The Bologna Process facilitates comparability and compatibility between higher education systems across the European Higher Education Area. Some of the School's taught master's programmes are nine or ten months in duration. If you wish to proceed from these programmes to higher study in EHEA countries other than the UK, you should be aware that their recognition for such purposes is not guaranteed, due to the way in which ECTS credits are calculated.

Note for prospective students: For changes to graduate course and programme information for the next academic session, please see the graduate summary page for prospective students. Changes to course and programme information for future academic sessions can be found on the graduate summary page for future students.

Footnotes

LLM (full-time)

Programme Code: TMLL2

Department: Law

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20

The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Master's Programmes on the online Calendar apply to the LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the LLM take priority.

In order to obtain the degree, students must complete courses (see courses list below) to the value of four full units, which will normally comprise eight half unit courses. One of these eight half units will be the compulsory half unit Legal Research Skills course, which will be assessed by a 10,000 word dissertation. This stand-alone dissertation will provide the element of extended writing for all LLM students. Students will be required to sign a statement on plagiarism when submitting this dissertation.

Students can complete the LLM course requirements in either one full-year programme, or as a part-time student in two years, or by extended part-time study within a maximum of six years. Courses should be chosen from the list below. Subject to availability and with the permission of the Programme Director of the LLM, one complementary course from other Master's courses at the School may be selected to replace one from the list below to the total equivalent of one half unit. Exceptionally, and subject to the same conditions courses to the total value of one full unit may be selected to replace two courses from the list below.

Part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Part-time students must take courses to the value of two units in their first year and courses to the value of two units in their second year.

Extended part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Students must take courses to the value of one unit in the first year and successfully complete this. Students who successfully complete four units within a period of six years will satisfy the requirements for the degree.

The LLM programme regulations for students entering in or after 2013/14 differ from those in Force in previous years. This reflects a move to half unit courses in 2013/14. Students registered before 2013/14 are covered by the regulations which were in operation at the time of their initial registration on the programme. For earlier editions of the regulations please refer to the page for previous academic sessions lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/PreviousAcademicSessions.htm. This page contains links to reference copies of programme regulations for years 2009/10, 2010/11, 2011/12, 2012/13 and 2013/14. If continuing students have any queries on these matters they should consult their Academic Mentor.

Examination

Students will be examined in courses to the total value of four full units.

An Oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine. For courses assessed by written examination (which will be the norm on the LLM apart from the Legal Research Skills course), the examination will normally be held in January, May or June. Questions may be set on recent legislation and current proposals for law reform within the scope of the syllabus. No materials may be brought into the examination room except in accordance with the regulations for the particular course.

Degree certificate

Students who successfully complete the LLM programme may elect to have one of the following titles attached to their degree certificate if, in the opinion of the Programme Director of the LLM, the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. This would mean you will need to be registered for either:

1. LLM courses to the value of at least 2 units (4 half unit courses) within the nominated specialism; Or
2. LLM courses to the value of at least 1.5 units (3 half unit courses) within the nominated specialism plus an LL4F9 dissertation topic within the area of the specialism (as agreed by your dissertation supervisor).

The possible titles are listed below with the courses attached to those areas listed with them. If no such election is made, the LLM degree certificate will state 'LLM' without further specification.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses.

Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and may be subject to timetabling constraints and/or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

LLM (extended part-time)

Programme Code: TMLL2EPT

Department: Law

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20 The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Master's Programmes on the online Calendar apply to the LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the LLM take priority.

In order to obtain the degree, students must complete courses (see courses list below) to the value of four full units, which will normally comprise eight half unit courses. One of these eight half units will be the compulsory half unit Legal Research Skills course, which will be assessed by a 10,000 word dissertation. This stand-alone dissertation will provide the element of extended writing for all LLM students. Students will be required to sign a statement on plagiarism when submitting this dissertation.

Students can complete the LLM course requirements in either one full-year programme, or as a part-time student in two years, or by extended part-time study within a maximum of six years. Courses should be chosen from the list below. Subject to availability and with the permission of the Programme Director of the LLM, one complementary course from other Master's courses at the School may be selected to replace one from the list below to the total equivalent of one half unit. Exceptionally, and subject to the same conditions courses to the total value of one full unit may be selected to replace two courses from the list below.

Part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Part-time students must take courses to the value of two units in their first year and courses to the value of two units in their second year.

Extended part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Students must take courses to the value of one unit in the first year and successfully complete this. Students who successfully complete four units within a period of six years will satisfy the requirements for the degree.

The LLM programme regulations for students entering in or after 2013/14 differ from those in Force in previous years. This reflects a move to half unit courses in 2013/14. Students registered before 2013/14 are covered by the regulations which were in operation at the time of their initial registration on the programme. For earlier editions of the regulations please refer to the page for previous academic sessions lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/PreviousAcademicSessions.htm. This page contains links to reference copies of programme regulations for years 2009/10, 2010/11, 2011/12, 2012/13 and 2013/14. If continuing students have any queries on these matters they should consult their Academic Mentor.

Examination

Students will be examined in courses to the total value of four full units.

An Oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine. For courses assessed by written examination (which will be the norm on the LLM apart from the Legal Research Skills course), the examination will normally be held in January, May or June. Questions may be set on recent legislation and current proposals for law reform within the scope of the syllabus. No materials may be brought into the examination room except in accordance with the regulations for the particular course.

Degree certificate

Students who successfully complete the LLM programme may elect to have one of the following titles attached to their degree certificate if, in the opinion of the Programme Director of the LLM, the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. This would mean you will need to be registered for either:

1. LLM courses to the value of at least 2 units (4 half unit courses) within the nominated specialism; Or
2. LLM courses to the value of at least 1.5 units (3 half unit courses) within the nominated specialism plus an LL4F9 dissertation topic within the area of the specialism (as agreed by your dissertation supervisor).

The possible titles are listed below with the courses attached to those areas listed with them. If no such election is made, the LLM degree certificate will state 'LLM' without further specification.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses.

Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and may be subject to timetabling constraints and/or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

Global MSc in Management

Programme Code: TMGLMG2

Department: Management

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20 Classification Scheme for the award of a Global MSc in Management for students entering in or after 2019/20 <https://info.lse.ac.uk/staff/divisions/academic-registrars-division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/SchemeGlobalMScManagement2019-20.pdf>

A two-year programme. Students take courses to the value of eight units but those units are not necessarily spread over the two years. The second year includes a dissertation. Students complete the course MG488 GMiM Capstone Course - Management in Action (H) over both years, Part A (unassessed) in Year 1 and Part B (assessed) in Year 2.

All students are required to attend MG4A1 Introduction to Studying for GMiM.

Students may choose to concentrate their electives in a certain topic area and may elect to have one of the elective titles attached to their degree certificate and transcript if the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. The possible titles are listed as headings within the Elective Courses below with the courses attached to those areas listed beneath them. If no such election is made, the degree certificate will state 'Management' without further specification.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses. Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and may be subject to timetabling constraints and/or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

Global MSc in Management

Programme Code: TMGLMG2

Department: Management

For students starting this programme of study in 2018/19
 Classification Scheme for the award of a Global MSc in Management for students entering in 2017/18 or in 2018/19
<https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/SchemeGlobalMScManagement-In-2017-18-Or-2018-19.pdf>

A two-year programme. Students take courses to the value of eight units.

The second year includes a dissertation. Students complete the course MG488 GMiM Capstone Course - Management in Action (H) over both years, Part A (unassessed) in Year 1 and Part B (assessed) in Year 2.

All students are required to attend MG4A1 Introduction to Studying for GMiM.

Students may choose to concentrate their electives in a certain topic area and may elect to have one of the elective titles attached to their degree certificate and transcript if the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. The possible titles are listed as headings within the Elective Courses below with the courses attached to those areas listed beneath them. If no such election is made, the degree certificate will state 'Management' without further specification.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses. Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and may be subject to timetabling constraints and/or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

Master of Public Administration

Programme Code: TMMMPA

Department: School of Public Policy

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20

The programme is taught over two academic years (21 months).

To be awarded the degree, students must complete courses to the value of 8.0 units in total over two years with 4.0 units in each year of study. Some courses have a unit value of 1.0 and some have a unit value of 0.5 indicated as (H).

No interim award is available: students completing courses with a total value of less than 8.0 units receive no award, regardless of performance in the courses that have been successfully completed.

Students who successfully complete courses to the value of 8.0 units may elect to have one of the titles below referenced on their degree certificate if the student has successfully completed courses of that specialism to the value of 1.0 unit. The available specialisms are listed below with the courses attached to each specialism listed with them. If no such election is made, or if a student does not successfully complete all of the courses listed under a specialism, the MPA degree certificate will state 'MPA' without further specification. Students may take courses from other specialisms as option courses.

Students can apply to spend their second year at one of the LSE MPA Partner Institutions. If offered a place and upon successful completion of year one, the student will transfer onto the Dual MPA Programme. Students who transfer to the Dual MPA will not be eligible to elect a specialism to be added to their degree certificate.

MPA in Public Policy and Management

Programme Code: TMPPM

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20

The programme is taught over two academic years (21 months).

Some courses have a unit value of 1.0 and some have a unit value of 0.5. To be awarded the degree, students must complete courses to the value of 8.0 units in total over two years.

There are three types of courses:

1. Compulsory courses, studied by all students;
2. Policy Stream courses, which students will take depending on which Policy Stream (specialism) they choose at the start of Year 2;
3. Option courses.

Note that some courses on one Policy Stream may be optional courses on other Policy Streams.

No interim award is available: students completing courses with a unit value of less than 8.0 receive no award, regardless of performance in the courses that have been successfully completed.

The School of Public Policy has recoded their course codes to replace department codes (EC, GV, DV, EU, SA, MG) with PP codes for 2018/19. The majority of courses listed below with a PP code are not new courses but some may have changed code.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses. Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and may be subject to timetabling constraints and/or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

MSc in Social Research Methods

Programme Code: TMSOrM

Department: Methodology

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20 Full-year programme.

Part 1: Social Research Methods. Students must take courses to the value of two full units and a dissertation as shown.

Part 2: Optional courses. For all students other than those on the 'Gender,' 'Population' or 'Social Policy' streams of the MSc Social Research Methods, courses to the value of one full unit can be taken from the courses listed under the heading 'Part 2 - Optional Courses' below. Please click the 'Optional courses' link to expand the list. Students on the 'Gender,' 'Population' or 'Social Policy' streams of the MSc must select courses from the options listed under their respective headings at the foot of the 'Part 2 - Optional Courses' section below. Please click the 'Optional courses' link to expand the list.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses.

Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and may be subject to timetabling constraints and/or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

Notes:

In order to progress to year two of the programme students must pass at least one of the half units HP4F1E and HP4G4E. Where a student fails both of these courses they cannot progress until they have resubmitted and passed the work. Students are permitted one attempt to resubmit any failed work at the next appropriate opportunity which is normally during the equivalent assessment period during the next academic year. Where a student is required to resubmit any assessment, their overall LSE degree will be capped at a Pass.

The MSc is a 24-month executive modular part-time degree programme. It features four intensive two-week on-campus teaching sessions, delivering eight 0.5 unit compulsory core courses. Assessment for each taught course will take place after the relevant teaching session, and consist of a combination of essays, take-home assessments, research projects and protocols.

Students, who for exceptional reasons, feel they are unable to meet the assessments deadlines should consult with the Department as soon as possible as it may be possible to allow an extension <https://info.lse.ac.uk/current-students/services/assessment-and-results/exceptional-circumstances/extension-policy> or deferral <https://info.lse.ac.uk/current-students/services/assessment-and-results/exceptional-circumstances/deferral> Students wishing to apply for an extension or deferral of any assessments must seek permission prior to the assessment date, and according to the General Academic Regulations for All students except undergraduate students starting in the 2018/19 academic year <https://info.lse.ac.uk/staff/divisions/academic-registrars-division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/GeneralAcademicRegulations-all-students-except-18-19-UG-students.pdf> All marks count towards degree classification. It may be a requirement to achieve Pass marks in some courses in order to be eligible for the award of the degree. Please consult with the Department until further details have been published.

Alternative exit options will be provided for students who cannot complete the Executive MSc in Evaluation of Health Care Interventions and Outcomes due to unforeseen circumstances.

An LSE Diploma is available following successful completion of 3.0 full units across six taught courses. Results from each 0.5 unit modules count toward the Diploma classification. Students must satisfy the conditions set out in the Scheme for the Award of a Diploma <https://info.lse.ac.uk/Staff/Divisions/Academic-Registrars-Division/Teaching-Quality-Assurance-and-Review-Office/Assets/Documents/Calendar/SchemeDiploma.pdf> in order to be eligible for the award of a Diploma.

Students eligible for an LSE Certificate will have been registered on the programme and then cease studies following the completion of 2.0 full units across four taught courses over three teaching sessions. Students must achieve a mark of 50 or higher in each of these four courses in order to be eligible for the award of an LSE Certificate. LSE Certificate is classified on a Pass / Fail basis only.

Supplementary criteria for progression from the first to the second year of the MSc Finance (part-time)

To be eligible to proceed into the second year, candidates must attain at least a Pass grade in the two compulsory courses: FM422E and FM423E. If a candidate fails (but does not 'Bad Fail') one compulsory course, the Board may exceptionally allow progression to the second year. Exceptional progression will be at the sole discretion of the Board. If a candidate fails both of these compulsory courses they will not be allowed to progress to year two. If a candidate has a 'Bad Fail' in one or both courses they will not be allowed to progress to year two. A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion) and at the next normal opportunity. The School may consider an application for repeat tuition in any failed courses from a student. Results obtained at re-sit shall bear their normal value.

Executive Global MSc in Management

Executive Global Masters in Management - Progression Rules

Candidates who attain at least a Pass grade in MG440E, MG441E and MG443E will be eligible to proceed into the second year. FM475E and MG445E are not required for progression.

A student who does not meet this criterion must resit all failed/deferred papers in accordance with the resit process detailed below. If, following the resit attempt, a student:

- has attained at least a Pass grade in each of the first year papers, he/she will be eligible to proceed into the second year.
- has attained at least a Pass grade in at least one of the first year papers, he/she will be eligible to proceed into the second year:
 - at the discretion of the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners; and
 - subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners (GSBE).
- Has failed all of the first year papers, he/she will not be eligible to proceed into the second year, as he/she will no longer be able to successfully complete the programme according to the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units). The marks of any student who fails up to two papers over the course of the programme will be subject to the penalty rules stipulated at paragraph 3.2 of the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).

Executive Global Masters in Management - Resit Process

A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion).

For first year courses required for progression, where the individual assessment takes the form of an assignment or take home exam, once grades have been ratified, the faculty member responsible for the failed first year course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible and before the beginning of the second year. Results for resits and any subsequent progression will be agreed by the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course.

The results of first year courses FM475E and MG445E will be formally ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners and Graduate School Board of Examiners in November. If it is determined that as a result of a fail in one or both of these courses an award cannot be made the faculty member responsible for the failed course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible. A candidate resitting these courses cannot graduate until the July Sub-Board and Graduate School Board of Examiners has met to ratify their results.

For second year courses, once grades have been ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners and it is determined that an award cannot be made, the faculty member responsible for the failed second year course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible. Results for resits and subsequent classification will be agreed by the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course. Resits for second year courses will result in delayed Graduation.

Executive LLM

Programme Code: TMLL2EX

Department: Law

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20

1. The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Masters Programmes in the online Calendar apply to the Executive LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the Executive LLM take priority.

2. In order to obtain the Degree, students must complete eight Executive LLM courses (see list below). Students must complete the requirements as a part-time student over a period of four years, or with the approval of the Programme Director within a period of six years. The minimum period within which the Degree can be completed is three years.

3. Alternative exit points are available to students who are not able to complete the Degree. An LSE Diploma in Legal Studies is available on completion of six courses and a Certificate of Legal Studies on the completion of four courses. There is no minimum period for completion of the alternative exit points of Certificate of Legal Studies or Diploma in Legal Studies.

4. Courses should be chosen from the list below and are subject to availability as not every course will be offered each year. Subject to the availability of teaching staff, it is intended that every course be offered at least once within the four year degree period. No other courses at LSE or elsewhere may be taken as part of the Executive LLM programme.

Intensive Teaching

5. The Executive LLM courses will be taught in short intensive week-long sessions, which will typically be taught in the first half of April, September and December. Each course will provide between 24 and 26 hours of contact teaching time. Teaching will normally run from Monday to Friday. However, in the exceptional event where a course cannot be taught on the set weekday/s (e.g. due to last minute teacher illness), teaching may be extended to the Saturday and Sunday morning of that week. Accordingly, students are expected to book trains or flights for the day before teaching commences and should, where possible, book return trains or flights on the Sunday afternoon or evening following the completion of the course.

6. Where there is student demand we may elect also to offer some courses in two intensive weekends. The two weekends will not be more than four weekends apart. Where courses are offered in the intensive weekend format the same course will also be offered in week-long intensive format at least once every four years.

Payment of Fees

7. All Executive LLM offer holders will be required to pay a Registration Fee within 14 days of receiving their offer of admission. The registration fee is non-refundable. Only on receipt of the registration fee, may students register onto the programme. Registered students are then required to pay a per course tuition fee in advance of their chosen course date, to secure their place. Students will only be permitted to attend a module if payment is received in time. Fee payment deadlines can be found at: lse.ac.uk/intranet/LSEServices/financeDivision/feesAndStudentFinance/Paying%20fees/Executive%20programmes.aspx#llm

8. The registration fee is non-refundable. If you withdraw from the course before starting a session or are unable to attend a session for which you have registered, all module fees will be credited to a module in a later session. You must inform the Programme Manager if you are unable to attend a module you are registered for. In exceptional circumstances, at the Director's discretion, the funds paid for that session will be refunded. Changes in fee levels may occur over the course of the programme. The student will remain liable for any difference between the fees chargeable at the later session and the fee credit from the module which the student withdrew from. Module fees are non-refundable, and will not be credited to another session, if you have attended classes but withdraw before the assessment.

9. It is our intent to offer each advertised module at least once during the four year degree period. This may not always be possible due, for example, to teacher illness or resignation. It is possible that a module may need to be cancelled at short notice, such as where the teacher is unavailable or participant numbers are very low. If this happens, students will be given the option of taking another module during the same session or, alternatively, the fees paid towards that module will be held in credit for your next chosen module/session or refunded if preferred. Students will be informed of the withdrawal of a module no later than two weeks prior to the commencement of the module.

Assessment

10. All Executive LLM courses are assessed by either take-home examination or 8,000 word extended essay.

11. To comply with the Department's writing requirement at master's level, all students are required to write one extended essay of 8,000 words as the assessment for one of their courses to obtain the Degree, the Diploma or the Certificate. Students are not permitted to take more than three courses assessed by extended essay to obtain the Degree or the Diploma or more than one course assessed by extended essay to obtain a Certificate.

12. Extended essays must not exceed the set word limit and must be submitted by a set deadline. Students must provide evidence of original work or a capacity for critical analysis. Students will be required, at the time of submission of their work, to sign a statement on plagiarism. An oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine.

13. The take-home examinations will be set two months after the completion of the intensive teaching. The date of the examination will be provided at the date courses are available for selection. They will be uploaded and submitted electronically.

14. All students are required to write an extended essay of 8,000 words as the assessment for one of their courses to obtain the Degree, the Diploma or the Certificate. Students are not permitted to take more than three courses assessed by extended essay to obtain the Degree or the Diploma or more than one course assessed by extended essay to obtain a Certificate. The extended essay topic will be set by the course teacher. The student may propose essay topics and ideas to the teacher.

15. All students will be required to be online during the examination period in case there is any need to contact them.

16. Students will be able to re-sit a course examination once. A re-sit examination will be set as soon as possible after the student is notified of the failure. At the Programme Director's sole discretion in lieu of a re-sit or deferred examination the student may be required to submit an 8,000 word essay. This can only occur when the student has not already completed the maximum of three 8,000 word essays.

17. Any student who fails an exam twice in the same course will not be able to proceed to complete the Executive LLM programme. Students will not be able to proceed to take further courses if at the first sit and the re-sit examination are both bad fails or if the failure is not a bad fail but the student has failed another course following the re-sit. If such a student has already successfully completed 4 courses or 6 courses prior to such a failure, the student will be awarded a Certificate of Legal Studies or Diploma of Legal Studies.

Registration

18. The maximum period of registration on the programme is six years. Therefore completion of all the degree requirements (or Diploma, Certificate) must be within a six year period.

Course Completion Rate

19. Students will be expected to take one to two courses per year. Any student who fails to take a course for a two year period will be asked to provide reasons for the failure to complete courses. Any student who following such a request either fails to provide a response to the Programme Director or fails to complete a course in the year following the giving of these reasons, may be deregistered from the programme.

Degree Certificate

20. Students who successfully complete the Executive LLM examination requirements may elect to have one of the following titles attached to their degree certificate if, in the opinion of the Programme Director of the LLM, the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. This would mean taking a minimum of 4 courses within a specialist area. The possible titles are listed below with the courses attached to those areas listed with them. If no such election is made, the LLM degree certificate will state 'LLM' without further specification.

Executive Master of Public Administration

Programme Code: TMMPAEX

For students starting this programme of study in 2019/20

The EMPA is a 19 month programme. Students must take courses to the value of eight half units as set out below.

Paper Course number, title (unit value)

Paper 1 PP4G8E Public Policy in Practice Workshop I (EMPA) (0.5) #

Paper 2 PP478E Political Science and Public Policy (0.5) #

410 Executive Taught Master's Programme Regulations

Paper 3	PP455E	Empirical Methods for Public Policy (0.5) #
Paper 4	PP4G9E	Public Policy in Practice Workshop II (EMPA) (0.5) #

Paper 5	PP440E	Economic Policy Analysis (0.5) #
Papers 6 & 7	Courses to the value of 1.0 unit(s) from the following: PP410E Public Economics for Public Policy (0.5) # PP421E Global Market Economics (0.5) # PP454E Development Economics (0.5) # PP488E Regulatory Analysis (0.5) # PP4J5E Fiscal Governance and Budgeting (0.5) # PP4V8E Policy Paper (0.5) #
Paper 8	PP409E	Public Policy in Practice Workshop III (EMPA) (0.5) #

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information. An LSE Diploma is available on the completion of six courses and an LSE Certificate on the completion of four courses.

Candidates who attain at least a Pass grade in each of the Year 1 courses PP4G8E, PP478E and PP455E will be eligible to progress to Year 2. The Year 1 course PP4G9E will not count towards progression but the grade will count towards the final degree classification.

Students wishing to defer the submission of one or more assessment components must seek permission according to the Regulations for Taught Master's Degrees prior to the assessment due date, except in the case of unforeseen and exceptional circumstances. Students deferring one or more assessment components in Year 1 may exceptionally progress to Year 2 and submit any deferred assessment at the next normal opportunity, if they complete and pass two of the three half units PP4G8E, PP478E and PP455E in Year 1.

Students failing one but not more than one of PP4G8E, PP478E and PP455E in Year 1 will normally be able to progress to Year 2, although this fail will count toward their degree classification according to the Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree. Students failing more than one of PP4G8E, PP478E and PP455E in Year 1 have to re-sit relevant assessment components and pass the required number of half units before they can progress to Year 2. Students are permitted to re-sit failed exams in line with the School's Regulations for Taught Master's Degrees.

The Sub-Board may recommend to the Graduate School Board of Examiners (GSBE) that a student can progress to year two of the programme even if they have not met the normal application of the progression rules. This can only be done on an exceptional basis where:

- the Sub-Board has determined that a student has demonstrated that their progression has been affected by circumstances beyond their control through the exceptional circumstances procedure and;
- the GSBE approves the Sub-Board's recommendation.

Or other non-ST course(s), with permission.

The total value of all non-ST courses should not exceed one unit. The Bologna Process facilitates comparability and compatibility between higher education systems across the European Higher Education Area. Some of the School's taught master's programmes are nine or ten months in duration. If you wish to proceed from these programmes to higher study in EHEA countries other than the UK, you should be aware that their recognition for such purposes is not guaranteed, due to the way in which ECTS credits are calculated.

Progress rules to proceed to year in Fudan: Students must pass at least three out of four units.

Students that have a one unit fail will need compensation in order to progress (e.g. a mark of 60 in at least one of the three passed units or an aggregate of 165 in those three passed units).

Any student with a fail that is unable to achieve the compensation rules as above must resit the failed course and pass in order to progress.

Any student who receives a Bad Fail mark cannot progress until that Bad Fail has been successfully resat and they then meet the progression rules outlined above. A Bad Fail mark cannot be compensated by other marks.

Students have one opportunity only to resit a failed LSE course. The full programme must be successfully completed in order to be awarded the double degree. This means students who complete the year at LSE but go on to fail to progress after exhausting all of their attempts or are unable to complete the year at Fudan cannot be awarded an interim degree. I.e. they must successfully complete both LSE and Fudan programmes to achieve an overall award.

Note for prospective students: For changes to graduate course and programme information for the next academic session, please see the graduate summary page for prospective students. Changes to course and programme information for future academic sessions can be found on the graduate summary page for future students.

MSc in Global Media and Communications (with Fudan, USC or UCT)

Full-time programme taken over two calendar years. Students must take courses at LSE as shown below and follow either the programme at Fudan or USC or UCT in Year 2.

Taught Master's Course Guides

AC411 Half Unit Accounting, Strategy and Control

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wim Van der Stede OLD 2.18, supported by various professors who teach blocks of materials on the course.

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc Programme Director, if they have sufficient relevant background knowledge.

The course is capped to three sections of around 55 students; ie 165 total.

Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.

Course content: This course provides an advanced overview of current theoretical and practical developments in the area of organisational control, which is an essential function of management to ensure that the organisation's objectives and strategies are carried out effectively. Good management control increases the probability of organisational success.

Specifically, the course discusses what it means to have an organisation be in control, what alternatives managers have for ensuring good control, and how managers should choose from among various control system alternatives. Then the course turns to focusing on each of the elements of financial control systems, which provide the dominant form of control in the vast majority of decentralised organisations. These elements include financial target setting, performance measurement and evaluation and the assignment of various forms of organisational rewards, such as bonuses and promotions. The latter part of the course extends these key notions of management control from the intra-organisational level to the inter-organisational level, highlighting some of the difficulties involved in organisational control of new, fluid, inter-organisational settings and configurations, such as joint-ventures and various types of alliances, often involving global alliance partners.

The course will cover the following topics:

- Strategy and the design of management control systems, including strategic and operational plans and budgets
- Management control alternatives, including results controls, and organisational architecture
- Decision rights and results accountability in decentralised organisations
- Incentive compensation systems, including short-term and long-term incentive plans
- Performance measurement and evaluation, including objective and subjective performance evaluations
- Management control in inter-organisational relationships, including joint-ventures

As a final note, the discipline of management accounting is often partitioned into (1) management control systems and (2) cost and management accounting systems, where the latter is the key focus of another course, AC415. AC411 can, but is not required, to be taken with AC415. Students can take either AC411 or AC415, or both.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Note: Week 1 of MT is reserved for an intensive pre-session course for MSc Accounting and Finance students; therefore, main courses, including AC411, start in Week 2 of Michaelmas term; hence, teaching is during 10 weeks from Week 2 through 11. Specifically, AC411 consists of 10 principal topics delivered in two sessions of 1.5 hours each week. The first session each week typically provides an introduction, conceptual analysis, and discussion of the key facets of the topic. The second session offers a further discussion and expansion of the issues through case study analysis and real-world applications. Each session is conducted in groups of about 55 students. The case study discussions permit the exploration of management control issues in a broad range of settings. The case method of instruction requires good advance preparation by the students, and every person should be ready to contribute to the case discussion when called upon. Students should expect to be "cold called" and cannot count on being able to hide behind classmates who volunteer to participate. Active participation is also expected and encouraged during non-case sessions. Blocks of sessions are taught by various notable professors in the relevant topic areas and the subject of management controls generally.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each session prepared having done the assigned readings and having prepared the assigned cases.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is laid out for each session on the syllabus.

Reference textbook: Merchant & Van der Stede, Management Control Systems: Performance Measurement, Evaluation and Incentives, 4e (Prentice Hall, 2017).

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Essay (20%) in the MT.

Project (20%) in January.

Students are required to complete two essays during term-time (totalling 20% of the mark for the course), a group project, due in January (20%), and a final exam in LT week 0 in early January 2019 (60%),

AC412 Half Unit Accountability, Organisations and Risk Management

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW.3.12 and Dr Tommaso Palermo KSW.3.07

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Programme Director.

Course content: This is an advanced course focusing on the organisational and institutional settings within which risk is managed.

First, the course explores the intersections of risk and corporate governance, by focusing on the risks that arise at top management and board of directors level, including misconduct, gatekeeper failure, executive pay and board composition. Second, the course deals with key issues in organisational responses to risk and uncertainty, including the impact of disasters and accidents and the growing formalisation and standardisation of risk management practice. The overall purpose of the course is to provide students with a critical appreciation of the management of risk as an organisational and social process. The course is necessarily cross-disciplinary, drawing on scholarship within accounting, organisational sociology and regulation studies.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Two pieces of written work will be assessed during the term. The grades for this work will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: No single book covers the entire course. Key readings include: Bebchuk & Fried, Pay Without Performance (Harvard, 2004); Coffee, Gatekeepers: The Professions and Corporate Governance (Oxford, 2006); Hutter & Power (eds) Organizational Encounters with Risk, (Cambridge, 2005); Power, Organized Uncertainty: Designing a World of Risk Management (Oxford, 2007); Turner & Pidgeon, Man-Made Disasters, (Butterworth/Heinemann, 1997); Vaughan, The Challenger Launch Decision, (Chicago, 1997); Short & Clarke (eds) Organizations, Uncertainties and Risks (Westview, 1992); Weick & Sutcliffe, Managing the Unexpected: Assuring High Performance in an Age of Complexity (Jossey-Bass, 2007).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

AC415 Half Unit Management Accounting for Decision Making

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bjorn Jorgensen OLD 2.17 and Dr Henry Eyring OLD 3.10

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course cannot be taken concurrently with AC490

Management Accounting, Decisions and Control.

Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Programme Director if they have sufficient relevant background knowledge.

The course is capped to two sections of around 50 students; ie, 100 total. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.

Course content: This course is focused on management accounting, which is a key function in organisations that involves developing and using financial and non-financial information to support decision making, not only in a technical sense, but bearing in mind that the way in which management accounting systems are designed and implemented often determines whether employees will be motivated to act in ways that are congruent with the objectives of the organisation.

The discipline of management accounting is often partitioned into (1) cost and management accounting systems and (2) management control systems, where the latter is the key focus of another course, AC411. AC415 can, but is not required to, be taken with AC411. Students can take AC411 or AC415, or both. Returning to AC415, while financial accounting requires that product cost information be accumulated in particular ways for external reporting, the focus in AC415 is on cost and other accounting and non-accounting information systems that aid managerial decision making. This includes the study of management accounting systems in widespread use today as well as an analysis of the problems associated with these systems in today's business environment (such as their tendency to provide distorted product cost information), as well as approaches to mitigate these problems (eg, activity-based costing; use of non-financial information).

With the above brief overview in mind, this course analyses key concepts which form the discipline of management accounting:

- Product costing and pricing
- Activity-based costing/management (ABC/ABM)
- Profitability and variance analysis
- Transfer pricing including tax considerations for international transactions
- Performance measurement and incentive compensation systems
- ROI, EVA, and other performance metrics

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

That is, AC415 is delivered in two sessions of 1.5 hours each week. Each session is conducted in groups of circa 55 students and is almost exclusively taught by way of the case method of instruction. Case studies permit the exploration of management accounting issues in a broad range of settings. The case method of instruction, however, requires good advance preparation by the students, and every person should be ready to contribute to the case discussion when called upon. Students should expect to be "cold called" and not count on being able to hide behind classmates who volunteer to participate.

There is a reading week in week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each session prepared having done the assigned readings and having prepared the assigned cases.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is laid out for each session on the syllabus. Reference textbook: Horngren, Sundem, Burgstahler, and Schatzberg, Introduction to Management Accounting, 16e (Prentice Hall, 2014).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (15%) and case assignment (10%) in the LT.

AC416 Half Unit Topics in Financial Reporting

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Manuel Correia OLD 3.12

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted if they have knowledge of financial accounting acquired at undergraduate level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting and Finance) Course Tutor.

The course is capped to four sections of around 50 students; ie, 200 total. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.

Pre-requisites: Prior knowledge of financial accounting is assumed. AC480 (Qualitative Methods in Accounting and Finance) is a pre-requisite for students with no/little prior knowledge of financial accounting.

Course content: Corporate financial statements are a key source of information about the economic activities of a firm. This course is intended to enhance the student's ability to relate economic events to financial statements and disclosures. It also seeks to aid in developing a coordinated set of concepts and principles to serve as a framework for analysing a wide variety of financial reporting issues. The goal is to enable students to understand the mapping between underlying economic events and the information in financial statements, and how this mapping affects inferences about the economic activities and position of the firm. The course also explores the regulatory environment and political climate, and how these link with the introduction of new standards and their underlying theories. Students are encouraged to relate economic events to diverse practices in financial statements, and to think critically of ongoing controversies and debates.

The emphasis of this course is on understanding and critical thinking, rather than bookkeeping. The course draws heavily on academic literature on the suggested topics.

The course objectives are achieved through teaching a variety of financial reporting issues and topics including the following: standard setting with respect to the conceptual frameworks; accounting for business combinations; accounting for value creation with special emphasis on cash flows statements and revenue recognition; capital markets efficiency; corporate disclosure; and corporate governance. Most topics are covered from an International Financial Reporting Standards and/or United States Generally Accepted Accounting Principles perspective. Detailed choice of subjects will be determined by those lecturing on the course and may vary to some extent from year to year. Knowledge of basic accounting is assumed.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Teaching is delivered in two one and a half hour sessions each week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 55 students, often involving case study analyses and group discussions. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 problem sets in the MT.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are handed out at the start of the course. Relevant books covering specific parts of the course are:

- Financial Reporting and Analysis, by Revsine, Collins, Johnson and Mittelstaedt (McGraw Hill, 5th ed.);
- Financial Accounting: An Introduction to Concepts, Methods and Uses, by Stickney, Weil, Schipper and Francis (Thomson Learning, South-Western, 14th ed.).

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Group project (20%) in the MT.

The group project will require students to search the press for issues of relevance to the topic they have been assigned and produce a five-page report which they will present in class.

Corporate Financial Disclosure and Investor Relations

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ken Lee OLD 3.29 and Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted if they have knowledge of financial accounting and finance acquired at undergraduate level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting and Finance) Course Tutor.

The course is capped to two sections of around 55 students; ie, 110 total. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registration or changes to earlier course choices may be unsuccessful.

Course content: Investors view firms through the lens of financial accounting and reporting. This course aims to examine this lens by covering topics on the interaction of financial accounting and reporting with capital markets with a focus on corporate disclosure and communication strategies. The course views corporate financial reporting as an information system and reviews the theories and empirical regularities on the demand for and supply of accounting information in capital markets while also assessing the stock market impact of communication strategies.

Some of the topics covered in the course include: Determinants of accounting choices; Capital markets and the earnings game; Voluntary disclosure theory and practices; The signalling role of accounting information; Capital market consequences of accounting and disclosure choices; Financial reporting and corporate governance; Communication challenges during a corporate crisis; Communication with capital markets during equity offerings. The course is based on a number of theories, empirical applications, and case studies, so that students gain an understanding firm's corporate information environment and communication strategies.

Detailed choice of subjects to be covered will be determined by those lecturing on the course and may vary to some extent from year to year. Knowledge of basic accounting and finance is assumed.

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the LT.

Teaching is delivered in three hour sessions each week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 50 students, often involving case study analyses, application exercises and group presentations and discussions. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment will be in the form of class exercises and case-studies on topics covered during the course. Students will be expected to hand in two assignments in the LT.

Indicative reading: The course relies mostly on journal articles and chapters from relevant books supplied in study packs. In the first part of the course the relevant books are:

- Gibbons, R (1992) 'A Primer in Game Theory';
- Scott, W (2011) Financial Accounting Theory (Prentice Hall)

In the second part of the course the key text is:

- Laskin, A (2018) 'The Handbook of Financial Communication and investor relations' (Wiley)

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Group exercise (40%) in the LT.

The group exercise will consist of class participation and group work.

Accounting, Organisations and Institutions

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is not available to other students except in special circumstances and with the written permission of the Course Director.

Pre-requisites: There are no specific pre-requisites. The course does not require a background in accounting and the programme and core course are open to specialists and non-specialists alike. Pre-session training in the form of various intensive sessions prior to the start of term will be offered for those who need a brief 'technical' preparation for the Programme.

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with an advanced, social science based critical understanding of the changing role and position of accounting practices in organisations, both public and private, and in societies more generally. Students will be exposed to advanced thinking and case materials about how accounting practices are more than a collection of routine self-evident techniques but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. We will focus on how the fundamental assumptions of internal and external accounting practices are institutional in nature and are shaped by social and political aspirations. The role of accountants and other agents involved in the production and consumption of accounting numbers will also be addressed.

The course will emphasise the inter-relations between technical, organisational and institutional issues. While some technical accounting knowledge will be helpful, it is not essential and each lecture will provide the necessary technical foundations.

Indicative topics, " include:

Foundations: Reporting, Calculation and Transparency; The Users of Accounting; Accounting and the Notion of "Entity"; Audit and Assurance: The Audit Society; Organisational Boundaries, Structure and Control; Accountability, Incentives and Performance; Accounting for Sustainability; Organisational Failure. Risk Management, Accountability and Corporate Governance; Disasters, Accidents and Errors; Organisations and the Management of Uncertainty; The Risk Management Process; Mapping and Communicating Risk in Organisations; Organisations, Security and Resilience; Corporate Governance: Board Functioning, Gatekeepers, Executive Compensation, Regulation.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. This course has a reading and feedback week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two pieces of written work per term. This may take the form of either an essay, or the analysis of a case, and may also include in-class presentation and team-based work. This work will be assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: Chapman, Cooper & Miller (eds.), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford, 2009); Hopwood & Miller (eds.), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice (Cambridge, 1994); Power, The Audit Society (Oxford, 1999); Power, Organized Uncertainty: Designing a World of Risk Management (Oxford, 2007); Hutter & Power (eds.), Organizational Encounters with Risk (Cambridge, 2005); Coffee, Gatekeepers: The Professions and Corporate Governance (Oxford, 2006); Bebchuk & Fried, Pay Without Performance (Harvard, 2004); Power, Riskwork: Essays on the Organizational Life of Risk Management (Oxford, 2016)

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

This is a Long Essay which will be due early in the ST.

MSc Accounting, Organisations and Institutions: Pre-session course

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12 and Dr Kenneth Lee, OLD 3.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is only available to MSc Accounting, Organisations and Institutions students. The purpose of this pre-session is to acquaint students, both with and without any prior, or little, background in accounting, to the critical approach to be adopted on the core course AC424. Students with some prior background in accounting will find the session to be useful as a "refresher" about accounting fundamentals, but are also advised to take AC480 Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance if they wish to take advanced accounting options.

Course content: Introduction to Accounting, Organizations and Institutions

Teaching: The sessions are held in September before the start of MT.

Formative coursework: Study materials for the pre-session will be made available by means of selected handouts

Assessment:

There is no assessment.

AC444 Half Unit

Valuation and Security Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Morsfield, OLD 2.16
Dr Kenneth Lee, OLD 3.29 (Valuation component)

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted to the course if they have a reasonable knowledge of financial accounting and finance acquired at undergraduate or equivalent level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the teacher responsible for this course. Enrolment on this course is constrained by section size and the number of sessions available. Students are admitted on the course on a first-come-first-served basis. If the course is over-subscribed, students on the waiting list will continue to be admitted on a first-come-first-served basis as places become available, but MSc students on the Accounting programmes will only then be given priority although cannot be guaranteed a place if no places become available. Therefore, to avoid frustration and possibly being unable to take the course, students wishing to reduce the risk of non-admittance on the course should prioritise their courses and register early for their preferred, "must have" courses. Late registrations or late changes to this course choice may be unsuccessful.

Pre-requisites: Students will be assumed to have a solid understanding of corporate finance as well as financial accounting principles, techniques and methods. Completion of AC416 in Michaelmas term is strongly recommended for this course. Attendance at the "Modelling skills" workshop typically held on a Saturday in Michaelmas term is also strongly recommended. Further details will be provided nearer the time.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to security analysis and valuation from both academic and practical perspectives. The course materials include many real-world cases, where students are placed in the role of investors to conduct financial statement analysis and make investment decisions. At the end of the course, students are furthermore provided with an opportunity to apply their skills by analysing and valuing, in small groups, from the point of view of a "sell-side analyst", a firm's equity of their choice. The course should appeal to students interested in equity research, investment banking, and fund management. The course is presented in two parts. The first part, financial analysis, focuses on past and present performance evaluation, which is used by financial analysts to generate expectations about future performance (prospective analysis). The second part, security valuation, focuses on the determination of intrinsic security prices, which, in efficient markets, reflect prospective performance.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Student group project presentations in week 11 of Lent Term. Teaching is delivered in two 90-minute sessions per week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 55 students, often involving both lecturing and case study analyses and discussions. In the case study sessions, students break into small groups to work and collaborate as a team. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.

Indicative reading: There is no required textbook for this course. However, we recommend the following book for reading and additional exercises: K Palepu, P. Healy and E. Peek, Business Analysis & Valuation, 4th IFRS edition, CENGAGE Learning, 2016. For the valuation section the recommended text is Company Valuation under IFRS, N. Antill, K. Lee and D. Taylor, 3rd Edition, 2019, Harriman House publishing.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (40%) in the LT.

Class participation (10%).

AC470 Half Unit Accounting in the Global Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Mennicken KSW 3.09

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Regulation and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped to one section of 55 students. Students on the waiting list will be admitted on a first-come first-served basis.

Pre-requisites: There are no specific pre-requisites and the course does not require a background in accounting.

Course content: This course examines the fast changing practices and institutions of accounting in the global economy, with a particular emphasis on the roles of accounting in global financial governance. International accounting and auditing standards have been advocated as a way of enhancing global financial stability, so as to stimulate the flow of cross-national investment, expand the scope for market-oriented development, and integrate local enterprises into global financial markets. This course critically examines dynamics of accounting regulation, including international standard-setting and consequences for financial statement users, business entities and wider local and global stakeholders.

Topics include:

Political, institutional and economic influences in changing national and international financial reporting frameworks. The political economy of accounting standard-setting. The work of the International Accounting Standards Board (IASB), the European Union, national accounting bodies, and their political and economic environments.

The effects of national financial reporting requirements and International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) on business entities and economic development, particularly developing and emerging economies (including the BRIC countries: Brazil, Russia, India, China). The enforcement of financial reporting requirements through auditors, securities regulators, the World Bank and others. Specific technical challenges (for example, impairment tests, derivatives and other financial instruments, fair value accounting and intangible assets).

The course explores issues from different theoretical perspectives through comparative empirical analysis.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. (Note: Week 1 of MT is reserved for an intensive pre-session course for MSc Accounting and Finance students; therefore, main courses, including AC470, start in Week 2 of MT; hence, teaching is for 10 weeks from weeks 2-11.)

A 2-hour essay workshop and one-to-one essay feedback sessions in week 11 of MT. It is further intended to run a small number of additional sessions with invited speakers who are centrally involved at a senior level in the setting, enforcement and convergence of international accounting regulations. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each session prepared having done the assigned readings and having prepared the assigned class discussion questions. In addition, students are required to write an assessed essay of 3,500-4,000 words, to be submitted after the Christmas break. The word limit excludes the bibliography. This written work forms 40% of the overall assessment. A workshop will be held in preparation for the essay assignment. Individual feedback will be given on essay outlines. Further readings, exercises and case studies are set for class discussion each week.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be given out at the start of the session, and are largely based on academic journal articles. Other readings include policy briefings, regulatory documents, green and white papers, World Bank reports (ROSC). Relevant books: Aerts & Walton, Global Financial Accounting and Reporting (Cengage, 2017); Camfferman & Zeff, Aiming for Global Accounting Standards, 2001-2011 (Oxford University Press, 2018); Botzem, The Politics of Accounting Regulation (Edward Elgar, 2012); Ramanna, Political Standards: Corporate Interest, Ideology and Leadership in the Shaping of Accounting Rules for the Market Economy (University of Chicago Press, 2015); Djelic & Quack, Transnational Communities: Shaping Global Economic Governance (Cambridge University Press, 2010); Nobes & Parker, Comparative International Accounting (Pearson, 2017); Nobes International Classification of Financial Reporting (Routledge 2018); Walter, Governing Finance: East Asia's Adoption of International Standards (Cornell University Press, 2008).

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (40%) in the LT.

Essay: (40%, 3,500-4,000 words) in LT. The 4,000 words exclude the bibliography.

Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stefano Cascino OLD 3.32 and Dr Aneesh Raghunandan OLD 2.15

Dr Jose Carabias Palmeiro, OLD 2.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions.

This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with the necessary background required for core accounting and finance courses. The course is organised in two sections:

Section 1 - "Accounting: Disclosure Principles and Practice" provides an overview of fundamental accounting concepts, practices and the main financial statements. This section emphasises users' perspective rather than preparers' perspective on financial reporting (eg, for valuation purposes).

Section 2 - "Finance: Quantitative Methods" provides the basic quantitative tools needed for technical MSc courses. This section consists of an introduction to Basic Calculus, Probability and Statistics.

Teaching: Teaching takes place over a 9-day period before the start of MT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: This course is not assessed. However, students will be given a number of application exercises to complete on their own or in groups.

AC490 Half Unit

Management Accounting, Decisions and Control

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alnoor Bhimani OLD 3.08

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This introductory course may also be taken by MSc students who have not previously studied accounting subjects. Students in the MSc Accounting and Finance programme are not permitted to enrol in this course or in AC491. This course cannot be taken concurrently with AC415 Management Accounting for Decision Making. The course is capped at 115 students.

Course content: Enterprises must today tackle markets that are affected by global economic and business forces and advances in internet-based technologies. They face intense competition from ever-changing corporate strategies of their competitors and new business models. At the same time, the interface between business decisions and management accounting has become more complex but significantly impacts corporate performance. This course provides students with an introduction to how accounting information and cost management techniques shape managerial decision making and performance measurement. It discusses inter-relationships between management accounting and technology, corporate strategy, e-business and marketing. The course includes both qualitative and quantitative material and is not purely calculations based.

The course will cover:

- established managerial accounting concepts such as cost-volume-profit relationships, overhead cost allocations, activity based costing, the balanced scorecard, target cost management and quality costing;
- how flexible organisational technologies such as just-in-time systems, enterprise resource planning, computer integrated system and 3-D manufacturing influence accounting information;
- operational, marketing and corporate strategy issues including cost management, e-business and internet-based business models;
- organisational arrangements such as functional and multidivisional firms and virtual enterprises;
- comparative international management accounting systems;
- accounting controls associated with responsibility centres, financial performance measurement, variance analysis, and incentives;
- strategic accounting tools and practices.

The course will provide participants with:

- an understanding of strategic, market and technological links to management accounting and control practices;
- the ability to apply modern management accounting techniques within competitive business environments;
- a knowledge of interrelationships between behavioural, organisational and cultural issues and management accounting systems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in week 6 of LT. A 2-hour revision lecture will be held in ST or extra office hours will be held.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises, analyses of case studies, and essays. At least two pieces of written work will be collected for feedback during the course. Students are also required to participate actively in a variety of discussions and debates as part of the class activities.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be given out at the start of the course. The following two books will be extensively used: Bhimani A, Horngren C, Datar S and Rajan M Management and Cost Accounting (Pearson, 2019) and Bhimani A, Financial Management for Technology Start-ups, Kogan Page, 2017.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours and 15 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period. The first 15 minutes will be reading time.

Financial Accounting, Reporting and Disclosure

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD.5.05

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Diploma in Accounting and Finance, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course may also be taken by MSc students who have not previously studied accounting subjects to a significant extent. Students on the MSc Accounting and Finance programme are not permitted to enrol in this course or in AC490.

This course cannot be taken in conjunction with AC416 Topics in Financial Reporting.

The course is capped at 115 students.

Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to financial accounting, and highlights aspects of reporting that are important to users of financial information. The course covers the preparation of key financial statements and accounting issues related to intangible assets, equity, debt, intercorporate investments and consolidation. Students are introduced to the basics of financial statement analysis and research on the use of accounting information in financial markets.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. There will be a reading week in week 6 of MT. There is a 2 hour revision lecture in ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be made available at the start of the course. Illustrative texts:

Harrison, Horngren, Thomas and Swardy, Financial Accounting (IFRS), 11th ed., Pearson Higher Education/Prentice Hall.
Weetman P, Financial Accounting: an Introduction, 7th ed., Pitman Publishing.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

AC493 Half UnitFinancial and Management Accounting for Managerial Decision Making

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Henry Eyring, OLD 3.10 and Dr Kenneth Lee (Financial Accounting component), OLD 3,29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course covers introductions to both financial accounting and management accounting. The first part of this course provides students with an introduction to financial accounting, and highlights aspects of financial reporting that are important to users of financial information. It covers the preparation of key financial statements and the frameworks of accounting regulation. The second part of the course provides students with an introduction to management information and cost management, managerial decision making and performance measurement.

Specifically, then, the first half of AC493 is focused on financial accounting, which aims to familiarise students with the principles and some of the techniques of financial accounting and financial reporting as well as some aspects of current regulatory debates on the subject. After the first half of the course, students should be able to:

- Distinguish between cash accounting and accrual accounting, and explain traditional accounting concepts and conventions.
- Draw up simple balance sheets, and income statements as well as to develop an understanding of cash flow statements and group accounts, and understand how they are affected by different accounting treatments.
- Use these financial statements to perform financial analysis.
- Discuss the issue of "creative accounting", asset valuation and other contemporary issues in accounting.
- Discuss market influences of accounting information and theories of accounting choice.

The second half of AC493 focuses on management accounting, which is a key function in organisations that involves developing and using financial and non-financial information to support decision making, not only in a technical sense, but bearing in mind that the way in which management accounting systems are designed and implemented often determines whether employees will be motivated to act in ways that are congruent with the objectives of the organisation. The discipline of management accounting is often partitioned into (1) cost and management accounting systems and (2) management control systems, and both components are covered in the second part of the course. While financial accounting (covered in the first part of the course) requires that product cost information be accumulated in particular ways for external reporting, the focus in the second half of the course is on cost and other accounting and non-accounting information systems that aid managerial decision making.

This includes the study of management accounting systems in widespread use today as well as an analysis of the problems associated with these systems in today's business environment (such as their tendency to provide distorted product cost information), as well as approaches to mitigate these problems (e.g., activity-based costing; use of non-financial information).

Through the second half of the course, students should be able to:

1. Analyse key concepts which form the discipline of management accounting:
 - Product costing and pricing;
 - Activity based costing/management (ABC/ABM);
 - Profitability and variance analysis;
 - Performance measurement and evaluation;
 - ROI, EVA, and other performance metrics.
2. Possess the skills necessary to use management accounting information to make business decisions.
3. Illustrate how management accounting information can be used to formulate and implement strategy in a variety of organisational settings.
4. Understand how the design and use of management accounting systems affect human behaviour in organisations.

Teaching: 33 hours of lectures in the LT.

This course consists of 11 principal weeks with topics delivered in sessions of 1½ hours twice a week. Each session is conducted in groups of about 65 students. Most sessions make use of class exercises, case study analyses and real-world applications to bring the materials to life and to apply conceptual knowledge to problems faced in practice. The case study analyses and discussions permit the exploration of accounting issues in broader management perspectives (e.g., large and small firms, manufacturing and service firms, multinational firms, startups). The case method of instruction, however, requires good advance preparation by students, and every student should be ready to contribute to the case discussion when called upon. Students should expect to be 'cold called' and not count on being able to hide behind classmates who volunteer to participate.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to be prepared for the cases and/or other tasks for each session as indicated on the syllabus. Two of these will be collected and graded as shown below under Assessment.

Indicative reading: Reference Textbook:

Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students will normally elect to take this as an option in paper 3 or 4. Permission to select the long essay option must be obtained from the Programme Director by the end of the third week of MT. Students wishing to select this option must first identify and secure agreement from a member of faculty who is willing to provide supervision for the dissertation. Approval for this option will not be granted if such an agreement is not obtained from an academic staff member.

Course content: The dissertation usually consists of an empirical investigation of a selected problem. Occasionally, the dissertation may consist of a survey and critical evaluation of the relevant literature.

The dissertation must identify relevant issues, sustain reasoned argument, and draw supportable conclusions. It must be arranged in an organised manner and include a full bibliography.

Teaching: There is no teaching associated with the dissertation, but students who select this option are encouraged to attend the dissertation workshop sessions organised by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

Arrangements for supervision

Students writing a dissertation will be supervised by a member of faculty who will not necessarily be their academic supervisor. Students are responsible for identifying an appropriate member of staff to supervise their dissertation essay, and for ensuring the member of staff agrees to provide supervision. As a general rule, supervisors of dissertations will not comment on the work after a discussion of the first draft.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Two typewritten copies of the dissertation must be submitted to the MSc Programme Manager, due by 31 May. The dissertation should be double-spaced, on A4 paper, with a maximum word limit of 10,000 words, not including Appendices. Mark penalties will apply if the word limit is exceeded.

The Anthropology of Religion

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Scott OLD 6.16 and Dr Nicholas Evans KGS 3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course covers selected topics in the anthropology of religion, focusing upon relevant theoretical debates.

In the Michaelmas term, we will consider topics such as shamanism, cargo cults, initiation, witchcraft and sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.

In the Lent term, we will further explore the category of 'religion' in its western and non-western contexts. What were the historical processes through which particular constellations of beliefs and practices were grouped together as 'religions'? In what way are different religious traditions comparable to each other? Why do we call some traditions 'religion' and others 'cults'? Students will examine categories such as orthodoxy and heresy and they will explore the relationship between religion and secularism in modern society. Current approaches to and reconsiderations of classic topics in the anthropology of religion are also presented; these may include myth, ritual, belief and doubt, sacrifice, authority and charisma.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 in MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

AN404Anthropology: Theory and Ethnography

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08 and Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to examine the relationship between theory and ethnography in social and cultural anthropology in the context of colonial and post-colonial history. During the Michaelmas term the course focuses on the development of anthropology before circa 1980 in the British, French and American schools. It will explore anthropological epistemology or the discipline's forms and methods of knowledge production. Rather than outlining theoretical schools and their demise, it will explore the creation of key concepts that are the foundations for current debates. The course moves through time with a genealogical method or by tracing the 'birth' of concepts that shape the present and future of our discipline. It will also bring from the margins forgotten ancestors and their heterodox ideas, which are not usually part of the canon. The emergence of key concepts will be linked to intellectual projects, fieldwork encounters and historical events. The unique quality of anthropology is that it is a qualitative social science committed to a 'radical empiricism' (Jackson) or 'realism' (Herzfeld) (unlike economics or sociology for example). In other words its concepts are driven primarily from dissonant encounters with the social and cultural world 'at home' and in 'the field.' Some of the key concepts we will explore will be: participant observation and evidence; culture and race; postcoloniality; relativism and surrealism; totemism and animism; magic, art and science, ritual; inequality; personhood, agency and ethics; kinship and gender. The second term covers topics which may include structuralism; practice theory; interpretive anthropology; postmodernism, affect and actor network theory. The precise emphasis and distribution of topics may vary from year to year.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of workshops in the ST.

The course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework consists of participation in weekly seminars, and the opportunity to discuss one formative essay in each of the MT and LT with the course convener or the student's academic mentor, as per normal departmental arrangements.

AN405The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14 and Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Gender, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems, gender roles, personhood and human sexuality, analysed through ethnographic examples from a diverse range of settings. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'marriage', 'gender', 'sex', 'the person', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture', as well as exploring how the experiences of kinship, sex and gender vary according to the regimes of politics, law and materiality in which they are embedded. The course charts the history of anthropological debates on kinship, relatedness, sex and gender, and familiarises students with a range of contemporary approaches to these themes, placing ethnographic materials into a critical dialogue with recent developments in feminist theory, queer theory, the anthropology of colonialism, cognitive science, and psychoanalysis.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 in MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Carsten, J. After Kinship (2003); Chodorow, N. The Power of Feelings: Personal Meaning in Psychoanalysis, Gender and Culture (1999); Donnan, H. and Magowan, F. The Anthropology of Sex (2010); Lévi-Strauss, C. The Elementary Structures of Kinship (1969); Moore, H. L. A Passion for Difference: Essays in Anthropology and Gender (1994); Schneider, D. A Critique of the Study of Kinship (1984); Stone, L. Kinship and Gender: An Introduction (2006).

Assessment: Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the LT. Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

AN424 Half UnitThe Anthropology of Melanesia

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W Scott, OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to selected themes in the anthropology of the region in the Southwest Pacific Ocean known as Melanesia. It gives students a grounding in the contemporary anthropology of the region, primarily through a close reading of three book-length ethnographies.

The three ethnographies, which are all new since 2013, are Christopher Wright's The Echo of Things, an account of what photography means to people in the western Solomon Islands; Alice Street's Biomedicine in an Unstable Place, an analysis of how persons and diseases are made visible or invisible in a hospital on the north coast of Papua New Guinea; and Alex Golub's Leviathans at the Gold Mine, a study of the relationship between indigenous landowners and a large international gold mining operation in their valley in the highlands of New Guinea.

These ethnographies not only provide students with focused accounts of three very different contexts in Melanesia, they also address histories, dynamics, and concerns familiar to people living throughout the region. Furthermore, because the three authors draw on different intellectual antecedents and disciplinary traditions, their work provides an entree into the most influential theoretical debates animating Pacific anthropology today.

Topics to be traced throughout the course include personhood and bodies, kinship and sociality, religion and cosmology, technology and infrastructure, development, globalization, and the state. Engagement with these three books will be enhanced and supplemented by other readings (including works by Pacific Islanders), ethnographic films, and a visit to the British Museum.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Christopher Wright, The Echo of Things: The Lives of Photographs in the Solomon Islands (2013); Alice Street, Biomedicine in an Unstable Place: Infrastructure and Personhood in a Papua New Guinean Hospital (2014); Alex Golub, Leviathans at the Gold Mine: Creating Indigenous and Corporate Actors in Papua New Guinea (2014). Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST. The assessed essay must be between 3,500 – 4,000 words in length.

AN436 Half Unit

The Anthropology of Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clara Devlieger OLD 6.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development and MSc in Anthropology and Development Management. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Social Anthropology and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course explores how anthropologists have evaluated, criticised and contributed to development. Focussing on both 'Big D' development (schemes of improvement or projects) and 'little d' development (change which occurs as the result of economic growth or modernisation) the course shows how anthropological insights have been used to change practices from within as well as critique development from the outside. From anthropological work which seeks pragmatic engagement to that which deconstructs development as an oppressive and power laden discourse, the course aims to give students a broad background to the field. Topics covered include the role of the state, participation and farmer first approaches; gender and development; development as discourse and 'aidnography'; neo liberalism and global capital; corporate social responsibility; markets and micro credit; and the relationship between 'tradition' and modernity. Throughout, the course will draw upon a broad range of ethnographic examples.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars based on the core ethnographies of the course. Formative work will include a mock exam question.

Indicative reading: Gardner and Lewis 2015, Anthropology and Development: Twenty First Century Challenges; Ferguson, J. 1990 The Anti-Politics Machine: Development, Depoliticisation and Bureaucratic Power in Lesotho; Cambridge University Press; Li, T. 2014 Land's End: Capitalist Relations on an Indigenous Frontier; Karim, L., 2011 Micro-Finance and its Discontents: Women and Debt in Bangladesh; Elyachar, J. 2005; Markets of Dispossession: NGOs, the Market and the State in Cairo; Scherz, C. 2014. Having People, Having Heart: Charity, Sustainable Development, and Problems of Dependence in Central Uganda; Scott, J. 1998, Seeing Like a State: How Certain Schemes to Improve the Human Condition have Failed.

Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

AN442

Supervised Reading Course and Fieldwork Preparation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Members of staff of the Anthropology Department (students' supervisors).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The programme of supervised reading aims to give students a detailed knowledge of the regional ethnographic literature relevant to their proposed research project, as well as providing them with a firm grounding in the theoretical literature relevant to their research objectives. The programme also aims to aid students in the practical organization of their field research (eg organizing language training, obtaining research permits and academic affiliations) through their supervisors' personal guidance. The programme of supervised reading will be specific to each student. It will be agreed with his/her supervisors at the beginning of the academic year and it will be closely reviewed during the course of the academic year.

Teaching: Students should expect to meet with at least one of their supervisors at 2-3 weekly intervals during term time, and to submit essays relevant to the preparation of their Research Proposal (AN443).

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write essays for their supervisors throughout the academic year.

Assessment: Fieldwork notes (100%) in the MT.

Students' progress will be monitored by their supervisors through verbal discussion of the submitted written work. The work they undertake for this course is expected to feed directly into the preparation of the Research Proposal (AN443) and will be formally examined through it.

AN443

Research Proposal

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Members of staff of the Anthropology Department

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: All students must prepare a formal Research Proposal of 8,000-10,000 words (excluding references) for submission to the Department on or before the deadline in June. The proposal is written under the guidance of their supervisors (as set out in AN442), and will normally draw on material studied as part of AN471 Qualitative and Quantitative Methods for Anthropologists and AN472 Evidence and Arguments in Anthropology and Other Social Sciences. It will be expected to demonstrate knowledge of the regional ethnography, and theoretical and methodological literatures, relevant to the proposed research.

Assessment: Research proposal (100%).

AN444 Half Unit

Investigating the Philippines - New Approaches and Ethnographic Contexts

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Graduates taking this course will normally have taken or be taking a foundational course in anthropology. However, topics may be of interest to those in several disciplines. Exemptions may therefore be sought from the lecturer, e.g. for students external to the department, who wish to explore what anthropology can bring to bear on their own fields.

Course content: This course offers the chance to look at the ethnography of one country in more detail than is usual for regional courses. It considers topics taken from the ethnography of the lowland and highland Philippines, with a focus on exciting new high quality writing, drawing on the recent renaissance in Philippine Studies. The course will balance works by expert non-Filipino ethnographers with the new writing of 'native ethnographies' by Filipino scholars resident both in the Philippines themselves and in the US.

The course will be framed within the colonial, religious and social history of the archipelago, and will consider both new interpretations of Philippine history, and topics on contemporary social issues, as well as using classic works on the Philippines. Teaching each week will normally be organised around the reading of one outstanding ethnography, allowing students to look closely at particular cases. Topics in any year are likely to be drawn from the following list (although obviously only ten topics can be offered in one year); Migration, 'mail-order' brides, and the Philippine diaspora; New religious movements: Philippine colonialism and the processes of conversion: Healing, spirit possession, midwifery and local medicine: The contemporary Catholic Church; Violence in the Philippines; Ecology, landscape and environmental politics: Kinship and its transformations; Gender, Philippine queer theory and Philippine transvestitism: Ritual, drama and local performance traditions: Philippine architecture and material culture.: Philippine cinema: Colonial politics, tribal politics and issues of self-representation: Magic, sorcery and "anitismo"; Tourism, symbolic economies and the impact of international capitalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Students may be required to prepare discussion material for seminars. Students will be expected to produce one essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course, these are an indicative selection: Michell Rosaldo, Knowledge and Passion; Vicente Rafael, Contracting Colonialism; Fenella Cannell, Power and Intimacy in the Christian Philippines; Sally-Ann Ness, Where Asia Smiles; Heather L Claussen, Unconventional Sisterhood; M F Manalansan, Global Divas: Filipino Gay Men in the Diaspora; Vicente Rafael, White Love and Other Events in Filipino History; Nicole Constable, Maid to order in Hong Kong; Albert Alejo, Generating Energies in Mount Apo.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Students will be given clear guidance on how to prepare for the exam and should note that the format requires two topics to be covered from a choice of seven, allowing plenty of scope in topic choice. A revision session will be arranged in ST if requested by students. Students are also welcome to bring any individual questions to the course teacher in office hours.

China in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephan Feuchtwang, Dr Johannes Steinmuller OLD 5.06a and Dr William Matthews POR 2.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Places are limited and priority is given to MSc China in Comparative Perspective students.

Course content: The main object of the course is to help students develop ways of putting the politics, economy and social life of China into a framework in which they can compare and juxtapose it with other major examples. Main topics include China's imperial bureaucracy, Chinese religion, the great divergence debate, as well as current issues such as urban life, the family, the rule of law, and contentious politics. Students will bring whatever theoretical approaches they have already learned and are continuing to learn in the disciplines they bring to the course. They will be expected to demonstrate and explain how they are using them as well as to listen to other approaches and disciplinary perspectives.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST. This course has reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework consists of participation in weekly seminars, and the opportunity to discuss one formative essay in each of the MT and LT with the course convener or the student's academic mentor.

Indicative reading: Fei Xiaotong 1992 [1948]. From the Soil, the Foundations of Chinese Society: A Translation of Fei Xiaotong's Xiangtu Zhongguo, with an Introduction and Epilogue, transl. Anthropology of Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD 5.09

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on the notion of power and its cross-cultural application. Using Marxist, Weberian, and Foucauldian approaches it explores how power travels through different socio-cultural contexts, paying attention to issues such as domination and resistance, patron-client relations, the mafia, revolution and violence. A recurring theme throughout the course concerns the state. How should the state be studied anthropologically? Processes of state formation and disintegration, nationalism in its various guises, and state-society relations will be reviewed in order to understand how European, post-colonial, and post-socialist societies are governed.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Anthropology, MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines 'the economy' as an object of scholarly analysis and a domain of social action. We start by asking how scholars have measured, described, modeled, and predicted its behaviour; what forms economic institutions take cross-culturally; and how these institutions were transformed as a result of their incorporation into a wider capitalist markets, state systems, and development initiatives. For example, we will examine the central place of households within capitalist economies, largely overlooked by mainstream economic analyses, and the role that money can play in both dividing and uniting human societies. The course will familiarise students with fundamental aspects of the field and with core concepts used in anthropological analyses of economic life, such as production, consumption, exchange, property, alienation, scarcity, and value. But we will also try to break open the standard frames of the debate by highlighting, for example, the entanglement of nature in the capitalist expansion, and how economic life is rarely stable. What progress have anthropologists made in understanding booms, busts, prolonged pauses and delays? What can ethnography tell us about how people cope with crises and instabilities, individually and collectively, and how they seek to anticipate what the future may hold? Throughout the course, students will engage both with theoretical writings and with a range of select ethnographies to gain a rounded understanding of relevant debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Anthropology of Economy (2): Transformation and Globalisation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Laura Bear OLD 6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Anthropology, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Anthropology, MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World) and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course addresses topics in the anthropology of globalisation. Scholars in a wide range of disciplines have sought to understand the new forms of production, consumption, exchange and financial circulation that have emerged since the 1980s. Some emphasise post-Fordist methods of flexible production and neo-liberal elite projects. Others focus on trans-state processes of globalisation. For other theorists shifts in state policies such as austerity, decentralised planning, public-private partnerships and the deregulation of financial markets are at the centre of analysis. Others address new forms of consumer society, popular desires for social mobility and transnational migration. Drawing from ethnographies and anthropological theory this course equips students to evaluate these arguments. Importantly it also revisits classic topics in economic anthropology from the perspective of present realities – for example production and intimate economies; formal markets in relation to informalised, violent economies; circulation in relation to financial debt and risk; and consumption and consumer citizenship.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

AN469 Half Unit

The Anthropology of Amazonia

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will introduce students to selected themes in the anthropology of Amazonia. It will provide a grounding in the ethnographic literature of the region while seeking to engage with current theoretical debates, highlighting their potential importance to the discipline of anthropology. Topics to be covered include history, indigenous social movements; sexuality and gender; trade and inter-ethnic relations; politics and power; illness, well-being and death. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the broader relationship between ethnography and theory, to challenge common stereotypes of Amazonia and its inhabitants, and to explore ways in which the region has inscribed itself on the imagination of anthropologists and laypersons alike.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students registered for Anthropology degrees will have the opportunity to prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting formative essays to the course teacher.

Qualitative and Quantitative Methods for Anthropologists

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charles Stafford OLD 6.02 and Prof Deborah James OLD 6.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The twofold aim of this course is to provide students with insights into the process by which anthropological knowledge is produced, and to train them in the collection and analysis of qualitative and quantitative data. In doing so it offers students a methodological framework for conceptualising and designing their own PhD research projects. The course discusses the nature of ethnographic data and evidence, its implications for research, and ways of incorporating empirical data in ethnographic texts.

Teaching: 40 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

Indicative reading: A. Robben and A. Sluka (eds.) 2007.

Evidence and Arguments in Anthropology and Other Social Sciences

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Evans KGS 3.07 and Dr Luke Heslop OLD 6.17A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This seminar course considers research practices across a range of social and natural sciences in order to explore methodological issues that are specifically relevant to ethnography. In particular, it focuses on the relationship between evidence and the kinds of inferences and conclusions which are drawn by researchers in different social science fields. For one part of the course, case-studies taken from different disciplines will be considered in relation to the research practices of ethnographers. The disciplines covered may include: cognitive science & developmental psychology; moral philosophy; photographic theory; archival research; quantitative sociology; economics; development studies; literary criticism. For another part of the course, students will present their own draft research proposals to other both in written and oral form, focusing on (1) the questions they hope to explore in their dissertations; (2) the kinds of evidence they will need in order to adequately explore these questions; (3) the methods they will adopt in order to collect this evidence.

Teaching: 40 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2500 words), presentation (25%) and class participation (25%) in the LT.

AN473 Half Unit Anthropological Approaches to Value

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Graeber OLD 6.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we will first take stock of the current anthropological theories of value in contemporary anthropology. After a critical appraisal of such theories, we will explore what an anthropological theory of value might actually look like. After a brief exploration of Kluckhohn's "values project", the formalist-substantivist arguments, and debates about the nature of the social role of money, up to the recent neoliberal resurgence in anthropological theory, we'll be looking at the contrasting legacies of Karl Marx and Marcel Mauss. Looking at these as two very different approaches to many of the same problems will provide enormous opportunities for creative synthesis. The course will include some fairly extended case studies (of Tiv fetishism, wampum, and anthropological studies of consumption), to investigate how useful all this theory can actually be in throwing new light on familiar problems.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students registered for Anthropology degrees may submit formative tutorial essays on the course content and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting essays to the course teacher and receiving feedback on them.

AN479 Half Unit Anthropology of Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Insa Koch NAB 7.17

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will be of particular benefit to anthropology students who are interested in political and legal developments as well as political economy perspectives in anthropology. It will also be interesting to law students with an interest in socio-legal, critical, criminological and anthropological approaches to the study of law. Students from other departments are encouraged to take this course if they wish to learn more about the anthropology of law. The course complements the Anthropology of Politics (which already runs as a stand-alone half term unit) but it stands as an independent half unit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to major developments and debates in legal anthropology both across time and space. The course is divided into three parts. The first part introduces students to the origins and early developments of the discipline. Students will learn about legal anthropology's encounter with colonialism, its post-colonial critics and the legacy these debates have left on the sub-discipline today. The second part moves on to core debates in contemporary legal anthropology, including on human rights, citizenship and violence and law. In the third part of the course, you will learn about the limits of the law and law's relationship to other social, economic and political domains. Topics will include the policing of the migrant crisis, the criminalisation of poverty and indigenous peoples' struggles over cultural recognition.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

The course will be taught through a combination of weekly lectures and seminars. During reading week (week 6), students will also be asked to conduct a court visit and to write up a short ethnographic project. This will be discussed in seminar after reading week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Some useful background/overview readings include:

AN480 Half Unit Public Anthropology

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Pia

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: What and how does anthropology contribute to public life? Do anthropologists have a responsibility to meaningfully contribute to communities beyond the academy that make the study of anthropology possible? This module explores the challenges, difficulties, and stakes of having ethnographic research encounter various publics, ranging from journalists, legal experts, and policymakers to activist groups, local populations, and other scholars. Students of this module engage critically with a variety of media (books, newspaper articles, documentaries, podcasts, social platforms and interactive digital tools) with a view of analysing the ways in which anthropological ideas are conveyed to broader audiences, reflecting on how to improve their representation and effectiveness, and proposing new ways of disseminating these ideas to different publics.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures, 3 hours of seminars, 8 hours of classes and 12 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course is divided into ten weeks, consisting of a combination of lectures/movie workshops/classes. Each week students read excerpts from selected ethnographic texts across geographical areas that have spurred public interest for the sensitiveness of their subject matter or the questionability of their research ethics. Workshops introduce students to the public buzzes generated by these studies and ask them to reflect on the politics and situatedness of ethnographic research and on the relatability of its findings. In some of the seminars a 'local expert' will be present to serve as a resource in the discussion of the issues.

The focus of this module is on the relationship between anthropological theory, the power fields in which it is inserted and its diverse publics. The types of questions this module address are both of critical and applied nature: to what extent can ethnographic studies of the food production system, waste management and water and energy provisions make global social infrastructures fairer? To what extent structure/agency debates in anthropology (and cognate disciplines) may move public perceptions of criminality and marginality towards more sympathetic positions? How effective have ethnographic-based critiques of trickle-down economics and social mobility really been, and why? How can anthropological accounts of systemic inequality take root into public representations of otherness?

The course ends by examining recent anthropological proposals within academia for a more vocal and engaged anthropology. It asks student to critically reflect on whether the discipline's colonial past may still weigh on today's attempts at engaging new publics. What disciplinary benchmarks of successful engagement should anthropologists set up for their own scholarship?

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project and 1 presentation in the LT.

Formative assessment consists in a series of dedicated methodological seminars (two sessions in total) where students familiarise with non-traditional methods of communicating ethnographic insights. In preparation of seminars (on week 4 and 8) students submit a draft proposal of their research in progress and present related research materials in small groups.

The course is assessed via a research essay (100%) at the end of LT

For the research essay, students carry out independent research to produce a document of a maximum of 4000 words which relates anthropological scholarships to a public issue of their choice.

AN481 Half Unit

Health and Welfare: Anthropological Perspectives

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clara Devlieger OLD 6.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will focus on the study of health and welfare from an anthropological perspective. The course departs from a focus on biomedicine, examining how anthropologists have analysed the individualising medical gaze and the consequences of biopolitics. We consider how understandings of illness, care and healing are socially defined in different socio-cultural contexts, paying attention to issues such as disease, old age, disability, and mental health. Such issues of health are increasingly shifting towards broader conceptions of 'well-being'. As we progress, therefore, we turn to examine how such ideas of health increasingly intersect with the policies and values of welfare, as the political management of well-being. Welfare is both a description of life, as well as a form of intervention that aims to improve those lives. We therefore consider how ethnographic approaches to redistributive work touch on issues concerned with what it means to fare well and how that might be secured in a world defined by inequalities. Ethnographic case studies here may include ethnographies of austerity, dependency and sharing.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

AN497

Dissertation: Religion in the Contemporary World

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD 5.09, Dr Gisa

Weszkalnys and Dr Clara Devlieger OLD 6.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: As for the Programme.

Course content: The dissertation will address a topic in the social sciences of Religion in the Contemporary World. This will normally be a library-based dissertation, but may be supplemented by minor original research elements in consultation with the academic adviser. The topic should make central use of concepts in the study of religion in the social sciences drawn from approved courses on the programme, particularly from the core course, and should demonstrate a good understanding of those concepts and their implications. The dissertation may draw on empirical topic areas suggested by the taught core and option courses of this programme, but must demonstrate an element of originality in analysis, content or both. The dissertation will normally contain an inter-disciplinary element which may be in the combination of material, the combination of critical, analytical or theoretical concepts, or both. Guidance on standards of presentation etc will be given in the MSc handbook, and will conform to the current standard laid down for the dissertations in MSc social anthropology.

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of workshops in the ST.

There will be lecture on note taking and avoiding plagiarism in the MT. In addition to the two lectures in the LT and the dissertation workshop in the ST, students will discuss their projects and receive guidance during meetings with their mentors in MT, LT, and ST.

Formative coursework: Small group tutorials, individual mentoring, discussion of abstracts: please see Programme Proposal. Presentations and class discussions in all programme courses will also contribute towards the formative preparation for the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in August. The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words including text and footnotes (but excluding bibliography and appendices) to be submitted to the Department in late August.

AN498

Dissertation- MSc China in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Steinmuller OLD 5.06A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation must demonstrate an adequate knowledge of relevant social science literature and empirical material from China and elsewhere. It should elaborate a theoretical framework to compare Chinese and non-Chinese data. The topic should have been discussed with and approved by the academic adviser. Note that the dissertation must be based on published sources rather than primary research undertaken by the student.

Teaching: 1 hour of workshops in the MT. 1 hour of workshops in the LT.

There will be a lecture on note taking and avoiding plagiarism in the MT.

Students attend a one-hour dissertation workshop at the end of Lent Term. After deciding on a topic during the Lent term, in consultation with their academic advisers (and other members of staff where appropriate), students submit a one-page abstract in the first week of the Summer term. Each student attends a one-on-one dissertation tutorial with his/her academic mentors in the ST. During these, abstracts will be evaluated and commented upon. Students continue to consult their academic mentors during the Summer Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words including text and footnotes (but excluding bibliography and appendices) to be submitted to the Department in late August.

AN499

Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mukuliika Banerjee OLD 5.09 and Dr Gisa Weszkalnys

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation must demonstrate an adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical literature and the ethnography of one or more contexts. It should attempt to consolidate a theme introduced during the course, developing a sustained research focus on one specific issue in anthropology, using existing ethnographic literature as appropriate. Note that the dissertation must be based on published sources rather than fieldwork undertaken by the student. For the MSc Social Anthropology, the problem should be framed with reference to literature from within the discipline of anthropology (drawn from mainstream journals or ethnographic texts). For the MSc Anthropology and Development and the MSc Anthropology and Development Management, the topic should span the fields of both Social Anthropology and Development Studies - it may cover, but need not be restricted to, the area of overlap, i.e. the anthropology of development as narrowly defined. For the MSc Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition), the dissertation should draw not only on specifically anthropological literatures and engage with anthropological themes, but also make judicious use of non-anthropological literature from cognitive science, and therefore from related disciplines such as psychology and/or philosophy.

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of workshops in the ST.

There will be lecture on note taking and avoiding plagiarism in the MT. In addition to the two lectures in the LT and the dissertation workshop in the ST, students will discuss their projects and receive guidance during meetings with their mentors in MT, LT, and ST.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in August.

The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words including text and footnotes (but excluding bibliography and appendices) to be submitted to the Department in late August.

DV400

Development: History, Theory and Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Putzel CON.8.03 and Dr Rajesh Venugopal CON.8.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Development Studies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Development Studies, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course integrates the concepts and perspectives of a range of disciplines to consider: major trends of development and change in modern history and interpretations of them in the social sciences and contemporary economic and social theory and their bearing on the policy and practice of development. During Michaelmas Term the course critically discusses concepts of 'development' and the historical evolution of paradigms of development thinking and policy. With reference to comparative historical experience, we explore the role of states and markets in development and/underdevelopment, colonial legacies, the political economy of growth and redistribution, and the role of politics and power in development. We examine key issues in development such as: the record of pro-market reforms; the experience of "developmental states"; and the challenges to development thinking and practice presented by feminist theory, environmental sustainability, globalisation and new patterns of global inequality. (Key issues may change from year to year) The Lent Term builds on these foundations to consider cutting edge debates about policy and practice usually including: aid, social policy; industrialisation and international trade; agriculture and land in the context of climate change and the impact of conflict and "state fragility". We will look at controversies such as those around new approaches to business and the role of new technologies, as well as problems and prospects in the use of data, project and programme evaluation, and development management.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. A three hour revision session in the final week of LT. There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay with written feedback submitted in Michaelmas Term and at least two seminar presentations on literature (one in Michaelmas and one in Lent).

Indicative reading: The following are recommended basic readings for the course: A. Kohli, State-Directed Development: Political Power and Industrialization in the Global Periphery (Cambridge, 2004). A Sen, Development as Freedom (Anchor, 1999). HJ Chang, Kicking Away the Ladder: Development Strategy in Historical Perspective (Anthem, 2002). HJ Chang, Economics: The User's Guide (Penguin, 2014). United Nations, "Transforming Our world: the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development" (SDGs) A/RES/70/1 (25 September 2015).

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period. Essay (20%, 2000 words) in the LT.

DV407 Half Unit Poverty

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elliott Green and Dr Sohini Kar

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV407 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: The course is an interdisciplinary analysis of poverty, where the focus is on poverty both as a dependent variable (what causes poverty) and an independent variable (what poverty causes). The course will draw from a variety of disciplines but will pay special attention to the political economy of poverty; however, no prior mathematical or statistical qualification is required.

The topics to be covered begin with an examination into the definition and measurement of poverty. We focus as well on the relationship between poverty and inequality, gender, social protection and human development, with special attention to the relationship between poverty, violence, and democracy. We also examine whether democratization contributes to poverty reduction.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will give at least one class presentation, and submit one formative essay of 2000 words.

Indicative reading: The course has one required purchase book, namely Angus Deaton's The Great Escape: Health, Wealth and the Origins of Inequality (Princeton University Press 2013). Other texts that will be useful include Amartya Sen, Development as Freedom (Oxford University Press, 1999), and Abhijit V. Banerjee and Esther Duflo, Poor Economics: A Radical Rethinking of the Way to Fight Global Poverty (PublicAffairs/Penguin, 2011), Sabina Alkire, Valuing Freedoms: Sen's Capability Approach and Poverty Reduction (Oxford University Press, 2005), Anirudh Krishna, ed. Poverty, Participation and Democracy: A Global Perspective (Cambridge University Press, 2008) and Amartya Sen, Poverty and Famines (Oxford University Press, 1981).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period. Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

DV410 Research Design and Dissertation in International Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold CON 7.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: DV410 and MY410 together provide students a coordinated introduction to research design and to a selection of research methods used in development research. The objective is to enable students (a) to critically assess the quality and validity of academic research findings in development research and policy, including analyses they will read in their courses and for their dissertation; and (b) to independently design their own research proposal. Students will learn about the challenges of research design, including how to generate a research question and how to select a research method, the relative strengths and weaknesses of alternative research methods, and some of the practical and ethical dos and don'ts of doing fieldwork. Students will then apply these skills to prepare for and write an original dissertation.

Teaching: DV410: 6 hours of lectures in the MT. 8 hour workshop MY410: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. The development of the dissertation is conducted via a coordinated, joint collaboration between the individual student, his or her academic mentor in ID, instructors and seminar leaders in MY410, and dissertation workshop leaders. Additional support and feedback is also available from other ID faculty via the Department's open-door policy, and from individual and group sessions provided through LSE Life throughout the academic year. In the MT students will attend both MY410 lectures and seminars on research design, as well as three DV410 lectures on LSE Life and library resources, and ethics issues for MSc research. Students will also meet with their academic mentor at least twice per term. In MT week 11 students will submit a 1000-word research proposal#1 for summative assessment. In LT week 3 students will receive a mark and written feedback on research proposal#1. Throughout the term they are expected to meet with their academic mentor, other ID faculty, and/or MY410 Fellows on a regular basis as they develop their longer 3000-word dissertation proposal#2. In either LT or ST students will attend a full day dissertation workshop and receive oral feedback on their draft dissertation proposal#2. In ST they will submit their (revised) 3000-word dissertation proposal#2 for summative assessment. Students will receive a provisional mark and written feedback on their dissertation proposal#2 by the end of ST. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Formative oral feedback of dissertation ideas and proposals are provided throughout the academic year from students' academic mentor and ID faculty. Formative coursework and feedback will be provided in MY410 seminars, and formative oral feedback on dissertation proposal#2 will be provided in the dissertation workshop.

Every student will have to complete the ethics review process by end of ST7. Where appropriate, students requiring travel risk assessment will have to complete this by end of ST7.

Assessment: Dissertation (70%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Coursework (30%) in the MT and LT.

MY410 component (30%, one proposal of 1000 words and one annotated bibliography of 5 readings, 2500 words).

Students will attend compulsory MY410 lectures and seminars and submit one dissertation proposal and one annotated bibliography:

1. A 1000 word proposal submitted in MT11 that will constitute 10% of the total DV410 mark; and
 2. An annotated bibliography of 2500 words submitted in LT7 that will constitute 20% of the total DV410 mark.
- DV410 component (70%, Dissertation of 10000 words).

DV413 Half Unit

Environmental Problems and Development Interventions

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Timothy Forsyth CON.8.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Also available to students taking MSc International Relations or MSc International Political Economy as part of the LSE-Sciences Po Double Degree in Affaires Internationales programme.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

This course is capped at 60 students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course is for MSc students who wish to study social and political aspects of environmental change and its implications for international development. The aim is to summarise the key current debates about 'environment and development' from perspectives of social and political theory with special reference to institutional theory, livelihoods, and inclusive policy interventions.

The course is structured to analyse the challenges of making well-informed environmental interventions in the face of poverty and vulnerability, and then seeking practical solutions to these dilemmas. The course first considers the nature of environmental problems within a 'development' context, and what this means for environmental science and norms as applied in developing countries. Themes include assessing environmental science and expertise in concerning adaptation to population growth, resource scarcity, deforestation, desertification, vulnerability to 'natural' disasters, and risks associated with climate change, including questions of gender and environment. As the course progresses, it considers debates about policy interventions such as common property regime theory; theories of the state and environment (including resistance and social movements); community-based natural resource management and Sustainable Livelihoods; adaptation to climate change; forests; and urban environmental policy (these latter themes involve debates on multi-level, multi-actor governance involving the connections of local development and global climate change policy).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the LT.

There is a ninety minute revision session in the LT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6

Formative coursework: Students will have the opportunity to produce 1 essay in MT

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. Students are not advised to buy a single textbook for this course but to read selectively and critically from various sources. The following books might be useful introductions. Adams, W.M. 2009 Green Development: environment and sustainability in a developing world. 3rd ed. London: Routledge. Forsyth, T. 2003. Critical Political Ecology: the politics of environmental science, London, Routledge. Jones, S. and Carswell, G. 2004. The Earthscan reader in environment, development and rural livelihoods. London ; Sterling, VA : Earthscan. Moseley, W.G., E. Perramond, H. Hapke and P. Laris. 2013. An Introduction to Human-Environment Geography: Local Dynamics and Global Processes. Hoboken, NJ: Wiley/Blackwell. Neumann, R. 2005. Making Political Ecology, London: Hodder Arnold. Ostrom, E., Stern P.C., Diet, T., Dulsak, N. and Stonich, S. (eds.) 2002 The Drama of the Commons: Understanding Common Pool Resource Management. Washington, D.C.: National Academy Press. L Schipper and I Burton (eds) The Earthscan Reader on Adaptation to Climate Change, Earthscan, 2008.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (20%, 2000 words) in the LT.

DV415 Half Unit

Global Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kathryn Hochstetler

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development,

MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: This course is for any MSc student who wishes to study the politics of global environmental policy from the perspective of environmental governance and international development. The aim is to summarise debates about 'global' environmental problems and to review the contributions of debates about 'governance' to political solutions. The main theoretical focus of the course is on understanding the evolution of environmental policy regimes at multiple scales and with multiple actors. The guiding empirical focus is on the role of developing countries in global environmental governance and the effects of environmental policy regimes on their development strategies and outcomes. Some of this draws upon debates within International Relations, but this course also considers other literatures about environmental politics. Only part of global environmental governance takes place in formal spheres specifically devoted to environmental topics. Economic institutions like trade and financial institutions also play a key role and are covered here.

To make the course focused, it will consider primarily anthropocentric climate change, biodiversity and forests. In addition, these topics will be analysed from the perspective of the role of states and inter-state agreements; business actors and non-governmental organisations (NGOs); the regulation of trade; and the evolution of financial assistance, including from the World Bank.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be presented at the beginning of the term. There is no single textbook for this course, but we recommend the following as a basic reading list: Betsill, M. and Corell, E. (eds). 2007. NGO Diplomacy: The Influence of Nongovernmental Organizations in International Environmental Negotiations, MIT Press. Biermann, F, Pattberg, P. and Zelli, F. (eds). 2010. Global Climate Governance Beyond 2012: Architecture, Agency and Adaptation, Cambridge University Press. Ciplet, D., J.T. Roberts, and M.R. Victor. 2004. The Regime Complex for Plant Genetic Resources. International Organization 58(2): 277-309.

Assessment: Essay (20%, 2000 words) and take home exam (80%) in the ST.

DV418 Half Unit African Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Mann CON. 6.19 (co-convenor)
Prof Thandika Mkandawire CON 6.16 (co-convenor)

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Urbanisation and Development and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit).

Course content: The major concern of the course is with the political economy of African development, to examine processes of economic, political, social and cultural change in Sub-Saharan Africa. It provides critical analysis of key development interventions and processes. It seeks to combine general theoretical overviews with country case studies illustrating the variety of experiences and trajectories. It does not aim to provide a comprehensive coverage of development issues or of regions. Course content will vary from year to year, depending on the specialities of staff.

Attention is paid to legacies of the colonial encounter; the constraints and opportunities presented by African countries' positions in the global economy; the political economy of industrialisation and agrarian transformation, resource mobilisation; trade diversification; institutional reforms and state capacity. Attention will also be paid to social policy with special focus on issues such as social protection, cash transfers, Millennium Development Goals, horizontal inequality and conflict.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will be a ninety minute revision session in early ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will write a 2,000 word essay chosen from class questions and in discussion with the course leader, to be submitted by the beginning of week 6 of Lent Term.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. The following readings provide an introduction to the course:

DV420 Half Unit Complex Emergencies

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON.7.15

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Urbanisation and Development and Master of Public Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV420 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: The course examines the consequences and causes of humanitarian disasters. It looks at the changing nature of civil conflicts, at the famine process, and at the benefits that may arise for some groups from war and famine. It examines some of the roots of violence in civil wars, as well as the information systems that surround and help to shape disasters. The course is interdisciplinary and looks at political, economic and psychological functions of violence.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST. There will be a ninety-minute revision session at the beginning of ST. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will have the opportunity to receive feedback on formative work, in the form of a practice-assessed essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. A useful text, which is designed in large part around the course, is David Keen, Complex Emergencies (Polity, 2008). Other texts of interest include David Keen, Useful Enemies: When Waging Wars is More Important than Winning Them (Yale University Press, 2012); Stathis Kalyvas, The Logic of Violence in Civil War (Cambridge University Press, 2006); David Keen, Conflict and Collusion in Sierra Leone (James Currey, 2005); David Keen, *Endless War? DV423 Half Unit Global Political Economy of Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Wade CON.7.07

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is not available as an outside option. Please note that undergraduate economics is a big help, though not essential.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduate economics gives a big advantage, but is not pre-requisite.

Course content: The course examines the political economy of 'North-South' or 'core-periphery' relations, focusing on how changes in international organisations and the international policy framework affect developing countries' economic trajectories and national-level strategies (eg in production, trade, FDI, finance) for interaction with the global economy. It covers the performance of the world economy as a whole (trends in growth and shrink, inequality, poverty); international systems of production, trade, and finance; the rules or regimes which govern interaction between economies, states and firms (regimes such as Bretton Woods, and the Post Bretton Woods dollar standard); and several international organisations (such as the World Bank, IMF, UNCTAD, G20). Along the way it analyses the major financial/economic crises of 1997-99 and 2007-09. In contrast to much writing in International Political Economy, it looks at these things from the perspective of the low and middle-income countries (in the spirit of the Swahili proverb, "Until lions have their own historians, tales of hunting will always glorify the hunters"), and does not assume that the G7 states provide a generally benign ('win-win') environment for development in the rest of the world (as in the G7 mantra "free trade and free entry for FDI benefits us all").

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of writing one essay of 2,000 words in MT.

Indicative reading: Core text: John Ravenhill (ed), Global Political Economy, 5th edition, OUP, 2017.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the MT.

The paper will be released via the course Moodle site. Please note that as this is a 48 hour take-home examination in LT (Week 0), extensions for disabilities will apply only in exceptional circumstances. Students who cannot commit to be available for the exam period may NOT register for this course.

DV424 Half Unit International Institutions and Late Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kenneth Shadlen CON.7.08

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Please note all students are asked to submit a brief statement of 150 words (max) on why they want to take the course.

2/3 of the spaces should go to ID and joint degree students, distributed on a random basis.

1/3 go to non-ID/joint students, distributed on a random basis.

Everyone else goes on the waitlist, and as spots open the course leader will allocate these, without regard to degree/dept, on the basis of the brief statements.

Course content: This course examines the politics of the international economy. We analyse the overarching rules and regulations that structure the international economy, and thereby provide context for development policy, and we assess the role of a range of actors (e.g. governments, firms, non-state actors) in shaping and reshaping the international economic order. We are particularly interested in understanding the ways that developing countries respond to and participate in international regimes and organisations, and how changes in global economic governance affect opportunities for economic development. The first week, which synthesises a variety of explanations of the role that international organisations play in global politics, establishes the theoretical spine for the course. We then examine governance in international sovereign debt and finance, public and private. We analyse the politics of debt relief for the poorest and most heavily-indebted countries, where most of the debt is owed to public creditors; and we analyse the politics of debt restructuring for middle-income countries where significant shares of the debt is owed to private/commercial creditors. The course then turns to the politics of international trade, investment, and intellectual property. This cluster of five sessions is organised around a dialogue between multilateral and regional frameworks for integration into the global economy, with the World Trade Organisation (WTO) serving as our principal point of reference. We examine the emergence of the WTO, both in terms of the substance of the Uruguay Round agreements and as an inter-governmental organisation with its own set of procedures for agenda-setting, rule-making, and dispute-settlement. We then examine emerging arrangements for global governance in the areas of foreign investment and intellectual property. And, then we focus explicitly on the resurgence of new, North-South, bilateral and regional trade agreements, considering the implications of such agreements for development and the factors that contribute to their proliferation. In concluding the course, taking a step back and reviewing the term's material from a "birds-eye view," we analyse contrasting trajectories of change in two development regimes, one regarding "industrial transformation" and mobility in the international division of labour, and another regarding "humanitarianism" and poverty reduction.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

This includes a 2 hour revision session in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students have an opportunity to submit written work for formative assessment. Details of the exercise will be announced early in the term.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is presented at the beginning of term.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (40%, 4000 words) in the LT.

DV428 Half Unit Managing Humanitarianism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stuart Gordon CON.8.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV428 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: The course looks at international, national and local responses to conflict and natural disasters. Building on an analysis of the causes, construction and consequences of humanitarian disasters, this course focuses on humanitarian actors (including aid workers, journalists, medics, government officials, soldiers, politicians and peace negotiators). It considers the principles and the politics of humanitarian action, exploring the overlaps and tensions between practices of humanitarian assistance and humanitarian intervention and how humanitarian institutions shape and are shaped by global governance and state power. It asks how humanitarianism relates to ideas about human rights and justice, and the politics of securitisation. It considers why humanitarian organisations and governments respond to some crises and not to others as well as the critique of humanitarian assistance and the ways in which the UN and NGO communities have sought to professionalise their activities. The course also looks at how recipients of humanitarian aid respond to these programmes, and in some cases subvert or transform them into quite different projects. Case studies will be drawn primarily from Africa, Central and South Asia and Latin America. However, there is also likely to be discussion of ongoing humanitarian emergencies, wherever they are located.

Teaching: 32 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. The course will be taught in the Michaelmas Term and will consist of 10 lectures of 120 minutes each and ten seminars of one-and-a-half hours (various days and times). There be a Revision Lecture in MT.

Five or Six 'Voice of Experience' lectures of up to two hours (from 18:00 on Mondays or Tuesdays depending on speaker availability). There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on seminar group presentations and have the option to write a formative essay, not exceeding 2,000 words. Essay topics will relate to seminar discussions and lecture material covered to date. Students will receive an indicative grade and written feedback within three weeks of submission (if submitted on time). Students submit optional formative papers within two weeks of the seminar presentation.

Development Management

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jean-Paul Faguet CON.8.06 and Dr Mahvish Shami CON.8.24
Dr Jonathan Weigel

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Development Management. This course is available on the MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Why are some countries rich and others poor? Why are some governed well and others badly? This course employs a political economy approach to examine the causes of development, identify the underlying obstacles to development, and evaluate potential solutions. It focuses on the principles governing the institutions, politics, and organisations through which policies, programmes and projects are produced and implemented. Attention is given to the different kinds of authority, incentives and accountability mechanisms that govern the relationships between leaders, managers and recipients. It reviews ongoing debates about the best ways of designing state agencies, private firms and NGOs, by showing how centralised bureaucracies, markets, participatory and solidaristic agencies operate to provide services in practice. It explores the dynamics of different forms of democratic and authoritarian states, the determinants of good and poor governance, and how social, political and economic forces interact to drive change and stability. In order to enable students to make practical judgments about institutional reform programmes in various contexts, competing approaches to development are critically and constructively analyzed in light of case studies. The course is divided into several parts: Analytical Assumptions, Government and Governance, Private Sector, and Civil Society. On completing the course students should be able to: (i) use theory to identify the causes of actual development challenges, (ii) identify and assess relevant case study material to inform development practice; and (iii) employ the insights developed throughout the course to formulate policy recommendations and plans of action for improving development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 18 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 8 hours of workshops in the LT. 3 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will additionally be an introductory workshop at the start of MT. Students are expected to attend all these sessions. Lectures will focus on the theoretical debates driving current policy practice in the development community, while seminars will relate these to practical problems of implementation, drawing on case studies, class exercises, and the personal experience of participants. Seminars will discuss topics covered in the lecture, and will be conducted on the basis either of a student presentation or a class exercise.

MSc in Development Management and MSc in Anthropology and Development students (only) will also take part in and be assessed on the Development Management Project, a live consultancy exercise for real development agencies in consultation with International Development staff. Workshops will be organised to assist student groups to formulate their proposals and negotiate their projects with their commissioning agencies. These students will also be offered mandatory special sessions specifically on practical and professional aspects of the consultancy projects, development management workshops, and a development policy debate.

There will be a three and a half hour revision session in early ST. There will be a reading during Week 6.

Formative coursework: In the Michaelmas Term, all students are expected to produce one short essay on a topic agreed with an individual tutor, to prepare them for the final exam. In addition, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy students are expected to produce a formative case study analysis presentation in MT, to prepare them for their assessed presentation in LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list is provided at the first course meeting. Background readings include: Brett, E.A. Project (40%) in the LT.

Presentation (5%) in the LT.

Assessment path 2

Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (25%) in the LT.

Assessment path 1 is for MSc in Development Management and MSc in Anthropology and Development Management students.

Assessment path 2 is for MSc in Political Science and Political Economy students. The presentation is a case study analysis presentation in the LT.

Students are required to pass the final exam in the main exam period in order to pass the course. A fail in the exam cannot be condoned by a pass in other elements of assessment.

DV432 Half Unit

China in Developmental Perspective

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jude Howell CON. 8.02

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: Excellent reading and speaking skills ~(IELTS 7 minimum).

Course content: This course looks at China from a comparative developmental perspective, locating the discussion of China within the interdisciplinary field of development studies. It examines China's developmental trajectory since 1949, explaining the fundamental shift in developmental path from late 1978 onwards. It considers China's role in the so-called Third World, as a model of innovation, as a voice for developing country concerns and as an important aid donor. It reflects on China's recent achievements in reducing poverty and places these in comparative context.

The course considers the governance challenges posed by rapid economic reform, the attempts to reform the Party-state and to manage social tensions. It examines the social dimensions of rapid economic reform and the implications for social policies. It looks at the emergence of NGOs and other forms of civil society organising and considers changing state-society relations. Finally it considers China's role as aid donor and its emergence as a global economic and political power. The course will enable students to obtain an understanding of key developmental issues and discussions about China and to link these discussions to broader debates and theories in development studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

In addition, one introductory seminar session in MT, one essay preparation session in MT and two exam revision sessions in MT.

Formative coursework: Students have the opportunity to receive feedback on a formative essay of 1,500 words. Students will also receive feedback on their seminar performance. Students are welcome to come to course convenor's office hours to discuss any issues.

DV433 Half Unit

The Informal Economy and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kate Meagher CON 7.11

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: Contrary to standard development thinking, the informal economy has expanded rather than contracted in the face of liberalisation and globalisation, and now creates more jobs than the formal economy in most developing countries. Accounting for more than 50% of non-agricultural employment across much of the developing world, the informal economy is attracting growing policy attention. Practitioners, policy makers and academics seek a clearer understanding of its impact on poverty, employment, social exclusion, and governance. In a globalising environment, are large informal economies a poverty trap or an engine of growth? Do they stimulate entrepreneurship and popular empowerment, or promote criminality and exploitation? How does a greater understanding of the size and organization of informal economies affect policy on urban service provision, social policy or taxation? What are the implications of the informal economy for social cohesion and popular politics in developing countries?

This course will explore how high levels of informality in developing countries are shaping processes of growth and governance in the Global South. The effect of informality on new policy narratives of inclusive growth will be a central theme in the course. Using a comparative institutional approach, we will examine informal economies in a range of regional contexts, including Africa, the Middle East, South and East Asia, and Latin America, highlighting variations in activities, relations with the state, global integration and development outcomes. Key issues covered in the course include the impact of the informal economy on labour markets, weak states, gender empowerment, urban services, social enterprise, social policy, taxation, and popular politics. Attention will be focused on the potential as well as risks of large informal economies in the face of contemporary development challenges, drawing on empirical evidence and comparative case studies from across the developing world.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will be a ninety minute revision session in Summer Term.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

DV434 Half Unit

Human Security

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Iavor Rangelov

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV434 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: This inter-disciplinary course will introduce students to the concept of human security. Human security refers to the security of individuals and communities as opposed to the security of the state. It combines physical security and material security; freedom from fear and freedom from want. The course will introduce students to the debates about the concept and its relevance in the contemporary era. It will combine political, military, legal and economic approaches to human security implementation. The course will cover topics including; intellectual foundations and debates over the concept of human security; new and old wars; persistent conflict; just war thinking and whether it can be applied to human security; international humanitarian law and human rights law; humanitarian intervention and the Responsibility to Protect; international capabilities for human security; counterinsurgency, stabilisation, and statebuilding; transitional justice.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

One Day Conference where group projects will be presented to peers and invited external experts

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to undertake class essays, class presentations, and a case study based group project. Students will receive feedback on all of these.

DV435 Half Unit

African Political Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Boone

LSE Fellow: Dr. Eyob Balcha Gebremariam

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is an introduction to the study of contemporary African political economy, with a focus on sub-Saharan Africa. The goal of DV435 is to set major questions of state, national economy, and development in historical, geographic, and international context. Course readings and lectures stress marked unevenness in national and subnational trajectories and in the political-economic character of different African countries, drawing attention to causes of similarity and difference across and within countries. Students completing DV435 will come away with a better understanding of the economic and social underpinnings of order and conflict in African states.

There is a research-driven component to DV435: each student will read secondary literature, grey literature, and other sources to develop particular knowledge of two countries. These will be used as "case studies" in assessed coursework to evaluate general arguments concerning the political economy of Africa, and to compare/contrast the historical trajectories of different African states.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a revision session in ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Optional formative essay due in November.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Putzel CON.8.03 and Dr Rajesh Venugopal CON.8.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health and International Development and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Not available to students enrolled on DV400.

Course content: The course integrates the concepts and perspectives of a range of disciplines to consider major trends of development and change in modern history and key issues and debates in international development. With reference to comparative historical experience, we explore the role of states and markets in development and/underdevelopment, colonial legacies, the political economy of growth and redistribution, and the role of politics and power in development. We examine key issues in development such as: the record of pro-market reforms; the experience of "developmental states"; and the challenges to development thinking and practice presented by feminist theory, environmental sustainability, globalisation and new patterns of global inequality (key issues may change from year to year).

Teaching: 20 hours of Lectures shared with the DV400 MT lectures and 15 hours of seminars. A 1 hour and 30 minutes revision lecture in the LT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will give at least one class presentation, and submit one formative essay of 2000 words.

Global Health and Population Change

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca CON.7.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV444 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: No pre-requisites are required for this course.

Course content: This course aims at looking at the relationship of population change and global health. This course brings together the key issues on the social and environmental determinants of population health in low and middle income countries from a multidisciplinary approach including social sciences, demography, development studies and public health. The course does not only take a theoretical approach, but it is also evidence based. This relationship between population change and health will be analysed in its dynamic, through different transitions such as demographic, epidemiological, and nutritional transition. Another important aspect of the course is that it will focus on what will happen in the future of global health as a result of anticipated population changes.

Some of the main topics covered are: urbanisation and implications for health, poverty, population change and inequalities; maternal and child health; achievements and setbacks; the double burden of disease and its consequences: the roles of nutrition and obesity; the dynamics of HIV/AIDS and future developments; population growth, environmental challenges and the impact on health; priorities for health and mortality improvements in low and middle income countries.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 1,500 word formative essay in MT.

Indicative reading: Merson, MH, Black, ER, Mills, AJ. Cutting Edge Issues in Development Thinking & Practice

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Duncan Green, Prof Edwin Brett and Prof James Putzel

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available on the MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is a compulsory course for all ID students.

Course content: The objectives of the course are: a) to introduce students to the practical world of development, which will both facilitate their 'career paths' and also prepare them for the consultancy projects by becoming more familiar with how such organisations think and work; b) to introduce students to the interface between policy practice and development academe. Each week speakers from different development organisations or research institutes will speak to students about a "hot topic" in development policy and research work and how their organisation uses research and for what purposes. Previous speakers have included senior economists, serving and former Government Ministers, NGO chief executives and senior staff, innovative academic researchers and consultants, among others.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Lectures followed by open discussion and debate. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Assessment: This course is not assessed

DV447 Half Unit

International Development, Youth and Gendered Violence

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alcinda Honwana and Dr Naomi Pendle

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: Previous study of the social sciences or humanities is preferred.

Course content: The framework for this course considers the economic, social and political aspects of international development as reference points to examine structural inequalities affecting young men and women. It will consider young people's socio-economic and political exclusion as well as their challenging transitions into adulthood. The course will address issues concerning education, health, labour markets, the household, family, marriage and social reproduction. Youth social and political engagement and participation will be studied through the lenses of military mobilisation, social movements, political protests and contributions to processes of social change. The course will also examine the gendered constructions of young women and young men's places in the public and domestic spheres. It will interrogate assumptions about young people's lives and bodies made by development and public policy and the ways in which such are challenged or reinforced. The course will discuss diverse forms of violence – structural, organised, physical and sexual - perpetrated against and by youth in contexts of war, conflict and radicalisation, as well as in post-conflict processes of reconciliation, reintegration and humanitarian assistance in times of 'peace'. A particular focus will be given to the agency young people by exploring issues of identity, religion, culture and power and the way these permeate private and public life.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. There will be a ninety-minute revision session in late LT or early ST. There will be a Reading Week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write a short paper of 800-1000 words on the topic on which they will lead a class.

Assessment: Case study (80%) and presentation (20%).

The course will be assessed by a seminar presentation and a researched developed case study.

DV453 Half Unit

International Development Consultancy Project

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stuart Gordon CON.8.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Places for MSc Development Studies students requesting to take this course as an option are strictly limited.

Course content: Students will gain practical experience of dealing with current policy issues and best practice in the fields of humanitarian assistance or international development by working on a live consultancy team project for a real client. The consultancies are based around an experiential learning format. Students receive guidance through a structured supervision process and work on the consultancy report in Michaelmas Term and Lent Terms with support from a staff mentor.

Students are allocated to consultancy teams comprising between three and five people. Students are able to express preferences for particular clients but may not be allocated to one of these. Past project sponsors have included the UK Department of International Development (DFID), UNHCR, UNICEF, UN OCHA, the ICRC, MSF, the Disasters and Emergency Committee (DEC), Christian Aid, the UK Stabilisation Unit and NATO.

The consultancy project begins in Michaelmas Term with client reports due at the end of Lent Term. The client report and final presentation form part of the assessment.

Consultancy Skills Workshops - There will be up to three basic skills-oriented lectures and group work sessions (each lasting up to three hours).

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures and 6 hours of workshops in the MT. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will contribute to the Group inception and final reports/presentations and will be given feedback and indicative grades for each of these. At the end of Michaelmas Term there is a progress board for each consultancy group.

Indicative reading: John Rowley and Frances Rubin, 'Effective Consultancies in Development and Humanitarian and Humanitarian Programmes' (Oxfam: Oxford: 2006); Michael Bamberger, Jim Rugh and Linda Mabry, 'Real World Evaluation: working Under Budget, Time, Data and Political Constraints' (Sage: London, 2012); Michael Quinn Patton, 'Utilization Focused Evaluation' 4th Edition (Sage: London, 2008); Michael Edwards and Alan Fowler, 'NGO Management' (Earthscan: Oxford, 2002); Eric James 'Managing Humanitarian Relief: An Operational Guide for NGOs' (Practical Action Publishing: Rugby, 2008).

Assessment: Project (80%, 6000 words), reflective learning report (10%) and presentation (10%) in the LT.

Consultancy group project report (6000-10000 words depending on the client's terms of reference and student group size), submitted at the end of Lent Term (80%).

The reflective learning report is personal performance assessed through 360-degree reporting and mentor assessment (10%).

Consultancy group presentation to clients: (10%) at the end of Lent Term.

Final client presentations are at the end of the Lent Term and are scheduled by the students in consultation with academic staff AND the clients. Students should be aware that presentations to clients MAY have to take place during the first week of Easter Vacation. They will be informed as soon as possible, but should not make any travel plans until presentation dates are confirmed.

Gender, Labour Markets and Social Change in the Global South: Theory, Evidence, Public Action

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marzia Fontana

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: One of the longest running debates within the feminist literature, and one that has been replayed in the field of gender and international development, relates to the relationship between women's access to labour market opportunities and their position within the family and community: the exploitation versus emancipation argument. These debates have been given fresh lease of life in the development literature as a result of the growing feminisation of labour markets in recent years in most regions of the Global South. They have been further complicated by additional claims that have had a great deal of traction in policy circles that greater gender equality in the labour market has enormous growth as well as emancipatory potential: 'the smart thing to do as well as the right thing to do'. At the same time, a great deal of feminist literature as well as international campaigns, like the anti-sweatshop movement, highlight the extremely exploitative terms on which most women take up paid work and contest the view that increased access to paid work has been empowering for women. At the heart of these conflicting positions are conflicting views about how power, privilege, choice and agency play out in the market place.

This course will be organized around these debates. It aims to equip students with the ability to analyse and assess the competing claims around this critical set of issues by providing them with a firm grounding in theory, evidence and public action relating to gender and labour markets in the Global South. It will meet this objective through three main components.

The first component will focus on the different positions within these debates, the claims around the empowerment potential of labour market participation and the claims around growth. It will examine key concepts and theories relating to gender, households and labour markets which provide the underpinning to these claims. It will consider how inequality, power and difference is dealt with in these theories. It will also examine the different definitions of 'work' which feature in these theories and the extent to which they capture labour markets and livelihood strategies in different regions of the Global South.

The second component will draw together the empirical literature to consider the evidence relating to gendered patterns of labour market participation in different regions of the world. It will start out with a broad-brush account of the changes that have taken place in domestic and global labour markets over the last few decades and then consider in greater detail how these markets function at the local level in low and middle income countries. It will also analyse how market forces are restructuring some of the intimate aspects of family relations through the commodification of services that were previously provided as part of the marital contract.

The third component will evaluate various forms of public action by policy, corporations and civil society actors that have been taken up in response to their positions with regard to the gender dynamics in the economy. These include policy measures to promote greater gender equality in the labour market, minimum wage legislation, social protection and corporate social responsibility, anti-sweatshop movements, new forms of unionism and feminist activism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit a 1500 essay which will not count towards their final marks but which will allow them to receive feedback on their ability to read critically, to synthesise arguments and to ensure that their writing style meets the standards required by the school. It will also address learning outcomes 1 and 4.

DV455 Half Unit

Advocacy, Campaigning and Grassroots Activism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Duncan Green

Dr Duncan Green is Professor in Practice in the International Development Department, and Senior Strategic Adviser at Oxfam GB, an international NGO. His blog, From Poverty to Power (<http://oxfamblogs.org/fp2p/>) is one of the most widely read international development blogs. His most recent book, How Change Happens (OUP, 2016) is the core text for this course.

Dr Thomas Kirk is a researcher and consultant based at the London School of Economics and Political Science. Interests include the provision of security and justice in conflict affected regions, social accountability, civil society, local governance and public authority. Lived and worked in Afghanistan, Pakistan, India, Timor-Leste, the DRC and Kenya.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course will be offered in Lent term and capped at 75 students. Selection criteria: applicants will be asked to submit 200 words on their background and why they want to take the course, to be assessed against interest, experience and passion.

If there are any spare spaces, the course is available as an outside option.

Course content: There are two blocks in this course:

1. Understanding How Change Happens, including systems thinking and power analysis
2. The analytical frameworks used by INGOs and other change agents

This course introduces students to some of the analytical frameworks and practical techniques used by INGOs such as Oxfam (where the course leader is senior strategic adviser) and other activists (broadly defined, including 'change agents' in governments and the private sector) in influencing political, social and economic policy and practice.

Lectures will introduce the importance of systems thinking and power analysis in understanding and influencing processes of change and the role of civil society and advocacy in driving such change.

These will be used to explore how activists and activist organizations use these as organizing tools for influencing.

The course is designed for students who have been, or intend to become, active in driving change, whether as members of civil society organizations, in government, in aid donors or in the private sector. You will develop your understanding both of endogenous change processes in developing countries, and the design and limitations of deliberate efforts to bring about political, social and economic change.

Students will be asked to come with an initial idea for an influencing exercise that they would personally like to design and implement (for example a campaign, policy reform, or effort to shift public attitudes) and will apply the coursework to that case study, developing a project proposal at the end of the term that will be assessed.

Students will be required to produce a blog post or vlog (video blog) summarizing their individual project, which will also be summatively assessed (students will receive a 'blogging for beginners' lecture on writing for impact).

Working in small groups, students will analyse past case studies of change, and be assessed against both their written assignment and their presentation of initial findings to their seminar group.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Teaching will consist of a combination of lecture presentations, involving powerpoint, video and group discussion, and seminar discussions. There will be one lecture of 120 minutes each week of term. This will be followed up by 60 minutes of seminar work. Reading week will occur in week 6, during which time there will be extended office hours available.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit initial formative proposals (1000 words max) for their individual assignments in week 6, for feedback from the course leader. Following feedback, students will present their individual proposals to the seminar groups for further discussion.

First drafts of the group assignment will be presented in seminars in weeks 7 & 8 for verbal group/tutor feedback and an assessment of their presentations.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2500 words), coursework (40%) and blog post (10%) in April.

Individual Project (40%, 2000 words) and blog post (10%) in April;
Group Project (40%, 4,000 words) in April and group presentation (10%) in February/March.

The summative assessment will consist of both individual and group assignments:

- Individual project proposals for an influencing project (individual) will be formatively assessed and feedback given. This will then inform the final project that will be summatively assessed in April. A blog or Vlog of the project will also be produced and summatively marked.
- Historical case study (as groups of 3 or 4). Group membership will be assigned in advance. Students will select an agreed historical change episode. Assessment will be in two parts - a joint group presentation based on the group project and a written assignment, summatively marked.

DV456 Half Unit

Population, Health and Development: Evidence and Projections

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone CON 8.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Global Population Health, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV456 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with personal computers is required, but a high degree of technical proficiency is not required. Familiarity with excel (basic functions) a plus. For more details on whether the course might be suitable for you please visit moodle.

Course content: The course is practical in nature and overviews key methods used for planning in population and development. Key questions which will be answered in this course are: what is the future of the world population; what are the family planning needs of couples in low income countries; what will be the number of newly HIV infected in the next 15 years; what is a sustainable population growth. The focus will be both on producing information as well as on searching and understanding data provided by key international agencies. Relevance will be given to methods used for assessing the implications of high levels of mortality in developing countries with specific reference to the HIV/AIDS pandemic; as well as the assessment of high fertility levels due to low uptakes of family planning methods. The approach is practical and complements the more theoretical population courses giving additional skills such as an understanding of key international projections and estimates. Students will undertake a number of computer-based assignments (using either Excel or Spectrum) which will follow the topics highlighted during the lectures. The course covers concepts used for population analysis; the role of population projections in the population planning and development process; the basis of projections made by international agencies such as the UN Population Division; the formulation of projection assumptions and methods of making projections; methods for projecting and assessing the impact of HIV/AIDS and the use of software such as AIM (AIDS Impact Model) as well as planning maternal and child health interventions with the use of LiST. The course will also give an overview of projections for particular sub-groups such as households, families, urban, sub-national and labour force ones and of the implications of uncertainty for the planning process. Emphasis will be given to the learning of analytical skills which include data and information searching on the internet as well as presentation of the information.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative assessment of 5 pages before the end of term.

Indicative reading: Relevant documents will be provided at the start of the course, mainly in the form of electronic documents. Suggested reading are Lutz "The future population of the world"; Cohen "How many people can the earth support"

Assessment: Coursework (85%) in the ST Week 2.

Class participation (15%) in the LT.

Assessment will be by two forms of assessment.

Participation worth 15%: will be based on in class participation, a group presentation along with homework submitted on Moodle during LT.

Coursework worth 85% - will be a 10 A4 page report. This will involve the formulation, execution and writing up of a project concerned with a model for population planning, to be agreed with the course teacher. This must be submitted by the second week of ST

DV457 Half Unit

Sexual and Reproductive Health Programmes: Design, Implementation and Evaluation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ernestina Coast CON.8.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV457 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the knowledge and skills to be able to critically appraise data and evidence for assessing sexual and reproductive health programmes. This course deals with the effectiveness of sexual and reproductive health programmes, especially those that deliver services. The key issues addressed are the design of programmes, their effective implementation, and their evaluation. The course focuses on the critical production and consumption of data and evidence – both quantitative and qualitative – for assessing sexual and reproductive health programmes. The course takes a global approach, incorporating evidence from a range of contexts, countries and populations.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare a seminar presentation and an annotated bibliography during the term.

Indicative reading: Lecture and seminar electronic reading lists are available in Moodle.

Assessment: Coursework (100%) in the ST.

Coursework assignment to be a maximum of 15 A4 pages.

DV458 Half Unit

Key issues in Global Health and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone CON 8.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health and International Development. This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Places will be allocated with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than DV458 can accommodate, these places will be allocated randomly. Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: The course provides an up-to-date and comprehensive introduction to global health and health system trends in less developed societies. The course examines the main determinants of health issues as they relate to development and their principal consequences, policies (and their politics) to improve health and development; barriers to implementing those policies; and identifying ways of overcoming those barriers. Drawing on disciplines such as political science, health policy, demography, sociology and economics, this course argues for the need to improve global health equity in order to contribute to development. It will equip students with the skills needed to work in and help to improve mainstream global health organisations such as WHO, WB, Gates Foundation and MSF among others. The course is political in that it adopts a set of normative values such as equality, social justice and human rights which challenge the neoliberal underpinnings of some global health policy and practice.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare a seminar presentation and complete a mock exam during MT.

Indicative reading: The course is supported by an electronic reading list. There is no single key text.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

DV460 Half Unit

Bayesian Reasoning for Qualitative Social Science: A Modern Approach to Case Study Inference

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tasha Fairfield CON 6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be selected for DV460 based on a written statement of interest (max 150 words). Priority will be given to students on the programs listed above, if demand exceeds places.

Pre-requisites: This course has no prerequisites.

Students do not need any previous exposure to either Bayesian analysis or qualitative methods literature.

Course content: The way we intuitively approach qualitative case research is similar to how we read detective novels. We consider various different hypotheses to explain what occurred—whether the emergence of democracy in South Africa, or the death of Samuel Ratchett on the Orient Express—drawing on the literature we have read (e.g. theories of regime change, or other Agatha Christie mysteries) and any salient previous experiences we have had. As we gather evidence and discover new clues, we continually update our beliefs about which hypothesis provides the best explanation—or we may introduce a new alternative that occurs to us along the way.

Bayesianism provides a natural framework that is both logically rigorous and grounded in common sense, that governs how we should revise our degree of belief in the truth of a hypothesis—e.g., "mobilisation from below drove democratization in South Africa by altering economic elites' regime preferences," (Wood 2001), or "a lone gangster sneaked onboard the train and killed Ratchett as revenge for being swindled"—given our relevant prior knowledge and new information that we obtain during our investigation. Bayesianism is enjoying a revival across many fields, and it offers a powerful tool for improving inference and analytic transparency in qualitative research.

This course introduces basic principles of Bayesian reasoning with the goal of helping us leverage our common-sense understandings of inference and hone our intuition when conducting causal analysis with qualitative evidence. We will examine the foundations of Bayesian probability as well as concrete applications to single case studies, comparative case studies, comparative historical analysis, and multi-methods research. Students will practice applying Bayesian reasoning to assess the strength and quality of inferences in published studies, drawing on exemplars of qualitative research from various fields of socio-political analysis including development studies, comparative politics, international relations, and policy analysis. Students will also apply Bayesian principles to various aspects of their own dissertation research in progress—e.g., generating or revising hypotheses, selecting cases, identifying weaknesses in salient background literature, and assessing the inferential weight of available evidence.

Upon completing the course, students will be equipped with a concrete set of Bayesian-inspired best practices to deploy in their own research, as well as widely-applicable analytic skills that will help them to better evaluate and critique socio-political analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise and 1 project in the LT.

Students will receive written and oral formative assessment on in-class exercises, which will ask them to explain key Bayesian concepts (e.g., the "weight of evidence") in their own words and apply them to concrete examples (e.g. use Bayes' rule to derive an inference from several pieces of evidence).

In addition, students will receive oral feedback on the first section of their final project, which will set up rival hypotheses to be compared in light of case evidence.

Assessment: Project (80%, 3000 words) in the ST.

In class assessment (20%) in the LT.

Students will choose a case-study article that is relevant to their dissertation topic and apply Bayesian reasoning to critique the article's inferences. This exercise entails assessing how the author's argument has been specified, identifying a plausible rival hypothesis (which may or may not be provided by the author), identifying the most salient pieces of evidence presented, and qualitatively evaluating the inferential weight the evidence provides in favour of the author's hypothesis relative to the rival.

Critical Population Health Issues in High and Middle-Income Countries

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca OLD.2.45

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: No pre-requisites are required for this course.

Course content: This course brings together key issues on the social and environmental determinants of population size and structure and population health in high and middle income countries from a multidisciplinary approach including a range of social science disciplines, epidemiology, demography and public health. This course reflects the developments of research in recent years on health trends and differentials. Topics addressed in this course include the relationship between health and economic change such as the effect of recession; divergent trends in Western European and former USSR states; family changes and their implications for population health; role of early-life events; social support, social capital and health; socio-demographic determinants and consequences of ageing at the individual and population level; comparison of trends in established market economies and BRICS; policy responses to inequalities in health; prospects for mortality and morbidity change - a compression of morbidity?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 1,500 word formative essay in MT.

DV462 Half Unit

Forced Migration and Refugees

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stuart Gordon

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The first section deals with the global governance of forced migration and in particular the two UN organisations with specific mandates for Refugee protection and relief, the UNHCR and UNRWA. Utilising the work of authors such as Roger Zetter, James Morrissey, Christopher Dowell and Sarah Lischer the second part of the course then critically evaluates the ways in which the drivers of forced migration are identified whilst simultaneously problematizing notions of mono-causality in favour of more complex and dynamic understandings of the reasons which may underpin individual, familial and collective experiences of forced displacement or immobility. The third section explores the tensions between the international community's interest in fixing refugee populations in camps and refugees' own practices (often irregular) of self-settlement in towns and cities. It then proceeds to trace the development of an international protection regime for internally displaced populations that have not yet crossed a border and the protection gaps that remain. The fourth section brings to the fore the agency of refugees and explores differing approaches to the study of refugees' own lived experiences in flight and exile. In particular we look at the significance of age, generation, gender and disability in narratives and analyses of displacement. We will spend an entire week looking at gendered experiences of exile and displacement looking at the multiple ways in which processes of and responses to forced migration influence gender identities, roles and relations. The final section looks at the linkage between international society and global order – in particular examining the relationship between the nation state, borders, refugees and citizenship. We turn attention to how we might 'solve' displacement and the limitations in the current approaches. It begins by looking at why refugee return has dominated international attempts to solve crises, the problems that have arisen from this 'push to repatriate' and the types of challenges faced by returnees.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

The students will participate in small group exercises both prior to seminars and during. These will feed directly into a formative piece of work related to the summative research proposal and the final essay. Students will work within small study groups to develop the formative work and will then work individually on the summative tasks. For example, an average week will involve the following:

1. Joint formative presentation by a study group (4 students) in seminar – this will follow a list of themes supplied to the students in advance.
2. The study team then lead small group work in the seminar - with these teams each comprising one of the 4 original presenters and a small number of non-presenting students (up to 3). These will work through a series of structured small group exercises related to the initial presentation. The results are discussed in seminar plenary.

3. The presenting team is debriefed later during additional office hours. Video capture is used.

4. The members of the presenting team then work individually on the related research proposal. A draft of this counts as summative work but advice is sought from the mentor.

5. Finally a summative essay on an aspect of that week's topic (set by the course convenor) is set.

Formative coursework: Students will co-produce seminar presentations with a supporting information brief for fellow students. Students will be allocated in groups of 4 to these presentations. Presentations will be filmed and the team debriefed by tutors during office hours - using both the recording and the student information briefs.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

Students will produce 2 x 2000 word essays during a 72 hour take home exam sat in the early part of the ST. Students unable to commit to this are not to enrol in the course.

DV463 Half Unit

Civil Society, Security and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jude Howell

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is an advanced seminar organised around guided critical, in-depth reading and discussion of theories, concepts and empirical manifestations of civil society in relation to international development and security. The building-blocks of the course extend over 7 weeks, with 3 weeks devoted to case-material presentations related to broad thematic questions.

The presentations in the three weeks may provide a basis for the long assessed essay.

The broad content of the course is as follows:

- Week 1: Introduction to course; introduction to key theories, history and concepts of civil society
- Week 2: Civil society and uncivil society: violence and democratisation.
- Week 3: Civil society and security
- Week 4: Civil society and securitization: terrorism and counter-terrorism
- Week 5: International donors, aid and security
- Week 6: Reading Week
- Week 7: Authoritarianism, security and civil society
- Week 8: Student case-study presentations
- Week 9: Student case-study presentations
- Week 10: Student case-study presentations
- Week 11: Critical perspectives on civil society

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Each weekly seminar session is 2 hours. This comprises an overview of the week's topic by the seminar convenor and then detailed guided reading and discussion.

There will be 2 hour essay session in week 11.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students may submit a formative essay of 1,000 words, excluding references, by Friday, 12 noon, Week 5. The purpose of the formative essay is to identify core issues for each student in the devising and structuring of essay, framing of argument, development of concepts and use of references. The student will receive written feedback within 3 weeks and can discuss feedback in office hours.

DV480 Half Unit Revolution and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jean-Paul Faguet CON 8.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is also available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Pre-requisites: No specific course pre-requisites. A good social science background will be very helpful, especially politics and economics.

Course content: Revolutions break things, but do they also build? If so, what precisely? What causes revolutions? What do revolutions cause? This course examines the successes and failures of revolution as a model of change in generating large and sustainable improvements in economic, political and social development. We begin by defining "revolution" as a discrete, analytically distinct model of change. We then examine revolutions per se – abrupt, significant, and often violent changes in governance and the distribution of power and wealth in society. Likely examples include the Glorious Revolution, and the French, Mexican, Russian, Chinese, Bolivian and Vietnamese Revolutions. We evaluate the immediate and long-term costs of these episodes in light of changes that resulted in each country's development trajectory. We contrast these cases with more gradual processes of change ('evolutions', often called "reform"). Examples include episodes of rapid growth, improving living standards, and increasing political incorporation in France, China, Bolivia, and Vietnam, as well as the US, Japan, Germany, Finland, New Zealand/Australia, and Argentina. We focus on the conditions that sustained revolutionary vs. non-revolutionary processes of change across these cases, and then on the ability of each model of change to cause lasting improvements in societies' economic, political and social development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the MT.

Lectures will present key theoretical insights and lay out the contours of major debates from the literature. Seminars will be student-led, and will probe each week's topic in more detail, both to clarify concepts and test them against evidence, some of which students will draw up and present independently. The workshop is a different sort of exercise, intended to give thorough review to students' research proposals in a constructively critical, collegial atmosphere. Each student will present their research proposal and then receive feedback from fellow students and faculty.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

In preparation for their research essay, students will submit a formative research proposal, which they will present in a research workshop in MT. This will receive detailed written, and also oral, feedback intended to improve the proposal. They will then revise the proposal and re-submit as summative work.

Students will also complete seminar presentations, individually or in pairs (depending on student numbers), which will receive formative feedback.

DV483 Half Unit Information Communication Technologies and Socio-economic Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shirin Madon CON.8.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students will be allocated places to courses with priority to ID and joint-degree students. If there are more ID and joint-degree students than the course can accommodate, these spots will be allocated randomly.

Non-ID/Joint Degree students will be allocated to spare places by random selection with the preference given first to those degrees where the regulations permit this option.

Course content: This is an interdisciplinary course about understanding the role played by Information & Communication Technologies (ICTs) towards achieving developmental goals. We begin by reviewing dominant theoretical perspectives on development identifying assumptions held about the role of information, communication and technologies. Using this as our critical frame of reference, we focus on a variety of current topics including global software outsourcing, e-commerce/m-commerce, mobiles for smallholder agriculture, ICT and education, e-governance, health informatics, social media and collective action, ICT and humanitarianism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. In addition, there will be a one hour revision session in late LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be invited to submit an abstract of their summative essay for written comments.

Indicative reading: Avgerou, C. (2010) Discourses on ICT and Development, Information Technologies and International Development, 6, 3, pp. 1-18. Brown, A. and Grant, G. DV490 Half Unit

Economic Development Policy I: Applied Policy Analysis for Macroeconomic Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Enrolment will be controlled through the use of a pre-quiz administered in the first week of term (see DV490 Moodle page for details).

Course content: This course explores the foundations of applied macroeconomic policy analysis by combining a rigorous but intuitive introduction to advanced econometric methods with applications to the theory and empirics of long-run growth in developing countries. Throughout the course, lectures provide analytical but non-technical overviews of broad themes in long-run growth and development policy, including growth theory, institutions and history, economic geography, globalization, inequality, balance of payments and financial crises, debt, environmental policy and international aid. There is a strong emphasis on how the body of knowledge has evolved over time via the synthesis of theoretical advances and rigorous empirical testing.

Seminars in the first half of term will introduce students to the statistical foundations of econometric analysis and build analytical skills to read, interpret, and critique econometric approaches to causal identification commonly used in the academic development literature. We engage directly with quantitative methodology and regression analysis, developing rigorous intuition rather than learning technical formulas, with the focus on teaching students from a broad range of backgrounds to understand and critically consume high-level applied research in a sophisticated manner. The seminars in the second half of term give students an opportunity to repeatedly practice and improve their analytical skills by working through methodologically-focussed problem sets based on top academic journal articles addressing issues from the lectures on macroeconomic development.

While some background in economics and/or statistics is helpful, the course is designed to be engaging and challenging for students from a broad variety of backgrounds, from those with no economics and statistics to those with more advanced skills in either one or both areas. Strong analytical skills (whether quantitative or not) and a sturdy work ethic are the best predictors of success.

Important: For students without strong skills in economics and statistics DV490 constitutes the foundational prerequisite for DV491 and/or DV492 in the Lent term. Students without a (very) strong background in economics and statistics are highly recommended to take both DV490 and either DV491 or DV492 or both, and consider them together as a full 1 or 1.5 unit course. Our experience is that the majority of students benefit most from a minimum of a full academic year of repeated practice and exposure to the techniques covered to develop their intuition and ability, and students who take only the first half unit with thus be at a distinct disadvantage. In addition, while DV490 will build a foundational knowledge, DV491 and DV492 will cover additional empirical approaches more commonly employed in micro-development economics, as well as providing an introduction to statistical programming in STATA, thus rounding out students' exposure to empirical methods more fully.

Students who would like to take DV490, DV491, or DV492 in isolation are invited to take a "Parachuter's Exam" at the beginning of MT to assess their quantitative skills. More information on the Parachuter's Exam can be found on the DV490, DV491 and/or DV492 Moodle page or from the course instructors.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be two hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Weekly online quizzes provide formative feedback on student progress. In addition students are expected to complete weekly unassessed problem sets and come prepared to discuss them in seminars.

Indicative reading: The bulk of the course will be taught using journal articles. A reading list will be handed out by the lecturers at the beginning of their sessions. Useful reference texts include Mastering 'Metrics: the Path from Cause to Effect, by Angrist & Pischke, Princeton University Press (2014); and The Quest for Growth by W. Easterly, MIT Press (2001)

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.
In class assessment (30%) in the MT.

Course content: This course examines the microeconomic foundations of economic policy-making in developing countries. Classes will combine economic theory and rigorous empirical analysis to better understand the impact of economic development policy on development goals. We will focus on specific examples chosen from development cases worldwide to learn which policies have worked, which ones have not, and how a rigorous analysis of these experiences can inform the design of better economic development policies in the future

The course is structured around three main themes:

(i) Human Development: health policy, education policy and intra-household dynamics

(ii) Institutions and Markets: labour markets, state capacity for public service delivery and private sector development

(iii) Behavioural Economics and Development Policy Design: the importance of psychology in explaining economic behaviour and how it can inform better development policy design

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 9 hours of workshops in the LT.

There will be a weekly Econometrics workshop in the LT. There will be a two hour revision session in late LT or early ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6.

DV492 Half Unit

Economic Development Policy III: Government Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joana Naritomi CON.6.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to MSc and MPA students from throughout the LSE subject to space constraints; specifically we reserve the right to limit enrolment of students from outside the Department of International Development.

Entry onto the course might be limited at the discretion of the instructor.

Pre-requisites: 'DV490 Economic Development Policy I: Applied Policy Analysis for Macroeconomic Development' or equivalent.

Course content: This course explores key issues in government policies in developing countries. The course will draw on specific examples chosen from development cases worldwide to learn which policies have worked, which ones have not, and how a rigorous analysis of these experiences can inform the design of better economic development policies in the future. It begins introducing concepts from public economics to discuss the scope and impacts of government interventions. In particular, the course will cover issues related to market failures, redistribution, public goods and externalities. The course will also discuss theoretical and empirical work on the economic consequences of government interventions, with particular focus economic incidence, efficiency trade-offs and unintended consequences of policies. In the second part, it focuses on challenges in raising government revenue and delivering public service in the developing world context, where limited state and fiscal capacity impose important constraints in policymaking. Beyond these topics, the course will provide background on relevant analytical tools in quantitative research, and develop skills to interpret empirical evidence in development economics.

Coursework will include a combination of class discussions, problem sets, presentations and computer-lab based sessions for students to explore programming and statistical skills.

Students are strongly encouraged to take DV491, as a highly complementary course that will also apply the empirical methods taught in DV490 to topics in Human Development, Institutions and Markets, Social Networks, Economic History and Cultural Economics, and Behavioural Economics and Development Policy Design.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a two hour revision session in late LT or early ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 exercises and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (30%) in the LT.

The course assessment will be based on a final exam (70%) and problem sets (30%).

EC400

Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margaret Bray 32L.4.27, Dr Francesco Nava 32L.3.20, Dr Marcia Schafgans 32L.4.12 and Dr Shengxing Zhang 32L.1.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MRes/PhD in Economics, MRes/PhD in Finance, MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway) and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MRes/PhD in International Development, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and Master of Public Administration.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on the MRes/PhD in Economics may be exempted from EC400 at the Department's discretion.

Master of Public Administration students may only apply to take EC400 at the beginning of their second year.

Outside applications for EC400 must be made to the Department of Economics by the end of June. This applies to offer holders/ students who do not have any EC4XX courses listed in their programme regulations for which EC400 is a pre-requisite.

Please contact econ.msc@lse.ac.uk for more information.

Students not on the compulsory programmes listed above who wish to continue studying Economics MSc-level courses must achieve an overall grade of 50% in EC400 with no one subject exam less than 40%. Non-MRes students wishing to study MRes-level courses must achieve an overall grade of 70% with no one subject exam less than 60%.

Pre-requisites: EC400 is an introduction to MSc level concepts in mathematics and statistics, and an undergraduate level understanding is assumed. EC400 is not intended as an introduction for students with little or no economics/mathematics background.

Course content: The aim of this introductory course is to provide students with the essential mathematical, statistical, economic and econometric background for the core Economics courses of these programmes. The course starts with mathematics revision sessions and progresses to sections covering mathematics for microeconomics, mathematics for macroeconomics, and probability and statistical inferences. All MSc Finance and Economics students are required to take mathematics for macroeconomics. MSc Economics and Management students attend lectures on literacy in accounting instead of the mathematics for macroeconomics component.

Teaching: Approximately 27.5 hours of lectures and 27.5 hours of classes.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to complete daily sets of self-testing exercises during the course.

Indicative reading: Students will be advised of recommended readings and preparation materials in the summer.

Assessment: Students will be required to complete a set of self-testing exercises during the course. At the end of the course, students on MSc Management and Economics are examined on two mathematics modules (revision mathematics and mathematics for microeconomics) and probability and statistical inferences. All other students are examined on mathematics modules (revision mathematics, mathematics for microeconomics and mathematics for macroeconomics), and probability and statistical inferences

Econometrics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vassilis Hajivassiliou 32L.4.23, Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L.4.24 and Dr Rachael Meager 32L.3.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MSc in Economics and Philosophy and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Students should also have completed an undergraduate degree or equivalent in Economics and an introductory course in Econometrics.

In very exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk).

Course content: The course aims to present and illustrate the techniques of empirical investigation in economics.

- Regression models with fixed regressors (simple and multiple). Least squares and other estimation methods. Goodness of fit and hypothesis testing.
- Regression models with stochastic regressors.
- Asymptotic theory and its application to the regression model. Sampling error vectors. Large sample approximations.
- The partitioned regression model, multicollinearity, misspecification, omitted and added variables, measurement errors.
- Heteroskedasticity, autocorrelation, and generalized least squares.
- Exogeneity, endogeneity, and instrumental variables.
- Nonlinear regression modelling and Limited Dependent Variables models.
- An introduction to Non-classical econometric inference.
- Autoregressive and moving average representations of time series. Stationarity and invertibility.
- Vector auto-regressions.
- Unit roots and co-integration.
- Estimating causal effects in panel data: differences in difference estimator, matching methods, and regression discontinuity.
- Panel data and static models: fixed and random effect estimators, specification tests, measurement errors.
- Panel data and dynamic models: generalized method of moments.
- Binary choice models with heterogeneity.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term. Exercises are provided each week and are discussed in classes. In order to have any chance of completing the course successfully, these exercises must be attempted. Special test exercises will be set at three points during the year. These will be carefully marked and the results made available.

Indicative reading: W H Greene, Econometric Analysis (6th edn), James D. Hamilton, Time Series Analysis (1994), J Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross Section and Panel Data (2002), J Angrist and J Pischke, Mostly Harmless Econometrics (2009)

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the January exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC411

Microeconomics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Francesco Nava 32L. 3.20 and Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L. 4.19

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing), MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway) and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may enrol in the course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (at a face-to-face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to develop the basic tools for analysing problems of resource allocation used by economists working in research, government and business. The course deals with positive and normative problems. It aims to include modern developments without being overly mathematical, and to develop a capacity to apply economic concepts to real-world problems. The first part of the course focuses on classical theories of market behaviour and strategic interaction. We begin by presenting foundations to utility maximization, by analysing the optimisation problems of price-taking consumers and firms, and by modelling market interactions and the formation of prices in perfectly competitive markets. Then we study models of decision making under uncertainty and game theoretic solution concepts. Novel developments in these fields are also discussed in lectures. The second part of the course focuses on models of imperfect competition and information economics. We begin with an analysis of models of monopoly, oligopoly, product differentiation, and public goods. Then, we study markets with imperfect and incomplete information including search, adverse selection, auctions, signalling, screening, and moral hazard. Special emphasis will be given to economic applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: The course will draw on a variety of texts, the main ones being:

1. J G Riley, Essential Microeconomics, Cambridge;
2. J R Green, A Mas-Colell & M D Whinston, Microeconomic Theory, Oxford. More detailed readings will be given at the beginning of the course. Some notes will be provided where textbook coverage is inadequate.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the January exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Macroeconomics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wouter Den Haan 32L.1.08A and Prof Alwyn Young 32L. 2.20

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway) and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to give a wide-ranging overview of modern macroeconomics.

Economic growth (Michaelmas)

The Michaelmas term of EC413 is an introduction to the techniques needed to critically read and evaluate academic research in economic growth. Topics are facts about growth, the Solow growth model (theory and empirics), the Neoclassical Growth model (growth with dynamic optimization), and endogenous technical change.

Business Cycles (Lent)

The Lent term of EC413 focuses on the main characteristics of business cycle fluctuations with a special emphasis on what happened during the financial crisis and different macroeconomic models to study business cycles. The course covers the Real Business Cycle model, the New-Keynesian model, models with frictions in labour and financial markets, agent-based models, the role of money, self-fulfilling beliefs, the role of monetary and fiscal policy (and in particular non-conventional monetary policy), and (un)sustainable sovereign debt.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term. Exercises are discussed in each class.

Indicative reading: Primary reading will be journal articles and a couple chapters from Daron Acemoglu, Introduction to Modern Economic Growth. A full list will be available at the start of each term.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC417

Advanced Macroeconomics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof. Nobuhiro Kiyotaki and Prof. Benjamin Moll

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course for MSc EME (EC451).

Course content: Course objectives and main course elements:

1. The course will teach you the concepts used in empirical and theoretical macroeconomics.
2. The course will teach you the main empirical business cycle characteristics of developed economies and the main empirical findings regarding the growth of developed and less developed nations.
3. This course teaches you the main techniques used to analyse modern macroeconomics models. In particular, the course will focus on techniques such as dynamic programming, value function iteration, and the linearization of first-order conditions.
4. This course teaches you (prototype versions of) macroeconomic models used to analyse key questions related to business cycles and economic growth. Examples are New Keynesian models, Real Business Cycle models, Overlapping Generations models, the Solow growth model, and first-generation endogenous growth models.
5. The course will also discuss some more advanced models that have recently been developed to explain recent economic events, including models with heterogeneous agents, financial frictions and labour market frictions.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Some of the problem sets will consist of computer and data assignments and students will be taught some basic programming and data analysis skills.

Formative coursework: Students are assigned problem sets.

These problem sets focus on key elements of the lectures, but they will also promote creativity and critical thinking by going beyond the material explicitly discussed in the lectures. There will also be computer assignments. The problem sets will be discussed by the class teachers.

Indicative reading:

- Acemoglu, Daron, 2009, Introduction to Modern Economic Growth.
- Ljungqvist, Lars and Thomas J. Sargent, 2012, Recursive Macroeconomic Theory.
- Stokey, Nancy L. and Robert E. Lucas Jr., 1989, Recursive Methods in Economic Dynamics.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

EC421

International Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Swati Dhingra, Mr Justas Dainauskas and Dr John Morrow

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: A graduate course in international economics consisting of i) the fundamentals of trade theory and its application to policy and ii) international macroeconomics.

Trade: Comparative advantage and the gains from trade. Theories of comparative advantage. Factor endowments, the international location of production, and patterns of international trade. Empirical tests of trade models. Trade and the labour market. Intra-industry trade. Firm heterogeneity and selection into trade. Foreign direct investment. General equilibrium trade policy. International macroeconomics: Intertemporal trade and the current account balance. Dynamics of small open economies. The real exchange rate and the terms of trade. Uncertainty and international financial markets. Monetary model of exchange rate determination: flexible and sticky prices. Introduction to currency crises models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course. Some important items are: R Feenstra, Advanced International Trade: Theory and Evidence, Princeton, 2004; A Dixit & V Norman, Theory of International Trade, Cambridge, 1980; E Helpman & P Krugman, Market Structure and Foreign Trade, MIT, 1985; M Obstfeld & K Rogoff, Foundations of International Macroeconomics, MIT Press, 1996.

Assessment: Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the LT Week 5.

Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the ST Week 1.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

The short essay will be on a topic covered during the course in each term. The short essay topic for MT can be of students' own choosing based on the material covered in the MT. The short essay topic for LT will be based on a topic from the material covered during the LT. The essay components are as follows:

1. Maximum word length: 1500 words
2. Four parts: Abstract, Introduction, Content, Conclusion.
3. Abstract: Include an abstract of 100 words or fewer.
4. Introduction: The essay would consist of an introduction which clearly states the question being studied, the motivation for examining the question and the contribution that the essay plans to make to the study of this question (relative to other work in the area).
5. Content: Having specified the question, the essay would contain theoretical and/or empirical evidence for the answer being proposed. The answer consists of an explanation and a maximum of four exhibits. An exhibit refers to a graph, table, figure, proposition or set of equations (limit to under three in each exhibit) that contains the theoretical or empirical evidence for the answer.
6. Conclusion: The essay would end with a concluding paragraph that states the answer to the question or broader implications of it. The short essays can be stepping stones to the dissertation. The dissertation must contain content that substantively contributes content over and above that submitted as part of the short essays.

EC423

Labour Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels 32L.2.10 and Dr Rui Vieira-Marques

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: An advanced course in labour economics issues, including theory, evidence and policy. The aim of the course is to familiarise students with main theoretical and empirical issues in current labour economics, and to provide them with the tools for developing independent research interests. The course has a strong applied focus. For each major topic covered we will derive testable implications, provide insights into the research methodology, discuss the advantages and limitations of existing empirical work, and draw policy conclusions. Topics include: labor supply and welfare systems, human capital, immigration, inequality and technological change, gender and racial pay gaps, minimum wages, job search, and unemployment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: At Least two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading is from journal articles. A detailed reading list is available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC424

Monetary Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kevin Sheedy 32L.1.09

Dr Saleem Bahaj

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: The course aims to develop the student's ability to undertake research in monetary economics by studying a number of current issues both theoretical and applied.

In the MT, we begin by studying money's role as a medium of exchange and the determination of the price level using money-in-the-utility-function and cash-in-advance models. We then look more carefully at the reasons for holding money by applying search theory. We also study money's role as a unit of account and the consequences of nominal rigidities such as sticky prices. We analyse the costs of inflation and optimal monetary policy, and we also look at unconventional monetary policies when a central bank is constrained by the interest-rate lower bound. Finally, we study firms' price-setting behaviour in more detail and its implications for the size of the real effects of monetary policy.

In the LT, we discuss the role of inflation expectations and financial markets in constraining monetary policy, and the design of central banks and their instruments. We study the interaction between fiscal and monetary policy, as well as the specification of the central bank objectives.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be handed out by the lecturers at the beginning of their sessions.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

Public Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Frank Cowell 32L.2.25A, Prof Johannes Spinnewijn 32L.3.24 and Prof Camille Landais 32L.3.23

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: A graduate course in the principles of public economics and topics in public economics. Principles of public economics cover: Welfare analysis; concepts of fairness, equity and efficiency; social welfare. Policy design: social insurance, income taxation. Taxation; household and firm behaviour. Public goods and externalities. Behavioural public economics; implications for welfare analysis and policy. Topics in public economics may include: Behavioural responses to taxation. Empirical strategies in public economics. Poverty, inequality and optimal low-income support. Compliance problems. Inheritance and wealth taxation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: Most of the readings will be in the form of journal articles, but some use will also be made of the following texts: A Auerbach & M S Feldstein (Eds), Handbook of Public Economics, Vols I-III, North-Holland; A B Atkinson & J E Stiglitz, Lectures on Public Economics, McGraw-Hill, 1980; G Myles, Public Economics, Cambridge University Press, 1995.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Course content: A graduate course in Industrial Organization, which aims to provide students with a working knowledge of current theoretical and empirical methods for industry studies. Applications of these methods are considered in industry case studies.

Topics include: Pre-requisites in Game Theory, An introduction to current developments in Oligopoly Theory, A formal analysis of conduct in concentrated industries (cartel stability, limit pricing, predatory pricing, etc), Demand estimation in homogenous and differentiated product industries, Production function estimation, Empirical techniques for oligopoly models and auction markets, Identification of conduct, Economies of Scale, R&D, Advertising, Vertical restraints. The topics will be discussed with detailed applications for selected industries and considering competition policy questions.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the

MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: Two books which provide a basic framework are J Tirole, Theory of Industrial Organization, MIT Press, 1989 and J Sutton, Technology and Market Structure, MIT Press, 1998. A full reading list will be supplied at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC428

Development and Growth

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Maitreesh Ghatak 32L.3.08A and Dr Gharad Bryan 32L.3.10

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) and MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Students should have completed courses in intermediate level microeconomics, macroeconomics and econometrics.

Course content: This course will cover a number of topics at forefront of development economics, combining theoretical and empirical analysis with a clear focus on policy implications. These include economic growth, poverty traps, inequality and occupational choice, credit markets, microfinance, property rights, land markets current methodological debates; the allocation of capital and labour across firms, space and sectors; structural change during the development process; finance; psychology and development; governance and accountability; conflict and civil war; motivation of civil servants; taxation and development; firms and markets; trade; infrastructure; energy and the environment; and climate change.

Development economics is, arguably, the fastest growing and most vibrant field within economics. The course will enable the students to apply their econometric and theoretical skills to what are some of the world's most pressing problems. The experience of applying their economic knowledge to these topics will generate analytical skills that can be used in wide variety of applied settings.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading is from journal articles which appear on reading lists distributed at the start of each part of the course. However, the following references may serve as an introduction to material included in the syllabus. D Ray, Development Economics, Princeton UP, 1998, Abhijit Banerjee and Esther Duflo's Poor Economics, New York: Public Affairs, 2011, and the symposium on The Agenda for Development Economics - Journal of Economic Perspectives Volume 24, Number 3, Summer 2010: Articles by Deaton, Acemoglu, Ray, Rodrik, and Rosenzweig.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC441Microeconomics for MRes students

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michele Piccione 32L.4.07 and Prof Balazs Szentes 32L.4.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Economics and MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: A good undergraduate knowledge of economic theory and calculus is required.

Course content: The aim of the course is to:

- i. introduce the basic analytical tools that are necessary to conduct theoretical research in many fields in economics.
- ii. give the students a full understanding of the classic Microeconomic Theory and of the modern developments of Microeconomic Theory
- iii. enable students to address a microeconomic problem by structuring it as a mathematical model and enhance the understanding of economic issues through the use of mathematical tools.

Topics include: Consumer theory, producer theory, general equilibrium, welfare, choice under uncertainty, game theory, economics of information, agency theory, contracts, topics in mechanism design.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set for each class.

Indicative reading: The main text is Mas-Collel, Whinston & Green, Microeconomic Theory, OUP.

Other sources include:

D Fudenberg & J Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press; D M Kreps, A Course in Microeconomic Theory, Harvester Wheatsheaf; H R Varian, Microeconomic Analysis (3rd edn), Norton; M J Osborne & A Rubinstein, A Course in Game Theory, MIT Press; G A Jehle & P J Reny, Advanced Microeconomic Theory, Longman.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC442Macroeconomics for MRes students

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Per Krusell 32L.1.19, Mr Benjamin Moll, Dr Ethan Ilzetzki 32L.1.11 and Prof Ricardo Reis 32L.1.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Economics and MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover topics in advanced macroeconomics with emphasis on fundamentals and applications to recent theoretical advances:

- i. Economic growth: Neoclassical Growth Model, Optimizing Behaviour in dynamic models under certainty, Endogenous Technological Change, Imitation and Convergence, Growth and Development Accounting, Appropriate Technology.
- ii. Search and Matching: The Matching Model, Efficiency Wages, Growth and Unemployment.
- iii. Dynamic Stochastic General Equilibrium Models : Real Business Cycles, applications to models of heterogeneous agents and open economy. Fiscal policy analysis.
- iv. Monetary Economics: models with credit frictions, sticky prices, search.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set for each class.

Indicative reading: A good general textbook that is mostly below the level of the course is: D Romer, Advanced Macroeconomics, McGraw-Hill Advanced Series in Economics, New York, 1996.

For the growth part the main references are the textbooks by: D. Acemoglu, Introduction to Modern Economic Growth, Princeton University Press, 2009; R J Barro & X Sala-i-Martin, Economic Growth, McGraw-Hill, 1997.

Other useful texts include: L Ljungqvist & T Sargent, Recursive Macroeconomic Theory, MIT Press, 2000; N Stokey & R E Lucas, Recursive Methods in Economic Dynamics, Harvard University Press, 1989.

More economic applications, with some required readings can be found in: M Obstfeld & K Rogoff, Foundations of International Macroeconomics, MIT Press, 2000; P Aghion & P Howitt, Endogenous Growth Theory, MIT Press 1998; C A Pissarides, Equilibrium Unemployment Theory, MIT Press 2000. References for recent theoretical advances published in the journals will be given during the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Problem sets (25%) in the MT and LT.

EC443Econometrics for MRes students

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L.4.24 and Dr Vassilis Hajivassiliou 32L.4.23

Dr Jasmine Yike Wang

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics and MRes/PhD in Management (Marketing). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed an undergraduate level course in econometrics and statistical theory. Linear algebra and multivariate calculus will be used frequently.

Course content:

- First part [Inference, Classical- and Generalized Linear Regression] begins with methods of estimation and optimality, followed by an introduction to asymptotic theory. It proceeds with statistical inference and the trinity of classical testing (Wald, Likelihood Ratio, and Lagrange Multiplier). It then discusses the classical linear regression model and commences the discussion of violation of the classical assumptions by discussing the Generalized Linear Regression Model (heteroskedasticity and autocorrelation).
- Second part [Generalized Regression Methods] provides a further discussion of violations of the classical assumptions including measurement error, omitted variables, simultaneity, missing data; non-linear regression models and instrumental variables. It proceeds to the Generalized Method of Moments and efficient estimation methods under conditional moment restrictions. It also covers the topics of quantile regression and bootstrapping.
- Third part [Time-series, Panel-data, and Microeconomic Methods] begins with a discussion of Time-Series topics, including single equation theory for non-stationary variables; serially correlated errors with lagged dependent variables; unit roots; simultaneous equations for non-stationary variables; co-integration; and ARCH and GARCH models. It proceeds to Panel data methods such as fixed and random effects estimators and their extensions for applying to dynamic linear and non-linear panel data models. The next major topic presents models with Limited Dependent Variables.
- Final part [Specialized Econometric Methods] discusses simulation-based inference, nonlinear panel data, and duration models. Finally, it covers the topics of program evaluation, nonparametrics, kernel estimation, and differences in differences.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set for each class.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be made available through the departmental website and in course-packs for each part of the course. Please note there is no set book for this course.

Recommended books are: W H Greene, Econometric Analysis, 6th edn, Pearson Education; R Davidson & J MacKinnon, Estimation and Inference in Econometrics, Oxford University Press, 1993; P.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC451

Introductory Course for MSc EME

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L.4.20

Prof Taisuke Otsu 32L.4.25

Prof Michele Piccione 32L.4.07

Prof John Moore 32L.4.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is split into three parts: Microeconomics, Macroeconomics and Econometrics.

Non-EME students wishing to take EC487 Advanced Microeconomics as part of their programme must attend Week 1 of the EC451 course, Microeconomics, and sit the EC451 Microeconomics examination.

Non-EME students wishing to take EC484 Econometric Analysis as part of their programme must attend Week 3 of the EC451 course, Econometrics, and sit the EC451 Econometrics examination.

Non-EME students are not permitted to attend Week 2 of the EC451 course, Macroeconomics.

Course content: Microeconomics (Week 1):

This introduction to microeconomic theory introduces the economic concepts of choice, preference and utility, including discussion of the revealed-preference approach to hedonics. It describes the consumer's problem and explores conditions under which consumer preferences, as well as policy preferences, can sensibly be aggregated. The course will also cover the mathematics of correspondences and fixed-point theorems.

Macroeconomics (Week 2):

The prequel of the advanced macroeconomics core course focuses on topics in modern macroeconomic theory, starting with basic national income accounting and the real-business cycle model. Then sticky prices. Followed by matching frictions in the labour market. Finally credit market imperfections.

Econometrics (Week 3):

Day 1-4 (Prof Otsu): This part introduces basic concepts and theory for mathematical statistics and probability. This part mostly focuses on linear regression model and covers the topics, such as (i) Conditional expectation and projection, (ii) Algebra of least Squares, (iii) Finite sample theory, (iv) Maximum likelihood (v) Introduction to asymptotic theory, and (vi) Hypothesis testing. Also, some background mathematical results are reviewed.

Day 5 (Prof Hidalgo): Last day is devoted to introduction to MT part of EC484. Further concepts and results on convergence of variables are discussed.

Teaching: The course is taught in September. It consists of 45 hours of lectures and an additional 22 hours of classes, across a 3-week period.

Formative coursework: After each lecture, some exercises will be handed to students. They will be solved during the classes.

Indicative reading: Prof Bruce Hansen's lecture note at University of Wisconsin-Madison (1st year PhD level), downloadable at: <https://www.ssc.wisc.edu/~bhansen/econometrics/>. Rubinstein (2012) Lecture Notes in Microeconomic Theory. Ljungqvist, Lars and Thomas J. Sargent (2012) Recursive Macroeconomic Theory. Romer, David (2011) Advanced Macroeconomics.

Assessment: At the end of the course, students will be examined on all three modules, microeconomics, econometrics and macroeconomics.

Students from programmes other than MSc EME wishing to continue studying MSc EME core courses must achieve at least 40% in each subject exam.

EC465

Economic Growth, Development, and Capitalism in Historical Perspective

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jeremiah Dittmar 32L.2.22 and Dr Neil Cummins SAR.5.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme).

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Students should also have completed courses in intermediate level microeconomics, macroeconomics, and econometrics.

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: This course will provide a rigorous introduction to the analysis of long run economic growth and development.

The focus is on acquiring the necessary empirical skills to engage in advanced analysis of economic evidence, and to develop an understanding of how historical evidence can shape and inform economic theory. Topics at the forefront of economics and economic history will be covered. These include political economy, technological change, economic growth, education, demography, the economics of law and property rights, gender, culture, and the distribution of income. The emphasis will be on combining theory and data to evaluate fundamental ideas in economics concerning the determinants of well-being and the dynamics of market economies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 exercise in the MT and LT.

The formative coursework will consist of a combination of student presentations, written exercises, data analysis, and problems.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading is from journal articles which appear on reading lists distributed at the start of each part of the course. However, the following references may serve as an introduction to material included in the syllabus: Nunn, "The Importance of History for Economic Development" (2009); Robinson and Acemoglu, "Why Nations Fail" (2012); Acemoglu, "Introduction to Modern Economic Growth" (Princeton, 2009); Hall and Jones, "The New Kaldor Facts: Ideas, Institutions, Population, and Human Capital" (2010); Mokyr, "Lever of Riches" (1988); Piketty (2013) "Capital in the Twenty-First Century"; Clark (2007) "Farewell to Alms"; Diamond (1997) "Guns, Germs and Steel"; Clark et al. (2014) "The Son also rises".

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

The summative assessment consists of an exam that reviews and synthesises all course materials and an essay. The essay will be a critical analytic essay providing an opportunity for original empirical research.

EC475

Quantitative Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Mark Schankerman (Michaelmas term) 32L.4.30

Dr Xavier Jaravel (Lent term) 32L.3.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course for MSc EME (EC451).

A knowledge is expected of econometric theory and applied econometrics corresponding to Principles of Econometrics or Methods of Economic Investigation. Students must be prepared to read journal articles with a difficult mathematical and statistical content.

Course content: The course will focus on going through modern quantitative papers which demonstrate the application of econometric techniques to modelling the behaviour of individual economic agents (households and firms) and economies. The first half of the course will focus on papers in the empirical literature on productivity, innovation and intellectual property rights, illustrating the challenges of identification in both structural and reduced form models. The lectures will cover a wide range of topics in applied micro-econometrics with a view to illustrating the interplay between models, data and methods.

The second part of the course focuses on macroeconomic questions using data and tools from applied microeconomics. We cover four styles of empirical work: (1) "reduced-form" approaches (including difference-in-differences, event studies instrumental variables and Bartik research designs); (2) structural models; (3) "sufficient statistics" research designs, at the intersection of structural and reduced-form methods; and (4) machine learning techniques.

Topics covered include the effectiveness of fiscal stimulus, measurement of inflation, directed technical change, from trade, the macroeconomic impact of financial frictions over the business cycle, the macroeconomic impact of unemployment insurance, and the effect of Artificial Intelligence on the labour market.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: During Michaelmas term, students are required to prepare a short (3-4 page) "referee report" on an assigned journal article each week. Two of these reports will be marked by the class teacher. In Lent term, there will be one marked assignment, a short research proposal (which will be developed based on the content of classes and based on feedback from the instructor).

Indicative reading: Articles in economic journals will be assigned at the start of Michaelmas and Lent terms. The course will also draw on methodological topics covered in Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross Section and Panel Data (2nd edition, 2010), and Angrist and Pischke, Mostly Harmless Econometrics (2009).

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Report (10%) in the MT.

Research proposal (10%) in the LT.

The report will be two mark referee reports due in the MT.

EC476

Contracts and Organisations

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gilat Levy 32L.4.31 and Prof Philippe Aghion 32L.2.02

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) and MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students on the MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics programme must have completed the Pre-session Course for MSc EME (EC451).

All other students must have completed the Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC400 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc Economics Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: The course will cover topics from: social learning, reputation and career concerns, strategic information transmission, contract theory, incomplete contracts, the economics of moral hazard and adverse selection in strategic settings, dynamic theory of incentive contracts, optimal auctions and regulation, and the theory of mechanism design with multiple agents (multiple agents screening and common agency).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; a list of references will be provided at the start of the course. The following textbooks provide a treatment of part of the material presented in the course: Jean-Jacques Laffont, The Economics of Uncertainty and Information, MIT Press; D Fudenberg & J Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press; Jean-Jacques Laffont & Jean Tirole, A Theory of Incentives in Procurement Regulations, MIT Press; Bernard Salanié, The Economics of Contracts: A Primer, MIT Press, Bolton, P., and M. Dewatripont (2005), Contract Theory, MIT Press, Hart, O. (1995), Firms, Contracts, and Financial Structure, Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Assessment path 2

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics students must follow Assessment path 1.

Non-MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics students must follow Assessment path 2.

EC484

Econometric Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Javier Hidalgo 32L.4.20 and Prof Taisuke Otsu 32L.4.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Economics and MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course for MSc EME (EC451).

EC451 takes place prior to the start of Michaelmas Term, please contact econ.msc@lse.ac.uk for more information.

Course content: This course gives an advanced treatment of the theory of estimation and inference for econometric models. Part (a) Background; asymptotic statistical theory: modes of convergence, asymptotic unbiasedness, uniform integrability, stochastic orders of magnitude, convergence in distribution, central limit theorems, applications to linear regression, extensions to time series, consistency and asymptotic distribution of implicitly defined extremum estimators.

Part (b) General asymptotic theorems, nonlinear regression, quantile regression, nonparametric methods (kernel and series methods), generalized method of moments, conditional moment restriction, many and weak instruments, limited dependent variables, treatment effect, bootstrap, and time series.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; a list of references will be provided at the start of the course, and lecture notes and relevant articles will be circulated.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

EC485

Further Topics in Econometrics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L.4.20 and Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L.4.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course for MSc EME (EC451).

In exceptional circumstances, students may take this course without EC451 provided they meet the necessary requirements and have received approval from the course conveners (via a face to face meeting), the MSc EME Programme Director and their own Programme Director. Contact the Department of Economics for more information (econ.msc@lse.ac.uk) regarding entry to this course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce the student to topics at the frontier of econometric research of importance both at a theoretical and empirical level. The course consists of four series of ten lectures on specialised topics in econometrics. These lectures change from year to year. Presently they include: Bootstrap methods; non-parametric and semi-parametric estimation; dependence in economics: an overview; panel data models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; lists of references will be provided and lecture notes circulated.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

EC486

Econometric Methods

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pasquale Schiraldi 32L.4.22

Mr Alessandro Gavazza, 32L.4.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to present the theory and practice of empirical research in economics. Beyond the theory, the course will put a substantial amount of effort in having the students work with Stata and other econometric software in analyzing actual data sets, reproducing and criticising results in previous work and learning the actual practice of econometrics as undertaken by the best applied economists, both in general (in MT) and specifically within the IO field (in the LT). Topics include: (MT)

Ordinary Least Squares, hypothesis testing, omitted and added variables, measurement error, the role of controls, and functional form. Panel data, fixed and random effects. Instrumental Variables.

An introduction to the analysis of time series. The emphasis of this part is on the identification of causal effects, and applications in microeconomics (Labour Economics, Public Policy, IO, etc) are presented throughout. In LT you will learn the applications of many of these techniques to econometric questions in Industrial Organization, organizational economics and management.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to complete answers to problem sets on a week by week basis.

Indicative reading: MT: James H. Stock and Mark W. Watson, Introduction to Econometrics; reading lists of chapters and journal articles will be supplied at the start of each term.

Assessment: Exam (66%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Problem sets (17%) in the MT.

Problem sets (17%) in the LT.

Two problem sets, one per term, with a weight of 17% each towards the final overall grade.

The exam includes four questions, two for each term; the students have to answer three questions, at least one for each term. Each question carries 22% of the final overall grade.

EC487

Advanced Microeconomics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Rafayal Ahmed and Prof. Balazs Szentes

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students on other programmes must get permission from the course conveners to take this course.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course for MSc EME (EC451).

EC451 takes place prior to the start of Michaelmas Term, please contact econ.msc@lse.ac.uk for more information.

Course content: The aim of this course is to: (i) introduce and develop the analytical tools of graduate level Microeconomics with a special emphasis on mathematical models; (ii) provide the students with a firm grounding in classical Microeconomic Theory as well as its modern development. Topics include: Consumer theory, producer theory, general equilibrium, welfare, choice under uncertainty, game theory, oligopoly, economics of information, topics in mechanism design, topics in behavioural economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Problem sets will be discussed in class and two marked assignments will be given in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: The main texts are A Rubinstein Lecture Notes in Economic Theory, Princeton University Press (with the most up-to-date version available for free download from the author's website) and Mas-Colell, Whinston & Green, Microeconomic Theory, OUP. Other sources include: D M Kreps, Microeconomic Foundations I: Choice and Competitive Markets, Princeton University Press; Fudenberg and Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press.

Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Problem sets (20%) in the MT and LT.

Note that EC451 material will be covered on the exam.

EC4B5 Half UnitMacroeconomics for MSc F&E

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wouter Den Haan 32L.1.08A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The Lent term of EC413 focuses on the main characteristics of business cycle fluctuations with a special emphasis on what happened during the financial crisis and different macroeconomic models to study business cycles. The course covers the Real Business Cycle model, the New-Keynesian model, models with frictions in labour and financial markets, agent-based models, the role of money, self-fulfilling beliefs, the role of monetary and fiscal policy (and in particular non-conventional monetary policy), and (un)sustainable sovereign debt.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term. Exercises are discussed in each class.

Indicative reading: IMF World Economic Outlook, Chapter 1: Global Prospects and Policies. Den Haan, Wouter, 2006, Macroeconomic Models without the Walrasian Auctioneer, Tinbergen Magazine 14, fall. IMF, 2013, Unconventional Monetary Policies – Recent Experience and Prospects. Nelson, Rebecca M., 2013, Sovereign debt in advanced economies: Overview and Issues for Congress. Carvalho, Vasco, 2014, From micro to macro via production networks, Journal of Economic Perspectives 28(4), 23-48. More readings will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC4B6 Half UnitMicroeconomics for MSc F&E

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Francesco Nava 32L.3.20

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The aim of the course is to develop the basic tools for analysing problems of resource allocation used by economists working in research, government and business. The course deals with positive and normative problems. It aims to include modern developments without being overly mathematical, and to develop a capacity to apply economic concepts to real-world problems. The course focuses on classical theories of market behaviour and strategic interaction. We begin by presenting foundations to utility maximization, by analysing the optimisation problems of price-taking consumers and firms, and by modelling market interactions and the formation of prices in perfectly competitive markets. Then we study models of decision making under uncertainty and game theoretic solution concepts. Novel developments in these fields are also discussed in lectures.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments.

Indicative reading: The course will draw on a variety of texts, the main ones being:

1. J G Riley, Essential Microeconomics, Cambridge;
2. J R Green, A Mas-Colell & M D Whinston, Microeconomic Theory, Oxford.

More detailed readings will be given at the beginning of the course. Some notes will be provided where textbook coverage is inadequate.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the January exam period.

EH401 Half UnitHistorical Analysis of Economic Change

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner SAR 507 and Dr Anne Ruderman SAR 506

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course provides an overview of the central themes and key theoretical questions in economic history and examines the ways in which economic historians collect, analyse and interpret evidence. The training is expected to inform dissertation work. The specific topics evolve to reflect recent research trends, but an illustrative list includes: processes of economic development; culture and economic behaviour; the role of institutions; and welfare outcomes. The course approaches these topics by considering problems of knowledge and explanation in economic history, and introduces quantitative and qualitative approaches to obtaining, analysing, and interpreting evidence. Lectures pair conceptual and theoretical reviews with historical case studies illustrating applied research on these topics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work during the term.

Indicative reading: D. North, Institutions, Institutional Change and Economic Performance (1990); A. Greif, Institutions and the Path to the Modern Economy (2006); K. Pomeranz, The Great Divergence: China, Europe and the Making of the Modern World Economy (2000); R. Allen, The British Industrial Revolution in Global Perspective (2009); D Rodrik (Ed), In Search of Prosperity (2003); E. Helpman, The Mystery of Economic Growth (2004); T Rawski (Ed), Economics and the Historian (1996); J. Tosh, The Pursuit of History (2nd Edition, 1991); D. Little, Varieties of Social Explanation (1991).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

EH402 Half UnitResearch Design and Quantitative Methods in Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olivier Accominotti SAR 5.14

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is concerned with how economic historians have used quantitative methods and with how researchers design and structure a research project. In terms of quantitative methods the emphasis is on the applied and practical rather than the theoretical and will range from the use of simple summary descriptive statistics to multiple regression. The course is concerned with the problems of analysing and interpreting quantitative historical evidence. It will consider topics such as sampling and statistical distributions, correlation, simple and multiple regression, specification problems, hypothesis testing, panel data analysis and instrumental variables, although the content may vary slightly from year to year. The course will also provide students with training in using an econometrics software package. An important component of the course is the deconstruction of historical articles that have used quantitative techniques.

Teaching: 9 hours of seminars and 20 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

MT only. Three hours per week.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: C H Feinstein and M Thomas, Making History Count (2002); P Hudson, History by Numbers (2002); C H Lee, The Quantitative Approach to Economic History (1977); G Hawthorn, Plausible Words (1991).

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in January.

India and the World Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tirthankar Roy SAR 616

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: From the eighteenth century, the South Asia region played an important part in international transactions in goods, people, and money. The world economy, in turn, shaped potentials for economic growth in the region. The aim of the course is to impart an understanding of the global factors that shaped economic change in the South Asia region in the 18th through the early-20th century. It will also deal with the principal ways in which South Asia contributed to economic change in the rest of the world. The political context of globalization, especially imperialism and colonial policies, will be considered. The course will be divided into a set of topics, which together cover a large ground, but a selection from which will be discussed in the class. Lectures and seminars will centre on the readings assigned to each topic.

Topics to be covered: Introductory: India and the world economy in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries

- how each shaped the other; textiles in eighteenth century India: scale
- organization
- impact on global consumption and innovation
- trade and territorial politics; nineteenth century market integration: de-industrialization and the artisans; nineteenth century market integration: Agricultural exports, land rights, and the peasantry
- Trade and famines; Government finance in colonial setting: The drain controversy
- public debt; overseas migration in the nineteenth century: Who went where, how many, and why
- private gains and losses
- social effects: slavery and indenture, women, nature of work and skill-formation
- labour and non-labour migrants compared; foreign capital and industrialization; balance of payments and the monetary system; overview: Globalization and economic growth.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: G. Balachandran, ed., India and the World Economy 1850-1950 (2003); C. Bates and M. EH413 Half Unit

African Economic Development in Historical Perspective

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner SAR 507

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Many of Africa's current economic challenges, from persistent poverty to the weakness of state institutions, have deep historical roots. This course provides an introduction to the economic history of sub-Saharan Africa since the medieval period. Its overall aim is to bring Africa and Africans into global economic history, allowing students to understand how Africans contributed to that history, as well as how global changes have influenced the patterns of African development. Moving chronologically, the course addresses a number of issues which are current in studies of African development, including:

- The role of globalization and trade and promoting or undermining development
- Environmental challenges to expanding production
- The structure of state institutions and their impact on growth
- The impact of economic change on social structures

Close attention is paid to the ways in which economic development is measured and assessed in different periods with the available data. Seminars address the diverse experiences of specific countries and regions in addition to broader trends.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to complete one essay or equivalent during the term.

Indicative reading: Readings for this course reflect current trends in research on African economic history and development. The main text is Emmanuel Akyeampong et al (eds), Africa's Development in Historical Perspective (Cambridge, 2014). Other such readings will include recent contributions in journals such as the Economic History Review special issue on African economic history (November 2014).

For a general overview of African history over the period, see R.J. Reid, A History of Modern Africa (2009), J. Iliffe, Africans: The History of a Continent (1995).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Theories, Paths and Patterns of Late Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner SAR 507 and Dr Anne Ruderman SAR 506

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides an overview of the central themes and key theoretical questions in economic history and examines the ways in which economic historians collect, analyse and interpret evidence. The training is expected to inform dissertation work. The specific topics evolve to reflect recent research trends, but an illustrative list includes: processes of economic development; culture and economic behaviour; the role of institutions; and welfare outcomes. The course approaches these topics by considering problems of knowledge and explanation in economic history, and introduces quantitative and qualitative approaches to obtaining, analysing, and interpreting evidence. Lectures pair conceptual and theoretical reviews with historical case studies illustrating applied research on these topics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Two-hour lecture (that is joint with EH401) and a weekly one hour seminar in MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work during the term.

Indicative reading: D. North, Institutions, Institutional Change and Economic Performance (1990); A. Greif, Institutions and the Path to the Modern Economy (2006); K. Economic History of Colonialism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner SAR 507 and Prof Tirthankar Roy SAR 616

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Debates about the effects of European colonial rule on the non-European world animated economic history scholarship since the 1850s when Karl Marx published essays on British rule in India in the New York Daily Tribune. The relationship between colonialism and economic development has an important place in a number of distinct literatures in economic history, including work on globalization, divergence, migration, global finance, environmental change, and the shaping of development policy after colonialism. The aim of the course is to introduce the key readings in these themes, build connections between the discourses, and lead students to an informed view of colonialism as a force in shaping the modern world.

The broad topics include, (a) trade and the origins of colonialism (b) institutions and governance; (c) connections forged through trade, investment, migration, and the transfer of knowledge of institutions and technologies, including informal empire; (d) growth of corporate enterprise such as companies, factories, and plantation complexes, and the connection between state power and private enterprise, (e) decolonization, proximity between indigenous business and nationalist politics, the changing power of expatriate capital, and the appeal of new developmental ideology in the interwar period, (f) environmental change, studying a scholarship that sees European empires, alternatively, as catastrophic in their impacts on the environment and as forerunners of governmental regulation of the commons. Seminars compare and contrast the experiences of Asia and Africa.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete an essay and an equivalent assignment during term.

Topics in Quantitative Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Albrecht Ritschl SAR.6.06 and Prof Christopher Minns

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is particularly appropriate for those students who are considering following a quantitative economic history PhD thesis in the future.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled for this course are expected to have completed the equivalent of undergraduate courses in econometrics and intermediate economic theory.

Course content: The course is organised on a topic basis, with subjects chosen to illustrate particular theoretical, quantitative or methodological issues. Such topics could include: long run comparative economic growth; human capital issues in economic history; the macroeconomics of the inter-war years; the political economy of trade; industrial economic history; technological change; quantitative approaches to the evolution of markets; the new economic history of institutional change; analysing historical welfare issues. The aims are to: examine the techniques used by economic historians and to assess their validity and whether they help to further our understanding of the particular historical issue to which they have been applied; and to teach students how to evaluate the relevance of historical hypotheses and the historical applicability of models from economic and other social scientific theory. Students are able to investigate in detail the analysis contained in important journal articles using appropriate computer packages.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

20 two-hour lectures/ seminar in the MT and LT; some of this Teaching will take the form of computing workshops.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of each term, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Three or four papers or presentations during the session

Indicative reading: M Bordo, A Taylor, J Williamson (2003), Globalization in Historical Perspective; Y S Brenner, H Kaelble & M Thomas (eds) (1991), Income Distribution in Historical Perspective; Clark, G (2007), A Farewell to Alms; R Findlay, K O'Rourke (2009), Power and Plenty; N Ferguson (2009), The Ascent of Money; M Obstfeld, A Taylor (2004), Global Capital Markets; C Feinstein, P Temin, G Toniolo (1997), The European Economy Between the Wars; B van Ark & N Crafts (eds), Quantitative Aspects of Postwar European Economic (1996).

Assessment: Essay (35%, 3000 words) and presentation (15%) in the LT.

Essay (35%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Presentation (15%) in the MT.

The summative essays are expected to modify, extend or criticise existing research in the literature. The presentations will cover work other than the subject matter of the essays and will be given in class during the MT and LT.

Japan and Korea as Developing Economies

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Janet Hunter SAR 604

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will focus on selected issues of economic development that are of importance in contemporary debates and theories, and see how these issues were played out in Japan and Korea from the late 19th century to the latter half of the 20th century. The main themes discussed will be: natural endowments and climatic impact; changes in the agricultural and manufacturing sectors; the growth of market production; issues of state policy; economic institutions; colonialism and imperialism; integration into the international economy; income levels and consumption; gender and development; culture and economy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: A.H.Amsden, Asia's Next Giant: South Korea and Late Industrialisation (1989); H-J Chang, The East Asian Development Experience (2006); Y-I.Chung, Korea Under Siege, 1876-1945: Capital Formation and Economic Transformation (2006); P.G.Francks, Japanese Economic Development (3rd edition, 2015); C.H.Lee & I.Yamazawa (eds.), Economic Development of Japan and Korea (1990).

Quantitative Topics in Economic History I: Cross-section and Panel Data

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Natacha Postel-Vinay SAR 613

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled for this course are expected to have completed at least introductory undergraduate courses in statistics and/or econometrics and economic theory. The course will begin with a revision of the main quantitative approaches but will not provide a comprehensive training in econometric methods or computer applications.

Please note: EH426 cannot be taken with EH422.

Course content: The course will provide an overview of quantitative approaches in economic history mainly using cross-section and panel data. The course will examine the use of quantitative techniques through practical exercises and critical discussion of their application in recent literature. Techniques discussed will include multiple regression analysis, regression diagnostics, instrumental variables, limited dependent variables, sample selection corrections, and panel data analysis. The course is organised on a topic basis, with subjects chosen to illustrate particular theoretical, quantitative and methodological issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: There is no mandatory textbook for this course, but the brief overview of quantitative methods during the first four weeks will follow Wooldridge, J.M. (2009), Introductory Econometrics: A Modern Approach, International Student Edition. Useful background readings include J.L. Van Zanden, The Long Road to the Industrial Revolution: The European Economy in a Global Perspective, 1000-1800 (Leiden, 2009); K.H. O'Rourke and J.G. Williamson, Globalization and History: The Evolution of a Nineteenth-Century Atlantic Economy (Cambridge MA, 1998); C. Goldin and L.F. Katz, The race between education and technology (Cambridge, MA, 2008); D. Greasley and L. Oxley (eds.), Economics and History: Surveys in Cliometrics (Oxford, 2011).6.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the LT.

Quantitative Topics in Economic History II: Time Series and Economic Dynamics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled for this course are expected to have completed EH426 or the equivalent of undergraduate courses in econometrics and intermediate economic theory.

Please note: EH427 cannot be taken with EH422.

Course content: The course will provide an overview of quantitative approaches in economic history using primarily dynamic panel and time series. The course will examine the use of quantitative techniques through practical exercises and critical discussion of their application in recent literature. Techniques discussed will include the GMM estimator, discrete choice and hazard models, analysis of unit roots in panels and time-series and vector autoregressions. The course is organised on a topic basis, with subjects chosen to illustrate particular theoretical, quantitative or methodological issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work.

History of Economics: Making Political Economy into a Social Science

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Patrick Wells

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia), MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course aim is to understand how the nature of economics changed from the verbally argued accounts of political economy and moral philosophy in the 18th century to become a technical social science by the end of the 20th century. The course will explore the long-term changes over two hundred years in how economists came to know things about the economy by examining the history of their notion of the laws of economics, their analytical practices, and the evidence they used. Primary texts, chosen from a variety of European and American authors, will provide material for the study of these changes. Secondary literature will provide theoretical resources from history and philosophy of science to help analyse, understand and assess these changes in the nature of economics as a science.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

20 hours over MT, mainly 2hour seminars, with an occasional lecture within that time slot.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: The main domain of the course material is explained in "Economics" in T.M.Porter and D.Ross The Cambridge History of Science, Vol 7, The Modern Social Sciences, pp 275-305 (Cambridge University Press), while a key secondary text is Mary Morgan's "The world in the model: how economists work and think" (Cambridge University Press 2012). A very readable introduction to the history of economics is Robert Heilbroner's "The Worldly Philosophers" (various editions, Penguin); a more detailed background text is Henry Spiegel's "The Growth of Economic Thought" (various editions, Duke University Press).

Full reading lists will be given out at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

History of Economics: Ideas, Policy and Performativity

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Morgan SAR 609

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia), MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students can take this course independently of EH428.

Course content: The course aim is to understand how economics has been used to change the world. The course will bring together the long tradition of analysis of economics as a policy science with more recent ideas about the performativity of economics. It will draw on the literatures of economic history, history of economics and sociology of accounting and finance to explore the aims and methods used in economics to influence the economy. The focus of study will be on particular episodes from 20th century history in which economics features as a technical art (e.g. the transition from colonial to independent economies; the Soviet and Cuban revolutions; and the reconstruction of depressed and damaged economies).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars/lectures in the Lent Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be given out at the beginning of the course. Henry Spiegel's The Growth of Economic Thought (various editions, Duke University Press) provides a general background text.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Monetary and Financial History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Natacha Postel-Vinay SAR.6.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no specific pre-requisites for this course. Nevertheless, some preliminary background in introductory macroeconomics and introductory statistics could be useful.

Course content: Where does money come from? How did financial markets first develop and integrate? What has been the impact of financial markets on economic development, growth, and business cycle fluctuations? When did financial crises first arise, and how did they develop in the twentieth century, up to the subprime and Euro crises of 2008-2015? This course offers an opportunity to delve into these questions and analyse the evolution of the role of money in Western economies over centuries, from the Middle Ages to the 2000s.

The first part of the course will allow students to acquire a broad overview of the origins of financial markets from 800 to the eve of World War 1. It will explore the creation of mints and central banks, the role of finance in processes of long-run growth such as the Industrial Revolution, how financial bubbles and banking panics first arose, and how financial markets integrated in the 19C with the Gold Standard. The second part of the course will start with a focus on the financial turmoil of the Great Depression, looking at the mechanisms leading to hyperinflation, bank failures, debt crises and capital flight on both sides of the Atlantic. It will then move on to analysing the evolution of financial institutions under Bretton Woods, sovereign debt crises, the 1990s bubbles, and the Great Recession in the US and in the Euro area. In the end, students will have a firm grasp of the evolution of financial markets over centuries up until now.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of MT and LT, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Economic Development of East and Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kent Deng SAR 517

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites: knowledge of Asian history of the relevant period and region would be an advantage.

Course content: The course deals with the conditions and paths of economic development in East Asia (excluding Japan) and Southeast Asia in past centuries. The first part of the course looks at the debate on Asian economic history, including the effect of the availability of endowments, and the institutions, technology and economic structures that evolved independently in Asia to support a large population with reasonable standards of living. The second part of the course examines the reasons for the lack of indigenous modern growth in Asia, the conditions and timing of the 'growth miracle' of the Asian Tigers, ASEAN and Mainland China after World War Two, and the relationship to the growth of the world economy. Topics covered include: traditional economic patterns in the region before the 17th century; the impact of the early European maritime traders; the impact of later Europeans traders backed by industrialisation; attempts and successes of Western colonisation; resistance to change from the core area in the East Asian Mainland; reforms and modernisation in Asia; Asia and globalisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of each term, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: A Booth, 'The Economic Development of Southeast Asia: 1870-1985' Australian Economic History Review, 31 (1); G Snooks et al Exploring Southeast Asia's Economic Past (1991); I Brown, Economic Change in Southeast Asia (1997); Kenneth Pomeranz, The Great Divergence (2000); J M Hobson The Eastern Origins of Western Civilisation (2004); P. Latin American Development and Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Irigoin SAR 611

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia), MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will consider some of the major topics of development and economic history of Latin America. The topics to be explored will be the role of geography, the environment and factor endowments, the role of institutions and policies, problems of taxation and representation in the constitutional and political developments in the 19th and 20th century, the history of labour and migrations into and out of Latin America, the protracted character of Latin America's inequality, the macroeconomics of industrialization and the political economic nature of Latin American populism. Using reciprocal comparisons with the US, South East Asia, between LA countries, and across time the course will revisit the current interpretations of Latin American development in the long run and will frame the analysis of particular issues of policy-making of the present into the economic historical context.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work.

Human Health in History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eric Schneider SAR.5.18 and Prof Patrick

Wallis SAR.5.11

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course explores how human health has changed over time and tracks how the environment, society, public health infrastructure, medical practice and health systems have influenced health. The course begins with a survey of how health has changed from the Neolithic era onwards. Subsequent thematic sets of seminars study the following topics in more detail:

- Health in the pre-industrial world including discussion of the Black Death and American slavery
- The epidemiological and health transition with weekly topics on the germ theory of disease, medical innovations, sanitation and the developmental origins of health
- The development of health systems from the early modern period to the present
- Combating epidemic disease with particular reference to smallpox, plague and AIDS
- The influence of health on society and the economy including topics on health and economic growth, gender disparities in health and morbidity

One of the focuses of the course will be critical engagement with the sources and methods that historians have used to reconstruct health history. Students will also complete a 5,000 word research paper based on primary sources or data on a health history topic as part of the summative assessment.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce four essays or equivalent pieces of work. In MT this includes a group research project to prepare students for the individual research paper that forms part of the summative assessment.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (50%, 5000 words) in the LT.

The 5,000-word summative research project is an opportunity for students to conduct their own primary-source research into the history of health. Students can either use a primary source available as a dataset, or they can venture out to the archives to collect additional information as a basis for their project. The project must be historical (pre-1990) and cannot directly replicate studies in the literature using the same data. However, it can test another author's result using new sources or use the same sources to test a different question. The project can use quantitative or qualitative methods (or both) based on each student's preference.

Living Standards since the Industrial Revolution: The British Experience c.1750-2000

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ian Gazeley SAR 6.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines living standards from roughly the industrial revolution until the millenium through the prism of the British experience. The gradual move from subsistence agriculture to advanced industrial production was accompanied by a move towards urban living and radical demographic and social change, which transformed the lives of the population within a few generations. The population of Western economies experienced an exponential increase in average real incomes, which was driven by technical progress. This transformed the living standards of the majority of the population from bare subsistence to plenty, and was accompanied by a growing role for the state in providing for those excluded from the benefits of economic progress. Over the course of these three hundred years, the path of average incomes in Western countries also diverged from those in Asia, creating profound global imbalances in income and wealth.

The course is organised roughly chronologically, but within this, it concentrates on particular aspects of living standards that have proved most controversial within the existing literature; either because of an imperfect historical record, differences in method or approach, or sometimes because of ideological differences.

This course will explore topics relating to: the transformation of work; the progress of average incomes; the distribution of income and wealth; changes in food consumption and nutrition; the relationship between demographic change and living standards; the transformation of the role of the state and the reasons for divergence in living standards across time and place. It will also explore the reasons why historians disagree about these topics.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

2-hour weekly meeting, with a flexible combination of introductory lecture and seminar with student presentations and plenary discussion.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT.

Two essays of 2,500 words.

Assessment: The online assessment for this course will be a Take Home Exam administered via Moodle. A review session will take place in Week 1 of the ST in preparation for this assessment. Assessment questions will be administered via Moodle in Week 2 of the ST. Students will choose 2 of 8 questions. Answers to questions will be submitted in Week 5 of the ST.

EH463 Half UnitThe Long-Run Analysis of Firms and Industries

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gerben Bakker SAR 509

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course comparatively explores the history of strategies, business organisations and industries since the nineteenth century. Different approaches to analyse this evolution are discussed, as well as the history of thinking about management and organisational structure and how this affected history itself. Introductory lecture(s) set the scene, discuss key concepts and various economic approaches to analyse the evolution of organisations. Subsequently the course looks at the origins of legal forms of organisation - such as the corporation, the private limited liability company and the cooperative - at the development of organisational structures, at the history of thinking about them, and at evolution of industries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars/lectures in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: G. Boyce and S. Ville, The Development of Modern Business (2002); C. J. Schmitz, The growth of big business in the United States and Western Europe, 1850-1939 (1993); S. EH464 Half UnitThe Historical Context of Business

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Karolina Hutkova SAR 607

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course explores the evolution and variation of the conditions under which business has operated in different parts of the world. It concentrates on but is not exclusively concerned with the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It is not an "MBA" course, in that it does not look at the specific decisions of specific firms, but rather looks at the environments in which industries have operated in different periods and places in history.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures/seminars in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: Readings include, S Broadberry, Productivity Race; Y Cassis, Big business: European Perspective; J Kay, Foundations of Corporate Success; N Lamoreaux & D Raff (Eds), Co-ordination and Information; M G Blackford, The Rise of Modern Business in GB, US and Japan; R Reich The Work of Nations; O Williamson 'The Modern Corporation: Origins, evolution, attributes' Journal of Economic Literature 1981; Porter, M The Competitive Advantage of Nations, Harvard Business Review 1990, CK Harley 'Substitution for prerequisites: endogenous institutions and comparative economic history' in R Sylla and G Toniolo Patterns of European Industrialisation: the nineteenth century.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours).

EH472 Half UnitEssay in Quantitative Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The topic of the Essay is chosen by the students in close consultation with their supervisors. The purpose of the essay is to introduce students to the practice of historical research through the completion of a small, self-contained project that involves the use of quantitative methods in the analysis of historical change. It builds on competencies acquired in the core economic history and economics courses of the MSc. It must demonstrate the ability to formulate and motivate a research question, reflect adequate knowledge of the relevant literature in economic history and economics, make effective use of appropriate quantitative methods, and show critical capacity in the interpretation of the evidence and findings.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors.

There will be several taught sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme in addition to meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete a sequence of preparatory stages during the year. (1) The title must be approved by the student's supervisor; (2) an outline of the Essay must be submitted in Lent Term (3) a one-page project summary and an extended draft by the end of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words).

The essay should be no longer than 6,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length. The Essay counts for a half-unit in the four-unit MSc programme. The relevant marking criteria are set out in the Notes for Students.

EH473

Research Paper in Quantitative Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The Research Paper builds on the research training provided through the core courses of the MSc Quantitative Economic History and the MRes Quantitative Economic History, augmented by the optional economic history courses taken by students during the MRes. The topic of the Research Paper is chosen by the students in close consultation with their MRes supervisors who, normally, will be their prospective PhD supervisors. The Research Paper will present the results of an original enquiry into a clearly defined historical problem and use appropriate methods of quantitative analysis. It must demonstrate the ability to employ relevant concepts from economics and/or the wider social sciences effectively, an understanding of and critical engagement with the relevant economic history literature, an appreciation of the nature of historical explanation and analysis, and the ability to identify, collect and critically examine relevant quantitative information. Apart from it being an integral core component of the MRes programme, the Research Paper also serves as a first step towards the production of one of the three publishable papers envisaged for the students' prospective paper-based PhD thesis.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be several taught sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme in addition to meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students must submit a one page summary and a substantial draft for comment by the end of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Research project (100%).

The Research Paper should be no longer than 10,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length. The Research Paper counts for one full unit in the four-unit MRes programme. The relevant marking criteria are set out in the Notes for Students.

EH474

Research Prospectus

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The Research Prospectus is a detailed, c. 5,000 words long outline 'map' of the prospective PhD thesis. It serves to demonstrate the feasibility of the thesis and, in conjunction with the results achieved in the examinable components of the MRes programme (including the Research Paper), as an indicator of the student's readiness for further graduate work in economic history at PhD level. The Prospectus is non-examinable but subject to approval by a departmental board prior to progression into the PhD programme.

The Research Prospectus is expected (1) to set out the research questions and motivation of the three publishable papers students intend to produce in their prospective PhD thesis, (2) to demonstrate the thematic connections between the three papers, (3) to outline the conceptual/ theoretical frameworks and empirical approaches to be used, (4) to identify the main (data) sources to be exploited, and (5) to delineate the relevant historical and historiographical contexts of the thesis. Insights from the student's ongoing work on the Research Paper (EH473), as a first step towards the production of one of the three papers, are expected to inform the Research Prospectus.

Teaching: Students are expected to work on the Research Prospectus throughout the year and in close consultation with their supervisors who, normally, will be their prospective PhD supervisors.

Assessment: The Research Prospectus is not formally assessed. However, it needs to be approved by the departmental Prospectus Review Board prior to progression to the PhD programme. Submission to the departmental Prospectus Review Board on a date in Summer Term to be confirmed.

Dissertation in Global Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is compulsory for students at LSE for the first year of the MA Global Studies programme.

Course content: The subject of the dissertation should relate broadly to one of the global history taught courses taken by the student. It should be either a critical survey of a well-defined problem in the literature, or a small self-contained research project using primary evidence. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of appropriate literature in Global History and an ability to handle problems of evidence and explanation.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be several taught sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme in addition to meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete a sequence of preparatory stages during the year. (1) The title must be approved by the student's supervisor; (2) an outline of the Essay must be submitted in Lent Term (3) a one-page project summary and an extended draft by the end of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term. The dissertation should be no longer than 6,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length.

Research Dissertation in Global Economic History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is compulsory for students at LSE for the second year of the MA Global Studies programme.

Course content: The dissertation should be an empirical study using primary source material to write on a topic in global history. The topic should relate broadly to one of the global history courses taken by the student.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be several taught sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme in addition to meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete a sequence of preparatory stages during the year. Economic Change in Global History: Approaches and Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner SAR 507 and Dr Anne Ruderman SAR 506

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange and MBA Exchange. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides an overview of the central themes and key theoretical questions in economic history, and examines the ways in which economic historians collect, analyse and interpret evidence. The training is expected to inform dissertation work. The specific topics evolve to reflect recent research trends but an illustrative list includes: processes of economic development; culture and economic behaviour; the role of institutions, and; welfare outcomes. The course approaches these topics by considering problems of knowledge and explanation in economic history, and introduces quantitative and qualitative approaches to obtaining, analysing and interpreting evidence. Lectures pair conceptual and theoretical reviews with historical case studies illustrating applied research on these topics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Two-hour lecture (that is joint with EH401) and a weekly seminar in MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one essay or equivalent pieces of written work during the term.

Indicative reading: D. North, Institutions, Institutional Change and Economic Performance (1990); A. Greif, Institutions and the Path to the Modern Economy (2006); K. The Origins of the World Economy: Europe and Asia, 1000-1800

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course surveys long-term processes of growth and development in pre-modern Europe and the wider world. The course raises fundamental questions about the nature of pre-industrial societies and economies. First, it asks if stagnation and poverty were normal conditions in pre-industrial societies and growth an aberration. Were societies 'Malthusian', and what kind of growth and development did they experience? Second, it addresses debates over the timing and causes of Western economic growth and its connections with the region's expanding political and military power. Why British or European success from the 17th century the result of unique social, institutional, or cultural features? Was it the outcome of a centuries-long, cumulative process of change that relied as much on inputs from the rest of Europe and the wider world as much as specifically domestic features? Or was it the result of a 'fortunate conjuncture'? Third, it explores the range of alternative development paths within Europe and in other regions of the world, such as premodern China and India, considering both regions' internal economic dynamics and the impact of interactions with European powers as contact grew over the course of the early modern period. The approach throughout is thematic. Themes include: population, agriculture, technology, manufacturing, labour regimes, economic effects of legal, political, and constitutional structures; political economy; trade and market integration, money, finances and commercial institutions, and the causes and effects of the European expansion overseas.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of each term, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write three essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: E L Jones, Growth Recurring: economic change in world history (1988; 2nd ed., 2002); D North, Structure and Change in Economic History (1981); H Miskimin, The Economy of Early Renaissance Europe, 1300-1460 (1969); K G Persson, An Economic History of Europe: Knowledge, Institutions and Growth, 600 to the Present (2010); J De Vries, The Economy of Europe in an age of crisis, 1600-1750 (1976); K Pomeranz, The Great Divergence: China, Europe, and the making of the modern world economy (2000); A G Frank, ReORIENT: Global economy in the Asian age (1998); J E Inikori, Africans and the Industrial Revolution in England (2002); P. The Development and Integration of the World Economy in the 19th and 20th Centuries

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Natacha Postel-Vinay SAR 613 and Dr Karolina Hutkova SAR 615

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Economic History (Erasmus Mundus), MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to provide an overview of the development and integration of the world economy from 1800 to the present, giving an understanding of the origins of the challenges we face in the 21st century. The course raises fundamental questions about the sources of the unprecedented levels of economic growth in the last two centuries and the past and present challenges to economic development that have led to sharp divergences in income between countries and regions. The course explores the economic history at a global level, exploring developments in the western world as well as in Latin America, East and Southeast Asia, and Africa. Topics discussed will include fundamental transformations in economic experience, such as income and inequality, environmental change and the rise of population; sources of progress, such as technology, science, fiscal development; and explanations for divergent outcomes, for example human capital, economic policy, and management.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of each term, in line with departmental policy.

Research Dissertation A: Contextualisation, Theory and Research Design

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economic History (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is taken in combination with EH497.

Course content: The dissertation must draw upon the research training provided through the core courses for the MSc (Research) and the generic courses taken by the student, and present the results of an original enquiry into a carefully defined problem.

Students are expected to show an ability to draw on relevant social scientific concepts, an understanding of the advanced literature in one or more areas of economic history, and of the nature of historical explanation and analysis. Where appropriate, students are also expected to show the ability to use relevant quantitative techniques for data collection and analysis. The dissertation is intended as preparation for a research degree. Students expecting to continue on the MPhil/PhD programme within the Department may write their MSc dissertation on a different topic from that on which they plan to research at MPhil/PhD level.

Teaching: Co-taught with EH497.

Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be several taught sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme in addition to meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete a sequence of preparatory stages during the year. (1) The title must be approved by the student's supervisor; (2) an outline of the Essay must be submitted in Lent Term (3) a presentation at a dissertation workshop; (4) a one-page project summary and an extended draft by the end of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 15000 words) post-summer term.

The final dissertation, is equivalent to two full modules (EH496 and EH497), and will be awarded two separate percentage marks. The first of these marks (EH496) will be based on the formulation of the dissertation topic, its historical and historiographical context (including critical literature survey), its creativity and originality, and overall presentation. The second mark (EH497) will relate to the student's research design and discussion of methods, their collection and evaluation of primary and secondary sources, and the quality of analysis of evidence and interpretation. The dissertation should not exceed 15,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Presentation must be in accordance with appropriate academic conventions as laid down in the MSc Handbook. Work that fails to meet appropriate academic standards of presentation, including English language, will be subject to a maximum deduction of 15% from the first percentage mark. Marks will be deducted for late submission in accordance with the guidelines laid down in the MSc student handbook.

Research Dissertation B: Implementation, Analysis and Contribution

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economic History (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is taken in conjunction with EH496.

Course content: The dissertation must draw upon the research training provided through the core courses for the MSc (Research) and the generic courses taken by the student, and present the results of an original enquiry into a carefully defined problem.

Students are expected to show an ability to draw on relevant social scientific concepts, an understanding of the advanced literature in one or more areas of economic history, and of the nature of historical explanation and analysis. Where appropriate, students are also expected to show the ability to use relevant quantitative techniques for data collection and analysis. EH498 Half Unit Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is the default dissertation option for students following the MSc Economic History. Students wishing to write a full-unit (10,000 word) dissertation may, with the approval of their academic adviser, request to take EH499 and fewer optional courses.

Course content: The subject of the dissertation should relate broadly to one of the economic history taught courses taken by the student. It should be either a critical survey of a well-defined problem in the literature, or a small self-contained research project using primary evidence. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of appropriate literature in Economic History and an ability to handle problems of evidence and explanation.

Students on the MSc in Political Economy of Late Development are encouraged to consider topics that relate to themes in development, but are still required to develop a clear historical perspective within their analysis.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be several taught sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme in addition to meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete a sequence of preparatory stages during the year. (1) The title must be approved by the student's supervisor; (2) an outline of the Essay must be submitted in Lent Term (3) a one-page project summary and an extended draft by the end of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term. The dissertation should be no longer than 6,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length.

EH499 Research Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordan Claridge SAR 505

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students following MSc Economic History may, with the permission of their academic adviser, request to take this full-unit dissertation course in place of EH498. Requests must be received, and approved, by the Friday of Week 5 of Michaelmas Term.

Course content: The dissertation should be an empirical study using primary source material to write on a topic of economic history. The topic should relate broadly to one of the economic history courses taken.

Students on the MSc in Political Economy of Late Development are encouraged to consider topics that relate to themes in development, but are still required to develop a clear historical perspective within their analysis.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

The dissertation should not exceed 10,000 words, excluding tables, references, and bibliography. The title must be approved in advance by the student's supervisor. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length.

EU409 Basic Economic Concepts for European Political Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Pieter Tuytens CBG 7.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option. Students from other programmes within the European Institute can also follow the course. This course is for students with little economic background.

Course content: This is a Moodle-based course offering a series of reading material and study guides on some basic economics concepts and theory that are relevant to discussions concerning the political economy of Europe that students will come across in their other courses during their MSc degree. The course is not assessed and there is no formal instruction. Students are encouraged to work in teams and to develop discussions on Moodle- which will be partially moderated by the Course Convenor. The material is designed so as to be accessible to students with no previous knowledge of economics but students with some basic economics knowledge will also benefit from it. Example topics include: current account and budget deficits ("twin deficits"), inflation and unemployment ("Phillips Curve"), trade liberalisation and tariffs ("gains from trade"), competitiveness and unit labour costs ("internal devaluation"), and others.

Teaching: This is a Moodle-based course with no formal teaching. Students can arrange one-to-one sessions with the Course Convenor during Feedback Sessions/Office Hours. Depending on student demand, a limited number of 'EU409 Surgeries' can be arranged.

Indicative reading: J Stiglitz & J Driffill, Economics, Norton, 2000 (or later editions); P Krugman & M Obstfeld, International Economics, Addison Wesley, 2003.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course.

Interdisciplinary Research Methods and Design

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vassilis Monastiriotes CBG.5.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This series of workshops and lectures offers an introduction to research methods and design for all students taking masters degrees in the European Institute. Themes discussed include: methods in the social sciences and in the humanities; common problems of research design; advice on writing coursework essays and dissertations; advice on critical reading and interpretation of texts; the logic of comparative case-studies; comparative research and an introduction to quantitative methods and data sources. Each session will consist of short lecture elements followed by group work in which students with their different backgrounds help each other to solve specific problems of research design.

Teaching: 4 hours of lectures and 3 hours of workshops in the MT. 4 hours of lectures and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

A total of 4 hours of lectures in both MT and LT. Two 1.5 hour workshops in Reading week 6 of MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Bob Hancké, Intelligent Research Design: A guide for beginning researchers in the social sciences, Oxford UP 2009.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course.

EU421 Half Unit

Policy-Making in the European Union

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eiko Thielemann CBG 7.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A solid knowledge of the role and functions of EU institutions is required.

Course content: This course offers the theoretically informed study of the EU policy-making across a selection of key issue areas. The principal aim of the course is to provide a detailed knowledge of how national and EU institutions interact in European policy making. To achieve this, the course starts with a short summary of the actors and institutions governing the process of EU policy-making. The main part of the course analyses the evolving role of the EU and its policy-making dynamics in key policy areas such as the single market, regional policies, agricultural and environmental policies, immigration and asylum policies, economic and monetary Union and others.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit two formative essays.

Indicative reading: H Wallace, M Pollack, & A Young, Policy-Making in the European Union; S Hix & B. Hoyland, The Political System of the European Union; M Pollack, The Engines of Integration: Delegation, Agency and Agenda Setting in the European Union; J J Richardson & S Mazey, European Union: Power and Policy-making.

Interest Representation and Economic Policy-Making in Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Hancke CBG 6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The focus of this course is on the representation of interests in Europe, and their role in Economic policy-making. Students will analyse the main theoretical issues and selected empirical questions on how interests are differently organised across countries and at the EU level, on the interplay between interest representation and electoral politics, and on the policy outcome after interest intermediation. The objective is to understand the dynamics of economic policy-making in comparative perspective, with an emphasis on the globalisation period.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

EU430 Half Unit

Europeanization: The Comparative Politics of Domestic Change

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Miriam Sorace CBG 6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the effect of European Union membership on member states' policies, institutions and societies. The consequences of EU membership, as well as how and why we experience membership differently across our national political systems are increasingly important elements of the debate about the future of Europe. Crises of legitimacy, capability, and impact have been identified. Following this lead, this course evaluates the influence of European integration on member states, highlighting differences between policy mechanisms and sectors; institutional capacities and settings; and political (party and electoral) behaviour. The discussion and analysis is framed by the notion of 'Europeanization', to consider the linkages between the European and national levels.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Within these sessions the format will vary between lectures, seminar discussion and student presentations/projects. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework:

- One class presentation
- One 1000 word research design essay

EU432 Half Unit

The Philosophy of Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Glendinning CBG 7.01

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: In this course we will read and discuss texts that draw the history of Europe into relation with philosophy. In its most classical form the assertion of this relation belongs to an understanding of Europe's history as inseparable from the project of a life predicated on reason. Europe, insofar as its cultural identity is caught up with the Greek ideal of scientific rationality, is not simply the place where philosophy was first elaborated and developed. On the contrary, Europe first arises as a place only in and through the elaboration and development of philosophy. Of course, philosophy is, historically speaking, a European phenomenon - although one which concerns above all the question, in principle open to anyone, of what it is to be a human being as such. Equally, however, Europe is itself a philosophical phenomenon - its identity inseparable from the idea of a project that concerns rational animality as such, and hence humanity as a whole.

The idea that Europe has a world-wide significance in virtue of its relation to philosophical thought is strikingly expressed in Kant's prediction of "a great political body of the future" emerging in Europe, a kind of league of nations, that will probably "legislate" - that is, at least serve as a guiding example - for all humanity. Indeed, the global "cosmopolitan existence" posited by Kant as the final end of world history is not just a philosopher's idea of humanity's collective political destiny: the very idea of a global human community is essentially philosophical. On this view, the (particular) history of the peoples of "our continent" has a relation to the (universal) destiny - the liberation or emancipation - of humanity world-wide. This is not simply because of the hegemonic political and economic ambitions of imperialist Europeans, but the world-wide movement of a cosmopolitan and humanist culture. Starting with Kant's classic essay on "Idea for a Universal History with a Cosmopolitan Purpose" we will turn to the way in which Europe is understood and elaborated within the post-Kantian tradition: in Hegel, Marx, Husserl, Valéry, Berlin, Fukuyama, and Derrida.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the

MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

- Each seminar will be based around the discussion of a short essay or text which everyone in the class will be expected to have read. The texts will typically be available either online or as a photocopy.
- Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Two essays of 2,000 words each

Indicative reading: Immanuel Kant 'Idea of Universal History with a Cosmopolitan Purpose', in Political Writings; Edmund Husserl 'The Vienna Lecture', in The Crisis of European Sciences and Transcendental Phenomenology; Paul Valéry, in History and Politics; Jacques Derrida, 'Of the Humanities and the Philosophical Discipline. The right to philosophy from the cosmopolitical point of view (the example of an international institution)' (online).

Assessment: Online assessment (100%) in the ST.

The online assessment for this course will be administered via Moodle. Questions will be made available at a set date/time and students will be given a set period in the ST to complete the answers to questions and upload their responses back into Moodle.

EU439 Half Unit

Political and Fiscal Integration and Disintegration in EU Member States

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joan Costa-Font

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: With the expansion of processes of economic integration and disintegration in the European Union the traditional economic role of the state requires redefinition. Monolithic states progressively become more flexible structures to respond to constituents demands. This is especially the case of those policy areas that are highly relevant for European citizens such as language, culture and welfare. This course draws upon new political economy and social economics theories to study the design of formal and informal institutions in European Union member states and the European Union as a whole. Given that the European Union is progressively evolving towards some unique form of federalism, the course discusses how theories of political and fiscal federalism, constitutional political economy as well as new social economics can help to understand and inform the process. The course covers the design of both fiscal and political decentralisation process with a European perspective, and particularly it examines inter-jurisdictional competition between different levels of government and its role in giving rise to 'institutional convergence' with European Union member states. It covers the constitutional design of the European Union and the effects of European integration on the design of the welfare state. Finally, it examines the economics design of informal institutions including the economics of 'language', 'culture', 'ideas', and finally 'identity', to study the presence of 'cultural' convergence in the European Union.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Two essays of up to 1,500 words each

European Models of Capitalism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Hancke CBG.6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on the MSc in Global Politics who wish to take this course must seek approval from the teachers responsible. Students are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course.

Course content: The course consists of three parts. In the first part we will discuss the basic arguments and methodological considerations of the Varieties of Capitalism literature and conduct a comparative analysis of the core issue areas in the political economy of contemporary capitalism: how capital, labour and product markets are structured. The second part will build on these thematic treatments to discuss the structure of and dynamics of the main Western, Southern and Central European models of capitalism. In the final part of the course, we will examine policy areas from a comparative capitalism perspective.

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will write a weekly group essay, prepare a presentation or poster in group on a topic of their choice and will develop their summative essay plan with the teacher late in Michaelmas Term and early in Lent Term.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul De Grauwe CBG 6.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A basic understanding of economic concepts is essential, which is why the auditing of the EU409 Moodle course is highly recommended.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to analyse the process of European monetary integration and its implications for the institutions of economic governance in the EU. There will be a strong emphasis on using the experience of the financial and economic crises since 2008 as a source of evidence to assess both the performance of EMU and the theories about monetary integration. We consider the political and economic rationale for the establishment of EMU. We study the theory of optimal currency areas and its relevance today. Indicative questions addressed in this course include: how and why did the EU develop the EMU project?; did economic theories prepare us for the Euro area crisis of 2010-12?; what are the challenges for member states in adjusting to the discipline of the 'Euro-zone'?; how does the Euro affect the ability of member states to adjust to periods of crisis and to external shocks?; is the sovereign debt crisis of 2010 indicative of imbalances within the EU and basic flaws in its institutional design? What are the collective action problems that explain the incompleteness of the monetary union? What is the role of the ECB in this process? Is a fiscal union necessary to make a monetary union sustainable in the long run?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay and one group essay of up to 3,000 words.

Indicative reading: Paul De Grauwe (2018) The Economics of Monetary Union (Oxford University Press, 12th ed.); Kenneth Dyson and Kevin Featherstone (1999) The Road to Maastricht, OUP; Waltraud Schelkle (2017) The Political Economy of Monetary Solidarity, Understanding the Euro Experiment, Oxford University Press; Special issue (2006): 'Economic Governance in EMU Revisited', Journal of Common Market Studies vol.44, No.4 (November); Jean Pisani-Ferry (2014) The Euro Crisis and Its Aftermath, Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Online assessment (100%) in the ST.

The online assessment for this course will be administered via Moodle. Questions will be made available at a set date/time and students will be given a set period in the ST to complete the answers to questions and upload their responses back into Moodle.

EU447 Half Unit

Democracy, Ideology and the European State

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan White CBG 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course investigates various ways in which the State's authority to act has been underpinned in Europe, both ideologically and institutionally, in the modern period. It looks at how the State has been used to give expression to the democratic principle, and the ways this has been undermined or rejected. The module aims to provide students with a deep analytical understanding of the changing role of the State in European society. There will be three parts: A) Theorising the political (including sessions on: the State; collective self-rule and the liberal-democratic compromise; ideology, public opinion and the idea of democracy), B) Democracy in post-War Europe (parties and the structuring of political conflict; the emergence and crisis of the Welfare State; 1968, 1989 and the rediscovery of 'civil society'), and C) Contemporary European trends (ideological convergence and the politics of risk and security; political participation and populism; the challenge of transnational integration: 'governance', 'output legitimacy' and the diffusion of State power). The course will conclude with an overview on possible trajectories to come, under the heading 'post-ideological, post-democratic and post-statal? - Europe today and beyond'.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word unassessed essay

Indicative reading: Quentin Skinner (1989) 'The State', in Ball and Hanson (eds.) Political Innovation and Conceptual Change; Peter Wagner (2008) Modernity as Experience and Interpretation; James Tully (2002) 'The Unfreedom of the Moderns', Modern Law Review 63; Margaret Canovan (2005) The People; Michael Freeden (1996) Ideologies and Political Theory; Claus Offe (1996) Modernity and the State: East and West; Chantal Mouffe (2005) On the Political; Frank Furedi (2005) Politics of Fear: Beyond Left and Right; Nina Eliasoph (1998) Avoiding Politics; Peter Mair (2006), 'Ruling the Void? Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

EU449 Half Unit

Emerging Markets, Political Transition and Economic Development in Central and Eastern Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Abigail Innes CBG 6.03

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: EU409 Basic Economic Concepts for European Political Economy or equivalent.

Course content: This course applies concepts of political economy, economics and political science to its investigation of Central and Eastern Europe's development from post-communist transition, through EU accession to their condition as highly open, FDI-dependent markets within the European Single Market. Placing the region in the comparative context of both the EU15 and comparable emerging markets, the course investigates the ongoing challenges of political and institutional consolidation and the developmental consequences of the liberalization and the consumption and FDI-led growth model of the 1990s/2000s. The course examines the emerging strengths and persistent weaknesses of these political economies and considers their implications for the region's emerging varieties of capitalism, relative international competitiveness and political stability. It also considers the comparative political economy of the 'middle income trap', corruption and nationalist populism. The lectures aim to provide analytical frameworks and an overview of the major research findings and debates about systemic transformation, the influence of EU accession and the difficulties of consolidating democratic capitalism in open emerging markets in a globalised world. The seminars link key concepts with the empirical evidence arising from comparable cases.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 1500 word essay

Indicative reading:

The reading list above is intended to encourage students to explore a few texts that they feel will inspire them, rather than to feel obliged to somehow complete all of them before arrival (too much!). These are relevant texts for the whole course and we will visit individual chapters in many of them as the course proceeds. The most useful background/preparatory reading that interested students can undertake for this course is to familiarise yourselves with the diverse historical political and economic developments of individual countries in the region from the communist era to the present day. This preparation will deepen the empirical knowledge you can deploy to critically judge the comparative theory with which the course then engages. In this respect Tony Judt's 'Postwar' is a particularly engaging text and Judt was unusual for writing with a deep knowledge of both Western and Central Europe alike.

Assessment: Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Online assessment (75%) in the ST.

The online assessment for this course will be administered via Moodle. Questions will be made available at a set date/time and students will be given a set period in the ST to complete the answers to questions and upload their responses back into Moodle.

Engaging with Europe: Professional Skills

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julian Hoerner CBG 6.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This innovative programme introduces European Institute students to professional skills for a successful career that engages with Europe. The course consists of a number of workshops, seminar series and interactive simulations from which students can choose. The aim of the course is that European Institute students leave LSE with a competitive CV and connections with alumni and professionals.

Teaching: The teaching format varies across the different workshops and seminars.

Students are not required to attend all workshops and seminars throughout the year, but only those for which they signed up.

Workshop timetables will vary over both terms.

Formative coursework: Formative work will vary based on the workshops attended.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Students may qualify for a certificate of participation for some workshops upon completion of formative work.

EU453 Half Unit

The Political Economy of European Welfare States

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Waltraud Schelkle CBG 6.01

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The aim of the course is to apply concepts of economics and political economy to social policies in European welfare states. The lectures establish the theoretical context, summarise the findings of quantitative case studies and discuss European experience in the context of broader international experience. The seminars will further develop political-economic concepts, such as market and government failure, and apply them to qualitative case studies of welfare state arrangements in member states, considering in particular the role of social policy legislation and coordination at the EU level. The course will provide students with the conceptual and empirical background to enable them to answer questions such as: What does economic theory and political economy tell us about the design of welfare states? How do social policies in European welfare states reconcile equity and efficiency? What drives or stalls reform dynamics in member states? Is the EU gradually developing into a social union, through international mobility and the portability of social entitlements?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One individual formative essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading:

• Barr, N. (2012) The Economics of the Welfare State, 5th ed., Oxford: Oxford UP;

• Pierson P(ed) (2001) The New Politics of the welfare state, Oxford: Oxford University Press

Assessment: Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the MT.

Online assessment (75%) in the ST.

EU455 Half Unit

Concepts in Political Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Waltraud Schelkle CBG 6.01

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in European Studies, MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of the course is to engage students with relevant concepts in political economy and their main applications in European studies. The course will anchor the degree in historical and current debates about the nature of political economy, the role of institutions and the pros and cons of different methodological approaches taken by political economists. The aim of the lectures is to outline key political economy concepts and their theoretical background while the seminars explore the uses and limits of the respective concepts through the systematic analysis of relevant research papers.

This course is particularly recommended for students who wish to pursue a research path in political economy, but also for those who have no background in political science and therefore not familiar with conceptual debate.

Among the topics covered are: concepts and theories in political economy; the role of ideas, interests and institutions; the tension between democracy and capitalism; rational choice versus behavioural political economy; two-level games; delegation to independent agents; accountability and legitimacy in policy-making; veto players and joint-decision traps; representation and partisanship.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One presentation per student. One formative essay in week 4 of 1,000 words on any seminar question (typically on the one that will be presented and can be rewritten after the presentation). Another essay of 1,500 words will consist of the analysis of a research paper.

Indicative reading: Caporaso, J and Levine, D (1992) Theories of Political Economy, Cambridge; Weingast, B.R. and Wittman, D.A (eds) (2006) The Oxford Handbook of Political Economy, Oxford University Press; Olson, M (2000) The Rise and Decline of Nations, London: Yale University Press.

Assessment: Online assessment (100%) in the ST.

The online assessment for this course will be administered via Moodle. Questions will be made available at a set date/time and students will be given a set period in the ST to complete the answers to questions and upload their responses back into Moodle.

EU457 Half UnitCulture and Security in Global Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joseph Downing CBG.7.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This is a capped course. Students are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course

Course content: This course will consider problems and practices of ethnic diversity in a world of nation-states including the rights of minorities and migrants, self-determination, ethnic cleansing and genocide, humanitarian intervention, and the role of the media in (de)constructing narratives of difference. In analysing these issues, particular attention will be paid to processes of securitization, desecuritization and security management.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars and 15 hours of workshops in the MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Mock policy paper (2000 words) due in MT

Indicative reading:

EU458 Half UnitPublic Policy and Cultural Narratives in a Global Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joseph Downing CBG 7.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. Students are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course.

Course content: This course is concerned with cultural politics in contemporary states. In Europe today there is a growing rejection of multiculturalism and a reaffirmation of cultural cohesion and shared identity. Taking a narrative approach, this course will examine competing policy responses towards minorities and migrants. Europe will be a major focus. Nevertheless, students with interests and expertise outside of Europe should feel free to include this wider perspective in their seminar discussions and assignments.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit one policy review and one video proposal.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2500 words) and video (50%) in the LT. Students will produce a short video and submit all required consent forms in the LT.

EU464 Half UnitInternational Migration: EU Policies and Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eiko Thielemann CBG 7.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. Students are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course.

Pre-requisites: A good knowledge of EU institutions and EU policy-making is required.

Course content: This course examines the management of 'unwanted migration' to Europe. In particular, it deals with the European Union's governance of migratory flows of migrants such as asylum seekers and irregular migrants whose immigration states often seek to prevent or discourage. As the willingness of sovereign states to advance global governance in this area remains very low and unilateral national policy-responses are increasingly seen as limited in their effectiveness, interest in regional governance has grown. The European Union is without any doubt the front-runner in developing such regional initiatives. The course provides an in-depth treatment of the origins, evolution and major policy issues within this policy field which has been the fastest growing EU policy area since the 1990s. The course will normally focus on the following three policy areas: (1) the emerging EU asylum and refugee determination system; (2) border management, detention and deportation; and (3) responsibility allocation (the 'Dublin system'), burden-sharing and solidarity. Those taking the course will learn how to systematically examine the origins and impact of EU policy instruments and judgments by the European Courts. After completion, students will be able to answer questions such as: Why have Member States intensified cooperating on asylum and immigration issues? What is the relationship between international human rights law and EU law? Given the influence of the EU's supranational institutions, do the Member States still effectively control policies on asylum and immigration? Has EU policy-making will lead to a convergence of "lowest common denominator" policies?

For their assessment, students will have the opportunity to conduct a case-study analysis, allowing them to apply the analytical skills developed in this course by analysing a specific EU policy of their choice.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: A prospectus for the assessed research project (policy case study).

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST. The Project takes the form of a research project (policy case study).

EU467 Half Unit

The Political Economy of the Neoliberal State

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Abigail Innes CBG 6.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers a political economic account of the neoliberal state. It offers critical analysis of the supply-side revolution of the last forty years – the tendency towards the strong marketization of the state – that has characterised not just strongly neoliberal advanced capitalist economies such as the UK but also, increasingly, those such as Sweden we traditionally think of as social democratic. The course begins by looking at how 'the state' is currently understood (and indeed, somewhat neglected) in comparative political economy in theory. The course then establishes the historical and analytical context in which orthodoxy around the 'optimal' role of the state in the political economy shifted: thus we look at the turn from the mixed market and Weberian states of the post-war era through to rise of neoliberalism.

Moving to the intellectual foundations of the supply-side revolution we explore the roots of reform in deductive 'public choice theory'. From a normative political theory point of view these arguments have strongly utopian qualities and to investigate these we examine the idea of the state in neoclassical economics and specifically, in the public choice analyses of state failure, and the idealised economic constitution. Given the highly utopian qualities of these arguments we then compare these operating assumptions and goals with those of Marxism Leninism: the other closed system ontology of the economy in twentieth century political economic thought. Marxism Leninism is a body of theory shares remarkable intellectual affinities with neoliberalism, from the dependence on hyper-rationality in the model for human motivation to the idealisation of a post-state utopia; from the assumptions of a blueprint that is good for all time and places to the asserted 'automaticity' of the political economy in the post-revolutionary world. In demonstrating the common teleology of revolutionary completion and an idealised constitution the reforms of the last forty years are placed in comparative intellectual context.

The second half of the course is constituted by a theoretical and practical evaluation of supply-side reforms. This evaluates the logic of reform in the state's main functions in the political economy: welfare, regulation and the management of future public risk. The course offers a consistent methodology for this analysis: it contrasts the 'first best world' economics of the supply-side agenda with the 'second-best world' economic theory that comes from critical neoclassical economics and the more holistic rational choice institutionalism of political economy, but also from the critical political economy of Soviet Communism. One of the historical ironies of the supply-side revolution is that it not only shares conceptual and ideological affinities with Marxism Leninism but in practical terms it also replicates a remarkable number of the pathologies of the Soviet planning system, from the central planning of private enterprises (via public sector outsourcing) to the dependence on quantification, metrics, target-setting and performance measurement and a rejection of relational, pluralist, tacit-knowledge based systems of government and organisation. The course closes by considering the political-system consequences of state transformation and indeed, policy and state failure.

The findings of the course hold clear implications for emerging markets and less developed economies, where these reforms are also increasingly on the agenda, and where they pose particular risks.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The 90 minute ST seminar will be a revision session.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students write a short (1500 word) formative essay during the term, submitted within two weeks of their class presentation, and this is purely to enable the student to receive feedback on their understanding of the subject matter but also on their essay writing technique more generally. This means that students receive due preparatory help for the later summative work, which is also essay based.

EU469 Half Unit

The Political Economy of Finance in Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Waltraud Schelkle CBG 6.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A basic understanding of economics and economic terms is highly recommended. Students who never had any teaching in economics should consult the online course EU409 and talk to the course convener.

Course content: In the first half, the course gives students insights into the post-war evolution of finance, its regulation and its relationship to the other sectors of the economy. The historical evolution, continuities and innovations, will be explored in a comparative perspective. In the second half, we take up topical debates in the political economy of finance literature. Two questions run through the course: first, how does the US experience differ from or resonate with discernible trends in European countries and the experience of European integration? And how do non-financial actors (governments, transnational firms, middle-class households) support the rise of finance even though the risks involved are not well understood and hard to manage? The course would deepen students' understanding of the core courses in the Political Economy of Europe by making them aware of the role that finance played in different phases of post-war history and in European integration.

Course outline:

1. The rise of finance and its elusive power
2. From financial repression to financial liberalisation and financialisation
3. State-bank ties
4. Finance-firm relationships
5. The household finance-welfare state nexus
6. Reading week
7. Public finances
8. Financial welfare
9. Macroeconomic stabilisation
10. Internationally coordinated regulation of financial markets
11. The politics of dominant finance

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

We plan to do a simulation of G-20 negotiations on financial regulation in week 10, which has been successfully tried and tested before with MPA students. Using the report of the G20 Eminent Persons Group report on Global Financial Governance – Making the Global Financial Systems Work for All – the simulation will see students working in teams to represent the interests of particular nations and international organisations involved in global financial governance.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students must write up a report of a workshop of their choice or help organise it. We will have 2 such workshops with invited speakers.

Religious Diversity and Conflict in Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Esra Ozyurek Baer CBG 7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Europe: Culture and Conflict (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Europe has never been homogenous, but it is increasingly more so heterogenous religiously, ethnically, and culturally since the World War II. This course embraces an anthropological approach that focuses on experiences of diversity in West European countries, such as the UK, Germany, France where there are large populations of immigrants, and in East European countries, such as Bulgaria and Bosnia, where there are diverse indigenous populations. We will especially focus on how the lives of ethnic, religious, and culturally diverse groups are heavily shaped by questions fundamental to European politics such as secularism and nationalism. During the course, students will do an interview with a minority member and write a paper that analyses the interview in relation to one or more topics covered in class, and prepare a final essay on one of the topics covered in class.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Weekly response papers to readings. One 15 minute presentation during the term - possibly with another student.

500 word summary of the interview assignment

500 word summary of the final essay

The project is an interview project which includes a 2000 word report, plus a 1500 word transcript of an interview.

EU476 Half Unit Turkey and Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Esra Ozyurek Baer CBG 7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: Turkey-Europe relations have been identified variously as laden with numerous conflicts including those over democracy, citizens' rights and identity, as requiring strategic if not necessarily amicable cooperation, and as bound by geography and/or history. This course aims to critically revisit such identifications in light of a nuanced appraisal of the ways in which Turkey and Europe have, throughout modern history, been conceived through and against each other as not only mutually distinct but also readily identifiable and explicable geopolitical entities. Based on an in-depth and critical engagement with weekly readings, the course explores questions around civilisation and civilianisation, democracy and democratisation, citizenship and citizens' rights, secularism and secularity, nation and nationalism, identity and belonging, and Occidentalism and Orientalism. Following an introduction to the course and its key themes, weekly topics proceed chronologically through successive periods in Turkey's history of capitalist modernity: early capitalist modernisation (1839-1908), transformation into nation-state (1908-46), transition into multi-party system (1946-59), Cold War (1959-80), neo-liberalisation (1980-93), post-Cold War (1993-2002), "EUropeanisation" (2002-10), and "De-EUropeanisation" (2010-18). This periodisation therefore observes certain milestones in Turkey-Europe relations, such as Turkey's application for association with the European Economic Community (EEC) in 1959 and the start of customs union negotiations between Turkey and the European Union (EU) in 1993. Students are required to come to class having read the weekly texts and prepared to discuss them at length. Alongside writing a final essay based on individual research, they will make one 15-minute oral presentation the final week of term, working from the texts read and the discussions had in class to offer nuanced insight into a current affair bearing upon Turkey-Europe relations.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework:

- Slides and draft notes for 15-minute presentation in MT
- Abstract and outline for essay (no longer than 500 words) in MT

Indicative reading: In addition to weekly readings, the following Turkey-related sources are likely to enhance the benefits derived from the course: Eric Jan Zürcher's Turkey: A Modern History (2004), Esra Özyürek's Nostalgia for the Modern (2006), Cihan Tugal's Passive Revolution (2009), Jenny White's Muslim Nationalism and the New Turks (2012), Yael Navaro-Yashin's Faces of the State: Secularism and Public Life in Turkey (2002), Amy Mills' Streets of Memory: Landscape, Tolerance, and National Identity in Istanbul (2010), and Ruth Mandel's Cosmopolitan Anxieties: Turkish Challenges to Citizenship and Belonging in Contemporary Germany (2008). Labour Markets and the Political Economy of Employment in Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vassiliis Monastiriotis CBG 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A solid background in economics and knowledge of some basic calculus is required. Attendance of EU409 'Basic Economic Concepts for Political Economy' is highly recommended irrespective of background.

Course content: The course offers an analytical treatment of key labour market issues, from unemployment and wage determination to skill formation and labour market regulation, within the context of processes of integration and governance in Europe. To do so, it combines a Labour Economics perspective on imperfect labour markets with a Political Economy perspective on EU institutions and policies. In the lectures, we address analytically policy-making questions on topics such as minimum wages, unions and collective bargaining, unemployment benefits, employment protection legislation, regulation of working hours, migration, and others. These topics are then linked in the seminars to the European policy-making context, and the challenges that this raises for labour market regulation and performance at the national and European levels. Examples of this include: EMU, optimum currency area theory, wage flexibility and internal devaluation; structural unemployment, labour market reforms, the European Employment Strategy and flexicurity; skills shortages, activation policies, European education policy and labour mobility; and others.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The course will have 10 1-hour lectures and 1.5-hour seminars in weeks 1-5 and 7-11. In week 6 students will make poster presentations on a preliminary draft of their group essay.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 6 problem sets and 2 other pieces of coursework in the LT and 1 presentation in the Week 6.

Formative assessment comprises a weekly set of problem sets / exercises; brief oral presentations on pre-allocated readings in the seminars; a poster presentation on a group project during the week-6 workshop; and submission of a draft / extended outline of the group project (following the poster presentation).

EU478 Half Unit

The Culture of European Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Glendinning CBG.7.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World) and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Over the last three hundred years European societies have undergone a fundamental changeover from a traditional form, with a largely self-sufficient agrarian economy, into a modern, industrial and technological form based on international trade and tele-communication. This revolution developed in the seventeenth century first and only in Europe, but today, through processes of globalization that are, in some parts of the world, inseparable from colonialism, it has spread worldwide and increasingly dominates the entire planet. This course explores one of the basic dimensions of this unprecedented globalization: the culture of European politics.

We are used to speaking about globalization as a political-economic phenomenon, but its European origin makes it also an unavoidably cultural one. Europe's predominant cultural form – its double form, both Christian and secular – is not a neutral set-up, and other world cultures can find themselves alienated from and in revolt against everything that belongs to what might be called the Christianizing of the world, whether the forces in play are colonial, commercial, or ideological. International migrations and projects of European integration sharpen these concerns and add new ones. This is the background to our study of the culture of European politics, its history and heritage from ancient European empires, to the European Union and beyond.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: 2 essays of 2000 words

Indicative reading:

Europe in World Trade

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johann Basedow CBG 6.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: As globalisation progresses, foreign economic and trade policy acquire ever greater importance for our societies and economies. The purpose of the class is to provide students with a theoretical toolkit and empirical knowledge to analyse the global economy and international trade regime from a European perspective. The course introduces students to theories of international political economy to better understand the workings of EU foreign economic and trade policy-making. It furthermore familiarises students with the role of the EU in the World Trade Organisation, the proliferation of bilateral trade agreements, global value chains, standard-setting and rule-making on world markets, investment protection through Investor-to-State Dispute Settlement (ISDS) and alike. It dwells on the implications of the rise of new economic powers such as China, India or Brazil for EU foreign economic policy and the international trade regime.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 essay in the LT.

European Policy-Making and International Cooperation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julian Hoerner CBG 6.06, Dr Spyridon Economides CBG 5.03 and Prof Waltraud Schelkle CBG 6.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi) and MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available on the MSc in European Studies (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to governance in Europe at the national and European Union levels. Students learn about the integration and disintegration dynamics in a historical and global context; about who sets the agenda in the EU; how laws are made and how implementation and compliance is enforced. This will be applied a range of areas in EU policy-making. The course runs for the duration of Michaelmas and Lent Term and is organised in four thematic teaching blocks.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one presentation and two essays – one in the MT and one in LT. Seminar teachers will provide detailed feedback and discuss the progress with students.

Europe's Role in Global Migration Governance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Natascha Zaun CBG 6.08

Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an overview of Europe's role in global migration governance. The course will address different aspects in this regard, including the externalisation of EU and European Member States' migration policies, bilateral and multilateral agreements with third countries, cross-references between regional bodies of integration as well as regional/international courts and Europe's cooperation with international organisations such as the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). Students will be equipped with a variety of theories to analytically assess these areas of European activity, including theoretical frameworks such as venue-shopping, diffusion and securitisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students will receive written and oral feedback on their formative essays shortly after their submission so they can improve their writing and argumentative skills throughout the course and apply the feedback they have received for the first essay already to the second one. In addition, students will get immediate feedback on media presentations and classroom debates.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework consists in regular (i.e. weekly) participation in the Moodle debate and the submission of one mock exam (answering two out of eight questions) in the MT.

EU485 Half Unit

Post-Conflict Justice and Reconciliation in Europe and Beyond

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Denisa Kostovicova CBG 7.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The pursuit of justice in the aftermath of mass atrocity and gross human rights violations has become a norm in a globalised post-Cold War world. It rests on the premise that states and societies ought to engage with the difficult past in order to transition from conflict to peace. Provisions including redress for human rights violations have now become the staple of peace-agreements, whether through retributive instruments such as war crimes trials or restorative instruments such as truth commissions and reparations. However, scholars and practitioners have simultaneously been confronted with the limitations of transitional justice. Instead of promoting peace and reconciliation, it has often had the opposite impact: it has further divided ethnic communities, distorted the truth about suffering, and traumatised rather than dignified the victims. With a focus on Europe's contribution to global transitional justice norm and policy, this course examines how the pursuit of post-conflict justice is theorised and tackles the puzzle of its unintended effects on peace-building in post-conflict societies.

The course starts out by introducing transitional justice as a field study and practice, with a focus on the nature of contemporary violence to contextualise human rights violations for which justice is sought. The first part of the course relates the emergence of a global norm of transitional justice to the lessons from Europe's history: the Nuremberg Trials, Germany's coming to terms with the Holocaust, and Franco-German reconciliation. The second part is a comparative assessment of three key mechanisms of transitional justice: international trials, truth and reconciliation commissions, and lustration, with empirical examples from Europe and beyond. The third part addresses transitional justice as public policy with a focus on the European Union. In conclusion, the course addresses the question how we know and study the effects of transitional justice, and reflects critically on theorising, methods and data in transitional justice research.

The course engages with multi-disciplinary literature and approaches to transitional justice which have defined the emergence of this new field of study. The course provides a critical evaluation of theories of transitional justice and draws implications for policy making.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

The course will provide additional activities in a form of a film evening and debate, or an organised visit to a relevant cultural event in London, such as exhibition or a play. These activities will be directly linked to the theme(s) covered in the course, and will serve to reinforce learning objectives by creating an opportunity for students to engage with core issues through alternative approaches.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise, 1 presentation and 1 essay in the MT.

EU486 Half Unit

Imaging Violence, Imagining Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Esra Ozyurek Baer CBG 7.11 and Dr Eray Cayli CBG 7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe and MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course concerns the ways in which European artists have represented violence and catastrophe throughout the history of modernity, which is understood here to stretch between the Enlightenment and the present. It explores how these representations have shaped imaginations of Europe as the global mediator of conflict and have informed conceptualizations of violence and culture through each other. The course proceeds chronologically through periods of modern history, beginning with the High Enlightenment (mid-18th century) and culminating in the present, while also adopting a thematic focus in approaching each period. As well as familiarising students with the ways in which violence and catastrophe have been aestheticized, the course attends to the ethical and political issues involved in this aestheticization. It does so through the study of particular cases pertaining to each theme and/or historical period being explored. These cases may come from painting, photography, film, performance, architecture, design and food, and which may involve as and when relevant and logistically possible, visits to related London sites such as museums and galleries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: The formative component of this course comprises slides and outline (prepared individually) in the case of presentations, and a research question and long abstract in the case of essays. Students are required to come to class having read the weekly texts and be prepared to discuss them at length.

The presentation will be 20 minutes including a 5-min Q&A session in the final week of LT (presentations might have to be in pairs or groups of three depending on class size).

EU490 Half Unit

Evidence and Analysis in Policy-Making

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julian Hoerner CBG 6.06 and Dr Miriam Sorace CBG 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi) and MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to provide students with methodological knowledge and practical skills to analyse and evaluate policies and interventions by International Organisations, the European Union or national governments. Students become familiar with a number of research methods which allow them to critically appraise policy interventions from the decision-making to the implementation stage as well as with the practical skills to present their findings professionally and effectively. The course starts by familiarising students with the principles of research methods and causal inference. It then covers applied policy analysis, taking a mixed-method approach and drawing on qualitative, quantitative and experimental approaches and discussing practical aspect of policy analysis such as interviewing and the ethics of stakeholder involvement. For the final project, students work in groups on the assessment of a real-world policy intervention from the international, European or national level in areas such as international trade, migration, cohesion policy or social policy. In preparation of the final research project, students prepare a presentation on their methods and design on which they receive feedback from teaching staff.

Teaching: 16 hours of seminars and 6 hours of workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Presentation of the proposed research project in MT.

Political Economy in Theory and History

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johann Basedow CBG 6.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available on the MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course tries to assess how the relation between state and economy in both Western Europe and Central and Eastern Europe has evolved over the post-war period and how historical political-economic development and theories of the political economy have interacted throughout that period. The course examines the key question of how capitalism and democracy were reconciled in different European socio-economic models and what role European integration played in their evolution.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

EU495

Policy Incubator

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Miriam Sorace CBG 6.07 and Prof Christopher Anderson CBG 6.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European and International Public Policy and MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Engaging with Europe: Professional Skills (EU450) and Evidence and Analysis in Policy-Making (EU490).

The Policy Incubator is a group project available to students on the MSc European and International Public Policy who wish to research a current policy issue instead of submitting a dissertation.

Course content: Student will work on an applied group research project related to a public policy problem in lieu of a dissertation. This policy problem can be situated at the international, European or national level. Thematically, it can be related to a range of policy fields such as international trade, social policy, environmental policy, or justice and home affairs and migration. The workshops will cover the various stages of the policy cycle in detail as well as theories of policy-making. Students will have regular group meetings with their supervisors. At the end of Lent Term, there will also be an opportunity to present an outline of the project to peers and academic staff. While working on the Policy Incubator, students will be able to draw on the methodological skills they acquire in EU490 (Evidence and Analysis in Policy-Making) and on the practical writing and communication skills taught in EU450 (Europe: Professional Skills).

Teaching: 3 hours of workshops in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 projects in the LT.

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading:

Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Howard White, Theory-based Impact Evaluation: Principles and Practice (3ie, 2011); Curtis Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, 'Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems', chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Research project (100%) post-summer term. Students are asked to present a group report in the form of a policy advocacy brief (3000 words, 30% grade). They are then asked to, individually, submit a full policy report in which they discuss alternative policy options and evaluate their suggests policy solutions (7000 words, 70% grade).

EU499

Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: All teachers of taught courses within the European Institute.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available on the MSc in European and International Public Policy and MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students are required to write a 10,000-word dissertation on a topic within the field of their chosen programme. Those seeking further guidance on topic selection should approach their Academic Advisor in the first instance. A Dissertation Supervisor will be assigned later in the academic year after students have submitted a preliminary topic proposal. The dissertation should be an account of original research, but can rely on secondary sources.

In preparation for the dissertation, students must submit a Preliminary Dissertation Topic Proposal, a Dissertation Prospectus and a Final Dissertation Topic Proposal, along with a research ethics review checklist. Failure to submit the required documents will result in the student not being able to submit the Dissertation. Following the submission of the Final Dissertation Topic Approval Form, a student will receive notification in writing from the EI's Administration Team as to whether it has been finally approved or not - a student cannot progress to the submission of the dissertation without such approval. Students are strongly advised to attend the relevant methodology course for their programme on how to conduct research and write a dissertation. Detailed information on timing, deadlines and presentation can be found in the EU499 Moodle page. Students are required to read any additional information relevant to their particular programme.

Teaching:

- Students taking MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE and Sciences Po) are expected to attend EU410 Interdisciplinary Research Methods and Design.
- Students taking MSc in European Studies (Research) are required to choose a research course from their Paper 2 options.
- Students taking MSc in International Migration and Public Policy are expected to attend SO476 Researching Migration: Research Questions and Research Methods.
- Students taking MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (Sciences Po) and MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi) are required to take EU490 Evidence and Analysis in Policy-Making.

Formative coursework: A written essay (prospectus) of 2,000 words is required as part of the approval process.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

EU4A1 Half Unit

The Politics and Policies of 'Brexit': The UK's Changing Relationship with the European Union

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kevin Featherstone CBG 5.04 and Prof Antony Travers

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will provide students with a critical understanding of the key issues underlying the agenda of the UK's intended exit from the European Union ('BREXIT'). In doing so, it will place the case in its appropriate historical context (the UK's previous relations with the EU) and it is intended that the course will continue beyond the point at which the UK ceases to be an EU member. At this stage, the EU will continue to have an important, although different, role in the UK's political economy. The course will adopt a broad disciplinary perspective - covering the political, political sociology, political economy, constitutional, and foreign policy/external relations dimensions. As such, it will place the key issues within the relevant theoretical and conceptual debates. While 'BREXIT' is a dynamic and uncertain agenda, it prompts a series of challenges to existing knowledge that demand critical analysis of the emerging empirical evidence and modelling.

The following is an indicative outline of each week's topics. Note that the seminar questions differ for the UG and MSc students.

1. Placing 'BREXIT' in historical context: the UK's post-1945 relations with the rest of Europe.
 - SEMINAR QUESTION: Is it accurate to term the UK an 'awkward partner' within the EU?
 - Does 'BREXIT' show De Gaulle's interpretation of Britain's orientation was right?
- 'BREXIT' and the UK Political System.
2. Culture Wars? Identity politics and 'BREXIT'.
 - What was 'BREXIT' a symptom of? How far are these conditions found elsewhere?

3. Generation BREXIT:

- Are differing attitudes towards 'BREXIT' amongst the young, evidence of an electoral turning point? What are the implications?

4. Different visions: Party politics and 'BREXIT'.

- Why has Europe proved a problem for the Conservatives?
- What might a 'LEXIT' mean?

5. The UK constitutional order and 'BREXIT': the legal processes of withdrawal.

- What are the implications of 'BREXIT' for the UK Parliament and the devolved governments?

7. Managing 'BREXIT': the impact on Whitehall

- What challenges are posed from 're-patriating' policies such as immigration; agriculture; industrial strategy?

After 'BREXIT': analysing change

8. Managing secession: the EU and its external ties in Europe

- Why is 'BREXIT' so difficult?
- What are the implications for the EU?

9. The macro-economic implications of 'BREXIT'.

- What is the likely impact on the City?
- What are the implications for the EU?

10. The micro-economic implications of 'BREXIT'.

- What are the implications for the UK's industrial strategy / and labour market?

- Does BREXIT imply a de-regulatory model?

11. 'BREXIT' and foreign and security policies.

- How significant are the opportunities and threats for the UK?
- What are the implications for CFSP and defence cooperation?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

An early formative essay will address a challenging interpretive question of a historical nature or of current political behaviour. Thereafter, group work/presentations will be part of the learning process for the the origination of an individual, extended policy paper (summative). The group work will have explored the issues and implications of a particular policy area; tutor support will be provided for the subsequent individual papers (design; coverage; sources; analytical frame).

- The LSE project: 'Generation BREXIT'.

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

The summative assessment is guided by a prior formative essay and group presentations, allowing scope for breadth, as well as the original investigation of a specific, challenging policy issue. Assessments foster communication skills; group collaboration; investigative information-gathering and evaluation; the ability to originate, design and implement a full policy paper. The scheduling of work with an early formative essay facilitates timely feedback; the drafting of a policy paper and the discussion with the Tutor provides support before its implementation; the later submission of the policy paper allows the student to create and deliver a paper with some original investigation and evidence.

EU4A2 Half Unit

Globalisation, Conflict and Post-Conflict Reconstruction

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Denisa Kostovicova CBG 7.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE and SciencesPo), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and SciencesPo), MSc in European and International Public Policy & Politics (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European Studies (Research) and MSc in Conflict Studies.

This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) apply for access via the Graduate Course Choice process.

Course content: The course offers a theoretically informed account of the challenges faced by countries transitioning from conflict to peace in the era of globalisation, and examines them empirically in reference to examples from the Balkans, the Caucasus and the Middle East. The regions chosen are those which have experienced particular difficulties in effecting a peaceful process of transition to democracy, market economy and integration in a multilateral system. The course will start with an introduction to theories of globalisation, a comparative analysis of the legacy of totalitarianism and authoritarianism and an overview of conflict analysis. The course is structured around three issue areas: political ideologies and state breakdown; transition economy and organised crime; post-totalitarian society. It looks at nationalism linked to global diasporas and fundamentalist networks, new wars in the context of international intervention, and international protectorates. Transition economy includes both an introduction to transition strategies (privatisation, liberalisation and macro-economic stabilisation) as well as the perverse effects of illegal economic networks and organised crime stemming both from the totalitarian past and the impact of globalisation. The last block of questions investigates post-conflict reconstruction from the perspective of transition justice, (un)civil societies and new minorities. While analysing these issues accompanied with relevant regional illustrations particular attention is made to grasp unique aspects of post-totalitarianism triggered by the simultaneity of transition and globalisation. The course concludes by examining the European Union state-building policies in relation to critical approaches to post-conflict reconstruction.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one written essay, plus one short presentation on topics assigned to them.

EU4C9

MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe Policy Incubator

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul De Grauwe CBG 6.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 5 people) relating to a policy problem faced by an external organisation. Such organisations might be public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations, think tanks and NGOs.

Teaching: 2 hours of seminars and 1 hour and 30 minutes of help sessions in the MT. 2 hours of help sessions in the LT.

The help sessions (workshops) will take the form of 2 supervision meetings in the MT, 1 supervision meeting in the LT and 1 student presentation in the LT.

Each Policy Incubator group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development. Other staff members may also advise as required. In the MT, students will attend a 1.5-hour Introductory Workshop. In this workshop, they will be presented with the available challenges and asked to express preferences (ranked). During this workshop, students will also discuss team working rules, as well as policy brief development. Students will also attend a 45 minutes Civil Servant Workshop. In this workshop, a civil servant with European and international policy-making experience will brief students on policy analysis, evaluation and stakeholder involvement.

Formative coursework: During the LT, students are asked to present their project and policy proposals in front of a jury constituted of alumni, members of faculty and visiting fellows. They will provide feedback and, potentially, act as a jury for the best policy solution.

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading:

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Students are asked to present a group report in the form of a policy advocacy brief (3000 words, 30% grade). They are then asked to, individually, submit a full policy report in which they discuss alternative policy options and evaluate their suggests policy solutions (7000 words, 70% grade).

FM402 Half Unit Financial Risk Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yves Nosbusch

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Please note, Global MSc in Management (Accounting and Finance concentration only)

This course is available with permission on the Diploma in Accounting and Finance with the approval of the Programme Director.

This course is available to other students from the Departments of Economics, Mathematics, and Statistics where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course assumes a basic knowledge of finance theory, statistics and mathematics (calculus, linear algebra).

Course content: This course aims to provide an overview of the main theoretical concepts underlying the analysis of financial risk and to show how these concepts can be implemented in practice in a variety of contexts. This course shares some topics with FM442 Quantitative Methods in Finance and Risk Analysis. The course will include a selection of:

1. Conceptual foundations: diversification, hedging and their limits
2. Fixed income securities
3. Options and dynamic replication
4. Value at Risk
5. Endogenous risk
6. Ideas from Behavioural Finance
7. Credit risk (ratings based models, structural models, reduced form models)
8. Credit derivatives

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 8 problem sets in the MT.

Indicative reading: Course readings will vary from year to year depending upon the topics covered. Useful references are M Crouhy, D Galai and R Mark, Risk Management, McGraw-Hill, 2001; P Jorion, Value at Risk, McGraw-Hill, 2007; J Hull, Risk Management and Financial Institutions, Prentice-Hall, 2015; J Hull, Options, Futures and Other Derivatives, Prentice-Hall, 2014 and D Duffie and K Singleton, Credit Risk, Princeton University Press, 2003.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM403

Management and Regulation of Risk

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Kathy Yuan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is designed to expose students to the breadth of risk management thinking and approaches across different areas. The course material is divided into the following areas:

Section A. Risk and Regulation - Introduction and Overview:

Sets out the problem of risk management and regulation. It formulates a general conceptual framework that can be used in devising solutions to risk either as a management problem or as a regulatory problem, or both.

Section B. Financial Market and Regulation - Discusses the role of regulation in the financial sector, bank competition and moral hazard; distinguishes prudential regulation of banks and the regulation of insurance and pensions; the tools of microprudential regulation; the challenges of assessment of systemic risk and macroprudential regulation.

Section C. Financial Risk Analysis - Examines issues in financial risk including risk and regulation in the insurance markets; tools of financial risk management, including diversification, hedging and capital provisions; risk measurement for financial instruments (market risk, value at risk); credit risk, ratings and credit derivatives; operational and business risk.

Section D: Strategy, Control and Risk in Organisations - Provides a strategic management perspective on risk analysis and management, including an examination of strategic visioning. Also considers: issues of enforced self-regulation as a method of risk management with reference to occupational health and safety regulation; risk management and decision making in organisations; enterprise-wide risk management and auditing.

Section E: Risk Analysis and the Psychology of Risk Bearing

- Explores the meaning of risk as perceived by different agents; methods of dealing with risky situations; analysis of risk taking by groups, behavioural analysis of financial risk taking.

Section F: Possible Specific areas of risk analysis

1. Liquidity and operation risks in exchanges;
2. Counter-party risks in the OTC markets, potential triggers for market failure;
3. Legal analysis of risk, conditions when legal risk exists and how it can be mitigated, legal tools to influence conduct.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures in the MT. 22 hours of lectures in the LT.

12 hours of case discussion and classes, and 10 hours of practitioner seminars across MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be given weekly problem set assignments.

Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 10000 words) in September.

Class participation (10%).

A substantial (10,000 word essay) is an integral part of the course and represents 50% of the assessment. As part of the multi-disciplinary approach taken in the programme, students are actively encouraged to select topics that involve several of the relevant core competencies in an integrated way. Analyses of complex cases are suitable for this. However, conceptual and theoretical works are also welcome.

Forecasting Financial Time Series

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christian Julliard

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity, MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Quantitative Methods for Finance and Risk Analysis (FM442).

The first half of FM437 Financial Econometrics, or alternatively FM442 Quantitative Methods for Finance and Risk Analysis, is a required prerequisite. Students who can demonstrate comparable background may be granted an exemption from this requirement.

Course content: This course will examine the techniques involved with forecasting key variables in finance, and how to incorporate model uncertainty into financial forecasts. Students will learn both the theory and the practice of forecasting in finance.

- The following topics will be covered: introduction to time series analysis; Maximum Likelihood Estimation (MLE), and MLE based model selection; Bayesian inference, posterior probabilities, and Bayesian Model Averaging; Markov Chain Monte Carlo methods; Present value regressions; Multivariate models and Bayesian Vector Autoregressions; Cointegration; Asset pricing and the Generalized Method of Moments (GMM); Dynamic factor models and their connection with principal components; Introduction to Machine Learning and Finance.

Additional information can be found on Moodle (for current students)

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular problem sets.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided, and some journal articles may also be used.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period. Coursework (10%).

Fixed Income Securities and Credit Markets

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Kondor

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422) or Financial Economics (FM436)

Course content:

- Interest rate modelling and derivatives
- Credit risk
- Credit derivatives and risk management

This course provides a thorough grounding in recent developments in fixed income securities pricing, hedging and portfolio management.

By the end of the course, the students will be familiar with the fixed income state of the art business practice and a variety of topics including (i) an analysis of the main products traded in the credit markets, such as government and corporate bonds, bond options, swaps, caps, floors, swaptions, callable, puttable and convertible bonds, and an analysis of the main credit derivatives such as total-return swaps, spread options and credit default swaps; (ii) the specific tools used in the industry practice to evaluate and hedge these products, which range from no-arbitrage trees and the calibration of yield curve derivatives to the main tools used to monitor and manage credit risk; (iii) the process of securitization, with particular reference to collateralized default obligations and mortgage-based securities.

Topics in Portfolio Management

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michela Verardo

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422) or Financial Economics (FM436)

Course content:

- Portfolio optimization and the Black-Litterman model
- Dynamic Investment Strategies
- Selecting and Monitoring Portfolio Managers: Mutual funds and hedge funds
- Transactions Costs and Liquidity Risk

The course covers a wide range of topics in portfolio management, with a strong focus on empirical applications. The first part of the course reviews the basics of portfolio theory and develops the Black-Litterman approach to portfolio optimization. The second part of the course introduces students to the implementation of several dynamic investment strategies and to the estimation of their performance; portfolio strategies include size, value, momentum, betting-against-beta, and quality-minus-junk. The third part of the course focuses on selecting and monitoring portfolio managers, with particular emphasis on the identification of selectivity, allocation, and timing skills for mutual funds and hedge funds. The last part of the course examines trading costs and liquidity risk, as well as their impact on the profitability of investment strategies. The course is based on recent empirical studies and applied exercises using financial data.

Mergers, Buyouts and Corporate Restructurings

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vicente Cuñat

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Financial Analysis of Firms and Corporate Transactions
- Mergers, Acquisitions and Leveraged Buyouts
- Distress, Bankruptcy and Corporate Restructuring

This course covers advanced topics in Corporate Finance. It focuses on the strategy, valuation and execution of corporate deals. In particular, the first part of the course covers mergers, divestitures, partial-divestitures (e.g. equity carve outs) and leveraged buyouts. The second part of the course provides a framework of analysis for the resolution of financial distress and bankruptcy. Each of the topics introduced in this course covers both institutional details and results of relevant academic research. It is furthermore supported by case studies and practitioner talks.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Financial Engineering

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jean-Pierre Zigrand

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422) or Financial Economics (FM436)

Students will be expected to show some familiarity with calculus

(including stochastic calculus) and statistics

Course content: This course provides a thorough grounding in the theory and practice of financial engineering. The emphasis is on the application of derivatives pricing and hedging methodology to equity and volatility derivatives and to structured products.

The course aims to cover the basics in derivatives theory, and to apply them to a multitude of financial securities and structured products, with a special emphasis on recent products in the equity and volatility derivative worlds. We review selected case studies in order to gain a better understanding of their practical usage. We also implement the models numerically in R and VBA.

Private Equity

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ulf Axelson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content:

- Evaluating and executing Private Equity Deals
- Business Plans, Venture Capital, and Entrepreneurial Finance
- Private Equity as an asset class and the private equity landscape

This course provides a thorough grounding in the theory and recent developments in the field of private equity.

Starting by examining how private equity funds are raised and structured the course will examine how private equity can be used in start-ups, in scaling-up cash flow businesses, and in restructuring firms facing financial distress. The course explores the link between private and venture capital on the one hand and public securities markets on the other. The course will examine the process through which private equity investors exit their investments. The course will also give a detailed analysis of the types of finance used in private equity and an evaluation of the short and long-run performance of private equity investments. The course will include an evaluation of the performance of different types of private equity investment and a comparison with other forms of ownership will be undertaken.

This course takes a rigorous theoretical examination of private equity. It also employs some case study teaching and is taught in conjunction with a range of practitioners in the field.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Each week there will typically be a formative case study assignments (similar to summative cases). Students will also be given formative feedback on their class participation.

Quantitative Security Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jean-Pierre Zigrand

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity, MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway) and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is not available as an outside option. Global MSc in Management (Accounting and Finance concentration only).

This course is not available as an outside option

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with finance and accounting.

Course content: This course is an applied course on quantitative analysis of investment opportunities in public debt and equity markets. We consider valuation of macro assets (such as government bonds, and diversified portfolios of equities and corporate bonds) as well as the valuation of equities of individual firms and of their risky debt. We rely on theoretical concepts that students have learnt in their core courses (such as the CAPM, no-arbitrage pricing of option and models of corporate debt as contingent claims on a firm's asset) and also examine in depth the historical behaviour of asset returns. The focus is on applying theoretical and empirical models of asset markets to evaluate investment opportunities in realistic, sometimes, live situations. The course involves in-class analysis of investment questions, extensive analysis of financial data, study of financial statements and analyst reports and two projects. The course is structured around the following topics:

1. Valuation of macro assets I: Global Yield Curves
2. Valuation of macro assets II: Global Equity Indices
3. Valuation of macro assets III: Volatility and Credit Risk Premium
4. Identifying value in individual equities: capturing breadth via quantitative screening systems
5. Digging deep in search of value: case studies on firm-level equity valuation
6. Fair value of growth
7. Valuing single name credit opportunities: investment-grade and high-yield debt
8. Valuation of the capital structure of banks

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete 2 group projects. In the first project, students analyse and value the equity of a publicly traded firm, evaluate its risks and make an investment recommendation. This project is done in two parts: first part focuses on a historical performance analysis of the chosen firm and second on a forward-looking valuation analysis. The second project requires the students to study and critically examine the investment decisions and style of a well-known value investor.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anastasia Andrikogiannopoulou

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Global MSc in Management ('Accounting and Finance' and 'Finance' concentrations only).

This course is available with permission on the Diploma in Accounting and Finance with the approval of the Programme Director.

This course is available to other students from the Departments of Economics, Mathematics, and Statistics where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students taking this course are expected to be familiar with the theory of asset evaluation at the level of FM429 Asset Markets A.

Course content: This advanced course is designed for students seeking an understanding of fixed income valuation and hedging methods, and a basic familiarity with the major fixed income markets and instruments.

By the end of the course, the students will be familiar with a variety of topics, including (i) the basic concepts of fixed-income instruments, such as yield, duration, convexity; (ii) the basic techniques to analyse and hedge fixed income products, such as "curve fitting", "bootstrapping", duration-based hedging and asset-liability management; (iii) the forces, or "factors", driving the variation in the entire spectrum of interest rates at different maturities; (iv) the main evaluation tools, which can be applied to evaluate a wide range of products (trees, no arbitrage trees, calibration and some continuous time models); (v) the main fixed income products such as government bonds, corporate bonds (convertible, callable, puttable), and their evaluation; (vi) plain vanilla interest derivatives (caps, floors and collars, swaps, swaptions, etc.) and their evaluation; (vii) mortgage backed securities and credit risk transfers; (viii) the analysis of the "destabilizing" effects related to the use of certain derivatives written on fixed income instruments.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.

Indicative reading: The primary source for this course is a comprehensive set of Lecture Notes, tutorials and case studies, and a reading pack containing chapters from the following books: Sundaresan, S. Teacher responsible: Dr Pedro Chauffaille Saffi

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content:

- Supporting the firm's strategy with Long-term and short-term financial management
 - Real options and strategic investment decisions
 - Family firms, IPOs, and corporate governance
 - Risk management, International valuation, and currency exposure
- This is a case-based course aimed at deepening the understanding of how to apply corporate finance concepts in a wide variety of business situations. In particular, we will try to build on concepts in business strategy, valuation techniques, and capital structure theories covered in previous courses, and see how to apply those tools in a systematic and rigorous way when approaching complicated real-life corporate finance problems. Examples of topics include working capital management, capital structure, risk management, real options, initial public offerings, international corporate finance, and family firms. Students will have to read up on cases before class and be prepared to discuss them interactively in class.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: 5 formative case study assignments (similar to summative cases).

Indicative reading:

- Berk and DeMarzo, "Corporate Finance"
- Around 10 case studies
- A number of related scientific articles

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours and 30 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Teacher responsible: Professor Amil Dasgupta

Dr Dirk Jenter

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content: • Financing

• Valuation

This core course provides a broad introduction to the key issues in corporate finance. The first half of the course, the Financing Module, investigates how companies should finance their activities by issuing securities (debt, equity and convertible claims) and the interaction of business policy with financial policy. The aim is to understand what factors determine optimal capital structure and how the interplay of these factors can affect financing decisions in a way that creates value. The second half of the course, the Valuation Module, covers firm and project valuation and establishes how companies should select among investable assets. The module focuses on fundamental valuation techniques based on discounting future cash flows. The course goes on to introduce further valuations methods, such as real options analysis, as well as key applications of valuation concepts to major corporate decisions such as mergers and acquisitions and initial public offerings. The course interweaves key conceptual material with a series of cases.

Teaching: 60 hours of lectures in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Asset Markets

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dong Lou and Dr Igor Makarov

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content:

- Investments and Securities Valuation
- Portfolio choice and performance evaluation
- Derivatives

The aim of the course is to familiarize students with the workings of financial markets, and equip them with the fundamental tools of asset valuation. The course will focus on the three main asset classes - fixed income, stocks, and derivatives - giving a unified perspective of modern valuation methods. The starting point will be the present value formula. The course will then proceed to fixed-income securities, focusing mainly on government bonds. These will be valued off the term structure of interest rates, using the present value formula. The connection with the principle of no-arbitrage will be emphasized. The course will then move to stocks, starting with portfolio theory and then deriving the relation between risk and return (CAPM). The CAPM will provide a risk-adjusted discount rate that will be used to discount stocks' cash flows with the present value formula. Alternative pricing models such as the APT and multi-factor models will also be covered, and the models will be applied to issues of asset allocation and portfolio selection. The last topic will be derivatives, especially futures and options. After familiarizing students with the use of derivatives, the course will cover the main valuation methods (binomial model, Black-Scholes) emphasizing again the principle of no-arbitrage.

Teaching: 60 hours of lectures in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: The organisation of topics of the course follows closely the treatment in Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, 3rd Global Edition, Pearson International, and Bodie, Kane, and Marcus, Investments, 10th Edition, McGraw Hill. Other recommended readings and case studies will be included in a study pack.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This course is available to other students from the Departments of Mathematics and Statistics where regulations permit.

This course cannot be combined with FM473 Financial Markets or FM474 Managerial Finance.

Outside students should consider the alternative option of FM473 Financial Markets or FM474 Managerial Finance.

Pre-requisites: Basic Mathematics and Statistics knowledge. The course is self-contained but it covers a broad set of topics. Some prior knowledge of economics, finance and accounting is advised.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the fundamental concepts and tools underlying the asset markets side of modern finance. The course covers asset markets and valuation. The valuation of fixed-income securities is covered first, followed by the valuation of stocks, and derivatives such as futures and options. Concepts emphasized include the present-value formula, valuation by arbitrage, portfolio theory, the CAPM, market efficiency, and binomial and Black-Scholes models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets covered in classes.

Indicative reading: J. Berk and P. DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, Pearson International Edition. Z. Bodie, A. Kane and A. Marcus, Investments, 8th edition, McGraw Hill. ISBN:0-07-338237-X. Full details of reading will be specified in the Course Programme and Reading List which will be distributed at the first lecture.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Please note this exam is the half unit version of the examination taken on FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets. Any student who takes both FM429 and FM431 will be re-registered to sit the FM430 full-unit exam paper in Summer Term.

FM430

Corporate Finance and Asset Markets

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Georgy Chabakauri

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic Mathematics and Statistics knowledge. The course is self-contained but it covers a broad set of topics. Some prior knowledge of economics, finance and accounting is advised. This course is a combination of two half-unit courses: FM429 Asset Markets A and FM431L Corporate Finance A.

This course cannot be combined with FM429 Asset Markets A, FM431 Corporate Finance A, FM473 Financial Markets or FM474 Managerial Finance.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the fundamental concepts and tools underlying modern finance, both in the asset markets and the corporate finance side. Provides a foundation for subsequent courses offered by the Department. In the Michaelmas Term, the course covers asset markets and valuation. The valuation of fixed-income securities is covered first, followed by the valuation of stocks, and derivatives such as futures and options. Concepts emphasized include the present-value formula, valuation by arbitrage, portfolio theory, the CAPM, market efficiency, and binomial and Black-Scholes models. In the Lent Term, the course covers corporate finance. This part starts with capital budgeting techniques, in relation to CAPM and other valuation instruments. The course then proceeds identifying the driving forces behind capital structure decisions and choices over debt and equity finance. Special consideration is given to the tax implications of those choices, the possible costs of financial distress, the incentive implications of financial decisions and the signalling impact of those for financial market participants. A final part of the course covers some specific topics in corporate finance: decision to go public, mergers and acquisitions and possibly (time permitting), dividend policy, corporate governance issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets covered in classes.

Indicative reading: J. Berk and P. DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, Pearson International Edition. Z. Bodie, A. Kane and A. Marcus, Investments, 8th edition, McGraw Hill. ISBN:0-07-338237-X

Full details of reading will be specified in the Course Programme and Reading List which will be distributed at the first lecture.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Please note this examination is the full unit version of the exams taken on FM429 Asset Markets A (H) and FM431 Corporate Finance A (H).

FM431L Half Unit Corporate Finance A

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Juanita Gonzalez Uribe

FM436

Financial Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ian Martin, Dr Igor Makarov and Prof Michael Burkart

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MRes/PhD in Finance, MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical background at the level of the September Courses in Mathematics and FM458 Financial Economics Preparatory Course is assumed.

Course content: Financial Economics provides students with an in-depth introduction to the theories of asset pricing and corporate finance. The course analyses investors' behaviour, market equilibrium, the pricing of securities, the valuation of real assets, and capital structure choice. Topics in asset pricing will encompass portfolio choice, complete and incomplete markets, mean-variance portfolio theory and equilibrium asset pricing, pricing with no arbitrage, Black-Scholes and other contingent claims pricing models, and the behaviour of financial markets during crises. Topics in corporate finance will encompass valuation methods and financing decisions in the presence of taxation, agency frictions, and asymmetric information.

Teaching: 40 hours of lectures and 40 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Problem sets, covered in classes.

Indicative reading: Readings will be based on teaching notes and journal articles.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.
Coursework (20%).

FM437

Financial Econometrics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thummim Cho and Dr Christian Julliard

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical background to the level of the course taught in September in the Economics Department (EC400) is assumed.

Course content: This course covers the techniques of empirical investigation in economics and finance. Students are introduced to recent empirical findings based on asset pricing and corporate finance models. The course includes a selection of the following topics: multivariate regression; maximum likelihood and methods of moments estimation; hypothesis testing; omitted variables and misspecification; asymptotic theory; measurement error and instrumental variables; time-series modelling; predictability of asset returns; event study analysis; econometric tests of the CAPM and multifactor models; volatility modelling; generalised method of moments estimation.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the

MT. 22 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises are provided each week and they are discussed in class.

Indicative reading: A complete reading list is available at the beginning of session. Will be based on Greene, Econometric Analysis, Prentice-Hall; Campbell, Lo & MacKinlay, The Econometrics of Financial Markets, Princeton University Press; Econometric Analysis of Cross Section and Panel Data, J. Wooldridge; selected published articles.

Assessment: Exam (45%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

Exam (45%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the MT and LT.

FM441 Half Unit

Derivatives

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rohit Rahi

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Global MSc in Management ('Accounting and Finance' and 'Finance' concentrations only).

Pre-requisites: This is an advanced course. Students will be expected to have a good grasp of basic probability theory and multivariate calculus.

Course content: The course provides a thorough grounding in the theory of derivatives pricing and hedging. Both discrete-time and continuous-time models will be covered, including a comprehensive treatment of the Black-Scholes model. A special feature of the course is its emphasis on the modern theory of no-arbitrage pricing using martingale methods. These methods will be applied to the pricing of equity options, forwards, futures and interest rate derivatives. The uses of derivatives in hedging and risk-management will be discussed as well.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets in classes (10).

Indicative reading: Teaching notes will be distributed. No one book covers the entire course, but the following is an excellent reference: John C Hull, Options, Futures and Other Derivatives.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM442 Half Unit

Quantitative Methods for Finance and Risk Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is not available as an outside option. Global MSc in Management ('Accounting and Finance' and 'Finance' concentrations only).

This course is available to other students from the Departments of Economics, Mathematics, and Statistics where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A strong background in statistics and quantitative methods at the undergraduate level is required. Prior programming experience is helpful. Students without prior knowledge of Matlab are encouraged to take FM457A (Computational Tools in Finance) concurrently.

Course content: This graduate-level course covers important quantitative and statistical tools in applied finance. It studies financial markets risk, with a particular focus on models for measuring, assessing and managing financial risk. Students will be introduced to the application of these tools and the key properties of financial data through a set of computer-based homework assignments and classes.

The course aims to introduce quantitative concepts and techniques in many areas of finance. Sample topics include Risk Measures (e.g., Value-at-Risk and Expected Shortfall, including implementation and backtesting), univariate and multivariate volatility models, Factor Models, Principal Components Analysis, Options Pricing, Binomial Trees, Monte Carlo Simulations, and associated topics in Econometrics. This list is meant to be representative, but topics may be added or removed.

Implementing the models and tools in MATLAB is an essential part of the course. The homework assignments are designed to guide the students to all stages of the analytical process, from locating, downloading and processing financial data to the implementation of the tools and interpretation of results. Students will have the opportunity to explore the databases available at the LSE and to become comfortable working with real data.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Six homework assignments to be solved using MATLAB.

Indicative reading: No single text covers the course material. The relevant sections of the following readings would be appropriate for individual topics: Jon Danielsson (2011), Financial Risk Forecasting; Ruey Tsay (2010), Analysis of Financial Time Series; Pietro Veronesi (2010), Fixed Income Securities: Valuation, Risk, and Risk Management.

Assessment: Exam (30%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Project (70%) in the MT.

FM445 Half Unit Portfolio Management

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Domingos Romualdo

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is not available as an outside option. Global MSc in Management ('Accounting and Finance' and 'Finance' concentrations only).

This course is available to other students from the Departments of Economics, Mathematics, and Statistics where regulations permit. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to cover the main topics in equity portfolio management. Some of the topics covered in the course include: Portfolio optimization techniques; Multi-factor models and their applications; Trading strategies; International portfolio management and currency hedging; Trading costs; Portfolio performance measurement and attribution; Style analysis; Mutual funds; Hedge funds. The course is based on a number of empirical applications and case studies, so that students can gain a better understanding of implementation issues related to managing an equity portfolio.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course. For the most part, the classwork is based on Excel applications of the models and empirical studies covered in lectures.

Indicative reading: A study pack will include lecture notes and case studies. All relevant articles will be made available during the course. Useful references are Modern portfolio theory and investment analysis, by E. J. Elton, M. J. Gruber, S. J. Brown, and W. N. Goetzmann, Wiley Press; Modern investment management, by Bob Litterman and the Quantitative Resource Group, GSAM, Wiley Press; Investments, by Z. Bodie, A. Kane, and A. Marcus, McGraw-Hill Irwin.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (20%).

The 20% coursework comprises five homework assignments and one project.

FM447 Half Unit Global Financial Systems

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not open to students on the MSc Economics and Managements and students from the following departments: Economics, Finance, Mathematics, and Statistics

Pre-requisites: Students should have some background in economics, and be comfortable with formal arguments

Course content: This course examines the academic and policy debates on the operation of the global financial system. The course will aim to be topical, where the analysis of the issues will be based on economic arguments. The course begins with analysis of systemic risk, followed by an overview of important financial crisis and key institutions. The role of cryptocurrencies, fintec, artificial intelligence and machine learning on the financial system will be discussed. Several theories of financial crises are then developed in some detail, and are assessed by reference to historical experience. The course concludes by analysis of the 2008 crisis latest policy and regulatory developments (including Basel III), monetary policy and interest rate normalization and their relationship with inequality, the current situation in the European Union, Brexit, Trump and the role of China.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to attempt the problem sets and essay questions set in the classes.

Indicative reading: Most material will be provided by the book Global Financial Systems (www.globalfinancialsystems.org), by Jon Danielsson, published by Pearson

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM457 Applied Computational Finance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Alberto Pellicoli

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity, MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway) and MSc in Quantitative Methods for Risk Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

FM457A is intended for students taking FM442 Quantitative Methods for Finance and Risk Analysis and FM404 Forecasting Financial Time Series.

FM457B is available to students on the MSc Finance (Full-time), MSc Finance and Private Equity, MSc Finance and Economics and MSc Risk and Finance programmes.

Course content: Applied Computational Finance is a non-assessed, optional course intended to provide a solid foundation in the R numerical programming package. It does not assume students have any prior programming knowledge. It is based on the R/RStudio environment and basic programming concepts, moving on to libraries, functions, plotting, source code management, how to import data locally and via internet APIs, basic analysis and big data techniques. The course uses practical problems in finance for illustration, like risk analysis, price forecasting and derivative pricing.

Teaching: FM457A: 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

FM457B: 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Teaching notes will be distributed.

Assessment: This is an additional, non-assessed computer course to supplement MSc level courses in the Department of Finance.

FM458

Financial Economics Preparatory Course

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Karamfil Todorov

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to supplement the Economics pre-session course and provide students with the essential quantitative methods for the core Finance course FM436. The course will introduce foundational material essential to the study of both asset pricing in continuous time and corporate finance theory.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Indicative reading: Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus (1998), World Scientific; Shreve, Stochastic Calculus for Finance I, II

Assessment: No formal assessment. Students will sit a mock exam based upon the material to aid learning.

FM472 Half Unit

International Finance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elisabetta Bertero

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on programmes other than the ones listed above are also welcome to request the course on LSE for You (LfY) provided regulations permit. Acceptance on LfY is subject to permission by the course leader obtained by emailing her detailed information on finance and economics courses taken during previous studies as well as the motivation for wanting to take the course.

This course is not open to students from the following departments: Economics, Finance, Mathematics, and Statistics.

Pre-requisites: All students interested in this course must attend the first lecture and the first class in early January, during which the required research project is discussed.

Course content: This course examines key issues in international finance, focusing on recent developments and incorporating theoretical, empirical, policy and institutional dimensions. The course uses exchange rates as a unifying theme and considers them from four perspectives: theory, policy, global risk and international investors. The course examines models of exchange rate determination and related empirical evidence. It analyses the choice and coordination of exchange rate regimes, including the European Monetary Union. It examines exchange rates as one of the sources of global financial instability. It considers the risk exposure for investors arising from exchange rate volatility and its hedging with currency instruments. The course also explores the links, in each area, to current developments such as the internationalisation of the Chinese Renminbi, the EMU sovereign debt crisis, the recent financial crisis and global imbalances, forex carry trades and the high volatility of short term exchange rates.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to undertake a group research project on a given topic in international finance.

Indicative reading: A selection of journal articles; background reading from a textbook such as Keith Pilbeam International Finance (Palgrave, 2013, 4th edition)

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Research project (10%) and continuous assessment (10%) in the LT.

Continuous assessment takes the form of class preparation throughout the teaching term and is worth 10%.

FM473L Half Unit

Financial Markets

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cynthia Balloch

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance, MSc in Regulation and Master of Public Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions need permission from the Programme Director to enrol in this course.

This course is not open to students in the MSc Accounting and Finance and students from the following departments: Economics, Finance, Mathematics, and Statistics.

This course cannot be combined with FM429 Asset Markets A or FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets.

Pre-requisites: The course assumes no previous knowledge of finance, economics and statistics, and requires only basic knowledge of mathematics. However, the course is quantitative and students must be willing to learn and work with new concepts in mathematics and statistics. Course work will involve a significant amount of algebra and numerical exercises. Students should be comfortable with 'High School' level Mathematics and simple algebra, e.g. the ability to solve linear systems of two equations and two unknowns.

Course content: This course is a self-contained introduction to finance and it covers roughly the same topics as FM429. The course explores the way that firms and the capital market function to channel savings toward productive investments. From the investor's perspective it considers characteristics of the major financial contracts and the principles used in their valuation. It considers how investors should select their portfolios and the implications of this behaviour for pricing assets in stock and bond markets. It explores the question of whether stock markets are efficient in reflecting investors' information. It applies these insights to the firm's financial management decision of whether or not to invest in a risky project and how to select among alternative investments. In addition, the course also covers some core corporate finance questions, such as capital structure choices. The course is also related to FM474 (Managerial Finance): both are introductory courses in Finance. FM473 focuses mostly on understanding the workings of financial markets, the determination of asset prices, and the decisions made by financial investors. FM474 studies financial decisions from the perspective of firms (i.e., "Corporate Finance"). Although there is some small amount of overlap between FM473 and FM474, both courses can be taken simultaneously or sequentially, in any order.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

There will be 10 three-hour sessions. Attendance is required. This course is taught twice, in both Michaelmas and Lent Term. Students must either register for FM473M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or FM473L which is taught in Lent Term.

Indicative reading: Brealey, Myers and Allen, Principles of Corporate Finance.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This course cannot be combined with FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets or FM431 Corporate Finance A.

Course content: This course is a self-contained introduction to finance and it covers roughly the same topics as FM431. The aim of the course is to provide a comprehensive overview of firms' financial decision making. The course is designed to provide an applied and practical approach to finance, enabling the students to address topical issues that modern corporations face. In particular, the course builds on concepts such as valuation and capital structure theories, and applies those tools in a systematic and rigorous way to real-life financial management problems. After a brief introduction to financial markets, the course focuses on corporate finance and business valuation. Topics such as mergers and acquisitions and initial public offerings will also be covered. The course is also related to FM473 (Financial Markets): both are introductory courses in Finance. FM473 focuses mostly on understanding the workings of financial markets, the determination of asset prices, and the decisions made by financial investors. This course will be taught in two or three separate groups. Each group will meet for a single block of three hours once a week. Each student will be assigned to one group. Students will not be allowed to choose their groups or to switch groups.

The course requires weekly in-class activities and discussions.

Students must prepare for class activities in advance. Attendance is required.

Formative coursework: Weekly homeworks.

Indicative reading: Brealey, Myers and Allen, Principles of Corporate Finance.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM474M Half Unit Managerial Finance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angie Andrikogiannopoulou

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (1 Year Programme). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Regulation and Master of Public Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not open to students in the MSc Accounting and Finance and students from the following departments: Economics, Finance, Mathematics, and Statistics.

This course cannot be combined with FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets or FM431 Corporate Finance A Course content: This course is a self-contained introduction to finance and it covers roughly the same topics as FM431. The aim of the course is to provide a comprehensive overview of firms' financial decision making. The course is designed to provide an applied and practical approach to finance, enabling the students to address topical issues that modern corporations face. In particular, the course builds on concepts such as valuation and capital structure theories, and applies those tools in a systematic and rigorous way to real-life financial management problems. After a brief introduction to financial markets, the course focuses on corporate finance and business valuation. Topics such as mergers and acquisitions and initial public offerings will also be covered. The course is also related to FM473 (Financial Markets): both are introductory courses in Finance. FM473 focuses mostly on understanding the workings of financial markets, the determination of asset prices, and the decisions made by financial investors. FM474 studies financial decisions from the perspective of firms (i.e., "Corporate Finance"). Although there is some small amount of overlap between FM473 and FM474, both courses can be taken simultaneously or sequentially, in any order.

FM476 Half Unit Entrepreneurial Finance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Daniel Paravisini

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MBA Exchange, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity, MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Management (1 Year Programme), MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This half unit is capped with a capacity limit to the number of students registered on the course. A lottery process is undertaken to allocate places on units which are oversubscribed. Students are recommended to have clear alternatives in mind should they not be successful with an application for this capped half unit.

Pre-requisites: Basic Mathematics and Statistics knowledge.

N.B. - It is mandatory to attend the first week's class in Lent Term in order to register for FM476 Entrepreneurial Finance. Students who did not attend these classes will not be permitted to then join the course.

Course content: After introducing students to methods to assess business plans as well as methods to identify and value business ventures and growth opportunities in the opening part of the course, the bulk of the first half of the course concentrates on obtaining financial resources. It covers a broad set of instruments (venture capital, angel finance, crowdsourcing, venture debt) used by entrepreneurial firms and aims to help the student understand how the staged financing process of a new venture works, and to be able to assess when to raise financing and how to structure it. The second half of the course focuses on practical applications in negotiation, development of a business plan, and evaluation of real-life ventures raising funding.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

This course will be taught in two separate groups. Each group will meet for a single block of three hours once a week. Each student will choose which group they want to belong to at the beginning of the course and continue with the same group for the rest of the term. The course requires weekly in-class and out-of-class activities and discussions. Students must prepare for class activities in advance. There is a significant amount of in-term work, group work, and other activities. Attendance is required.

Formative coursework: All the work done in an out of the classroom will be assessed.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. The course pack includes lecture notes and case studies for summative and formative assessments.

Assessment: Continuous assessment (100%).

Summative assessment will take the form of individual reports, group reports, business plan exercises and peer evaluations.

FM477 Half Unit International Finance for MSc Finance and Economics, MSc Finance and MSc Finance & Private Equity

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Liliana Varela

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either Asset Markets (FM423 or FM423E) and Corporate Finance (FM422 or FM422E), or Financial Economics (FM436)

Course content: Following an introduction to the international monetary system, balance of payments, and exchange rate determination, the course will focus on key elements of international financial management, international risk exposure, hedging via FX derivatives (futures, options, and swap contracts), international capital budgeting and valuation techniques, international corporate fund raising, as well as cross-border mergers. Relevant concepts will be illustrated throughout via topical business cases.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT. The course will be taught in an interactive Harvard-style three-hour lecture block integrating lectures and classes.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets covering both theoretical methods and practical applications.

Indicative reading: Detailed course readings, cases, and slides will be distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: International Financial Management by C. S. Eun and B. G. Resnick, McGraw-Hill Education; 8th edition (2017) and International Financial Management by G. Bekaert and R. Hodrick, Cambridge University Press; 3rd edition (2017).

Assessment: Coursework (60%) and coursework (30%) in the LT. Class participation (10%).

International Finance for MSc Finance and Economics, MSc Finance and Economics, MSc Finance and Private Equity - Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Liliana Varela

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (full-time) (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Work Placement Pathway), MSc in Finance and Private Equity and MSc in Finance and Private Equity (Work Placement Pathway). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: This is the dissertation course for FM477. Students must have completed either Asset Markets (FM423 or FM423E) and Corporate Finance (FM422 or FM422E), or Financial Economics (FM436).

Course content: See entry for FM477

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed course readings, cases, and slides will be distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: International Financial Management by C. S. Eun and B. G. Resnick, McGraw-Hill Education; 8th edition (2017) and International Financial Management by G. Bekaert and R. Hodrick, Cambridge University Press; 3rd edition (2017).

Assessment: Dissertation (60%, 6000 words) in the ST. Coursework (30%) and class participation (10%) in the LT. 6000 word dissertation (60%) on a topic to be agreed with the course teacher. The dissertation option is to be chosen in only one half unit module, with its outline approved in LT by the course teacher who will act as the student's supervisor. Submission deadline is towards the end of Summer Term.

FM481

Financial Econometrics for Research Students

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christian Julliard, TBC

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Finance. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Optional on MRes/PhD Economics.

Pre-requisites: Strong background in statistics and mathematics; some knowledge of Economics and Finance.

Course content: The Lent Term of FM481 is shared with FM404 Forecasting Financial Time Series.

Part 1 – Probability, Mathematical Statistics, and Asymptotic Theory, provides students with an understanding of basic concepts in probability and statistics with a view of eventual use for econometric analysis of financial data. Including Basic Probability Concepts, Random Variables, Selected Probability Distributions, Modes of Convergence, Properties of Estimators, Frequentist Hypothesis Testing and Bayesian Inference.

Part 2 - Theory and application of regression analysis, covers estimation and inference theory for regression models. The topics covered are least squares estimation, maximum likelihood estimation, instrumental variable estimation, and generalized method of moments estimation, with applications to linear models, many and weak instrument problems, limited dependent variable models, and panel data models.

Part 3 - The course provides a survey of the theory and application of time series methods in econometrics. The main objective of this course is to develop the skills needed to do empirical research in fields operating with time series data sets. The topics covered are: Hilbert spaces, projections, Wold theorems, ARMA models, Z-transform, convolution theorem, W-K prediction, Spectral analysis; Structural VAR Models; State Space Representations; Models with time-varying coefficients and stochastic volatility; Nonlinear filtering (particle filters); Unit Roots, Spurious Regressions and Cointegration; Predictability.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures in the MT. 22 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly classwork and problem sets.

Indicative reading:

- Cameron and Trivedi: Microeconometrics. Methods and Applications.
- Campbell, Lo and MacKinlay: The Econometrics of Financial Markets
- Geweke: Contemporary Bayesian Econometrics and Statistics
- Gourieroux and Jasiak: Financial Econometrics: Problems, Models and Methods.
- Greene: Econometric Analysis.
- Johannes and Polson: Computational Methods for Bayesian Inference.
- Hamilton: Time-Series Analysis.
- Hayashi: Econometrics

GI402 Half UnitGender, Knowledge and Research Practice

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jacob Breslow PAN 11.01N and Dr Marsha Henry

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Gender and MSc in Gender (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to the central issues at stake in designing and carrying out gender research at graduate and postgraduate level and beyond. The course maps the history of debates about gender and feminist research, and asks what difference it makes to take gender as the subject or object of research. Of particular concern are the ethical and political issues arising from doing gender research with respect to representing others and seeking to influence and engage with broader social contexts among other topics. The course is interdisciplinary, introducing students to a range of perspectives on knowledge production and research practice. It engages with epistemologies and methodologies that are centered in decolonial, black feminist, queer, trans, anti-abelist, and other intersectional approaches. Offering critiques of existing knowledge practices, it highlights the specific challenges to 'mainstream knowledge' that come from intersectional gendered and feminist perspectives. It explores how knowledge is produced and offers critical assessments of the dominant debates in gendered research practice, asking how we ensure that we conduct research ethically. Finally, the course focuses on the methodological challenges arising within interdisciplinary research.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

The course is taught in weekly 1.5 hour lecture, 1.5 hour seminar in MT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) in the MT.

GI403 Half Unit

Gender and Media Representation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leticia Ines Alexandre Sabsay PAN 11.01D

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, Media and Culture. This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to enable students: to think critically about representations of gender in a range of different media; to apply a range of theoretical and methodological approaches to the study of the media; to examine changing representations of gender in the context of wider social changes and to explore questions concerning the interpretation and use of different media formats and content. The course focuses on examples largely drawn from Anglo-American media and usually includes topics such as news media and gender; gendered approaches to contemporary cinema; online environments and gender and critically explores terms such as 'postfeminism' in relation to media content. The course also considers themes such as the nature of contemporary celebrity and questions of media representations of gender in relation to dimensions such as sexuality, class, race, age and (dis)ability.

Students will be expected to maintain familiarity with contemporary UK media, although there is opportunity to research and write on other national contexts.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 6 hours of classes in the MT.

The classes are compulsory film screenings. Lectures will incorporate audio-visual material. There will be occasional screenings of material to be discussed in class. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) to be submitted during class in Week 5 of the MT.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.

GI407

Globalisation, Gender and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anouk Patel-Campillo and Dr Ece Kocabicak

Dr Nazanin Shahrokni

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation. This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights and MSc in Human Rights and Politics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course cannot be taken alongside GI409 Gender, Globalisation and Development: An Introduction, or GI420 Globalisation, Gender and Development: Theorising Policy and Practice.

Course content: This course will provide students with a thorough knowledge of two key interconnected and intersecting literatures: gender and development and gender and globalisation. We begin by defining and theorising gender, development and globalisation and their operation in material spaces, policy and practice. The first part of the course considers contemporary theories of globalisation and development and the differences that a gender perspective makes. A particular focus is on how globalisation is associated with widening social, spatial and gender inequalities, illustrated by case studies of global integration and uneven development. Specific reference is made to the global division of labour, employment, carework and migration and their implications for social and gender inequalities. The final session brings the issues raised in the first part of the course to a conclusion by addressing some alternative visions of social change in the context of a globalised world.

The second half of the course is concerned with theorising policies and practice in the field of gender and international development. The course outlines key contributions to the analysis of power within public policy making processes and examines feminist visions of social change which draw on ideas about capabilities, empowerment, citizenship and gender justice to engage with these policy processes. This is explored in greater detail through case studies of feminist struggles over recognition, redistribution and representation as they play out in relation to particular policy issues, namely violence against women, microfinance, social protection, gender quotas and collective action.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in both terms in week 6 in line with departmental policy.

GI410 Half Unit

Screening the Present: Contemporary Cinema and Cultural Critique

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sadie Wearing, Pankhurst House.11.01C

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality) and MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students need to have an awareness of and interest in contemporary cultural theory.

Course content: The aims of the course are to offer students the opportunity to critically explore contemporary international cinema as a site for the interrogation of contested contemporary social and political processes such as migration, globalisation and conflict. The course links cinematic representations to the preoccupations of contemporary cultural theory in relation to themes such as, colonial/postcolonial memory, neo liberalism and cultural dislocations, ethics and subjectivity, gendered migration and gendered violence. The course introduces students to a range of international film and will develop the critical tools for the analysis of both mainstream and marginal (or marginalised) cultural productions. It explores a range of critical and theoretical writing on film considering questions such as cinema as oppositional practice, the emergence of transnational cinema, questions of representation, global spectatorship and 'witnessing' and the affective dimensions of cinema. Indicative films are: Unknown Pleasures (dir. Jia Zhang-Ke), Persepolis (dir. Marjane Satrapi), Black Skin White Mask (dir. Isaac Julien), Waltz with Bashir (dir. Ari Folman), Cache (dir. Michael Haneke), The Road to Guantanamo (dir. Michael Winterbottom).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 20 hours of classes in the LT.

Class is a compulsory film screening.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) including an element of film analysis in the LT.

Group Presentation as part of Class Conference held at the end of course LT. This session will take place in week 11 and will last the whole morning.

GI411 Half Unit Gender, Post/coloniality and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sumi Madhok Pankurst House, 11.01G

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: While there are no specific requirements, it is preferred that students have a background in social science or the humanities.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the growing body of scholarship that critically interrogates gender and developmentalism at various postcolonial sites. It provides an opportunity for students to encounter and engage with canonical works within postcolonial theory alongside those of gender and feminist theory in order to examine the historical and contemporary policy and practices in relation to gender and development. As such, the course combines a study of the historical/textual/cultural/political and philosophical in relation to and alongside the political-economic in order to explore questions of developmentalism, coloniality, subalternity, orientalism, representation, agency, neoliberalism, globalisation, human rights and humanitarianism. Finally, the course also introduces students to new directions in contemporary theoretical thinking that are either explicit critiques of postcolonial scholarship, i.e. texts such as 'Empire' and 'Ethics' or are critical engagements and even critical extensions of postcolonial thinking into new directions e.g. Transnationalism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

In line with departmental policy, there is a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Formative essay (1500 words) to be presented in a day long workshop.

GI413 Half Unit Gender and Militarisation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marsha Henry

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will provide students with an overview of militarisation and its gendered basis and effects. Students will be introduced to critiques of militarisation; the concept of militarised masculinities; different gendered experiences of conflict, violence and war; 'diversity' issues within a variety of national militaries; representations of gender and terror; peacekeeping; and the politics of peace and anti-militarism activities.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) in the MT and Blog post (250 words) in the MT.

GI414 Half Unit Theorising Gender and Social Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wendy Sigle PAN 11.01J

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Gender (Sexuality) and MSc in Inequalities and Social Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with an understanding of how feminist scholars use theoretical and analytic concepts to engage with social policy issues and debates. The course provides an overview of mainstream theoretical explanations for the structure and evolution of welfare states, and feminist critiques and modifications of that literature. Students will develop an understanding of how key concepts like citizenship, work, and well-being have been conceptualized and applied in the academic literature to document and explain gendered inequalities. The use of gender as a category of analysis is examined and attention is paid to the potentially modifying effects of other social hierarchies such as race and class.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Group work: Students will be asked to work as part of a group to discuss papers and to complete assignments (presentations, assessments of papers, answers to questions) in preparation for seminars. Students are asked to submit a 1,500 formative exercise which should include a self-assessment form attached as a coversheet during MT.

Assessment: Project (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

The production of a final 4000 word report (due in ST: 90% of the final mark) with milestones including a progress report (due the last week of MT), a first draft (due in LT), and 1000 word peer review report (due in LT). The content of the peer review is assessed and contributes 10% of the final mark.

GI415 Half Unit

Gender and European Welfare States

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ania Plomien, Pankurst House.11.01F

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course may be of particular interest to masters students in the European Institute.

Course content: The course investigates the ways in which gender is incorporated into national welfare states and the impact of national structures on the patterns and prevalence of gender inequalities. The course covers the theory and methodology of comparative studies and considers their applicability to the analysis of gender, including how well existing typologies of welfare states fare when gender is the focus of analysis. Additionally, the course interrogates the role of the European Union in the development of gendered policies and outcomes in EU countries. A number of key patterns of inequality and policy areas are studied, including: the organisation of caring services; migration; family policy; provisions for lone parents; the labour market and labour market policies; the practices and roles of men, especially regarding fatherhood; and fertility and aging. In looking at these areas students will be encouraged to compare and contrast different welfare systems and consider the particularism of national approaches.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to prepare seminar facilitation activities in group work and submit an essay (2000 words) due in the LT.

Indicative reading: G. Abels and J. M. Mushaben (2012) Gendering the European Union. K.M. Anderson, (2015) Social Policy in the European Union. R. Crompton et al. GI417 Half Unit

Gender, Population, and Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wendy Sigle PAN 11.01J

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Population Health and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on the MSc in Gender Policy and Inequalities degree must take either GI414 OR GI417

Course content: Although population change cannot be described, understood, or responded to without taking into account the wider – and profoundly gendered – social, political and economic context, gender theory has had relatively limited impact on the development and direction of demographic research. This course explores the implications both theoretically and practically. Students will explore and evaluate the ways that feminist demographers have sought to redress social and gender injustices. Moreover, they will be asked to consider how the integration of a feminist and gendered perspective might change the way research is carried out and used to inform policy.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 in line with department policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to work as part of a group to discuss papers and to complete assignments (presentations, assessments of papers, answers to questions) in preparation for seminars.

Students are asked to submit a 1,500 formative exercise which should include a self-assessment form attached as a coversheet during MT.

Globalisation, Gender and Development: Theorising Policy and Practice

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anouk Patel-Campillo PAN 11.01M
Dr Ece Kocabicak, Dr Nazanin Shahrokni

Availability: This course is available on the Global MSc in Management, Global MSc in Management (CEMS MiM), Global MSc in Management (MBA Exchange), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course cannot be taken alongside GI407 Globalisation, Gender and Development.

There will be limited availability on this course - 34 places.

Course content: This course is concerned with theorising policies and practice in the field of gender and international development. The course outlines key contributions to the analysis of power within public policy making processes and examines feminist visions of social change which draw on ideas about capabilities, empowerment, citizenship and gender justice to engage with these policy processes. This is explored in greater detail through case studies of feminist struggles over recognition, redistribution and representation as they play out in relation to particular policy issues, namely violence against women, microfinance, social protection, gender quotas and collective action.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One essay of 1500 words to be handed in midway through the LT.

GI421 Half Unit

Sexuality, Gender and Culture

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jacob Breslow

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights and Politics and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students wanting to take GI421 but who are not part of a listed degree programme should provide a statement about their reasons for wanting to follow the course. This should include background in sexuality or gender studies, areas of related interest and experience, or other conceptual or theoretical grounding that might be relevant. GI421 is an interdisciplinary course with a high theory content, and students who do not provide evidence - e.g. prior courses in gender and/or sexuality, professional or political experience in related areas - of being at the appropriate level in this regard will not be admitted to the course.

Course content: 'Sexuality, Gender and Culture', introduces students to historical and theoretical components of the field, and explores case studies of the development of sexual cultures, identities and social movements from the late 19th century to the present. The course provides theoretical foundations in sexuality studies, incorporating intersectional, black feminist, postcolonial, queer, crip, trans, and critical race perspectives. Indicative topics include: colonialism and sexuality, sexualisation of culture; transformation of intimacy; abortion and migration; transgender studies and bisexuality; queer theory and social movements. The course is interdisciplinary and demands a high level of student participation, but does not require a background in the field. It is also available as a first half of a full unit 'Sexuality, Gender and Globalisation'.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. Seminars come before lectures.

Formative coursework: One 1500 word critical analysis to be submitted at the end of week 5 and an essay outline to be submitted at the end of week 9 (for written feedback and discussion in office hours).

Sexuality, Gender and Globalisation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jacob Breslow PAN 11.01N

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender (Sexuality). This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and UCT), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Women, Peace and Security and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: 'Sexuality, Gender and Globalisation' takes a case-study approach to questions of sexuality, gender and culture (in the first term) and to sexuality in the contexts of globalization (in the second). The full unit considers a variety of ways in which sexuality is central to any understanding of the social world. It is an interdisciplinary course within which intersectional, black feminist, postcolonial, queer, crip, trans, and critical race perspectives are used to interpret particular sexual phenomena and contexts – rights, citizenship, fertility, representation, kinship, asylum and technology, for example. The course will allow a thorough grounding in sexuality and gender studies and includes a high element of student participation. Although it is interdisciplinary, it does not have a pre-requisite.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 27 hours of seminars and 8 hours of workshops in the LT.

In MT, 422 seminars are held jointly with 421. They come before the lectures. In LT, lectures and seminars are combined into weekly three-hour classes, inclusive of a skills-building session. The LT classes are restricted to 422 students. The LT 'workshop' is the course's student conference, and is part of the assessment.

Formative coursework: One 2500 word critical analysis to be submitted at the beginning of week 8 (MT); submission of draft abstract for conference presentation by the beginning of week 6 (LT).

Assessment: Essay (50%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Paper (30%) in the LT.

Critical evaluation (20%) in the MT.

The paper will be given at a student conference at the end of LT, and will include the previous submission of a 300-500-word abstract.

The critical evaluation will be of a cultural event (public lecture; exhibition; performance; conference) in London, and submitted at the end of MT. (1500 words).

GI424 Half UnitGender Theories in the Modern World: An Interdisciplinary Approach

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sadie Wearing, Pankurst House.11.01C

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Gender, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course aims to enable students to: become familiar with the fullest range of gender theories with particular attention to the intersections of gender, sexuality and race; develop a critical appreciation of these different theories of gender; use gender theories to inform their appreciation of existing work in their own disciplines and in an interdisciplinary context; use the analysis of gender relations as a basis for case study evaluation and research.

It is a half unit course which runs for 15 weeks. It begins with a review of the formative influences on the development of gender theory, including the sex/gender distinction, race and intersectionality, economics and production/reproduction, theories of power and the relations between the psyche and the social. Building on these foundations it enables students to consider the implications for analysis of a variety of sites and topics including post/coloniality, representation, sexuality and nation, and rights. The course considers the impact of gender analysis on key areas of social science investigation, and develops these with particular attention to location, ethics and the importance of global and transnational dimensions. Our expectation is that this course provides a thorough grounding for work across all other courses and for the dissertation module.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

The course is taught in 15 x one-and-a-half hour sessions, plus 15 x one-and-a-half-hour seminars. It is divided into blocks of related lectures and linked seminars.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Timed assessment to be written during the first term.

The exercise will be a fixed period timed assessment.

GI425 Half UnitWomen, Peace and Security

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Aisling Swaine

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides a critical examination of peace and security issues affecting women in conflict and postconflict contexts. Specifically, the course focuses on the UN Women, Peace and Security (WPS) agenda, which originated in Security Council Resolution 1325 (2000) followed by a series of subsequent resolutions to date. The course covers the main pillars of the WPS agenda, namely women's participation; protection from gendered violence; the prevention of conflict and violence; and gendered approaches to relief and recovery in conflict and post-conflict settings. The course examines a range of issues through a gender and feminist lens.

Topics include: the socio-legal context of the Women, Peace and Security agenda; the history of Women, Peace and Security laws and policies; definitions and scope of gender-based and sexual violence in conflict; combating impunity and addressing accountability; peace processes and women's participation; gender, peacekeeping and humanitarian assistance; and evaluation of a range of different critiques of the Women, Peace and Security agenda.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students will have a reading week in Week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Summative assessment to be submitted in the first week of LT.

GI426 Half UnitGender and Human Rights

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sumi Madhok COL.11.01G

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Women, Peace and Security and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A background in the Humanities and/or the Social Sciences with a basic familiarity with human rights and/or gender studies.

Course content: This course will provide the students with a transnational gender perspective on contemporary theories and practices of rights/human rights and humanitarianism. It brings together different sets of scholarship: gender theories, queer and postcolonial scholarship, theoretical perspectives on human rights along side with legal and policy perspectives - and will be of interest to students wanting to study the question of human rights in an interdisciplinary manner but also one that is crucially sutured to the question of gender. Consequently, the course will introduce students to several key theorists: Hannah Arendt, Giorgio Agamben, Jacques Rancière, Gayatri Spivak, Judith Butler, CLR James, Sylvia Wynter, Lila Abu Lughod, and Wendy Brown among others while drawing attention to the evolution and working of international legal frameworks for securing women's rights and other marginal groups. The course will pay special attention to the struggles over 'humanity' and 'civilisation' as well as to tensions between citizenship rights (now thought in terms of global citizenship.) and human rights, and the transformation of the former in the light of the latter. It will also focus on feminist demands and struggles over rights such as those to sexuality, sexual rights, bodily rights, culture and citizenship; entitlements to material resources; to gendered protections in conflict, peacekeeping and war; and to vulnerability and precarity under neoliberal economic and political regimes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Review of a key theorist that students have read on the course.

Indicative reading: Essential readings:

Advanced Issues in Women, Peace and Security

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marsha Henry and Dr Aisling Swaine

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Women,

Peace and Security. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is for MSc in Women, Peace and Security students only. Students registered on other programmes are welcome to apply for GI425 Women, Peace and Security, where programme regulations and capacity allows.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Women, Peace and Security (GI425).

Must be registered on MSc Women Peace and Security.

Course content: Advanced Issues in Women, Peace and Security will provide an in-depth examination of peace and security issues affecting women in a global world. The course will explore emerging areas of research and policy related to the four pillars of the UN women peace and security agenda and specifically areas not covered in the prerequisite (GI425) course, including: strategies towards implementation of the WPS agenda; international legal and theoretical approaches to conflict-related sexual and other forms of violence; emerging areas of policy that may include issues such as preventing violent extremism; men, peace and security; transitional justice and humanitarian responses; ethical and methodological issues raised in researching WPS; and considering representations of gender, peace and security.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

The seminars will use an integrated lecture/seminar structure.

Students will have a reading week in week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Essay title, abstract and workshop:

Students can produce an essay title and abstract for which they will receive written feedback and guidance.

Students can present this work at a full day workshop at the end of term. Students will be organised into panels and present to the full group and provide peer feedback to each other's work.

Bodies, Culture and Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leticia Ines Alexandre Sabsay Pankurst House.11.01D

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation and MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: 'Bodies, Culture and Politics' explores different constructions and understandings of gendered, socialised and sexualised bodies, with a focus on how these have been mobilised by transnational artistic and cultural practices and politics of resistance. Bodies have been at the centre of renewed debates in the light of the emergence of new critical approaches within the social sciences and the humanities and the developments of the natural sciences. Parallel to these debates, increasing attention has been paid to the significance of bodies in contemporary democratic politics. In the last decades, the uses of bodies and the arts in popular mobilisations and political activism have acquired renewed relevance, hand in hand with transnational dialogues and exchanges. Focusing on these trends, the course considers different theoretical approaches to bodies and embodiment (i.e. phenomenological, deconstructivist, materialist, psychoanalytic), and a set of related areas of inquiry, including the materiality of bodies, the differential value socially assigned to bodies, the affective dimension of embodiment, intersectional processes of racialisation, gendering and sexualisation, vulnerability, beauty ideals, and (dis)ability. These questions will inform our exploration of the imaginaries of the body mobilised by feminist and queer political art, activism, and cultural practices, as well as popular mobilisations and anti-racist and anti-austerity social movements, among others.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. The course runs in weeks 1-11. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.

An essay (1,500 words) to be submitted on Friday of Week 7, and a group presentation in class during the LT.

Indicative reading: Ahmed, Sara (2006) Queer Phenomenology. Braidotti, Rosi (1994) Nomadic Subjects: Embodiment and Sexual Difference in Contemporary Feminist Theory. Dissertation - Independent Research Project

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Members of Department of Gender Studies.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender (Sexuality), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Gender. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation may be on any approved topic within the field of the MSc programme studied. There will be a series of compulsory and optional workshops in the Michaelmas, Lent and Summer Terms supporting this process. Students will be introduced to dissertation guidelines, common difficulties, ethical issues, basics in research practice, managing sources, and the process of research and writing. The sessions will consider challenges raised by quantitative and qualitative methods, and include examples from and approaches to policy research, interviewing, discourse and narrative analysis, oral and visual history forms of narrative, visual and media analysis. The workshop will be team taught within the Department of Gender Studies according to expertise, and will involve student participation.

Teaching: A combination of compulsory and optional dissertation workshops of up to 90 minutes spread across the MT, LT and ST. Individual supervision sessions assigned early in the LT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in August. Additionally, in the LT students will submit milestone documents: (a) title or topic of research; (b) summary proposal including research question, methodological and analytical / theoretical approach; (c) and at the beginning of Summer Term an annotated bibliography.

Contemporary Disputes about Justice

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Bruno Leipold

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at two groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: None, though some previous exposure to normative political theory may be an advantage

Course content: The course offers a critical analysis of key debates about distributive justice which have followed the publication of John Rawls' A Theory of Justice in 1971. The first part of the course focuses on Rawlsian and post-Rawlsian methods of normative justifications in relation to (distributive) justice in general and on the problematic extension of Rawls' domestic theory of justice to the global domain. Particular attention will be paid in which issues of global justice introduce new methodological and substantive issues into normative theorizing and how these have been dealt with. The second part of the course delves into more specific issues concerning possible obligations of justice arising from global inequality and poverty. For example, we shall discuss whether and the extent to which there are universal values - and analyse the theoretical arguments for and against having such values institutionalized in the form of human rights. We shall consider the extent to which collective solidarity is limited to (and constrained by) nation-states, and how feelings of solidarity can be said to bear on obligations across borders. And we shall ask whether relations of trade, (colonial) history, cultural and linguistic similarity, and/or geographical proximity influence such obligations.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and formative/summative assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one non-assessed essay of up to 2500 words, which will be marked and commented on but does not count towards formal assessment of this course.

Indicative reading: J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice; Charles Beitz, Political Theory and International Relations; Thomas Pogge, World Poverty and Human Rights; Lea Ypi, Global Justice & The Political Avant-Garde; Charles Beitz, The Idea of Human Rights; David Miller, National Responsibility & Global Justice; Martha Nussbaum, Women & Human Development; Kwasi Wiredu, Cultural Universals and Particulars: An African Perspective; Laura Valentini, Justice in a Globalized World; Gilian Brock, Global Justice: A Cosmopolitan Account.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

GV444 Half Unit

Democracy and Development in Latin America

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francesco Panizza

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Global Politics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other postgraduate students may follow the course with permission. This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: The course studies the relations between democracy, political institutions and economic development in contemporary Latin America. It aims at developing skills for independent analysis of the advances and setbacks of democracy and development in the region. Although due attention is given to country differences, the course approaches the study of democracy and development in the region thematically rather than on a country by country basis. The first five weeks focus on the study of democracy and political institutions. Topics to be covered include the condition of democracy, the nature of the state, presidentialism, parties and party systems, civil society and social movements and informal institutions. The second half of the course studies the economic development of the region since transition to democracy in the 1980s. It looks at the economic context of democratisation, the politics of neoliberal reform in the 1990s, attempts at alternative models of development in the early 21st century and the social and economic transformations of the region over the past decade.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in week 6 of the LT for dissertation preparation and advice.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit two non-assessed essays and make at least one seminar presentation.

Indicative reading: ECLAC, Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean 2018 (www.cepal.org); ECLAC Social Panorama of Latin America 2018 (www.cepal.org); Forewaker J and D. GV465 Half UnitWar, Peace and the Politics of National Self-Determination

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sumantra Bose

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority consideration will be given to students taking the MSc Comparative Politics and the MSc Global Politics. Students on other programmes (including MSc Human Rights, MSc Empires, Colonialism, Globalisation, MSc International Relations and MA/MSc History of International Relations) are welcome to apply and will be admitted subject to availability of space. Students on all programmes are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course.

This course is capped at 4 groups, and admission cannot be guaranteed. ALL interested students must apply online via LSEForYou (LFY) as per the stipulated procedure and by the deadline, which is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. Students should write a brief, one-paragraph rationale for wishing to take the course in the application. Students will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course examines some of the most intractable and violent disputes over sovereignty and national self-determination in the world today, and inquires into the prospects of moving from war to peace through accommodation and compromise. The conflicts studied are drawn from the Middle East (Israel and Palestine), South Asia (Kashmir, Sri Lanka), the Balkans (former Yugoslavia and within it, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo) and the EU area (Northern Ireland, Cyprus). Students are exposed to the specific histories and contexts of these cases but are also encouraged to think comparatively across countries and regions. The course materials are online on Moodle, the LSE's electronic teaching and learning system.

Are disputes arising from conflicting claims to national self-determination inherently of a zero-sum nature, or can they be resolved? If the latter, how? What factors drive conflict at the local level? Which sorts of institutional arrangements might be able to anchor peace settlements? Can we draw useful comparative lessons from the experience of peace processes that have sought or seek to craft solutions to this type of conflict in diverse parts of the contemporary world? What roles can international actors—influential and/or interested foreign states, regional alliances of states, multilateral institutions—play in such processes and their outcomes?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Ten lectures and nine seminars in the MT. The first lecture is a set-up and introductory session.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to prepare and make one seminar presentation and write one unassessed essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Sumantra Bose, Contested Lands: Israel-Palestine, Kashmir, Bosnia, Cyprus and Sri Lanka (2007); Edward Said, The Question of Palestine (1980); Bernard Wasserstein, Israel and Palestine (2004); John McGarry (ed.), Northern Ireland and the Divided World (2001); Sumantra Bose, Kashmir: Roots of Conflict, Paths to Peace (2003); David Hannay, Cyprus: The Search for a Solution (2005); Sumantra Bose, Bosnia after Dayton: Nationalist Partition and International Intervention (2002); Sumantra Bose, States, Nations, Sovereignty: Sri Lanka, India and the Tamil Eelam Movement (1994).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

A paper of 5,000 words, due in the ST, will determine 100% of the final grade. Students have wide latitude in choosing the topic of their assessed paper, in consultation with the instructor. Students can choose to write on one of the assigned seminar presentation questions, or modify one of those questions, or formulate a research question of their choice.

GV467 Half UnitIntroduction to Comparative Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Comparative Politics. This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students from the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective will be accepted onto the course if space permits. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course serves as the 'core', compulsory course for the MSc in Comparative Politics and is intended to provide an overarching theoretical and methodological backdrop for all of the diverse course offerings available to students on this programme. The course introduces students to the field of Comparative Politics as represented in contemporary journals like World Politics, Comparative Political Studies, and Comparative Studies in Society and History, and among the various members of the Comparative Politics Group in the Government Department here at the LSE. Students examine the theoretical and methodological underpinnings of Comparative Politics, important critiques of these underpinnings, and diverse examples of 'best practice' in research and writing in this sub-field of the discipline of Political Science.

Lectures and seminar discussions focus both on important areas of research in comparative politics and methodological challenges involved. Readings treat such variegated topics of inquiry and debate in comparative politics as democracy, ethnic conflict, civil society, and revolutions.

The course does not follow a 'great books' approach nor rely on a textbook. Instead, the course treats examples of real existing Comparative Politics as practiced - and published - by leading scholars in the field in recent years. These examples are chosen to cover diverse forms of comparison, diverse modes of analysis, diverse topic areas, and diverse countries and regions of the world. Cutting across these forms of diversity are a set of questions that will be addressed throughout the course concerning the possibilities and limitations of various methods of comparative analysis for explaining observable patterns in politics.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Week 11 will focus on revision.

Formative coursework: One unassessed essay of roughly 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Alasdair MacIntyre, 'Is a Science of Comparative Politics Possible?' Theda Skocpol, States and Social Revolutions. Ashutosh Varshney, 'Ethnic Conflict and Civic Life: India and Beyond'. Hall, Peter A. 'Adapting Methodology to Ontology in Comparative Politics'. Doner, Richard F., Bryan K. Ritchie, and Dan Slater 'Systemic Vulnerability and the Origins of Developmental States: Northeast and Southeast Asia in Comparative Perspective'.

Assessment: Essay (100%) in the LT.

Law and Politics of Regulation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Lodge and Dr Veerle Heyvaert

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regulation. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to give students an essential grounding in theories of regulation encountered in the legal, political science and law and economics literatures. It examines competing explanations of the origins, development and reform of regulation; the styles and processes of regulation; issues surrounding enforcement; the inter-organisational and international aspects of regulation; and questions of evaluation and accountability. Some specific cases will be explored through the medium of an additional practitioner seminar series, which will be led by experienced practitioners invited on a one-off basis. The course focuses on the following key themes: contrasting perspectives on regulation, differences in regulatory styles, dynamics and processes, regulatory standard-setting, regulatory enforcement, evaluating regulation.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. The course is taught: (a) by 20 two-hour sessions in variable format (some lecture-discussions, student-paper led discussions, debates, preparation for the dissertation) comprising the academic core, (b) by eight seminars on 'economics of regulation' and 'research design' in the Michaelmas term and (c) a number of practitioner seminars in the Lent term, drawing on practitioners from a variety of regulated sectors.

There will be reading weeks in week 6 of both the Michaelmas and Lent terms for structured learning activities.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce three written essays.

GV498 Half Unit Multiculturalism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Apostolidis

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at two groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This seminar explores political-theoretical questions associated with contemporary debates about multiculturalism. First, we confront normative issues concerning what it means for a state and its citizens to give "recognition" to particular cultures in societies with diverse cultural attachments and dominant cultural tendencies. On what principles of freedom, equality, or moral duty can group demands for cultural recognition be justified? What questionable assumptions about the meaning of "culture" might arguments regarding cultural recognition involve and what political implications follow from probing these assumptions? Next, we place these normative problems in a wider context by considering how cultural activities are entangled with systems of social domination. Texts in this phase combine political theory with empirical studies of indigenous, racial/ethnic minority, and women's religious politics. How might demands for social justice and pluralistic cultural expression mutually reinforce or conflict with one another? What confluences and tensions exist between liberal principles invoked in debates about multiculturalism and subaltern groups' struggles for power through cultural action? How has imperial power shaped the composition of cultural identities, and how should frictions between multiculturalist projects and anti-imperial struggles be navigated?

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are invited to write one 1500 word formative essay, due no later than week 8.

Indicative reading: Charles Taylor, "The Politics of Recognition"; Will Kymlicka, "Multicultural Citizenship"; Iris Marion Young, "Justice and the Politics of Difference"; Cristina Beltrán, "The Trouble with Unity"; Saba Mahmood, "Politics of Piety"; Glenn Coulthard, "Red Skin, White Masks"

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

GV4A5 Half Unit International Migration and Immigration Management

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eiko Thielemann

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Resources and Organisations (International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course has limited availability and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible via the 'LSE For You' capped course management system. This is a core course on the MSc International Migration and Public Policy. Priority will be given to students on that programme. Last year, very few students from other programmes could be accommodated on this course. This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course offers a theoretically informed account of the challenges posed by international migration and resulting policy responses. The focus is on the comparative analysis of immigration control policies in OECD countries. The course is structured in three parts. The first introduces a number of theoretical models that seek to explain the dynamics of international migration and migration control policies, addressing questions such as: Why do people migrate? Why do states accept migration? How effective are policies that aim to manage migration? The second, comparative part deals with national public policy responses to the issue of asylum & refugees, 'illegal' migration & human trafficking and (legal) immigration. The final part focuses on the analysis of multilateral policy initiatives on migration management at the global, regional and bi-lateral level.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of MT in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one non-assessed essay.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook but the following texts are useful introductions: M Baldwin-Edwards & M Schain, The Politics of Immigration in Western Europe, 1994; A Betts and P Collier, Refuge: Transforming a Broken Refugee System 2018; A. GV4A8 Half Unit

Nationalist Conflict, Political Violence and Terrorism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Hughes

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Availability to students outside the MSc Conflict Studies is subject to space. This course is capped at three groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: How can we distinguish legitimate resistance and political violence from terrorism? What is the relationship between war and terror? What distinguishes a combatant from non-combatant? Should we erode civil liberties and democratic values to fight terrorism? How do social scientists theorise about political violence and terrorism? This course attempts to answer these and similar questions by a comparative examination of the theories and ethics of political violence and the root causes, nature and types, and dynamics of violence. This course also evaluates different political and security policies and methods of conflict resolution as change agents. A number of case studies of historical and contemporary conflicts are examined to illustrate the theoretical and policy dilemmas. The course has two parts. Firstly, it examines definitions and concepts, the root causes and motivations for engaging in political violence, the ethical dilemmas, the principles and efficacy of the laws and norms of armed conflict, and repertoires of political violence. We examine the historical evolution from the era of nineteenth century ideologically driven violence, through decolonization to the present day of state counterinsurgency and counterterrorism policies. Key policies in counterinsurgency and counterterrorism will be examined, including coercive versus cooperative approaches, the spectrum of dealing with communal resistance from genocide to cooption, policies of criminalization, and the balance between security and liberty. Secondly, the course explores the key issues and debates through a number of case studies that analyse political violence and terrorism in democracies and non-democracies, including the insurgency and counterinsurgency in Northern Ireland and Iraq, and different forms of extremist ideologically driven violence, including Left and Right wing extremism, and the new transnational challenges posed by Al Qaeda and ISIS. Throughout the course comparisons will be made and lessons drawn from the performance of different regime types (colonial, democratic, and authoritarian) in managing political violence. This is a Moodle course.

GV4B6 Half Unit

Kant's Political Philosophy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Katrin Flikschuh

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Optional for MSc Political Theory; open to others as an outside option on request.

This course is capped at 2 groups.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019.

You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: None, though an appetite for abstract philosophical thought will be an advantage (however, no previous experience is required).

Course content: An introduction to and critical appraisal of Immanuel Kant's political philosophy. Despite the enormous influence which Kant's moral philosophy has exerted on debates in contemporary liberal thinking, his political philosophy has until recently been largely ignored. This is beginning to change: Kant's political philosophy is beginning to be studied in its own right. Such study shows that his political thinking diverges in many of its central aspects from contemporary liberal thinking: the impact of Kant's thought upon the latter must, therefore, be re-assessed. Through close reading and analysis of the primary texts, this course introduces students to Kant's distinctive approach to political thinking. Core texts will include selected passages from the Doctrine of Right (Part 1 of the Metaphysics of Morals); Kant's celebrated essay, 'On Perpetual Peace'; and his less well known, but no less important essay 'On the Common Saying: "This may be true in theory, but does it work in Practice". The analytic and substantive focus will be on three interrelated themes: Kant's idea of freedom as an idea of reason; his account and justification of individual property rights and related conception of state authority; and his cosmopolitan conception of justice. Although the analytic and philosophical focus will be on Kant's own political thinking, we shall compare and contrast Kant's position with contemporary Kantian liberalism wherever appropriate.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and formative/summative assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to come well prepared and take an active role in seminar discussion. Students are expected to write one formative essay (of up to 2500 words). These will be marked and commented on, but do not count towards formal assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: Kant, The Metaphysics of Morals, Part 1; Kant, Groundwork of the Metaphysics of Morals; M Timmons (ed.), Kant's Metaphysical of Morals. Interpretative Essays; Katrin Flikschuh; Arthur Ripstein, Force and Freedom. Kant's Legal and Political Philosophy; Onora O'Neill, Towards Justice and Virtue; Onora O'Neill, Constructions of Reason; Pauline Kleingeld, Kant and Cosmopolitanism; Stephen Darwall, The Second-Person Standpoint.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words).

GV4B7 Half Unit

The Liberal Idea of Freedom

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Bruno Leipold

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics and MSc in Political Theory.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at two groups.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019.

You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: Basic familiarity with concepts and methods in normative political theory.

Course content: The concept of freedom is often invoked in political life. Many policies and broader political agendas are justified in its name. In fact, an entire political ideology, 'liberalism' (arguably the dominant one in the Western world) appears to be built around the idea of freedom. But what, exactly, does freedom mean? Is freedom best understood in terms of absence of interference or in terms of non-domination? Is one made unfree only when one's rights are violated? Does poverty constitute a constraint on freedom? And could citizens of an authoritarian regime be described as free? These are some of the questions addressed in this module. Depending on the particular year in which the module is taught, the approach taken may be either historical or contemporary-analytic or a combination of the two. Consequently, authors discussed may include key historical thinkers such as Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, and Kant, as well as contemporary scholars such as Isaiah Berlin, Charles Taylor, Phillip Pettit, Quentin Skinner, Amartya Sen and others. The overall aim of the course is to enable students to assess the quality and strength of different theorists' conceptions of freedom and to deploy those conceptions in the analysis and justification of some core institutions within the liberal state.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Two-hour weekly sessions in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for advice and feedback.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one formative (non-assessed) essay.

Indicative reading: Isaiah Berlin, 'Two Concepts of Liberty' in Berlin, Liberty (edited by Henry Hardy); Gerald MacCallum,

'Negative and Positive Freedom', in Philosophical Review, 76 (1967); Phillip Pettit, A Theory of Freedom; I. Carter, 'The Independent Value of Freedom', Ethics, 105 (1995), 819-45; Robert Nozick, Anarchy, State, and Utopia; G. A. Cohen, 'Capitalism, Freedom and the Proletariat' in Miller (ed.) Liberty; John Stuart Mill, On Liberty; Jean-Jacques Rousseau, The Social Contract; Thomas Hobbes, Leviathan; John Locke, Second Treatise of Government; Immanuel Kant, The Metaphysics of Morals.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

The extended essay will be based on a topic examined in the course.

Globalization and Democratization in Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sidel

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at one group. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course focuses on the diverse processes of globalization and democratization observed in Southeast Asia over the past few decades. Special attention is paid to democracy in Indonesia and the Philippines, regression from democracy to military rule in Thailand, recent movements towards democracy in Myanmar, and 'creeping pluralism' and 'creeping constitutionalism' in Vietnam. The course examines important trends and developments accompanying globalization and democratization in the region - in government-business relations, in local politics, in civil society, in religious practices, in inter-communal relations, and in the organization and use of violence in politics. Throughout the course, the countries examined are treated as cases suitable for analysis and comparison in the light of the broader Comparative Politics and Global Politics literatures on globalization and democratization.

The course begins by situating globalization and democratization in Southeast Asia against a comparative historical and sociological backdrop, paying close attention to the variegated patterns of class, state, and religious formation in the region. The course compares processes and patterns of globalization and democratization across the Philippines, Thailand, Indonesia, and Myanmar. Lectures, readings, and seminar discussions then turn to key trends accompanying democratization in Southeast Asia. The trends examined include campaigns against 'corruption' and in support of 'the rule of law' and 'good governance'; social movements and struggles for popular empowerment; the democratization of religious practices and institutions; religious violence, and separatist mobilization. These trends are treated through comparative analysis of different cases within Southeast Asia and in the light of relevant theoretical literatures drawn from Comparative Politics and Global Politics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for complementary structured learning activities.

Formative coursework: One non-assessed 1,000 word essay.

Local Power in an Era of Globalization, Democratization, and Decentralization

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sidel

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in Global Politics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible. It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019

Course content: Over the course of the past two decades, the inter-related processes of globalization, democratization, and decentralization are said to have generated new social forces and political freedoms in localities around the world. Market reforms and village elections in China, the end of Communist Party rule in Russia and Eastern Europe, and trends of (re)democratization in Asia, Africa, and Latin America have all offered new opportunities for local people to effect change in local politics around the world. Yet academic, journalistic, and policy accounts have highlighted the rise and resilience of 'local despotisms' – "authoritarian enclaves," "bosses", "caciques", "chiefs", "clans", "local strongmen", "mafias", "warlords" – in the midst of this reworking of market, electoral, and administrative circuitries. This course focuses on this phenomenon of what scholars have come to call 'subnational authoritarianism', competing explanations for its emergence and entrenchment, the diversity of its manifestations, and various challenges mounted against its perpetuation. The goals of the course are twofold. First, the course offers a critical examination of competing accounts of and explanations for the phenomenon of 'subnational authoritarianism' in the developing world. Second, the course helps students think more carefully, critically, and creatively about local politics more broadly, and to do so with an eye towards the comparative analysis of local power structures rooted in local economies and societies. The course begins with an examination of an emerging new political-science literature on 'subnational authoritarianism' and a more established body of scholarship on clientelism and machine politics. The course then turns to case studies in diverse settings, ranging from southern Italy to China, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, and Russia, and extending to cases of 'warlordism' in contexts such as contemporary Afghanistan, Iraq, and Somalia. The readings allow students to examine and evaluate competing explanations for the rise and entrenchment of local bosses, chiefs, clans, and mafias, diverging descriptions of their modes of domination, and alternative accounts of their disappearance, evolution, or transformation in the face of economic, social, and political change. Successive weeks also explore the links between constellations in local politics on the one hand, and patterns of economic development, ethnic conflict, and religious mobilization on the other. The final weeks of the course shift attention to the efforts to challenge entrenched local power structures and to create "countervailing power" through popular mobilization, political participation, and social empowerment in localities in diverse settings across the world.

The Politics of Inequality and Redistribution

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Hopkin

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at two groups.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019

Course content: This course provides an overview of contemporary redistributive politics in the rich democracies. The objective is to explain why the distribution of wealth, income and opportunities differs so much between democratic countries with similar levels of economic development. The course draws largely on literature from the field of comparative politics, although perspectives from other disciplines - such as economics and social policy - are brought in as appropriate. The focus is on tracing the interactions between political institutions such as political parties and elections, labour market institutions, and the redistributive institutions of the welfare state. This approach is used to examine the growth of the public sector in the twentieth century, the differences between Social Democratic and Christian Democratic welfare states, the impact of wage bargaining institutions, the redistributive implications of age, gender and territorial location, and redistribution through corruption and rent-seeking. By tracing interactions between constitutional arrangements, electoral politics, and the institutions of the welfare system and the labour market, explanations can be provided for the striking differences in social cohesion and human development amongst the world's rich democracies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarah Goff

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: The course starts with the general questions of why equality matters and what is to be equalized. It then introduces some of the major debates in the contemporary egalitarian literature: equality of opportunity versus equality of outcome; luck egalitarianism versus relational equality; and social equality versus global equality. Throughout the course, and particularly in the latter half, we consider concrete social problems and dilemmas faced by those who are committed to the ideal of equality. Topics covered this year include discrimination, and policies that aim to reduce inequalities between social groups.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will submit a short formative essay (up to 1500 words) and will be given feedback on this before submitting their assessed coursework.

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Hopkin

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Available as an outside option and for students on other programmes with the teacher's consent. This course is capped at 3 groups.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: Compatibility and incompatibility of capitalism and democracy; Constitutional restraints on economic policymaking in central banking and property rights; Democracy and economic inequality; World context and the compatibility of democracy and capitalism; Democracy and economic crisis. This course examines the uneasy interaction between the two dominant concepts underpinning political and economic institutions in advanced industrial societies. It addresses in particular questions about the relationship of capitalism to democracy, both conceptually and empirically. We consider whether democracy undermines or supports capitalism, focusing on policies relating to central banking, redistribution, and property rights. We also examine how capitalism may undermine or sustain democracy and whether contemporary international circumstances heighten the tension between democracy and capitalism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

GV4E3 Half UnitDemocratisation, Conflict and Statebuilding

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Hughes

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at one group. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course provides a theoretically informed assessment and critique of the debates on the relationship between democratization, violent conflict and state-building. It seeks to explain why some state-building projects have succeeded while others failed or are failing. Case studies will be drawn from post-communist Europe and Eurasia, principally focusing on the Western Balkans, North and South Caucasus, and Central Asia, including Afghanistan. Themes considered include: state collapse of the USSR and Yugoslavia, theories and forms of state-building, democratization, nationalism and nation-state building, internal armed conflicts and civil wars; conceptualising 'failed state'; nationalist mobilisation and the 'nationalising' state; 'ethnic democracies'; authoritarian state-building; secession and national and ethnic conflict management; "coloured revolutions"; democracy promotion, international conditionality and intervention, in particular by the EU and U.S.; the politics and security challenges posed by 'frozen conflicts'. As an LSE Moodle course, most of the weekly essential readings are available online.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit one essay outline (1000 words) in preparation for the assessed essay, and prepare one group seminar presentation.

Indicative reading: David Laitin, Nations, States and Violence, Oxford, 2007; Philip G. Roeder and Donald Rothchild eds, *Sustainable Peace. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words).

GV4E8 Half UnitConflict and Institutional Design in Divided Societies

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Mitchell

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students on the MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is capped at 2 groups.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2

October 2019.

Course content: The internal resolution of serious ethnic and national conflicts almost inevitably involves some form of power sharing and/or power division (autonomy and federation). While power sharing is often invoked in normative and comparative accounts of conflict resolution, it is less frequently systematically examined. Conflict and Institutional Design (CID) is a comparative analysis of the making, maintenance and too often breaking of power sharing agreements. When and how are peace agreements negotiated? Does UN peacekeeping make a positive difference? What role than transitional justice mechanisms perform? Do they help? What type of power-sharing and federal designs are available? Under what conditions is power sharing likely to help contain conflict, and when does it fail? The course will pay particular attention to what happens after a power-sharing agreement is reached. The institutional focus will include analysis of electoral system design for divided societies, the dynamics of electoral and party competition within ethnic segmentation and consociational governance (power-sharing constitutions, executives, legislatures and federations). Why do some power-sharing regimes succeed while others fail?

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be reading week in Week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Two briefing papers on pre-selected key concepts/cases.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

The research essay will be on a topic of your choice. Having said that the topic will be discussed between each of you and myself and I must approve the topic. The research paper should ideally examine a research question using relevant concepts and theories, and must have an empirical dimension that is relevant to the themes of the course. 'Empirical' is understood in the broadest sense: your material could be a case study set in an appropriate theoretical framework, it could examine a theme with comparative case studies, it could be quantitative or qualitative. Whatever is deemed appropriate to the research question at hand. Bear in mind though that broad surveys are generally not a good idea. After all 5000 words is about half the standard size of a journal article. Much more advice about the essay will be given as the course progresses both collectively and in individual meetings with each of you. One of the aims in asking participants to write a paper is to help you to think about research questions and appropriate research design. Thus we are aiming at more than a traditional essay (which largely summarizes what significant others have said), and to begin to make the transition towards 'postgraduate research' in which you help develop new insights and/or new empirical knowledge. This should also help you when approaching the planning and writing of your MSc dissertation. Since you will be working on something that really interests you I hope that this will be an enjoyable experience.

GV4E9

Approaches and Issues in Public Policy and Administration

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Edward Page

Dr Daniel Berliner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019

Course content: The course is designed to introduce MSc students to major issues in understanding public administration and policy. Students will be divided into two or three classes depending on the number of students taking the course. 18 of the lectures will reflect the topics to be covered in the weekly classes (18 plus 1 revision class) addressing key themes in Public Policy and Public Administration. Some of the lectures may be given by other colleagues teaching on the MSc degree as well as by outside speakers. 2 lectures and classes will cover dissertation writing (for GV499) in the field of public policy and administration. Compulsory for students on MSc Public Policy and Administration and the LSE-PKU Double Degree in Public Administration and Government.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT and the LT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Two formative essays, two in the Michaelmas Term and one in the Lent Term. A third, optional, formative essay will take the form of a mock essay written under exam conditions.

Indicative reading: Paul Cairney (2012) Understanding Public Policy; Merilee Grindle (2012) Jobs for the Boys; B Guy Peters (2018) Politics of Bureaucracy (7th edn); David L Weimer and Aidan R Vining (2016) Policy analysis: Concepts and practice; Steve Balla, Martin Lodge and Edward C Page (eds)(2015) Oxford Handbook on the Classics of Public Policy.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period. Essay (25%, 3000 words).

GV4F2 Half Unit

Popular Politics in the Middle East

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Chalcraft

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies and MSc in Global Politics.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 3 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: The course explores the role of popular politics in the making of the contemporary Middle East and North Africa. The primary focus is on the Arab world but reference is also made to Iran, Israel and Turkey. We study the origins, course and consequences of popular protest, social and political movements, uprisings and revolutions in the region. We ask how a wide variety of subaltern social groups have challenged subordination and brought about new social relations. Our cases are drawn from the early twentieth century to the present. Common topics include the Iranian revolution of 1979, everyday forms of resistance, the first intifada in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (1987-1991), social justice and labour movements, Islamic activism, the Arab uprisings of 2011 and the Rojava Revolution. The course draws on critical, historically-minded and Gramscian approaches, aims to grasp the role of active subjectivity and leadership in context, and evaluates the ways in which a wide variety of movements have aimed to bring about change, and how they have succeeded and/or failed to do so.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 6 of the LT is a reading week.

Formative coursework: In order to develop essay skills and obtain feedback outside of formal assessment, students will complete a 2,000 word formative essay on which they will receive feedback as to overall standard, argument, evidence, structure and style. Students will choose one essay from a list of titles. To prepare for the 5,000 word essay, students will submit for approval a proposed title and a two-page handout summarising the question or puzzle that their essay will address. A seminar will also be held as a workshop to assist students prior to the final submission of their 5,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Abrahamian, Ervand. Iran between Two Revolutions (Princeton University Press, 1982); Achcar, Gilbert. The People Want. (Saqi Books 2012); Bayat, Asef. Street Politics: Poor People's Movements in Iran (Columbia University Press, 1997); Beinlin, Chalcraft, John. Popular Politics in the Making of the Modern Middle East (Cambridge University Press, 2016); Cronin, Stephanie. Subalterns and Social Protest (Routledge, 2007); Kurzman, Charles. The Unthinkable Revolution in Iran (Harvard University Press, 2004); Swedenburg, Ted. Memories of Revolt: The 1936-1939 Rebellion and the Palestinian National Past (Fayetteville: University of Arkansas Press, 2003); Tripp, Charles, The Power and the People (Cambridge: CUP, 2013).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words).

GV4F4 Half Unit

Policy Advice in Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Charlotte Haberstroh

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019

Course content: Many masters graduates in public policy and administration go on to work in organizations that produce or consume policy advice. With this in mind, this course will look at how policy advice is produced and used. It has three objectives: to introduce students to a range of theoretical and empirical scholarship on the issues involved in producing and using policy advice; to develop practical policy analysis and communication skills required of policy advisors; and to expose students to practitioners who produce and use policy advice. Students will develop their policy analysis and communication skills by critically analysing the theoretical scholarship around policy advice and research impact. Moreover, we will apply this analysis to real-world cases during the seminars, in group presentations and exercises, and in the formative and assessed coursework.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Seven of the lecture sessions will be delivered in lecture format, and three will be additional seminars with participation of students from both seminar groups.

In addition to these lectures and seminars, there will also be between two and five guest speaker sessions.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Two formative essays (2,000 and 1,000 words), one group presentation designed to help students in developing their project work, and a mock examination.

Indicative reading: Bardach, Eugene (2009) A Practical Guide for Policy Analysis, Third Edition. Washington, DC: CQ Press. Stone, D.A., (2002). Policy paradox: The art of political decision making, New York: Norton. Scott, C. and Baehler, K. (2010) Adding Value to Policy Analysis and Advice, Sydney: University of New South Wales Press. Weimer, David L. and Vining, Aidan R. (2005) Policy Analysis: Concepts and Practice, Fourth Edition. Upper Saddle River, NJ: Pearson.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Project (50%, 2000 words).

GV4F5 Half Unit

Advanced Study of Key Political Thinkers

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Signy Gutnick Allen

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 1 group.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019.

You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: An advanced undergraduate course in the History of Political Thought or Political Philosophy, or following consultation with the course teacher.

Course content: This course provides an opportunity to study the work of Thomas Hobbes in-depth. It will focus on his major works, with an emphasis on themes in his political theory: authorisation and the state, free will, the nature of the law, political resistance, the international sphere, and the relationship between civil and religious authority. We will situate Hobbes's arguments in their political and theoretical context, as well as exploring both how subsequent theorists understood and employed his ideas, and the major contemporary critical debates in Hobbes scholarship. The seminar will therefore blend intellectual history and political theory. In our final seminars, we will consider how a trio of controversial twentieth-century thinkers (Carl Schmitt, Hannah Arendt and Giorgio Agamben) responded to Hobbes's theory of political sovereignty.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be encouraged to submit one formative extended essay plan of no more than 1500 words. This will form the basis of the final summative assessment. The course leader will provide written feedback on this plan, and provide the opportunity for a one-to-one meeting to discuss the plan, but will not provide a numerical grade or classification for it.

Indicative reading: Hobbes, T., The Elements of Law; Hobbes, T., Leviathan; Hobbes, T., De Cive; Hobbes, T., A Dialogue Between a Philosopher and a Student of the Common Laws of England; Hobbes, T. Writings on Liberty and Necessity; Schmitt, C. The Concept of the Political; Arendt, H., The Origins of Totalitarianism; Agamben, G. Homer Sacer.

Students will also be asked to prepare short written summaries of relevant secondary literature of their choice. Examples could include: Hoekstra, K. (2012). Hobbesian Equality. In S. Lloyd (Ed.), Hobbes Today: Insights for the 21st Century (pp. 76-112).

Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; ABIZADEH, ARASH.

"Hobbes on the Causes of War: A Disagreement Theory." The American Political Science Review, vol. 105, no. 2, 2011, pp. 298–315; Baumgold, D. (2009). Hobbesian Absolutism and the Paradox of Modern Contractarianism. European Journal of Political Theory, 8(2), 207–228; Pettit, P. (2005). Liberty and Leviathan. Politics, Philosophy & Economics, 4(1), 131–151; Ristroph, Alice. "Respect and Resistance in Punishment Theory." California Law Review, vol. 97, no. 2, 2009, pp. 601–632.

Assessment: Essay (90%, 4000 words) and class participation (10%). In addition to the 4,000-word summative essay and 1,500 word formative essay plan, you will also be expected to produce a series of eight reading summaries. These summaries, which should be a minimum of one paragraph, will cover a relevant piece of secondary literature of your choice. This may be taken from the weekly 'Further Reading' list on Moodle, or it can be something you find independently. If you have questions about what counts as an appropriate or relevant piece of work, please get in touch.

The essay would be with 90% of the final mark. The final 10% would be distributed as follows:

Summaries will not be graded individually. Instead, students will receive 10/10 for a minimum of 7/8 summaries, 5/10 for a partial completion of 4/8 summaries, and 0/10 for anything less than this.

GV4F8 Half Unit

Institutions and Global Trade

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephanie Rickard

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and Master of Public Policy. This course is not available as an outside option. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course examines the role institutions play in global trade. Theories from both economics and political science are used to understand how formal institutions shape states' trade policies. Both domestic and international institutions influence countries' trade policies. Therefore, this course examines domestic political institutions, such as electoral systems, as well as international institutions, such as the World Trade Organization.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to complete weekly writing assignments.

Indicative reading: Rose, Andrew K. (2004) Do We Really Know That the WTO Increases Trade? American Economic Review 94(1): 98-114; Rickard, Stephanie (2010) Democratic Differences: Electoral Institutions and Compliance with GATT/WTO Agreements. European Journal of International Relations; Moravcsik, Andy (1989) Disciplining Trade Finance: The OECD Export Credit Arrangement, International Organization; Nooruddin, Irfan and Joel W. Simmons (2006). The Politics of Hard Choices: IMF Programs and Government Spending. International Organization 60: 1001-1033.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

GV4F9 Half Unit

The Politics in Sub-Saharan Africa

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Ofosu

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at one group.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019.

You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course introduces students to some of the major arguments, hypotheses and debates in the literature on politics in Sub-Saharan Africa (SSA). The material will cover the period between the end of the colonial period to the contemporary era. The course will help students develop the skills to be more intelligent consumers of the extant literature on politics in SSA. The primary questions that motivate the course are: (a) to what extent are political outcomes in contemporary Africa a consequence of its history, society, and geography? (b) Why are state structures and institutions weak in Africa compared to most other regions? (c) Why did (do?) African leaders choose growth-killing policies, (d) What is the role of ethnicity in Africa's economic and political development? (e) (Under what conditions) Are multiparty elections better for good governance in sub-Saharan Africa?

To this end, the course is structured into four parts. In the first part, we take a tour of Africa's recent political history, examining pre-colonial structures, the impact of the slave trade and colonialism on the politics, societies, and economies of post-colonial states. We then consider the social and political forces that shape African countries' forms of government and the structure and capacity of their states. In the third part, we briefly survey the determinants of Africa's economic development, focusing specifically on policy choices, legal systems, natural resources and the ambivalent role of foreign aid. The fourth part is devoted to Africa's democratic experiment focusing on the issues of political parties, election fraud and violence, transparency initiatives, and political representation in Africa.

Political scientists have sought to address these and other research questions using varied methodological approaches. Accordingly, the scholarly literature we will review draws on quantitative, historical, and qualitative methods — though students will not need any prior specialized training to understand the debates and questions raised in them. Also, because many developments in African politics cannot be understood in isolation from African societies or their historical context, this course augments political science research with work by journalists, historians, economists, and anthropologists.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Each session will begin with a lecture followed by a discussion. There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to complete one formative essay (1,500 words).

Indicative reading: Rodney, W. (1981). How Europe underdeveloped Africa. Washington, D.C., Howard University Press, Hyden, Goran. African Politics in Comparative Perspective, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006; Bratton, M. & Van de Walle N., Democratic Experiments in Africa, New York, Cambridge University Press, 1997; Jackson, R. and Rosberg C., Personal Rule: Theory and Practice in Africa, Comparative Politics 16:4, 1984. Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in May.

GV4G1 Half Unit

Applied Quantitative Methods for Political Science

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Valentino Larcinese

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: A good knowledge of statistics and of the generalized linear model at the level of MY452.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to current empirical research in political science with a focus on methods for causal inference. The 2 hours weekly meetings consist of mix lectures and tutorials. The lectures will present the techniques and illustrate their applications by making extensive use of the most up-to-date empirical literature. The tutorials will give feedback on formative work and will provide an opportunity to learn how to apply the methods with the statistical software Stata. After reviewing the rationale for simple OLS estimation, particularly focussing on the conditions for a causal interpretation of the coefficients, the course will cover instrumental variables, panel data, differences-in-differences, regression discontinuity and several applications to political science. Students will be stimulated to think in experimental terms and the main theme will be how to replicate or get close to the experimental ideal of natural sciences by using non-experimental observational data..

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: There will be two pieces of formative work to be submitted to the lecturer.

Indicative reading: Most readings will be journal articles. The main references for the methods will be: Thad Dunning: Natural experiments in the social sciences, Cambridge University Press 2012. Angrist & Pischke: Mostly Harmless Econometrics, Princeton University Press 2009. Stock & Watson: Introduction to Econometrics, Pearson 2007 (Second edition)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

GV4G4 Half Unit

Comparative Conflict Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Hughes, Dr William Kissane and Dr Paul Mitchell

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is not available as an outside option. Compulsory core course for and entry restricted to MSc Conflict Studies students only. It is capped at 3 groups.

Course content: What is intra-state conflict? How should we investigate and measure political violence? What causes national and ethnic conflict and other forms of political violence and why does it take particular forms? What are the most effective means of conflict resolution? This course will introduce students to the core theoretical debates on intra-state conflict and political violence by analysing the major research in the field, both quantitative and qualitative. The course is structured around three categories of analysis and explanation: causation, dynamics and outcomes. Central themes include: the role of violence in state formation, development and collapse; theories of legitimacy, contentious politics and control regimes; the causes, dynamics and consequences of civil war; the interaction of group identities, interests and political violence; macro- and micro-analyses of conflict; and top-down and bottom-up methods for ending violent conflict, including intervention, the role of civil society, and institutional designs. The course offers students the opportunity to engage with the main methodological approaches to the study of conflict, including critical case studies, process tracing, small n and large n research, which will enhance their skills for the dissertation. In the weekly lectures and seminars the themes will be explored through a mix of theory-based readings and works which provide in-depth case studies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students are required to complete one formative essay of 2,000 words.

Indicative reading: Charles Tilly (2003) The Politics of Collective Violence, Cambridge: CUP; Paul Collier and Nicholas Sambanis eds (2005), Understanding Civil War, The World Bank, Vols 1-2; Stathis N. GV4G7 Half Unit Marx and Marxism

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Jan Kandiyali

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Theory. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 2 groups.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: The course is an advanced level course providing the opportunity to read canonical texts in the history of Marxism and engage with the more recent normative literature related to these texts. The course will cover key issues in the study of Marxism such as the materialist conception of history, the idea of class and class struggle, the role of the state, the analysis of exploitation, the defence of revolution, the role of the party, the analysis of imperialism. It will introduce to the thought of an author that is often referred to in a range of literatures and will provide the opportunity to read original texts and engage with scholarly controversies (both historical and normative) generated by these texts.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: One formative essay of around 2,500 words.

Indicative reading: McLellan, D. (2000), Karl Marx: Selected Writings, Oxford, Oxford University Press; Cohen, G.A. (2000), Karl Marx's Theory of History: A Defence, Oxford, Oxford University Press; Lichtheim, G. (1982), Marxism: A Historical and Critical Study, Columbia University Press; Rosen, M. (1996) On Voluntary Servitude: False Consciousness and the Theory of Ideology, Polity Press; John Roemer (ed.) (1986), Analytical Marxism, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leigh Jenco

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at one group. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019

Course content: This course will introduce students to recurring debates and concepts within Chinese political thought. We focus on the germinal texts of the Warring States period (circa 400 BCE), such as the Analects of Confucius and the Dao De Jing of Laozi, which continue to shape political debate in East Asia. Reading texts in translation, we will critically examine the variety of normative frameworks that have structured political thinking in Chinese history, with a particular focus on the relationship between personal agency and political outcomes. This is NOT a history course; its broader goal is to help students use Chinese thought to think critically and creatively about political and social life in general and not just in "Chinese" contexts. This course is suitable for students interested in political theory, philosophical approaches to politics, Chinese studies, and/or the history of political thought. Readings are entirely in English and NO prior knowledge of Chinese or China is required.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the LT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework:

- One review essay of a secondary source from the course reading list, 750-1000 words;
- One formative essay of 1500 words maximum excluding footnotes and bibliography, on an assigned topic.

Indicative reading: Ivanhoe, Philip J. Readings in Classical Chinese Philosophy. Edited by Philip J. Ivanhoe and Bryan W. Van Norden. 2nd ed. Hackett Pub Co, 2006. Selections from De Bary, Wm. Theodore, and Richard John Lufrano. Sources of Chinese tradition. Vol. 2, From 1600 through the twentieth century. New York: Columbia University Press, 2000.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

Contemporary India: The World's Largest Democracy in the Early 21st Century

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sumantra Bose

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Global Politics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students taking the MSc Comparative Politics and the MSc Global Politics. Students on other Master's programmes, in all Departments of the School, are welcome to apply to take the course and will be considered subject to availability of space. This course is capped at 30 students (two seminar groups).

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

All students, regardless of programme and department, must apply via LFY to take this course by the stipulated deadline.

Course content: This course is an advanced introduction to the politics and international relations of contemporary India, the world's most populous and diverse democracy and one of the "rising powers" of the 21st century.

After the first week's introductory and overview session, the next six weeks cover in depth the trajectory of India's democracy since the 1950s. The emphasis is on transformative political changes and transitions since the 1990s. Key topics include the transition from a polity dominated by a single party (Congress) to a highly plural and competitive polity defined by the rise of "regional" parties in many of the 29 states of the Indian Union; the evolution from a relatively centralised state to a federal polity; and the rise of Hindu nationalism as India's dominant political force and its implications for India's "secular state". Two continuing challenges with deep roots in the past are also surveyed: the Kashmir problem, and Maoist insurgency in a few areas of the country.

The final three weeks look at India's role in the international politics of the early 21st century. The focus is on India's three most important (and interconnected) external relationships: with China, the United States, and Pakistan.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to make one in-class seminar presentation and write one formative essay of 2,000 words, due at the end of the LT.

Indicative reading: Sumantra Bose, Transforming India: Challenges to the World's Largest Democracy (2013); Sumantra Bose, Secular States, Religious Politics: India, Turkey, and the Future of Secularism (2018); Jean Dreze and Amartya Sen, An Uncertain Glory (2013); Ramachandra Guha, India after Gandhi (2007); Atul Kohli (ed.), The Success of India's Democracy (2001); Christophe Jaffrelot, India's Silent Revolution (2003); Paul Brass, The Politics of India since Independence (1994); David Malone, *Does the Elephant Dance? Feminist Political Theory

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne Phillips

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Gender,

MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course covers some of the central debates in contemporary feminist political theory, with a particular emphasis on the legacy and usefulness of liberalism. The course focuses on debates and differences within feminist political theory, rather than justifications for, or defences of, feminist political theory. Among the problems raised are conceptions of the individual and individual autonomy; the relative invisibility of gender issues in mainstream literature on justice and equality; the tendency to conceive of equality in sex-blind terms; the tendency to presume a universally applicable set of norms. We consider the theoretical debates in relation to a number of contemporary political issues. Topics likely to be addressed include: feminism and contract, individualism and autonomy, identity politics, equality and the politics of difference, marriage, multiculturalism, and universalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for advice and feedback sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit a short essay of roughly 1,500 words. Students will be given a list of questions to choose from, and should choose a topic other than the one they choose for their final assessment.

Indicative reading: Most of the material is in the form of articles, and a detailed list will be handed out at the beginning of the course. The following is only an indicative list: Carole Pateman (1988) The Sexual Contract; Iris M Young (1990) Justice and the Politics of Difference; Wendy Brown (1995) States of Injury; Anne Phillips (1995) The Politics of Presence; Clare Chambers (2017) Against Marriage: An Egalitarian Defence of the Marriage-Free State; Eleonore Lepinard (2011) 'Autonomy and the Crisis of the Feminist Subject: Revisiting Okin's Dilemma', Constellations 18/2:205-221.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

Foundations of Political Theory

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kai Spiekermann

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Theory. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the philosophical and methodological foundations of political theory. It aims to give participants a conceptual toolbox that can be brought to bear on many different substantive problems and research questions in political theory and neighbouring fields. The course introduces some central methodological debates in contemporary political theory, explores the links between political theory and related disciplines, and familiarises students with different approaches to political theorising.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Week 6 will be a reading and feedback week.

Updated following approval from timetables (Alex 31/07/19 AB)

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: David Leopold and Marc Stears (eds.) (2008) Political Theory: Methods and Approaches (Oxford: Oxford University Press); John S. Dryzek, Bonnie Honig and Anne Phillips (eds.) (2008) The Oxford Handbook of Political Theory (Oxford:

The Political Philosophy of Environmental Change

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Spiekermann

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019

Pre-requisites: No formal requirements, but some background in political theory or philosophy and a willingness to study contributions from various disciplines, including the natural sciences, is expected.

Course content: This course analyses political and philosophical questions arising in the context of environmental change, especially climate change. The approach will be interdisciplinary. While the focus is on normative-philosophical issues, we will also make use of positive-analytical and empirical literature, considering issues such as overpopulation, food and water scarcity, deforestation, desertification and the loss of biodiversity. Some of the questions to be discussed are: How should we balance the interests of current and future generations? How does climate change affect our obligations towards the global poor? How do we make policy decisions if the effects are uncertain but potentially severe? Are we individually or collectively responsible for causing climate change, and what follows from this? How do we relate to the environment and what precisely is valuable about preserving it?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. Week 17 (week 6 of the LT) will be a reading and feedback week.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: John Broome (2012) Climate Matters: Ethics in a Warming World, New York (W.W. Norton); Stephen Gardiner, Simon Caney, Dale Jamieson and Henry Shue, eds. Behavioural Political Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rafael Hortalá-Vallve

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2

October 2019.

Pre-requisites: It is required that students have some familiarity with formal models (game theory) and basic statistical concepts.

Course content: In this course we will introduce behavioural concepts and use them at explaining decisions of politicians, candidates for political office, voters, lobbyists, and other actors in the political and policymaking arena. The focus of the course will be academic but we will also visit the recent development by public policy practitioners – both the UK and the US have behavioural insights teams working closely with the executive branch.

We will analyse different political phenomena that do not perfectly fit our rational choice models. We will cover issues such as turnout in large elections, populist policies, framing of public policies to influence public opinion, attribution of blame to politicians, opt-in/opt-out policies and paternalism in policy recommendations, etc. By introducing insights from psychology to our classical political economy models we will study the effects of social, cognitive, and emotional factors on political decisions. Parallel to this formal analysis we will also introduce experimental methods.

Teaching: 24 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in LT week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

1 formative essay of 1000 words to be submitted in LT Week 7.

Indicative reading: Berggren, N (2011), "Time for behavioural political economy? An analysis of articles in behavioural economics", mimeo. Citizen Representation and Democracy in the European Union

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sara Hobolt

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This course offers the theoretically and empirically informed study of citizen representation in the European Union. The principal aim of the course is to develop a better understanding of the functioning of democracy in European Union and provide the analytical tools to evaluate proposals for reform to alleviate the Union's so-called 'democratic deficit'. This course will examine both how citizens are represented in the European Union and how the EU shapes democratic politics in the member states. The first part of the course assesses pathways of representation and accountability in the European Union, focusing on representation of citizens' interests in the Council, Commission and the European Parliament as well other avenues for citizen influence, such as referendums and the Citizens' Initiative. The second part of the course examines political conflict over European integration at the domestic level, focusing on the role of European integration in national politics and public opinion, including the study of euroscepticism. The final part of the course evaluates different proposals for reform with the aim of strengthening democracy and representation in the EU, and students will have the opportunity to develop their own reform proposal.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One formative essay (1,750 words)

Indicative reading: D Curtin, P Mair and I Papadopoulos (2012) Accountability and European Governance (London: Routledge); S Hix, A Noury and G Roland (2007) Democratic Politics in the European Parliament (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press); S Hobolt and J Tilley (2014) Blaming Europe: Responsibility Without Accountability in the European Union; L McLaren (2006) Identity, interests and attitudes to European integration (Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan); G Marks and M Steenbergen, (2004) European Integration and Political Conflict (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press); C van der Eijk and M Franklin (1996) *Choosing Europe? Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the LT.

GV4J6 Half Unit

Game Theory for Research

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephane Wolton

Availability: This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Political Science and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of game theory at the level of GV4C8 is required.

Course content: This course will help students think about the way game theory is applied to research in political science and political economy. Each week, students will study one working paper using game theory. Each lecture will have a substantive and a technical part. There will be an in-depth discussion of the paper (substantive part) and the lecturer will cover the main proofs of the paper on the board (technical part).

Teaching: 21 hours of lectures and 1 hour of lectures in the MT. There will be 1 introductory 1 hour lecture in Week 1, and then 6 lectures of three hours, each covering a different paper, in weeks 2-5 and weeks 7 and 8. In week 11, there will be a three-hour lecture where students will present a research project using game theory.

Formative coursework: Students will meet with the instructor to discuss their research project twice during the MT.

Indicative reading: Two useful (but advanced) game theory textbooks are:

- Game Theory. Drew Fudenberg and Jean Tirole. MIT Press (1991).
- Game Theory. Michael Maschler, Eilon Solan, and Shmuel Zamir. Cambridge University Press (2013).

A reading list of the papers reviewed in the first six lectures will be provided at the beginning of the term.

Assessment: Presentation (50%) and essay (50%) in the MT Week 11.

Students will be assessed on a class presentation on a research project of their choosing which involves game theory (weight 50%) and on writing a referee report on one of the papers covered in the lectures (weight 50%).

Introductory Mathematics for Political Science

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Emiel Awad

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is strongly recommended for MSc Political Economy and Political Science students. It is available for students from other programmes with permission of the instructor.

Course content: The aim of this pre-session course is to provide students with the essential mathematical background for the core courses in the MSc PSPE programme. The course will cover key concepts in algebra (definition of function, derivation, limits), maximization problems (constrained and unconstrained, Envelope and Implicit Function Theorems), and some notions of probability (Bayes' rule, random variables).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT.

Please note that all the teaching for this course will take place in the first week of Michaelmas term.

Indicative reading: There is no required reading for this course.

Transparency and Accountability in Government

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Berliner

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and Master of Public Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 1 group. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: Is "sunlight the best disinfectant"? Can information empower citizens to hold their government accountable? How have information technologies been used to enable civic engagement and participation? What are the relationships between transparency, secrecy, corruption, and accountability?

This course will familiarise students with the theory and practice of transparency and accountability in government, enabling them to critically address these questions and engage meaningfully in fast-moving contemporary policy debates.

The course will offer a grounding in theories of democracy, representation, and accountability, as well as debates over the merits of different transparency policies in light of competing values like secrecy and privacy. The course will also enable students to evaluate the role played by different forms of information in political systems, as well as to critically assess the theories of change and assumptions behind information-based policy initiatives, and to evaluate the evidence base supporting such initiatives.

The course has a global scope, focusing on applications in both developed and developing countries, and on policy types including freedom of information, information-based regulation, participatory budgeting, crowdsourced policymaking, "civic tech," open data, campaign finance and asset disclosures, and applications of transparency to sectors like extractive industries, the environment, and public health.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of workshops in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one formative essay of 1,500 words in the LT.

GV4K2 Half Unit

Postcolonial and Comparative Political Theory

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leigh Jenco CON.4.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students on the MSc in Political Theory programme.

Course content: This course will examine the consequences of, and responses to, the historic domination of Euro-American forms of knowledge in the field of political theory. Situating political theory as one of many disciplines that reinforce the cultural imperialism of colonial orders, the course will consider how postcolonial theorists have diagnosed this form of epistemic imperialism. We will go on to discuss how recent attempts at forging a "comparative political theory" might (or might not) productively engage more diverse forms of thinking for the purpose of making our conversations about political life more truly global, rather than parochially "Western." The course will provide students with the vocabulary and conceptual tools to navigate this difficult theoretical terrain, through a focus on a close reading of primary texts, including both classics of postcolonial criticism as well as texts from the non-Western world that respond to or challenge such diagnoses of the modern condition. This course examines the very question of marginalization in the field of political science, using a huge range of writing from thinkers across space and time (from East, South, and Southeast Asia; from the early modern period; from the mid-20th century; from contemporary debates), including some in translation.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the LT.

This will be a 2.5 hour seminar-style discussion class, focused on close readings of dense theoretical material. A short lecture will set out the basics of the assigned reading material for each class, and guide students to navigate it on the basis of their own needs and interests. The remaining time will then be used for more organic discussion of the assigned readings, which students are required to do in advance. I will also use some in-class time to discuss expectations for essays, and to give general feedback about essay writing after the formative essay has been marked. There will be one in-class quiz in the latter half of the course.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

GV4K4 Half Unit

The Politics of Globalization

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathias Koenig-Archibugi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Politics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at two groups. Students on the MSc Global Politics are guaranteed access. The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Course content: This is the core course of the MSc Global Politics. It examines the nature, the causes and the political consequences of globalization in a variety of domains, including security, culture, the economy, and the environment. The course aims at enabling students to assess the extent of continuity and transformation in key areas of global politics.

The course will analyse how globalization shapes and in turn is shaped by, politics within countries, between countries and beyond countries. It will introduce the main approaches to the study of globalization and examine how it affects patterns of conflict, cooperation and competition between a range of politically relevant actors, including governments, political parties and citizens: great powers: intergovernmental and nongovernmental organisations: global companies and other non-state groups. These patterns of patterns of conflict, cooperation and competition will be illustrated with examples drawn from a variety of policy domains, such as security, economy, environment, health and migration. The course will also assess the challenges to and opportunities for democracy in a global age.

Teaching: 11 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the MT.

All students are expected to produce one written essay plus one short presentation on topics assigned to them.

GV4M6 Half Unit

Modern African Political Philosophy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Katrin Flikschuh

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at one group.

The deadline for applications is 17:00 on Tuesday 1 October 2019. You will be informed of the outcome by 17:00 on Wednesday 2 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: N/A

Course content: This course introduces students of political theory to post-independent African philosophical and political thinking. The chief objective of the course is to get students to engage with the intellectual heritage of the African continent and critically to re-think historically ingrained misperceptions about its peoples and cultures. Please note that this course focuses on African philosophical thinking. It will suit students who enjoy the analysis and interpretation of abstract ideas. The orientation is not anthropological or developmental; nor is this a course in 'post-colonial studies' more broadly conceived. There will be three broad blocks:

1. Methodology: 'What is African Philosophical Thinking?' We will examine the development from an oral to a written tradition and the particular methodological challenges involved.
2. Substantive Issues: 'Personhood, Agency, and Community'. We will discuss African thinkers' claims to the distinctiveness of African cultures' conceptions of self and society, and how these in turn impact conceptions of moral and political agency.
3. Implications: We shall ask how African thinkers conceive their social and political contexts and how their views do or do not cohere with Western thinking about African developmental challenges.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be 10 weekly sessions of 2 hours each. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of MT, during which there will be no seminar. Instead, there will be extended office hours for individual tutorials to discuss planned course work. The seminars will be discussion based, with 30 minute introductory lectures that introduce the weekly reading material and establish the intended focus of discussion. There will be some assigned group work within some of the weekly sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 formative essay in the MT.

Formative assessment will consist of an essay of maximally 2500 words in length. A list of essay questions will be made available by Week 3 of MT. Students may design their own essay questions, if they prefer to do so. However, they must clear their proposed essay question with the course convener beforehand. Course work must be submitted by the end of Week 7. The essay will be read and commented on. It will be assigned a guide-mark but will not form part of the summative assessment. Essays substantially above 2500 words will not be read.

Indicative reading: Anthony Kwame Appiah, In My Father's House. Africa in the Philosophy of Culture (OUP 1992). Kwame Gyekye, *Tradition and Modernity. Emmanuel Chukwudi Eze, On Reason. Rationality in a World of Cultural Conflict and Racism (Duke University Press 2008).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

The assessed work for this course consists of one extended essay of 5000 words, on a course topic either chosen from the list of essay questions or designed by the student him or herself in consultation with the course convener. Students are permitted to use their formative essay as a basis for their assessed essay. However, the assessed essay must advance substantially beyond the argument made in the formative essay; students must not submit the same work twice. The assessed essay must be submitted electronically to the Departmental Office. The submitted essay will undergo a plagiarism check, including self-plagiarism. Plagiarism is a serious academic offence which, if proven, will likely incur the penalty of official course failure. Late submissions will incur penalties in the form of mark deduction.

GY400 Half Unit

The Economics of Urbanisation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Henderson Stc.506b

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: No specific LSE course requirements. At a minimum, students must have an analytical 1 unit course in intermediate micro economics (or equivalent) and a basic statistics or econometrics course. A more advanced econometrics course would be very helpful.

Course content: This MSc course will offer students the opportunity to learn some of the conceptual foundations and empirical regularities involved in studying why countries urbanise, the nature of structural and spatial transformation involved in the urbanisation process and the development of systems of cities. Complementing this will be a study of the internal spatial transformation of cities, the evolution of the location of production activities, the formation and role of slums, and the evolution of land market regulations and property right assignments. Critical to understanding these processes will be learning about the role of regulation and political processes, as well as policy initiatives, in shaping outcomes. The course will also examine the current process of urbanisation in Asia and Africa in the various special contexts of different regions and countries, drawing from lessons of the past as experienced in Latin America and parts of the developed world.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. The first two weeks of seminars will involve a review of basic statistical methods to help prepare students for class and lecture material.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: Duranton G. (2008), 'Viewpoint: From cities to productivity and growth in developing countries', Canadian Journal of Economics, Vol. 41, No. 3, 689-736. Ghani E, S. Contemporary Debates in Human Geography

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low STC S512

Other teacher involved: Dr Ryan Centner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Human Geography and Urban Studies and MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Compulsary for MPhil/PhD Human Geography and Urban students without MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies.

Course content: This is a reading seminar course, organised around key works pertinent to cities, development and human geography. While by no means comprehensive, the syllabus provided in the first week of the course will detail some key debates in geography, urban studies and development studies, which we explore in some detail over the term. The readings will reflect a range of approaches to the disciplines of human geography, urban studies and development studies, in order to convey the dynamic interplay between these three areas of scholarship. Discussions with colleagues in these areas of research, alongside readings of foundational texts, will be aimed at exploring how theory and evidence connect in critical geographical research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 10 hours of lectures in the LT.

10 x two-hour directed reading lecture/seminars meeting in MT and LT. Students (including those auditing the course) are expected to read, circulate critical comments, and participate actively in discussion.

Formative coursework: A 2,500 word essay

Indicative reading: Readings focused on in this course will vary from session to session. A detailed syllabus will be provided at the beginning of the course, but would include works such as T Cresswell (2013) Geographic Thought; D Gregory et al, The Dictionary of Human Geography (5th edn), 2009; D Harvey, Social Justice and the City, 2009; D Harvey, The Enigma of Capital, 2010; N Smith, Uneven Development, 2008; D Massey, Space, Place and Gender, 1994; E Soja, Seeking Spatial Justice, 2010; R Peet and M Watts, Liberation Ecologies, 2004; J Ferguson, The Antipolitics Machine, 1994; T Mitchell, Rule of Experts, 2002; A Roy, Poverty Capital, 2010; and D Gregory and Allan Pred, Violent Geographies, 2006.

GY404 Half Unit Inclusive Growth

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MSc in Local Economic Development and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A good background is required in one of the fields of economic geography, economics, public policy, social policy or regional and urban studies.

Course content: Economic change is reshaping local economies, with important implications for work, incomes and poverty. Trade and new technologies are polarising labour markets and creating new types of employment in both the developed and developing world. Despite global falls in poverty, living standards in many disadvantaged regions have been stagnant. And while some cities and regions have managed to create skilled jobs, others have struggled to do so. How can policymakers manage this change and create good jobs in disadvantaged cities and regions? How can local policymakers reduce poverty and disadvantage? Is Inclusive Growth feasible?

This course focuses on the relationship between local economic development, labour markets, poverty and living standards. Each week we cover academic theory and evidence and then relate this to a current policy challenge. Topics include the geography of poverty, spatial labour markets, labour market change, the challenge of high- and low-skills equilibriums, and the geography of social mobility. The second half of the term focuses on the critical analysis of policy agendas. Topics include the impact of high-tech strategies on low-wage workers, spatial targeting of anti-poverty efforts, microfinance and entrepreneurship, and Inclusive Growth.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

3 hours per week with a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to make presentations and participate actively in seminars.

Indicative reading: Lee, N. 2018. Inclusive Growth in Cities: A Sympathetic Critique, Regional Studies, 53(9), 424-434. OECD. 2014. All on board: Making inclusive growth happen. Paris: OECD; E Moretti, 2013, The New Geography of Jobs.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

GY409 Half Unit Globalization and Regional Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Storper

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited.

If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created.

For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Course content: The economic geography of globalization, and examination of some of the principal effects of globalization on economic development of cities, regions and nations. Theories of regional economic development, location, and trade are applied to the contemporary process known as "globalization", and used to decipher this phenomenon and its effects on development, employment, and political institutions. A number of major issues for regional and industrial policy are considered, including trade, convergence/divergence, corporate power, knowledge and technology, governance, and inter-place competition.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate in group debates throughout the course, with written presentation slides required. Feedback is provided in the sessions.

Course content: Why do some regions and territories perform systematically better than others in terms of economic development and wealth? What are the key drivers of local and regional economic performance? How can local and regional economic development policies boost economic activity and improve socio-economic conditions in disadvantaged areas? Globalisation and technological change have challenged the 'traditional' answers to these questions and call for new analytical and policy tools. This course provides students with an in-depth understanding of the macro and meso-level determinants of regional and local economic development and of the policies influencing these drivers. After examining the existing disparities in regional economic performance between and within a number of advanced, emerging and developing countries, the course illustrates the scope and justification for government intervention in this area. Various theories and approaches to local and regional economic development, leading to different policy prescriptions, are analysed in order to identify different macro and meso determinants of economic performance (from innovation and human capital to knowledge spillovers and global networks). In particular, the course dwells on the regional policy of the European Union (EU) - one of the most important large-scale regional policy experiences - in order to discuss the pros and cons of existing policy tools and illustrate the benefits of a 'balanced' approach to the analysis, design, management and implementation of regional and local economic development policies in a globalising world. In this context, special attention will also be devoted to the cases of the United States, China and India in a comparative perspective.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 27 hours of seminars in the MT.

Seminar teaching consist of a combination of seminars and debates.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT in order to prepare for the Take Home Exam.

GY413 Half Unit Regional Development and Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andres Rodriguez-Pose STC S4.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Inequalities and Social Science, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Pre-requisites: A good background is required in one of the fields of management, economics, economic geography, regional and urban studies.

Course content: This course deals with the management and institutions of local and regional economic development. It dwells on the socio-economic implications of the emergence of local and regional governments and institutions as key actors in the design and implementation of economic development strategies across the world. In particular, the first section of the course analyses the consequences for economic efficiency and equality of the gradual but relentless shift of development responsibilities from the national and the supranational to the local and regional scale, linked of political and fiscal decentralisation. The second section of the course focuses, from a theoretical and empirical perspective, on the strategies being implemented by subnational governments across the world in order to cope and redress development problems. Strategies based on the building of infrastructure, the attraction of foreign direct investment, the support to local production and the promotion of local human resources are analysed in different institutional and governance contexts. The course draws on examples from Europe, the US, Latin America, and Asia.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate in group debates throughout the course, with written presentation slides required. Feedback is provided in the sessions.

Indicative reading: R J Bennett, Decentralization, Local Governments and Markets: Towards a Post-Welfare Agenda, Clarendon Press, 1990; N Brenner, New state spaces: Urban governance and the rescaling of statehood, Oxford University Press, 2004; P Dicken, Global Shift: Mapping the Changing Contours of the World Economy, Sage, 2007; J D Donahue, Disunited States, Harper Collins, 1997; R Kanbur and A J Venables, Spatial inequality and development, Oxford University Press, 2005; A Pike, A Rodríguez-Pose and J Tomaney, Local and regional development, Routledge, 2006; R J Putnam, Making Democracy Work: Civic Traditions in Modern Italy, Princeton University Press, 1993; A Pike, A Rodríguez-Pose & J Tomaney, Handbook of Local and Regional Development, Routledge, 2011; A J Scott, ed., Global city-regions, Oxford University Press, 2001; M Storper, The Regional World: Territorial Development in a Global Economy, Guilford Press, 1997. GY415 Half Unit Local Capacity and Economic Development Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simona Iammarino STC S410

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

If you are taking an Environment Programme, please note that your dissertation surgeries of Week 6 would likely clash with the fieldtrip, please consult with your Programme Director.

Course content: This course is aimed at understanding the micro foundations of local economic development, that is the determinants and effects of the behaviour, strategies and choices of key economic actors: local firms, both small and large, multinational enterprises, universities and other education and research organisations, government bodies, NGOs, and local communities. The study of different theoretical approaches, empirical evidence and implications of the behaviour of such actors, and their interactions and linkages, will help building up the analytical framework to interpret the genesis of localised economic systems, their dynamics and evolution over time and the policy options available, particularly, but not exclusively, from a bottom-up perspective. We will make use of an extended array of empirical examples and case studies across regions and industries, both in advanced and emerging economies, and consider the transferability of lessons and insights over space and time. The course is particularly concerned with place-sensitive approaches and locally initiated and managed processes which may involve a wide range of actors in shaping and implementing local economic development initiatives.

There is a 3-day field-trip (not including travel time) to L'Aquila, Italy, associated with this course. The field-trip will take place during the first half of the Michaelmas Term Reading Week (Week 6). Students should be aware that, as participation is voluntary, they will need to fund themselves. Participation is encouraged, however it will not be assessed in any way. Students who decide they do not want to participate will not be detrimentally affected on the course. Further information will be provided during the first workshop of GY415 in Week 1. Estimated costs will be communicated to all offer holders in advance of registration.

Teaching: 30 hours (1 hour and 30 minutes of lecture, followed by a short break and 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshop with teamwork and student presentations) in the MT. 3-hour overall per week, from Week 1 to 11, with the exception of Week 6 (Reading week) for the fieldtrip. In Week 10 of the MT there will also be an additional 4-hour revision and surgery session for the assessed coursework.

Formative coursework: Policy Brief outline to be submitted by week 5 and group presentations on case studies in different weeks of MT: written feedback will be provided on all formative coursework in order to help prepare for the assessed Policy Brief.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly based on academic articles and papers, all available through @reading list. Some chapters will also be used from books such as: A. Pike, A. Rodriguez-Pose & J. Tomaney, Local and Regional Development, 2006; B-A. Lundvall, KJ Joseph, C. Chaminade & J. Vang (eds.), Handbook of Innovation Systems and Developing Countries, 2009; J Cantwell & E Amann (eds.), Innovative Firms in Emerging Market Countries, 2012; S Iammarino & P McCann Multinationals and Economic Geography. Location, Technology and Innovation, 2013. In general, all readings are electronically available from the LSE Library unless otherwise indicated.

Assessment: Policy brief (100%) in the MT. A 2,500 word Policy Brief is due in the week after the end of MT.

Environmental Regulation: Implementing Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Perkins STC.S413, Dr Michael Mason STC.S510, Dr Eugenie Dugoua and Dr Nora Sylvander

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po).

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited.

If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

This course cannot be taken with GY465 Concepts in Environmental Regulation or GY475 Issues in Environmental Governance.

Course content: This course provides critical insights into the characteristics, processes and evolving dynamics of environmental policy, regulation and governance. In MT, the course considers the rationale for public policy intervention, and the factors that shape the influence of different interest groups over government policy making. It proceeds to examine the nature, design and performance of different policy instruments, together with the various influences governing policy implementation processes. In LT, the course highlights key themes in environmental regulation informed by the concept of multi-level governance. This concept suggests new alignments and forms of regulation within and across state borders: the themes chosen to explore this concept include governing technological change, international negotiations, governance beyond the state, and different rationalities of regulation (science, ethics and justice).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare one formative essay, as well as give one presentation on a specified topic, in the MT: feedback will be provided on both. In the LT, students are required to give one presentation on an agreed topic: this will be graded with feedback.

Indicative reading: While there is no one single text that covers all aspects of the course, you are strongly advised to consult the following:

Environmental and Resource Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Benjamin Groom (STC 4.20)
Additional teacher(s): Dr S Roth, Dr E Dugoua

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Pre-requisites: A background in economics and calculus is highly desirable.

Course content: Environmental and resource economics is at the forefront of the response to local, national and global environmental problems. As such, it has become an essential part of the thinking and actions of national and regional governments, as well as international agencies and organizations. This course seeks to develop a rigorous treatment of the theory of environmental and natural resource economics, and to show how formal economic thinking can assist real world policymaking in areas such as climate change, ecosystem & biodiversity conservation and water resource management.

The course consists of four components which cluster together the principal areas of interest and research in environmental and natural resource economics. In addition to learning the economic foundations of environmental and resource economics, these four components are: (i) the economics of pollution control; (ii) the economics of renewable and non-renewable resources; (iii) the economics of sustainable development; and, (iv) the study of international environmental problems and agreements.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete one written formative assignment of 1,500 words in Michaelmas Term, on which they will receive written feedback.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. The following texts will be particularly useful:

Michaelmas Term: Kolstad, C., Environmental Economics, Oxford: Oxford University Press, (2000). L. Perman, R., Y. Ma, J. McGilvray and M. Common, Natural Resource and Environmental Economics, Pearson Addison Wesley, Fourth Edition (2011), and Third Edition (2003)

Lent Term: Conrad, J., Resource Economics, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, (2005); L. Perman, et al., Natural Resource and Environmental Economics, Pearson Addison Wesley, Fourth Edition (2011), and Third Edition (2003);

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period. Essay (25%, 3000 words).

GY427 Half Unit

Climate Change: Science, Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Simon Dietz

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Environment and Development and MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. Priority will be given to students on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change followed by students on the MSc in Environment and Development and MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. Students on the MPA will only be offered a place if spaces are available. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Course content: A comprehensive guide to the issue of climate change, from fundamental concepts in climate science, through estimating the future impacts of climate change on economies and societies, to cutting greenhouse gas emissions by using economic instruments such as carbon trading. Interdisciplinary, but with an emphasis on economic analysis, albeit taught in a non-technical style.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will carry out regular homework tasks and answer questions in lectures using Responseware.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. The following texts will be particularly useful: Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (2014). Climate Change 2014: Fifth Assessment Report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. Maslin, M. (2008). Global Warming: a Very Short Introduction. Oxford: Oxford University Press. Stern, N. (2007). The Economics of Climate Change: the Stern Review. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the period between MT and LT.

GY428 Half Unit

Applied Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Benjamin Groom (STC 420) and Dr Daniele Fanelli (COL 7.07)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Environmental Economics, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Local Economic Development and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Pre-requisites: A background in undergraduate statistics or, preferably, econometrics is required

Course content: This course will provide an introduction to quantitative methods in use in modern environmental and resource economics. Emphasis will be placed on the practical use of empirical tools. This applied focus will be complemented by the investigation of assumptions and proofs that can improve the understanding of empirical results. Students will apply the methods taught using statistical/econometric software and data documenting some topical public policy questions. These applications will take place in ten seminars of one hour each. During the seminars the students will gain understanding of the software STATA. Additionally, in the lectures and sometimes seminars, selected papers in quantitative environmental economics will be critically discussed. In general the course will attempt to use examples from relevant and topical empirical papers published in the area of applied econometrics and environmental economics. The module will cover several estimators. We will start with the standard linear regression model, its assumptions, violations and testing procedures. Some non-Linear models will also be presented, including Multivariate Probit and Logit Models (Maximum Likelihood). Extensions of the Linear regression model to incorporate panel data estimators and Instrumental Variables (IV) approaches (e.g. Two Stage Least Squares and Fixed and Random Effects models) will be also covered. The course will conclude with a discussion of programme evaluation methods and randomised control trials (RCTs).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Following the seminars, exercises will be submitted for formative appraisal, and feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component, but the following texts will be particularly useful:

Part I: (Weeks 1-7 with Daniele Fanelli): A Agresti & B Finlay, Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences.

Part II: (Weeks 8-11 with Ben Groom):

- Stock J.H. and M.W. Watson (2011). Introduction to Econometrics. Third Edition Pearson International Edition;
- J. Wooldridge (2006), Introductory Econometrics: A modern approach, Thomson;
- Angrist J and Pischke J.S. (2009) Mostly Harmless Econometrics, Princeton.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

GY438 Half Unit Cities and Social Change in East Asia

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Hyun Shin STC. S601f

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students able to be accommodated is limited.

If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created.

For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator

Pre-requisites: N/A

Course content: This is an interdisciplinary urban course that encourages students to develop a critical understanding of how urban space is transformed in diverse social, economic and political settings, and what social implications are made upon the powerless and the poor. Examining the process of socio-spatial transformation in times of condensed urbanisation and economic development, this course makes use of Asia as an empirical site to unsettle Western notions of urban development. Various examples of urban policies and practices will be drawn from cities across East and Southeast Asia, with emphasis on newly industrialised capitalist economies as well as transitional economies such as mainland China.

Focusing on urban questions in particular, the course comprises of lectures and seminars on the following themes:

- the political economy of urbanisation;
- the politics of land;
- global gentrifications;
- displacement and dispossession;
- cities of spectacle and mega-events;
- urban social movements

Students will also have opportunities to view and discuss various sources of audiovisual materials and documentaries related to these themes.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures, 12 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the LT.

Seminars start from Week 2.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete one essay plan for their assessed essay and blog.

Indicative reading: Harvey, D. (1989) The Urban Experience, Johns Hopkins University Press; Hsing, Y-t. (2010) The Great Urban

GY441 Half Unit The Politics of Housing

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Romola Sanyal

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to examine the politics of housing from a transnational and comparative perspective. The course will link the empirical analyses on housing to theoretical discussions on class, community, gender, ethnicity and design. It will analyse housing issues ranging from informality, homelessness and gated communities to housing tenure, architectural design and housing as a humanitarian tool. This is an interdisciplinary course, drawing upon debates in fields such as Architecture, Urban Planning, Geography, Sociology, Anthropology and Development Studies. The course will help students develop a broad knowledge of the politics of housing in different countries and how they intersect with issues such as urban development, housing finance and public policy. It will also encourage students to think about housing issues relationally and globally.

Themes

Some of the themes covered in this course include: Traditional Housing, Community and Housing Design, Gender and Housing, Race and Ethnicity and Housing, Homelessness, Housing and Emergencies etc.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

GY447 Half Unit The Economics of Regional and Urban Planning

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Felipe Carozzi S416

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Local Economic Development and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited.

If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created.

For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator

Pre-requisites: Students should normally have completed an introductory course in economics. Students without this background may wish to attend the micro-economic section of EC100 Economics A together with the Pre-sessionals GY447 and GY447.1 workshops.

Course content: The course aims to provide an economic framework in which to analyse the structure of economic activity within the urban and regional context; the impact of this structure on urban form; the role of government at the local level and local economic policy applications. Topics include: The determinants of industrial, commercial and residential location. The interaction between activities within a spatial context. The economics of land markets and of the development process. The determinants of rents and densities. Economic models of urban structure. Sources of market failure in the urban economy. The rationale of government intervention. Techniques of intervention in the urban and environmental context. The role of the public sector: pricing, allocation, production and investment decisions. Urban and regional economic policy issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of seminars and 5 hours of workshops in the MT. 1 hour of workshops and 2 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will also be 5 hours of pre-sessionals classes in Week 0 provided mainly for those without a previous economic background. The MT workshop is also aimed at those without a previous economic background.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Planning Practice and Research

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nancy Holman STC315b and Dr Alan Mace STC315a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to provide students with an understanding of the current planning issues faced by practitioners and their policy responses. This will begin with an introduction to the planning context of London and an overview of the British planning system. This will be followed by weekly sessions with invited speakers involved in planning practice and research. They will be engaged in relevant current research or be practicing planners or policy-makers from central or local government, research agencies or consultancy. The content will consist of a series of guided walks, lectures and seminars covering issues of current concern and debate within urban and regional policy and planning.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of lectures in the LT.

There will normally be 25 hours of lectures and seminars, mainly from visiting speakers, plus study trips. These will take place throughout the year.

Assessment:

There is no Assessment in this course but the content will be relevant to the assessed courses in the MSc Regional and Urban Planning Studies Programme.

Urban Research Methods

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Hyun Shin S601F

Additional teacher(s): Professor Sylvia Chant; Professor Gareth Jones; Dr Neil Lee; Professor Claire Mercer; Dr Romola Sanyal; Dr Austin Zeiderman, Dr Mara Nogueira

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available on the MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) for those students who choose the MSc in Urbanisation and Development track for their Year 2 studies.

Course content: The course aims to introduce students to the key methods that are frequently mobilised to carry out research on urbanising societies around the world. Additionally, the course is to help students think more systematically about methodological considerations in order to execute a successful dissertation research. Below is a list of themes to be covered in the course:

- Designing an urban research project and ethics
- Comparative (case) studies
- Working with archives
- Interviews and focus groups
- Conducting ethnography
- Quantitative data and questionnaires
- Analysis and write-up

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of workshops in the ST.

Workshops are for students to present their research proposals. Seminars normally involve individual and/or small group activities, some of which are carried out in advance in preparation for seminars.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Course content: This course is concerned with the foundations and practical use of applied economics in the context of project appraisal and policy evaluation. Course content will be drawn from the following. Introduction to economic aspects of project appraisal and cost-benefit analysis. Efficiency, equity and distributional concerns. Measurement of costs and benefits with a specific emphasis on practical methods to value non-market goods and services. The use of appraisal and evaluation in policy processes. The application of project appraisal and policy evaluation methods to policy sectors such as transport, health and the environment. Seminars and lectures will focus on applied case studies and the tools involved in the appraisal of projects. Examples particularly from environmental, health, development and transport policy in the developed and developing world.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. Emphasis will be placed on texts, case study material and state-of-the-art contributions to, for example, the literature on non-market valuation. For an overview and introduction to the main issues covered by the course, students may wish to consult the following: G Atkinson and S Mourato, "Cost-Benefit Analysis and the Environment", OECD Environment Working Paper No. 97; G Atkinson et al. (2018) Cost-Benefit Analysis and the Environment: Further Developments and Uses, 2018; AE Boardman et al, Cost-Benefit Analysis: Concepts and Practice, 2018 (chapters 1 and 2).

Applied Urban and Regional Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christian Hilber

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact and MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Pre-requisites: The course assumes that students already have knowledge of economics equivalent to a good first degree in the subject. It is available as an option to students who can show that they are suitably qualified.

Course content: This course aims to provide students with a theoretical and empirical understanding of urban economic processes and price determination in land and real property markets within an institutional context. Examples of topics covered include: the functioning of cities and the urban system; the determinants of urban structure; patterns of urban land use; the determinants of urban growth - theory and evidence; land and real property markets; the impact of land market regulation including the economic impact of land use planning; local public finance and house price capitalisation; real estate cycles; homeownership; commercial real estate. The institutional frame of reference within which the course is taught relates mainly to Western Europe and the United States.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 2 hours of workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students can submit up to two essays of up to 1500 words (one per teacher/teaching term). Essay topics are exam questions from a previous year. Submission is voluntary. Upon request, teachers are happy to provide feedback on seminar presentations.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading list will be given out at the beginning of the course. Much of the reading will be journal articles. However, some important items are: J. Brueckner, Lectures on Urban Economics, 2011; P.C. Cheshire & E.S. Mills, Handbook of Regional and Urban Economics Vol. III: Applied Urban Economics, North Holland, 1999; P.C. Cheshire, M. Nathan & H. Overman, Urban Economics and Urban Policy: Challenging Conventional Policy Wisdom, 2014; D. DiPasquale & W. Wheaton, Urban Economics and Real Estate Markets, 1996; M. Fujita, Urban Economic Theory, 1988; E.L. Glaeser, Triumph of the City, 2011; Henderson, J.V. and J.F. Thisse, Handbook of Regional and Urban Economics Vol. IV, North Holland, 2004; J.F. McDonald, Fundamentals of Urban Economics, 1997; J.F. McDonald & D.P. McMillen, Urban Economics and Real Estate, Theory and Policy, 2011; B. O'Flaherty, City Economics, 2005; A. O'Sullivan, Urban Economics (7th edn.), 2009.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

GY458 Half Unit

Real Property Market Practice

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Cheshire STC402 and Dr Felipe Carozzi STC416

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is available by arrangement with the teacher responsible as an option to other students on other programmes who have an appropriate academic background and an interest in real estate markets.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator

Course content: An examination of how real property markets operate in practice and of the analytical techniques and data available for analysts and practitioners. Specific areas of study include: the availability and structure of data sets in the context of property: problems of: price measurement; user/investment categories; professional methods of valuation (appraisal) and possible impact on price formation: creating and manipulating datasets; measuring property performance; analysis to guide portfolio selection; anticipating and evaluating investment opportunities. Specific sector case studies: industrial, retail, commercial, and residential: investment portfolio choice and management. Briefing on course project/essay. Defining research objectives and methodology in practice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 4 hours of seminars in the MT. 16 hours of seminars, 6 hours of workshops and 20 minutes of help sessions in the LT.

The majority of the lectures in the Michaelmas term are provided by senior practitioners in real estate research and analysis. The seminars/workshop sessions are organised to prepare students for their projects. Time will be allocated for students to have up to 20 minute one-on-one meetings during the Lent Term to discuss their projects. In addition there will be voluntary statistical/econometric workshops and support available in the LT.

Indicative reading: There is no course text. CSO guides to Government Statistics; publications from Investment Property Databank and other research departments and organisations in the real property markets; Journal of Property Research, Estates Gazette.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

A 3,000 word project or essay identifying a research problem in real estate markets on a specific issue (e.g., 'The Impact of the 2008 Financial Crisis on Office Rents in Hong Kong', 'Impact of Incomes on House Prices in the UK', 'Which Side of Beijing-Tianjin High-Speed Railway Benefits Most in terms of Housing Prices?' or 'The Economic Implications of Use-Class Designations in England') which will require the student to investigate data sources, suggest techniques of data analysis and provide conclusions on the problem set. Topics must be agreed with the teachers responsible.

GY459 Half Unit

Urban Theory and Policy in the Global South

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mara Nogueira

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research) and MSc in Inequalities and Social Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Pre-requisites: None.

Course content: This course aims to provide a grounding in key debates in urban studies and policy with reference to the Global South. It highlights the interconnections between evolving urban ideas and research and policy. Anticipated topics include The City and the Urban Paradigm; Social Life of Cities; Gender, Poverty and the city, Inequality and Slums; Class and Elite spaces; Governance and Rights to the City; Resilience and Environmental Justice, Violence, conflict and security. Dedicated lectures will draw from staff research, with particular emphasis on Brazil, Colombia, India, Mexico, South Africa and The Gambia.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One essay of 1,500 words (formative).

Indicative reading: A comprehensive reading list mostly focussing on articles will be provided. Useful books include:

- A. Amin & N. Thrift Seeing like a City (2016);
- S. Chant & C. McIlwaine, Cities, Slums and Gender in the Global South (2016);
- M. Davis, Planet of Slums (2006);

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the LT.

GY460 Half Unit

Techniques of Spatial Economic Analysis

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Steve Gibbons S511

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Economic Geography, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Social Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator

Pre-requisites: Students must have a good understanding of statistics and applied micro-econometrics at an undergraduate level or, for example, have studied Applied Quantitative Methods (GY428) in Michaelmas term or another course which introduces topics such as instrumental variables and panel data methods. It is advisable to look at the first two key readings listed below before signing up for this course. Students who are comfortable working with computers, data and already have basic familiarity with STATA, R or other statistics/econometrics software will get the most out of this course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to develop the technical tools necessary to understand and analyse spatial economic and social phenomena and to apply quantitative techniques to analyse economic and social problems, processes and policies at the urban and regional scale. The course also provides a hands-on introduction to using Geographical Information Systems and other spatial computer applications for research purposes, but you should not expect to get a full training in GIS from this course. Topics typically include: Spatial representation, spatial data and Geographical Information Systems; spatial weights, aggregation and smoothing methods; spatial econometric models and neighbourhood effects; answering causal questions in the spatial context; spatial interaction and discrete choice models; spatial cluster and point pattern analysis; inequality, competition and diversity.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

30 hours of teaching in LT comprising computer classes and lectures, plus 2 hour practical surgery for projects in the ST. The learning goals of this course are to be able understand methods appropriate for spatial quantitative economic analysis, to be able to interpret the results of this type of analysis and to be able to produce an independent piece of research using these methods. Lectures provide an introduction to the relevant topics. Students will work in groups in the computer classes to complete tasks related to these learning goals, partly by replicating results from papers taken from the economics literature, assisted by readings, example code and demonstrations. There will be 2 hour computer classes each week in which students can work on these activities, but successful completion of the course will require work on this material outside the class. For assessment, students complete a short research project independently outside the class, with guidance from the course teacher offered during dedicated office hours (30 mins offered as a minimum per student). There is an additional practical surgery for projects early in the summer term.

Formative coursework: Throughout the term, progress and understanding will be assessed by short in-class assessments. Students will receive written feedback on one piece of work, such as answers on questions related to one of the computer class assignments.

Indicative reading: A reading list and outline is available on Moodle. Important readings are Gibbons, S., H.G Overman and E. Patacchini (2015) Spatial Methods, Ch. 3 in Duranton, G, J.V. Henderson and W. Strange (eds) Handbook of Urban and Regional Economics Vol 5a, Elsevier. Baum-Snow, N. and F. Ferreira (2015) Causal Inference in Urban Economics, Ch. 1 in Duranton, G, J.V. Henderson and W. Strange (eds) Handbook of Urban and Regional Economics Vol 5a, Elsevier. An overview of some topics is provided by: A Fotheringham, C Brunson; M Charlton, Quantitative Geography: Perspectives on Spatial Data Analysis. Sage Publications, 2000.

Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST. A quantitative research project of not more than 5000 words to be handed in at a specified date in the ST (100%). This project is carried out independently, but with guidance and support from teaching staff.

GY462 Half Unit Real Estate Finance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Olmo Silva S506A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme

Coordinator.

Course content: This course aims to provide students with concepts and techniques for analysing financial decisions in real estate development and investment. Topics include: basic real estate investment analysis and financial leverage; real options approach applied to real estate; real estate investment performance and portfolio considerations; private equity in real estate, structured investment deals and waterfall analysis; fixed and flexible rate mortgage loans and mortgage payment issues; tax transparent real estate investment vehicles (REITs); and current and international trends in real estate (time permitting).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

External interventions by real estate practitioners will be scheduled when feasible.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete in-class exercises and up to two take-home case-studies.

Indicative reading: Key texts are: Brueggeman, W. B. and J. D. Fisher (2005) Real Estate Finance & Investments (13th edition or newer), New York City, NY: McGraw-Hill/Irwin; Linneman, Peter (2004) Real Estate Finance & Investments: Risks and Opportunities, (2nd edition or newer). Philadelphia: Linneman Associates. A more detailed reading list will be handed out at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 10 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (30%) in the LT.

70% of the students' final grade will come from a two-hour closed book examination. The exam will consist of three questions and students will have to answer two out of these three questions. These questions will assess the material covered by the lecturers during the Lent Term as well as the topics discussed by the external speakers (two to three external interventions are planned every year; these are subject to confirmation).

30% of students' final grade will come from a group work and presentation on a "case study" in real estate financial investment. Students will be provided with some material and instructions towards the second or third week of the term and will be assigned to groups of 4-5 students. They will have to work both on an xl cash flow analysis of this real estate investment opportunity as well as on a short (20min) presentation they will give as a group. They will then be allocated some time during one of the classes to present their solution as a group and will be assessed both on their presentation skills and the technical understanding of the cash flow analysis used in their financial investment decision.

GY465 Half Unit Concepts in Environmental Regulation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Perkins STC. S413 and Dr Nora Sylvander

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

This course cannot be taken with GY420 Environmental Regulation: Implementing Policy or GY475 Issues in Environmental Governance.

Course content: This course provides critical insights into the nature, dynamics and practice of environmental regulation. It considers the rationale for policy intervention and the influence of different interest groups on environmental policy making. The course proceeds to examine the characteristics, design and performance of different policy instruments, together with the various influences governing policy implementation processes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare one formative essay, as well as give one presentation on a specified topic, in the MT: feedback will be provided on both.

Indicative reading: While there is no one single text that covers all aspects of the course, you are strongly advised to consult the following:

Core reading:

- D Fiorino (2006) The New Environmental Regulation, London: MIT Press;
- J Holder and M Lee (2007) Environmental Protection Law and Policy (2nd edition), Cambridge: Cambridge University Press;
- S Bell, D McGillivray, O Pedersen, E Lees and E Stokes (2017) Environmental Law (9th edition), Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

GY470 Half Unit Urban Africa

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Claire Mercer STC.418

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available to students in other departments and on other programmes where their regulations allow, and if there is space on the course.

Course content: The course begins with an overview of the ideas and debates on urban Africa in theory and policy. The rest of the course looks at key issues currently facing African cities drawing on contemporary policy debates and research in human geography, African studies, development studies, urban studies, anthropology, sociology and planning studies. These include: urban pasts, urban economies, informality, rural-urban connections, planning, land, housing and infrastructure.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 draft essay plan for the assessed essay in MT.

Indicative reading: de Boeck F and S Baloji (2016) Suturing the city: living together in Congo's urban worlds, Autograph ABP, London. Diouf M and R Fredericks (eds) (2014) The arts of citizenship in African cities: infrastructures and spaces of belonging, Palgrave Macmillan, Basingstoke. Robinson J (2006) Ordinary cities: between modernity and development, Routledge, Abingdon. Simone AM (2004) For the city yet to come: changing African life in four cities, Duke University Press, Durham and London

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Students will submit an extended essay addressing an issue of urban development in African cities.

GY472 Half Unit Real Estate Investment

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Lindsay Relihan STC S409

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Entry into the MSc Real Estate Economics and Finance or by request from other qualified MSc students. Those qualified will already have knowledge of economics equivalent to a good first degree in the subject.

Course content: The objective of this course is to educate students in the tools for evaluating real estate investment decisions and in incorporating the insights from urban economics to improve the profitability of their investments. The course will begin with a brief introduction to standard methods in evaluating risk and return in real estate investment and development. We will then discuss empirical techniques for identifying the impact of a shift in the demand or supply of space on the risk and return of an investment. From there, we will examine the theory and evidence for variation in risk and return within and across cities, as well as the institutional factors that create cross-country variation in investment outcomes. We will then discuss the construction of REITS, their ability to diversify across geography, and their performance. The remainder of the course will dive deeper into evaluating the impact of major emerging trends in urban economics on investment valuations that outperform spatially blind evaluations. Assessment for the course will center on valuation of a mixed-use retail property in London. A field trip to tour the property and surrounding urban environment may occur during the term.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars, 4 hours of workshops and 1 hour of computer workshops in the LT.

At the end of the course students should be able to estimate the expected risk and return of an investment using the appropriate tools and methods. In that estimate, they should be able to evaluate which local economic factors are likely to impact the expected risk and return from an investment and account for them in their analysis. They should also be able to combine data with empirical techniques to measure the impact of those forces for which no good existing empirical estimates are available. Finally, they should be able to clearly articulate their assumptions and how those impact their results.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the LT.

In their first essay, students will work in their groups to conduct the quantitative analysis for a case study using the standard tools in real estate investment. Each student will prepare a 1000 word essay based on this quantitative work, analyzing the assumptions and methods used and the results. The second essay will also be 1000 words and center on assessing the students ability to incorporate urban economic theory and empirical research into their valuation. These formative exercises closely match the style and structure of the summative coursework.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3500 words) in the ST Week 1. The summative essay will be 3500 words and count for 100% of the student's final grade. It will center on assessing the students' ability to produce empirical estimates of the impact of shifts in demand and supply for commercial real estate using data and rigorous methods that they incorporate into their evaluation of an investment proposal's risk and return. The valuation should also contain other relevant estimates from the literature and justification for assumptions based on empirical evidence.

GY473 Half Unit

Economic Development and the Environment

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Charles Palmer STC.3.03 and Prof Benjamin Groom STC.4.20

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development and MSc in Environment and Development. This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created.

For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator, Louise Millar.

Pre-requisites: Students who have not completed a course in first year undergraduate level Economics might find it useful to audit EC100 Economics A.

Course content: With a focus on individuals and countries in the global south, the starting point for this course is recognition of the importance of resource use and the environment as building blocks for economic development. Using concepts and tools of environmental and development economics, the course aims to impart knowledge and develop critical thinking about a number of selected topics concerned with the interface between environment and development, at both the macro- and micro-scale. Central to this is an examination of the trade-offs and complementarities between environment and development. Structured over 10 weeks, the course is divided into two distinct parts.

- After introducing the course (week 1), Part I concentrates on the sustainability of the national and global economy, focusing on the role of managing wealth in shaping development prospects, whether green growth can deliver sustainability and the role of global trade in explaining resource use and environmental degradation, at the macro-scale. It concludes by emphasizing the overarching role of institutions in governing development paths and the way in which resources are managed.

- What then follows in Part II is a consideration of a number of topics that explore different resources and areas of sustainability policy at the micro-scale. Specifically, the demand for and supply of key ecosystem services - energy, food, and water - have important implications for resource use and the environment. They also serve as building blocks for economic development in poorer countries. The impacts of current development trends on natural and man-made ecosystems, in particular, forest and urban ecosystems, are examined at the end of course along with their implications for public policy.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

There will be a piece of formative work – a 'mock' exam question – during MT to help students prepare for the take-home exam in week 0 of LT.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%) in the LT.

The take-home exam will be 8 hours duration in Lent Term Week 0.

GY474 Half Unit

Politics of Environment and Development

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kasia Paprocki STC 4.21b and Dr Julia Corwin STC 4.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Environmental Policy and Development and MSc in Environment and Development. This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited.

If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created.

For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course explores key themes at the intersection of development and environmental politics.

Specifically, the course is centred on the applications of political ecology, critical development studies, and materialist human geography to topics in environment and development. In exploring the complex relationships between historical dynamics of development, inequality, and the environment, it covers a range of important natural resource and environmental issues, such as climate change, conservation, waste, and environmental social movements.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 short video in the LT summarising the key themes of key course texts

Indicative reading:

- Li, T (2007), The Will to Improve, Durham: Duke University Press.
- Robbins, P (2012), Political Ecology: A Critical Introduction, Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell

Issues in Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Perkins S413, Dr Michael Mason S510 and Dr Eugenie Dugoua

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course cannot be taken with GY465 Concepts in Environmental Regulation or GY420 Environmental Regulation: Implementing Policy.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Course content: This Lent Term course is designed to highlight key themes impacting on environmental regulation across different scales of governance. While the emphasis is on global and transnational policy processes, attention is also paid to the implications of these processes at regional and local scales. The organising framework of 'multi-level governance' suggests new alignments and forms of regulation which require us to consider environmental decision-making within and beyond the territorial authority of a single state. The indicative themes chosen explore distinctive challenges for multi-level governance - governing technological change, international negotiations, governance beyond the state, and different rationalities of regulation (science, ethics and justice). These themes, which will be explored in student-led seminars, run explicitly or implicitly through many environmental policy debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are required to make one presentation on an agreed topic: this will be graded with feedback for individual students.

Indicative reading: While there is no one single text that covers all aspects of the course, students are advised to consult the following: Barrett, S. (2005) Environment and Statecraft: The Strategy of Environmental Treaty-Making, Oxford: Oxford University Press. Gupta, A. and M Mason (eds.) (2014) Transparency in Global Environmental Governance, Cambridge, MA: MIT Press. Li, T. (2007) The Will to Improve: Governmentality, Development and the Practice of Politics. Durham, NC: Duke University Press. Piattoni, S. (2010) The Theory of Multi-level Governance, Oxford: Oxford University Press. Randall, A. (2011) Risk and Precaution, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to key theories and debates about societies undergoing rapid urban change. Course lectures examine large urban transformations in three ways. The first pertains to 'urbanisation' as a historical process by which social life, even outside of cities, becomes 'urban'. This means addressing the relationship between the country and the city, the idea of the urban in historical perspective, and the relationship between urban life in the global North and South. The second approach considers the city as a site for radical political change, as well as social experimentation in planning and development. This means studying cities as spaces of movement, resistance, and innovation, with an emphasis on urban experiments (especially in 'Southern' cities). Thirdly, urban transformation is analysed in terms of the explosion of theorisations about the nature of the urban, how to study it, and how to make a difference in 'the urban', both intellectually and materially, within a global economy. Through these three overlapping lenses – history, politics/planning, and theory – the course aims to equip students with a conceptual and empirical foundation for analysing city transformations and globalised urbanisation, with particular attention to emerging urbanisms in the global South.

Topics covered may include the following: industrialisation and immigration; processes of suburbanisation, ghettoisation, and gentrification; global cities; the colonial and postcolonial city; urban citizenship and the right to the city; urban uprisings; the geopolitics of urban theory; urban nostalgia; urban innovation and the politics of urban self-regard/self-representation.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

A short essay of 2000 words (maximum). Critically explore the applicability of one week's readings from the first 5 weeks of the course to an empirical case outside the course reading. This will be due in Week 7 of MT.

Indicative reading: H. Lefebvre, Writing on Cities, 1996; R. Beauregard, When America Became Suburban, 2006; J. Brown-Saracino, The Gentrification Debates, 2010; T. Chen, Locating Right to the City in the Global South, 2013; The reading list is intended only to be indicative of literatures broached in the course. Actual readings will consist of particular articles and chapters on a weekly basis, as well as a wider range of inclusions.

Assessment: Essay (90%, 5000 words) in the LT.

Class participation (10%) in the MT.

Due in the first half of LT, the essay (5000 words, maximum) will be based on a range of questions provided by the instructor during MT. Some options will be very specific about certain issues and/or regions, whereas others will be more conceptual and open for student exploration. Across all these options, there will be wide enough scope for students with different academic backgrounds and thematic or geographical interests to be accommodated, while still hewing to the organising topics of the course.

Attendance and active participation in seminar is also essential, and assessed. Students will be required to co-lead discussion with a peer and the instructor for one (out of ten) seminars.

Financing Health Care

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Elias Mossialos COW.4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a thorough grounding in health financing policy. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in European countries, but the general principles studied apply internationally.

The course provides an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

This course will be delivered through 18 hours of lectures and 5 seminars (2 hours each). In addition there will be a two-hour revision session in the MT and a two-hour revision session in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write a 1,500 formative essay. The essay topic will be provided by the end of October and students expected to submit by the end of November. Seminar leaders will provide written feedback on the essays by the end of the Michaelmas term.

Indicative reading: WHO, World Health Report 2010 - Health systems financing: the path to universal coverage (2010); E Mossialos, A Dixon, J Figueras & J Kutzin (eds), Funding health care: options for Europe, Open University Press (2002); J Kutzin, Health financing policy: a guide for decision-makers, World Health Organization (2008); T Rice, The economics of health reconsidered, Health Administration Press (3rd edn, 2009).

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Research project (30%) in the LT.

The research project (1,500 words) will be submitted in LT.

Introduction to Health Policy and Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mrigesh Bhatia OLD 1.17 and Dr Justin Parkhurst COW 3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Global Population Health, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A comparative approach to the development of health and healthcare policies in high, middle, and low income country settings, emphasising the goals of health policymaking, public health approaches, the political nature of health policy issues, and core concepts from policy studies that can be used to conceptualise policy change dynamics in health.

The course will introduce concept of risk and risk reducing strategies, theories of planning, and priority setting techniques in health care. In addition, the course will examine the processes and forces shaping the development and implementation of health policy. The course will examine core concepts such as power, the role of the state and other policy stakeholders (e.g. NGOs, international organisations, etc.), institutions, and evidence, in shaping health policy agendas or choices.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Students will participate in presenting at least one seminar presentation.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option to produce an outline of their term essay for feedback before submission. Students will sit a mock written exam in the last week of term.

Measuring Health System Performance

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Irene Papanicolas COW 3.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to present a framework to discuss the opportunities and challenges with performance measurement in health care, examine the various dimensions and levels of health system performance, identify the measurement instruments and analytic tools needed, and examine the implications of these issues for policy makers and regulators. Lectures generally focus on measuring health system performance in high-income countries but draw on the experience of other countries where relevant.

After taking this course students are expected to:

- understand the principles of performance measurement
- appreciate the challenges, approaches, and opportunities in performance measurement in four dimensions: population health, patient outcomes, equity, quality and appropriateness of care, and productivity
- understand the methodological issues facing performance measurement relating to risk adjustment, developing composite measures, and measuring attribution and causality
- identify key issues relevant to policy makers relating to: developing targets and reporting on progress to the public, and developing incentives to improve performance

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 9 hours of seminars and 5 hours of workshops in the LT.

Teaching will be delivered as 10 lectures of 1.5 hours, plus 6 seminars of 1.5 hours and 2 workshops of 2.5 hours

Indicative reading: Papanicolas I, Smith P (Eds) Health System Performance Comparison: An Agenda for Policy, Information and Research. Assessment: Presentation (20%) and coursework (30%, 1000 words) in the LT.

Essay (50%, 3000 words) in the ST.

The coursework consists of a written policy brief based on the group presentations.

This is a similar course as HP402 Measuring Health System Performance (modular) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

HP403 Half Unit

Health Systems and Policies in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mrigesh Bhatia OLD 1.17

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In recent years, debates in health policy have moved to consider a system-wide approach to understanding the demands and challenges of health in low and middle income settings. Importantly, systemic barriers remain to health care, centred around institutions, organisations and resources. In particular, a system-wide approach focuses on the importance of developing and strengthening broader healthcare infrastructure, rather than a focus on disease specific interventions. This course will be based around three key areas of the health system in low income settings; the physical, financial and human. The physical will consider the delivery of health in developing countries - examining the role of the public, for profit and non profit sectors, decentralisation (and recentralisation) and physical access to primary healthcare. The financing arm will consider options for financing healthcare in low income settings, including the role of user fees, results based financing and community financing schemes. The human element will analyse the acute shortages of health workers, brain drain and capacity building in the workforce. As part of this three pronged approach, this course will consider a range of health policies and health sector reforms which have been implemented to overcome challenges in resource poor settings. It will examine the assumptions upon which health system reforms are based, and an assessment of their success. Finally, the course will consider some case studies for health systems and policy analysis in developing countries, including maternal health and system resilience to health crises

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: An essay of not more than 2,000 words.

Global Health Policy: Institutions, Actors and Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clare Wenham COW 3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Global Population Health, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is compulsory on the MSc Global Health Policy.

This course is available on Msc International Health Policy, Msc International Health Policy (HE), Msc Health Policy Planning and Financing and MSc in Health and International Development.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Globalization has not only impacted on the nature of emerging global health but the policy responses to these challenges. This module critically examines the transnational institutions and actors involved in global health policy and the interplay between them. The governance of global health issues has traditionally been carried out by states and various United Nations agencies (namely, the World Health Organisation), but given the transboundary nature of many global health issues, a diverse range of actors, including the private sector, civil society organizations and national governments, are now integrally involved. The funding of global health programmes and policies, for example, has shifted from primarily bi-/multilateral donors to include private and public sectors and philanthropists in a global health governance mosaic. The module will use a number of case studies to examine the organisation and role of global health institutions, the challenges and opportunities presented by these governance arrangements, and their (intended and unintended) impacts on global health policy and practice. In doing so, the module will draw on contributions from a range of social sciences including sociology, political science and health services research.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Ten 90 minute lectures and ten 60 minute seminars.

Formative coursework: One essay (1000 words) focusing on different approaches to framing global health

Indicative reading: Frenk, J., & Moon, S. (2013). Governance challenges in global health. New England Journal of Medicine, 368(10), 936-942. Taylor, S. (2018). Social Determinants of Health

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Justin Parkhurst COW.3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is a listed option on MSc's in the department of Health Policy and for the MSc in Health and International Development.

The course will be capped at 30 and priority may be given to students in the Department of Health Policy or related MSc degrees as needed.

Course content: The course introduces the social determinants of health from a global perspective. Content will draw on low, middle, and high income country examples, (although a majority of material will come from middle and high income cases). The course begins by exploring the shift in focus from individual to population health, the link to social determinants, and methodological challenges. It then goes into specific social determinants and issues such as poverty, education, gender and the built environment. Specific health and intersectional issues are then introduced, before final lectures that consider the politics of policy responses dealing with social determinants. A set of 6 seminars compliment the lectures with the final seminar linked to assessment.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

An outline or early draft of the term essay will be submitted in week 8 to allow feedback and guidance from teaching staff before final submission.

Indicative reading: Rose, Geoffrey. 2001. "Sick individuals and sick populations." International journal of epidemiology 30 (3):427-432.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 3500 words) in the ST.

In class assessment (25%) in the LT.

25% of the grade will be based on small group presentations in the final seminars.

75% of the grade will be based on a term essay (3500 words) that requires them to address a key health concern facing a population in a specific country of interest from a social and political perspective. They will need to write a policy brief that reviews literature, considers policy responses in relation to critical conceptual approaches covered, and proposes potential approaches to the problem.

HP407 Half Unit

Evidence Review and Synthesis for Decision Making

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Huseyin Naci

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is relevant to all students with an interest in the health and social care interventions.

Course content: Evidence review and synthesis methods (such as systematic reviews and meta-analyses) are increasingly used to evaluate the relative benefits and harms of healthcare interventions. In situations where direct, head-to-head comparisons of interventions do not exist, researchers also increasingly perform indirect comparisons (e.g., network meta-analyses) of two or more interventions to address comparative effectiveness questions. A broad range of decision making bodies across the health care sector (including health technology assessment bodies, drug and medical device licensing agencies, biopharmaceutical industry, and hospitals) need individuals equipped with the methods of reviewing and synthesising the existing body of evidence by performing systematic reviews and meta-analyses.

This course will be focused on the principles of reviewing and synthesising the existing body of literature. The course will have three components. The first will provide the rationale for adopting a systematic approach for evidence review and synthesis. It will equip students with the methods to undertake risk of bias assessments of randomised and non-randomised studies. The second component will focus on the quantitative synthesis of multiple studies in meta-analysis. The third component will discuss the opportunities and challenges of using evidence for decision-making.

The intended learning outcomes of this course will be the following:

- Describe the rationale for adopting a systematic approach to literature review
- Define the principal threats to validity both in individual studies and collections of studies
- Critically evaluate the quality of randomised and non-randomised studies in oral and written form
- Assess heterogeneity in a collection of studies
- Design and perform a systematic review and meta-analysis evaluating a health care intervention in a group setting
- Describe the opportunities and challenges of using systematic review and meta-analysis findings for decision making Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 10 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 4 hours and 30 minutes of computer workshops in the MT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment:

- Systematic review and meta-analysis protocol (submitted individually)
- feedback provided by course instructor

Assessment: Project (70%, 3000 words) in the LT Week 11. Presentation (30%) in the ST.

Summative assessment:

- Systematic review and meta-analysis report resembling an original article submission to a peer-reviewed journal (70%)

- Poster presentation of findings to a hypothetical decision maker (30%)

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health and International Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Global health security has become a dominant paradigm in global health. Recent outbreaks of Ebola, Zika and pandemic influenza have heightened the global sense of vulnerability to the spread of infectious disease, and as a consequence global health policy is now complete with references to such health emergencies. These threats are even listed on national security strategies of many governments, and as such we see the ever increasing link between security and health across policy areas and levels.

This course interrogates this health-security nexus. It considers different conceptual understandings of security including global health security, national security, biosecurity and human security and considers these in multiple health contexts. These empirical explorations include Ebola, Zika, Anti-microbial resistance (AMR) and conflict and health. Yet, this course also asks students to consider the assumptions inherent to the security discourse, and the challenges these has on global health policymaking. Should the global health community be championing global health security, or has the terminology run its course.

To examine these concepts, empirics and broader political questions, this module will draw on contributions from international relations, political science, law, epidemiology and public health research.

Beyond the classroom, this course will also run a global health emergency simulation activity to provide students with a real life scenario of global health security crisis. Students will represent various stakeholders in global health, and will have to make real-time decisions to respond to the crisis, and minimise its global impact. Such activity aims to bring to life the theories, challenges and politics which will have been covered throughout the course.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 8 hours of seminars and 6 hours of workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students will submit a short 1000 word essay (on the topic that they are writing on for the summative) during the teaching term. These will be graded and feedback given to students. This allows students to get valuable experience of writing critical essays have they not before in previous modules or degrees, and the expectations of the summative assessment. For example, if a student's formative work flagged particular concerns this could be addressed ahead of the summative submission.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 3500 words) and blog post (25%) in the LT Week 1.

1 x 3500 word essay – 75% of grade

Students will be asked to pick one essay question. They will be given the option to choose their own essay topic (after discussion with their seminar leader) or to select from a provided list of questions. The questions will be broad, allowing for student individuality to come across in their answers.

1 x Blog reflecting on simulation activity – 25% of grade

Students will be assessed on their reflections on the simulation activity, including their preparation for it, what they have learned from the day's activity, how the course material has helped them to understand the challenges of a real life global health outbreak and finally to consider their own contribution and role in the simulation. In this way, this assessment aims for students to consider both the course content, and their skill development in team work, presentations and problem solving.

HP420 Half Unit Health Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Street COW 3.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In allocating places in this course, students enrolled in the MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) have priority. Any remaining places are allocated on a first-come-first-served basis.

Course content: This course develops basic economic concepts as they are applied to the health sector. We shall discuss economics issues at system-level, including options for financing health care, predicting future expenditure, and assessing the degree of health equity and equality. We shall consider demand for health care and for health insurance, discussing matters such as moral hazard, adverse selection and risky health behaviours. Then we shall turn to the supply-side of health care provision, considering the agency relationship between patients and physicians, the competitiveness of health care markets, the geographical configuration of health care services, and methods for paying health care providers. The course is designed to provide an intuitive understanding of a wide range of economic concepts, illustrated by practical examples.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Five x 2hr optional evening lectures in first half of MT for students with no background in economics.

Formative coursework: In-class mock exam in the MT.

Indicative reading: The course draws from a variety of textbooks and articles, with a thorough reading list provided prior to the lectures. The course makes repeated use of the following textbook: J Bhattacharya, T Hyde & P Tu, Health Economics, Palgrave Macmillan, 2014.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

HP421 Half Unit Economic Analysis for Health Policy in Low- and Middle-Income Countries

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mylene Lagarde COW.3.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There is no pre-requisite for this course in terms of economic or statistical knowledge.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide students with some key analytical methods and concepts used by economists to study health care policies in low- and middle-income countries. The course takes a micro-economic perspective, in that it will study how individuals involved in health care systems (patients, providers, insurers) make decisions which affect the utilisation and delivery of health care services.

The course will present key theoretical concepts and use empirical evidence particularly relevant for policy questions in low- and middle-income settings. The course will be applied in nature, as students will learn through case studies which will expose to different types of data and evidence to analyse decisions made by individuals and then articulate recommendations for health policy. By the end of this course, students will be able to:

- define fundamental principles and concepts of health economics relevant to health policy challenges in low- and middle-income countries
- understand the economic models of decisions made by individuals on the demand- and supply-side of health care markets in low and middle-income countries;
- apply economic reasoning and models to identify problems and to recommend relevant health care policies;
- refer to seminal literature and evidence in the health economics and health policy fields in low- and middle-income countries;
- be able to interpret simple results from empirical economic studies, and formulate policy recommendations.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of help sessions in the ST. Ten 1.5 hour lectures and nine 1.5 hour seminars, plus a three-hour revision seminar in the ST.

Formative coursework: Coursework assessed throughout the LT and mock exam.

Indicative reading: The course draws from a variety of textbooks and articles, providing essential references to understand the theoretical concepts and read key empirical studies. A complete reading list is provided at the start of the term.

HP422 Half Unit

Health Care Economic Evaluation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ranjeeta Thomas OLD 1.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Resource allocation is at the heart of decision-making in the health care sector. Economic evaluation is an approach used to support decision-makers in allocating resources by providing tools to compare the costs and benefits associated with multiple alternative scenarios or interventions.

This course will enable students to understand and apply the analytic methods used in the economic evaluation of health interventions. By the end of the course, students are expected to:

- know the different approaches of economic evaluations (cost-effectiveness, cost-benefit, cost-utility etc);
- understand the main principles and practices of measuring and analysing costs and effects of health care interventions;
- understand and be able to construct a decision-analytic model to compare the costs and benefits of different interventions;
- understand and be able to apply some statistical methods to deal with uncertainty in economic evaluations.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: A piece of formative coursework will be set in the middle of the term, and feedback provided to students.

Indicative reading: The following are basic readings for the course: Drummond MF, Sculpher MJ, Claxton K, Stoddart GL, Torrance GW (2015). Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes. Fourth edition: Oxford University Press, Oxford. Gray A, Clarke P, Wolstenholme J, Wordsworth S (2011) Applied Methods of Cost-Effectiveness Analysis in Health Care, Oxford University Press, Oxford. More technical and advanced textbooks, especially for statistical analysis. Briggs A, Sculpher M, Claxton K (2006). Decision Modelling for Health Economic Evaluation. Oxford University Press, Oxford.

Supplementary Reading List

This is made available on Moodle along with all other course materials, and includes references to specialised texts and articles on each subject covered within the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

Assessment is through a project that students will undertake in small groups and write up individually (3,000 word paper), to be submitted at the end of the course.

HP423 Half Unit

Advanced Health Economics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair McGuire COW.4.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available on the MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing and MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Health Economics (HP420).

Alternative introductory economics courses are acceptable.

Course content: The course will cover: international comparisons of health care expenditure, individual health-seeking behaviour, health care insurance, contract theory applied to the health care sector (including principal-agent theory and incentive payment mechanisms), and equity in health care.

Students may find material from the half unit HP426 Applied Health Econometrics, to be beneficial to studying this course. See the HP426 course guide for further detail.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

All lectures and seminars will be taught by Professor Alistair McGuire. The lectures will be from weeks 2 through 11 (including reading week). The seminars will be weekly from week 3 through 11.

Formative coursework: A piece of formative coursework will be set and students will receive feedback on their work based on a 1,500 word essay

Indicative reading: Culyer, A.J., and Newhouse, J.P., (eds.), 2001, Handbook of Health Economics Volumes 1A & 1B, (North-Holland, Amsterdam); Zweifel, P. and Breyer, F., 1997, Health Economics, (OUP, Oxford).

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (40%, 2500 words) in the ST.

HP424 Half Unit

Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW G.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the economics of pharmaceutical markets and related policies that affect national and international markets broadly. The course will

- Provide students with an understanding of basic features of pharmaceutical markets, how pharmaceutical markets work and how competition manifests itself in different parts of pharmaceutical markets.
- Illustrate to students how the pharmaceutical market is linked to the health care market, why it is often the focus of much regulation, and to help students understand the multidimensional goals of pharmaceutical policies.

- Introduce students to the economic and policy problems encountered in managing pharmaceutical markets and how to evaluate the impact of alternative policy approaches. The course will also give students some experience in critically evaluating the impact of policy on market outcomes.
- Facilitate consideration of various country-specific political, cultural and economic factors that may drive governments' approaches to pharmaceutical regulation. In this context, this course will help students consider the extent to which policies may be transferable.
- Enable students to analyse pharmaceutical markets from the perspectives of several main actors: governments, third party payers, the pharmaceutical industry, doctors, patients, pharmacists and wholesalers. Literature from Health Economics, Industrial Organisation and Health Policy will be incorporated into lectures, discussions and seminars.
- Introduce students to the economics of pricing and reimbursing pharmaceutical products, to explore different models of pricing and reimbursing medicines in OECD countries, including rate of return regulation, value-based pricing, cost-plus pricing, external price referencing and internal reference pricing, among others.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

A 3 hour scheduled revision lecture will take place in the ST.

Formative coursework: A formative essay under exam conditions (1 question in 1 hour) will be a requirement and is to be submitted immediately after the revision session.

Indicative reading: E Mossialos, M Mrazek & T Walley (eds), *Regulating Pharmaceuticals in Europe. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

HP425 Half Unit

Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair McGuire Cowdray House 4.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing and MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: This course assumes knowledge of elementary mathematics and statistics. Students who wish to take HP425, but who have not taken an introductory university course in statistics or econometrics, may wish to consider auditing MY451 (Introduction to Quantitative Analysis) in Michaelmas Term in order to prepare themselves for this course. Students who are unsure whether they have the requisite background are encouraged to approach the Lecturer before the start of Lent Term.

This course is envisaged to be complementary to HP422 (Cost-Effectiveness Analysis in Health Care), which is offered in Michaelmas Term.

Course content: This course develops the statistical and modelling techniques necessary to apply economic evaluation to the health care sector. Introduction to random variables and probability distribution, linear regression analysis, logistic regression analysis, survival analysis for health outcomes, survival analysis for treatment costs, parametric and non-parametric approaches for missing data, economic evaluation and clinical trials. Estimation of confidence intervals for cost-effectiveness ratios. Transformation of ratios - net benefit approach. Presentation of results, acceptability curves.

This is the same course as HP4B5E Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (modular), but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 20 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: 1000 word essay

Indicative reading: A full reading list is provided at the start of the course. The course makes use of selected parts of the following texts:

- M Drummond & A McGuire (eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, OUP, 2001.
- D Machin, YB Cheung & MKB Parmar, Survival analysis: a practical approach, 2nd edn, Wiley, 2006.

- M Johannesson, Theory and Methods of Economic Evaluation of Health Care, Kluwer, 1996.
- P Johansson, Evaluating Health Risks: An Economic Approach, CUP, 1995.

Assessment: Project (100%, 3500 words) in the ST.

The project will consist of an essay based question (30% of marks) and a STATA data analysis and interpretation question (70% of marks) due in ST.

HP426 Half Unit

Applied Health Econometrics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elisabetta De Cao OLD 1.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Health Economics (HP420).

Alternatively, students should have completed another foundation course in microeconomics. If this was completed outside of the LSE at an undergraduate level, please contact Dr. De Cao for further advice.

Course content: Most research questions, in health economics require students to apply econometric techniques. This course will introduce these techniques and students exiting the course can expect to have acquired a competency in econometrics as it is applied to health economics. The seminars- which are lab based- will allow students to apply these methods to practical problems using Stata and interpret the results.

This content of this course may be useful to those considering the half unit HP423 Advanced Health Economics.

Teaching: 11 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. All lectures and seminars will be taught by Dr. Elisabetta De Cao.

The lectures will be 2-hour long in week 1, and then 1-hour long in weeks 2-5 and weeks 7-11. The seminars will be weekly from week 2 through 11 (with the exception of week 1 where you will have no seminar).

Formative coursework: One formative assessment will require the analysis of some data in STATA and the description of the results.

HP428 Half Unit

Randomised Evaluations of Health Programmes: From Design to Implementation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mylene Lagarde COW 3.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Randomized trials have long been used in the clinical world to test the efficacy of medical treatments. Increasingly, social scientists have used the same approach, randomly assigning groups to different interventions, in order to determine which policies are most likely to address the key behavioural problems faced by health systems, from inadequate provider performance to low adherence to treatment or risky health behaviours.

This course proposes a hands-on and intuitive approach to designing and conducting a randomised evaluation of a behavioural health programme. The aim of the course is to provide students will the skills required to design and implement a successful randomised evaluation. By the end of the course, students should be able to:

- Explain the reasons for undertaking randomised evaluations;
- Design and plan a randomised experiment to ensure it answers relevant questions, informed by a conceptual framework;
- Understand the technical aspects of the randomised evaluation, including be able to perform and understand simple sample size calculation;
- Explore potential threats to randomisation, and implement strategies to mitigate them;
- Determine how to best measure the outcomes of interest, including reflecting on the accuracy of survey instruments;
- Understand the best practices in how to conduct and manage fieldwork, and follow ethical principles to conducting research.
- Understand the best practices to analyse data from different types of randomised evaluations.

Seminars will be designed to encourage students to critically engage with the topics and apply the technical skills taught.

Each seminar will be closely aligned with the lecture content to give students the opportunity to apply the new knowledge. Case studies will be chosen from various cultural backgrounds, to allow the presentation of a diverse range of settings and issues. In the second half of the term, most seminars will be dedicated to the application of concepts taught to a research protocol developed in group for the summative assessment.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A draft protocol. Students will be asked to submit a short 1,500 word draft protocol by week 5. While some aspects of their work may still be work in progress (e.g. using bullet points), students will be expected to write up the start of their protocol in a detailed way. Detailed feedback will be given to each student.

Indicative reading: The main textbook that will be used throughout the course is:

- Glennerster, R., & Takavarasha, K. (2013). Running Randomized Evaluations: a Practical Guide. Princeton University Press.

Other useful resources include:

- Halpern, D. (2016). Inside the Nudge Unit. London, Penguin Press.
- Leigh, A. (2018). Randomistas: How Radical Researchers Are Changing Our World, Yale University Press.

Assessment: Research proposal (100%) in the LT.

The objective of the research protocol (4,000 words max) will be to plan the randomised evaluation of a particular health programme. Students will be asked to choose an intervention to address a particular behavioural problem from a proposed list (e.g. increasing health insurance uptake, improving doctor performance or quality of care; reducing risky health behaviours; increasing patient adherence to treatment etc.). Students will also be given the option to choose their own topic (pending agreement by their seminar leader).

HP429 Half UnitBehavioural Incentive Design in Health and Health Care

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joan Costa-Font OLD.1.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Health Policy, MSc in Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Access to the course will be given in priority to students from the Health Department, and the course will be capped to 30.

Course content: The course covers the role of social and monetary incentives in modifying related health behaviour, and especially prevention and health care use. It will primarily draw on theoretical frameworks from several social sciences including applied microeconomics and behavioural economics, psychology, and sociology to provide an integrated framework about how to think about incentives in health and health care. The course will extend health economics teaching to cover quasi-rational behaviour and behavioural economics issues, and it will primarily focus on non-experimental evidence, although it will sometimes draw from policy and quasi-experiments. Its main purpose will be to discuss key theoretical and empirical background to guide the design of health and health care policies.

The course will focus on the following issues: Quasi-rational actor and motivation. Risk-benefit decision-making framework. Monetary and non monetary incentives. Esteem, Stigma. Obesity and payments. Monetary Incentives, co-payment design, Social Incentives. Reference Points. Risk preferences and perceptions. Locus of Control and Health and Health Care Behaviour. Anchoring and social cues. Defaults and Presumed Consent. Motivation Crowding-Out and organ Donation. Information provision: risk information campaigns on food labelling, GM food. Stigma and Esteem: Smoking, Obesity. Cultural economics of health and health care: the role of traditional medicines. Body Self-Identity and Anorexia. Sleep and working time trade-off. Media, narratives and health-related behaviour. Culture, social norms: use of traditional medicine. Identity and blood donation, Food disorders. Health Inequality Aversion and Attitudes to Health Care. Behavioural incentives private and public health insurance design.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the Week 5.

The essay will have a word limit of 1500 words and the feedback from formative course work will provide the feedback for students to prepare for summative coursework, and especially to prepare for the exam.

Indicative reading: Hanoch, Y A. Barnes and T Rice (2017) Behavioral Economics and Healthy Behaviors: Key Concepts and Current Research. Routledge.

Assessment: Project (50%, 4000 words) in the MT Week 8. Take home exam (50%) in the LT.

The project will be a group work project.

Take home assessment: Students will answer 2 questions out of 4 available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation could be on any topic relevant to topics studied in the student MSc. It should attempt to integrate approaches and knowledge learned across courses and present results to address a health policy issue or a problem identified through the use of either primary or secondary data. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical and empirical literature in the field. In addition, careful analysis of the policy implications and formulation of policy recommendations is essential. The main body of the dissertation should, in principle, include the background to the research, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion and policy implications and recommendations.

Teaching: 6 hours of workshops in the LT.

These will be complemented by sessions of individual supervision. The course comprising a total of 3 2-hour lectures that will focus on issues pertaining to the dissertation (topic selection, structure, methods, result reporting, ethics approval), as well as general guidance on potential methodological approaches. The course will serve as a means to assist students with the preparation and finalisation of their dissertation proposals. In this context, students will also receive feedback and assistance from their supervisors, with whom they will need to meet separately.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in LT. Students will submit a dissertation proposal to their supervisor by the end of LT. This will be subject to review and supervisors will provide feedback by the end of May.

Presidents, Public Opinion, and Foreign Policy, from Roosevelt to Reagan, 1933-89

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Steven Casey SAR 2.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Using a range of secondary sources, the course explores the dynamic interaction between presidents, public opinion, and foreign policymaking in order to test a range of common assumptions about the determinants of American foreign policy in the period from 1933 to 1989. The course explores the interaction between opinion and policy in three periods: First, the Roosevelt era, with emphasis on FDR's response to American isolationism, the media and public attitudes towards Nazi Germany and the Second World War, and the influence of public pressures upon US policy. Second, the period of consensus on the Cold War, examining how Americans viewed the Communist world before, during and after the Korean War, the influence of the atomic bomb upon popular thinking, the limits of dissent in the period of McCarthyism, and the impact of public opinion upon policy-making during the Berlin and Cuban crises. Third, the period when the Cold War consensus broke down, focusing not just on the opposition to the Vietnam war and the new cleavages that emerged within US society but also on the changing nature of the American media and the very different attempts made by Nixon, Carter and Reagan to respond to this new environment.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The Napoleonic Empire: The Making of Modern Europe

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan SAR.2.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations and MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Napoleonic Empire was crucial in the formation of modern Europe. Much of Europe was dominated by the Napoleonic Empire and its impact was felt across the continent and in parts of the non-European world. Through an analysis of both those areas directly incorporated into the Napoleonic empire and of those that lay beyond it, this course will examine the extent of the direct and indirect influence of this era on the development of what we understand by a modern European society and a modern state system. The course analyses how this empire was created, as well as the states and societies that it forged. The varied and sometimes contradictory elements of this era will be analysed - from the impact of the growth of secularisation, constitutionalism and the codification of laws to the beginnings of Romanticism, manifestations of early nationalism and monarchical reaction after 1815. The course will also assess the significance of both the reality and the 'myth' of empire, in the assessment of contemporary observers and also in the later nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

The course will cover the following topics: the origins of the Empire; changes in armies and warfare; analysis of the changing nature of the Napoleonic Empire from the core to the periphery; the impact of the Empire on countries that remained beyond it; Europe's relationship with the non-European world during this period; the diplomacy of war and the 'system' that emerged after 1815; the impact of the Napoleonic era on the modernisation of society, the economy, law and the state; early manifestations of nationalism in the Italian and German lands, Spain and Russia; reaction against the Napoleonic 'system' after 1815. The course will also assess the significance of both the reality and the 'myth' of Napoleon and his empire, for contemporary commentators and also in the later nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the MT and the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay in the ST.

The third essay will be a mock exam answer, which can be completed by students over the Easter break. It will be graded and students given written feedback in the first week of Summer Term.

Indicative reading: A detailed Reading List will be issued at the beginning of the course.

Useful introductory works include: G. Ellis, Napoleon; G. Ellis, The Napoleonic Empire; M. Broers, Europe under Napoleon 1799-1815; S. J. Woolf, Napoleon's Integration of Europe; P. The Iranian Revolution

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Roham Alvandi SAR M.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Please note that students taking this course cannot take GV4E7 Islamic Republic of Iran: Society, Politics, the Greater Middle East (H).

Course content: This course examines the origins of the 1978-79 Iranian Revolution in the political, intellectual, and diplomatic history of Pahlavi Iran. The course begins with the emergence of the modern Iranian state in the Safavid and Qajar eras, before turning to the Iranian encounter with decolonisation and the Cold War under the Pahlavi monarchy. We discuss Iran's experience of American modernisation and the crisis of legitimacy that engulfed the last Shah of Iran, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, following the 1953 coup in Iran. The course examines the origins of the Iranian Revolution in the global contest between the Shah and the Iranian opposition throughout the 1960s and 1970s, as both the state and its opponents contested notions of modernity, Shi'a Islam, universal human rights, and Third Worldism. Students are asked to look in depth at the politics and ideology of the Pahlavi state and the opposition forces arrayed against the Shah, both in a national and global context. A particular emphasis of the course is on the international relations of Pahlavi Iran, particularly Iran's relations with the United States, and the transnational connections between the Iranian opposition and the anti-imperialist movements of the global 1960s and 1970s. The course culminates with the fall of the Pahlavi monarchy in 1979 and the subsequent creation of the Islamic Republic.

Islam, State and Conflict in Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kirsten Schulze SAR 2.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course looks at Indonesia, Malaysia, and the Philippines from the colonial period to the present day. It focuses on Islam, state and conflict, starting with a broader discussion of the Islamisation of Southeast Asia and the entry of the European colonial powers. This is followed by a closer analysis of the relationship between Islam and the colonial state with seminars on the Dutch East Indies, 'British' Malaya, and the 'Spanish' Philippines. The course then looks at the rise of nationalism and the interplay of Islam and nationalism in the Muslim-majority states of Indonesia and Malaysia as well as the Muslim-minority state of the Philippines. In the second term this course studies the dynamics of Islam, the state, and local society in the Darul Islam rebellions (Indonesia), the Aceh conflict (Indonesia), the Mindanao conflict (the Philippines), as well as the Poso and Ambon conflicts (Indonesia).. It also looks at Islam and social conflict in Malaysia and Indonesia as well as the rise of regional and international jihadism with Jemaah Islamiyah and the Southeast Asian affiliates of ISIS.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The Cold War in Latin America

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tanya Harmer SAR M.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar is designed to introduce students to new historical approaches to the Cold War in Latin America. It responds to new research and debates that have arisen in recent years regarding the meaning of the Cold War in a Latin American context. Students will examine the conflict's origins, who its protagonists were, the extent to which the superpowers were involved in it and its significance at a local, regional, and global level. The course places particular emphasis on the role of ideas and ideological struggles; the intersection between these ideas and the challenges of modernity and economic development; the causes of revolutionary and counter-revolutionary upheaval; the manifestations of violence and its effects; and the cultural Cold War. Students will be encouraged to explore the intra-regional and transnational dynamics of the Cold War in Latin America. They will study how events in one part of Latin America (for example, the overthrow of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala, the Cuban Revolution, the Brazilian and Chilean coups or the Central American crises in the 1980s) impacted upon other areas of region. The seminar will also devote time to looking at Latin America's experience of the Cold War from a global comparative perspective, particularly in contrast to other parts of the Third World. Although the seminar will mostly involve intensive reading and discussion of secondary sources, students will also be encouraged to reflect on new online archival material, published writings of principal thinkers and oral histories as a means of understanding key concepts and ideas.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write one 3,000 word formative essay in the Michaelmas Term and one formative discussion post at the beginning of the year.

Indicative reading:

Living with the Bomb: An International History of Nuclear Weapons and the Arms Race from the Second World War to the end of the Cold War

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Jones SAR 3.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course takes as a prime focus the nuclear policies pursued by some of the major powers in the international system from the initial use of nuclear weapons against Japan in 1945 until the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991. It introduces and explores three main themes: how the advent of nuclear weapons came to influence national strategies and crisis behaviour; why the development of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems fuelled an arms race that became one of the defining features of the Cold War; and how major powers have attempted to curb the testing of such weapons, the numbers contained in their arsenals, and their spread, through measures of arms control and non-proliferation. After examining the controversy over the atomic bombing of Japan in 1945, including the moral and ethical questions raised by nuclear use, the course includes consideration of some of the most important events and debates in post-war nuclear history – the course is not designed or intended to be a potted history of the Cold War, but rather looks at the influence and role of nuclear weapons (and the strategic thinking that accompanied their development). The movement to ban the testing of nuclear weapons is also covered, and attention given to the Chinese, British and French national nuclear programmes, as well as those of the Soviet Union and United States. The last portion of the course offers close analysis of the international negotiations over arms control and non-proliferation that have featured since the late 1960s. Throughout the course students will engage with contemporary writings and study primary source documents which will accompany each topic.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of help sessions in the ST.

Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly class, to deliver presentations, and to participate in seminar discussions. Reading week will take place in week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce a 2,000 word formative essay during week 6 of the Michaelmas Term.

LSE-Columbia University Double Degree Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Roham Alvandi SAR M.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: During their first year at Columbia University, students will identify a topic for the dissertation and will submit a detailed dissertation proposal form to their LSE supervisor. They will also have undertaken substantial research over the course of the summer, have written a Dissertation Research Report before arriving at LSE and be in a position to talk in a detailed manner with regards to their dissertation. These and the completion of other formal requirements for year one of the Double Degree will be needed before students can proceed to the second year of the programme at LSE.

Course content: The individual dissertation will be supervised and assessed at LSE in accordance with the Department's MSc regulations. It will be in the form of a thesis of no more than 15,000 words. The dissertation workshop will complement this by offering sessions on methodological topics, and 7 sessions in which the students will each present updates on their research over the summer (MT) and a 3,000 word extract from their dissertations for group discussion, evaluation and analysis (LT).

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be requested to submit a Dissertation Research Report for discussion in the MT. Students are also required to circulate a 3000-word extract of their dissertation for discussion in the LT.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course but will include the following introductory surveys: Berger, Feldner and Passmore, Writing History; D Cannadine (Ed), What is History now?; L Jordanova, History in Practice; R Evans, In Defence of History; J Tosh, The Pursuit of the Past; M Bloch, The Historian's Craft; R G Collingwood, The Idea of History.

The Ottoman Empire and its Legacy, 1299-1950

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Marc Baer SAR 3.17

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Ottoman Empire (1299-1923) was one of the longest lasting and most territorially extensive of all empires in history. Yet today few know about its nature, whether in Turkey or abroad. Who were the Ottomans? How did they run their empire? How did they manage diversity? How did their understanding and practice of Islam change over time? What was the secret of their success, and what ultimately caused the empire's fall? How do the Ottomans compare to other contemporary empires? What is the Ottoman legacy, especially in Turkey and Greece? What is the significance of the Ottoman Empire for world history?

In order to answer these questions we will study the following topics: three pillars of Ottoman inheritance: Byzantium, Islam, Mongols; the origins and rise of the Ottoman Empire; the conquest of Constantinople and its significance for world history; Ottoman state institutions in the "classic age;" gendering Ottoman History; the Ottomans and the Renaissance; the Ottomans and the Age of Exploration; the Ottoman-Safavid-Habsburg struggle for supremacy; Ottoman Jews: model minority?; sixteenth- and seventeenth-century transformations; pietism, conversion, and interreligious relations; reform and repression, 1839-1908; Orientalism and the Ottomans; the Young Turks and the revolution of 1908; World War I and the Armenian genocide; Atatürk: the "Father" of Modern Turkey and the new Turkish Republic; the Kurdish issue; the legacy of the Ottoman Empire in comparative perspective; and the Ottoman past in Turkish historical fiction.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms and a revision session in the Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Weekly written and oral reading reports in MT and LT. Completion of these is mandatory, in order to facilitate good seminar discussions.

Indicative reading: Jane Burbank and Frederick Cooper, Empires in World History: Power and the Politics of Difference (Princeton 2010); Marshall Hodgson, Rethinking World History: Essays on Europe, Islam, and World History (Cambridge 1993); Caroline Finkel, Osman's Dream: The History of the Ottoman Empire (London 2005); Giancarlo Casale, The Ottoman Age of Exploration (Oxford 2011); Marc David Baer, Honored by the Glory of Islam: Conversion and Conquest in Ottoman Europe (Oxford 2008); Marc David Baer, The Dönme: Jewish Converts, Muslim Revolutionaries, and Secular Turks (Stanford 2010); Mark Mazower, Salonica City of Ghosts: Christians, Muslims, and Jews 1430-1950 (Vintage 2006).

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (35%, 3000 words) in the LT.

Presentation (15%) in the MT and LT.

The participation grade will be based on the quality of the student's contribution to seminar discussions, and weekly posting of reading responses.

Maps, History and Power: The Spaces and Cultures of the Past

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Stock SAR 2.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: How did past societies and cultures understand the world around them? How did those societies use maps to represent physical, social and imaginative spaces? Do maps merely reflect particular mentalities and social practices, or do they actively shape the experience and perception of the world? Maps, History and Power addresses these and other questions by exploring mapping practices and spatial thought in several European and non-European contexts from the medieval to the modern periods. The course explores how past societies have used maps to serve a number of practical and ideological purposes: to express religious belief, to aid navigation and commerce, to assert cultural superiority, and to enable state formation or imperial control. Alongside readings in history and cartography, the course will make extensive and innovative use of the latest digital resources, allowing students to view and discuss historical maps from the world's great research libraries and collections.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course operates reading weeks in the MT and LT. There will be a revision session in Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit two 3,000 word formative essays (one per term). They will also have the opportunity to sit a mock exam.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be capped at two groups. Places are limited and priority will be given to International History students over those of other departments.

Course content: This course provides an overview of the history of Qing China from the early eighteenth to the mid-nineteenth centuries, tracing political, institutional, cultural, and social continuities and changes, particularly in China's land and maritime frontiers. Beginning in the Qianlong period, the Qing Empire became involved in an ever-growing network of commerce and cultural exchange, extending from Manchuria to Inner Asia, and from the East Sea to the Indian Ocean. Following the bloody suppression of the Lhasa riots in 1750, a series of events further connected China to the external world: the infamous Dzungar genocide, China's invasion of Burma, European encroachment in Asian seas, the rise of port cities in Southeast Asia that were dominated by Chinese entrepreneurs, and increasing tension between China and Western powers over sea lanes and maritime boundaries. This course will use China's shifting frontiers as a fulcrum to re-examine Chinese history in the modern era, factoring in the movement of people, commodities, ideas, cultural meanings, and imaginaries, which clearly indicate "China's outwardness." This challenges the common perception of China as isolated and inward-looking.

Slavery and Emancipation in the British World

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Oscar Webber

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course explores the history of slavery and freedom in Britain and the British world from 1600 to 1900. In the liberal tradition, slavery and freedom are framed as theoretical and rhetorical opposites. In practice, the lines between slavery and freedom were blurry and ambiguous. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, sugar grown and processed in the British colonies of the Caribbean by enslaved African workers was a cornerstone of the imperial economy. Britain's North American colonies were caught in the economic and political orbit of the sugar islands. At the end of the eighteenth century, the American, French and Haitian Revolutions transformed, but did not end, the political economy of slavery in the British world. In 1807, Britain abolished its slave trade. In 1834, slavery was abolished in the British empire. Abolition did not, however, end Britain's close association with slavery. Cotton produced by enslaved people in the American South provided Britain with crucial raw material during the industrial revolution. British investments kept the empire imbricated in the global trade in enslaved people and the commodities their labour produced. And yet, even as the British empire became entrenched in the nineteenth-century world of slavery, reformers placed ever greater faith in liberal ideas of freedom, bureaucratic transparency, free labour, and free markets. This course offers an opportunity to examine the place of slavery and emancipation in the history of the British world, and the ambiguities and paradoxes of a liberal empire built on the backs of enslaved people.

Race, Gender and Reproduction in the Caribbean, 1860s-1980s

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Imaobong Umoren SAR 3.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In the wake of slavery, debates about the intersecting politics of race, gender, and reproduction arose in the Francophone, Anglophone, and Hispanic Caribbean and continued well into the 1960s. This module explores the ways in which the formerly enslaved as well as former planters, imperial officials, newly indentured labourers from South Asia, philanthropists, medical professionals, and welfare workers contributed to and shaped colonial social welfare, health policies, and ideas surrounding racial uplift and improvement. Students will engage in comparative intellectual and social history by drawing on primary and secondary sources to consider the influence of European and American imperialism in the Caribbean. A range of topics will be explored including post-emancipation population decline; infant mortality; illegitimacy; venereal disease; birth control; inter- and extra regional migration; eugenics; tropical medicine; interwar population increase and the impact these issues had on the First and Second World Wars, decolonisation, departmentalisation and other independence struggles. Each week students will focus on a topic in relation to different Caribbean islands. All primary sources will be available in English.

Genesis of the Modern World: Europe, China and India, 1550 - 1840

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gagan D. S. Sood SAR 2.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is about the developments that led to the emergence of our modern world. A variety of conditions have been highlighted by historians as responsible for this, including government reform, agricultural practices, empirical rationality, consumption patterns, military conflict, property rights, family arrangements, territorial conquest, revenue administration, and sheer accident. Although scholarly consensus on the leading-edge conditions still eludes us, there is broad agreement that the polities of northwestern Europe, eastern China and northern India played critical roles, and that the fateful step change occurred between the sixteenth and early nineteenth centuries.

We examine these regions and the relations between them from two distinct but complementary perspectives. These perspectives define the two terms of the course. One is historiographical and centres on received interpretive frameworks, the other is historical and builds on our best current knowledge of Eurasia in the period. In Michaelmas Term, we study the most influential paradigms and narratives that have been elaborated by historians to make sense of the early modern step change which transformed the capacities of human endeavour. Each crystallises a specific set of structures and gives primacy to different polities of Eurasia, with a particular stress on Early Modern England and the English Atlantic, Late Ming and High Qing China, and Mughal and post-Mughal India. In studying these frameworks, we will gain familiarity with the most significant attributes of these polities, and how they have been interpreted by scholars. In Lent Term, we study the ways in which individual polities of the three regions addressed the near-universal problems that mark all complex states and societies. The solutions to these problems - grouped under the rubric of 'centralised institutions and ideology of rule', 'indirect rule and political economy', and 'plurality, them and us' - powerfully shaped their future trajectories, and had a direct bearing on relations between Europe, China and India. By recovering the most consequential structures and solutions over the two terms of this course, we seek to apprehend the genesis of the modern world.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in both the MT and the LT. As no prior knowledge of the course's subject is either assumed or required, it is essential for students to do the set readings and assignments, attend the seminars and engage actively in discussion. It is also strongly recommended that students meet informally outside the class setting to compare notes and learn from each other.

Formative coursework: A 3000-word essay will be due towards the end of MT on a historiographical topic decided in consultation with the instructor. Each week, students will work through one or more core readings which provide important background information, as well as selected further readings in line with their developing interests. These tasks will be supplemented with short response papers/memos to be posted on Moodle before the weekly seminars and unassessed debates and oral presentations during the seminars themselves.

Indicative reading: For general surveys, students may consult: David B. Abernethy, The Dynamics of Global Dominance: European Overseas Empires, 1415-1980 (New Haven, CT, 2000); Christopher A. Bayly, The Birth of the Modern World, 1780-1914: Global Connections and Comparisons (Oxford, 2004); John Darwin, After Tamerlane: The Global History of Empire (London, 2007). Signal contributions to the subject include: Fernand Braudel, Civilization and Capitalism, 15th-18th Century, 3 vols (New York, 1981-1984); Marshall G. S. Hodgson, Rethinking World History: Essays on Europe, Islam, and World History (Cambridge, UK, 1993); Antony G. Hopkins (ed.), Globalization in World History (London, 2002); Victor Lieberman, Strange Parallels: Southeast Asia in Global Context, c. 800-1830, 2 vols (Cambridge, UK, 2003-2009); Geoffrey Parker, Global Crisis: War, Climate Change and Catastrophe in the Seventeenth Century (New Haven, NH, 2013); Kenneth Pomeranz, Great Divergence: Europe, China and the Making of the Modern World Economy (Princeton, NJ, 2000).

Assessment: Essay (40%, 4000 words) in the LT.

Essay (45%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Class participation (15%) in the MT and LT.

Assessment will be via course participation (15%) and two 4000-word essays (40% and 45%, respectively). Students will be required to submit a formative essay in MT and an essay plan in LT as preparation for the assessed essays. The first assessed essay will be due in Week 9 of LT, the second in Week 1 of ST. The questions for these essays will be selected from an approved list supplied at the start of the course.

National Socialism. Old Theories and New Research Approaches

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Ulrich Herbert, room SAR 2.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is intended for students with some knowledge of the history of the Nazi Regime. Students without a detailed knowledge of this are advised to undertake preliminary background reading.

Course content: Between 1945 and approximately the year 2000, the history of the National Socialist regime was a subject of enormous explosiveness and actuality, which paradoxically continued to grow as time went on; not only in Germany, but almost worldwide. The need to explain and to understand what happened in those twelve years was immense, and still is. In Germany, people's understanding of the present has been moulded, indeed even grounded, by those events: the legitimisation of the SED's rule in the GDR for instance was based above all on a specific interpretation of the National Socialist regime. The revolt of the Sixty-Eighters in West Germany was to a considerable extent an act of self-distancing from the generation of their parents who were burdened with the National Socialist past, and as such it was the product of a particular understanding of National Socialism. At present, the Federal Republic's raison d'état is based essentially on an understanding of National Socialism and its crimes which itself continues to change.

Thus the history of research into the National Socialist regime should be understood not only as a gradual extension, deepening and expansion of our empirical knowledge of the period but also as a succession of sometimes very diverse perspectives and interpretations.

The aim of all these various debates, theories and research approaches was to explain the history of the National Socialist regime as a whole or in part, to separate the 'core' from the inessentials, and to reveal the forces that drove it. When faced with such complex but also frightful occurrences this was no simple undertaking, on the one hand because it is almost impossible to analyse the crimes of the National Socialist regime without becoming emotionally involved, and on the other hand because after 1939 the scene of action extended over the whole of Europe and the events were influenced not only by political, ideological, economic and military factors, but also by the completely different circumstances that prevailed in the individual countries occupied or allied with Germany. With the beginning of the war the history of National Socialist rule ceased to be a purely German affair, and became above all a part of European, and indeed in many respects of world, history. This is what makes the attempt to explain the regime by referring to one or more important factors so difficult and often insufficient.

Centre stage in these seminars is therefore occupied by interpretations, theories and debates which attempt to place the National Socialist regime in a historical context and to explain its history. The different approaches will be examined in their chronological sequence and their degree of plausibility, explanatory power and breadth of application will be analysed.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Land and Conflict in Latin America since 1750

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anna Cant SAR 3.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Extending from the late Spanish colonial era, through the wars of independence and up to present-day social conflicts, this course will focus on land. How has land been conceptualised and fought over? How have different social groups developed relationships with the land? In what ways have conflicts over land shaped Latin American politics? Students will be encouraged to take an interdisciplinary approach to these questions, drawing on new research in geography, anthropology and political science, as well as various strands of history.

Despite the great diversity of the Latin American continent, land is a constant reference point and one that lends itself to rich comparative study. Topics will include the global and local politics of the colonial hacienda system, anti-colonial indigenous rebellions, scientific exploration and population displacement, peasant movements, land reform, Cold War development policies and ongoing social protests over land and resource extraction.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 2 other pieces of coursework in the MT.

Students are required to write one 2,500-word formative essay in the Michaelmas Term and two formative discussion posts at the beginning of the year.

Indicative reading:

HY499

Dissertation

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Marc Baer SAR 3.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation and MSc in History of International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The HY499 dissertation is an exercise in using primary sources to write on a precise topic in International History. The only formal limit on the choice of subject is that it must fall within the syllabus - i.e. it has to be a topic in International History, and the dissertation has to be a study in the discipline of history. Dissertations that represent contributions to disciplines outside history, such as International Relations or Politics, will not be approved or accepted. Dissertations must therefore be based substantially on a critical analysis of primary sources, and candidates should aim to include an element of originality in the argument and/or the treatment of the evidence. The subject must involve an element of engagement with the analysis of relations between states and/or societies; alternatively it may involve the study of the history of attitudes and/or policies in one society towards others or comparative studies involving at least two states and/or societies. The topic must not be confined purely to the domestic affairs of one society or state. The dissertation supervisor is the final judge of whether a particular topic falls within the syllabus.

Teaching: 4 one-hour sessions in MT.

HY499 teaching is provided through HY499 Dissertation workshop sessions and through the individual supervision of dissertation projects by supervisors in the Department of International History. Students should use the Michaelmas Term to find, decide on, and develop a suitable dissertation topic and consider possible dissertation supervisors. Help with this process is available from the students' personal advisers. Students are then required to complete the HY499 Dissertation Proposal Form and to seek approval for their project from their dissertation supervisor. It is the students' responsibility to locate a supervisor. They should meet with the potential supervisor in late Michaelmas term (every member of staff has weekly office hours) to discuss their dissertation proposal, and then ask the supervisor to sign the HY499 Dissertation Proposal Form before the published deadline. It is the students' responsibility to contact their supervisor to arrange at least one but no more than three meetings in the Summer Term to discuss their dissertation. At this stage the supervisor will be prepared to read and give feedback on a draft table of contents and a draft chapter, or a section or a detailed plan of the dissertation of no more than 1,000 words. Students should note that if they submit a dissertation proposal after the deadline the Teacher Responsible for the course may need to allocate them to a non-subject-specialist supervisor, if no specialists are available.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. 100% by dissertation. A Fail cannot be compensated, and a degree cannot be awarded unless HY499 has been passed. Dissertations must not exceed 10,000 words, including text and footnotes but excluding the cover page, the table of contents, the list of abbreviations, the bibliography and appendices. Two bound copies and one electronic copy must be submitted by the published deadline.

International Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Wilson CBG.10.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Relations and MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is a graduate-level introduction to the study of international relations. It has 5 objectives: (i) to enquire into the nature of international politics and the role of general theory in advancing our understanding of it; (ii) to introduce students to the main contributions to the general theory of international politics; (iii) to provide students with a range of concepts, ideas, and perspectives to enable them to widen and deepen their understanding of international politics; (iv) to encourage critical, independent thought on international politics; and (v) to ascertain the extent to which progress has been made in our understanding of international politics. At the end of the course students should be able to think, talk and write in an informed, precise and critical manner about developments within the field of International Relations, past and present.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 2 essays in the LT.

Students deliver seminar papers and write three 2,000-word essays for their seminar teachers on topics notified at the beginning of the session.

Indicative reading: H. Bliddal, C. Sylvest and P. Wilson (eds.)

Foreign Policy Analysis III

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jurgen Haacke CBG.9.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students taking the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in EU Politics, MSc in EU Politics (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University) may be able to take this course if there is space but on previous years experience this is unlikely.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: Students need not have studied Foreign Policy Analysis before, but some familiarity with theories of International Relations and modern international history is essential.

Course content: Foreign Policy Analysis (FPA) looks at the way that decisions affecting external relations are made and shaped by actors within the state. This makes it distinct from approaches to International Relations that take the structure of the international system as a starting point for analysis. By understanding how decisions are shaped by domestic politics and structures and the rationality of decision-makers it is possible to arrive at new understandings of the foreign policies of individual states and to critique and enrich scholarship in the mainstream of International Relations. This course prepares students for such tasks by introducing them to the major theoretical approaches of FPA and how they can be applied to a range of case studies selected from a wide variety of states and international organisations.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 2 essays in the LT.

All students will be expected to write three 2,500 word essays for their seminar leader. Each student will also be expected to present at least one seminar topic.

Indicative reading:

International Politics: Asia & the Pacific

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christopher Hughes CBG.8.04 and Dr Jurgen Haacke CBG.9.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course looks at how states in the Asia-Pacific region develop policies and strategies to manage international crises and build stability through regionalization. The first term develops knowledge of the policies and strategies of the states in Northeast Asia and uses scenario building to explore the management of the challenges posed by the rise of China and the role of the US, disputes over territory in the East China Sea between China and Japan, the status and security of Taiwan, and the nuclear crisis on the Korean Peninsula. The second term focuses on Southeast Asia to explore the experience and potential of using economic regionalism to build stability and prosperity, the role of the US and China as hegemonic powers, the role of Indonesia as the largest state in the sub-region, and the case of Myanmar to explore the prospects for human security, democracy, and human rights. Seminars are used to build scenarios to explore these topics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one 2,000-word policy paper in the MT and one 2,000-word essay in the LT on dates stipulated by the teacher responsible.

Conflict and Peacebuilding

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Rampton

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: A basic background knowledge of the subject would be an advantage.

Course content: This course is intended for those interested in theoretical and practical approaches to the question of peace, the problems of war, conflict and violence, and responses to them particularly in the form of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The course is divided into three unequal but interconnected parts. The first part examines ideas and debates about the concepts, causes, contexts, dynamics and representations of conflict, violence and war. The second explores and problematises the concept of peace and the nature, meanings and goals of peace and peacebuilding. This leads into the third section which is concerned with a critical engagement with the range of international responses to conflict associated with the discourses and practices of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The seminars explore the nexus between theory and practice. Although the course and its readings are mainly theoretical and conceptual rather than empirical, students are encouraged to apply the ideas to actual cases, past and present.

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 9 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy. The course also features weekly film showings linked to the lecture theme.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 piece of coursework in the LT. The MT formative essay up to 2,000 words. The LT essay outline up to 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Mark Duffield Global Governance and the New Wars (Zed Books 2014). Sinisa Malesevic The Sociology of War and Violence (Cambridge University Press 2010). Economic Diplomacy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Woolcock CBG.8.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Political Economy (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students will be required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for you. Admission to the course is not guaranteed. The course is primarily for students on the IPE Masters and LSE-Sciences-Po Double Degree masters.

Course content: The first term of this full unit course introduces students to the theories and analytical frameworks relating to decision-making and negotiation in international economic relations. It also covers the relevant literature on the application of theory to understanding the factors shaping international economic negotiations. There is coverage of the respective roles of the main actors, institutional settings and processes involved in domestic decision-making and international negotiation, and their interaction with each other. The course is essentially concerned with the process of international economic negotiations, which distinguishes it from other optional courses that cover more on the substance of trade, finance, money, environment, etc. No prior knowledge of economics is required to take this course.

The second term takes the form of a simulation of a relevant international negotiation. The simulation is supported by lectures on the substance of the policy issues to be negotiated as well as negotiating techniques. These lectures will be given by LSE staff and practitioners with direct experience of similar negotiations. In this second term the seminar sessions will then cover discussion of the substantive policy issues as well as the simulation in working groups, delegations and plenary sessions.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 12 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 4 hours of workshops in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

IR434 Half UnitEuropean Defence and Security

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Spyridon Economides COW.2.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE4You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course examines the role of defence and security issues in European integration. It traces the evolution and nature of decision-making with respect to European defence initiatives, and examines the structures and institutions of EU defence and security. It also seeks to understand the relationship between foreign policy and security/defence policy in the EU especially in the context of transatlantic relations, and NATO, and the EU's wider international role. The course is divided into two parts. Part one provides a theoretical overview of the role of defence and security issues in European integration. It addresses the question of defence and European identity, the relationship between European defence and the national objectives of Member-States, the link between collective defence and collective security as well as the role of defence in the EU's evolution as a civilian, normative and global actor in international relations. It also looks at the historical evolution of the plans, structures and institutions of European defence and security. It places this evolution in the context of the early post-Second World War era, the Cold War and German rearmament and the issues of extended deterrence, burden-sharing within NATO and the emergence of a European pillar to Western defence. Part two examines the more contemporary developments in European defence and security and concentrates on the relationship with European Political Cooperation/Common Foreign and Security Policy, moves to institutionalise defence and provisions for crisis management and conflict prevention. Included in the second part are examinations of the EU's 'comprehensive approach', and recent CSDP missions and the implications of this on the EU's role in the world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT.

Students are expected to submit one 2,000-word essay and one Group Policy Analysis paper 2,500 words.

IR452 Half UnitEmpire and Conflict in World Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tarak Barkawi CBG.9.03

Availability: This course is available on the CEMS Exchange, MBA Exchange, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed

Course content: Many peoples and places in modern world politics have been shaped by histories of empire. This course explores the violent dimensions of the imperial past and present. It covers armed conflict in imperial context from "small war" to "counterinsurgency" and the War on Terror; it looks at the ways in which warfare shapes (and is shaped by) the societies, cultures and politics that populate world politics; and it considers some of the intellectual traditions that have arisen out of the experience of colonial violence, from the thought of resistance leaders to subaltern and postcolonial studies. The premise of the course is that warfare and violence have been generative forces in shaping world politics.

This course aims to familiarise students with scholarship on empire and conflict in International Relations and related disciplines. This involves, first, understanding the limitations of the sovereign nation-state as the basic unit of world politics. For most people in most times and places, international relations have taken imperial form of one kind or another. What would it mean to take empire seriously in international thought and inquiry? The course approaches this question by looking at the relations between empire and globalization in historical and theoretical context. Second, although much scholarship on empire concerns economy and culture, the history of empire is a history of continual warfare and armed resistance. Such "small wars" have shaped society and politics in both the core and periphery of the international system, and often continue to do so long after the guns fall silent (as for example in the case of the US and the Vietnam War). The course will cover the histories, strategies and theories associated with such wars and their effects. Third and finally, the course will explore the intersection between empire and knowledge in political theory and social inquiry. Not only did anti-colonial resistance produce its own theorists, such as Frantz Fanon and Mao Zedong, but in recent decades empire has been the site of new turns in social and political theory, as for example in subaltern studies and postcolonialism. The course will introduce students to this work and its applications to understanding world politics.

MSc Seminars

The seminars will develop students' abilities to read, digest, and critique monograph length texts. Each will be based upon a single book. Students will be expected to read the assigned book in its entirety before each seminar. Every student will be expected to come to seminar prepared to participate. There will be no individual seminar presentations. Every student is expected to speak in every seminar. Students should be prepared to comment on the main argument of each book; to place each text in a wider intellectual context, concerning for example the debates and audiences the book is speaking to; and to offer a critical assessment of the book's contributions.

There will be some variation in the texts assigned to MSc students each year.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT.

Additionally, there will be weekly film viewings starting in Week 2. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT.

Global Business in International Relations

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Falkner CBG.08.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Relations (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the role of global business as an actor in international relations. It reviews the political and economic theories that seek to explain the rise of global business, paying attention in particular to International Relations and International Political Economy theories (realism, liberalism, Marxism), but also covering the main economic explanations of MNCs. Thereafter, the course examines the interaction between global business and states in international relations. This involves the study of corporate power and how to conceptualise it in IPE, the study of state-firm bargaining over investment decisions, and the regulation of global business by states and international governance institutions. The final part of the course considers the role that global business plays in selected global policy areas: economic development, environmental protection and human rights.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

10 lectures and 10 seminars on the following topics:

1. Introduction: global business in international relations
2. Globalisation and the rise of MNCs
3. Economic theories of the global firm
4. The political economy of MNC-state relations
5. International rules for MNCs I: trade and investment
6. International rules for MNCs II: taxation and offshore finance
7. The UN and global business regulation
8. MNCs, FDI and developing countries
9. MNCs and environmental protection
10. MNCs, corporate social responsibility and human rights

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the LT.

Formative essays are 2,000 words each.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

A 2-hour final examination. Students will be asked to answer 2 out of 8 questions.

IR461Islam in World Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sidel

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe, MSc in Culture and Conflict in a Global Europe (LSE & Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory and MSc in Social Anthropology (Religion in the Contemporary World). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: The course focuses on the role of Islam in world politics, posing two inter-related questions: First, how can we explain the varying nature and strength of Islam as a discursive and mobilizational force in world politics? Second, how should we understand the impact of changes in world politics on the institutions, authority structures, and identities associated with Islam? In this course, the approach to these questions is comparative. The course begins with an examination of the distinctive transnational structures of Islam as compared with another major world religion: Christianity. The trajectory of Islam as a force in international relations since the late 19th century is examined across successive periods in world history. The course covers the rise of transnational Islamist networks from the late Ottoman era through the tumultuous years of mass mobilisation in the interwar era, demobilisation with the formation of new nation-states in the early Cold War era, and the revival of Islam in world politics by the 1970s with the Iranian Revolution and developments elsewhere in the Muslim world. But most of the course covers the contemporary post-Cold War era, examining the varying role of Islam in diverse regional settings - Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Europe - and in the contexts of globalization and democratization, mass migration, separatist struggles and regional conflicts. Close attention is paid to the role of Saudi Arabia and Iran and the rise of sectarian conflict between Sunnis and Shi'a. The course also focuses on important cases like Al Qa'ida and the Taliban in Afghanistan and Pakistan, civil wars in settings as varied as Chechnya and Somalia, the rise of the so-called 'Islamic State' in Iraq and Syria, as well as important trends in Western Europe, including the UK.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Professor Sidel will be solely responsible for the lectures and the seminars. Students will be divided into seminar discussion groups at the beginning of the course.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit two essays of 2,000-3,000 words in length - one in Michaelmas term; one early in Lent term. These essays will help students develop their knowledge of specific topics of particular interest to them and to receive feedback and guidance from Professor Sidel. Students will also produce a 2-3 page outline of their assessed essay in Week 7 of the Lent Term. The outline should include a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Advice and approval will be provided within two weeks of submission of essay outlines.

IR466 Half Unit Genocide

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CBG.10.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Human Rights and Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This seminar course provides an introduction to the study of genocide. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, it explores major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role(s) of genocidal campaigns in international politics, inter alia, their origins, development, and termination; the manner of their perpetration, progression, and diffusion; their impact on the maintenance of international peace and security; their consequences for the reconstruction and development of states and the building of nations; and their adjudication in domestic and international courts and tribunals. Empirical cases to be discussed include Australia, Cambodia, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, East Timor, Nazi Germany, Guatemala, Iraq, Northern Ireland, the Ottoman Empire, Rwanda, Uganda, the Soviet Union, Sudan, and the former Yugoslavia, among others. The course is designed to equip students with the analytic tools necessary for making sense of the evolution of the international system from the nineteenth century to the present and for critically assessing the promise and limits of responding to collective violence.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

The Political Economy of Trade

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Woolcock CBG.8.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in The Global Political Economy of China and Europe (LSE and Fudan). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed

Course content: The course begins with a discussion of the ideational factors that have shaped and continue to shape trade policy, before introducing some of the core analytical models that assist understanding of the political economy of trade. The course then proceeds to discuss the nature of trade and investment in the 21st century, including among other things the impact of the growth of global supply chains on the political economy of trade and investment. The domestic and international institutional frameworks within which trade and investment policy are conducted are discussed. The course then considers some of the underlying trends in trade towards the use of preferential and plurilateral rather than multilateral approaches. Finally, after a discussion of the links between trade and development, the course covers some of the main topics in current negotiations including in particular agriculture and food security, trade in manufactures, services and investment as well as the inter-relationship between trade and sustainable development.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The formative assessment is 2,000 words.

Indicative reading: Heydon, K and Woolcock, S (eds) (2012) The Ashgate Research Companion to International Trade Policy, HF 1379 A 82: e-book and hard copies available. Hoekman, B and Kosteki. Politics of Money in the World Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jeffrey Chwieroth CBG.10.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Tokyo), MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPA in Social Impact, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and Master of Public Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course is designed as a component of the study of a global system in which the management and mismanagement of money and finance are matters of fundamental consequence for international relations. It is intended to be of particular relevance to students specialising in international political economy. This is a course in applied international political economy theory. It deals with the basic concepts regarding the creation, use and management of money and finance in the global system. Students are then introduced to the political foundations of international monetary governance. Issues covered include the use of national currencies as international money, the politics of exchange rate adjustment, the operations of banks and other institutions in international money and capital markets, the evolution of global financial markets, the relationship between states and markets in the arena of global finance, international monetary cooperation, and the choices of monetary and financial policies open to developed and developing countries. The course emphasises that contemporary issues, such as international financial crises, international financial regulation and the politics of IMF conditionality, are best understood in a broader theoretical and analytical context.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Students intending to take the course should have a strong background in monetary economics.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students are expected to make presentations on topics of their choice and to write one 1,500 word essay, to be marked by the seminar teacher.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus, but the following general works provide a useful introduction:

- B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital (2008);
- S Strange, Mad Money (1998) Porter, Globalization and Finance (2005);
- D Andrews (ed), International Monetary Power (2006);
- E Helleiner, The status quo crisis: global financial governance after the 2008 meltdown (2014);
- C. Norloff, America's global advantage: US hegemony and international cooperation (2010);
- B Cohen, Currency power: understanding monetary rivalry (2015);
- J Frieden & D Lake, International Political Economy: Perspectives on Global Power and Wealth;
- A Walter and G Sen, Analyzing the Global Political Economy (2009)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the January exam period.

The paper contains about 10 questions, of which two are to be answered.

IR470 Half Unit International Political Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jeffrey Chwieroth CBG.10.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Political Economy (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An advanced introduction to concepts and contending theoretical, analytical, and methodological approaches in international political economy, and an overview of contemporary issues in international economic relations. This course is the core course for MSc International Political Economy. It aims to introduce students to various approaches to the study of international political economy (IPE), and to apply theories to important contemporary empirical issues. The first part of the course introduces students to the main theoretical concepts in and analytical approaches to political economy, emphasising the overlap between international and comparative approaches. After surveying the main schools of thought in the subject, it examines more recent theoretical developments, including the comparative and domestic approaches that have become increasingly prominent in the literature. The second part of the course addresses contemporary issues related to multinational corporations, globalisation and developing countries. The third part of the course focuses on methodological approaches to international political economy, exploring research design and qualitative and quantitative methods. Previous background in international relations, international economics, comparative politics and history is helpful but is not a requirement. Students with no previous background in the subject should read Walter and Sen, 'Analyzing the Global Political Economy' (2009), Oatley, 'International Political Economy' and Ravenhill, 'Global Political Economy' by the end of the first term.

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR450-IPE-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay will be set and marked by the seminar teacher.

Students will also give a presentation delivered during the seminars.

Indicative reading: It is advisable to begin reading before the lectures start, and the following general texts are recommended. A more complete source-list is provided in the course outline.

- Oatley, 'International Political Economy' (2012);
- Ravenhill, 'Global Political Economy' (2011);
- Walter and Sen, 'Analyzing the Global Political Economy' (2009);
- J Frieden, D Lake and JL Broz (eds), 'International Political Economy' (2009);
- J Frieden, 'Global Capitalism' (2006); Robert Gilpin, 'Global Political Economy' (2001);
- Susan Strange (1998), 'States and Markets'.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Students will be asked to answer two out of eight questions.

IR471 Half Unit The Situations of the International Criminal Court

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CBG.10.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations, MSc in Theory and History of International Relations and MSc in Women, Peace and Security. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to the course selection on LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This taught seminar introduces students to the practices of the International Criminal Court (ICC). Focusing on the ICC's ongoing investigations and prosecutions - its so-called 'Situations' - the course exemplifies the politics of international law in the context of one of the most embattled international organisations in the international system. On the foundation of 'practice theory', it blends methodological approaches from law, the social sciences and the humanities. By adopting an evolutionary perspective to the ICC, the seminar raises - and answers - pertinent theoretical questions about institutional design and development of international politics. Empirical cases to be discussed include the settings of the ICC's nine Situations (the DRC, Uganda, the Central African Republic, Sudan, Kenya, Libya, Cote d'Ivoire, and Mali) as well as the territories of the ICC's preliminary examinations (Afghanistan, Columbia, Georgia, Guinea, Iraq, Nigeria, Palestine, and Ukraine). Students will learn to work with both court documents and theoretical texts.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students will also receive feedback on their seminar participation.

Students are required to research and write one essay (2,500 words). In addressing a given essay topic, students must integrate theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen. Essays must be fully - and carefully - referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Week 8 and must be in hard copy. Feedback is provided by the course teacher, who is responsible for marking essays.

Several criteria are applied in the evaluation of student essays, notably: (1) originality of argument. (2) use of literature: has relevant scholarship been digested and put to good use? (3) soundness of analysis: is the inquiry comprehensive and logically consistent? (4) organisation of evidence: have argument and evidence been introduced and presented in a compelling manner? (5) validity of findings: does the argument remain valid when applied empirically? (6) clarity of presentation: are grammar, punctuation and references flawless?

IR472 Half Unit

Nuclear Non-proliferation and World Politics (Advanced Topics in International Relations)

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Etel Solingen (Susan Strange Visiting Professor during 2019/20)

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option. All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to the course selection on LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course will apply theories of international relations to explain why some states have pursued nuclear weapons whereas most others have abstained. What is the role of the nonproliferation regime, major powers, international norms, democracy, and globalization on decisions to acquire or renounce nuclear weapons? How do international institutions, major powers and other states respond to violations of international legal commitments not to develop nuclear weapons? What is the relative effectiveness of sanctions and positive inducements in persuading states to abandon nuclear weapons programs? Countries under focus will be North Korea, Iran, Japan, Taiwan, Iraq, Libya, South Korea, India, Pakistan, Israel, and Egypt, among others. There will be simulations of negotiations geared to dissuade actual or potential nuclear proliferators from pursuing such designs and Oxford-style debates.

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

1 x 1,500 word essay, 1 x 1 page outline summary for the summative essay.

China and the Global South

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Alden CBG.9.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course focuses on the substantive role that China plays in the Global South where its preponderance of material power and putative developing country status confers upon it a dominant position in bilateral and regional political economies. China's economic position, coupled to an astute use of finances flowing from its mercantilist policies, has enabled it to become the leading trading partner and a significant investor in the developing world. Moreover, the Global South is increasingly figuring in Beijing's expanding security interests and soft power provisions. Interpretations embedded in prevailing academic discussions like socialisation, threat and peaceful rise take on new meaning when studied through the lens of ties with developing countries. Understanding how dynamics in this relationship are impacting upon a host of global and contemporary issues (BRICs, multilateralism, peacekeeping, the environment) is crucial to the shape of the 21st century. Students will acquire a deeper appreciation of the concept of agency linked to the varied response of countries and regional organisations in the Global South, from policy elites to local communities, to China's growing structural power, as well as placing Chinese engagement within the context of other 'traditional' and emerging powers. This will offer a deeper analysis of the way in which the dynamics of China's economic and political model impact on its relationship with the Global South.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

A 1,500 word essay will be due in Week 7 of the term. The essay can be used to develop ideas for the summative essay.

Students will submit a 2 page outline of the assessed essay in Week 10, receiving comments and feedback in Week 11.

IR474 Half Unit

Revolutions and World Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Lawson CBG.9.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: Revolutions are often considered to be a 'side order' to the 'main course' of International Relations. But as this course explores, the lack of attention paid to revolutions is a mistake - revolutions have played a major part in the making of the modern international order. From the 'Atlantic Revolutions' of the late 18th and early 19th centuries to the 'colour revolutions' of the early 21st century, revolutions have been constitutive of notions of sovereignty, order, justice, and more. Revolutions have also been tightly bound up with dynamics of war and peace. This course explores both the theory and practice of revolutions, teasing out their effects and examining the prospects for revolutionary change in the contemporary world.

List of Topics:

Part 1: Thinking about revolutions

1. What are revolutions?
2. Key themes in the study of revolutions
3. Revolutions in world politics

Part 2: The experience of revolutions

4. The Atlantic 'age of revolutions'
5. Socialist revolutions
6. Reading week - session on the assessed essay

7. 'Third World' revolutions
 8. The 'last great revolution'?
 9. 'Colour' revolutions
- Part 3 Revolution today
10. The Arab uprisings
 11. Rethinking revolutions

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 20 hours of seminars and 4 hours of workshops in the MT.

The main aim of the course is to provide an opportunity for students to make informed judgements about how and in what ways revolutions have impacted on core features of modern international order. Additional aims include assessment of the place of revolutions in the contemporary world and, more generally, the ability to connect theoretical arguments about revolutions with the substantive experience of revolutions.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Formative essay 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Hannah Arendt, On Revolution (Penguin: 1963). Colin Beck, Radicals, Revolutionaries and Terrorists (Polity: 2015). Students are expected to produce 10 weekly blog posts of 250 words.

IR475 Half Unit

Gender/ed/ing International Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katharine Millar CBG.8.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option.

All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course foregrounds gender - as noun, verb and structure - in understanding the practices/events studies as global politics and the discipline/study of international relations. The course is grounded in feminist theory and provides students with an introduction to feminist epistemologies and methods. It proceeds in two sections, moving from theoretical foundations to an examination of gender and the macro, transnational and historical processes of global politics. Each 'macro' examination of the gendering of international politics is followed by a corresponding examination of several substantive areas of international politics, including security, development, NGOs and transnational social movements and international law/organisations. These overarching topics are balanced with issue-specific case studies (eg sexual/sexualised violence in conflict; gendering of the informal economy), derived from current events, to be discussed in seminars. Particular thematic attention will be paid to the on-going construction (and transmission) of global/transnational hierarchies that are gendered and gendering.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 pieces of coursework in the MT.

Indicative reading: B Ackerly, J True and M Stern (eds), Feminist Methodologies for International Relations (CUP: 2006). C Enloe, Bananas, beaches and bases: making feminist sense of international relations, rev'd 2nd ed (University of California Press: 2014). C Mohanty, Feminism without Borders: Decolonising Theory; Practising Solidarity (Duke University Press: 2003). L Sjoberg, Gender, War and Conflict (Polity: 2014). C Weber, Queer International Relations: sovereignty, sexuality and the will to knowledge (OUP:2016)

Assessment: Essay (90%, 4000 words) in the LT. Coursework (10%) in the MT.

The coursework entails weekly short reaction pieces (300 words maximum) engaging with the week's topics/readings to be submitted in advance of the seminar. These will prepare students to fully engage with the seminar discussions. Most importantly, they will familiarise students with the feminist epistemological commitments to critique and self-reflection.

IR476 Half Unit Gender and Political Violence

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katharine Millar CBG.8.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option. All students are required to obtain permission of the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application linked to LSE for You. Admission to the course is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course foregrounds gender as an analytic lens to highlight and question received wisdom regarding the interrelations of various practices of violence and manifestations of conflict. It moves away from the concept of 'security' to examine assemblages of threats and vulnerabilities that connect and problematise traditional international relations concepts of scale (eg local, national, international) as well as the public and private. Taking gender seriously allows us to trace the 'systems level' war into the everyday, and to follow everyday practices of violence into the global. The course encourages students to consider not only the ways different practices of violence are masculinised/feminising, but also how these gendering violences are implicated in social power relations, sexualised/sexual hierarchies, and the production of order/normality. Geographically, this approach brings the Global North and South into the same analytical frame. Particular thematic emphasis is placed on the questions of what constitutes violence, and how this key conceptualisation relates to our ways of analysing, interpreting and making sense, both academically and experientially, of the phenomenon.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the LT.

IR478 Half Unit Critical War Studies

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tarak Barkawi CBG.9.03

Tarak Barkawi is Professor in the Department of International Relations at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He studies warfare between the West and the non-European world, past and present. He writes on the pivotal place of armed force in globalization, imperialism, and modernization, and on the neglected significance of war in social and political theory. He is author of Soldiers of Empire, Globalization and War and many scholarly articles.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed

Course content: War transforms the social and political orders in which we live, just as it obliterates our precious certainties. Nowhere is this more obvious than in the fate of truths offered about war itself. War regularly undermines expectations, strategies and theories, and along with them the credibility of those in public life and the academy presumed to speak with authority about it. This course begins with the recognition that the unsettling character of war has been a profound opportunity for scholarship. For it is precisely in war's disordering and unsettling of politics and identities that the socially and historically generative powers of war are exposed. In bending, stretching and even breaking institutions and societies, war reveals them to us anew and offers perspectives obscured in times of peace. At the same time, these disruptions shape and inform the course and character of war. This violent but fecund juncture between war, society and politics is what this course seeks to understand.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the LT. This course consists of ten lectures, nine seminars and eight film evenings. It is primarily a book-based graduate seminar.

The lecture series provides concepts, ideas and histories - intellectual scaffolding - against which to read the course books. Each of the nine seminars for this course will be based upon a single book. The seminars will develop students' abilities to read, digest, and critique monograph length texts. Students will be expected to read the assigned book in its entirety before each seminar. Every student will be expected to come to seminar prepared to participate. There will be no individual seminar presentations. Every student is expected to speak in every seminar. Students should be prepared to comment on the main argument of each book; to place each text in a wider intellectual context, concerning for example the debates and audiences the book is speaking to; and to offer a critical assessment of the book's contributions.

The optional film series provides an opportunity for sociability and the exploration of course themes in popular cultures. Films are an important way in which war has shaped modern culture. The course coordinator will briefly introduce each film and a short discussion will follow the screening.

Formative coursework: To help them prepare for their summative essay, students will write two 2000 word book reviews of seminar books of their choosing.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

The course will be 100% assessed by essay due after the end of term and based on a topic of the student's choice.

IR479 Half Unit Russia in World Politics

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tomila Lankina CBG.10.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course offers an analysis of key issues in the development of Russian foreign and security policies and the role that it plays in global politics. It is primarily intended for the courses listed above and is available as an outside option on the MSc in Comparative Politics to students with permission from the course convenor.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal prerequisites but some knowledge of social science methods and an interest in Russian politics will be taken for granted.

Course content: The course covers the various factors shaping Russian foreign and security policy. It will explore both the traditional foreign policy and security issues, such as Russia's recent military build-up, economic power projection, the geopolitics of oil and gas, as well as soft power and soft security aspects of Russia's foreign policy, including the role of the media and propaganda; hybrid warfare; the role of ideas and norms; we will also explore the historical legacies influencing how Russia sees the world and its neighbours. Each of the ten topics covered will speak to the major theoretical debates on the factors shaping security and foreign policy and students will be encouraged to evaluate the merits of the various theories based on available evidence. The background seminar focuses on the domestic and international context preceding Russia's emergence as a successor to the Soviet Union. The subsequent sessions analyse post-communist Russian foreign policy with a special focus on foreign policy under President Putin, including the military interventions in Georgia and Ukraine, the securitisation of Russia's media and Russia's attempts to influence politics in the EU and beyond.

Some of the questions to be addressed in the course of the ten seminars are: How have domestic institutions and political regime change following the collapse of the USSR impacted on foreign policy making and thinking? How has Russia sought to use traditional security mechanisms, hard power and soft power to influence the "near abroad"? What explains the failure of "reset" policy between the US and Russia? Has Russian engagement with Europe and its main institutions, the EU and NATO, suggested that it is part of or apart from Europe? What are the key mechanisms of Western influence on Russia's foreign policy? What kind of a relationship has Russia forged with China and what are the factors shaping this relationship? What drives the nuances of Russia's policy in the Middle East? What role do energy politics play in Russia's relations with its neighbours and in Russia's foreign policy globally? The final section will address the question of the other longer-term historical influences shaping the foreign policy of Russia.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students who are new to international politics are advised to attend the lectures for IR202, Foreign Policy Analysis.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation, 1 other piece of coursework and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

Each student will write a review of one of the required readings in no more than 500 words.

In the course of the academic term, each student will be also expected to make one presentation on a given topic. Presenters will be expected to distribute a 1 paragraph summary of the main points of their presentations to Professor Lankina and students in advance of the seminar.

Students will also produce a 2-3 page outline of their assessed essay by Week 6 of the Lent term.

IR480 Half Unit Globalisation and the State in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Natalya Naqvi CBG.8.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed

Course content: What role should the state play in economic development? How has globalisation effected what the state can still actually do to promote economic development? Between the 50s and 80s, the East Asian 'developmental state' model delivered rapid industrialisation through extensive state intervention, seemingly refuting not only the claims of free market economics, but also of dependency theory: that poor countries could never develop due to the very nature of the capitalist world system. Since the 80s, the applicability of the East Asian model was challenged in new ways. Structural changes in the global political economy, including the end of fixed exchange rates, increased capital mobility, the development of international financial markets, privatisation of the commanding heights of the economy, the proliferation of restrictive trade and investment agreements, and the rise of global value chains, led many to argue that even if it was economically beneficial for other countries to implement the East Asian model, this was no longer possible because globalisation had dramatically constrained the power of the nation state. Others argued that concerns over the constraints posed by globalisation were overblown, and that domestic interests, institutions, and ideas were responsible for holding back structural transformation of the economy.

This course will combine debates in IPE, over how the process of globalisation has transformed the capacity for state action, with debates in the political economy of development over the role of the state in the process of late development. Students will gain an understanding not only of the debate over how much domestic policy autonomy developing countries have after globalisation, but also of the kinds of policies they need this policy space for. Problems of underdevelopment are approached through the prism of both core-periphery power relations, and power relations arising from the domestic productive structure.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

Dissertation in International Political Economy

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ranjit Lall CBG.08.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Political Economy (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: MSc students are required to write a 10,000 word dissertation on a topic within the field of IPE approved by the student's dissertation lead. The dissertation need not be an account of original research and may rely on secondary sources.

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT. 4 hours of lectures and 4 hours of workshops in the LT. 1 hour of workshops in the ST. There will be a 60-minute preliminary lecture in the MT about the Dissertation process and 4 lectures in the LT on specific topics and concepts relevant to the dissertation process. In the 60-minute of small group workshops, the students apply the concepts introduced in the lecture to their own research projects. Two members of the teaching faculty will work between groups to support them and answer questions. The last ST session will be a 'drop in' opportunity for students to raise questions and discuss their specific concerns.

Formative coursework: Students submit the initial topic and research question early in LT; and a more detailed 4-5 page dissertation plan later in LT.

LL440Corporate Law and Accounting

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Morley

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to examine areas in which law and accounting intersect in promoting an efficient market economy. It is interdisciplinary in focus, and provides students from varying backgrounds with new perspectives and leads to in-depth study by way of a Dissertation.

Topics in Michaelmas term may include: An introduction to law and regulation in the accounting context; the legal requirement for accounts and audit, and the role of accounting standards; "true and fair view" as the cornerstone of financial reporting and auditing; the strategic report; tax and accounting; groups in law and group accounting; auditor liability; law, accounting and equity: capital maintenance; law, accounting and debt: financial covenants; the regulation of the professions. Other issues in accounting and the law may be substituted/added during this term.

Lent term will focus on preparation for the Dissertation. It will start with a series of seminars on the research process, which may include: overview and finding a title; developing a research question; methodology; finding and using sources. Other topics relating to the research process may be substituted/added during the first part of the term. The second half of the term will comprise a series of seminars in which students will present their preliminary research proposal and receive feedback from the course convenors and their peers.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

One meeting with each individual student's dissertation supervisor in ST. There will be a reading week in week 6 in MT and LT.

Formative coursework: All students will be expected to contribute to class discussion. Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during class, on two written homework assignments, in one formal meeting with individual student's Dissertation Supervisor, and during office hours.

Indicative reading: Although no one book covers the entire syllabus, the following two books provide background information: Gower's principles of modern company law (2016), P L Davies, S Worthington, E Micheler, LCB Gower. Financial accounting and reporting (2017), B Elliot and J Elliot. Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course and will include articles from law, accounting, economics and sociology journals and books. Students will also be provided with relevant examples of practitioner reports, policy papers, and referred to relevant websites. Some illustrative references to texts and primary materials are: Baistrocchi E and Roxan I (eds.), Resolving Transfer Pricing Disputes: A Global Analysis (2012, Cambridge University Press); Botzem S, The Politics of Accounting Regulation: International Standard Setting in Financial Reporting (2014, Edward Elgar); Dezalay Y & Sugarman D (Eds), Professional Competition and Professional Power: Lawyers, Accountants and the Social Construction of Markets (1995); Ferran E, Moloney N, Hill J & Coffee J, The Regulatory Aftermath of the Global Financial Crisis (2012, Cambridge University Press); Freedman J and Power M (eds.), Law and Accountancy: Conflict and co-operation in the 1990s (1992, SAGE); Kershaw D, Company Law in Context: Text and Materials (2012, Oxford University Press); Parkinson, Corporate Power and Responsibility (1995, Oxford University Press); Power M, The Audit Society (1999, Oxford University Press).

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Dissertation (50%, 10000 words) in August.

Law and Accounting Prize

The international law firm Herbert Smith Freehills sponsors a prize for the best examination performance on the MSc Law and Accounting.

LL468 Half UnitEuropean Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: This course will provide an overview of the origin, development and current standing of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Its primary focus will be on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, though the cases of other jurisdictions will also be referred to where appropriate. The course will analyse the Convention from the perspective of selected rights within it, but will also engage with the subject thematically, subjecting such concepts as the 'margin of appreciation' and proportionality to close scrutiny. The goal of the course is to give students a good critical understanding of the Convention, the case-law of the Strasbourg court and the Convention's place within the constitutional and political structure of 'Greater Europe'.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: There will be a formative assessment, its format to be confirmed at the start of the course.

Indicative reading: There is no single text covering the course and required readings will be uploaded to Moodle before the seminar. The readings will consist of a mixture of cases and theoretical materials. The following are useful textbooks:

- Jacobs, White and Ovey, The European Convention on Human Rights 7th edn (OUP, 2017)
- Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 4th edn (Oxford, 2018).

A strong European perspective is to be found in:

- van Dijk, van Hoof, van Rijn and Zwaak (eds), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights 5th edn (Intersentia, 2018)

Very good edited books include:

- Brems and Gerards (eds), Shaping Rights in the ECHR (Cambridge, 2013)
- Follesdal, Peters and Ulfstein (eds), Constituting Europe (Cambridge 2013)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL469 Half UnitUK Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB.6.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Those seeking to take it will need to discuss this first with the course teacher: the course is quite legal in focus.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: This course will be made up of a detailed study of the UK Human Rights Act. The origins and the political background to the Act will be explained, and the structure of the measure will be fully elaborated, relying on the text of the Act itself but also on the burgeoning case law that accompanies the measure. The course will identify the principles that underpin the Act and explain its proper place in English law. It will also explore the wider constitutional implications of the measure, looking at its effect on the relationship between courts and Parliament. The political context in which the measure has had to operate will be considered, and the relationship with the change to human rights protection likely to follow the UK's proposed departure from the EU will be considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: The key text is now C A Gearty, On Fantasy Island. Britain, Strasbourg and Human Rights (OUP, 2016). See also R Costigan and R Stone, Civil Liberties and Human Rights (11th edn, OUP, 2017); Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (Cambridge, 2009); Hickman, Public Law After the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010); Gearty, Principles of Human Rights Adjudication (Oxford University Press, 2004). While these books will be referred to, students will also be expected to read cases: they will receive a detailed Reading list for each topic.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least six questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL475 Half Unit

Terrorism and the Rule of Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB.6.11

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available across all courses and potentially suitable for all but is particularly designed for LLM, MSc Conflict Studies, MSc Human Rights students.

This course is capped at 60 students.

Course content: This course will provide a theoretical and historical introduction to the concept of terrorism. It will critically consider definitions of terrorism, and analyse the relationship between terrorism and the right to rebel, and the right to engage in civil disobedience. The historical development of the idea of 'terrorism' from the late eighteenth century through to the present will then be traced, with the emphasis on locating the practice of political terror in its political and military/quasi-military context. The role of international law generally and international human rights law in particular in the context of terrorism and anti-terrorism action will be considered in detail. The course will teach the material in context, so the subject will be analysed by reference to particular situations where necessary, eg Northern Ireland, the Palestine/Israel conflict and the post 11 September 'war on terror'. The recent extension of state controls from terrorism to 'extremism' will be analysed. The aim of the course is to give the student a good critical understanding of this most controversial of subjects, and also to impart an understanding of the role of law in shaping the fields of terrorism and of counter-terrorism.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: There is no set text though reliance is made on the work of authors such as Richard English, Adrian Guelke, Lawrence Freedman, Igor Primoratz, Paul Wilkinson and the course teacher Conor Gearty. Students will receive a detailed Reading list for each topic, which will include legal cases from time to time.

Two recommended texts are Gearty, Liberty and Security (Polity Press, February 2013) and English, Terrorism How to respond (Oxford 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least six questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL4A6 Half Unit

Climate Change and International Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB.6.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course covers international law in relation to climate change with a view to assessing how the harms and burdens associated with climate change are governed and allocated in different legal regimes. The course adopts the stance that the political and legal questions raised by climate change cannot be addressed by reference to climate change law or international environmental law alone. Climate change gives rise to a series of profound problems touching upon a range of bodies of law (trade, human rights, migration, investment, state responsibility) in a complex political and ethical environment. In approaching climate change as a concrete concern relevant to these various bodies of law and practice, the course will address the normative bases for choosing between actions designed to prevent and/or manage climate change and its consequences, given developmental imperatives and the concerns raised by the 'fragmented' nature of international law. Projected seminars include: climate change science, politics and ethics; the theory of international law; international environmental law; trade law; human rights law; migration law. The course includes two case studies, from among the following: climate technology transfer; carbon markets; food security.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST. There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 1,800 word essay to be submitted by the end of week 6.

Indicative reading: IPCC, Fifth Assessment Report, Cambridge UP (2013-14); Rosemary Rayfuse and Shirley Scott (eds), International Law in the Era of Climate Change, Edward Elgar (2011); Stephen Gardiner, Simon Caney, Dale Jamieson and Henry Shue (eds), Climate Ethics: Essential Readings, Oxford UP (2010); Nicholas Stern, The Economics of Climate Change: The Stern Review, Cambridge UP (2007); Stephen Humphreys (ed.), Climate Change and Human Rights, Cambridge UP (2010); Larry Lohmann, Carbon Trading, Dag Hammarskjöld Foundation (2006); Lavanya Rajamani, Differential Treatment in International Environmental Law, Oxford UP (2006); Margaret Young (ed.), Regime Interaction in International Law: Facing Fragmentation, Cambridge UP (2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4A8 Half Unit

International Law and the Use of Force

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chris O'Meara

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Women, Peace and Security and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: This half-unit course examines the law relating to when it is permissible to use force (jus ad bellum). The aim of this course is to develop an understanding of the principles of international law that regulate the use of force in international society. It concentrates on the prohibition of resort to force in Article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter and the exceptions to that prohibition. It looks in detail at the right of self-defence, humanitarian intervention and the responsibility to protect, pro-democratic intervention, the protection of nationals and the criminalization of aggression. The use of force by or with the authorization of the United Nations is also considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the first seminar. See, in particular: Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence (5th ed, 2011); Gray, International Law and the Use of Force (3rd ed., 2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4A9 Half Unit

Law in War

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB6.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Women, Peace and Security and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential. LL4A8 is useful but not essential.

Course content: This course covers the international law governing the conduct of hostilities (jus in bello, also known as the law of armed conflict (LOAC) or international humanitarian law)—as distinct from the law on the resort to force (jus ad bellum), which is covered in a separate course (LL4A8). The course will take a critical and historical approach to the international regulation and facilitation of armed conflict. As well as the laws governing the means and methods of war ('Hague' law), the 'protected' groups hors de combat ('Geneva' law), and the distinction between international and non-international armed conflict, the course will cover 'lawfare' more generally: the recourse to law as a means of waging war. It will examine the application of the laws of war, including occupation law, in historical, actual, and ongoing conflicts, including recent wars in Iraq, Afghanistan, and Syria, the 'war on terror', and the Occupied Palestinian Territories. Students can expect to have a thorough grasp of the principles and regulations governing the conduct of hostilities, the context and efficacy of enforcement mechanisms, and a critical understanding of the normative and political stakes of international law in this area.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of submitting a 1,800 word essay to be submitted at the end of week 6.

Indicative reading: It is worthwhile acquiring the following book: Yoram Dinstein, The Conduct of Hostilities Under the Law of International Armed Conflict (Cambridge UP, 3rd ed., 2016). Other useful books include: Roberts and Guelff, Documents on the Laws of War (Oxford UP, 2000); Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars (Basic books, 4th ed. 2006); David Kennedy, Of Law and War (Princeton UP, 2006); Geoffrey Best, War and Law Since 1945 (Oxford UP, 1997). Detailed readings for each seminar will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AD Half Unit

Rethinking International Law: International Law and Contemporary Problems

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB 7.14

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is part of the following LLM specialism: Public International Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal prerequisites.

Course content: This course is primarily designed for students who have already had some exposure to public international law and wish to deepen their understanding of the international legal dimensions of contemporary problems. Each week the relation will be explored between international law and a different global issue or theme, such as war, poverty, terrorism, humanity, and territory. Course readings will encompass both legal scholarship and relevant writing by scholars from other disciplines (geography, anthropology, philosophy, literary studies, etc.).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students are expected to have done the set reading and be willing to participate in seminar discussion.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Relevant readings are likely to include: David Kennedy, Of War and Law; Sundhya Pahuja, Decolonising International Law: Development, Economic Growth and the Politics of Universality; and Balakrishnan Rajagopal, International Law from Below: Development, Social Movements and Third World Resistance.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AE Half Unit

Rethinking International Law: International Legal Thought

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gerry Simpson NAB 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is part of the Public International Law specialism.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course can be thought of as an historical companion to the Rethinking International Law course from Michaelmas Term. Its overarching argument is that international law is a literary and historical project that has come to represent the "last of the humanities": a space (enclaval, utopian, imaginative) where a different politics might be conjured – even perhaps advanced and defended – amidst the drive to technique and professionalisation often/sometimes found in the humanities in general. So, we begin with this idea before tracing a history commencing in 1919 with the apparent revitalisation of international law (and the re-colonisation of The Levant) at Versailles and in Geneva (Weeks 2 and 3). In Weeks 4 to 6, we turn to the Cold War as a legal project and international law as a Cold War project by de-centring the UN (Week 4), re-inhabiting nuclear war as a lawful moment (Week 5) and understanding neutrality or non-alignment as an international legal doctrine and a Cold War ideal. The course ends with three thematic classes on international law as lived experience, international law as historical (anti-) method, and international law as imaginative bet.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students are expected to have done the set reading and be willing to participate in seminar discussion.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Readings likely to be set include a selection of international legal texts (including work-in-progress and "new authors") and readings from the fields of intellectual history, 18th century literature and political theory. The key works, apart from the usual contemporary international lawyers, are by Paul Fussell, Carl Schmitt, Friedrich Schiller and David Scott

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AF Half Unit

Principles of Global Competition Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Niamh Dunne

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 90 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This module provides an overview of the major features of contemporary competition or antitrust law. Competition law comprises a set of legal rules which aim to control the socially-harmful exercise of private market power, whether through hardcore cartels, single firm monopoly behaviour, or mergers that reduce structural competition. This is a discipline that has undergone a remarkable process of expansion in recent decades, and competition laws are now actively enforced in around 130 jurisdictions worldwide. Instead of focusing on a particular regime, the module puts an emphasis on the fundamental debates underlying the adoption and evolution of this field, addressed in comparative perspective. Examples drawn primarily from EU and US competition law will be generally used by way of illustration. The course assumes no prior knowledge of competition law or economics, but aims to equip students to understand and analyse the key substantive elements found within most competition regimes. These include:

- Competition Policy and Economics;
- Anti-competitive agreements, including cartels and vertical restraints;

- Unilateral conduct rules, including refusal to deal and exclusionary practices; and
- Merger control, including horizontal and vertical mergers.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 3 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 1,500-word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading:

- Wish & Bailey, Competition Law (9th ed., 2018);
- Jones & Sufrin, EU Competition Law: Cases and Materials (6th ed., 2016);
- Roger van den Bergh, Comparative Competition Law and Economics (2017); and Hovenkamp, The Antitrust Enterprise (2005).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4AG Half Unit

Competition Law: Challenges and Prospects

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pablo Ibanez Colomo

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Prior knowledge of Competition Law is desirable, but not essential.

Course content: This module addresses some of the most topical and intellectually challenging aspects of contemporary Competition Law. The emphasis will be put on US antitrust and EU Competition Law, but developments from other jurisdictions are discussed where relevant. The module examines, inter alia, the application of competition law in high-technology industries as well as its intersection with intellectual property (standard-setting agreements and issues arising in relation to the enforcement of patents in the pharmaceutical sector) and sector-specific regimes. Topics may include the following:

- Competition Law, Intellectual Property and Innovation
- Competition Law in High-Technology Markets (including the Google saga in Europe and beyond)
- Online distribution
- Competition Law and Sector-Specific Regulation (Telecommunications and Energy)

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

International Criminal Law: Core Crimes and Concepts

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gerry Simpson NAB 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Public International Law, Human Rights Law. This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: The course looks at the rules, concepts, principles, institutional architecture, and enforcement of what we call international criminal law or international criminal justice, or, sometimes, the law of war crimes. The focus of the course is the area of international criminal law concerned with traditional "war crimes" and, in particular, four of the core crimes set out in the Rome Statute (war crimes, torture as a crime against humanity, genocide and aggression). It adopts a historical, philosophical and practical focus throughout, though the course is mainly directed at the conceptual problems associated with the prosecution of war criminals and, more broadly, legalised retribution. Attention, in this respect, will be directed towards the moral and jurisprudential dilemmas associated with bureaucratic criminality and individual culpability. Topics might include Pre-History (Vitoria, Grotius, Gentili, Cicero), Versailles, Nuremberg and Tokyo, the Trial of Adolf Eichmann, Crimes Against Humanity, the Crime of Aggression, Anti-Anti-Impunity, International Criminal Law's Historical Method.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Gerry Simpson, Law, War and Crime, (2007). Philippe Sands, East-West Street, (2017). Georg Schwarzenberger, International Law and Totalitarian Lawlessness, (1943). Judith Shklar, Legalism, (1964). Maurice Hankey, Politics, Trials, Errors (1950). Christine Schwobel, Critical Approaches to International Criminal Law: An Introduction (2015). Sam Moyn, The Last Utopia, (2010). Mark Lewis, The Birth of the New Justice: The Internationalization of Crime and Punishment, 1919-1950 (2014).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Foundations of International Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB 7.14

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is part of the following LLM specialisms: Public International Law, Human Rights Law.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course provides an introduction to key developments, issues and ideas that have given shape to the regime of international human rights law. We consider enduring debates around the foundations and universality of human rights, and look at a range of controversies relating to the interpretation and application of human rights treaties. Through the study of relevant concepts, norms, processes and debates, students are encouraged to develop an informed and critical assessment of the significance of international human rights law as a force for emancipatory change.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Relevant readings may include: Charles Beitz, The Idea of Human Rights (2009); Conor Gearty and Costas Douzinas (eds.), The Cambridge Companion to Human Rights Law (2012); and Philip Alston and Frédéric Mégret, The United Nations and Human Rights: A Critical Appraisal (2017).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

International Tax Systems

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB 7.33

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law and Accounting and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: International Business Law, Taxation.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students should have at least a basic knowledge of a tax system of a country (not necessarily the UK) or be studying LL4Z1 Business Taxation.

Course content: This course examines how taxation applies to transactions in the international context. The focus is on rules that operate at an international or supra-national level, though we will look at some domestic rules that are important to international taxation and that can be found in a number of important tax systems. The course will look at a series of international transactions, starting with the very basic example of an export and import of goods and culminating with the treatment of some complex and artificial structures. The features of tax systems will be studied through these transactions, particularly those features found in double tax conventions and in the law of the European Union. In the first part of the course this will be supplemented by introductions to some key foundation concepts that are needed in the study of international taxation. Throughout the course examples will be drawn from the tax systems of a range of G20 countries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

This will be based on a format of lecture-discussions with the possibility of guest speakers where appropriate and depending on numbers. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are asked to submit one 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle.

LL4BH Half Unit

Law and Government of the European Union

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Floris De Witte

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in European and International Public Policy, MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Bocconi), MSc in European and International Public Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

For the LLM (Specialisms: European Law, Public Law, Human Rights Law)

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge (at an undergraduate level) of EU law is required.

Course content: How is the European Union governed? This course will discuss this question in both a descriptive and a normative fashion. In descriptive terms, the course looks at the way in which the EU institutions are structured, how they function internally, and the powers that they have. It looks at the power of the European Court of Justice, at the role of fundamental rights, and the way in which the Treaty can be amended. This descriptive discussion forms the backdrop for the (more central) normative discussion: how should Europe be governed? Is the EU democratic? Should it be? Should Member States have more or less power to challenge EU measures? What will the future of the EU look like? And what should it look like?

Students will be challenged to think about the EU as an institutional structure in which both law and politics play a crucial role. Really understanding the EU requires knowledge of both areas as well as knowledge of their interaction. At no other time in the development of the EU has the interaction between law and politics so fundamentally affected the direction of the integration process.

The coming years will see fundamental changes to the EU's structure; which are informed as much by political dynamics as by legal mechanisms. This course prepares you to fully understand those changes - and allow you to analyse critically both their normative content and institutional structure.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. The formative essay serves as a basis for the assessed essay.

Indicative reading:

- G de Búrca and JHH Weiler (eds), The Worlds of European Constitutionalism (CUP 2012),
- P Lindseth, Power and Legitimacy: Reconciling Europe and the Nation-State (OUP 2010);

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL4BK Half Unit Corporate Crime

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Jeremy Horder

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Risk and Finance and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Banking Law and Financial Regulation Corporate and/or Commercial Law Corporate and Securities Law Criminology and Criminal Justice International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on crime committed within the commercial and business environment. The law is responding to the challenges presented by corporate crime; as the primary vehicle for commercial activity, unacceptable corporate practices are increasingly made the object of criminal sanction and causes of action in civil law. The course considers the principles of corporate criminal liability and the consequences of conviction for a corporation. The exercise of prosecutorial discretion in corporate crime cases, with a consideration of options such as deferred prosecution agreements, is examined in the context of multi-agency and cross-border investigations. The course proceeds to address the enormous challenges in the international fight against corruption. As well as exploring the nature, extent and consequences of corruption, the course examines international responses and their implementation into domestic law. In addition, the course considers other significant areas of potential corporate criminality involving accounting misstatements, cartels and tax offences. The multiple tensions triggered by internal investigations into corporate criminality are also explored in the context of a director's duties to preserve the company's assets in a manner consistent with disclosure obligations owed to its stakeholders and the financial markets. The increasing emphasis placed by the law on a company's obligation to prevent the occurrence of corporate crime is also examined. The course concludes with an exploration of the various ways in which a corporation can be abused by fraudulent trading and trading whilst insolvent, and as well as by organised criminals to conceal the proceeds of their criminal activity. There is no overlap between this course and the course on Financial Crime in the Lent (second) Term.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The first half of the session is lecture format, the second half seminar format. Students have an opportunity to work with other students in the presentation of seminars. Week 6 is a reading week. There is one revision session in the summer term.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading is prescribed for each lecture and seminar. There are no core textbooks available for the course; however, all the reading material is available from resources easily accessible through LSE Moodle, LSE Electronic Library and the internet. Preliminary reading is not required but for an understanding of the areas covered in the course students may read Wells: Corporations and Criminal Responsibility, 2nd edition, 2001, Oxford University Press; Gobert & Punch: Rethinking Corporate Crime, 2003, Butterworths LexisNexis; Green: Lying, Cheating and Stealing: A Moral Theory of White Collar Crime, 2007, Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4BM Half Unit

The Legal Protection of Inventions

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Siva Thambisetty NAB 7.29

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Information Technology, Media and Communications Law, Intellectual Property Law, Corporate and Commercial Law, International Business Law, and Competition, Innovation and Trade Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course provides an advanced and comprehensive introduction to the legal protection of invention through patents. Legally defined inventions are everywhere - in the velcro used to fasten a gym bag, in the tap or touch of a smartphone, in the food we eat, the medicines we take, the clothes we wear and in the buildings we live in. There are yet more inventions in the innovation pipeline and some that live only in our fertile technical imagination. Patent rights over such inventions increasingly intersect with diverse values such as competitive innovation, income equality, universal healthcare, regulation of risky technologies and the autonomy to pursue scientific prospects. In this course we will study the basics of patent prosecution as well as the theoretical and actual relationship between patents and innovation, both in law and in economics. Students will address central patentability criteria as well as patent eligibility for inventions that incorporate software, biotechnology or morally controversial technologies. These topics often call for a comparative approach based on UK, EU and US patent law. The aims of this course are to gain in-depth knowledge of patent law doctrine, familiarity with widely different contexts of innovation and a sound critical approach to the general principles of the legal protection of inventions. Students do not need a scientific background and will be supported in learning the relevant technical aspects.

Topics covered include: Novelty, inventive step, person skilled in the art, industrial applicability, sufficiency of disclosure, computer implemented inventions and business methods, biotechnology, exclusions (such as animal varieties, diagnostic methods, on grounds of morality) and the fundamentals of claim construction and infringement.

This course is a pre-requisite for LL4BN and students are encouraged to consider taking both courses.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

This is a Michaelmas term course, and consists of 10 weekly two-hour seminars in variable format including lecture-discussions and student-led seminars. There will be a Reading Week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Weekly reading will include core chapters from books, cases and articles from law reviews. Bentley, Sherman, Gangiee and Johnson Intellectual Property Law Oxford University Press 2018. Fysh et al The Modern Law of Patents Lexis Nexis Butterworths. Michael Spence Intellectual Property Clarendon Law Series 2007. Tanya Aplin Intellectual Property Law: Text, Cases and Materials (Oxford University Press 2013). Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4BP Half Unit

Current Issues in Intellectual and Cultural Property Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sivaramjani Thambisetty Ramakrishna NAB.7.29

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law; Legal Theory and Competition, Innovation and Trade Law.

Course content: This course takes a broadly historical, theoretical and contextual approach to the study of intellectual and cultural property law. It focuses on a set of topical questions that illuminate paradigms, institutional models and social and economic formations that cut across the diversity of intellectual and cultural property regimes; questions about the nature of property in intangible things, about the implications of the transnational expansion of intellectual property forms and institutions, about the role of comparative analysis in the study of intellectual property, or about how regimes forged in the era of industrialization have adapted to new modes of production and distribution.

These expansive questions are not asked in abstraction. Seminars will focus on specific case studies of institutions, transactional forms and social effects. Many of these studies are chosen for their topicality, so the contents of the course will evolve from year to year, but seminar topics might include: the nature of the link between legal incentives and technological innovation; the usefulness of economic models in understanding the proprietary value of patents, the emergence of new regimes of open source biotechnology and the governance of synthetic biology, the re-emergence of old tensions between author's rights in copyright in the context of digitised information and distribution of works, what follows from the consideration of intellectual property as a human right, the use and misuse of the public domain in intellectual property discourses, the nature of 'negative spaces' (the fashion industry, magicians, manga and stand up comedy) within the otherwise pervasive order of intellectual property, the evolution of non-conventional trade marks such as scents, textures and shapes; the effects of regime-shifting between different international frameworks for the regulation of questions of intellectual property; the use and circulation of genetic resources under the Convention on Biological Diversity and the UN Law of the Sea Convention and the tensions with IP norms and sustainable use of these resources, the bases of markets in cultural property and heritage. The object of the course is to introduce key themes in critical debates about intellectual property, and to offer a set of conceptual resources that might be drawn upon in more specialized LLM courses in intellectual property.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading:

- Benkler, The Wealth of Networks (2006).
- Boyle, The Public Domain. Enclosing the Commons of the Mind (2009).
- Miles, Art as Plunder. The Ancient Origins of Debate About Cultural Property (2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4BT Half Unit

Cultural Property and Heritage Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB.5.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course looks at cultural property and heritage law from legal, social theoretical and practice-oriented perspectives. It provides an overview of existing and emerging cultural property and heritage legislation (domestic and international). We will be looking in particular at the development of cultural property legislation in the 20th century and emerging international cultural property and heritage initiatives under the auspices of the UN and UNESCO. Topics to be covered include the origins of cultural property law, the problems in defining cultural property and heritage, current issues and cases in repatriation and restitution of cultural objects, the National Trust and other heritage protection regimes, and intangible cultural heritage. The course also addresses the creation and management of museums and heritage sites, primarily within the UK, but also including sites in North and South America, Europe and Asia. We consider how the issues that we've identified throughout the course arise in the ongoing construction, protection, and (primarily economic) uses of heritage. Along with specialist seminars, the course includes visits to museums and contact with practising experts in the field.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars and 2 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

LL4BU Half Unit

Art Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB.5.15

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course engages in a discussion of specific cases and issues regarding acquisition, ownership, and restitution of works of art, and the problems that arise in regulating markets in art and cultural artefacts. We will look at domestic (UK and US) and international legislation regulating the art trade. Against this legislative background, the course examines important cases in disputes regarding commodification and sale of cultural goods, including the issues that arise in the operation of the art market (dealers, museums, collectors and auction houses). 'Art Law' is a specialized area of practice and an emerging area of theory and scholarship. We will look at some of the cases and theory of art and law, including the practices of dealers and auction houses in valuing (and mis-valuing) art for sale; the recent developments in addressing the restitution of art taken during the Nazi era; museum loans and the cross-border movement of art; the restoration and conservation debate(s) and then turn to a scholarly and interpretive approach to the issues that arise in considering the art market. We will also return to the questions that arise in dealer, auction house and museum policies more generally. Finally, practitioners in these areas, museum and auction house professionals, archaeologists, and art experts will be contributing to the seminars on the emerging legal issues in this area.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Week 6 in the LT is a Reading Week.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

LL4BV Half Unit

Transnational Environmental Law

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veerle Heyvaert NAB7.06

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Regulation and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: European Law, Public International Law, Public Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: The course instructs students on key issues in environmental law and governance beyond the state. Through the study of recent developments in international environmental law, regional law (including EU law) and private environmental regulation, the course investigates how new transnational environmental laws are made, what the role is of science in environmental decision-making and dispute resolution, how transnational environmental law is implemented and enforced, and whether transnational corporations can be held accountable for environmental damage. The questions are illustrated through case studies relating to, among others, climate change, biodiversity protection and chemical risk control.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: One 1,000 - 1,500 (upper limit) word essay. The students are given an opportunity to sit a mock exam at the end of MT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided for each seminar. The overwhelming majority of readings are electronically available as e-books or in journals. Essential reference works include the journal Transnational Environmental Law; Heyvaert, Transnational Environmental Regulation and Governance (CUP, 2017); Kingston, Heyvaert & Cavoški, European Environmental Law (CUP, 2017); Sands & Peel, Principles of International Environmental Law (4th ed, CUP, 2018); Bodansky, The Art and Craft of International Environmental Law (2010, Harvard University Press); Bodansky, Brunnee & Hey, The Oxford Handbook of International Environmental Law (OUP, 2007); and the Stern Review Executive Summary (online).

LL4C2 Half Unit

World Poverty and Human Rights

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon Law Department

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time), MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: None but some knowledge of public international law is helpful.

Course content: This course examines world poverty and inequality in light of international law aimed at the protection of human rights. Drawing on rights and obligations, the course considers the duties of states and non-state actors and the ways in which they may be implicated in the deprivation which has 2.7 billion people concentrated in the South, and many in the North, unable to exercise even their minimum essential levels of human rights. The course is interested in studying conceptual, normative, and critical approaches to human rights today and will draw on literature that situates human rights and development in broader interdisciplinary contexts. It will explore the role of international actors and institutions that impact positively or negatively on human rights today, as well as examine global developments and the application of legal standards to some areas of outstanding concern. Topics to be covered may include: Poverty as a human rights issue

- Human rights and development
- The right to development and claims against the public international order
- The scope, content and limits of the obligation of international cooperation
- Human rights, the World Bank and IMF, human rights and international trade, investment, and finance
- Interrogating the Sustainable Development Goals.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on work completed during the course.

LL4C5 Half Unit

Fundamentals of International Commercial Arbitration

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Agnieszka Ason

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 students.

Course content: This course offers the fundamentals of international commercial arbitration, the most important dispute settlement mechanism for international commercial transactions. The course provides a complete introduction to the functioning of arbitration in theory and in practice. London being one of the main centres of arbitration in the world, this course focuses mainly on English arbitration law which is put into a comparative perspective and contrasted especially with the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration and French law. Special attention is given to the different types of rules that may have to be taken into consideration in an international arbitration. This course prepares for LL4C6 Advances Issues of International Commercial Arbitration and provides for some of the procedural basics for LL4E7 Investment Treaty Law.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Reading week in week 6

Formative coursework: One 2,500 word essay after week 6 on previous exam questions (choice of 1 out of 3).

Indicative reading: M. Moses, The Principles and Practice of International Commercial Arbitration (3rd edn, CUP 2017); G. Born, International Arbitration: Law and Practice (2nd edn, Kluwer 2015); N. Blackaby & C. Partasides, Redfern and Hunter on International Commercial Arbitration (6th edn, OUP 2015); J.-F. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL4C6 Half Unit

Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration

This information is for the 2019/20 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the LLM (extended part-time), LLM (full-time) and University of Pennsylvania Law School LLM Visiting Students. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Fundamentals of International Commercial Arbitration (LL4C5).

Or a course on arbitration in previous studies or solid practical experience in the field.

Course content: This course aims at giving students who already are acquainted with the fundamentals of arbitration the possibility to go into depth into selected problems of international commercial arbitration. The course is based on student presentations and intense discussions of these problems in order to raise the sensitivity for the issues at stake. The course is highly relevant for those wanting to specialise in arbitration practice, as the theoretical problems have a significant impact on practical solutions. The course will treat a selection of topical contemporary issues of international commercial arbitration, such as the law applicable to arbitration agreements; the scope of the competence-competence principle; the role of internationally mandatory rules of law arbitration & insolvency, arbitration and fraud and corruption; or the enforcement of awards set aside abroad. The course seeks to be as topical as possible, so that content may change in the light of new developments.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6

Formative coursework: One group presentation in the seminar and an essay of 2,500 words.
