will grant an extension of up to three months to submit a revised version. If this revised version fails the required standards, the candidate will not be admitted to the PhD programme.

The Department of Accounting offers an MPhil/PhD Accounting programme with two tracks. The aim is to ensure the highest quality in the development of research students, in their research skills and to support their progression to the completion and defence of high quality theses in their respective specialisms.

Track 1 is devoted to the study of interrelationships between accounting, organisations and institutions. Research in this track examines how accounting practices are much more than a collection of routine techniques, but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. Efforts to design internal and external accounting practices are both a function of specific economic and political interests, but are also shaped by social and political aspirations. Research in this track includes a wide variety of accounting topics examined through this lens using primarily qualitative methods, such as studies in management accounting, analyses of accounting systems in the private and public sector, transformations of auditing and risk regulation regimes, historical studies of accounting, as well as broader contributions to social theory.

Track 2 primarily examines accounting and financial reporting issues from an economics perspective. Research in this track covers a wide range of accounting topics including design and choices between alternative accounting methods, the use of accounting numbers for internal reporting, performance measurement, incentive systems, and in economic decision making, assessment of financial reporting quality, the economic consequences of financial reporting and performance measurement, and the interactions between financial reporting, legal and economic institutions, and corporate governance. While much research in these areas takes the form of empirical archival analysis, theoretical analysis and field research can also be relevant in some cases.

When making an application, MPhil/PhD students in Accounting will choose to follow either Track 1 or Track 2 as detailed below.

Track 1

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Footnotes

A : EC400 is an introductory course starting in September. All students are normally required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics, before commencing the Track 2 MPhil/PhD Programme in Accounting.
means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression and upgrade requirements for Tracks 1 and 2:

Progression requirements: The departmental MPhil/PhD Assessment Review Committee will reach a decision on progression for each student at the end of Years 1, 2 and 3, and progression from the introductory course (for students on Track 2). All MPhil/PhD Accounting students are normally required to achieve a mark of at least 65% in each of the 2.5 examined graduate-level course units required for progression on both tracks of the programme. The Committee may, in exceptional circumstances, condone a marginal fail if a student has demonstrated strength in other examined courses. Students failing an examined course can, at the discretion of the Committee, and taking into account overall performance, re-sit that course on one occasion only. The Committee may also decide to substitute an alternative assessment to redress any mark deficiencies and has the discretion to set additional requirements for progression where appropriate.
Students are required to make a seminar presentation in each year of their programme. These are formatively assessed. Performance at the seminar presentations will be taken into account by the MPhil/PhD Assessment Review Committee when reaching decisions on progression.

Upgrade: Students will initially be registered for the MPhil. Upgrade to PhD registration will normally happen at the end of Year Two. In order to progress to PhD registration, students must normally have met the progression requirements above (a mark of at least 65% in each of the required 2.5 examined graduate-level course units), and have made satisfactory progress in their research, which normally is understood to mean a solid draft of one complete chapter, plus a detailed outline for the rest of the dissertation with abstracts for each proposed chapter. Materials submitted for upgrade must include a clear framework for the research and a timetable for completion. Students will be provided with an opportunity to defend their submitted written materials orally. The departmental MPhil/PhD Assessment Review Committee will review the progress of each research student, and recommendations for upgrading to PhD will be made on a case-by-case basis.

Award of the PhD in Accounting: Award of the PhD is contingent on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

Teaching Experience

Students in Tracks 1 and 2 are required to gain teaching experience with appropriate training in years two and three, and they are encouraged to take presentation skills and other training offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme

Programme Code: RPCP

Department: Sociology

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Footnotes

A : SO501 is strongly recommended.

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the Summer term of each year the progress of each student registered in the Department is discussed at the MPhil/PhD Board, which is a general meeting of all research student supervisors. This Board decides whether to recommend to the School that students be permitted to proceed to the next year of study. If progress is unsatisfactory, a course of action to assist students to reach performance standards deemed appropriate by supervisors may be required, or a recommendation may be made that the student not be allowed to re-register.

By the end of Year 2, students are expected to have completed their fieldwork, and to be ready to submit two draft chapters for upgrade. All full-time research students are expected to have made the transition from the MPhil to PhD (upgrading) within two years of first registration and to have submitted their PhD thesis within four years. Part-time students are expected to be upgraded to PhD by the end of their third year, and to submit their thesis within six years.

The decision to upgrade from MPhil to PhD is taken by a panel consisting of two academics from the Department or the School, with the supervisor(s) in attendance and available to be consulted by the panel. For upgrade, students submit three draft chapters of their thesis, plus thesis abstract and outline schedule for completion. This material is then assessed by viva voce and a written report is made by the panel.

Students should aim to have a complete first draft of their thesis in years three to four and allow three to six months for revision and submission.

MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society

Programme Code: RPDNS

Department: Media & Communications

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

These regulations apply to students entering in or after the 2017/18 academic year.

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

Any two of the following:

MC402 The Audience in Media and Communications (0.5)

MC408 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications I (Key concepts and interdisciplinary approaches) (0.5)

MC409 Media, Technology and Everyday Life (0.5)

MC413 Information, Communication and Knowledge Systems (0.5)

MC418 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications II (Processes of communication in modern life) (0.5)

MC424 Media and Communication Governance (0.5)

MC425 Interpersonal Mediated Communication (0.5)

MC430 Data in Communication and Society (0.5)

MC433 Technology and Justice (0.5)

MC434 Digital Platforms and Media Infrastructures (0.5)

Plus:

MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media &

Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis) (1.0)

MC5M2 includes the following:

MY464 Introduction to Quantitative Methods for Media and Communications (0.0)

MY552 Applied Regression Analysis (0.5)

By agreement, the Methodology Institute components (MY464 and/or MY552) can be replaced by other, more advanced, statistics courses or an advanced qualitative course taught at the Methodology Institute. At least one half-unit course of statistics needs to be included.

Optional (examined/not examined):

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture (0.0)

Optional (not examined):

LN988 Thesis Writing (0.0)

Modern Foreign Language courses offered by the Language Centre or other graduate seminars of relevance to research subject.

Presentation requirements:

At least one presentation annually in the following:

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture (0.0)

Year 2

Training courses

Optional (examined/not examined):

MY530 Advanced Qualitative Research Workshops (0.0)

MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (0.5)

MY559 Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Quantitative Text Analysis (0.5)

ST416 Multilevel Modelling (0.5)

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture (0.0)

Annual Joint PhD Symposium for Second Years and above, at Goldsmiths, Westminster and City

Optional (not examined):

Other graduate seminars of relevance to research subject.

Year 3

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture (0.0)

Year 4

Research Students are expected to complete their research.

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students will be required to submit a full Thesis Proposal of 10,000 words to their Thesis Committee by 1 June in their first year (part-time students can submit their Proposal by 1 March in their second year). This paper will include a substantive statement of the aims, theories and methods proposed for the thesis, a tentative chapter outline, an indicative bibliography and a timetable for its completion. Together with the examinations in Methods (MC5M2) and the other two chosen compulsory first year courses from the list above, this paper will form part of the evaluation process, and, together with an oral examination based on the Thesis Proposal, will determine whether students are permitted to upgrade from MPhil to PhD and continue into their second year.

MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies

Programme Code: RPDEPS

Department: Social Policy

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Year 1

Training courses

Optional (not examined):

If not already taken previously:

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (0.5)

MY421 Qualitative Research Methods (0.5)

MY451 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (0.5)

SA451 Social Policy Research (1.0)

Students will discuss with their supervisors any other methodological training that may be relevant for the successful completion of the MPhil/PhD programme.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

SA550 Research Student Seminar (0.0)

Optional (not examined):

Relevant courses provided by the Library, Teaching and Learning Centre and Methodology Institute.

Year 2

Training courses

Optional (not examined):

MY452 Applied Regression Analysis (0.5)

MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (0.5)

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

SA550 Research Student Seminar (0.0)

Year 3

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

SA550 Research Student Seminar (0.0)

Year 4

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

SA550 Research Student Seminar (0.0)

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression and Upgrade requirements:

Each student is required to undertake Major Review in the summer term of their first year (second year for part-time students). For Major Review they must submit a 10,000 word document with a detailed thesis proposal, their research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. They are interviewed on this document by senior staff who make the decision on upgrading.

Each year post-Major Review, every student is expected to submit a 1,000 to 2,000 word progress report, approved by supervisors, to the Research Students' Programme Director.

Each pre-Major Review student is expected to make a presentation on their proposed research to the SA550 seminar prior to the submission of their major review document and to address issues raised by the Research Students' Programme Director(s).

MPhil/PhD in Development Studies

Programme Code: RPDV

Department: International Development

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

All students will be required to take either a full or two half unit courses in research methods in the School's Department of Methodology. The precise courses taken will be decided in consultation with the student's primary supervisor.

Compulsory (not examined):

DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies (0.0)

Students who have not received their MSc Development Studies from the LSE will be required to attend the lectures for the following core course:

DV400 Development: History, Theory and Policy (1.0)

All first year students are required to attend a special seminar for research students.

Optional (not examined):

Further appropriate graduate level courses in the Department of International Development and agreed with supervisor.

Optional (not examined):

MPhil/PhD students will find it advantageous to attend the weekly Visiting Lecture Series in Development Studies in Michaelmas Term.

By Year 4

Research Students are expected to have completed their research.

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Students will be required to achieve a minimum mark of 65% in the Methodology courses. Failure to do so may mean that you are unable to progress onto the PhD programme and will remain at MPhil until you have either completed a further methodology course or achieved an improved grade.

All students will be interviewed during the Michaelmas Term of their second year by the Graduate Review Committee. Continued registration for a second year will be conditional on the work presented being of a satisfactory standard and if satisfactory, will be upgraded from MPhil to PhD. By the end of Summer Term of the second year students should have finished all fieldwork (where applicable). By the end of the third year students should be able to complete their dissertation.

MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography

Programme Code: RPECGY

Department: Geography & Environment

GY404 Local Economic Development: Jobs, Poverty, Policy (0.5)

GY409 Globalization and Regional Development (0.5) (not available 2018/19)

GY410 Economics of Local and Regional Development (0.5)

GY413 Regional Development and Policy (0.5)

GY447 The Economics of Regional and Urban Planning (0.5)

GY457 Applied Urban and Regional Economics (1.0)

EC411 Microeconomics (1.0)

Other relevant subject-specific training courses can be chosen subject to supervisor and course manager approval.

Students who select EC411 are also required to take the following introductory course:

EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (0.0)

Note: Students who join the PhD programme after having completed either MSc in Local Economic Development or MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance cannot retake the same courses or be waived the one unit of subject-specific training.

2. Relevant advanced research methods courses to the value of 1.0 unit:

GY428 Applied Quantitative Methods (0.5)

GY460 Techniques of Spatial Economic Analysis (0.5)

MY500 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (0.5)

MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (0.5)

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression and upgrade requirements:

Once on the MPhil/PhD programme students will go through a First Year Progress Review, taking place in the Summer Term of the first year.

For the First Year Progress Review, students must submit a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year. Progression to the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme) is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. Students are asked to discuss their research paper/thesis outline during an Upgrade Meeting in front of an Upgrading Committee normally formed by main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The material is evaluated by the Upgrading Committee, who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the Director of Postgraduate Studies for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD in Economic History

Programme Code: RPEH

Department: Economic History

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

Unless already taken as part of the master's degree:

EH401 Historical Analysis of Economic Change (0.5)

EH402 Research Design and Quantitative Methods in Economic History (0.5)

EH520 Approaches to Economic and Social History (0.0)

And, where appropriate, a pre-session statistics course.

Optional (not examined):

Supervisors may require students in their first or subsequent years of study to take other relevant economic history courses, methodological courses provided by the Department of Methodology or the Institute of Historical Research or skills training courses as required for their thesis topic.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History (0.0)

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History (0.0)

Year 3

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History (0.0)

Year 4

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History (0.0)

Progression and upgrade requirements

During the Summer Term students are required to submit at least one draft thesis chapter and a 3-5 page thesis outline to the department's Graduate Review Committee. Students taking one or more MSc examination may, with the support of their supervisor, apply to defer their submission of work to no later than the start of the 7th week of the Summer Term. The Committee will interview all students during the Summer Term, and re-registration for a second year will be conditional on the work presented being of a satisfactory standard. All students are expected to gain broad knowledge of the subject from graduate level course work in their first year and active participation in workshops, seminars and conferences to complement the expertise gained from intense thesis research.

By the Summer Term of the second year the Graduate Review Committee will normally expect to see about half the thesis in draft. The Committee will interview students, and if the submitted work is of an acceptable standard, students will be upgraded from MPhil to PhD. Students may defer the upgrade decision until their third year for fieldwork or other reasons, but only with the support of their supervisor.

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Once on the MPhil/PhD programme, students will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first year. For the First Year Progress Review, students must submit a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and justification for the research; aims and objectives/ research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year. Progression to the second year is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. The material is evaluated by an upgrade committee that will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrading committee is normally formed by the student's main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The committee will recommend transfer to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the Director of Post-Graduate Studies Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

Upgrading to PhD/Targets for Progress

Year 1 - For a standard thesis: a research proposal (approximately 2,500 words) and abstract of the whole thesis (one page); a sample chapter (approximately 8,000 words); a chapter synopsis, and a timetable for completion. For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: a research proposal (approximately 2,500 words) and an abstract covering the three prospective papers; a full draft of the introduction or a full draft of one of the papers (approximately 8,000 words); and a timetable for completion.

Year 2 - For a standard thesis: at least two further substantive chapters (of approximately 5,000-7,000 words each). For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: at least one fully written paper (approximately 10,000 words); and outlines of the other two papers (approximately 2,000 words).

Year 3 - For a standard thesis: a full draft of all core chapters and agreed timetable for completion. For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: full drafts of all three papers and agreed timetable for completion of the thesis.

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the first year students will go through their Aims and Methods examination. This is held in the summer term and materials should be submitted by the end of the second week of summer term. Students submit a draft chapter and a research proposal for consideration by a panel of their supervisor and advisor (and occasional one other person with appropriate expertise). The research proposal follows a specific template and includes research objectives, the methodology and short research rationale. The nature of the chapter should be agreed with the supervisor. Both parts of the assessment focus on the student's own research and draw on material and debates engaged in GI424 and GI402 where relevant. Students must pass Aims and Methods before progressing to their second year. If unsuccessful at first sit, students have the opportunity to retake Aims and Methods once more at the end of September.

Research students make the transition from MPhil to PhD (Upgrading) by the end of the MT of their second year. In order to upgrade, students must have passed their Aims and Methods. For Upgrade students submit a detailed outline for their thesis (including the anticipated division into chapters), two substantive draft chapters (usually a literature review, methodology or introductory chapter, in discussion with supervisor), and a timetable for completion. The Upgrade is examined in a viva and the committee consists of the main and advisory supervisors and one other person who is not familiar with the student's work. Part-time student submissions are calculated pro-rata for both Aims and Methods and Upgrading.

Expectations for successful Aims and Methods and Upgrading:

- Satisfactory completion of materials for submission and appropriate academic presentation of the same
- Completion of compulsory courses, attendance and contribution to Doctoral Workshop
- Development of appropriate LSE courses in discussion with supervisor

Having successfully Upgraded you will have an annual review with your supervisor and advisor to ensure satisfactory progress.

MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics

Programme Code: RPHPHE

Compulsory (examined):

HP500 Advanced Health Policy and Health Economics (1.0)

Optional (examined):

Students are expected to take two relevant half-unit courses, as agreed with their Supervisors. The options include those listed below:

Graduate-level courses offered by the Department of Health Policy

Or

MY405 Research Methods for Evaluation in Health, Development and Public Policy (0.5)

MY500 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (0.5)

MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (0.5)

MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (0.5)

MY552 Applied Regression Analysis (0.5)

MY565 Intermediate Quantitative Analysis (0.5)

ST501 Multilevel Modelling (0.5)

ST542 Longitudinal Data Analysis (0.5)

Or

Where regulations permit and subject to Supervisor and Doctoral Programme Director approval, students may take courses instead of those listed above.

Year 2

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

HP500 Advanced Health Policy and Health Economics (1.0)

Optional (examined / not examined):

Audit of relevant courses from those offered in the Department of Health Policy, as agreed with Supervisors.

Audit of relevant courses on other MSc programmes, where regulations permit and as agreed with Supervisors.

Year 3

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

Attendance and participation at Research Seminars held across the Department, details to be made available to student by email and on website.

Departmental and research seminar series

Training offered by the PhD Academy, Teaching and Learning Centre, and LSE LIFE.

Year 4

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

HP500 Advanced Health Policy and Health Economics (1.0)

Optional (examined/not examined):

Audit of relevant courses from those offered in the Department of Health Policy, as agreed with Supervisors.

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

Departmental and research seminar series

Training offered by the PhD Academy, Teaching and Learning Centre, and LSE LIFE.

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

The Department encourages students throughout their PhD programme to attend, and where appropriate, present at conferences in relation to their particular research topic.

Progression rules

Students are initially registered as MPhil, and will be able to upgrade to PhD registration following their first year of full-time enrolment, subject to successful completion of the Major Review. Progress is assessed by the student's Supervisors in consultation with the Doctoral Programme Director.

In the ST of every academic year, the progress of each student registered in the Department is discussed with the Supervisory Panel. The Panel decides whether to recommend to the School that students be permitted to proceed to the next year of study.

If progress is unsatisfactory, a course of action to assist students to reach performance standards deemed appropriate by Supervisors may be required, or a recommendation may be made that the student not be allowed to re-register.

Upgrade requirements

Each student is required to undergo Major Review (also known as Upgrade) at the end of their first year of full-time study. In order to earn the Upgrade, the candidate –

- (1) Must have attended a minimum of 80% of the compulsory course in Advanced Health Policy and Health Economics (based on their time at LSE);
 - (2) Must have achieved a minimum average grade of 60% across the two taught MSc courses;
 - (3) Must have submitted a 5,000-word thesis proposal including a research question, literature review, description of methodology, plans for data collection, and a timetable through to completion.
- Where relevant, there will be assessment of any ethics review required for the student's research undertaken in accordance with the School's research ethics policies.

Candidates are subject to a viva voce and marking of their thesis proposal by two non-supervisory members of the Department, where students will be required to earn a minimum grade of 60%. Following Major Review, a decision is taken whether to upgrade the student from MPhil to the PhD programme.

Targets for progress

For students who successfully upgrade to PhD enrolment there will be another review in the second and third years of full-time study. Progression will be conditional upon fulfilling the requirements agreed and approved by the Supervisors and the Doctoral Programme Director.

Year 2

For a thesis as a monograph: submission of a thesis document, including an abstract of the whole thesis, a chapter synopsis, and a substantive first chapter (approx. 10,000 words), and an updated timetable through to completion.

For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: submission of an abstract for each of the three prospective papers, a full draft of the introduction or a full draft of one of the papers (approx. 10,000 words), and an updated timetable through to completion.

Year 3

For a thesis as a monograph: submission of full draft with all core chapters, and agreed timetable through to completion of the thesis.

For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: full drafts of all three papers and agreed timetable for the completion of the thesis.

Teaching opportunities

The Department employs Graduate Teaching Assistants (GTAs) to teach and lead seminars on a number of postgraduate courses.

First-year MPhil/PhD students are normally not permitted to teach. Research students are encouraged to undertake some teaching following successful Major Review. Students who undertake teaching are offered the opportunity to pursue a Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education.

Progression and upgrade requirements

On being admitted, all students are formally registered for an MPhil. By 13 June (Week 8 Summer Term) of their first year (1 March of their second year for part-time students) they are required to submit three hardcopies of their dossier containing (1) the provisional title of their thesis, together with the provisional titles of their chapters; (2) a bibliography, setting out as comprehensively as possible the primary published and unpublished sources they intend to use, along with the books, articles, unpublished theses and other sources they will consult; (3) an historiographical essay, evaluating the contributions of other scholars to their subject, and indicating clearly how their own thesis will contribute to it; and (4) a draft chapter of approximately 10,000 words based largely upon primary sources. The dossier will be read by three members of the Department, and students will be required to undergo a 20-30 minute viva. After the viva you will be informed of the outcome and will receive a joint report from the panel. If the Committee deems the dossier/viva satisfactory, the Department will recommend the student for transfer of registration from MPhil to PhD status. If it is less than satisfactory it will be examined by the Committee who will determine whether the student should be allowed to resubmit revised upgrade materials, which may be permitted once. The review and viva process is designed to determine whether the student is likely to meet the requirements of a PhD, and whether the chosen topic is suitable for a doctoral dissertation.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Early in the Summer Term first- and second-year research students will have their progress reviewed by a Research Panel. They may also be held at the end of the third or subsequent years of registration at the request of a supervisor or student. Supervisors will not attend Research Panels but will provide reports on progress. Panel members may attend student presentations at the Research Design Seminar (IR509). Students are expected for the first Panel to submit an outline of their proposed research and one draft chapter. Students who are deemed not to have made satisfactory progress will either be refused permission to re-register or will be required by the Research Panel to produce written work over the summer as a condition for re-registration in the autumn. In the event of conditions to re-registration being set, a further Research Panel may be reconvened in the September prior to re-registration.

For the second Panel, which will decide on the question of upgrading from MPhil to PhD, students will be expected to submit two additional draft chapters. The two chapters should be substantially new work, but may include revised material from year one. Students who have not made sufficient progress to be converted from MPhil to PhD registration by the end of their second year will normally have re-registration made conditional on further progress (details to be decided by the Panel) or may, exceptionally, be prohibited from re-registering.

Year 4Training courses*Optional (not examined):

Students have the option of attending advanced courses organized by the London Taught Course Centre or the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MA500 Mathematics: Seminar on Combinatorics, Games and Optimisation (0.0)

MA501 Research Student Seminar (0.0)

Optional (not examined):

MA422 Research Topics in Financial Mathematics (0.0)

Teaching opportunities:

All students are offered the opportunity to teach for the department, subject to a successful interview and language requirements.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students are initially registered for the MPhil, and will be able to upgrade to PhD registration during their second year, dependent on satisfactory progress. Progress is assessed regularly by the student's supervisors, in consultation with the Doctoral Programme Director, on the basis of the extent to which the agreed research goals have been achieved. Any upgrade is dependent on the successful completion of a Major Review, the date of which is determined by the Doctoral Programme Director in consultation with the lead supervisor.

MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications

Programme Code: RPME

Department: Media & Communications

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined):

MC408 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications I (Key concepts and interdisciplinary approaches) (0.5) and MC418 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications II (Processes of communication in modern life) (0.5) A

MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis) (1.0)

MC5M2 includes the following courses:

MY464 Introduction to Quantitative Methods for Media and Communications (0.0) and MY552 Applied Regression Analysis (0.5)

By agreement, the Department of Methodology components (MY464 and/or MY552) can be replaced by other, more advanced, statistics courses or an advanced qualitative course taught at the Department of Methodology. At least one half-unit course of statistics needs to be included.

Optional (examined/not examined):

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture (0.0)

Optional (not examined):

LN988 Thesis Writing (0.0)

Modern Foreign Language courses offered by the Language Centre.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students will be required to submit a full Thesis Proposal of 10,000 words to their Thesis Committee by 1 June in their first year (part-time students can submit their Proposal by 1 March in their second year). This paper will include a substantive statement of the aims, theories and methods proposed for the thesis, a tentative chapter outline, an indicative bibliography and a timetable for its completion. Together with the Methods (MC5M2) and Theories & Concepts (MC408/418) examinations, this paper will form part of the evaluation process, and, together with an oral examination based on the Thesis Proposal, will determine whether students are permitted to upgrade from MPhil to PhD and continue into their second year.

MPhil/PhD in Philosophy

Programme Code: RPPH

Department: Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor. All programmes of study should be agreed with the supervisor at the start of the year.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Year 1

Training courses

Compulsory (examined/ not examined):

PH501 Philosophical Problems Seminar (0.0)

Students who have never taken a paper in formal logic at degree must take the following (examined):

PH502 Reasoning and Logic (1.0)

Students who have already taken a formal logic course should choose one further MSc course not already taken as part of an MSc degree. Students can either decide to be examined in this course or instead choose to write two assessed essays, one at the end of each of the first two terms. This with the exception of students who choose PH419 Set Theory and Further Logic, in which case the examination is compulsory.

Either

A further MSc course (again one not taken as part of the MSc course) plus one term unit of PhD level seminars. The seminars on offer are:

- PH500 Research Methods in Philosophy (0.0)
- PH551 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences (0.0)
- PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences (0.0)

If students choose to take a further MSc course, they can either decide to be examined or instead choose to write two assessed essays, one at the end of each of the first two terms. PhD level seminars are not examined and assessment is solely based on essays.

Or

Three term units of PhD level seminars with associated coursework. Taking three term units means that students can either take all three terms of one of these seminars or 'mix and match' by taking different seminars in different terms. Seminars must be taken with associated course work.

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

Transferable skills courses offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre or the Department of Methodology.

Year 2

Training courses

Progression and upgrade requirements

Successful completion of work required for each year is a necessary condition for re-registration in the following year; and for upgrading from MPhil to PhD status. During the first year students must write a first chapter of the thesis as well as an outline (research plan) of the rest of the thesis. The chapter should be around 40 pages; the research plan around 10 pages. Both have to be handed in to the Departmental Office by 1 September. This upgrading will normally take place after the successful completion of Year 1 requirements in Case A, and after the successful completion of Year 2 requirements in Case B. In both cases once you are registered for the PhD that registration will be backdated to the start of your MPhil/PhD studies.

Progression and upgrade requirements

The first year Extended Essay and the second year Upgrade chapters (see below) are examined by a three-person thesis committee, which includes the student's supervisor, as well as two other academic colleagues.

Targets for progressYear 1 - Extended Essay of 6,000 words, submitted on first day of Lent Term.Year 2 - Upgrade viva. Two draft chapters of 10,000 words each (total of 20,000 words), submitted on first day of Lent Term. These chapters form the basis of an oral examination by three person thesis committee usually four to six weeks after submission. Success in this examination results in upgrade from MPhil to PhD status.Year 3 - Completed first draft by end of three years.Teaching experience

Graduates will usually gain some teaching experience and have had the opportunity to develop teaching skills.

Progression and upgrade requirements:

Once on the MPhil/PhD programme you will go through a First Year Progress Review, taking place in the Summer Term of your first year.

For the First Year Progress Review, students must submit a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/ research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year.

Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year. Progression to the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme) is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. Students are asked to discuss their research paper/thesis outline during an Upgrade Meeting in front of an Upgrading Committee normally formed by main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The material is evaluated by the Upgrading Committee, who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the the Director of Post-Graduate Studies for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD in Social Policy

Progression and upgrade requirements

Each student is required to undertake Major Review in the summer term of their first year (second year for part-time students). For Major Review they must submit a 10,000 word document with a detailed thesis proposal, their research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. They are interviewed on this document by senior staff who make the decision on upgrading.

Each year post-Major Review, every student is expected to submit a 1,000 to 2,000 word progress report, approved by supervisors, to the Doctoral Programme Director(s).

Each pre-Major Review student is expected to make a presentation on their proposed research to the SA550 seminar prior to the submission of their major review document and to address issues raised by the Doctoral Programme Director(s).

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the Summer Term of their first year, candidates will produce a 10,000 word 'first year review' that outlines the aims and methods of their thesis: this means summarising the key literature(s), motivating their specific research questions, and highlighting the planned contributions of their work. A first year review document typically includes a general introduction, a comprehensive literature review (covering relevant empirical and theoretical work), a motivation of the research questions and hypotheses, and an indication of the literature(s) that the candidate is seeking to contribute to (i.e. the gaps in knowledge that will be addressed). Candidates will also give an oral presentation of their proposal at the Department of Methodology PhD day.

Written and oral work will be assessed by two academics (not on the supervisory team), normally members of Department of Methodology staff. This work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable them to progress to the second year. It is particularly important that the first year review clearly states the objectives of the doctoral research and indicate how the empirical work will be carried out. If the panel deems the first year review to be not suitably clear, they can choose not to accept the submitted document and give the candidate up to a month to clarify. This decision will be taken maximum one week after the Department of Methodology PhD Day. Examples of unclear work might include (but not be limited to):

- A first year review that does not state clear research questions;
- A first year review that does not adequately review the specific literatures that the empirical work is contributing to;
- A first year review that does not give enough methodological detail, showing how the design will produce data that allows the candidate to address the theoretical issues at stake in a systematic and rigorous way.

After the first year candidates will spend more time on independent study under the guidance of their supervisor(s). This will involve the collection, organization and analysis of data, and writing up the results. During their second year of registration, they will typically submit three (minimum) draft chapters of their thesis plus a short introduction and a detailed plan for its completion. The three draft chapters will typically include a detailed literature review, specification of research problem(s) and two empirical chapters. If candidates are pursuing a paper-based thesis, their upgrading documents will typically include a short introduction, a literature review and at least two empirical papers. Whether a traditional or paper-based thesis, the material will be evaluated by an upgrading committee (two academics, not necessarily of the Department of Methodology or even the LSE) who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if their work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity.

Throughout the MPhil/PhD and PhD, candidates will attend the Institute's research seminar and other specialist workshops and seminars related to their interests. The student must present at every Department of Methodology PhD day.

Progression and upgrade requirements In the Summer term of each year the progress of each student registered in the Department is discussed at the MPhil/PhD Board, which is a general meeting of all research student supervisors. This Board decides whether to recommend to the School that students be permitted to proceed to the next year of study. If progress is unsatisfactory, a course of action to assist students to reach performance standards deemed appropriate by supervisors may be required, or a recommendation may be made that the student not be allowed to re-register.

By the end of Year 2, students are expected to have completed their fieldwork, and to be ready to submit two draft chapters for upgrade. All full-time research students are expected to have made the transition from the MPhil to PhD (upgrading) within two years of first registration and to have submitted their PhD thesis within four years. Part-time students are expected to be upgraded to PhD by the end of their third year, and to submit their thesis within six years.

The decision to upgrade from MPhil to PhD is taken by a panel consisting of two academics from the Department or the School, with the supervisor(s) in attendance and available to be consulted by the panel. For upgrade, students submit three draft chapters of their thesis, plus thesis abstract and outline schedule for completion. This material is then assessed by viva voce and a written report is made by the panel.

Students should aim to have a complete first draft of their thesis in years three to four and allow three to six months for revision and submission.

Progression and upgrade requirements Formal assessment is made towards the end of each Summer Term. This assessment is based on statements made by the student and the supervisors in the progress report form. Students are also required to complete a supplementary report of 1-2 pages (A4), providing in more detail an outline of their current research.

The review to upgrade to the PhD normally takes place within two years of full time registration. Progress is assessed by the first and/or second supervisor in consultation with the PhD programme director and another expert in the field of the research undertaken by the student. If satisfactory progress has been made, the programme director will recommend that registration be upgraded to PhD status. The department's research committee also monitors the progress of PhD students.

Teaching opportunities The department employs Graduate Teaching Assistants (GTAs) to teach a number of its undergraduate and postgraduate courses. In particular ST102, Elementary Statistical theory, and ST107, Quantitative Methods, are taught to a large number of students across the School and require a significant number of classes. Research students are encouraged to undertake some teaching from year two onwards. First year MPhil/PhD students are normally not permitted to teach, although some marking may be available during the year or for the external degree at the end of the year. A Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education is offered to those who wish to pursue this.

AC500

Accounting, Organisations and Society

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Mennicken KSW 3.09 and Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is an advanced course for doctoral and postdoctoral students focusing on the institutional and organisational context of accounting practices in their broadest sense. The seminars are generally based on key readings at the interface between accounting, organisation studies, regulation and management. Discussions will be focused on the analysis of accounting and calculative practices in context drawing on a wide range of approaches.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of both MT and LT.

Indicative reading: There is no single text for this course and the seminars will be based on pre-distributed readings.

Assessment: Assessment will be based on written work as agreed with the Course Director.

AC501

Empirical Financial Accounting and Capital Markets

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Manuel Correia OLD 3.12 and Dr Xi Li OLD 2.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is a readings based course dealing with advanced issues in accounting research methods. Its primary focus is to study accounting and financial reporting issues from an economics perspective. While much research studied in the course will be empirical archival in nature, the course also emphasises the importance of theory and research design in developing high quality research. The course covers a wide range of accounting issues including the design of and choices between alternative accounting methods, the use of accounting numbers in economic decision making, assessment of financial reporting quality, the economic consequences of financial reporting, and the interactions between financial reporting, legal and economic institutions, and corporate governance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Assessment: Second year MPhil/PhD students in Accounting (Track 2) are formally assessed by:

- (i) A referee report of a current working paper (25% weighting). This will normally be assigned in week 5 of Lent term to be worked on during the following week (6) when there is no class meeting.
- (ii) A take-home examination (75% weighting). This will cover a selection of key areas/papers studied in AC501 over the current academic year (2017/18) and previous academic year (2016/17). It will be designed to be completed within a three-day (72 hour) period during Summer term.

First year MPhil/PhD students in Accounting (Track 2) will not normally be formally assessed but they will receive feedback in the form of formative assessments. In addition, all students participating in the course are expected to present research papers being studied and will receive feedback on their presentations aimed at developing and improving their presentation skills.

AC502 Half Unit

Foundations of Accounting, Organizations and Institutions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting (Track 1). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is also offered for students from other MPhil/PhD programmes, with the approval and written permission of the PhD in Accounting Programme Director.

Course content: The object of the course is to provide students with an advanced understanding of the changing role and position of accounting practices in organisations, both public and private, and societies more generally. Students will be exposed to advanced thinking about how accounting practices are much more than a collection of routine techniques but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. We will focus on how efforts to design internal and external accounting practices are both a function of specific economic and political interests, but are also shaped by social and political aspirations. The role of accountants and other agents will be addressed.

The course emphasises the inter-relations between technical, organisational and institutional issues. While some technical accounting knowledge will be helpful, it is not essential and each lecture will provide the necessary technical foundations.

Indicative topics include:

Foundations of Reporting, Calculation and Disclosure; Transnational Regulation and Standardisation; Accounting and the Notion of "Entity"; Audit and Assurance: The Audit Society; Organisational Boundaries, Structure and Control; Performance, Accountability Incentives; Accounting for Sustainability; Organisational Failure as a Process.

Teaching: 10, 3-hour seminars in weeks 1-10 of MT and a 2-hour essay workshop in week 11 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two pieces of written work. This may take the form of either an essay, or the analysis of a case, and may also include in-class presentations and team-based work. This work will be assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: Chapman, Cooper & Miller (eds), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford, 2009); Hopwood & Miller (eds), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice, Cambridge, 1994; Power, The Audit Society, Oxford, 1999; Roberts, The Modern Firm, Oxford, 2004.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words) in the ST.

MPhil/PhD in Accounting students must pass the course assessment, normally with high Merit (at least 65%) or Distinction marks, to proceed to the next year of the programme.

AN500

Seminar on Anthropological Research

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Steinmuller OLD 5.06A, Prof Deborah James OLD 6.06 and Prof Laura Bear

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Seminar on Anthropological Research

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 14 hours of seminars in the ST.

There is a reading week in Week 6 of the MT and LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN503 Thesis Writing Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Graeber OLD 6.10, Dr Michael Scott OLD 6.16 and Dr Clara Devlieger

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option. This seminar is for 3rd and 4th year post-fieldwork students.

Course content: Students present draft dissertation chapters to their cohort.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 14 hours of seminars in the ST.

This course has reading week in Week 6 of the MT and LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN505 Advanced Professional Development in Anthropology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charles Stafford OLD6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This seminar course has two main aims. First, it examines key theoretical concepts and approaches in Anthropology at an advanced level that may be relevant to post-fieldwork doctoral candidates. It may focus on widely ranging thematic areas, e.g. recent developments in cognitive anthropology and/or in material culture studies and/or in anthropological studies of ontology. The aim is to enhance the ability of students to engage with such debates at an advanced level. Second, the course aims to enhance the professional development of doctoral students by providing them with advanced training in writing and presentation skills, and more generally in relation to skills relevant to their career progression.

Teaching: 14 hours of seminars in the MT. 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 12 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elliott Green CON8.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Development Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar is designed as a forum for discussing theoretical and methodological issues in Development Studies research. Modules are organized around broad methodological issues (e.g. research design, case studies, causal inference) and presentations of research, with the former featuring heavily in the MT and the latter in the LT and ST. Research presentations at the seminar are made by DESTIN research students and also by staff, with some invited speakers from outside.

All research students are expected to attend the seminar while in residence in London. First year students are required to present a draft of their research proposal to the seminar during the LT or ST. Continuing students are invited to make presentations based on a report of their research, draft chapters or even their final draft of the dissertation. In making their presentations students are asked to provide (a) background material about the particular issue at hand, (b) a clear statement of the research questions and/or hypotheses that are being addressed, and (c) discussion of the research methods to be employed. Students should inform their supervisor(s) of the date when they are scheduled to make a presentation.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

DV501 Half Unit Development History, Theory and Policy for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Putzel

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course integrates the concepts and perspectives of a range of disciplines to consider: major trends of development and change in modern history and interpretations of them in the social sciences and contemporary economic and social theory and their bearing on the policy and practice of development. During Michaelmas Term the course critically discusses concepts of 'development' and the historical evolution of paradigms of development thinking and policy. Through an examination of comparative historical experience, we explore the role of states and markets in development and/underdevelopment, colonial legacies and path dependencies and the political economy of growth, poverty and freedom. We examine how differential experiences of financial crisis, state fragility, democratic and populist politics affect development thinking and possibilities. During Lent Term the course draws on recent research and policy documents to discuss current cutting edge policy issues and challenges in the developing world including: demographic change and its implications, poverty and inequality; industrialisation, international trade and industrial policy; agriculture, new technologies and agrarian reform policies; gendered development and responses; the impact of violent conflict; environmental threats and sustainability; and the evolution of development practice and aid.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students will attend the Michaelmas Term lectures for DV400 and an associated weekly seminar for research students only.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 presentations in the MT.

Indicative reading: The following are recommended basic readings for the course:

A. Kohli, State-Directed Development: Political Power and Industrialization in the Global Periphery (Cambridge, 2004). A Sen, Development as Freedom (Anchor, 1999). HJ Chang, Kicking Away the Ladder: Development Strategy in Historical Perspective (Anthem, 2002). HJ Chang, Economics: The User's Guide (Penguin, 2014). D Rodrik, One Economics, Many Recipes: Globalization, Institutions, and Economic Growth (Princeton University Press, 2008). J.Ferguson, The Anti-Politics Machine: 'Development', Depoliticisation and Bureaucratic Power in Lesotho (Cambridge, 1990). M. Jerven, Poor Numbers: How we are misled about African development statistics and what to do about it (Cornell, 2013). United Nations, "Transforming Our world: the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development" (SDGs) A/RES/70/1 (25 September 2015).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in January.

DV510 Research Design and Proposal in International Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elliott Green

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will work with their academic supervisors to structure a doctoral research proposal that has the potential to make a significant contribution to knowledge and that reflects a sophisticated mastery of advanced theoretical and methodological tools from one or more academic disciplines related to international development. They will learn how to identify good research questions that are embedded in the current academic literature, and how to apply recognisable, defensible and academically sophisticated methodologies to address those questions. The doctoral research proposal itself will identify a key research question(s) for investigation, a justification well embedded in existing academic literature for why the topic is theoretically and empirically important, and a well-developed theoretical and methodological framework for researching the question(s).

Teaching: Students will meet their supervisors three times a term during their first year of study in accordance with the LSE's regulations for Research Degrees. Their proposals will be developed over the course of these meetings.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 pieces of coursework in the MT, LT and ST. Students will submit drafts of their proposal to their supervisors and receive feedback.

Indicative reading: The reading list for each student will be determined by the research they propose undertaking.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

DV51 Half Unit African Development

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10, Prof Thandika Mkandawire CON 8.02 and Dr Laura Mann CON 6.19

Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The major concern of the course is with the political economy of African development, to examine processes of economic, political, social and cultural change in Sub-Saharan Africa. It provides critical analysis of key development interventions and processes. It seeks to combine general theoretical overviews with country case studies illustrating the variety of experiences and trajectories. It does not aim to provide a comprehensive coverage of development issues or of regions. Course content will vary from year to year, depending on the specialities of staff.

Attention is paid to legacies of the colonial encounter; the constraints and opportunities presented by African countries' positions in the global economy; the political economy of industrialisation and agrarian transformation, resource mobilisation; trade diversification; institutional reforms and state capacity. Attention will also be paid to social policy with special focus on issues such as social social protection, cash transfers, Millennium Development Goals, horizontal inequality and conflict.

Teaching: 16 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

DV520 Half Unit Complex Emergencies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16 and Dr Elliott Green CON 8.07

Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course examines the consequences and causes of humanitarian disasters. It looks at the changing nature of civil conflicts, at the famine process, and at the benefits that may arise for some groups from war and famine. It examines some of the roots of violence in civil wars, as well as the information systems that surround and help to shape disasters. The course is interdisciplinary and looks at political, economic and psychological functions of violence.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST. There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. A useful text, which is designed in large part around the course, is David Keen, Complex Emergencies (Polity, 2008). Other texts of interest include David Keen, Useful Enemies: When Waging Wars is More Important than Winning Them (Yale University Press, 2012); Stathis Kalyvas, The Logic of Violence in Civil War (Cambridge University Press, 2006); David Keen, Conflict and Collusion in Sierra Leone (James Currey, 2005); David Keen, *Endless War? local responses to conflict and natural disasters. Building on an analysis of the causes, construction and consequences of humanitarian disasters, this course focuses on humanitarian actors (including aid workers, journalists, medics, government officials, soldiers, politicians and peace negotiators). It considers the principles and the politics of humanitarian action, exploring the overlaps and tensions between practices of humanitarian assistance and humanitarian intervention and how humanitarian institutions shape and are shaped by global governance and state power. It asks how humanitarianism relates to ideas about human rights and justice, and the politics of securitisation. It considers why humanitarian organisations and governments respond to some crises and not to others as well as the critique of humanitarian assistance and the ways in which the UN and NGO communities have sought to professionalise their activities. The course also looks at how recipients of humanitarian aid respond to these programmes, and in some cases subvert or transform them into quite different projects. Case studies will be drawn primarily from Africa, Central and South Asia and Latin America. However, there is also likely to be discussion of ongoing humanitarian emergencies, wherever they are located.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the LT.

This course is available to students in Year 2 or above of the MRes/PhD in International Development only. It is available to students in Year 1 of the MRes/PhD in International Development with permission.

Course content: Why are some countries rich and others poor? Why are some governed well and others badly? This course employs a political economy approach to examine the causes of development, identify the underlying obstacles to development, and evaluate potential solutions. It focuses on the principles governing the institutions, politics, and organisations through which policies, programmes and projects are produced and implemented. Attention is given to the different kinds of authority, incentives and accountability mechanisms that govern the relationships between leaders, managers and recipients. It reviews ongoing debates about the best ways of designing state

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON 7.16, Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Dr Darron Gordon CON 8.10

Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course looks at international, national and agencies, private firms and NGOs, by showing how centralised bureaucracies, markets, participatory and solidaristic agencies operate to provide services in practice. It explores the dynamics of different forms of democratic and authoritarian states, the determinants of good and poor governance, and how social, political and economic forces interact to drive change and stability. In order to enable students to make practical judgments about institutional reform programmes in various contexts, competing approaches to development are critically and constructively analyzed in light of case studies. The course is divided into several parts: Analytical Assumptions, Government and Governance, Private Sector, and Civil Society. On completing the course students should be able to: (i) use theory to identify the causes of actual development challenges, (ii) identify and assess relevant case study material to inform development practice; and (iii) employ the insights developed throughout the course to formulate policy recommendations and plans of action for improving development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 3 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will additionally be an introductory workshop at the start of MT. Students are expected to attend all these sessions. Lectures will focus on the theoretical debates driving current policy practice in the development community, while seminars will relate these to practical problems of implementation, drawing on case studies, class exercises, and the personal experience of participants. Seminars will discuss topics covered in the lecture, and will be conducted on the basis either of a student presentation or a class exercise.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list is provided at the first course meeting. Background readings include: Brett, E.A. Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled on the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: The objectives of the course are: a) to introduce students to the practical world of development which will both facilitate their 'career paths' and also prepare them for the consultancy projects by becoming more familiar with how such organisations think and work; b) to introduce students to the interface between policy practice and development academe. Each week speakers from different development organisations will speak to students about policy and research work in their organisation, how their organisation uses research and for what purposes, and some of the hot topics.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

DV560 Half Unit Bayesian Reasoning for Qualitative Social Science: A modern approach to case study inference

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tasha Fairfield CON 6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in International Relations and MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: This course has no prerequisites.

Students do not need any previous exposure to either Bayesian analysis or qualitative methods literature.

Course content: The way we intuitively approach qualitative case research is similar to how we read detective novels. We consider various different hypotheses to explain what occurred—whether the emergence of democracy in South Africa, or the death of Samuel Ratchett on the Orient Express—drawing on the literature we have read (e.g. theories of regime change, or other Agatha Christie mysteries) and any salient previous experiences we have had. As we gather evidence and discover new clues, we continually update our beliefs about which hypothesis provides the best explanation—or we may introduce a new alternative that occurs to us along the way.

Bayesianism provides a natural framework that is both logically rigorous and grounded in common sense, that governs how we should revise our degree of belief in the truth of a hypothesis—e.g., “mobilisation from below drove democratization in South Africa by altering economic elites’ regime preferences,” (Wood 2001), or “a lone gangster sneaked onboard the train and killed Ratchett as revenge for being swindled”—given our relevant prior knowledge and new information that we obtain during our investigation. Bayesianism is enjoying a revival across many fields, and it offers a powerful tool for improving inference and analytic transparency in qualitative research.

This course introduces basic principles of Bayesian reasoning with the goal of helping us leverage our common-sense understandings of inference and hone our intuition when conducting causal analysis with qualitative evidence. We will examine the foundations of Bayesian probability as well as concrete applications to single case studies, comparative case studies, comparative historical analysis, and multi-methods research. Students will practice applying Bayesian reasoning to assess the strength and quality of inferences in published studies, drawing on exemplars of qualitative research from various fields of socio-political analysis including development studies, comparative politics, international relations, and policy analysis. Students will also apply Bayesian principles to various aspects of their own dissertation research in progress—e.g., generating or revising hypotheses, selecting cases, identifying weaknesses in salient background literature, and assessing the inferential weight of available evidence.

Upon completing the course, students will be equipped with a concrete set of Bayesian-inspired best practices to deploy in their own research, as well as widely-applicable analytic skills that will help them to better evaluate and critique socio-political analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Students will attend [CP-880] lectures and seminars in LT. Additional teaching and learning support in writing the final project will be agreed between the instructor and the student’s PhD supervisor.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise and 1 project in the LT.

Students will receive written and oral formative assessment on in-class exercises, which will ask them to explain key Bayesian concepts (e.g., the “weight of evidence”) in their own words and apply them to concrete examples (e.g. use Bayes’ rule to derive an inference from several pieces of evidence).

In addition, students will receive oral feedback on the first section of their final project, which will set up rival hypotheses to be compared in light of case evidence.

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Students can choose from two options in consultation with the course instructor and the PhD supervisor, taking into account how far along they are in the research process:

- (a) Conduct a full Bayesian scrutiny of a published work relevant to their dissertation topic, preferably one that analyses more than a single case. Students will be asked to pay attention to some nuanced aspects of Bayesian inference, including logical dependence among multiple pieces of evidence, and they will provide quantified assessments of priors, weight of evidence, and their posterior degree of confidence in the author’s argument relative to rival explanations in light of the evidence.
- (b) Directly apply Bayesian reasoning to their own dissertation research in progress. Students will devise at least two rival hypotheses to compare (preferably three), assess and justify priors in light of salient background literature they have read, and assess the weight of any available evidence they possess from their preliminary research and/or provide a Bayesian rationale for case selection. Students will be asked to pay attention to some nuanced aspects of Bayesian inference, including logical dependence among multiple pieces of evidence, and they will provide quantified assessments of the weight of evidence and their degree of confidence in each hypothesis relative to the rivals in light of their background information and preliminary evidence.

DV590 Half Unit Economic Development Policy I

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10 and Dr Elliott Green. Head of Department, Doctoral Programme Directors, MSc Course Convenor and PhD Supervisor

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled in the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: This course explores the foundations of applied macroeconomic policy analysis by combining a rigorous introduction to advanced quantitative methods with applications to the theory and empirics of long-run growth in developing countries. Throughout the course, lectures provide analytical but non-technical overviews of broad themes in long-run growth and development policy, with a strong emphasis on how the body of knowledge has evolved over time via the synthesis of theoretical advances and rigorous empirical testing. Topics including growth theory, institutions and history, economic geography, globalization, balance of payments and financial crises, environmental policy and international finance. Classes in the first half of term will focus on building analytical skills to read, interpret, and critique econometric approaches to causal identification commonly used in the academic development literature. The emphasis will be on developing rigorous intuition rather than technical details; we focus on teaching students from a broad range of backgrounds to understand and critically consume high-level applied research in a sophisticated manner. The seminars in the second half of term give students an opportunity to repeatedly practice and improve their skills by working through problem sets based on top academic journal articles addressing issues from the lectures on macroeconomic development. While some background in economics and statistics is helpful, the course is designed to be engaging and challenging for students from a broad variety of backgrounds, from those with no economics and statistics to those with more advanced skills in either one or both areas. Strong analytical skills (whether quantitative or not) and a sturdy work ethic are the best predictors of success.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A plan for the research paper (1500-2000 words) on which the student will receive feedback and topic approval

Indicative reading: Indicative reading: The bulk of the course will be taught using journal articles. A reading list will be handed out by the lecturers at the beginning of their sessions. Useful reference texts include D Ray, Development Economics (1998) which will serve as the course text, W Easterly, The Quest for Growth;

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available as an option for students enrolled in the MRes/PhD in International Development only.

Course content: This course examines the microeconomic foundations of economic policy-making in developing countries. Classes will combine economic theory and rigorous empirical analysis to better understand the impact of economic development policy on development goals. We will focus on specific examples chosen from development cases worldwide to learn which policies have worked, which ones have not, and how a rigorous analysis of these experiences can inform the design of better economic development policies in the future

The course is structured around three main themes:

(i) Human Development: health policy, education policy and intra-household dynamics

(ii) Institutions and Markets: labour markets, state capacity for public service delivery and private sector development

(iii) Behavioural Economics and Development Policy Design: the importance of psychology in explaining economic behaviour and how it can inform better development policy design
Through in class discussions, lectures and coursework, students will develop analytical and quantitative skills for the study and practice of international development policy. These skills will enable students to interpret and critique both conceptual arguments and the empirical evidence used in the development economics literature and discourse.

Coursework will include a combination of class discussions with guest lecturers engaged in international development, problem sets, presentations and computer-lab based sessions for students to explore programming and statistical skills.

Students are strongly encouraged to take DV492, as a highly complementary course that will also apply the empirical methods taught in DV490 to topics in government policy such as redistribution, taxation and social insurance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

EC501 Work in Progress Seminars

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Various.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Research students present their work to faculty and peers in the designated field. Outside speakers are also invited from time to time.

Teaching: Seminars EC501: seminar groups covering the major PhD field options, i.e. Capital Markets, Development and Growth, Econometric Theory, Industrial Economics, International Economics, Labour Economics, Macroeconomics/Monetary Economics, Microeconomic Theory, Political Theory, Public Economics. The frequency of meetings to be determined according to the number of students in each specialism, but generally each group will meet weekly throughout the session.

Assessment: This course is not examinable.

EC518 Topics in Advanced Econometrics for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L.4.20 and Prof Taisuke Otsu 32L.4.25

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: See course content for EC485. Additionally, this course will examine more advanced theories and applications in Econometric Theory. Recent developments in the field will be discussed, giving students an insight into the process by which research is conducted, and suggesting fruitful areas for research.

Teaching: 20 hours of EC485 Topics in Advanced Econometrics lectures and 10 hours of EC518 lectures in each of the MT and the LT.

Indicative reading: See reading list for EC485. Additional readings will be recommended at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

EC532 International Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Swati Dhinra 32L.2.31, Dr Keyu Jin 32L.1.17 and Dr Catherine Thomas NAB.5.27
Dr Vania Stavrekeva

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is concerned with the latest developments in international economics. The course builds on techniques introduced in MSc International Economics (EC421) to take students to the research frontier. One term covers international trade and the other term covers international macroeconomics.

The course is based around research papers. Topics covered vary from year as the research frontier expands. A list of representative topics in international trade includes: micro-econometric studies of international trade, theories of heterogeneous firms and trade, theories of incomplete contracts and trade, and the political economy of trade policy. A list of representative topics in international macroeconomics includes international business cycles, determinants of international capital flows, portfolio choice and risk sharing, monetary and fiscal policy in open economies, theoretical and empirical work on the real exchange rate and international financial crises (e.g., currency attacks and sovereign defaults).

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings will be from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC533

Labour Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels 32L.2.10, Prof Stephen Machin 32L.2.06A and Prof Yona Rubinstein NAB.5.32

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics and MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the course is to familiarise students with main theoretical and empirical issues in current labour economics, to provide them with the tools for carrying out independent research in the field, and to provide a perspective on areas of ongoing research. The course has a strong applied focus. For each major topic covered we will investigate the main available theories in light of their testable implications, and discuss the advantages and limitations of existing empirical work and assess policy options.

Topics include:

- Labour supply, household behaviour, and the allocation of time
- Labour demand and monopsony
- Search, matching, labour market frictions, unions, and unemployment
- Wage determination, compensating differentials, race and gender gaps, and wage inequality
- Human capital, returns to schooling, and training
- Contracts and incentives in the labour market

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC534

Public Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Reck 32L.3.16, Prof Camille Landais 32L.3.23 and Mr Xavier Jaravel 32L.3.14

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover the economics of the public sector, including material on taxation, public expenditures and political economics. The course, which covers both theory and empirics, aims to give students a broad overview of this growing field and bring them to the research frontier.

The specific topics covered may vary from year to year, but the following general areas would typically be included:

- Behavioural responses to taxes and transfers
- Optimal taxation
- Dynamic taxation
- Behavioural public economics
- Social insurance
- Federalism
- Privatization and regulation
- Voting

- The role of communication in politics
- Special-interest politics
- Political institutions
- Political accountability

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of the term. Although the course will not be based on a textbook as such, it will make extensive use of the Handbook of Public Economics Vol. 1-4 (A.J. Auerbach and M. Feldstein, eds.) and of T Persson and G. Tabellini, Political Economy, MIT Press, 2002.

Assessment: Other (40%) and other (30%) in the MT and LT.

Take home exam (30%) in the ST.

The assessment for this course is as follows:

- 1) 4 problem sets due throughout the MT and LT terms (40%)
- 2) An "extended replication exercise" (30%) which would consist of:
 - i) writing a referee report on that paper (MT)
 - ii) replicating a paper (empirical paper or paper based on simulations), (beginning of LT)
 - iii) starting an extension of that paper (which requires developing a research design, positioning the question of the extension in the literature, etc.) ; (end of LT, start of ST)
- 3) A take-home exam in the ST (30%)

EC535

Development Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Maitreesh Ghatak 32L.3.08A, Prof Nava Ashraf 32L.3.18, Dr Gharad Bryan 32L.3.10 and Prof Tim Besley 32L.3.37

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover advanced topics in development economics where current research is active. It is intended to introduce research students in economics to the latest research in development economics and to serve as an input into the research work of these students.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback will be given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the MT and LT.

There will be six take home problem sets, three in MT and three in LT. Problem set questions may include an empirical exercise analysing data, a computation exercise, solving a theoretical exercise, or evaluating a recent unpublished working paper. Each problem set will carry equal weight.

EC536

Economics of Industry for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pasquale Schiraldi 32L.4.22, Prof Alessandro Gavazza 32L.4.21 and Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L.4.19

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The main goal is to familiarize students with selected theoretical and empirical topics in industrial organization and to put students in a position to do their own research. Classical IO theory, well established empirical techniques including estimation of demand, production and models of strategic interaction and topics at the forefront of current IO research will be covered.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the MT and LT.

8 take home problem sets (two for each part - four in MT and four in LT). Each problem set will carry equal weight. Problem set questions may include an empirical exercise analysing data, a computation exercise, solving an analytical problem or evaluating a recent unpublished working paper.

EC537 Microeconomic Theory for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L.3.21, Prof Balazs Szentes 32L.4.05 and Dr Andrew Ellis 32L.3.15

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics for MRes students (EC441).

Course content: The objective of this course is to provide students with a graduate level introduction to advanced topics and contemporary developments in Microeconomic Theory. Topics will include:

- Classic static and dynamic game theory
- Contract theory
- Bounded rationality
- Psychology and economics.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and assessed by teachers.

Indicative reading: Osborne M, and Rubinstein A, A Course in Game Theory, MIT Press, 1994. Fudenberg D, and Tirole J, Game Theory, MIT Press, 1991.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC539 Macroeconomics for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shengxing Zhang 32L.1.16, Prof Ricardo Reis 32L.1.27 and Prof Philippe Aghion 32L.2.30

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Surveys the most recent development in macroeconomics, with an emphasis on technical detail and directions for further research opened up by the material. The goal is to put the students on the research path by bringing them to the research frontier.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC540 Political Economy for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Torsten Persson, Prof Gilat Levy 32L.4.31, Dr Ethan Ilzetzki 32L.1.11 and Prof Torun Dewan CON.6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics, MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour) and MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: MRes Economics first year core courses for Economics students, EC400 and adviser's approval for Government students. EC400, EC411 (or equivalent) and course convener's approval for all other students.

Course content: The course will provide students with the economic methodology and tools for the analysis of political decision making and its effect on public policy. We will consider how political institutions shape economic policy, e.g., how do institutions such as election, legislative bargaining, political parties or non-democratic regimes shape redistributive policies, fiscal policies, and the size of government. We will also consider how in the absence of institutions, political attitudes, beliefs and norms shape policies. The course will focus on analytical models and their testable implications.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will discuss papers in lectures and will be given the opportunity to solve problem sets.

Indicative reading: Political Economics by T. Persson and G. Tabellini (MIT Press 2000); Special Interest Politics by G. Grossman and E. Helpman (MIT Press 2001); Whither Political Economy? Theories, Facts and Issues, by A. Merlo, in Blundell, Richard, Newey, Whitney and Torsten Persson (eds.), Advances in Economics and Econometrics, Vol.1, Cambridge University Press, 2005; Tim Besley and Torsten Persson, Pillars of Prosperity: The Political Economics of Development Clusters, Princeton University Press Torsten Persson & Guido Tabellini, 2005; "The Economic Effects of Constitutions," MIT Press Books, The MIT Press; Positive Political Theory 1, Collective Preference, D. Austen-Smith and J. Banks, Michigan, 2000; Positive Political Theory 2, Strategy and Structure, D. Austen-Smith and J. Banks, Michigan, 2005.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC599 Research Paper in Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Various.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A research paper, between 5,000 and 10,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted early in Summer term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

EH510 Seminar on Modern Economic History

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Neil Cummins and Dr Eric Schneider

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For research students. Also open to other EH graduate students and attended by LSE and other faculty.

Course content: The seminar provides a context in which research students can discuss with a range of seminar presenters from inside and outside LSE presentations of different aspects of economic development during the modern period.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

EH518 Not available in 2018/19 The Economic History of Firms & Industries Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gerben Bakker SAR 5.09

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Morgan SAR 609

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is restricted to 1st year MPhil students in the Department of Economic History, for whom attendance is compulsory.

Course content: Approaches to Economic and Social History

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 16 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: There is no indicative reading list for this course as readings are updated annually to reflect student's interests.

Assessment: Assessment is by two pieces of written work, each approximately 1,500 words, on nominated topics to be submitted by the end of the Lent Term.

EH590 Thesis Workshop in Economic History

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Neil Cummins and Dr Eric Schneider

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Thesis workshop in Economic History.

Teaching: 26 hours of seminars in the MT. 34 hours of seminars in the LT. 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not examined.

EU550 Research Workshop in European Studies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Spyridon Economides COW 2.07, Dr Waltraud Schelkle COW 1.06, Dr Sara Hagemann COW 1.05 and Dr Robert Hancke COW 2.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in European Studies. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in European Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is compulsory for all first, second and third year European Institute MPhil/PhD students. The course is also recommended for those second and third year PhD students in the Government Department whose research focuses on European topics.

Course content: Presentation and detailed discussion of PhD theses, outlines and progression. Discussion of thesis chapters and related doctoral research. Discussion of research design and methodology. Practice conference panel sessions. A detailed syllabus is fixed at the start of each term.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation is required. All students are required: to present at least one substantial chapter/paper draft; to act as a discussant on another paper; and to make a contribution to a conference panel session.

EU555 Not available in 2018/19 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sara Hagemann, Prof Mark Thatcher, Dr Stephen Woolcock and Dr James Morrison

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in European Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This workshop is jointly organised by the European Institute, the Government Department and the International Relations Department for research students of these departments working in the general area of political economy and public policy and who have usually passed their first year. Research students from other departments wishing to attend should contact the teachers responsible. It should be noted that the course has three codes- EU555, GV555 and IR555.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis outlines, chapters and related work. A detailed programme is fixed at the start of the year. Seminar presentations by outside speakers may be added.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Seminars take place every other week throughout MT and LT. There is also a mini-conference in the ST, organised by the students themselves.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending student has to give at least one presentation of their thesis research.

FM502 Corporate Finance for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Michael Burkart CON 1.01, Prof Daniel Paravisini Maggi CON 1.01 and Dr Ashwini Agrawal CON 1.01 Professor Frederic Malherbe CON 1.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Doctoral students in the Departments of Finance and Economics, and other students with the permission of the PhD Finance Programme Director

Course content: The first half of this course focuses on the theory of corporate finance. The theory half of the course can, in turn, be subdivided into two parts. The first part reviews some of the classical concepts in corporate finance, using tools from game and contract theory to study incentive and information problems at the level of the firm, examining how financial contracts can be designed to mitigate these problems. This part of the course also considers how takeovers and ownership concentration can help to mitigate conflict of interests among insiders and investors in firms. The second part focuses on the theory of financial intermediation. This component reviews classic theories of financial intermediation and will introduce students to some recent work in this field. The second half of the course will consider empirical research in corporate finance. Several lectures will be devoted to research methodologies, such as data collection methods, randomized control trials, the use of instrumental variables in linear regressions, regression discontinuity designs, event studies, and structural estimation techniques. There will also be extensive discussion of current and established topics within empirical corporate finance, such as firm financing decisions, investment behaviour, control transactions, corporate governance, financial intermediation, household finance, and overlapping topics with industrial organization and labour economics.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly based on books and journal articles including:

Tirole, Jean, The Theory of Corporate Finance, 2006, Princeton University Press. Freixas, X. and Rochet, J.C., The Microeconomics of Banking, 1997, MIT Press. J. Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross-Section and Panel Data, Cambridge: The MIT Press, 2002. M. Roberts and T. Whited: "Endogeneity in Empirical Corporate Finance," Handbook of the Economics of Finance, vol. 2.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (25%) in the LT.

FM503 Asset Pricing for Research Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Georgy Chabakauri CON 1.01, Dr Dong Lou CON 1.01 and Prof Dimitrios Vayanos CON 1.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is divided into two parts relating to asset pricing theory and empirical asset pricing. The asset pricing theory half of the course will cover static models of frictionless markets, dynamic discrete-time models, dynamic continuous-time models, and models with frictions. The second half of the course is dedicated to empirical evaluation of asset-pricing models. Representative agent models (with power, habit and recursive preferences) and their application to valuation of equities are covered. Next, no-arbitrage term-structure and option-pricing models are discussed. The class concludes with both equilibrium and reduced-form models of currencies.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading:

- Darrell Duffie Asset Pricing Theory, Princeton University Press
- John Campbell, 1999, Asset prices, consumption, and the business cycle, in J. B. Taylor and M. Woodford, Eds., Handbook of Macroeconomics, Volume 1C, Elsevier Science B.V

- John Cochrane, 2004, Asset Pricing, Princeton University Press
- Kenneth Singleton, 2006, Empirical Dynamic Asset pricing, Princeton University Press

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (10%) in the LT.

FM505 PhD Seminar in Finance

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This is a seminar course for PhD students in the early stages of their research to present their work in progress. Outside speakers may also be invited from time to time.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Other meetings to be arranged as necessary.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 10000 words) in the LT.

A 10,000 word essay on a topic to be agreed with the student's supervisor. This essay is to be submitted by the end of the ST of the third year of registration.

GI500 Doctoral Workshop: Department of Gender Studies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Clare Hemmings and Professor Wendy Sigle

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Gender. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to give students experience and practice in presenting chapters or papers related to their current research for critical discussion. The focus of the seminar is on the research process and students are expected to present at least once per year. Some summer term sessions may be used for professional training, such as CV preparation, conference paper preparation, publishing and teaching organisation.

Teaching: 13 one-and-a-half hour seminars held fortnightly in the MT, LT and ST. First year students must also audit GI424 Gender Theories in the Modern World (lectures only) and GI402 Gender, Knowledge and Research Practice (full participation in course). All students are expected to participate in courses run by the Department of Methodology, LSE Gender or within the School as advised by their supervisors. Students are also expected to participate in research seminars and public lectures. GI500 is team taught by faculty across the department.

Indicative reading: PhD chapters and articles suggested by students relevant to their topic.

Assessment: No summative assessment, but attendance and participation is considered part of the overall formal assessment of progress, including upgrade at the end of the first year and annually thereafter. Students are normally expected to attend GI500 until the end of their third year.

Students should refer to the PhD handbook for advice on milestones.

GV501 Doctoral Workshop: Political Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Katrin Flikschuh and Prof Lea Ypi

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Compulsory for PhD students in the Government Department specialising in political theory.

Course content: An opportunity for students to present chapters or papers related to their current research for critical discussion.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

There are typically 5 sessions in MT and 5 sessions in LT, and a variable number of sessions in ST. The precise schedule will be made available at the start of each term.

GV503 Political Philosophy Research Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Valentini

Dr Lucia Rubinelli

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Compulsory for all PhD students in the Government Department specialising in political theory. Other interested students are welcome to attend, if numbers permit.

Course content: Guest speakers present papers and initiate discussion at seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: No assessment

GV504 Research Methods in Political Theory

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Lea Ypi

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the philosophical and methodological foundations of political theory. It aims to give doctoral students a comprehensive conceptual toolbox that can be brought to bear on many different substantive problems and research questions in political theory and neighbouring fields and will prepare doctoral students for choosing and reflecting on their methodological approach. The course runs in concurrence with the Political Philosophy Research Seminar and the Doctoral Workshop in Political Theory, complemented by a reading group in the Lent Term on methodological questions in political theory.

Teaching: 20 hours of workshops in the MT. 10 hours of seminars and 20 hours of workshops in the LT. 4 hours of workshops in the ST.

Formative coursework: Regular presentations in the reading group.

Indicative reading: Some possible choices for the reading group:

- Josiah Ober, Demopolis (Cambridge University Press 2017)
- William Claire Roberts, Marx's Inferno, Princeton University Press (2016).
- Tommie Shelby, Dark Ghetto, Harvard University Press (2016).

GV513 Half Unit Qualitative Methods in the Study of Politics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog CON4.01

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other PhD students must request permission from the class teacher, which is routinely granted subject to capacity.

Course content: This course introduces and critically evaluates, at the advanced postgraduate level, a key range of qualitative techniques and methods in political science. It aims to build students' capability to evaluate such methods and to select, reject, and deploy them in research design and practice.

The course begins with debates over the place of qualitative methods in political science, and the question of how to match ideas to methods. The rest of the course is devoted to exploring a range of qualitative techniques, including case selection, case studies and process tracing, comparisons, interviews and field research, qualitative comparative analysis, and "mixed methods". The content of each week will be integrated as closely as possible with participants' own research projects (even if qualitative work constitutes only a small part thereof). The course is relevant for political scientists, but also students of development and international relations.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Critiques of articles or books that use the various methodologies discussed in the course.

Indicative reading: G. King, R. Keohane, and S. Verba, Designing Social Inquiry: Scientific inference in qualitative research (Princeton, 1994). Antoinette Burton ed., Archive Stories: Facts, Fictions, and the Writing of History (Duke University Press, 2006). Paul Rabinow, Reflections on Fieldwork in Morocco, first published 1977 (University of California Press, 2007); David Collier and Henry Brady, Rethinking Social Inquiry (Rowman and Littlefield 2010); John Gerring, Case Study Research: Principles and Practices (Cambridge University Press 2007).

Assessment: Essay (30%, 2500 words) in the MT.

Project (70%, 3000 words) in the LT.

(1) A thorough critique of an article which uses one of the methods discussed in the course (2500 words) and (2) EITHER a complete "mock" research design, preferably (although not necessarily) on their own research question (3000 words) OR a discussion of the advantages and limitations of a specific empirical technique, based on a review of at least two pieces of published research (3000 words).

GV514 Political Science and Political Economy Doctoral Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephane Wolton CON 5.08

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Mainly for second and subsequent year research students and staff in Government and elsewhere in the School involved in research in political science and/or political economy. First year MRes and research students are welcome to attend.

Course content: The PSPE Doctoral Workshop/Work in Progress Seminar is intended as a setting in which Research Students from the Government Department present and receive feedback on early stage and ongoing research projects. In weeks when research students do not present, LSE PhD students, LSE staff, and visiting scholars from other departments will present. The Seminar aims to foster a strong and lively research community and as such, welcome empirical or theoretical work linked in any way to politics or political economy.

Teaching: 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 10 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The workshop will meet every week.

Assessment: Not assessed.

GV517 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Comparative Political Economy: New Approaches and Issues in CPE

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Soskice and Prof Catherine Boone

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources) and MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is open to research students from any of the LSE departments.

Pre-requisites: This course will be open to research students (PhD students) from any of the LSE departments.

Course content: This half-unit reading seminar will survey a set of major topics in the Comparative Political Economy (CPE) of advanced capitalist and developing countries. We will consider different analytic strategies for conceptualizing variation in national economic structure, explaining change in economic structure, and understanding the political causes and effects thereof. The seminar is designed for PhD students (research students) across the School wanting to familiarize themselves with some of the major themes, controversies, and research frontiers in CPE. Our goal is to nurture innovation in doctoral-level CPE research at the LSE.

While situating our analyses in the context of a changing global economy, our focus will be on describing and explaining transformation at the level of nation states. Drivers of change can be found in the locus and organization of political power, in technological change, and/or in the dynamics of capital. Our seminar will explore both productive connections and tensions that emerge across these explanatory models.

Course materials are organized around three major topic areas (though like most else in CPE they are interrelated): redistribution, accumulation, and domestic regimes. A great many questions fit into these areas and our idea is that the seminars should enable students to raise issues related to their research.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: For formative work, feedback will be provided on a dissertation proposal or chapter.

Indicative reading: Ben Ansell, From the Ballot to the Blackboard: The Redistributive Political Economy of Education Reform, CUP 2014. Beramendi, Hausermann, Kitschelt and Kriesi eds. The Politics of Advanced Capitalism CUP 2015. Brynjolfsson & McAfee, The Second Machine Age, Norton 2014. Ben Ross Schneider, Hierarchical Capitalism in Latin America: Business, Labor, and the Challenges of Equitable Development (CUP 2013).

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Each student will submit a 20-25 page (double spaced) research paper, dissertation proposal, or draft dissertation chapter as the basis of assessment for this course.

GV555 Not available in 2018/19 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mark Thatcher, Dr Stephen Woolcock, Dr James Morrison and Dr Sara Hagemann

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in European Studies and MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This workshop is jointly organised by the European Institute, the Government Department and the International Relations Department for research students of these departments working in the general area of political economy and public policy and who have usually passed their first year. Research students from other departments wishing to attend should contact the teachers responsible.

It should be noted that the course has three codes- EU555, GV555 and IR555.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis outlines, chapters and related work. A detailed programme is fixed at the start of the year. Seminar presentations by outside speakers may be added.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Seminars take place every other week throughout MT and LT. There is also a mini-conference in the ST, organised by the students themselves.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending student has to give at least one presentation of their thesis research.

GV599 Research Prospectus in Political Science

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Valentini

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is not available as an outside option. For MRes/PhD students in Political Science only.

Course content: A research paper, not to exceed 10,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted in August.

Assessment: Research project (100%, 10000 words) in August.

GV5X1 Research Design in the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Valentini, Dr Steffen Hertog and Dr Daniel Berliner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to help PhD students develop a research design. Students will learn how to find their research questions, choose a feasible data collection or modelling strategy, and match data collection and analytic methods to the aims of the PhD project. We also consider the relation of political theory and political science and explore research methodologies in normative theory. This course is therefore designed to be a primer in asking the right questions, exploring the options available to us and understanding the consequences of the design decisions that we make. Accordingly, this course is ultimately about turning good research questions into systematic projects that deliver interesting and worthwhile results. We also debate issues in research ethics and provide advice on publication strategies

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 7 hours of workshops in the ST.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

Formative coursework: This is a PhD level Research Design course – we do not intend to have additional essays. Students will give presentations and receive extensive feedback on their work in progress. These are part of formative rather than summative assessment and are an important part of professional development. The main learning outcomes are to help the PhD students develop professional research designs.

Teaching: Attend the lectures, seminars and reading week activities (if applicable) of the relevant MSc course.

Formative coursework: A plan for the research paper (1,500 words) on which the students receive feedback and topic approval.

Assessment: Other (100%).

Either a 5,000 word research paper (for a half-unit course) or a 10,000 word research paper (for a full-unit course), to be submitted on Tuesday Week 1 of the subsequent term (i.e., modules taken in the Michaelmas term submit in Week 1 of the Lent term; modules taken in the Lent term submit in Week 1 of the Summer term). The research paper will be co-marked by the convenor of the relevant MSc course and the PhD supervisor of the student.

GY500 Research Project Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Olmo Silva STC 5.06A, Dr Murray Low STC 5.12 and Dr Benjamin Groom STC 4.20

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics and MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Presentations by research students of aspects of their own research, stressing problems of theory, methodology and techniques.

Teaching: A series of workshops, running throughout the year, organised by each of the three research clusters in the Department of Geography & Environment (Economic Geography; Environmental Economics & Policy; Urbanisation, Planning and Development).

Formative coursework: All students attending this course will be required to present their own research once each year.

Assessment: This course is not intended as preparation for any particular examination.

GY502 Staff / Research Students Seminars

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sefi Roth STC4.21a, Dr Ryan Centner STC 6.01c and Dr Felipe Carozzi, STC 4.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics and MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. For all MPhil/PhD students registered in the Department of Geography and Environment and staff. Other interested students may attend.

Course content: Topical seminar series involving presentations by speakers from both inside and outside the Department on aspects of their own research.

Teaching: There are three different seminar series taking place regularly throughout the year, organised by each of the three research clusters in the Department of Geography & Environment. The Economic Geography cluster seminar series is organized in conjunction with the Spatial Economics Research Centre (SERC); the Environmental Economics & Policy cluster seminar series is organized together with the Grantham Research Institute on Climate Change and the Environment; and the Urbanisation, Planning and Development seminar series. The timing and length of each seminar series vary across research clusters. Urbanisation, Planning and Development Cluster: *8 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 8 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT. Economic Geography Cluster: *10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT. Environmental Economics and Policy Cluster: *11 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT, LT and ST. *Note that the actual seminar schedule is subject to change due to availability of speakers.

Assessment: This course is not intended as preparation for any particular examination. But, students will find it useful in increasing their awareness of current research and the application of research methods across the discipline.

GY526 Half Unit Advanced Methods in Environmental and Resource Economics: Time, Risk and Environmental Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antony Millner FAW Grantham Research Institute and Dr Benjamin Groom STC 420

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

A strong background in economics is required to take this course for credit. A Master's degree in economics or equivalent will usually be required. Students from the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and those enrolled on GY426: Environmental and Resource Economics are allowed to audit the course.

Pre-requisites: The course will be core training for the PhD in Environmental Economics. A background in Economics is therefore required to take this course. Students taking the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change or students enrolled on the GY426: Environmental and Resource Economics can audit the course.

Course content: Many of the most important environmental problems require us to choose between policy options with very uncertain, very long-run, consequences. Climate change provides an archetypal example, but this is also true of e.g. biodiversity loss and the decline in global fisheries. This half unit course will introduce you to the decision tools economists use to inform long-run, uncertain, policy choices. We will critically examine these tools, and how they are applied in environmental economics. The aim is to provide you with enough technical background to be able to read current research papers in the field, evaluate their claims for yourself, and begin to formulate your own research questions. Topics will include intertemporal choice and discounting, risk, uncertainty and learning, catastrophes, and some more advanced discussion of dynamic optimization. We will connect some of the economics literature on these topics to parallel discussions in philosophy. We will illustrate the theory we cover with applications to common-pool resource problems, climate change, and renewable and exhaustible resource management.

There will be 5 x 2 hour lectures:

- 1) Inter-temporal Decision Making;
- 2) Risk and Uncertainty;
- 3) Information and Learning;
- 4) The Economics of Catastrophes;
- 5) Elements of Dynamic Optimisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be 5 x 2 hour lectures:

- 1) Inter-temporal Decision Making;
- 2) Risk and Uncertainty;
- 3) Information and Learning;
- 4) The Economics of Catastrophes;
- 5) Elements of Dynamic Optimisation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5

problem sets in the LT.

Formative coursework will take the form of a problem set each week.

Indicative reading: Human well-being and the natural environment. Partha Dasgupta, Oxford University Press, 2004; Valuing the Future: Economic Theory and Sustainability. Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

The summative assessment project counts for 100% of the overall grade for the course. This project will test understanding of the theoretical methods and their application to real world problems.

HP500 Advanced Health Policy and Health Economics

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Street COW 3.03 and Dr Mylene Lagarde COW 3.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Admission to the Department of Health Policy's PhD programme in Health Policy and Health Economics

Course content: The PhD programme will be centred around this core course. Alongside a set of traditional and bespoke lectures, the course includes a series of seminars given by faculty in the Department of Health Policy and external speakers, thereby guaranteeing exposure to different materials, research areas, and theoretical and analytical techniques.

The course will provide students with insights into the breadth of work in the areas of health and social care policy and health economics, and will act as a supportive critical forum for discussion of each PhD student's work-in-progress. The course features a journal club where key articles are critically appraised. In the second and third years of enrolment, full-time students will be required to participate in work-in-progress seminars where students present work relating to their theses and contribute fully to discussions on their colleagues' work, and will be encouraged to attend external conferences.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 5 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Over the course of the academic year, 11 hours of lectures 22 hours of seminars will take place.

Students on the course will have reading weeks in Week 6 of both Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two one-hour presentations over the course of the academic year. In one of these, the student is to contribute to the course's journal club by critically appraising an important contribution to the health policy or health economics literature. In the other instance, students will present work-in-progress, thereby showing understanding of the concepts of the course and its application in designing their PhD thesis.

Assessment: Oral examination (100%).

Summative assessment in the first year of full-time PhD enrolment will consist of a 5,000 word thesis document detailing students' thesis proposal, including research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. Students are subject to a viva voce and marking of this document by the two non-supervisory members of the department who make the decision on upgrading. Students will be required to achieve a minimum grade of 60%.

HY501 International History Research Student Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Vladislav Zubok SAR 3.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in International History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The workshop aims to introduce students to effective archival research, issues in the preparation of a thesis and means of launching a career in academic or related fields; and the opportunity to present research in progress.

Students yet to pass their upgrade from MPhil to PhD attend the Introductory Workshop, which meets weekly in the Michaelmas term. Meetings are devoted to research and interviewing techniques and mainly practical issues of historical research. Students due to be upgraded attend the Advanced Workshop held in the Lent and Summer terms, the frequency of meetings depending upon the number of participants. The meetings are intended primarily as a forum for reviewing research in progress, with a view to enabling students to pass their upgrade.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

HY509 International History Research Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Vladislav Zubok SAR 3.13

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in International History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students need to have passed their upgrade to PhD.

Course content: Second, third and fourth year PhD students will present their research for discussion. There will also be seminars by staff from within and outside the department on their own research with relevance for PhD students either in terms of subject and/or methodology.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

HY510 Cold War History Research Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Svetozar Rajak SAR 3.15

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in International History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Second and third year PhD students will present their research for discussion. There will also be seminars by staff from within and outside the department on their own research with relevance for PhD students either in terms of subject and/or methodology.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: See the webpage for the course for further details.

Assessment: The course is not assessed.

IR501 Methods in International Relations Research

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathias Koenig-Archibugi CON 4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The main objective of this course is to familiarise students with the principal approaches to contemporary research in the main branches of International Relations and to help students identify the appropriate methodology for their project. The course is not a technical course on methods. Unless they have taken courses on methodology and methods in their prior studies, students are encouraged to attend appropriate courses at the Department of Methodology. The course will encourage awareness of the relationship between theory and method in the conduct of research. It will highlight trade-offs when choosing specific methods or research designs. Our aim is to train well-rounded academic professionals, who are able to comprehend, critically interrogate, and engage with scholarship employing diverse methodological toolkits. The course therefore aims to expose students to, and generate awareness of, a variety of research methods in the discipline irrespective of the particular approach employed in their doctoral work. The course will aim to promote an environment of mutual support and encouragement amongst first year research students, maximising the potential for cross fertilization between different projects. The course will develop students' presentational skills in a group setting. In addition, sessions on professional development will be offered in the context of the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

In addition, professional development sessions will be offered.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare presentations on examples of published research, commenting on the methodology adopted and the way in which it is applied. Moreover, students are required to submit a short written piece describing and justifying the methodological choices for their PhD. The aim is to practice writing about methodological choices with a view to the chapter students are going to submit to their Research Panel in the Summer Term. More indications about presentations and the written piece will be provided at the beginning of the course.

IR502 International Relations Theory Research Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kirsten Ainley CLM.7.07 and Dr George Lawson CLM.5.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR502 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working in the area of international theory, broadly defined to include work in rationalist, constructivist and critical traditions. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars developing innovative theoretical approaches to better explain, understand and critique world politics. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. The papers are circulated in advance.

Teaching: 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR504 Security and Statecraft Research Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz CLM.4.05 and Dr Milli Lake

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR504 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working in the area of security and statecraft broadly defined. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. Research in this area draws on diverse theoretic and methodological approaches, and ranges across levels of analysis, regions, and eras. Specific foci of research include diplomacy, foreign and security relations, foreign policy analysis, comparative strategy, identity and security, war and society, state-building, peace-building and conflict resolution, revolutions, human security and genocide.

Teaching: 12 hours of workshops in the MT. 15 hours of workshops in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR507 International Institutions, Law and Ethics Research Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM.4.09

Dr Uli Sedelmeier CLM.5.06

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

Course content: IR507 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working on the theory, history or practice international institutions, international law and ethics. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. Research in this area runs from the study of intergovernmental and nongovernmental institutions and global governance, to the politics of international law, to the ethical and normative dimensions of global politics. It includes, but is not limited to, the study of international institutions such as the European Union, North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, and the International Criminal Court and international issues such as human rights, humanitarian intervention, climate change, and international crime.

Teaching: 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR509 International Relations Research Design Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tomila Lankina (for first year research students), Professor Margot Light (for second year research students).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

This workshop is compulsory for all first year and second year International Relations Department (IRD) research students and open to other interested IRD research students.

Course content: In the first year, this workshop will address issues concerning the formulation and design of the PhD research project. Its principal objective is to assist first year research students in designing a well-thought out and manageable thesis. It seeks to do so by providing a forum in which first year students discuss their research topic, the particular set of questions they intend to address and the methods they wish to use with other members of the workshop. Its aim is to provide students with constructively critical observations about their research project and the problems they may confront. It also seeks to promote an esprit d'corps amongst the first-year research students by familiarising them with the work of their peers.

In the second year, the focus will be on preparing students for their upgrade Research Panel in the summer. Exactly how the workshop will proceed will be decided by the members in their first session, but the aim is to give students the opportunity to update and refine their research proposals, get peer reactions to the draft chapters on which the decision to upgrade will be based, and also to talk to each other about the common problems they face. There will also be some sessions to consider such 'professional concerns' as the balance to be struck between teaching and research, the role of presentations at conferences, seminars and similar professional gatherings.

Teaching: In the first year, the workshop will meet starting in week 1 of Lent Term. There will be initial discussions of various theoretical traditions and different approaches to research design within International Relations. All first-year students are required to give a presentation outlining their research to the seminar, a copy of their research proposal (of no more than 5,000 word) being circulated in advance to the workshop participants. There will be two presentations per meeting. Students must also attend IR501 Research Methods Training Seminar and participate in at least one of the Department's other research workshops.

In the second year, the workshop will meet starting in week five of the MT. All members of the workshop are required to present one or more draft chapters of their theses. They will need to provide a copy of the chapter for prior circulation to the workshop participants. Students must also participate in at least one of the Department's other research workshops.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR555 International Political Economy Research Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Morrison 95 ALD.1.14, Dr Ranjit Lall and Dr Covadonga Meseguer

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in European Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. It is open to all interested research students and faculty with the Department and is available with permission to students on other programmes.

This workshop is run with the Government Department and European Institute (GV555 and EU555).

Course content: IR555 is part of the research-training programme for all research students working in the area of international political economy: the relationship between states and markets in a global context. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present their work, discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved, discuss common challenges in conducting research in this area and obtain feedback on their work. Research in this area works at multiple levels of analysis and draws on an array of theoretic and methodological approaches from several disciplines. Both historical and contemporary questions are addressed across a range of issues including: trade, migration, global environmental politics, international economic organisations, economic diplomacy, international finance, foreign investment, exchange rates, and monetary relations.

Teaching: 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

LL500 Doctoral Research Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB.7.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Law and MPhil/PhD in Law (Socio-Legal Theory). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to equip students with the skills required to undertake advanced legal research. The focus in the MT is on methodological and theoretical issues arising in legal scholarship. The focus in the LT is on the various stages of the PhD process, and on preparation for professional life in academic law beyond the PhD. In the ST an Upgrade Conference is held at which first year research students present their work-in-progress.

Teaching: 22 hours of seminars in the MT. 22 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT and LT.

Assessment: There are no examination arrangements. However, attendance is compulsory for first year research students. Research students in other years may also attend.

MA500 Mathematics: Seminar on Combinatorics, Games and Optimisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Boettcher, Dr Laszlo Vegh and Dr Paul Duetting

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminar ranges over many areas of pure and applied mathematics. The emphasis is on topics in discrete mathematics, operations research and game theory. The seminar is regarded as an important part of research students' formal training and they are expected to attend and contribute.

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars and 33 hours of seminars in the MT. 33 hours of seminars and 33 hours of seminars in the LT. 21 hours of seminars and 21 hours of seminars in the ST.

MA501 Research Student Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Allen COL 4.05, Dr Christoph Czichowsky COL 3.11, Dr Pavel Gapeev COL 4.10, Prof Jozef Skokan COL 3.04, Dr Laszlo Vegh NAB.3.05, Dr Julia Boettcher COL 4.03, Dr Paul Duetting COL 3.08 and Dr Albina Danilova COL 4.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminars range across many areas of pure, applied and financial mathematics. The emphasis is on topics in discrete mathematics, algorithms, operations research, game theory, financial mathematics and control theory. The seminars are regarded as an important part of research students' formal training and they will all be expected to attend and contribute. Throughout the academic year, students are also invited to give presentations.

There are additional reading groups aimed at students working in financial mathematics and discrete mathematics. These are compulsory for students working in this area but other students of the MPhil/PhD in Mathematics are welcome to attend.

See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/maths/Seminars/Financial_Mathematics_Reading_Group.aspx and <http://www.lse.ac.uk/maths/Seminars/PhD-Seminar-on-Combinatorics,-Games-and-Optimisation.aspx>

Teaching: PhD Seminar on Combinatorics, Games and Optimisation (MA501.1): 11 one-and-a-half-hour seminars in the MT and LT. 7 one-and-a-half-hour seminars in the ST.

LGSMF Portfolio Optimisation Seminar (MA501.2): 11 three-hour seminars in the LT. 7 three-hour seminars in the ST.

Financial Mathematics Reading Group Seminar (MA501.3): 11 three-hour seminars and 11 one-hour seminars in the MT and LT. 7 three-hour seminars and 7 one-hour seminars in the ST.

Discrete Mathematics Reading Group Seminar (MA501.4): 11 three-hour seminars in the MT and LT. 7 three-hour seminars in the ST.

Approximately 80-90 meetings of between 1 and 3 hours throughout the MT, LT and ST, dependent on speakers. See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/maths/Seminars/Research_Seminars.aspx for schedule and more details.

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Lilie Chouliaraki FAW.7.01D

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society and MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications. This course is not available as an outside option. For Research Students. The course is compulsory for students in the first and second years of the Doctoral Programmes in the Department of Media and Communications. All Research Students in the Department are welcome and encouraged to attend.

Course content: The aim of the course is to raise awareness of theoretical, conceptual and methodological issues in the interdisciplinary field of media and communications research and to develop students skills with respect to theory building, research design and implementation. The course focuses, in particular, on the key conceptual issues and analytical strategies required in media and communication research, with special reference to the study of the changing environment of media production, dissemination and consumption, under conditions of globalization and digitization of information

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Compulsory for first and second year students and open to others. There may be additional seminars or workshops in Summer Term.

Course content:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: a series of lectures offered by Department of Media and Communications faculty in Michaelmas Term. The lectures will normally cover the following topics central to research design across the social sciences, with a specific emphasis on their application to media and communications contexts: the general nature of research as social inquiry, interviewing, discourse analysis, social network analysis, content analysis, visual analysis, survey design/questionnaires, case studies, ethnography and participant observation, as well as research ethics.

ii. Specialist workshops: Workshops (three hours) x 5 Lent Term (each comprised of one 3-hour session), offered by Department of Media and Communications faculty in Lent Term. Students are required to participate in all five workshops.

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Students have to take at least one quantitative analysis course offered by the Department of Methodology (MY464 is the basic option). In addition, students need to take either another quantitative or a qualitative analysis course offered by the Department of Methodology. The combination of courses must be approved by the supervisor and discussed with the MC5M2 convenor.

Teaching:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications:

Lecture (one hour) x 10 Michaelmas Term; Lecture on Writing Methodological Chapters and Papers (one hour) x 1 Lent Term

ii. Specialist workshops: Workshops (three hours) x 5 Lent Term (each comprised of one 3-hour session)

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Quantitative analysis course in Michaelmas Term: Lecture (two hours) x 9 Michaelmas Term; Computer class (one hour) x 9 Michaelmas Term; Quantitative or Qualitative Analysis course in Lent Term (Varies depending on the course): Lecture (two hours) x 9 Lent Term; Computer class or Seminar (one hour) x 9 Lent Term.

Formative coursework:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit one essay of 1,500 words in week 11 of MT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit workshop assignments.

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Most quantitative analysis courses require weekly assignments. The qualitative analysis courses vary in their formative assessment.

Assessment:

Description of assessment:

1 Coursework: One written assignment of either 5,000 or 7,000 words using two methods (including one from the course taken at the Department of Methodology) to be submitted in Summer Term, depending on the MY courses selected.

2 One two-hour examination in Summer Term relating to Quantitative Analysis (e.g. MY551)

Note: Summative assignments differ depending on the components of the methodological training taken by the students. Students must pass all components of MC5M2.

MG500 Information Systems PhD Seminar Series and Workshops

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24 and Dr Susan Scott NAB3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is not available as an outside option. This course consists of a series of seminars and workshops at which PhD students present their work in progress.

Course content: This seminar series provides a forum for research students in management to present work in progress. Outside speakers may be invited from time to time.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

For 2018/19 this will consist of a weekly, two hour, student-led seminar in weeks 2-10 of Michaelmas and Lent term. There will also be one full-day PhD workshop with a guest speaker MT & LT. Details of these workshops are to be emailed to students and staff as they are arranged.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment but all students are expected to attend the one day workshops and must email the course teacher to explain any absences. Attendance at the weekly seminars is more flexible but students should make an effort to attend as many as possible and to be involved in the organisation of at least one per year.

MG502 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Foundations of Social Research in Information Systems: Paradigms and Traditions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Compulsory for MPhil/PhD Informations Systems and Innovation students in their first year. Students from related PhD programmes who are interested in epistemological paradigms may be able to join the course with the teacher's permission.

Course content: The course introduces the foundations of social research and the key issues concerning the status of knowledge and the forms by which it is acquired. The course deals with the principal paradigms/traditions in the philosophy of science and epistemology and the answers they have provided to the basic questions concerning the status of knowledge claims and the forms by which valid knowledge claims can be made. The main focus of the course concerns the ways by which these key epistemological paradigms have been applied in the fields of Information Systems and Organization Studies. The course is structured around the following basic epistemological paradigms:

Positivism Critical Realism Constructivism Hermeneutics, Phenomenology Critical Theory Structuralism Postmodernism

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures, 9 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Archer, M. et al. (eds.), (1998) Critical Realism, Readings. London: Routledge; Dreyfus, H & Rabinow, P. (1982) Michel Foucault: Beyond Structuralism and Hermeneutics. (2002) Qualitative Research in Information Systems. London: Sage.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words) in the LT.

An essay of between 5,000-7,000 words to be submitted by the end of March.

MG503 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Interpretations of Information

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24, Dr Edgar Whitley and Dr Carsten Sorensen

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Other MSc students may follow this course but a good knowledge of information technology is required.

Course content: The course explores the theoretical foundations of information and the technological and institutional processes by which information is increasingly becoming a pervading and crucial element of organizational and economic life. A central theme of the course is how information and the technologies by which it is produced and disseminated are involved in the constitution and coordination of organizational operations and the control of professional practices and organizational outcomes.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Indicative readings are given below. A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words).

An essay of 7,000 words (100%).

MG505 Not available in 2018/19 Research in Organisational Behaviour

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lourdes Sosa and Dr Chia-Huei Wu

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course seeks to provide PhD students with a foundational understanding of established research in Organisational Behaviour with the objective of encouraging them to design novel research that advances the field. Specifically, this course will introduce students to the evaluation of established research in micro- and macro-level Organisational Behaviour, progressing through units of analysis from psychology research to organisational theory.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Formative feedback on the individual presentation and essay will be provided throughout the course. Students will be expected to review their plan for presentation in office hours beforehand, and to informally present work in progress throughout the course for continuous feedback.

Indicative reading: Indicative readings include:

MG509 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Managing Digital Platform Innovation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB 3.24 and Dr Carsten Sorensen NAB 3.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course deals with the dynamics of large-scale digital service platforms and their associated ecosystems. It is based on the extant research into modularity, platforms, boundary resources, and digital ecosystems across the fields of management, innovation, and information technology studies. The aim to ground the students in the traditional conceptualisations of IS and use this as the base for exploring the theoretical challenges brought about by a variety of digital and layered-modular multi-sided platforms. The course further examines the components, operations and trends of digital ecosystems, for example focusing on the role of large distributed datasets applied for organisational intelligence of various forms. Social networks forms a key example of such large, distributed, datasets, and of innovation platforms relying on associated service ecosystems. The course also addresses the particular challenges of business digitalisation and platformisation for the distributed provision of mobile apps, and uses this example as a basis for a broader consideration of platform innovation dynamics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 essay in the MT.

One PowerPoint presentation on a course theme to be handed in week 2 for feedback and one 1500 word essay on the same theme to be handed in for assessment by week 6

MG511 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Technology, Practice and Institutions

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB 3.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will deal with the restructuring of social practices associated with the involvement of technologies of computing and communication in social and organisational life. These ideas will be explored within the context of established institutional fields such as finance, law or health care but it will consider as well the advent of new practices (social media, big data) and the organisational forms within which such practices are accommodated.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words) in the MT.

MG512 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Marketing: Consumer Behaviour

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB 5.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course objective is to familiarize students with research in cognitive psychology, social psychology, and marketing on information processing and judgment and decision making related topics to better understand and develop marketing strategies that affect consumer behavior. There are two main aims of this course: (1) to give students a strong foundation for critical thinking in the area of consumer behavior, and (2) to enable students to conceptualize, develop and operationalize research ideas. Therefore, the focus is on understanding current theoretical and methodological approaches to various aspects of consumer behavior, as well as advancing this knowledge by developing testable hypotheses and theoretical perspectives that build on the current knowledge base. This means that students have to actively read prior research in different areas – try to understand the authors' ideas and develop the habit of constructive criticism of the research. To encourage this habit, the role of author of certain papers may be assigned to some students in the class and the role of reviewer assigned to others.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (40%, 2500 words), essay (40%, 2500 words), essay (5%, 1200 words), essay (5%, 1200 words), essay (5%, 1200 words) and essay (5%, 1200 words) in the MT.

Participants will be required to (a) write 4 short, 2-page critiques of a paper from the reading lists in order to demonstrate their understanding of an area/topic, and (b) develop 2 new research ideas (throughout MT) that will help participants advance the current state of knowledge. An additional preliminary critique paper and research idea paper will be used as formative assessments. The latter two new research idea papers, weighted 40% and 40% respectively, will be used as the summative assessment components. The balance 20% of the grade will be based on the last 4 short, 2-page critiques of specific papers in the reading list.

MG513 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Marketing: Quantitative Modelling

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Om Narasimhan NAB 5.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Requiring some understanding of calculus, probability, statistics and matrix algebra, the course is designed to develop the quantitative foundations for marketing decisions. Both theoretical models which help analyse marketing issues, and decision-support models will be covered. Features of the course include a focus all marketing decisions: product, pricing, advertising, salesforce and distribution. All necessary analysis tools from resource allocation models to NEIO (New Empirical Industrial Organization) models will be discussed. A comprehensive set of exercises will enable students to test their knowledge of models and their understanding of the material discussed in class. The course will also incorporate recent research findings in all aspects of marketing including online marketing and social media marketing.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (40%, 2500 words), essay (40%, 2500 words), essay (5%, 1200 words), essay (5%, 1200 words), essay (5%, 1200 words) and essay (5%, 1200 words) in the LT.

Participants will be required to write 4 short 2-page critiques of a paper from the reading lists in order to demonstrate their understanding of an area/topic (these critiques might involve the analysis of a dataset as well), and (b) develop 2 new research ideas (throughout MT) that will help participants advance the current state of knowledge. An additional preliminary critique paper and research idea paper will be used as formative assessments. The latter two new research idea papers, weighted 40% and 40% respectively, will be used as the summative assessment components. The balance 20% of the grade will be based on the last 4 short, 2-page critiques of specific papers in the reading list.

MG515 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Social Organisation

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Harm Barkema

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: MG506 Micro Organisational Behaviour in Organisations ('M-OB') and MG514 Macro OB: Organisation and Management Theory.

Course content: Management research – and more specifically, OB and OMT – in the 21st century, is broadening its focus at an increasing pace (as measured by the number of papers recently published in our top journals, and 'in press'), by also studying organizations with social goals. For instance, corporations with social goals (e.g., CSR programs, supply chains with social goals), social enterprises or entrepreneurship under broader social programs (e.g., to increase employment, or women empowerment), NGOs, charities, social movements, incubators with social goals, and – at a more micro-level – 'calling' of workers, moral contracting and ideological currency. The course helps PhD students to understand key theoretical and methodological aspects of this emerging research, including of non-Western contexts, and to develop the insights and skills to formulate their own research agenda in this domain.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The formative assignment will be to develop an "outline" version of the conceptual paper to be written for the summative assignment (rather than a full write-up). The goal of this assignment is to enable students to begin thinking through how to formulate a research agenda in this domain. We will devote our last course session to debriefing and providing peer feedback on these outlines.

Indicative reading: Each faculty presenter will select his/her own reading list, which will rely heavily on journal articles (for example, Academy of Management Journal, Academy of Management Review, Journal of Applied Psychology). An extensive reading list is provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 5000 words) in the MT.

MG518 Half Unit Employment Relations and Human Resource Management Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Marsden NAB 4.22

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available with permission to students on other tracks of the MRes/PhD in Management where regulations permit.

Course content: The MRes seminar in Employment Relations and HRM draws upon Employment Relations, Human Resource Management and organisational theories to advance an understanding of individual, group and firm behaviour, as well as that of representative organisations of workers and management. The course covers a number of issues at an advanced level, and introduces students to emerging topics in various related topics including employment systems, employee voice, status, trust, social exchange theory, organisational justice, ethics and ethical climate, and corporate social responsibility. The seminar discussions will be led by a combination of faculty at the ER/HR group within LSE and prestigious visiting faculty. Throughout the course, students will be exposed to the methodological issues related to conducting research in up-and-coming areas where the research questions may be less known.

The course also involves attendance of the Employment Relations and Human Resources Group research workshops. This serves to familiarise students with the normal process of presenting and discussing academic papers with experienced faculty, and to integrate them more into the faculty.

The course will spread over the Michaelmas and Lent terms so that students build up a progressive understanding of the research process from the works of established scholars in the field, including both LSE faculty and academic visitors.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars spread across the Michaelmas and Lent terms.

Indicative reading: The seminars will follow a variety of formats, including discussing recent work of academic colleagues, and so include the following indicative reading. Ashwin, Sarah and Isupova, Olga (2014) "Behind every great man...": the male marriage wage premium examined qualitatively. Journal of Marriage and Family, 76 (1). pp. 37-55. Assessment: Essay (80%, 4000 words) in the LT.

Other (20%) in the MT and LT.

The other assessment will be based on a compilation of a fortnightly Learning Log designed to build up a systematic reflection on what has been learned from the seminars and faculty workshops.

MG576 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Corporate Social Responsibility and International Labour Standards

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Marsden NAB 4.22

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course examines the human resource management (HRM) and employment relations (ER) strategies of global corporations, with the aim of understanding both the causes of different strategic choices and the consequences of these strategies for diverse stakeholders. It takes the perspective that HRM/ER strategies are influenced by a range of variables, including internal business strategy and resources, as well as external factors such as national legislation, business systems and culture, and regional and global institutions.

The lecture and group-work content are the same as for MG476, but with a special tutorial-style additional programme of work for the doctoral students taking this elective. Assessment will be by the summer examination for MG478 and a 3500 word extended essay.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 7 hours of help sessions in the LT.

Lectures: 10 hours

Group work: 15 hours (Auditing MG478 classes)

Doctoral tutorials: 7 hours (two-weekly intervals)

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Vogel, D. (2005) The Market For Virtue: The Potential and Limits of Corporate Social Responsibility, Washington D.C.: Brookings Institution Press. Crane, A. et al. (2007) 'Does monitoring improve labor standards? Lessons from Nike,' Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 61, 1: 3- 31.

Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (60%, 3500 words) in the ST.

MG599 Not available in 2018/19 Research Paper in Management

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB 5.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students produce a research paper, between 7,000 and 15,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted at the end of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 pieces of coursework in the LT and ST.

Feedback on progress will be provided by the student's PhD Programme director.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 15000 words) in the LT.

MY500 Half Unit Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL8.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is available to all research students.

Course content: Research design necessitates trade-offs between the strengths and weaknesses of different feasible options. This course aims to introduce the broad range of design options and to foster an appreciation of these alternatives for particular research objectives. Drawing on a variety of examples from the social scientific literature, this course will explore design considerations and options across quantitative and qualitative research, including issues of data quality, analysis, reporting and reproducibility. At the end of the course, students will be able to read a wide variety of empirical social science with a critical and balanced perspective and will be better equipped to implement and make arguments defending the methods they use in their PhD theses.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT.

Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignments.

Indicative reading: Robson, Colin and McCartan, Kieran (2015, 4th edition). Real World Research. London: John Wiley.

Assessment: Research proposal (30%) in the MT.

Other (60%) in the ST.

Class participation (10%).

Research Proposal (1500 words), submitted in week 11 of MT (30%). Research Design (4000 words), submitted in Week 1 of ST (60%).

MY505 Half Unit Research Methods for Evaluation in Health, Development and Public Policy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Hendry COL7.05 and Dr Alasdair Jones COL8.12

Availability: This course is open to any Research level student.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some familiarity with qualitative research methods is expected. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the methodological knowledge and research skills to be able to design and critically appraise evaluation research. In the context of the rise of evidence-based policy, the course is designed to extend students' abilities to use evaluative information carefully and critically. The course takes a mixed methods approach. It covers the major quantitative designs, including randomized experiments and observational (i.e. non-randomized) research designs such as selection on observables, difference-in-differences, and the regression discontinuity design. It covers qualitative and participatory research designs and their contribution to formative research, process evaluation, realist evaluations, interpreting outcomes, and assessing transferability to other settings. As well as the major design issues, the course addresses practical and ethical issues of evaluation research, how to write a study protocol, and how to draw lessons from a body of evidence through reviewing and synthesising evidence. Examples from the fields of health, international development and public policy will be used throughout the lectures and seminars.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

10 x 1.5 hour lectures

9 x 1.5 hour seminars

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students write a critical review (1,500 words) of a published evaluation report.

Indicative reading: Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J-S. (2014) Mastering Metrics: The Path from Cause to Effect. Princeton University Press. Bell, S. & Aggleton, P. (2013) Running Randomized Evaluations: A Practical Guide, Princeton University Press. Patton, M. Q. (2015). Qualitative Research and Evaluation Methods. (4th Edition). London: Sage.

Assessment: Coursework (50%, 2500 words) in the LT.

Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.

50% group-based coursework. Students work in groups to develop an evaluation design, and write it up individually (2,500 words).

50% essay. Students are given a choice of essay questions, in response to which they write one essay (3,000 words).

MY521 Half Unit Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jen Tarr, COL8.06 (MT) and Dr Eleanor Knott, COL.7.08 (LT)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies, MPhil/PhD in Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is available to all research students.

Course content: This course presents the fundamentals of qualitative research methods. The course has the dual aims of equipping students with conceptual understandings of current academic debates regarding qualitative methods, and with practical skills to put those methods into practice. It prepares students to design, carry out, report, read and evaluate qualitative research projects. First, students learn how to collect data using methods including interviews, focus groups participant observation, and selecting documents and new media data.. Second, we cover analysis, using thematic, content, and discourse analysis. Issues of research design, quality indicators, epistemology and ethics are addressed.

This is a generalist, introductory course and we invite students who have little previous experience of qualitative methods. Students with prior training in qualitative methods might be interested in more specialist alternatives offered by the Department of Methodology, such as MY526 Doing Ethnography, MY527 Qualitative Research with Non-Traditional Data, or MY528 Qualitative Text Analysis. Lectures introduce the main conceptual and practical issues. Seminars provide practical experience with the methods.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

The course runs twice per year: in MT and again in LT. The content of the course is exactly the same in each term. Week 6 is a Reading Week, during which students work independently on their formative assignments.

Formative coursework: Students submit a portion of their practical work, with some written commentary, for formative assessment in Week 7.

Indicative reading:

- C Seale, G Gobo, JF Gubrium, & D Silverman, (2004). Qualitative Research Practice. London: Sage.

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

One final written project of 4000-5000 words, based on seminar exercises (100%). It takes the form of a research project report, with detailed appendices documenting the methods of data collection and analysis used.

MY526 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Doing Ethnography

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chana Teeger COL7.06

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some prior training in qualitative research methods is expected. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: Doing ethnography enables us to examine how social order is produced as people go about their everyday interactions. Multiple sources of naturally-occurring data are used to understand how communities, organisations and institutions work, informally as well as formally. Contemporary conditions of globalisation, individualisation, bureaucratisation and digitisation introduce new challenges for such fieldwork. This interdisciplinary course equips students with a practical understanding of how to do, and to think about, contemporary ethnography. Core conceptual, ethical and methodological debates are introduced through in-depth engagement with book-length exemplars, and through students' experience of fieldwork. Fieldwork is a key component of the course, with students collecting data in a setting closely related to their PhD topic. Data collection is followed by data analysis and presentation activities. Methodological concerns regarding case selection, establishing rigour, reflexivity, representing others, and ethical issues are addressed in detail. Practical issues addressed include access to study sites, studying elite and marginalised groups, innovative sources of data, and writing field notes. Emphasising that ethnography relies on the researcher-as-research-instrument, the course aims to develop students' sensitivity and rigour as ethnographic researchers.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which time students work independently on their formative assignments.

Formative coursework: An excerpt of field-notes from the field visit undertaken as part of the course (up to 2,500 words). Field-notes should record rich details of observations (the data), researcher reflections and brief interpretations of the significance of these observations. Written feedback will be provided.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

MY527 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Qualitative Research With Non-Traditional Data

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is available to PhD students in departments such as Media & Communications and Sociology. Also available where regulations permit and with permission of the teacher responsible.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some prior training in qualitative research methods is expected, to the equivalent of MY421. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: Most qualitative research is in the form of written or spoken texts, produced through interviews and field notes or collection and analysis of documents. However, new technologies now offer a range of new tools for producing, gathering and analysing new kinds of data. This course will focus primarily on digital and visual methods and how they are reshaping qualitative research. Topics will include mobile methods; social network analysis; social media; emojis, memes and gifs; photo elicitation; video; and visual analysis. Key example readings will be assigned, discussed and assessed each week. Seminars provide practical skills through hands on exercises of data collection and analysis, closely tied with the lecture content. These skills will be developed further in a final research project on a topic of the students' choosing to be submitted at the beginning of summer term.

The course aims to understand how qualitative methods can be used in relation to these emerging streams of data. The course is aimed at students who are considering one or more of these elements as part of their dissertation research design and/or who are interested in gaining more advanced skills in qualitative research.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 will be a Reading Week during which students work independently on their formative assignment. An optional enrichment activity will be assigned.

Formative coursework: Seminar activities will receive in-class feedback. A brief proposal for final summative coursework (c. 1000 words) should be submitted and will receive formative feedback and guidance.

Indicative reading: Note: No one text covers the whole course. Büscher M, Urry J, Witchger K (2011) Mobile Methods. Abingdon and New York: Routledge. Rose, G, 2016. Pink, S, Horst H, Postill J, Hjorth L, Lewis T, Tacchi J. (2016) Digital Ethnography: Principles and Practice. London: Sage.

Assessment: Project (100%, 7000 words).

One 5500-7000 word research project related to the course material, on a topic selected by the student (100%).

MY528 Half Unit Qualitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Audrey Alejandro COL.7.14

Availability: This course is available to all research students who are permitted to take an outside option as part of their programme.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites but some prior training in qualitative research methods is expected. Please contact the course convenor if unsure.

Course content: The goal of this course is to provide students with the skills to systematically identify and extract information from texts and discourses for social scientific purposes. While acquiring those skills, students also learn how to interpret textual data by exploring the concepts and case studies developed across disciplines. The course both establishes a theoretical foundation for text/discourse analysis and takes a practical and applied approach, so that students can acquire greater independence and confidence when conducting their research project.

The first part of the course discusses the major paradigms and traditions of qualitative text analysis and focuses on the application of specific analytical techniques to qualitative data. The main methods of qualitative text analysis, including content analysis and thematic analysis, will be explored with specific emphasis on discourse analysis. The second part of the course places the in-depth analysis of texts in the broader context of research methods. It aims to help students in building critical thinking around qualitative text analysis by familiarising them with a variety of mixed-methods research designs that can be used when studying texts and discourses.

Lectures introduce the main conceptual and practical issues.

Seminars provide practical experience of implementing the methodology. Students will be working directly with qualitative data and performing their own analyses on a diverse range of materials, such as political speeches and news articles, as well as cultural texts such as movie scripts and songs.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 is a Reading Week during which students work independently on their Summative Assignment.

Formative coursework: A project proposal (c.1,000 words).

Students write a proposal for the project that will comprise their summative assessment.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.

MY530 Advanced Qualitative Research Workshops

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alasdair Jones COL 8.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Law, MPhil/PhD in Law (Socio-Legal Theory), MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources), MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation), MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Research students who are undertaking projects using qualitative methods.

Pre-requisites: Some prior training in qualitative methods (eg: MY400 and MY421 or equivalent). Students who have no prior training in qualitative methods should consider taking MY521M or MY521L.

Course content: MY530 is a series of workshop modules that provide hands-on, in-depth and advanced training for specific methodologies of qualitative data collection, analytic techniques and research design issues. Research students can sign up to as many workshops as they wish. The programme includes topics such as in-depth interviews, focus groups, ethnography and participant observation, narrative interviewing and analysis, visual methods, classical content analysis, thematic analysis, etc. Each workshop consists of two sessions of two hours. The second session is practical. These interdisciplinary sessions provide a space for students to develop advanced methodological skills and exchange ideas with peers.

Teaching: Sessions to be held throughout the year, beginning in week 8 of MT and continuing throughout LT; Participants sign up via MOODLE.

Indicative reading: Each session will provide its own recommended reading list, available on Moodle.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY551 Half Unit Introduction to Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson Col.8.05 and Dr Eleanor Power Col.7.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MRes/PhD in Management (Employment Relations and Human Resources) and MRes/PhD in Management (Information Systems and Innovation). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods, MPhil/PhD in Sociology and MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is available to all research students.

Course content: An intensive introduction to quantitative data analysis in the social sciences. The course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical estimation and inference. At the end of the course students should be able to carry out univariate and bivariate data analysis and have an appreciation of multiple linear regression. The computer classes give hands-on training in the application of statistical techniques to real social science research problems. No prior knowledge of any statistical software is necessary.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of the term.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the first week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY551M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY551L which is taught in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the weekly computer classes can be submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online and can be purchased as a hard copy. Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data. Pearson Education. Or Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. Pearson Education (note that the second book is more advanced and is particularly useful if you are planning to take MY551 and MY552).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Two hour unseen examination in ST. Students are permitted to bring a limited quantity of written notes into the examination.

MY552 Half Unit Applied Regression Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniele Fanelli COL7.07 and Dr Indraneel Sircar COL7.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in European Studies, MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MPhil/PhD in Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods, MPhil/PhD in Sociology, MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing), MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour) and MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Research students where programme regulations allow.

Pre-requisites: Students are required to have completed MY451/ MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis or an equivalent level statistics course.

Course content: The course is designed for students with a good working knowledge of elementary descriptive statistics; sampling distributions; one and two sample tests for means and proportions; correlation and the linear regression model with one or more predictor variables. The course is concerned with deepening the understanding of the generalized linear model and its application to social science data. The main topics covered are linear regression modelling and binary, multinomial and ordinal logistic regression.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the first week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY552M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY552L which is taught in Lent Term.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the weekly computer classes can be submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: A Agresti & B Finlay, Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. A course pack will be available for download online. Additional reading will be recommended.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Two hour unseen examination in ST. Students are permitted to bring a limited quantity of written notes into the examination.

MY554 Half Unit Not available in 2018/19 Applied Statistical Computing using R

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL.8.10

Availability: This course is available to all research students. The course is also available to taught masters students with different assessment, as MY454.

Pre-requisites: Students must have taken Applied Regression Analysis (MY452) or an equivalent intermediate regression course.

Course content: This course will cover basic statistical programming for social science research as well as several associated data analysis methods. Programming topics include basic programming, data structures, optimisation, and simulation. Applied statistical topics include nonparametric density estimation and regression, additive models, cross-validation, the bootstrap, and permutation/randomisation inference. Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5

problem sets in the LT.

Each problem set is associated with a computer classes, and may be submitted for marking and feedback.

Indicative reading: Keele, L. Semiparametric Regression for the Social Sciences. Matloff, N. The Art of R Programming

Assessment: Coursework (100%) in the ST.

A single piece of coursework (100%) in the ST applying the methods covered in the course to a topic in the area of the student's research. The topic and scope of the assignment will be developed in discussion with the teacher responsible for the course during LT.

MY555 Half Unit Multivariate Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MPhil/PhD in Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods, MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing) and MRes/PhD in Management (Organisational Behaviour). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: The course will assume a knowledge of standard linear regression models, to the level covered in MY452/MY552 (Applied Regression Analysis)

Course content: An introduction to the application of modern multivariate methods used in the social sciences, with particular focus on latent variable models for continuous observed variables, and their application to questions of measurement in the social sciences. At least the following topics will be covered: principal components analysis, exploratory factor analysis, confirmatory factor analysis and structural equation models. In addition, a selection from the following topics will be covered: cluster analysis, correspondence analysis, multidimensional scaling, latent class models, latent trait models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki ; J I Galbraith (2008) Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data (Second Edition).

Assessment: Research project (100%).

Research paper 25-30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 3,000-4,000 words, answering a set of questions by applying multivariate analyses to some data (100%).

MY556 Half Unit Survey Methodology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.04

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies and MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to all Research students.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of basic descriptive and inferential statistics, to the level of MY452/MY552 or equivalent. MY556 can also be taken in parallel with MY452L/MY552L. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400/MY500 or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the methodology of the design and analysis of social surveys. It is intended both for students who plan to design and collect their own surveys, and for those who need to understand and use data from existing large-scale surveys.

Topics covered include basic ideas of target populations, survey estimation and inference, sampling error and nonsampling error; sample design and sampling theory; methods of data collection; survey interviewing; cognitive processes in answering survey questions; design and evaluation of survey questions; nonresponse error and imputation for item nonresponse; survey weights; analysis of data from complex surveys; accessing, preparing and working with secondary data from existing social surveys. The course includes computer classes, using the statistical computer package Stata; no previous knowledge of Stata is required.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be no lectures or seminars in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the seminars can be submitted for marking

Indicative reading: Groves, R M, Fowler, F J, Couper, M P, Lepkowski, J M, Singer, E, and Tourangeau, R (2009). Survey Methodology (2nd ed.). Wiley.

Assessment: Research project (100%).

Research paper of 25-30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 3,000-4,000 words, reporting the data analysis of a given research question and data set (100%).

MY557 Half Unit Causal Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Hendry

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies, MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods, MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing) and MRes/PhD in Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of multiple linear regression and some familiarity with generalised linear models, to the level of MY452/ MY552 or equivalent. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400/MY500 or equivalent Course content: This course provides an introduction to statistical methods used for causal inference in the social sciences. Using the potential outcomes framework of causality, topics covered include research designs such as randomized experiments and observational studies. We explore the impact of noncompliance in randomized experiments, as well as nonignorable treatment assignment in observational studies. To analyze these research designs, the methods covered include matching, instrumental variables, difference-in-difference, and regression discontinuity. Examples are drawn from different social sciences. The course includes computer classes, where standard statistical computer packages (Stata or R) are used for computation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

There will be no lectures or computer classes in Week 6 of term.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: Rosenbaum, PR. (2010). Design of Observational Studies. Springer; Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J.-S. (2009). Mostly Harmless Econometrics. Princeton University Press.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

MY559 Half Unit Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Quantitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Barbera Aranguena COL7.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Data, Networks and Society, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies and MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: The course will assume knowledge of linear and logistic regression models, to the level covered in MY452.

Course content: The course surveys methods for systematically extracting quantitative information from text for social scientific purposes, starting with classical content analysis and dictionary-based methods, to classification methods, and state-of-the-art scaling methods and topic models for estimating quantities from text using statistical techniques. The course lays a theoretical foundation for text analysis but mainly takes a very practical and applied approach, so that students learn how to apply these methods in actual research. The common focus across all methods is that they can all be reduced to a three-step process: first, identifying texts and units of texts for analysis; second, extracting from the texts quantitatively measured features - such as coded content categories, word counts, word types, dictionary counts, or parts of speech - and converting these into a quantitative matrix; and third, using quantitative or statistical methods to analyse this matrix in order to generate inferences about the texts or their authors. The course systematically surveys these methods in a logical progression, with a practical, hands-on approach where each technique will be applied using appropriate software to real texts.

Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

MY560 Workshop in Advanced Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson COL8.05 and Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL8.10

Availability: MY560 is a series of workshops available to any post-graduate student who signs up via Moodle.

Course content: It is intended to provide research students with an introduction to specific advanced research methods and hands-on training in the use of these tools.

Teaching: One-day introductory workshops consisting of a morning lecture and afternoon computer session during the MT, LT and ST. Participants will sign up via MOODLE.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY561 Half Unit Social Network Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleanor Power COL 7.09 and Dr Milena Tsvetkova COL 8.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to research students only.

Course content: This course focuses on data about connections, forming structures known as networks. Networks and network data describe an increasingly vast part of the modern world, through connections on social media, communications, financial transactions, and other ties. This course covers the fundamentals of network structures, network data structures, and the analysis and presentation of network data. Students will work directly with network data and structure and analyze these data using R. Social networks have always been at the center of human interaction, but especially with the explosive growth of the internet, network analysis has become increasingly central to all branches of the social sciences. How do people influence each other, bargain with each other, exchange information (or germs), or interact online? A diverse array of deep questions about human behavior can only be answered by examining the social networks encompassing and shifting around us. Network analysis has emerged as a cross-disciplinary science in its own right, and has in fact proven to be of even greater generality and broader applicability than just the social, extending to ecology, physics, genetics, computer science, and other domains.

This course will examine the key papers in the development of social network analysis, and will develop the theory and methodological tools needed to model and predict social networks and use them in social sciences as diverse as sociology, political science, economics, health, psychology, history, or business. The core of the course will comprise the essential tools of network analysis, from centrality, homophily, and community detection, to random graphs, network formation, and information flow. Alongside this we will read a series of substantive and seminal papers, shaped in part by the interests of the students and their various backgrounds, with a particular focus on the difficult task of causal inference in social networks. The course will also provide an introduction to network modelling, analysis, and visualization using R.

Assessment: Take home exam (50%) and in class assessment (50%) in the MT.

Student problem sets will be marked each week, and will provide 50% of the mark.

MY565 Half Unit Intermediate Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Jackson COL8.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to all research students where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Participants should have studied introductory statistics or quantitative methods before, up to an introduction to descriptive statistics and basic statistical inference. Students with no previous studies in quantitative analysis should take instead Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY451).

Because of the overlaps between these courses, it is not possible to take both this course and either of Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY451) or Applied Regression Analysis (MY452) as assessed courses.

Course content: The course is intended for students with some (even if limited) previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. Using examples from psychological research, it covers first a review of the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical inference, in the context of the analysis of two-way contingency tables and comparisons of means between two groups. The main topic of the course is linear regression modelling and related methods, including scatterplots, correlation, simple and multiple linear regression, and analysis of variance and covariance. An introduction to binary logistic regression modelling is also included. The computer classes give hands-on training in the application of these statistical techniques. Class exercises and homework are carried out using the Stata package.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6. On-line quizzes will be provided on Moodle to aid revision during the reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 exercises in the MT.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online.

Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data, and Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Students are permitted to bring a limited quantity of written notes into the examination.

MY570 Half Unit Computer Programming

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Milena Tsvetkova COL8.03 and Dr Pablo Barbera Aranguena COL7.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to all research students where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to the fundamentals of computer programming as students design, write, and debug computer programs using the programming language Python and R. The course will also cover the foundations of computer languages, algorithms, functions, variables, object-orientation, scoping, and assignment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Students will learn how to design algorithms to solve problems and how to translate these algorithms into working computer programs. Students acquire skills and experience as they learn Python and R, through programming assignments with an approach that integrates projectbased learning. This course is an introduction to the fundamental concepts of programming for students who lack a formal background in the field, but will include more advanced problem-solving skills in the later stages of the course. Topics include algorithm design and program development; data types; control structures; functions and parameter passing; recursion; data structures; searching and sorting; and an introduction to the principles of object oriented programming. The primary programming languages used in the course will be Python and R.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.

Type: Weekly, structured problem sets with a beginning component to be started in the staff-led lab sessions, to be completed by the student outside of class. Answers should be formatted and submitted for assessment.

Assessment: Take home exam (50%) and in class assessment (50%) in the MT.

Student problem sets will be marked each week, and will provide 50% of the mark.

Marking of these assessments will be at a level appropriate for PhD students.

MY572 Half Unit Data for Data Scientists

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Barbera Aranguena COL7.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to all research students where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will cover the principles of digital methods for storing and structuring data, including data types, relational and nonrelational database design, and query languages. Students will learn to build, populate, manipulate and query databases based on datasets relevant to their fields of interest. The course will also cover workflow management for typical data transformation and cleaning projects, frequently the starting point and most timeconsuming part of any data science project. This course uses a project-based learning approach towards the study of online publishing and group-based collaboration, essential ingredients of modern data science projects. The coverage of data sharing will include key skills in on-line publishing, including the elements of web design, the technical elements of web technologies and web programming, as well as the use of revision-control and group collaboration tools such as GitHub. Each student will build one or more interactive website based on content relevant to his/her domain-related interests, and will use GitHub for accessing and submitting course materials and assignments.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

In this course, we introduce principles and applications of the electronic storage, structuring, manipulation, transformation, extraction, and dissemination of data. This includes data types, database design, data base implementation, and data analysis through structured queries. Through joining operations, we will also cover the challenges of data linkage and how to combine datasets from different sources. We begin by discussing concepts in fundamental data types, and how data is stored and recorded electronically. We will cover database design, especially relational databases, using substantive examples across a variety of fields. Students are introduced to SQL through MySQL, and programming assignments in this unit of the course will be designed to insure that students learn to create, populate and query an SQL database. We will introduce NoSQL using MongoDB and the JSON data format for comparison. For both types of database, students will be encouraged to work with data relevant to their own interests as they learn to create, populate and query data. In the final section of the data section of the course, we will step through a complete workflow including data cleaning and transformation, illustrating many of the practical challenges faced at the outset of any data analysis or data science project.

Online publishing and collaboration tools forms the second part of this course, along with the tools and technologies that underlie them. Students will develop interactive, secure and powerful projects for the World Wide Web using both client and server side technologies. Collaboration and the dissemination and submission of course assignments will use GitHub, the popular code repository and version control system. The course begins with an indepth look at the markup languages that form the foundations of building web sites with a study of HTML and CSS. Students next study basic programming in JavaScript, to provide client and server side tools including the customization of web content using Bootstrap and Jekyll to publish web pages, which will provide the basis for a class project.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.

Type: Weekly, structured problem sets with a beginning component to be started in the staff-led lab sessions, to be completed by the student outside of class. Answers should be formatted and submitted for assessment.

MY592 Workshop in Information Literacy: finding, managing and organising published research and data

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Maria Bell R102

Maria Bell (Course Convenor), Academic Support Librarian; Dr Jane

Secker, Copyright and Digital Literacy Advisor, Centre for Learning Technology; Clive Wilson, Academic Support Librarian.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development, MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme, MPhil/PhD in International Relations, MPhil/PhD in Sociology and MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

First and second year research students. This course is available as an outside option where regulations permit.

Course content: MY592 is a six week programme of 2 hour workshops which aims to develop students' research skills and introduce the essential sources and tools when undertaking research, and the skills required to use them. It is run by the Library and Centre for Learning Technology and is ideal for research students undertaking an extensive literature search and review. Students receive detailed advice on the most appropriate Library resources for their research topics. Materials, online activities and assessment will be available in Moodle to support the teaching.

Teaching: 24 hours of seminars in the MT. 24 hours of seminars in the LT.

Six two hour classes will be held weekly, and students are expected to attend all sessions in order to develop their information literacy skills. MY592 will run in both the Michaelmas and Lent terms and in the Summer term subject to demand. Dates and times will be advertised at the start of each term. Note that not all sessions will last for 2 hours but this will allow for individual contact time at the end of classes with class tutors.

If you only wish to attend an individual workshop, consult the Training classes offered by the Library and the Centre for Learning Technology on the LSE Training and Development System. Places on the entire programme can be booked using the LSE Training and Development System.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

Current Research in Social Psychology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sophie Von Stumm

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available to academic staff and research students only.

Course content: Weekly seminars where PhD students present their work, and learn research skills (e.g. writing, grant preparation). The course runs through Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 7 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: Non-examinable.

PH500

Research Methods in Philosophy

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Topics in contemporary philosophy.

Teaching: Seminars PH500 15 x two-hour (MT, LT, ST). Different members of the department will lead the seminar in each of the three terms.

A more detailed syllabus will be posted at the beginning of each term.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

PH501

Philosophical Problems Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anna Mahtani and Prof Christian List

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: In this course, we will read and carefully discuss together a range of classic papers in contemporary analytic philosophy that might not otherwise be covered in LSE Philosophy Department courses. Topics are selected from metaphysics, the philosophy of mind and action, epistemology, and the philosophy of language. This list is illustrative.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Specific readings will be announced in a detailed syllabus at the start of the term.

Assessment: Two essays of 5000 words each over the course of the two terms. Either or both of these essays may be replaced by two shorter essays each of 2500 words.

PH502

Reasoning and Logic

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laurenz Hudetz

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy and MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is, in general, only aimed at those students who have never taken a course in formal logic before. For such students the course is compulsory.

Course content: This course concerns formal methods of reasoning in philosophy.

1. Deductive Logic. Philosophy is centrally concerned with arguments. The first question to be asked of any argument (or inference) is whether or not it is valid: that is, does its conclusion really follow from its cited premises. Validity of inference is the central problem of deductive logic. Logic has universal scope: different disciplines have different ways of garnering information, but the way that we reason deductively from that information is the same no matter what the discipline. The key to answering some other formal questions that often arise in philosophy - such as whether some set of assumptions is consistent - is also provided by deductive logic.

This section of the course covers first a simple system called propositional or truth-functional logic, which, despite its simplicity, captures a great range of important arguments and provides a formal articulation of the notions of validity of inference and consistency of a set of sentences. The main system covered, however, is (first order) predicate logic, which is powerful enough to capture not only simple inferences but also those involved in philosophy and the sciences.

The final section of this first part of the course investigates more systematically how the formal techniques provided by these systems of logic relate to the more informal arguments found in philosophy (and ordinary discourse).

2. Probability. In a valid deductive argument, the conclusion must be true if the premises are. However many inferences conclude only that a certain claim is probable (or more probable than it would otherwise be). For example, we clearly cannot conclude from the premise that someone smokes 40 cigarettes a day that s/he will die early from a smoking-related illness, but we can infer that such an early death is much more probable than if s/he did not smoke.

Issues about probabilities play many roles in current philosophical debates: in decision theory, philosophy of economics, philosophy of physics and many other areas. This section of the course introduces the axioms of probability theory and then turns to foundational issues. It turns out that there are different interpretations of the probability axioms: in particular, a subjective interpretation which sees probabilities as credences or degrees of belief in the truth of some proposition, and objective interpretations which see probabilities as properties of physical events (such as the decay of a particular radioactive molecule in a given time interval. Interesting difficulties arise with both interpretations. The subjective interpretation has been developed into a full-blown, general Bayesian account of theory-confirmation in science - the essentials of this account will also be covered.

3. Formal Philosophical Devices. The final section of the course covers some of the formal, technical ideas that are often presupposed in contemporary philosophical work: including the notions of sets and infinities; theories of truth (and partial truth); analyticity and the a priori; possibility and necessity; and conditionals. Some of these notions have been clarified via analyses of some celebrated 'paradoxes' that will also be covered in this section of the course.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of lectures in the LT.

Appropriate back-up teaching will be arranged with individual students.

Formative coursework: Regular exercises will be set on the basis of the material covered in lectures.

Indicative reading: Extensive lecture notes will be provided covering the first part of the course. Further reading for parts 2 and 3 will be listed on the weekly worksheets available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

PH551 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This is a special topics course on the philosophy of science. It meets weekly, and has two components.

The first component (roughly half the meetings) will consist in a reading group on mathematical topics in philosophy of science. Although ultimately determined by attendants, the possible topics include: philosophy of mathematics, representation theorems and philosophy of representation, foundations and dynamics of financial markets, philosophy of space and time, philosophy of quantum mechanics, and philosophy of thermal and statistical physics.

The second component will consist in attending lectures and outside reading groups involving professional philosophers of science. Students may choose from the Sigma Club and BSPS lectures on Mondays, Choice Group meetings involving philosophy of science, and the All London History and Philosophy of Science reading group. Background readings to prepare students for these lectures as well as essay topics will sometimes be suggested. Together this amounts to roughly 10 meetings in Michaelmas Term and 10 meetings in Lent Term. Details about the meetings will be provided on Moodle, and information about the Sigma Club and BSPS lecture series can be found on the LSE Philosophy homepage under the "Events" heading.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

As this is a reading group, each participant is invited to take the lead on at least one meeting, choosing a topic and readings in consultation with the instructor, and leading the discussion during at least one of the Monday seminars.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write one essay per term and to give a seminar presentation.

PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley LAK2.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Philosophical issues in economics and the social sciences.

SA550 Research Student Seminar

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne West OLD 2.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies and MPhil/PhD in Social Policy. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Demography/Population Studies and MPhil/PhD in Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

For all MPhil/PhD students in the Department of Social Policy.

Course content: The course for first year students provides structured sessions for MPhil students (e.g. the MPhil/PhD process, ethics, risk). It also provides the forum in which first year full-time and second year part-time MPhil students must present their work to fellow students and staff in advance of submitting their major review (upgrade) document.

The course for second and third year students provides the forum where third year full-time (or equivalent) PhD students must present their work to fellow students and staff in advance of submitting their third year review document.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

First year: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Second and third year: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

SO500 Research Class for MPhil Students

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carrie Frieze STC213

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The research seminar aims to provide students with a conceptual and practical framework within which to think through planning their research. This includes devising research questions, how to do a literature review, selecting appropriate methods for research, linking theory and practices, ethical issues and writing. The course will comprise workshops and student presentations. By the end of the course students should be able to formulate clear aims and methods for their own research. All first year MPhil students must attend.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Reading weeks: week 6 (MT) and week 6 (LT).

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

5,000 word paper on the 'Aims and Methods' of the thesis, and a viva voce examination. For full-time students, three copies of this typed and paginated essay must be submitted to the Sociology Administration Office, Room S116, by the first Friday in May. Satisfactory completion of the 'Aims and Methods' paper, and the viva are necessary in order to proceed to the next stage of the course. Part-time students may elect to be evaluated in May or September of their first year or May of their second year.

SO501 Data Analysis Workshop

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carrie Frieze STC213

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Only available to sociology research students in the second and subsequent years of their MPhil/PhD.

Course content: Seminars will focus on doing data analysis using materials made and collected as part of PhD research. Each student will present data to the group at least one time. Students may submit the following types of data: (part of) a qualitative interview to code OR a collection of interview sections coded as 'X' to be analysed according to a specified method (e.g., narrative analysis, grounded theory); fieldnotes for coding or for reflections on what is needed for 'thick description'; an image or text to code or analyse according to a specified method (e.g., discourse analysis); a map of the research situation (e.g., situational analysis, network analysis); a regression analysis that requires interpretation, etc. All students will be asked to read the data before the workshop. The workshop will start with the student briefly presenting their data and contextualizing it within their research question, data set and methodological approach. As a group, that piece of data will be closely analysed using the method specified by the student.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Fortnightly seminars in the MT and LT for all sociology research students in their second and subsequent years.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment, but participants are asked to present research materials, read other students' research materials, and contribute to discussion.

SO505 Becoming a Professional Sociologist

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carrie Frieze STC.S213

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be available for Year 3 and 4 students as an optional training course for 2018/19. It is not available to PhD students outside the department.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Research Class for MPhil Students (SO500).

Students will have completed SO500 and passed Aims and Methods. Ideally they will have completed SO501. However, exceptions will be made for students who were outside of London in Year 2 for fieldwork and intend to complete their PhD in three years. In that instance students can take SO501 and SO502 simultaneously.

Course content: This half-unit course will provide a workshop environment to discuss key aspects of developing a career as a Sociologist. These may include:

1. Writing, submitting and revising journal articles;
2. Writing a book proposal;
3. Applying for research funding/jobs;
4. Using social media;
5. Developing CVs.

Students will:

- Gain an understanding of the different aspects involved in developing a career in academic Sociology
- Gain practical understanding of how to pursue the different elements of a sociological career in order to be in a good position in the job market and for postdoctoral funding
- Provide support for students as they are finishing their PhD and move into the next stage of their career as sociologists

Teaching: 15 hours of workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: There is no formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: There is no reading list for this course.

Assessment: There is no summative assessment for this course. The course is a pass/fail and is dependent on attendance.

SO511 Research Seminar in Political Sociology

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer STC.S114a

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

MPhil/PhD students whose research is in the field of political sociology. Students from all departments are welcome.

Course content: Political sociologists seek to understand fundamental political phenomenon by studying them in their social context. This seminar seeks to provide a small, friendly forum in which research students can discuss important recent publications and debates in this field. It often spends a number of weeks reading recent prize-winning books and articles in the field, and sometimes examines a topical theme for part of a term. There are also occasional guest lectures. In recent years, for example, there were lectures by Michael Mann (UCLA) on the rise and fall of neo-liberalism. Theda Skocpol (Harvard) on the future of American politics, and Andreas Wimmer (Princeton) on ethnic conflict and state formation. The seminar also provides an opportunity to develop individual research projects. In each seminar, a twenty or thirty minute presentation is followed by discussion.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Fortnightly in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A short list of some important recent books and articles that could be discussed in the seminar will be suggested at the beginning of the year, and the seminar is always open to suggestions from participants. Readings continually change, but, for the purposes of illustration, recent seminars have discussed global anti-capitalism, suicide missions and the new imperialism, Christianity and American democracy, the welfare state, the politics of free markets, labour protest in China, street politics in Egypt, boycotts, and the crisis of capitalism.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment but participants are asked to present papers, contribute to discussion and read the work of selected scholars in the course of the session.

S0521

Research Seminar on Cities and Space

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall STC S212 and Dr David Madden STC S209

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For MPhil/PhD students doing research on urban and spatial issues in the Cities Programme/Department of Sociology. If space is available, other graduate students may apply.

Course content: This graduate seminar is based on discussion of key readings in the fields of urban social theory and spatial analysis. It also provides a forum for discussion of research issues relating to the study of cities and space

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

One two-hour seminar every two weeks in the MT and LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed

ST501 Half Unit Multilevel Modelling

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Miltiadis Mavrakakis-Vassilakis

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics and MPhil/PhD in Statistics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and basic statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to multilevel modelling with applications in social research. This course deals with the analysis of data from hierarchically structured populations (e.g., students nested within schools, individuals nested within households or geographical areas) and longitudinal data (eg repeated measurements of individuals in a panel survey). Multilevel (random-effects) extensions of standard statistical techniques, including multiple linear regression and logistic regression, will be considered. The course will have an applied emphasis with computer sessions using appropriate software (e.g., Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 exercises in the LT.

Formative coursework is assigned fortnightly and returned to students with comments/feedback via Moodle before the lab sessions

Indicative reading: T. Snijders & R Bosker Multilevel Analysis: an Introduction to Basic and Advanced Multilevel Modelling, Sage (2011, 2nd edition). S Rabe-Hesketh & A Skrondal, Multilevel and Longitudinal Modeling using Stata, (Third Edition), Volume I: Continuous responses (plus Chapter 10 from Volume II, which is available free on the publisher's website). Stata Press (2012). Also recommended are: A Skrondal & S Rabe-Hesketh, Generalized Latent Variable Modeling: Multilevel, Longitudinal and Structural Equation Models, Chapman & Hall (2004); H Goldstein, Multilevel Statistical Models, Arnold (2003); S W Raudenbush & A S Bryk, Hierarchical Linear Models: Applications and Data Analysis Methods, Sage (2002); G Verbeke & G Molenberghs, Linear Mixed Models for Longitudinal Data, Springer (2000); E Demidenko, Mixed Models, Wiley (2004).

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

Assessment is by 100% coursework given to students in week 8 of the course.

ST542 Half Unit Longitudinal Data Analysis

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Fiona Steele COL 7.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Health Policy and Health Economics and MPhil/PhD in Statistics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and basic statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to methods for the analysis of repeated measures data, including continuous and binary outcomes. Topics include: longitudinal study designs, models for two measurements, (random effects) growth curve models, marginal models, missing data, latent class models and dynamic (autoregressive) models. The course will have an applied emphasis with fortnightly computer classes using the Stata software.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Week 6 will be a reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 exercises in the LT.

Formative assessment is based on data analysis problems that require the use of the statistical software to apply the statistical techniques taught in the lectures and computer classes.

Coursework is given out to students every two weeks and returned with feedback and comments.

Indicative reading: Hedeker D, Gibbons RD. Longitudinal Data Analysis. Hoboken, New Jersey: John Wiley & Sons, Inc. (2006). Rabe-Hesketh S, Skrondal A. (2012) Multilevel and Longitudinal Modeling Using Stata, Third Edition. Volume I: Continuous Responses. College Station, Texas: Stata Press.

Pre-requisites: For some events, participants are requested to bring along current work and/or be prepared to participate actively.

Course content: This year-long series of standalone interdisciplinary workshops is designed for academic and research staff who are keen to pursue professional development and enhance the impact of their teaching and research. Workshop subjects include:

- Understanding student learning: theory and practice;
- The core elements of good course design;
- Lecturing at LSE: new ideas and approaches;
- Research methods: teaching practice and exchange;
- Using the voice to engage and inspire.

Teaching: All events follow the dates of the LSE teaching year. Further details, and links to booking pages, can be found on the Atlas page.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment for this course.

TC501 2.0 Units

Introduction to Teaching:

Associate Fellowship Programme

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Colleen McKenna

Pre-requisites: Participants are required to be teaching for a minimum of 10 hours during the academic year in which they are enrolled.

Course content: The TC501 'Introduction to Teaching' represents the first phase of the LSE PGCertHE and completion of this programme results in Associate Fellowship of the Higher Education Academy, which is part of AdvanceHE.

In this programme, you will;

- Develop an Opening Year Statement (OYS) in which you reflect on your approach to teaching and student learning
- Participate in workshops in Module 1: 'Teaching in our disciplines'
- Prepare a written assignment for Module 1
- Have 2 teaching observations – one from a member of LSE Teaching and Learning Centre and one from a peer
- Develop an End of Year Statement (EYS) in which you reflect on how the teaching year has gone and your intentions for future development.

These materials are drawn together, along with feedback on your teaching from both TQARO and formative surveys, into a portfolio that is submitted in Summer Term or the following Michaelmas Term. Once the portfolio is deemed complete it is submitted to a Board of Examiners.

Teaching: 12 hours of workshops in the MT. 3 hours of workshops in the ST.

Teaching for this course will take the form of 2-hour, interactive workshops. Moodle will also be used as a learning environment.

Formative coursework: There are formative feedback points for each of the summative assignments.

Additionally, there are formative reflections at both the start and finish of the programme. These formative reflections, combined with the coversheets on the essay, make up the learning log element of the course and contribute to the final portfolio submission. Throughout, the formative texts are designed to encourage a reflexive approach to academic practice.

Essay (33%, 2500 words) in the LT and ST.

A practical written assignment and reflective pieces. (100%, in January and June.)

This course is assessed entirely by coursework - formative and summative. There are no exams.

All assignments are assessed on a Complete/Not Yet Complete basis, and all assessments are viewed as developmental opportunities. Participants are offered detailed feedback for all assignments and, where appropriate, they have the option of developing assignments further based on feedback from the teaching team.

The assignment is based on evidence-based written texts, or posters, and reflective pieces.

TC503 2.0 Units

Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education

This information is for the 2018/19 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Colleen McKenna

Availability: The PGCertHE is practice-based programme and is aimed at early career academics, including assistant professors, LSE fellows, assistant professorial lecturers and graduate teaching assistants who have completed the Introduction to Teaching: Associate Fellowship Programme (TC501) as well as other colleagues who have substantive responsibilities for student learning.

The PGCertHE is a requirement for newly appointed career-track colleagues with fewer than 3 years of teaching experience. Additionally, colleagues who are experienced academics but relatively new to UK higher education are encouraged to join the programme.

Pre-requisites: This is a practice-based programme. You need to be teaching at least 20 hours across the year in a context in which you can be observed – once by a member of LSE Teaching and Learning Centre and once by a peer. The observations can occur either in Michaelmas or Lent terms.

You are eligible to join the programme if you:

- can attend at least 20 hours of PGCertHE sessions. Please note: the completion of the 'Introduction to Teaching' (TC501) counts for 10 hours towards this total.*
- can be observed teaching at LSE, and
- have at least 20 hours of scheduled teaching during the year of enrolment (not including preparation time or office hours).

*For career-track participants, completion of the New Academic Induction Programme fulfils your attendance requirement.

Course content: In this programme, you will work on 3 modules:

- Module 1: Teaching in our Disciplines (required) *
- Module 2: Course Design (required)

plus one module from the following list:

- Module 3: Student learning
- Module 4: Assessment and feedback
- Module 5: Contemporary issues in HE
- Module 6: Independent enquiry

*If you have previously completed the TC501 'Introduction to Teaching' pathway, this module will be carried over and does not need to be repeated.

To complete the programme, you will:

- Develop an opening year statement (OYS) in which you reflect on your approach to teaching and student learning
- Participate in workshops
- Prepare written assignments (or equivalent) for the 3 modules
- Have 2 teaching observations – one from a member of LSE Teaching and Learning Centre and one from a peer
- Develop an end of year statement (EYS) in which you reflect on how the teaching year has gone and your intentions for future development.

These materials are drawn together, along with feedback on your teaching from both TQARO and formative surveys, into a portfolio that is submitted in Summer Term or the following Michaelmas Term. Once the portfolio is deemed complete it is submitted to a Board of Examiners.

Teaching: Modules 1 and 2 are compulsory and your final number of teaching hours will depend on which optional module you choose.

- Module 1, 12hrs, MT
- Module 2, 8hrs, MT or LT or ST
- Module 3, 6hrs, LT
- Module 4, 6hrs, MT or LT
- Module 5, 4hrs plus an Atlas workshop, LT
- Module 6, 4-8hrs, MT, LT and ST
- Reviewing your teaching year, 3hrs, ST

Teaching for this course will take the form of interactive workshops. Moodle will also be used as a learning environment. Additionally, participants have the opportunity to attend regular workshops offered as part of LSE's Atlas programme, which explore different aspects of teaching and learning linked to assignments.

Formative coursework: There are formative feedback points for each of the summative assignments.

Additionally, there are formative reflections at both the start and finish of the programme. These formative reflections, combined with the coversheets on the summative essays, make up the learning log element of the course and contribute to the final portfolio submission. Finally, participants present their course design work and receive formative feedback from both members of the PGCertHE teaching team and peers.

Throughout, the formative pieces are designed to encourage a reflexive approach to academic practice.

Assessment:

- Written assignments for Module 1, Module 2 and for your optional module
- A practical written assignment for module 1 (34%, 2300 words) in January.
- Project for module 2 (33%, 2000 words) in the MT, LT or ST*.
- Essay, project or blog posts depending on the module (33%, 2000 words) in MT, LT or ST*.

*Participants have flexibility as to when they undertake this project. The assignments include both essay-style written texts and reflective pieces. Additionally there are some opportunities for choice within the assessment diet. Depending on module selection, participants may also prepare a poster, blog posts or podcasts.

This course is assessed entirely by coursework - formative and summative. There are no exams.

All assignments are marked on a Complete/Not Yet Complete basis and all assessment are viewed as developmental opportunities. Participants are offered detailed feedback on all work and, where appropriate, they have the option of developing assignments further based of feedback from the teaching team and peers (Course design module).
