Footnotes:

A: Approved courses to the value of 1.0 unit can be selected from the Language Courses List 1. A language option may be chosen if the student is new to the language or if the course is a continuation of a language studied at A level (or equivalent). The appropriate course level is determined by the Language Centre.

B: Approved courses to the value of 1.0 unit can be selected from the Language Courses List 2. A language option may be chosen if it is a continuation of a language studied at A level (or equivalent) or Year 1. The appropriate course level is determined by the Language Centre.

C: Approved courses to the value of 1.0 unit can be selected from the Language Courses List 3, for students wishing to receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. The appropriate course level is determined by the Language Centre and must be a progression from courses studied in Year 1 and 2.

D: Before taking GY350 students must take one of the following prerequisites in Year 2: GY245 or GY248. # means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information. Level 1 courses are not permitted as part of this degree programme in Years 2 and 3.

Language Specialism:

Students who have taken and passed one language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian) in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose language courses in each year according to these rules will receive a language specialism. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BA in Geography (with French).

Note for prospective students:

A language option may be chosen if the student is new to the language or if the course is a continuation of a language studied at A level (or equivalent). The appropriate course level is determined by the Language Centre.

B: Approved courses to the value of 1.0 unit can be selected from the Language Courses List 2. A language option may be chosen if it is a continuation of a language studied at A level (or equivalent) or Year 1. The appropriate course level is determined by the Language Centre.

C: Approved courses to the value of 1.0 unit can be selected from the Language Courses List 3, for students wishing to receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. The appropriate course level is determined by the Language Centre and must be a progression from course studied in Year 1 and 2.

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information. Level 1 courses are not permitted as part of this degree programme in Years 2 and 3.

Language Specialism:

Students who have taken and passed one language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian) in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose language courses in each year according to these rules will receive a language specialism. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BA in Geography (with French).

Note for prospective students:

Footnotes:

A: One course in Papers 9 & 10 must be from History List B if no course from this list was already taken at Paper 5 or Paper 7.

Language Specialism:

Students who have taken and passed at least one language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will be offered the opportunity to receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian) in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose to take language courses are not obligated to receive a specialism, but have the option if they wish. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BA in History (with French).

International Exchange (1 Term)

Programme Code: UOMNIMEX3

Department: Management

For students starting this programme of study in 2022/23

A one term (Michaelmas or Lent Term only) exchange programme for visiting BSc in Management students.

Students from partner exchange schools spend one term at LSE and choose 4 half-unit courses from the list below, according to which term they attend. Visiting students should be aware that the term in which these elective courses run may be subject to change. Visiting students will not be required to complete summative assessments or examinations outside of their term of study as they are not here in the main examination period. Therefore, assessment details for visiting students may differ from those listed in the course guide. Assessment methods for visiting students are confirmed no later than Week 6 of the course.

Students take half unit courses to the value of two units. Students are not permitted to take one unit courses.

Where the prerequisite of a course is prior study on a specific LSE course, applications from exchange students with equivalent academic experience will be considered. Decisions regarding admission to courses will be made by the relevant course leader on a case by case basis.

Please note that places are limited on some optional courses.

Admission onto any particular course is not guaranteed and can be subject to timetabling constraints and /or students meeting specific prerequisite requirements.

Progression Rules:

Students must satisfy the LSE's progression rules before they are permitted to enrol on their year abroad; namely, students must pass 7 out of 8 units of courses that they have attempted in year one and year two.

Failure to progress:

Where a student fails to meet the progression requirements they must resit the failed assessments and cannot progress to the overseas Institution until they have passed 7 out of 8 units. Please note students are allowed three attempts to pass an assessment in year one and only two attempts to pass an assessment in year two. Where a student fails to meet the progression requirements and has run out of attempts to resit, they will fail the degree.

Failure to pass all courses at the overseas Institution:

Students must pass all assessments set by the overseas Institution in order to be eligible for the award of the degree. Where a student fails an assessment they will be provided a resit either at the overseas Institution at the end of the year abroad or when they are back in London at the start of the final year of the programme.

means there may be prerequisites for this course.

Please view the course guide for more information.

Progression Rules:

Students must satisfy the LSE's progression rules before they are permitted to enrol on their year abroad; namely, students must pass 7 out of 8 units of courses that they have attempted in year one and year two.

Failure to progress:

Where a student fails to meet the progression requirements they must resit the failed assessments and cannot progress to the overseas Institution until they have passed 7 out of 8 units. Please note students are allowed three attempts to pass an assessment in year one and only two attempts to pass an assessment in year two. Where a student fails to meet the progression requirements and has run out of attempts to resit, they will fail the degree.

Failure to pass all courses at the overseas Institution:

Students must pass all assessments set by the overseas Institution in order to be eligible for the award of the degree. Where a student fails an assessment they will be provided a resit either at the overseas Institution at the end of the year abroad or when they are back in London at the start of the final year of the programme.

For changes to undergraduate course and programme information for the next academic session, please see the undergraduate summary page for prospective students lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/CourseAndProgrammeInfo/updatedUGProspective.htm. #### International Exchange Year

Students successful in securing a place on the optional exchange will spend a full academic year studying on one of the leading business programmes in Asia, Europe or the USA. Students carrying any failed or deferred assessments for first or second year courses studied at LSE will not be eligible for the exchange. The exchange year will not count towards the classification of the BSc in Management programme and courses studied abroad will not be credit bearing, however the exchange year will be recognised on students' LSE transcripts providing they meet the standards set by their host institution. Partner schools will issue a separate transcript to confirm marks and grades achieved on courses studied overseas. Students will not have the option to resit assessment they have failed or been unable to attempt while overseas. Following the exchange, students will return to LSE to complete the third year of the BSc in Management programme.

Note for prospective students:

For changes to undergraduate course and programme information for the next academic session, please see the undergraduate summary page for prospective students lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/CourseAndProgrammeInfo/updatedUGProspective.htm. #### Prerequisite Requirements and Mutually Exclusive Options

* means available with permission

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

A: LL305 can be taken in the third year only.

B: PH105 can be taken in the first and second year only.

C: PH399 cannot be taken in Year 1 or Year 2.

Language Specialism:

Students who have taken and passed at least one language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will be offered the opportunity to receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian) in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose to take language courses are not obligated to receive a specialism, but have the option if they wish. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method (with French).

Language Specialism:

Students who have taken and passed at least one language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will be offered the opportunity to receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian)

in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose to take language courses are not obligated to receive a specialism, but have the option if they wish. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method (with French).

Note for prospective students:

For changes to undergraduate course and programme information for the next academic session, please see the undergraduate summary page for prospective students lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/CourseAndProgrammeInfo/updatedUGProspective.htm. G: Language Specialism: Students who have taken and passed one language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian) in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose language courses in each year according to these rules will receive a language specialism. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BA in Social Anthropology (with French).

H: International History Specialism: Students who have taken and passed at least one course from the Department of International History in each year of their degree (ie, 25 per cent of their overall programme of study) will be offered the opportunity to receive an International History specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. In order to qualify for the specialism, students must take HY113, HY116 or HY118 in their first year, courses to the value of one unit from International History List A in the second year, and courses to the value of one unit from International History List A or International History List B in the third year. Students who choose to take International History courses are not obligated to receive a specialism, but have the option if they wish. Degree certificates which include an International History specialism will state this in the title, i.e.: BA in Social Anthropology (with International History).

I: Politics Specialism: Students who have taken and passed at least one course from the Department of Government in each year of their degree (ie, 25 per cent of their overall programme of study) will be offered the opportunity to receive a Politics specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. In order to qualify for the specialism, students must take GV100 or GV101 in their first year, courses to the value of one unit from Government List A in the second year, and courses to the value of one unit from Government List A or Government List B in the third year. Students who choose to take Government courses are not obligated to receive a specialism, but have the option if they wish. Degree certificates which include a Politics specialism will state this in the title, i.e.: BA in Social Anthropology (with Politics).

J: GV319 can be taken in Year 3 only.

K: Only Available to students on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics as an option on Government List B. Students on other programmes may only select this course under Paper 12 of their programme regulations.

means there may be prerequisites for this course. Please view the course guide for more information.

Language Specialism: Students who have taken and passed a 1.0 unit language course in each year of their degree (i.e. 25% of their overall programme of study) will be offered the opportunity to receive a language specialism attached to their degree certificate and transcript. Students must take all courses in the same language (French, Spanish, German, Mandarin or Russian) in order to qualify for the specialism. The three courses must also be consecutively harder in level, for example: beginner, intermediate and advanced. Students who choose to take language courses are not obligated to receive a specialism, but have the option if they wish. Degree certificates which include a language specialism will state the language in the title, for example: BSc in Sociology (with French).

Undergraduate Outside Options List (Year 1)

Where the regulations refer to an approved paper taught outside the department, this means that you may take any course in a subject other than the principal subject(s) of your degree, subject to timetabling constraints and any restrictions listed in the Course Guides. If your degree is for joint honours (e.g. Philosophy and Economics) or is a major/minor combination (e.g., Geography with Economics), a course outside the department means a course taught in any department other than the two named in the title of your degree. The home department of each course is indicated by the first two letters in its code.

Please note that some course combinations are not allowed. Please see the Mutually Exclusive Options list.

The courses available as outside options where regulations permit are:

Undergraduate Outside Options List (Years 2 & 3)

Where the regulations refer to an approved paper taught outside the department, this means that you may take any course in a subject other than the principal subject(s) of your degree, subject to timetabling constraints and any restrictions listed in the Course Guides. If your degree is for joint honours (e.g. Philosophy and Economics) or is a major/minor combination (e.g., Geography with Economics), a course outside the department means a course taught in any department other than the two named in the title of your degree. The home department of each course is indicated by the first two letters in its code.

Please note that some course combinations are not allowed. Please see the Mutually Exclusive Options list.

An outside paper may be selected from the Undergraduate Course Guides, subject to the approval of the candidate's tutor and to the successful completion of prerequisites where necessary, with the following exceptions:

- certain first-year courses are not available to students in the second or third year of their degree;
- some courses are not available as an outside option; and
- some papers are mutually exclusive and may therefore not be combined.

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jacob Ott MAR 3.31, Dr Elisabetta Bertero MAR 7.32, Dr Farooq Mahmood, Mrs Chris Constantinou

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This is a one-unit course that introduces students to fundamental principles of accounting and finance. The course consists of three parts: financial accounting (for external reporting), management accounting (for internal decision making), and finance (to provide funding).

Financial Accounting: The course starts with a discussion of the framework of financial accounting: its nature, intents and purposes, and the context and environment in which it operates. This includes, and eventually entails, the need for, and various sources of, accounting regulation and “accounting standards”. AC100 also unpacks various core financial accounting concepts and conventions. The course also looks into the processes used to record, summarise, and present financial accounting information as well as, crucially, its interpretation. Thus, and essentially, this part of the course focuses on the preparation, interpretation, and limitations of company financial statements for external reporting, and the regulatory framework in which financial reports are prepared.

Management Accounting: This part of AC100 moves into internal decision making and starts with an introduction to management and cost accounting. This includes the discussion of key concepts of cost calculation and various techniques of costing (such as absorption and variable costing approaches), as well as other alternative costing systems relevant for decision making. The aim is to help students understand how accounting information can help managers to make crucial decisions, such as about the pricing of products or services, or even whether to offer or discontinue a product or service, or whether to expand the product/service range or to invest in new product development. In summary, this part of the course focuses on the basic knowledge of management accounting—specifically, costing.

Finance: The final part of AC100 provides a brief introduction to key concepts in finance and an overview of the financial system. It presents how households and firms approach financial decisions and some techniques to evaluate these decisions. It also discusses what function the financial system plays in an economy.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of weekly lectures and classes in the Michaelmas, Lent, and Summer terms. Each teaching session contains a variety of technical content and practical exercises. This year, some or all of this teaching may be delivered using a combination of online virtual interactive (synchronous) lectures and classes as an alternative to face-to-face teaching due to social-distancing or other pandemic-related restrictions that may need to be observed.

Formative coursework: There will be several online tests (“quizzes”) to test the student’s knowledge and progress on a formative basis for feedback. Written answers to numerical problems and discussion questions will be expected weekly; some of the written work will be collected during classes for marking and feedback.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be made available on Moodle for each part of the course nearer the time of its scheduled start. Illustrative texts include Libby, R., Libby, P.A., and Hodge, F. (2023) ISE Financial Accounting, 11th edition, McGraw Hill; Atrill, P. and McLaney, E. (2018) Management Accounting for Decision Makers, 9th edition, Pearson; Atrill, P. (2017) Financial Management for Decision Makers, 8th edition, Pearson; Hillier et al (2017) Fundamentals of Corporate Finance, European Edition, McGraw–Hill; and Cecchetti et al (2017) Money, banking and financial markets, McGraw–Hill.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.

Case analysis (10%) and online assessment (10%) in the LT.

The exam duration is 3 hours and 15 minutes. The first 15 minutes will be reading time.

AC102 Half Unit

Elements of Financial Accounting

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gulnaz Khamidullina MAR 3.14

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Finance, BSc in Management and BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This is a half-unit course that introduces students to fundamental principles of financial accounting for the purposes of external reporting. The course starts with a discussion of the framework of financial accounting: its nature, intents and purposes, and the context and environment in which it operates.

This includes, and eventually entails, the need for, and various sources of, accounting regulation and accounting standards.

AC102 unpacks various core financial accounting concepts and conventions, but the course also looks into the processes used to record, summarise, and present financial accounting information as well as, crucially, its interpretation. This course thus essentially focuses on the preparation, interpretation, and limitations of company financial statements for external reporting, and the regulatory framework in which financial reports are prepared.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to numerical problems and discussion questions will be expected weekly. The course also involves two formative assessments.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be made available at the beginning of the course. Illustrative texts include Peter Atrill and Eddie McLaney Financial Accounting for Decision Makers, 9th ed, Pearson, 2019.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

The exam duration is 1 hour and 45 minutes. The first 15 minutes will be reading time.

AC103 Half Unit

Elements of Management Accounting, Financial Management and Financial Institutions

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gulnaz Khamidullina MAR 3.14 (Course Leader), Dr Farooq Mahmood (Lecturer)

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This is a half-unit course that introduces students to fundamental principles of management accounting, financial management and, because it allows the study of some core financial concepts, the accounts of pension funds and insurance companies.

AC103 begins by focusing on internal decision making by way of an introduction to cost and management accounting. This includes a discussion of key concepts of cost calculation and various costing systems relevant for decision making. The aim is to help students understand how accounting information can help managers make crucial decisions, such as about the pricing of products or services, or even whether to offer or discontinue a product or service, or whether to expand the product/service range or to invest in new product development. AC103 then develops into some key concepts of financial management including the role of the financial system in relation to sources of finance. AC103 finally introduces the accounting of pension funds and insurance companies as they also play an increasingly important role in the financial system.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to numerical problems and discussion questions will be expected weekly; some will be collected during classes for marking and feedback. The course also involves two formative assessments.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be made available at the beginning of the course in a syllabus. Illustrative text includes Mahmood, F, Elements of Management Accounting, Financial Management and Financial Institutions, Pearson, 2020.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period. The exam duration is 1 hour and 45 minutes. The first 15 minutes will be reading time.

AC200

Accounting Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pik Kun Liew MAR 3.11 and Dr Per Ahblom MAR 3.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Please seek permission from the BSc in Accounting and Finance Programme Director.

This course is not capped.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed either

- (1) Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100), or
- (2) Elements of Financial Accounting (AC102) and Elements of Management Accounting, Financial Management and Financial Institutions (AC103), or
- (3) equivalent.

Course content: This is a one-unit course that builds on the foundation laid by the first-year accounting courses. AC200 is also intended to provide students with the conceptual knowledge and technical skills necessary for final-year courses in accounting. The course considers the major theoretical and practical approaches to accounting and consists of two main components: financial accounting and management accounting.

Financial Accounting: The course begins with an evaluation of the regulatory environment in which financial accounting operates. This part of the course focuses on the preparation and analysis of the published financial statements of public interest entities operating on their own, or within group structures. The function and content of published financial statements, the issues posed by consolidated accounts, and the analysis of accounting information to evaluate corporate performance will also be examined. A range of specific areas of financial accounting issues will be looked at, for example, segmental reporting, issues in foreign-currency translations, how corporations report their provision of pension for employees, and problems associated with the treatment of taxation. However, the exact composition of the topics may vary from year to year driven by the latest developments in financial reporting, standard-setting and related debates.

Management Accounting: The course then explores theoretical concepts, practices, designs and wider issues of cost and management accounting. The characteristics and use of various systems and models, such as cost-driver analysis and activity-based costing, in organisational decision-making at both operating and strategic levels will be introduced and critically evaluated. This part of the course also considers ways in which non-financial information can be used to complement financial accounting information in order to enable a more holistic approach aimed at providing relevant and useful information to management for the purposes of planning, decision-making, and organisational control.

Teaching: Teaching is delivered in weekly three-hour seminars over 10 weeks across Michaelmas Term (MT Weeks 1-10) and Lent Term (LT Weeks 1-5, and Weeks 7-11 where Week 6 is a reading week). There will be no teaching in Week 11 of MT but students will be required to participate in a three-hour summative assessment session this week as scheduled in the timetable. There will be a two-hour revision session in Week 1 of the Summer Term. Seminars contain a variety of concept-focused content, practical exercises, and case analyses.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to come to each seminar prepared where the assigned course materials have been read and attempted. There will also be several online quizzes to assess student's knowledge and progress in both terms on a formative basis for feedback. Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during seminars, on selected written homework assignments, and during academic support and feedback hours.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists will be made available via Moodle and Reading List @ LSE (<https://lse.rl.talis.com/courses/ac200.html>) before the first seminar of each term. A range of academic papers, professional reports and news articles will be used in the course.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (15%) in the MT.

Project (15%) in the LT.

Class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.

Further details of all aspects of assessment and coursework, as well as feedback, will be made available on Moodle nearer the scheduled start time of the course and will be updated as the course progresses with specific instructions, guidance, and feedback.

AC311 Half Unit

Results Accountability and Management Control for Strategy Implementation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Oscar Timmermans MAR 3.33

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Available to students on other undergraduate/Diploma programmes with the permission of the BSc Programme Director.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Management Accounting, Financial Management and Financial Institutions (AC103). Accounting Theory and Practice (AC200) is recommended to complement either AC100 or AC103, but not required.

AC311 can be taken together with Performance Measurement, Strategy, and Uncertainty (AC312) in the Lent Term, which focuses in more depth on one aspect of management control systems, namely performance measurement. In this course (AC311), however, performance measurement is just one aspect of a broader management control focus that entails results controls, incentive systems and various other organizational design features (e.g., responsibility centres, planning and budgeting, and inter-organisational controls). Students interested in careers in management consulting may benefit from taking both AC311 and AC312. Nevertheless, each course is also valuable as a standalone option.

Course content: AC311 examines results accountability and organizational control issues, focusing on how both financial and non-financial “results-oriented” practices underpin decision rights, planning and budgeting, and performance measurement and incentive systems, among other key organizational design features, to guide and ensure “strategy-aligned” decision-making in decentralized organizations. In other words, AC311 seeks to broaden and deepen your conceptual and technical understanding of accounting as it is used for management purposes—to implement strategy and ensure that everyone’s objectives and decisions are aligned with the organization’s objectives by way of the key concept of results accountability.

The emphasis in AC311 is on financial controls, which are prevalent at managerial levels in all but the smallest organizations. Using financial controls requires managers to make decisions about: (1) responsibility structures (e.g., cost centers, profit centers); (2) performance measures and targets/benchmarks (e.g., market, financial, and/or nonfinancial measures and targets); (3) performance evaluations, which take into consideration these performance measures and targets/benchmarks; and (4) rewards (including incentive-compensation). The course is issue-oriented, with current and emerging topics as its major focus.

Aided by case studies and academic research, AC311 provides students with valuable insights into how financial results control systems vary across contexts, and how several situational factors, including organizational structure, culture, decision-making processes, and behavioral variables influence the design of financial results control systems. Some cases involve real-world data and the use of data analytics for strategic decision-making to address these management control problems.

The course is intended as an overview for those who will make business decisions, evaluate organizational performance, or evaluate others (and/or be evaluated) through the use of financial and non-financial information. And because management control is a core function of management, all students interested in business or management can benefit from this course. However, the course should be particularly useful for those who are, or aspire to be, managers, management consultants, financial specialists (e.g., controllers, budget analysts, auditors) or human resource specialists (e.g., compensation consultants).

Teaching: Teaching is delivered in two weekly 90-minute sessions over 10 weeks across Michaelmas Term.

The course consists of 10 principal topics delivered in two parts each week across Michaelmas term. The first part of each week provides an introduction, positioning, and conceptual analysis of the key foundational elements of each topic. Students are expected to attend the session, together with having done the suggested readings for the week.

The second part each week offers a further discussion and expansion of the issues through case study analysis and real-world applications. The case study analyses and discussions permit the exploration of management control issues in a broad range of settings (e.g., large and small firms, manufacturing and service firms, multinational firms, startups and firms in distress, among others). The case method of instruction, however, requires good advance preparation by the students, and every student, onsite or online, should be ready to contribute to the case discussion.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas term.

Formative coursework: The course makes extensive use of case studies. Students are expected to contribute to the case discussions by having read the case study and related materials in advance of the session and by participating in the discussion and offering their own analysis, views and/or perspectives on the issue at hand during the session.

Indicative reading: The main textbook for AC311 is: K. Merchant; W. Van der Stede; 2017. Management control systems: Performance measurement, evaluation and incentives (4th ed.). Pearson Education Limited.

In addition to the textbook, additional materials are accessible via Moodle.

Assessment: Group project (25%) in the MT.

Take-home assessment (75%) in the LT.

This comprises two elements:

An integrated assessment (take home assessment 1 week before LT week 0) 75%

Further details of all aspects of assessment and coursework, as well as feedback, will be made available on Moodle nearer the scheduled start time of the course and will be updated as the course progresses with specific instructions, guidance, and feedback.

AC312 Half Unit Performance Measurement, Strategy, and Uncertainty

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tommaso Palermo MAR 3.23

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Available to students on other undergraduate/Diploma programmes with the permission of the Accounting Departmental Tutor.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Management Accounting, Financial Management and Financial Institutions (AC103).

Accounting Theory and Practice (AC200) is recommended to complement either AC100 or AC103, but not required.

This course can be taken together with Results Accountability and Management Control for Strategy Implementation (AC311). While AC311 provides an in-depth overview of management control systems in decentralized organizations, AC312 focuses more specifically on one aspect of management control systems, namely performance measurement and the way in which performance measurement is evolving in contemporary organizations to deal with strategy formulation and decision-making under conditions of uncertainty.

Course content: This course examines practical problems that managers and employees are likely to confront in their work in a variety of organizational contexts. The fundamental issue is: how do you know when you have performed well? This question draws attention to the way in which performance is measured, visualised and assessed via performance measurement tools and frameworks, how performance measures and other sources of data are related to strategy formulation and decision-making, and the way in which strategy formulation and performance measurement can be adapted to confront increasingly volatile and uncertain business contexts.

The course addresses these themes in two parts. The first identifies key concepts and tools of performance measurement and how they can be used, through means including monitoring, reporting, and contracting, to influence behaviour. This part of the course includes practical exercises such as the design of an interactive performance dashboard and the development of a strategy and a balanced scorecard to be applied to a real-world case. The second part examines different approaches to deal with uncertainty as part of strategy formulation and performance measurement, including for example: the design and use of risk management processes; and how organisations can exploit large datasets to better understand and possibly predict key performance outcomes. As for the first part of the course, key concepts are put into practice via exercises and case discussions revolving around the use of data analytics, risk mapping and risk indicators design.

Aided by academic literature, examples taken from the financial and popular press, and case studies, AC312 provides students with valuable insights into how performance measurement approaches can vary across contexts, and how several situational factors, including business context, organisational structure, culture and behavioural variables influence them. Some cases will involve real-world data and the potential use of data analytics for strategy formulation, performance measurement and decision-making.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Comprising 10 weeks of twice-weekly 1.5 hour sessions. There will be a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: The course makes extensive use of case studies. Students are expected to contribute to the case discussions in each session. Students are asked to work in group on one case analysis and present their output for formative assessment in week 5.

Indicative reading: No single book covers the entire course.

Indicative readings include:

- COSO (2010). Developing key risk indicators to strengthen Enterprise Risk Management.
- Ittner, C.D. and Larcker, D.F. (2003). Coming up short on nonfinancial performance measurement. Harvard Business Review, November, 88-95.
- Kaplan, R. S. and McMillan, D. (2021). Reimagining the Balanced Scorecard for the ESG Era. Harvard Business Review, February, 1-10.
- Mikes, A. and Kaplan, R.S. (2015). When one size doesn't fit all: Evolving directions in the research and practice of Enterprise Risk Management. Journal of Applied Corporate Finance 27 (1), 27-30.

The following books provide an overview of key themes addressed in the course:

- Bhimani, A., Horngren, C.T., Datar, S.M., Rajan, M. (2019) Management and Cost Accounting, 7th Edition, Pearson Publishing.
- Neely, A. (Ed.). (2007). Business performance measurement: Unifying theory and integrating practice, Cambridge University Press.
- Schildt, H. (2020). The data imperative: How digitalization is reshaping management, organizing, and work. Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (75%) and group project (25%).

Assessment consists of two components: take-home assessment: an individual take-home examination (75%); and a group project involving an analysis of a case (25%). Further details of all aspects of assessment and coursework will be made available on Moodle nearer the scheduled start time of the course and will be updated as the course progresses with specific instructions, guidance, and feedback.

AC331 Half Unit

Contemporary Issues in Financial Accounting

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jose Carabias Palmeiro MAR 3.41, Dr Jeroen Koenraadt MAR 3.34

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Financial Accounting (AC102).

Accounting Theory and Practice (AC200) is recommended to complement either AC100 or AC102, but not required.

Course content: AC331 considers key areas of topical interest and the impact of accounting standards on financial statements in an IFRS context. Specifically, the course critically analyses accounting practices and processes from the point of view of investors. The course will examine on revenue recognition, tangible and intangible assets, the reporting of financial instruments, off-balance-sheet accounting, stock-based compensation, as well as, issues related to the differential approaches to measurement including historical cost and fair values. However, the exact composition of the topics may vary from year to year driven by the latest developments in financial reporting, standard-setting and related debates.

The course aims to enhance students' understanding of contemporary issues in financial accounting. Throughout the course, taken-for-granted "wisdoms" will be critically evaluated and challenged. Finally, this course encourages and prepares students to become informed players on the debate around financial accounting and reporting issues.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of weekly lectures and classes in the Michaelmas Term. Teaching sessions contain a variety of conceptual content, case analyses and practical exercises.

Formative coursework: Students should prepare weekly written work for class discussion. One specified piece of written work will be collected for marking.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists of books and journal articles will be provided during the course. No one book covers the entire course. Recommended books include:

- Beaver, W.H. (1998) Financial Reporting: An Accounting Revolution, 3rd edition, Pearson;
- Lewis and Pendril (2004) Advanced Financial Accounting, 7th edition, Financial Times Prentice Hall;
- Penman, S. (2013) Financial Statement Analysis and Security Valuation, 5th edition, McGrawHill

As well as accounting standards, firms' press releases, analysts' reports and academic research papers.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

Group project (25%) in the MT.

AC332 Half Unit

Financial Statement Analysis and Valuation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stefano Cascino MAR 3.37

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Available to students on other undergraduate/Diploma programmes with the permission of the Accounting Departmental Tutor.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Financial Accounting (AC102).

Accounting Theory and Practice (AC200) is recommended to complement either AC100 or AC102, but not required.

Prior knowledge of statistical software packages (e.g., Stata) as well as prior coding (i.e., programming) experience is desirable although not required.

Course content: AC332 introduces and develops an economic framework for business analysis and corporate valuation. The main focus is on integrating key concepts of economics, accounting, and finance in order to effectively evaluate the information content of financial reports; develop up-to-date applied knowledge of fundamental valuation techniques; and successfully implement investment strategies.

The aim of the course is to help students to become “sophisticated users” of financial accounting information from a fundamental analysis perspective. The course consists of four integrated parts: (i) strategy analysis; (ii) accounting analysis; (iii) financial analysis; and (iv) forecasting and valuation. Students are expected to develop financial-analysis and valuation-related skills to support the interpretation, evaluation, and use of accounting information from the viewpoint of major users of financial reports (i.e., equity investors, corporate lenders, etc.). Ultimately, students will be able to analyze a wide variety of financial reporting issues and discuss their valuation implications within the context of the relevant academic literature.

As recent trends in big data and predictive analytics are disrupting the way in which equity analysts, portfolio managers, credit-rating agencies, and regulators collect and analyze companies’ financial disclosures, students will also learn how to perform meaningful analyses on real-world data by using spreadsheets (e.g., MS Excel) and/or statistical software packages (e.g. Stata).

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the LT.

Teaching is delivered in two one and a half hour sessions each week.

The pedagogical approach in each session is interactive, often involving case study analyses and group discussions. This mode of teaching requires good advance preparation by the students; hence, every student should be ready to contribute to the discussion when called upon. Active participation is expected and encouraged.

Formative coursework: The course makes extensive use of real-world case studies. Students are expected to contribute to the case discussions in each session.

Indicative reading: There is no required textbook for this course.

- Illustrative textbooks covering specific parts of the course include:
- Palepu K. G., P. M. Healy, and E. Peek (2019), Business Analysis and Valuation: IFRS Edition (Cengage Learning), 5th edition.
  - Penman, S. H. (2013), Financial Statement Analysis and Security Valuation (McGraw-Hill), 5th edition.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Group project (20%) and group presentation (10%).

Assessment consist of three components, two based on group work and the other on individual work:

- Group project (20%) in the Lent Term. The group project involves the preparation of an “analyst report,” for which students are expected to collect and analyze data on publicly listed companies. The project is meant to test: (i) students’ understanding of the core concepts of fundamental analysis and valuation; (ii) students’ ability to collect, manipulate, and analyze (big) data with the aid of spreadsheets (e.g., MS Excel) and/or statistical software packages (e.g. Stata).
- Group presentation (10%) in Lent Term. The group presentation gives students the opportunity to share the findings of their group projects with the rest of their class as if they were presenting the results of their analyses in a formal business environment (e.g., to sell their research to institutional investors).
- Final exam (70%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

AC341 Half Unit

Corporate Governance, Risk Management and Financial Audit

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Morley MAR 3.22, supported by Dr Renuka Fernando

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: What constrains the behaviour of profit-seeking corporations? What are the regulations that seek to prevent corporate disasters? This course attempts to answer these questions by critically examining the institutional and legal landscape of governance and accountability in which corporations operate. It takes students on a deep dive into the day-to-day practices of those charged with financial control and risk management within the organization. In addressing the financial accountability of corporations to their external stakeholders, the course critically evaluates the theory and practice of external financial audit, highlighting the structure of the market for audit, the practices of audit firms and the limits to the effectiveness of audit.

Some of the questions we will be asking are:

- How does an organization’s purpose affect its governance?
- What disclosures are companies required to make concerning governance?
- How do organizations try to control operational and financial risk?
- What do studies about corporate disasters tell us about risk management? (e.g., the cases of Challenger and Boeing 737 Max)
- To what extent does current risk management address global phenomena such as pandemics?
- Given recent financial collapses (e.g. Carillion), what’s the point in corporate financial audit?
- How should auditors respond if the viability of many businesses is uncertain (e.g. as a result of Covid-19)?
- How might technology disrupt the market for risk management and corporate financial audit?

The course will critically evaluate academic studies and practitioner guidance to establish the “rules of the game” for corporate governance and accountability, but will also examine media coverage of corporate governance and auditing. Senior practitioners will speak to students during the course, offering insights into the practice of risk management and auditing. It should be noted that the course is grounded in the social sciences – it does not provide practical training in the application of risk management or auditing techniques and is not recognised for exemptions by the professional accountancy bodies.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT, delivered as twice-weekly 1.5-hour sessions. There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will submit one 750-word essay in week 3 on which they will receive written feedback.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus. In addition to professional and academic journals, reading will cover the following:

- Andersen (2019). The Routledge Companion to Strategic Risk Management (Routledge Companions in Business, Management and Accounting).
- Power (2016). Riskwork: Essays on the Organizational Life of Risk Management. Oxford University Press.
- Gray, Manson & Crawford (2019). The Audit Process: Principles, Practice and Cases (Cengage 7th Edition).
- Power (1999). The Audit Society: Rituals of Verification. Oxford University Press.

Students will also be provided with relevant examples of corporate and other reports and referred to relevant websites.

A detailed course outline and reading list will be made available at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (40%) in the MT Week 11.

Take-home assessment (60%) in the MT.

Details of the assignment and project will be made available on Moodle nearer the scheduled start time of the course.

AC342 Half Unit

Accounting, Corporate Responsibility and Sustainability

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Morley (MAR 3.22), Dr Xi Li (MAR 3.40) and Dr Aneesh Raghunandan (MAR 3.39)

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course seeks to provide an introduction to the key issues that are emerging on the 'extended' role of accounting in society. AC342 considers the broader accountability framework of businesses, and related environmental and social accounting issues. Major concepts and practices relating to sustainability and societal responsibility such as the "triple-bottom-line" considerations of financial viability, environmental accountability and social responsibility, will be discussed and critically assessed. The course also examines the complexities that characterise the relationships between accounting, organisations and society, and between shareholders and a wide range of stakeholders. The course takes a broad approach to the role of accounting and provides students with valuable insights, aided by real-life examples and case studies, on the issues of organisational sustainability and (corporate) social responsibility.

The course aims to develop students' knowledge of the relationships between accounting and society. Specifically, and crucially, it aims to provide students with critical awareness of the accountabilities and responsibilities of organisations and those involved in their viability and legitimacy, either as managers or investors, regulators or overseers, and the role of accounting in securing such accountability and responsibility.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Comprising 10 weeks of twice-weekly 1.5 hour sessions. There will be a reading week in week 6.

Formative coursework: The course invites students to critically reflect on recent developments in the field of corporate responsibility and sustainability accounting and comment on the correlated documents such as corporate reports and programmes, press releases, experts' opinions. Some issues are tackled through case studies.

Students are expected to contribute to discussions in each session.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus. In addition to professional and academic journals, reading will cover the following:

- Bellucci, M. and Manetti, G. (2018) Stakeholder Engagement and Sustainability Reporting (Finance, Governance and Sustainability), Routledge;
- Henriques, A. (2007) Corporate Truth: The Limits to Transparency, Earthscan, Taylor & Francis;
- Hopwood, A., Unerman, J. and Fries, J. (2010) Accounting for Sustainability: Practical Insights, Earthscan;
- Laine, M., Tregidga, H. and Unerman, J. (2021) Sustainability Accounting and Accountability (3rd ed.), Routledge;
- Rendtorff, J.D. (2019) Philosophy of Management and Sustainability: Rethinking Business Ethics and Social Responsibility in Sustainable Development, Routledge.

Students will also be referred to relevant examples of corporate and other reports, and websites. Detailed course programmes and reading lists will be distributed at the first lecture of the course.

Assessment: Coursework (60%) in the period between LT and ST. Group project (40%) in the LT.

Assessment consists of two components:

- One group project (40%): to be submitted during the Lent Term, and
- One individual assessment (60%): to be submitted during the week before the start of Summer Term.

Further details of all aspects of assessment and coursework, as well as feedback, will be made available on Moodle nearer the scheduled start time of the course and will be updated as the course progresses with specific instructions, guidance, and feedback.

Being Human: Contemporary Themes in Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clara Devlieger and Dr Gisa Weszkalnys

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Politics and BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides a general introduction to Social Anthropology as the comparative study of human societies and cultures. Students will be introduced to key themes and debates in the history of the discipline. Ethnographic case studies will be drawn from work on a variety of societies, including hunter-gatherers, farmers, industrial labourers, and urban city-dwellers. The Michaelmas Term will explore the relationship between nature and culture, drawing on classic and contemporary debates about human difference and similarity. The term is divided into three blocks: 1) Culture, fieldwork and history; 2) Becoming people; 3) Bodies and Difference. Some questions considered during the term may include:

What distinguishes social anthropology from other social science disciplines? What does 'thinking like an anthropologist' involve? What is 'culture', and how are anthropological concerns shaped by the particular history and method of the discipline? How does language shape thought and action? How do societies 'make' the individuals of which they are composed? Why are human life stages so often characterised by rituals, and what do these rituals reveal about understandings of life? What does it mean to be a 'person' in society? How are bodily differences between people thought about in different contexts? How does culture shape our bodies and the health of those bodies?

The Lent Term will address different kinds of relations between and among people, animals and things, and how these are mediated in different ways. The term is also divided into three blocks: 1) Relations, 2) Place, 3) Technology. Some questions considered during the term include:

Is it valid to distinguish between people and things? What are the politics of human animal relations? To what extent is place a product of power? Can people only be dispossessed of material belongings? In what ways does technology mediate and reinvent expressions of race and racism? Do infrastructures only become visible on breakdown?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both the MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit one tutorial essay for this course to their academic mentor in the MT and one in the LT. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher in the MT and in the LT.

A History of Anthropological Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fuad Marco Devecchi Musallam OLD 6.08 and Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD 5.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BSc in Politics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course discusses important aspects of anthropological theory in relation to ethnographic research. It covers the development of anthropological thought from the second half of the 19th century to today. Anthropology is situated within its context, including the social conditions of scholarship, as well as the histories of empires, nation-states, and capitalism. The course is intended to give students a sound grasp of central theoretical concepts and of their significance for empirical research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit one tutorial essay for this course to their academic mentor in the MT and one in the LT. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher in the MT and in the LT.

Indicative reading: Alan Barnard, History and Theory in Anthropology; Matthew Engelke, Think Like an Anthropologist; Adam Kuper, Anthropology and Anthropologists; George W. Stocking, Observers Observed: Essays on Ethnographic Fieldwork. Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

AN102

Ethnography through Mixed Media

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Pia OLD 6.09 and Dr Megan Laws OLD 1.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BSc in Politics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides training in the reading and interpretation of multimodal anthropology (with a focus on text, photography, film, sound, and games). It introduces students to detailed, holistic study of social and cultural practices within specific geographic and historical contexts and develops skills in bringing together the various elements of cultural and social life analysed by anthropologists. By the end of each term, successful students will have both a detailed knowledge of three important texts and media and have a rounded view of the three settings studied.

They will also have developed the capacity to think critically about ethnographic writing and filmmaking, and about anthropological engagements with other media such as games, photography, and sound. In addition, the course aims to enable students to examine in detail the process by which ethnographic media are produced through the close analysis of three book-length ethnographic accounts (or the equivalent) in the MT and by providing students with practical training in the production of photo, audio, and video materials in the LT. Students will study a film (or other visual or auditory material) associated with each text or topic each term.

In the MT, students will be required to read the three full set monographs, approximately a third of each monograph (two-four chapters) each week. In the LT, students will be required to read two to three academic chapters or articles each week (with more time given to practical work). It will be essential to do this in order to pass this course. The emphasis in classes and seminars will be on developing students' abilities to read and analyse texts, and to compare and contrast them to other material offered on the course. Supplementary readings or viewings may be provided during the term.

In the MT, students will be provided with basic training in coming up with a research project, taking photographs, recording audio, and shooting video. In the LT, students will be provided with basic training in ethics and risk and in post-production in photography, sound, and film. Over the course of the two terms, students will then be required to work in groups to develop their own media projects. This will be facilitated by a series of basic tasks to take photographs, record audio, shoot video, and work together to edit these into multimedia pieces.

Teaching: In the MT, there are 17 hours of lectures (of which 9 hours are multimedia sessions), 4.5 hours of seminars, 7 hours of classes, and 3 hours of practical training sessions.

In the LT, there 9 hours of lectures (of which 6 hours are multimedia sessions), 3 hours of seminars, 8 hours of classes, and 6 hours of practical training sessions.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

The practical training sessions will be run in collaboration with Darren Moon, Senior Learning Technologist of the Eden Centre for Education Enhancement at the LSE.

Formative coursework: Students will have the opportunity to submit up to four position pieces (two position pieces in the MT and two position pieces in the LT). Only the three position pieces with the highest marks will count towards the student's final grade for the course. Students are not required to submit all four position pieces but are encouraged to do so to allow one position pieces to count as formative coursework.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists (including this year's set texts) will be provided at the beginning of the course.

For a general introduction to issues covered in the course, see the following:

- Engelke, M., ed. 2009. The Objects of Evidence: Anthropological Approaches to the Production of Knowledge. Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell.
- Cox, R., Irving, A., and Christopher Wright. 2016. Beyond text? Critical practices and sensory anthropology. Manchester: Manchester University Press.

- Wolf, M. 1992. A Thrice-Told Tale: Feminism, Postmodernism, and Ethnographic Responsibility. Stanford: Stanford University Press.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4500 words) in the MT and LT. All students will produce a portfolio of position pieces (worth 100% of the total mark), submitting a total of two position pieces in the MT and two position pieces in the LT. Position pieces should refer to the media (including text) covered on the course and relate these to the cycles covered in the lectures and classes. In the LT, students should also refer to their own photo, audio, or video productions in their position pieces. Portfolios will be assessed periodically throughout the year, with the final grade determined after the end of Lent Term.

Students who submit fewer than three position pieces will receive a mark of zero for each missed assessment. The overall mark will be the average of the three position pieces with the highest grades, including any zeroes for missed assessments.

Students who submit at least one position piece and fail the course will be expected to add to their portfolio at resit in order to achieve a pass.

Students who do not submit any position pieces (0 out of 4), will be awarded a Zero Absent for the whole course and cannot be awarded the degree until they submit sufficient work at resit to complete the course.

Being Human: Contemporary Themes in Social Anthropology (Anthropology Exchanges)

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys

Availability: This course is available on the Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides a general introduction to Social Anthropology as the comparative study of human societies and cultures. Students will be introduced to key themes and debates in the history of the discipline. Ethnographic case studies will be drawn from work on a variety of societies, including hunter-gatherers, farmers, industrial labourers, and urban city-dwellers. The Lent Term will address the different types of relations people have with other beings, with places, and with a variety of technologies and infrastructures, and what how these are mediated by and produce forms of power, identity, and differences. The term is also divided into three blocks: 1) Relations, 2) Place, 3) Technology. Some of the questions considered during the term include:

Is it valid to distinguish between people and things? What are the politics of human animal relations? To what extent is place a product of power? ### The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Teodor Zidaru-Barbulescu OLD 5.06A and Dr Mayanka Mukherji OLD 6.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems, gender roles, personhood and human sexuality, analysed through ethnographic examples from a diverse range of settings. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'marriage', 'gender', 'sex', 'the person', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture', as well as exploring how the experiences of kinship, sex and gender vary according to the regimes of politics, law and materiality in which they are embedded. The course charts the history of anthropological debates on kinship, relatedness, sex and gender, and familiarises students with a range of contemporary approaches to these themes, placing ethnographic materials into a critical dialogue with recent developments in feminist theory, queer theory, the anthropology of colonialism, cognitive science, and psychoanalysis.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

The Anthropology of Melanesia

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott, OLD 1.17

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to selected themes in the anthropology of the region in the Southwest Pacific Ocean known as Melanesia. It gives students a grounding in the contemporary anthropology of the region, primarily through a close reading of three book-length ethnographies.

The three ethnographies, which are all new since 2013, are Christopher Wright's The Echo of Things, an account of what photography means to people in the western Solomon Islands; Alice Street's Biomedicine in an Unstable Place, an analysis of how persons and diseases are made visible or invisible in a hospital on the north coast of Papua New Guinea; and Maggie Wilson's A True Child of Papua New Guinea (edited by Rosita Henry), the part-memoir/part-'ethnographic biography' of a woman who lived between 'two worlds', that of her mother, a New Guinea Highlander, and that of her father, an Australian colonist.

These ethnographies not only provide students with focused accounts of three very different contexts in Melanesia, they also address histories, dynamics, and concerns familiar to people living throughout the region. Furthermore, because the three authors draw on different intellectual antecedents and disciplinary traditions, their work provides an entree into the most influential theoretical debates animating Pacific anthropology today.

Topics to be traced throughout the course include personhood and bodies, kinship and sociality, religion and cosmology, technology and infrastructure, belonging and development, globalization, and the state. Engagement with these three books will be enhanced and supplemented by other readings (including works by Pacific Islanders), ethnographic films, and a visit to the British Museum.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Christopher Wright, The Echo of Things: The Lives of Photographs in the Solomon Islands (2013); Alice Street, Biomedicine in an Unstable Place: Infrastructure and Personhood in a Papua New Guinean Hospital (2014); Maggie Wilson (edited with additions by Rosita Henry), A True Child of Papua New Guinea: Memoir of a Life in Two Worlds (2019).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the ST. The assessed essay must be between 2,500 – 3,000 words in length.

The Anthropology of Christianity

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 5.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This course is intended for second and third year anthropologists, therefore students normally have at least one year's foundational anthropology. External students are welcome to join the course and often do so; depending on disciplinary background, external students may benefit from some additional contextual reading (please consult the course teacher.)

Course content: The ethnography of local Christianities in the light of differing cultural and social situations including colonial conditions. The relationship between Christianity and the discipline of anthropology. The course will examine a number of anthropological and historical studies of local forms of Christianity, from a range including local forms of Catholicism, Mormonism, contemporary and historical Protestantisms including American Protestant forms and 'heretical' and other unorthodox Christianities. The course asks why anthropologists shied away from analysing Christianity long after studies of other world religions, such as Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism, had become widely established. It looks at the relationship between Christianity and the history of anthropological thought, and locates the place of Christianity in the writings of Mauss, Durkheim, Foucault and others, in order to defamiliarise the religion which Europeans and Americans especially often take for granted. Issues examined may include the nature and experience of belief, conversion and the appropriation of Christian doctrines by local populations, the problems of writing about religion, Christianity and the state, the nature of religious confession, Christian texts, and Scriptural reading practices, Christian objects and materialities, Christianity and women's religious and social experience (from Medieval women mystics to women priests), inquisitions and heretical beliefs, priests and alternative forms of mediation with divine power, miraculous saints, incorrupt bodies and 'non-eaters' and changing ideas about death, Heaven and Hell. Where possible, the course will include a student fieldwork weekend and forms of reflection and reporting on that experience. Please check with the course teacher in any given year whether this is planned as part of the year's programme.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of virtual lectures, classes and online interactive activities. The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: M Bloch, From Blessing to Violence: History and Ideology in the Circumcision Ritual of the Merina of Madagascar; F Cannell, Catholicism, Spirit Mediums and the Ideal of Beauty in a Bicolano Community, Philippines (PhD thesis, University of London); W Christian, Person and God in a Spanish Valley (reprint 1988); J Comaroff, Body of Power, Spirit of Resistance; J de Pina Cabral, Sons of Adam, Daughters of Eve: the Peasant World View in the Alto Minho; R Ileteo, Pasyon and Revolution: Popular Movements in the Philippines, 1840-1910; J Nash, We Eat the Mines and the Mines Eat us: Dependency and Exploitation in Bolivian Tin Mines; M Taussig, The Devil and Commodity Fetishism in South America. ### The Anthropology of Southeast Asia

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course will introduce students to selected theoretical and ethnographic issues in the history and contemporary life of Southeast Asia (including Burma/Myanmar, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, The Philippines, and Vietnam).

The alleged distinctiveness of Southeast Asian gender relations, political leadership, and experiences of self and emotion have led to ethnographic studies of the region making major contributions to the anthropology of the state, sovereignty, globalisation, gender, identity, violence, and mental health. By providing a strong grounding in regional ethnographic materials, this course will equip students to critically evaluate such contributions and to consider possible further contributions that studies of Southeast Asia might make to anthropological debates. The course will also examine how anthropologists have responded to the interpretive challenges presented by selected aspects of Southeast Asia's social and political life, such as the legacies of mass violence (e.g. the Cambodian genocide, the Vietnam War, or Indonesia's massacre of suspected communists), its ethnic and religious pluralism, and the impact of international tourism.

The course also contains a strong visual anthropology element: each week's lecture will be paired with a film screening, and students will be encouraged to examine whether and how this visual material contributes to, or indeed reframes, the theoretical debates at hand.

Upon successful completion of the course, students will be able to:

1. Describe the key features of Southeast Asian social and cultural systems, and identify their similarities and differences with social and cultural systems in other world regions.
2. Describe key events and patterns in Southeast Asia's history, and evaluate the extent to which these influence contemporary social phenomena in the region.
3. Describe and evaluate the most influential paradigms that have been developed in anthropological studies of Southeast Asia over the past 60 years.
4. Apply anthropological concepts and theories to ethnographic materials from Southeast Asia, and evaluate the results.
5. Apply anthropological research findings and theories to social and policy issues in Southeast Asia.
6. Locate and use research findings from Southeast Asia in order to participate in, or advance the terms of, wider disciplinary debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Film screenings will also take place throughout the term. There is a reading week for this course in Week 6 MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Useful histories of Southeast Asia / Southeast Asian anthropology

Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.

Students will be asked to write a research essay on a topic covered in the course, and a synoptic essay speaking to themes that connect multiple weeks of the course. Each of these should be up to 2000 words in length, and will comprise 50% of the final mark.

AN226

Political and Legal Anthropology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08 and Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo) and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The anthropological analysis of political and legal institutions as revealed in relevant theoretical debates and with reference to selected ethnography. The development of political and legal anthropology and their key concepts including forms of authority; forms of knowledge and power; political competition and conflict; colonial transformation of indigenous norms; writing legal ethnography of the 'other'; folk concepts of justice; the theory of legal pluralism; accommodation of religious practices in secular laws of European states.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes, and to submit one essay in the MT and one mock exam question in the LT to their class teacher on which they will receive formative feedback.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

AN237 Half Unit

The Anthropology of Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Katherine Gardner

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course explores how anthropologists have evaluated, criticised and contributed to development. Focussing on both 'Big D' development (schemes of improvement or projects) and 'little d' development (change which occurs as the result of economic growth or modernisation) the course shows how anthropological insights have been used to change practices from within as well as critique development from the outside. From anthropological work which seeks pragmatic engagement to that which deconstructs development as an oppressive and power laden discourse, the course aims to give students a broad background to the field. Topics covered include the role of the state; local politics and power relations; gender and empowerment; development as discourse and 'aidnography'; neo liberalism and global capital; corporate social responsibility; markets and micro credit; and the relationship between 'tradition' and modernity. Throughout, the course will draw upon a broad range of ethnographic examples.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes based on the core ethnographies covered in the course. Formative work will include a mock exam question.

Indicative reading: Gardner and Lewis 2015, Anthropology and Development: Twenty First Century Challenges; Ferguson, J. 1990 The Anti-Politics Machine: Development, Depoliticisation and Bureaucratic Power in Lesotho; Cambridge University Press; Li, T, 2014 Land's End: Capitalist Relations on an Indigenous Frontier; Karim, L., 2011 Micro-Finance and its Discontents: Women and Debt in Bangladesh; Elyachar, J. 2005; Markets of Dispossession: NGOs, the Market and the State in Cairo; Scherz, C. 2014. Having People, Having Heart: Charity, Sustainable Development, and Problems of Dependence in Central Uganda; Scott, J. 1998, Seeing Like a State: How Certain Schemes to Improve the Human Condition have Failed.

Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Investigating the Philippines - New Approaches and Ethnographic Contexts

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is most suitable for second and third year students but interested first year external students may seek an exemption. Also available to General Course students.

Course content: This course offers the chance to look at the ethnography of one country in more detail than is usual for regional courses. It considers topics taken from the ethnography of the lowland and highland Philippines, with a focus on exciting new high quality writing, drawing on the recent renaissance in Philippine Studies. The course will balance works by expert non-Filipino ethnographers with the new writing of 'native ethnographies' by Filipino scholars resident both in the Philippines themselves and in the US. The course will be framed within the colonial, religious and social history of the archipelago, and will consider both new interpretations of Philippine history, and topics on contemporary social issues, as well as using classic works on the Philippines. Teaching each week will normally be organised around the reading of one outstanding ethnography, allowing students to look closely at particular cases. Topics in any year are likely to be drawn from the following list (although obviously only ten topics can be offered in one year); Migration, 'mail-order' brides, and the Philippine diaspora; New religious movements: Philippine colonialism and the processes of conversion: Healing, spirit possession, midwifery and local medicine: The contemporary Catholic Church; Violence in the Philippines; Ecology, landscape and environmental politics: Kinship and its transformations; Gender, Philippine queer theory and Philippine transvestitism: Ritual, drama and local performance traditions: Philippine architecture and material culture.: Philippine cinema: Colonial politics, tribal politics and issues of self-representation: Magic, sorcery and "anitismo"; Tourism, symbolic economies and the impact of international capitalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for classes/seminars. Students taking this course will be expected to produce one essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Selected/ indicative texts: Renato Rosaldo Ilongot Headhunters; Vicente Rafael Contracting Christianity; Fenella Cannell Power and Intimacy in the Christian Philippines; Sally-Ann Ness Where Asia Smiles; Heather L. Claussen, Unconventional Sisterhood; J.Neil C. Garcia Philippine Gay Culture: the Last Thirty Years; M. F. Manalansan Global Divas: Filipino Gay Men in the Diaspora; Vicente Rafael White Love and Other Events in Filipino History; Evelyn Tan Cullemar Babaylanism in Negros; Benito M Vergera Displaying Filipinos: Photography and Colonialism in Early 20th Century Philippines; Renaldo Clemena Ileto Pasyon and Revolution; K.F. Wiegele, Investing in Miracles: El Shaddai and the Transformation of Popular Catholicism in the Philippines; Nicole Constable Maid to Order in Hong Kong; Albert Alejo Generating Energies in Mount Apo: Cultural Politics in a Contested Environment; Catherine Ceniza Choy Empire of Care: Nursing and Migration in Filipino American History; Esther C.M. Yau and Kyung Hyun Kim Asia/Pacific Cinema; Caroline S. Hau, Necessary Fictions; Philippine Literature and the Nation. Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

Students will complete written work on one or more topics from the course, with a total word count of 3,000 words. Specific guidance and advice will be given during the course but for example, students may choose to pursue one topic in depth and with the use of additional and external materials, or to write on two topics more closely related to the course work and course outline. Further guidance and a range of suggested topics and questions will be provided during the course.

Children and Youth in Contemporary Ethnography

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should normally have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: This course explores the paradoxes and contexts of social science work on children and youth through an intensive focus on contemporary ethnographies exploring children's social worlds. This ethnographic work is multi-disciplinary (emerging from anthropology, geography, sociology, media studies), and builds both on earlier ethnographies of childhood from the mid-twentieth-century onwards, and on growing theoretical interest in cross-cultural understandings of 'the child' and their competencies. In the first half of the course, we investigate 5 central paradoxes that emerge through a consideration of children and childhood. These are: 1) Universal/ Constructed; 2) Being/ Becoming; 3) Structure/ Agency; 4) Protection/ Participation; and 5) Representation/ Reality. These paradoxes allow us to consider important questions such as: What does it mean to see childhood as a 'construction'? How has ethnographic work questioned universal frameworks for child development? How should we understand children's agency? How successfully can 'child rights' be achieved in different cultural contexts? Why should children's perspectives be taken more seriously in the social sciences? In the second half of the course, we turn to 5 key contexts for ethnographic analyses of children's lives. These are: the street, school, work, play and war. How have the lives of 'street children' been approached and understood? What do critical ethnographies of schooling tell us about its role in reproducing inequalities? What, if anything, is the difference between beneficial child work and harmful 'child labour'? How can we recognise and theorise children's play? And how have ethnographic accounts documented both trauma and resilience in the context of 'child soldiering'?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of the LT. Film screenings in the Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

AN245 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Borders and Boundaries: Ethnographic Approaches

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mathijs Pelkmans OLD 5.08

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: How do territorial borders influence human behaviour and thinking, and how, in turn, do people create, manage, and manipulate such borders? These questions have become pressing with the intensification and politicisation of global interconnectedness. While a few decades ago the tearing down of the Berlin Wall seemed to herald a border-less world, today the loudest politicians promise to create "huge, great, great, beautiful walls." This course studies the numerous tensions accompanying global interconnectedness. Why is it so difficult to make borders impermeable? How do smuggling networks operate? What does the world look like from the perspective of undocumented migrants? What are the effects of new border fortification technologies? What is it like to live in a gated community? Are people boundary-drawing creatures? Why do borders play a central role in images of utopia? Why is it silly yet productive to ask: where is the border between Europe and Asia? These and other questions will be discussed by situating ourselves ethnographically in the borderlands, potentially making us realise that "the frontier is all around us."

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of virtual lectures, classes and online interactive activities. The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected.

This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion materials for presentation in the classes. Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading:

AN247 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Anthropological Approaches to Questions of Being

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Scott OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: In Western thought, the study of the nature of being itself (Greek ontos), including theories about how things come into being and how they are related to one another, is known as ontology. Building on, but broadening the scope of this Western tradition, the growing anthropological literature on questions of being seeks to convey ethnographically and conceptualize theoretically the many different ontologies, or lived realities, that shape social practices in diverse historical, geographic, and cultural contexts. This literature also urges us to reconsider reflexively what anthropology is, does, and might become.

Twenty-first century anthropology has seen an 'ontological turn' or 'turns', or more broadly, the emergence of anthropologies of ontology. Increasingly, a variety of anthropological discourses invoking the concept of ontology have come into dialogue, yet ontology-oriented approaches remain diverse. Over the past decade, these discourses have been sites of divisive debate, strong contestation, pointed polemic, and at times personal critique. While this has generated a lot of interest, arguably these debates have created more heat than light. In the wake of these debates, and keeping them in view, this course aims to illuminate current work around ontology by reading three recent and influential books, each of which takes a distinctive anthropological approach to questions of being.

Morten Axel Pedersen's ethnography, Not Quite Shamans (2011), explores spirits, shamans – or the relative lack of shamans – and postsocialism among the Darhad people of northern Mongolia. Pedersen focuses on the ontological uncertainties that can attend sweeping social transformations; in so doing, he challenges us to rethink the assumptions about being that inform mainstream anthropological analyses.

Marisol de la Cadena's ethnography, Earth Beings (2015), offers a person-centred, conversation-driven account of people, place, and indigenous cosmopolitics in the Andes. De la Cadena engages with the Quechua people's political struggles in ways that prompts us to question modernity's dominant nature/human dualism. Giving us access to a context where mountains are wilful actors, she invites us to reconceptualize politics as ontological disagreement.

Stuart McLean's book, Fictionalizing Anthropology (2017), develops a comparative approach to anthropology by juxtaposing diverse folkloric, historical, literary, and ethnographic accounts – primarily from the North Atlantic. McLean seeks to persuade us that storytelling is a mode of 'ontological poesis'; it does not simply reflect – or even reflect on – aspects of the world as given; it participates in the very making of worlds. In the same way, he suggests, the stories anthropologists tell and the comparisons they make may be ontologically generative, part of the becoming of new possibilities for human and other-than-human being.

These three works – focused on very different contexts, using very different modes of research, and written in very different styles – introduce students to the central questions, dynamics, and debates that constitute anthropological approaches to questions of being.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT

Indicative reading: Morten Axel Pedersen, Not Quite Shamans: Spirit Worlds and Political Lives in Northern Mongolia (2011); Marisol de la Cadena, Earth Beings: Ecologies of Practice across Andean Worlds (2015); Stuart McLean, Fictionalizing Anthropology: Encounters and Fabulations at the Edges of the Human (2017).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The Anthropology of South Asia

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rebecca Bowers

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: You are required to be enrolled in a degree programme at LSE in which you are trained to write essays and read qualitative research. You may be asked to submit written work to determine your ability for this course.

Course content: This course will aim to address issues of citizenship, inequality and social justice, religious faith and practices, migration and labour and consumption patterns in rural and urban South Asia. The course will cover both classic and current literature and weekly sessions will be organised thematically. South Asia is an ideal setting to examine many paradoxes that exist elsewhere - alongside some of the highest rates of economic growth there is growing inequality, there is a growing middle class but high rates of precarious poverty, the countries remain largely rural yet they will hold the largest urban population in the world in less than ten years and so on. In order to understand these paradoxes, it is essential that issues of macro economic policy, social inequality, infrastructural development, political mobilisation and popular culture, mobilisation along religious lines in each country and the rise of the 'threatened majorities' that behave like minority populations - be examined in greater detail. Using a rich body of anthropological research on South Asia, this course will examine several of these issues and more in this course. The literature on India is the largest available but every attempt will be made to cover the anthropological literature on Pakistan, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh alongside.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course will have a series of optional online film screenings in the MT. The course has a reading week in Week 6 of the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Please read at least TWO of the following background readings before the start of the course and certainly by the end of the second week of the course: Sunil Khilnani, The Idea of India; Ramachandra Guha, India After Gandhi; Corbridge, S. and Harris, J., Reinventing India: Liberalization, Hindu Politics and Popular Democracy; Rana Dasgupta, Capital: The Eruption of Delhi; Ammara Maqsood, The New Pakistani Middle class; Delwar Hussain, Boundaries Undermined: The ruins of progress on Bangladesh-India Border

Fiction: Vikram Seth, A Suitable Boy; Rohinton Mistry, A Fine Balance; Bapsi Sidhwa, Ice Candy Man; Neel Mukherjee, The Lives of Others; Daniyal Mueenuddin, In Other Rooms, Other Wonders; Arundhati Roy, The God of Small Things; Saadat Hasan Manto, Toba Tek Singh: Stories

You will be required to present your thoughts on the background readings you have done in Week 2 class/seminar.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%) in the MT.

The take home exam will be held the week following the end of the MT.

Economic Anthropology (1): Production and Exchange

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alpa Shah OLD 6.17A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: What is the economy? We will explore how the history of capitalism has been inextricably tied to producing an idea of the economy as a distinctive domain of life and how anthropologists have persistently challenged this understanding, showing how economic life is inextricably tied to religion, politics and kinship, for instance. We will show the radical possibilities of social relations that anthropologists have offered by studying communities that appear to be 'the original affluent society', seemingly not affected by capitalist societies, or incorporated on their own terms. At the same time, we will examine the impact of capitalism and the inequalities it has brought on diverse people around the world, looking at the role of colonialism and empire, industrialisation and neoliberalisation, which includes regimes of production, accumulation and dispossession. Central to our examination will be understanding processes and experiences of exploitation, oppression and domination. We will unveil the invisible work of the many that is never valued but gets hidden in precarity, by migration regimes and within households. We will highlight the ways in which gender, race, ethnicity, caste and class need to be central to any analysis of the economy. At all times, we will look for people's creative responses to the situations they find themselves in, whether it is through acquiescence, reincorporation, religious conversion, weapons of the weak or outright rejection and revolt.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

Indicative reading: A few ethnographies to whet your appetite:

The Anthropology of Amazonia

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange

Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology.

Course content: The course will introduce students to selected themes in the anthropology of Amazonia. It will provide a grounding in the ethnographic literature of the region while seeking to engage with current theoretical debates, highlighting their potential importance to the discipline of anthropology. Topics to be covered include history, indigenous social movements; sexuality and gender; trade and inter-ethnic relations; politics and power; illness, well-being and death. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the broader relationship between ethnography and theory, to challenge common stereotypes of Amazonia and its inhabitants, and to explore ways in which the region has inscribed itself on the imagination of anthropologists and laypersons alike.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Clastres, Pierre. 1987. Society Against the State: Essays in Political Anthropology.

The Anthropology of Revolution

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alpa Shah OLD 6.17A

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Optional for BA/BSc Social Anthropology and BA Anthropology and Law. Also available to students on other degree programmes as an outside option, and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology (AN100 Introduction to Social Anthropology).

Course content: This course will focus on the study of revolution from an anthropological perspective. It will concentrate on three different types of revolutionary struggle, in three different continents, through three different types of ethnographies: the Zapatista indigenous movement in Mexico, the Zimbabwean anti-colonial struggle, and the Maoist movement in South Asia.

In each case, students will be encouraged to critically consider the varying degrees of involvement of the anthropologist in the movements concerned, the theoretical premises of the anthropologists and how these affect the politics and ethics of writing. In this process, students will deepen their understandings of the theoretical debates around production and reproduction, social transformation, religion and secularism, activism and anthropology, and violence and ethics in radical social change. The course will demonstrate that although anthropologists were once criticised for 'missing the revolution' on their doorstep, in fact their long term engagement with communities who come to be affected by revolutionary struggles has much to offer to the theoretical and practical work of radical social transformation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: This course will be based on the close reading of the following three ethnographic monographs:

Earle, Duncan, & Simonelli, Jeanne. (2005). Uprising of Hope: Sharing the Zapatista Journey to Alternative Development. Walnut Creek: Altamira Press.

Lan, David. (1985). Guns and Rain: guerrillas and spirit mediums in Zimbabwe. Berkeley: University of California Press.

Shah, Alpa (2018) Nightmarch: Among India's Revolutionary Guerrillas. London: Hurst Publishers

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%) in the LT.

The take home exam will be held the week following the end of the LT.

Anthropology and the Anthropocene

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: In August 2016, scientists participating in the Anthropocene Working Group put forward an official recommendation to rename our present time interval 'the Anthropocene'. It postulates that humans now exert recognisable influences on the earth's bio- and geophysical systems sufficient to warrant the naming of a distinct geological epoch encompassing the earth's present, recent past, and indefinite future. The Anthropocene thus echoes contemporary anxieties about climate change, the deterioration of global ecologies, and other environmental crises on unprecedented scales, as well as humans' capacity to devise adequate solutions to the problems they face. The scholarly and popular debate on the Anthropocene has exploded in recent years, with anthropologists contributing both theoretical and important ethnographic insight into how people apprehend and deal with the repercussions of anthropogenic environmental change. It now seems that the continued successful existence of humanity on this planet will require us to live differently both with each other and with the earth: 'We will go onwards in a different mode of humanity or not at all' (Val Plumwood 2007).

In this course, we will approach the Anthropocene as a contested category, with evident political and ethical implications. We will begin by examining the dramatic changes in the relationship between humans and their natural environments brought about by industrialisation, specifically, the increased exploitation of natural resources as well as the production and use of fossil fuels on a large scale. We will attend to the practices and cosmologies of people who in their everyday lives – for example, by digging, polluting, and wasting – participate in the work of anthropogenic alterations, drawing on case studies from across the world.

We will consider alternative labels, such as the Capitalocene, Plantationocene, Plasticene, Eurocene, Misanthropocene, and Neologocene, each of which tells a different origin story for what Donna Haraway has called 'the trouble'. However, we then move to ask whether the Anthropocene might be less a marker of an epochal transformation than a signal of a profound anti-political shift in discussions about the future of the planet. We will inspect the scientific and non-scientific controversies the Anthropocene has provoked, and the particular forms of power, authority, reason, imagination, and subjectivity it has generated.

Students will be expected to engage with a variety of resources, including online publications, blogs, documentary and feature films, and other media, and an emergent interdisciplinary literature, spanning the social and natural sciences, which we will read in relation to a more long-standing engagement with the environment within the anthropological discipline. This will lead us to interrogate established binaries of human/nonhuman, subject/object, and nature/culture, and, significantly, to ask about the critical valence of anthropologists' enquiry into the 'anthropos' for an age so profoundly shaped by humans. What methods and modes of analysis are required to comprehend the diverse human/non-human interactions and seemingly incommensurable scales that the Anthropocene invokes? What types of collaboration, knowledge, and mutual care does an anthropocenic outlook make possible? How can we anchor the manifold theoretical proposals that have been put forward not just in ethnographic examples but also in own 'experiments for living'?

Teaching: 7 hours of lectures, 7 hours of classes and 6 hours of workshops in the MT.

The course is comprised of three cycles of three weeks plus an additional, concluding week. Each cycle consists of two weeks taught in the traditional lecture/class format, and a third week with a two-hour workshop in a larger group. While the one-hour classes will focus on core readings set by the lecturer, the two-hour workshop will, in addition, offer space for viewing other resources (films, online material), discussing students independently researched material, student presentations, etc.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

AN277 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23

Topics in the Anthropology of sub-Saharan Africa

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephanie Postar

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

In deciding whether to admit students from the General Course and/or other departments, consideration will be given to preliminary/general training in anthropology and/or cognate social science disciplines.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Being Human: Contemporary Themes in Social Anthropology (AN100) and A History of Anthropological Theory (AN101).

It is preferred that students will normally have done preliminary/first-year courses in Anthropology as noted above, but there is some flexibility (eg in the case of General Course students). Students should consult the course lecturer.

Course content: This course gives students a critical understanding of ethnographic and theoretical writing on sub-Saharan Africa. Grounded in some classic debates around tradition and modernity (kinship-based polities vs states; studies on occult knowledge vs rationally-oriented political economy approaches; 'objective' class vs forms of identification such as tribe or race), it explores questions about how the sub-continent's societies orient themselves, and respond to new precarities, in a postcolonial and neoliberal age. How are changing urban realities experienced and expressed in popular culture? How are the politics of land and belonging being reshaped? Do youth have a future of work in post-industrial Africa - and what new gender identities are they developing? Are there specifically African forms of knowledge? What is postcolonial about the 'postcolony'? Is Europe 'evolving towards Africa', as has been maintained? The course also thinks through the role of fiction, non-ethnographic writing and non-academic voices in shaping anthropology on the sub-continent.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of virtual lectures, classes and online interactive activities. The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Students will be asked to write one formative review during term time, to be evaluated by and discussed with the course lecturer. The formative review will allow for students' individuality and expression and allow them to bring their own interest in current debates into interplay with course materials.

Public Anthropology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrea Pia

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

In deciding whether to admit students from the General Course and/or other departments, consideration will be given to preliminary/general training in anthropology and/or cognate social science disciplines.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Being Human: Contemporary Themes in Social Anthropology (AN100) and A History of Anthropological Theory (AN101).

It is preferred that students will normally have done preliminary/first-year courses in Anthropology as noted above, but there is some flexibility (e.g. in the case of General Course students). Students should consult the course lecturer.

Course content: What and how does anthropology contribute to public life? Do anthropologists have a responsibility to meaningfully contribute to communities beyond the academy that make the study of anthropology possible? This module explores the challenges, difficulties, and stakes of having ethnographic research encounter various publics, ranging from journalists, legal experts, and policymakers to activist groups, local populations, and other scholars. Students of this module engage critically with a variety of media (books, newspaper articles, documentaries, podcasts, social platforms and interactive digital tools) with a view of analysing the ways in which anthropological ideas are conveyed to broader audiences, reflecting on how to improve their representation and effectiveness, and proposing new ways of disseminating these ideas to different publics.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures, 3 hours of seminars, 8 hours of classes and 12 hours of workshops in the LT.

The course is divided into ten weeks, consisting of a combination of lectures/movie workshops/classes. Each week students read excerpts from selected ethnographic texts across geographical areas that have spurred public interest for the sensitiveness of their subject matter or the questionability of their research ethics. Workshops introduce students to the public buzzes generated by these studies and ask them to reflect on the politics and situatedness of ethnographic research and on the relatability of its findings. In some of the seminars a 'local expert' will be present to serve as a resource in the discussion of the issues.

The focus of this module is on the relationship between anthropological theory, the power fields in which it is inserted and its diverse publics. The types of questions this module address are both of critical and applied nature: to what extent can ethnographic studies of the food production system, waste management and water and energy provisions make global social infrastructures fairer? To what extent structure/agency debates in anthropology (and cognate disciplines) may move public perceptions of criminality and marginality towards more sympathetic positions? How effective have ethnographic-based critiques of trickle-down economics and social mobility really been, and why? How can anthropological accounts of systemic inequality take root into public representations of otherness?

The course ends by examining recent anthropological proposals within academia for a more vocal and engaged anthropology. It asks student to critically reflect on whether the discipline's colonial past may still weigh on today's attempts at engaging new publics. What disciplinary benchmarks of successful engagement should anthropologists set up for their own scholarship?

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students will have the opportunity to write a (unmarked) formative essay on a 'public issue' of their choosing (in week 5) and will be invited to discuss feedback during office hours.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%).

The take-home exam asks students to answer one question from a set of synoptic questions which will cover all ten weeks of teaching. The take home exam will be submitted after the end of LT.

AN281 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Health and Welfare: Anthropological Perspectives

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Clara Devlieger OLD 6.08

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course will focus on the study of health and welfare from an anthropological perspective. The course departs from a focus on biomedicine, examining how anthropologists have analysed the individualising medical gaze and the consequences of biopolitics. We consider how understandings of illness, care and healing are socially defined in different socio-cultural contexts, paying attention to issues such as disease, old age, disability, and mental health. Such issues of health are increasingly shifting towards broader conceptions of 'well-being'. As we progress, therefore, we turn to examine how such ideas of health increasingly intersect with the policies and values of welfare, as the political management of well-being. Welfare is both a description of life, as well as a form of intervention that aims to improve those lives. We therefore consider how ethnographic approaches to redistributive work touch on issues concerned with what it means to fare well and how that might be secured in a world defined by inequalities. Ethnographic case studies here may include ethnographies of austerity, dependency and sharing.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

AN284 Half Unit Anthropological Approaches to Race, Racism, and Decolonisation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Imani Strong and Prof Laura Bear

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course is a call to action—in the tradition of the movements and literatures it examines—that will provide students with a foundational understanding of race and contemporary racism, as well as approaches and theories central to their potential transformation. The course will focus on the discipline's historical and present theoretical orientations to race, explore alternative modes and questions in the practice of anthropology raised by anthropologists and theorists of colour, and provide an understanding of the policies—institutional, economic, social, and bureaucratic—that maintain both an academic and social racial status quo. Explicitly asking students to engage with the concept of antiracist and decolonial futures for anthropology, the course centres non-white/non-Western thought and thinkers, "activist" anthropology as a norm, and racial subjectivities as central to theory and practice.

The course will ask:

- What has been the role of the anthropologists of colour in forming the basis of what is commonly thought of as anthropological theory? What can we learn from their theories and methods?
- How can we understand contemporary racisms and how, positioned in the legacy of anthropology's contribution to its construction, can anthropology become an antiracist tool?
- Where can anthropology intervene on policy or re-orient theory to engage an antiracist epistemology in a transformative way? What is the scope of a so-called "activist" anthropology?
- What are the potential futures for anthropology as a discipline actively engaged in decolonising theory and methods?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students will have the opportunity to write a 1,500-word formative essay in the MY. Feedback will be provided online, and/or during office hours.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

All UG students will be required to submit a 3,000 word policy proposal, which will be due in the first week of the subsequent term.

Students will be able to choose between:

- a) a policy essay utilizing ethnographic evidence for an anti-racist/ decolonial intervention on a particular institution explored during the course,
- b) a design for an anti-racist social movement or campaign, or;
- c) a traditional theoretical essay taking race as the analytical lens for examination of an institution or policy addressed in the course.

AN298 Half Unit

Fieldwork in London: Learning Ethnographic Methods

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yazan Doughan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Social Anthropology and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne). This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The aim of this course is to guide and support students as they identify, execute and write-up their own ethnographic project. In parallel with their research activities, students will develop research skills for the collection, analysis and representation of ethnographic data. The course will provide training in ethnographic observation, participation, listening, questioning, interviewing, analysing and writing. One session will be dedicated to discussing a range of ethical dilemmas that may emerge during the course of ethnographic research.

Students will demonstrate their research skills by applying them to the research questions pursued in their ethnographic project. They will write a 4,500 to 5,000-word essay reporting on their research activities and findings.

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: A short description of the student's proposed research project will be discussed in LT week 1 in a student-led workshop. Students will then produce a 1000-word report due between weeks 5 and 7, describing the progress made on the research, including a sample ethnographic description and an explanation of the methods used to date. Students will receive feedback on the report within two weeks of submission.

AN2E0 Half Unit

The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender (Anthropology Exchanges)

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mayanka Mukherji

Availability: This course is available on the Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems and gender roles, analysed through ethnographic examples from a diverse range of settings. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'care', 'gender', 'the body', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture', as well as exploring how the experiences of kinship, sex and gender vary according to the regimes of politics, law and materiality in which they are embedded. The course considers how the practices and meanings of kinship, sex and gender are entangled with culturally and historically specific ideas of bodily control, pollution, beauty, race, nationalism, modernity, and care. In the first half of the term, we consider Bodies and Reproduction; in the second half, we focus on Materialities, Movements and Care.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Carsten, J. After Kinship (2003); Donnan, H. and Magowan, F. The Anthropology of Sex (2010);

Political and Legal Anthropology (Anthropology Exchanges)

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker

Availability: This course is available on the Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The anthropological analysis of legal institutions as revealed in relevant theoretical debates and with reference to selected ethnography. The development of legal anthropology and their key concepts including forms of authority; forms of knowledge and power; political competition and conflict; colonial transformation of indigenous norms; writing legal ethnography of the 'other'; folk concepts of justice; the theory of legal pluralism; accommodation of religious practices in secular laws of European states.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of virtual lectures, classes and online interactive activities. The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes, and to submit one mock exam question in the LT to their class teacher on which they will receive formative feedback.

Indicative reading: Moore, S F, 1978, Law as Process; Malinowski, B, 1916, Crime and Custom in Savage Society; Bohannan, P, 1957, Justice and Judgement among the Tiv; Comaroff J and Roberts S, 1981, Rules and Processes. Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

AN301

The Anthropology of Religion

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell
 Dr Yazan Doughan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a substantial background in Social Anthropology.

Course content: This course covers current approaches to and reconsiderations of classic topics in the anthropology of religion, such as: myth, ritual, belief and doubt, supernatural experience, ethical self-cultivation, asceticism, sacrifice, authority and charisma. In the Michaelmas term, students will be introduced to debates concerning the ways in which 'religion' is said to influence or shape personal experience and collective public life in both western and non-western contexts. Students will explore some of the key concepts that inform contemporary understandings of religion as a force in the world, the history of these concepts, how they enter into various political and ethical projects, and the extent to which they predefine 'religion' as an object of anthropological study. Specific areas of focus may include: the relationship between 'religion' and 'secularism'; conceptions of 'religious freedom'; conversion; inter-religious conflict; the ethnography of religious minorities; the anthropology of religious movements; and the comparative anthropology of 'religions'. In the Lent term, students will be asked to rethink the category of 'religion' and its role in anthropological analysis. The guiding underlying approach will be to ask; what is the study of 'religion' for the social sciences, and what are the potentials and limitations of different answers to that question. We will also be asking where (if anywhere) religion is located as category, practice and experience for a range of interlocutors, and in different kinds of analytic writing. Topics facilitating this project may include some of the following: shamanism, spirit mediumship, death rituals and ritual theory, magic and witchcraft, 'spirituality' and new religious movements, religion and kinship, ghosts, spirits and ancestors, cosmology, faith-healing, life-cycle rituals, human-nonhuman relations, and religion in diaspora and social change, religion and 'ethics', problems of suffering and critical approaches to religion, violence and inequality, encounters with the divine and sacred, religion, capitalism and the fetish, religion, gender and the body, religion and development, implicit religion. Examples will be drawn both western and non-western contexts, and from both 'salvation religions' such as Hinduism, Judaism and Christianity, and other including so-called 'animist' contexts.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of the MT and LT.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 3500 words) in the LT. Essay (50%, 3500 words) in the ST.

AN303 Half Unit*Advanced Theory of Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students. Places are limited and the course may only be suitable for external students in unusual cases. Any student who wishes to make an exceptional request to be considered should please contact the course teachers for advice on suitability and availability of places.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a substantial background in Social Anthropology.

Course content: The aim of this course is to train students to engage critically with classic and contemporary texts in the discipline, thereby deepening understandings of current trends and emerging debates. It will examine the theoretical implications of particular anthropological approaches by surveying their origins, their strengths and their critique. The course will take the form of lectures and classes conducted as an intensive reading group in which approximately three texts will be discussed and analysed in depth, along with supplementary reading material where appropriate. Students will be expected to develop their own critical responses to each text, as well as an appreciation of the context in which it was written and its contribution to relevant theoretical discussions and debates. Students taking this course will develop their capacity to meet the distinctive demands of reading and analysing longer (typically book-length) texts. This course offers a step towards graduate-level skills of independent work, and places emphasis on the active role of the students in identifying their own lines of analysis in relation to a set text.

Teaching: 4 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT. Lectures provide a general introduction to the text and relevant issues or debates, which may include background and contextual issues, comparative materials (published, visual, primary text etc as appropriate) and in some instances debates about what is at stake in the different ways in which we learn to think and write. The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 in MT.

Indicative reading:

- Gillian Feeley-Harnik. Selection of articles, including chapters in S.Mckinnon and F. Cannell eds. (2013) Vital Relations and in S. Franklin and S.Mckinnon eds. (2001) Relative Values.
- Deirdre de la Cruz. Mother figured: Marian apparitions and the making of a Filipino universal.
- Emily Martin Bipolar expeditions

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 3000 words) in the MT.

All students will produce a portfolio of position pieces (worth 100% of the total mark), to which they are expected to make a contribution after each of the three cycles. Portfolios will be assessed periodically during and after MT. Students who submit fewer than two position pieces will receive a mark of zero for each missed assessment. The overall mark will be the average of the two position pieces with the highest grades, including any zeros for missed assessments. Students who submit at least one position piece and fail the course and are not eligible to graduate will be expected to add to their portfolio at resit in order to achieve a pass. Students who do not submit any position pieces (0 out of 3), will be awarded a Zero Absent for the whole course and cannot be awarded the degree until they submit sufficient work at resit to complete the course. In addition to following the guidance that will be given in lectures and classes, students are welcome to come and discuss their summative coursework plans individually with the course teacher in office hours.

AN357 Half Unit*Economic Anthropology (2): Transformation and Globalisation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rebecca Bowers OLD 6.17A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course explores the limits and potentials of contemporary global capitalism. We all know that we live in a global economy, but how has this come into being? What are its political, social and cultural consequences? Why is the global economy so volatile? How does it produce inequality for many and abundance for some? Is globalisation dead in an era of 'de-coupling' and populism? What might the futures of global capitalism be? Through the term we will answer these questions in relation to classic themes of production, social reproduction, circulation and consumption. However our theoretical approaches will be expanded to explore the emerging anthropology of: logistical power, the commodification of intimacy, algorithmic interactions, global branding, media spectacles, the security state, financialisation and speculation. Importantly the course will demonstrate that globalisation does not have a single logic nor is it a towering force. Instead, our focus on ethnography takes us inside the local processes through which the durable capture of accumulation and power are created. Significantly too we will be examining globalisation from the perspective of global elites, the middle classes and the precarious poor. By taking an anthropological approach to globalisation we will move away from an economic or 'economistic' theory of capitalism. Instead we will see the significance of desire, kinship, affect, political dreams, ethics and culture to the intimate economy of capitalism. At the end of the course we will have a better understanding of recent global changes, but also a set of theoretical tools that can help us to rethink approaches to capitalism in general.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

AN397

Special Essay Paper in Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker and Dr Mukulika Banerjee

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course gives students the opportunity to write an extended essay which addresses an anthropological theme of their own choosing. The extended essay should be based either on library-based research or on fieldwork-based research conducted on a topic that is suitable for anthropological analysis. Students should ensure that there is an adequate body of relevant literature available for analysis, and that the topic as defined is not unmanageably large.

There is no formal course content. Students will be expected to draw widely on their readings from other anthropology courses.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures, 5 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures and 4 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Guidance on dissertation research and writing will be given in a one-hour session in ST (to students finishing their 2nd year) and in the timetabled teaching in MT and LT (to students in their 3rd year). In addition to direction from their Academic Mentor in regular mentoring meetings across the year, the AM will suggest other members of staff for students to consult on the basis of the proposed topic.

Formative coursework: Following an introductory lecture and seminar, students will submit a Dissertation Topic form at the end of MT week 2 (using a template published on Moodle). They will then work with their academic mentor and through timetabled teaching. They will submit a Critical Literature Review form during MT week 7, a 2,500-word extract during of LT week 2, and a Dissertation Contents form during LT week 7.

Indicative reading: There is no formal course content. Students will be expected to draw widely on their readings from other anthropology courses.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 9000 words) in the ST. The essay is 9,000 words of main text, including footnotes and appendices but excluding bibliography. The essay should be typed, double spaced, and should follow the reference procedures of The Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute. The essay must be handed in to the Anthropology Departmental Office by the date announced in the Department's Handbook, normally week 2 of ST.

AN3E1 Half Unit

The Anthropology of Religion (Anthropology Exchanges)

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell

Availability: This course is available on the Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Cape Town), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Fudan), Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Melbourne) and Exchange Programme for Students in Anthropology (Tokyo). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Students will be asked to rethink the category of 'religion' and its role in anthropological analysis. The guiding underlying approach will be to ask; what is the study of 'religion' for the social sciences, and what are the potentials and limitations of different answers to that question. We will also be asking where (if anywhere) religion is located as category, practice and experience for a range of interlocutors, and in different kinds of analytic writing. Topics facilitating this project may include some of the following: shamanism, spirit mediumship, death rituals and ritual theory, magic and witchcraft, 'spirituality' and new religious movements, religion and kinship, ghosts, spirits and ancestors, cosmology, faith-healing, life-cycle rituals, human-nonhuman relations, religion and nature, and religion in diaspora and social change, religion and 'ethics', problems of suffering and critical approaches to religion, violence and inequality, encounters with the divine and sacred, religion, capitalism and the fetish, religion, gender and the body, religion and development, implicit religion. Examples will be drawn both western and non-western contexts, and from both 'salvation religions' such as Hinduism, Judaism and Christianity, and other including so-called 'animist' contexts.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. The contact hours listed above are the minimum expected. This course has a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

DS101L Half Unit

Fundamentals of Data Science

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Cardoso Silva PEL 9.01C

Availability: This module is designed for students on social science degree programmes who do not have A-level Mathematics (e.g. in Anthropology, Law, and Social Policy). This course is not capped. Any student who requests a place is likely to be given one.

Course content: This course is designed to introduce students to data science and its practice: how it works and how it can produce insights from social, political, and economic data. It combines accessible knowledge in data science as a field of study, with practical knowledge about data science as a career path. By combining case studies in applications of both with the study of the content of data science, it aims for a coverage of data science that is both pedagogic but accessible, as well as fundamentally applied and practical. It combines three perspectives: inferential thinking, computational thinking, and real-world relevance.

The topics covered include:

- the fundamentals of the data science approach, with an emphasis on social scientific analysis and the study of the social, political, and economic worlds;
- a survey of the forms of data and the challenges of working with data, including an overview of databases;
- the basis of computational thinking and algorithmic design;
- an introduction to the logic of statistical inference including probability and probability distributions and how they form the basis for statistical decision-making;
- a survey of the basic techniques of statistical learning and machine learning, including a comparison of different approaches, including supervised and unsupervised methods;
- how to integrate the insights from data analytics into knowledge generation and decision-making;
- examples of methods for working with unstructured data, such as text mining.

Our applications are drawn from the social science fields represented at the LSE but also from private and public sector non-academic examples.

Teaching: 16 hours and 40 minutes of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the LT.

A combination of classes and lectures totalling 30 hours across Lent Term.

Reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 pieces of coursework in the LT.

In most weeks, students will be presented with guided questions to answer in completing each week's reading. They will participate actively, presenting the answers to the questions to the group. In some sessions, students will work on structured problem sets in the staff-led classes. Solution examples will be provided at the end of each week.

DS105L Half Unit Data for Data Science

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Cardoso Silva PEL 9.01C

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Politics and Data Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is not capped. Any student who requests a place is likely to be given one.

Course content: This course will cover the fundamentals of data, with an aim to understanding how data is generated, how it is collected, how it must be transformed for use and storage, how it is stored, and the ways it can be retrieved and communicated. The course will also cover workflow management for typical data transformation and cleaning projects, frequently the starting point and most time consuming part of any data science project. This course uses a project-based learning approach towards the study of online publishing and group-based collaboration, essential ingredients of modern data science projects.

It introduces the principles and applications of the electronic storage, structuring, manipulation, transformation, extraction, and dissemination of data. This includes data types, how data is stored and recorded electronically, the concept and fundamentals of databases. It also covers how data is formatted and communicated. It presents basic methods for obtaining data from the Internet, including simple methods for web scraping and the use of APIs to submit queries that return structured data. Finally, it covers methods for formatting and publishing data.

Sharing and publishing data will also form a key part of this module and will include key skills in on-line publishing, including the elements of web design, the technical elements of web technologies and web programming, as well as the use of revision-control and group collaboration tools such as GitHub. Each student will build an interactive website based on content relevant to their domain-related interests, and will use GitHub for accessing and submitting course materials and assignments. The final project will involve group work to create a data-based website published on GitHub.

This module is not designed to be a hands-on introduction to the use of databases, but does introduce the concepts of databases. For more detailed learning on databases, we will encourage students to take ST207 Databases.

Teaching: 16 hours and 40 minutes of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the LT.

A combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 33.5 hours (counting 50 mins as an hour) across Lent Term, with a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: In the initial sessions, students will work on weekly, structured problem sets in the staff-led class sessions. Examples of exercises involve: setting up account, repositories and pages on GitHub, accessing terminal and computer servers. Later on, students will be expected to work on their group projects in the staff-led class sessions.

DS202 Half Unit Data Science for Social Scientists

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Cardoso Silva PEL 9.01C

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Politics and Data Science and BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with ST201 Statistical Models and Data Analysis.

Pre-requisites: A-level maths or equivalent.

Course content: Data science and machine learning are exciting new areas that combine scientific inquiry, statistical knowledge, substantive expertise, and computer programming. One of the main challenges for businesses and policy makers when using big data is to find people with the appropriate skills. Good data science requires experts that combine substantive knowledge with data analytical skills, which makes it a prime area for social scientists with an interest in quantitative methods.

This module extends the foundation of probability and statistics with an introduction to the most important concepts in applied machine learning, with social science examples.

It will cover the main analytical methods from this field with hands-on applications using example datasets, so that students gain experience with and confidence in using the methods we cover. At the end of this module, students will have a sound understanding of the field of data science, the ability to analyse data using some of its main methods, and a solid foundation for more advanced or more specialised study.

The learning objectives are to:

- Understand the fundamentals of the data science approach, with an emphasis on social scientific analysis and the study of the social, political, and economic worlds;
- Understand how classical methods such as regression analysis or principal components analysis can be treated as machine learning approaches for prediction or for data mining.
- Know how to fit and apply supervised machine learning models for classification and prediction.
- Know how to evaluate and compare fitted models, and to improve model performance.
- Use applied computer programming, including the hands-on use of programming through course exercises.
- Apply the methods learned to real data through hands-on exercises.
- Integrate the insights from data analytics into knowledge generation and decision-making;
- Understand an introductory framework for working with natural language (text) data using techniques of machine learning.
- Learn how data science methods have been applied to a particular domain of study.

Teaching: 16 hours and 40 minutes of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the MT.

This course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the MT.

Students will work on weekly, structured problem sets in the staff-led class sessions. Example solutions will be provided at the end of each week.

Coursework (60%, 2000 words) in the MT.

EC1A1 Half Unit Microeconomics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Dimitra Petropoulou 32L 4.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics (EC1P1) and Elementary Statistical Theory I (ST109).

Students must also either have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or else be taking Mathematical Methods (MA100) alongside.

Course content: This course introduces students to the principles of microeconomics analysis, including recent developments in thinking around decision-making. The first part of the course explores consumer rationality and decision-making under constraints and under uncertainty, including selected applications to savings and labour supply decisions. Students will also be introduced to behavioural economics and insights from psychology relating to consumer decisions. The second part of the course explores firm decision-making in different market structures. Insights from consumer and producer theory will be combined with evidence to address important policy-relevant questions and explore the role of government policy. Students will make use of quantitative methods covered in MA107 and MA100. Appropriate quantitative tools will be reviewed or taught as required.

EC1A1, in combination with EC1B1, contributes towards certificate level exemptions from professional Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (CIMA) examinations.

This course, combined with EC1B1, contributes to the CB2 Exemption of the Institute and Faculty of Actuaries (IFoA).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will also be 6 hours of online interactive Question and Answer (Q&A) sessions in the LT, to discuss go through further examples, discuss related reading and tackle student questions. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures, classes or support sessions that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours across Lent Term.

Student learning will be supported through the EC1A1 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete the weekly problem sets and any required reading before attending class and are encouraged to work in small study groups. Two pieces of work will be marked by class teachers over the course of the academic year, and feedback provided. The diversity of tasks will make the course more inclusive and help students develop a broader range of skills.

Indicative reading: There is no set textbook for this course. There will be required reading from journal articles or reports that will be made available as the course unfolds. Students will be expected to critically discuss the theoretical ideas and models taught by engaging with this required reading alongside working through microeconomic problems. There will be opportunities to discuss the readings in the Q&A sessions and/or in weekly classes. Students wishing to complement their study of the lecture material can consult, among others, the following textbooks (though this is not required and students need not purchase any textbooks). Any edition can be used.

• Varian, H. Intermediate microeconomics: with calculus, W.W. Norton & Company

• Perloff, J.M. Microeconomics: theory & applications with calculus, Pearson.

Students wishing to read further or refresh mathematical tools can consult:

• Jacques, I. Mathematics for Economics and Business, Pearson.

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (15%) in the LT.

EC1A3 Half Unit Microeconomics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ronny Razin 32L.4.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Finance, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Politics and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is mutually exclusive with EC1A5 Microeconomics I, EC100 Economics A and EC102 Economics B.

Pre-requisites: A-level mathematics, or equivalent.

Course content: In this course, you will learn the main building blocks of microeconomics analysis and their applications. You will study the foundations of rationality and individual decision making and learn about strategic interaction and equilibrium (game theory). You will apply these tools to understand many applications, such as how consumers behave, how companies choose their strategies and how auctions work. The course will also touch upon behavioural models and how we think about individual welfare in economics.

This course, in combination with either EC1B3 or EC1B5, exempts those who complete them from BA1 Fundamentals of Business Economics of the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (CIMA).

This course, combined with EC1B3, contributes to the CB2 Exemption of the Institute and Faculty of Actuaries (IFoA).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

The teaching in this course is based on a "flipped-classroom" pedagogical approach. Students will learn through a mix of deliverable content and engagement using technology. The course will include:

- Pre-recorded videos for independent learning and preparation for live sessions.
- 10 hours of interactive online synchronous lectures in the MT with further content, live exercises and other engagement activities using technology.
- 10 hours of in-person lectures in the MT
- 5 hours of online biweekly in-person "consolidation" lectures in the MT, with further content, student discussions and Q&A.
- 10 hours of in-person classes in the MT

Formative coursework: There are weekly problem sets and Moodle quizzes. Feedback will be given on two problem sets. In addition, there are weekly midweek tasks that feed into the content of the live sessions. Preparation and submission of the midweek tasks contributes towards the continuous assessment of coursework for the course.

Indicative reading: There is no set textbook for this course. Optional suggested further reading is listed below. Any edition of these books can be used.

- Further reading on topics: Microeconomics – Daron Acemoglu, David I. Laibson, and John A. List (note the content is also part of the textbook Economics by the same authors).
- Further readings on tools: Jacques, I. Mathematics for Economics and Business, Pearson.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.
Coursework (10%) in the MT.

EC1A5 Half Unit Microeconomics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alan Manning 32L.2.36A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with EC1A3 Microeconomics I, EC100 Economics A or EC102 Economics B.

Course content: This course offers a conceptual introduction to microeconomics principles and uses these to shed light on important contemporary economic questions across a range of fields. You will study consumers and producers, competitive and monopolistic markets, inequality and taxation, market failure and what can be done about it. The ideas of microeconomics will be used to analyse a variety of topics including climate change, the minimum wage, universal basic income, the impact of technology on work, immigration, discrimination the gender pay gap and what we should do about the tech giants. You will develop the skills and intuition to tackle important microeconomic questions using a minimal amount of mathematics (in particular, without the use of calculus).

This course, in combination with either EC1B3 or EC1B5, exempts those who complete them from BA1 Fundamentals of Business Economics of the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (CIMA).

This course, combined with EC1B5, contributes to the CB2 Exemption of the Institute and Faculty of Actuaries (IFoA).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours in the Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Students will submit weekly problems sets, and feedback will be provided on two pieces of work.

Solutions will be available for both problem sets and weekly Moodle quizzes.

Indicative reading: The course will loosely follow the following textbook. Any edition can be used.

- Microeconomics – Daron Acemoglu, David I. Laibson, and John A. List (note the content is also part of the textbook Economics by the same authors).

The following source will be useful for applications and discussion of core microeconomic issues:

- The Economy, Economics for a changing world. The Core Team.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.
Coursework (10%) in the MT.

EC1B1 Half Unit Macroeconomics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathon Hazell, 32L.1.22

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics (EC1P1) and Elementary Statistical Theory I (ST109).

Students must also either have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or else be taking Mathematical Methods (MA100) alongside.

Course content: This course builds on the knowledge learned in EC1P1. You will learn why economic activity fluctuates over time (business cycles). We will discuss how government policy can affect short-term outcomes, such as unemployment, GDP and inflation. Other topics will include inequality and financial crises. We will apply the tools developed in the course to recent events, as well as historical events such as the Great Depression. An important aspect of the course is a coding exercise with data. This will help you acquire a deeper understanding of the material. EC1B1, in combination with EC1A1, contributes towards certificate level exemptions from professional Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (CIMA) examinations. This course, combined with EC1A1, contributes to the CB2 Exemption of the Institute and Faculty of Actuaries (IFoA).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours across Lent Term.

Formative coursework: There will be weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two.

The coursework will be a set of coding exercises, with data, in Python. This is a group project and the course will teach you the necessary programming skills.

Indicative reading: There is no set textbook for the course. Lecture material may occasionally be complemented by supplementary readings.

Students wishing to complement their study should consult the following textbook:

- C. Jones, Macroeconomics, W.W. Norton & Company, 5th Edition.

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (15%) in the LT.

EC1B3 Half Unit

Macroeconomics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antonio Mele 32L.1.22

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Finance, BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Politics and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with EC1B5 Macroeconomics I, EC100 Economics A or EC102 Economics B.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics I (EC1A3).

A-level mathematics, or equivalent.

Course content: This course is an introduction to macroeconomic analysis. We will study how countries' economic performance is determined in the long run. We will learn why we observe economic growth and development in some countries but not in others. We will discuss how the labour market works and how unemployment is determined. We will analyse how the largest components of GDP, consumption and investment, are formed. We will also cover the role of policy and how it affects the economy. We will look at fiscal challenges in the long run. Emphasis will be given to concepts and tools used by macroeconomists in the analysis of macroeconomic phenomena. This course, in combination with either EC1A3 or EC1A5, exempts those who complete them from BA1 Fundamentals of Business Economics of the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (CIMA).

This course, combined with EC1A3, contributes to the CB2 Exemption of the Institute and Faculty of Actuaries (IFoA).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours across Lent Term.

Formative coursework: There will be weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two.

Indicative reading: There is no set textbook for the course. The required reading material will sample from the textbooks listed below. Lecture material may occasionally be complemented by supplementary readings, either required or optional.

- Mankiw, G. (2019), Macroeconomics, 10th edition or later, Macmillan, London. Available online on the LSE Library website
- Jones, C. (2020), Macroeconomics (Fifth Edition), 5th Edition or later, W. W. Norton. Available from: VitalSource Bookshelf.
- Williamson, S. (2019), Macroeconomics, 6th Edition, Pearson Education. Available online on the LSE Library website

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the LT.

EC1B5 Half Unit

Macroeconomics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr L.Rachel Ngai, 32L.1.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Politics and Geography, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with EC1B3 Macroeconomics I, EC100 Economics A or EC102 Economics B.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics I (EC1A5).

Course content: This course is an introductory course in macroeconomics, which is the study of the overall economic performance of countries. You will learn about economic growth, business cycles (booms and recessions), unemployment, inflation, exchange rates, monetary and fiscal policy. We will apply the tools developed in the course to historical and contemporary events. This course, in combination with either EC1A3 or EC1A5, exempts those who complete them from BA1 Fundamentals of Business Economics of the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants (CIMA).

This course, combined with EC1A5, contributes to the CB2 Exemption of the Institute and Faculty of Actuaries (IFoA).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no lectures or classes).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours across Lent Term.

Formative coursework: There will be weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two.

Indicative reading:

- Macroeconomics – Daron Acemoglu, David I. Laibson, and John A. List (note the content is also part of the textbook Economics by the same authors).

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.
Coursework (10%) in the LT.

EC1C1 Half Unit Econometrics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Callen 32L.3.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics (EC1P1) and Elementary Statistical Theory I (ST109).

Students must also either have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or else be taking Mathematical Methods (MA100) alongside.

Course content: This course is an applied introduction to econometrics. Its aim is to introduce students to the principles of estimation, statistical inference, and the central tool of regression. The course draws heavily on empirical questions and you will work with statistical software analysing actual data sets and learn some basic programming and data handling skills in the process. You will learn how statistical tools can be used to answer causal questions (e.g., "What is the causal effect of electing a better educated politician on the quality of service delivery?"), as well as prediction problems (e.g., "what individual characteristics, such as income or education, predict who political parties select to run for office?"). Topics include: program evaluation; randomised experiments; univariate regression; omitted variable bias; selection bias; sampling fluctuation; statistical inference; standard errors; and hypothesis testing.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of lectures in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours across Lent Term.

Formative coursework: There are weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two.

Indicative reading:

- J. D. Angrist and J. S. Pischke Mastering 'Metrics. The Path from Cause to Effect, Princeton University Press.
- J. H. Stock and M. Watson Introduction to Econometrics, Pearson

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.
Coursework (15%) in the LT.

EC1P1 Half Unit Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ricardo Reis 32L.1.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: In this course, we discuss fundamental economic concepts and apply them to current events. The goal is to learn to think like economists by using economic theory to produce compelling arguments and economic data to distinguish and quantify them. Some examples are the measurement of economic well-being and inequality, the impact of immigration, what is a central bank and why it is mandated with controlling inflation, the design of auctions, competition in the age of technology giants, the strengths and weaknesses of market economies, and how to rationally make sense of irrational behaviour. Students will learn how to characterize the relevant aspects (measurement), how to use economic analysis to shed light on any social phenomenon (models), how to use data to measure the causes of these phenomena (empirics) and how to estimate the impact of policies that improve human wellbeing.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 30 hours across Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: There are weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two.

Indicative reading: There is no set textbook for this course.

Students are expected to engage with supplementary reading that will be provided for each topic as the course unfolds.

Students can complement their study of the course material by consulting, among others, the following books (though this is not a requirement and students need not purchase any books).

- Economics for the Common Good, Jean Tirole.
- The Armchair Economist, Steven E. Landsburg.
- Poor Economics, Abhijit V. Banerjee and Esther Duflo.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

Group project (10%) in the MT.

In the group project, student will produce a short video or poster on an economics topic.

EC201 Microeconomic Principles I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Dimitra Petropoulou

Availability: This course is only available to students whose circumstances require it (for example, those returning from interruption).

Pre-requisites: This is an intermediate course in microeconomic analysis. Students are expected to have completed Economics A (EC100) OR Economics B (EC102), or an equivalent introductory course in economics based on textbooks such as Morgan W., M. Katz and H. Rosen, Microeconomics. Students are also expected to have completed an introductory mathematics course such as Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) and should revise calculus including partial derivatives and constrained optimisation methods.

Course content: This is an intermediate course in microeconomic analysis giving a broad overview of economic principles including some recent developments in thinking. Students should expect to find the course challenging and by the end of it should be able to apply the tools of microeconomics to thinking about concrete economic problems. It will cover the following topics:

- I. Consumer Theory – the analysis of decision-making under constraints: preferences and utility; utility maximisation and uncompensated demand; expenditure minimisation and compensated demand; income and substitution effects; welfare analysis. Selected applications to savings and labour supply.
- II. Behavioural Economics I – Anomalies in decision-making; time-inconsistency.
- III. Decision-making with Risk – expected utility theory; risk-sharing, risk-pooling and insurance; prospect theory.
- IV. Producer Theory – Production and cost functions; firm and industry supply; market structure.
- V. Strategic Choice – Game theory: simultaneous and sequential games; subgame perfection; repeated games. Selected applications to oligopoly; auctions.
- VI. The Market System as a General Equilibrium – Efficiency, distribution and inequality; social welfare.
- VII. Living Interdependently – Public goods and externalities; the role of government intervention.
- VIII. Behavioural Economics

II – Analysis of markets; the role of government. IX. Political Economy – Effectiveness of government; preference aggregation; constraints on the power of the state, X. Asymmetric Information – Contracts and markets with moral hazard and adverse selection. XI. Innovation – product innovation; the role of government intervention.

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Students will have access to pre-recorded lectures in both MT and LT.

The 2-hour classes will give time for students to discuss the lecture recordings and related reading before tackling the weekly problem set.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no teaching or support lab sessions that week).

Student support in the run up to the final examination will be organised in ST.

This course is delivered through a combination of pre-recorded lectures and 40 hours of classes across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete the weekly problem sets and any required reading before attending classes and will be encouraged to work in small study groups.

Two pieces of work will be marked by class teachers each term, and feedback provided. There will be varied opportunities to engage with the course material, such as producing short video presentations. The diversity of tasks will make the course more inclusive and help students develop a broader range of skills.

Indicative reading: Lecture material will be complemented with required additional reading from journal articles. There is no set textbook for this course, though chapters from suitable intermediate textbooks can be recommended for those who may wish to consult a text (though this is not required).

Students will be expected to discuss critically the theoretical ideas and models taught by engaging with the required reading alongside working through microeconomic problems. The relevance of the readings will be discussed in classes and students will be required to engage with reading for the Coursework component of assessment.

Assessment: Exam (30%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the MT and LT.

EC210

Macroeconomic Principles

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Juraj Briskar 32LIF.1.26

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Mathematics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is only available to students entering the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics or the BSc in Mathematics and Economics programmes in 2020/21 who are required or have the option to take this course under paper 11 of their regulations. The course is also available to students on other programmes whose circumstances require it (for example, those returning from interruption).

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102), or an equivalent introductory course in Economics. Students are also expected to have completed at least an introductory Mathematics course such as Basic Quantitative Methods (MA110).

Course content: This course will cover the fundamental principles of macroeconomics at an intermediate level. Topics include the study of economic growth, consumption, investment, unemployment, business cycles, inflation, monetary and fiscal policy, financial markets and international macroeconomics.

Teaching: Students will have access to pre-recorded lectures in both MT and LT.

Students will receive 20 hours of classes in the MT, 18 hours of classes in the LT and 2 hours of classes in the ST. The 2 hour classes will give time for students to discuss the lecture recordings and related reading before tackling the weekly problem set.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no teaching or support lab sessions that week).

Student support in the run up to the final examination will be organised in the ST.

This course is delivered through a combination of pre-recorded lectures and 40 hours of classes across the Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students should attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. Students will be expected to submit work each week; a minimum of two pieces of work will be marked per term, and feedback provided.

Students are expected to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for the course.

Students will be directed to different readings from several textbooks.

Assessment: Exam (25%, duration: 1 hour, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

The Lent term examination is based 100% on the Michaelmas term syllabus, and the Summer exam on 33% of the Michaelmas term syllabus and 67% of the Lent term syllabus.

EC241 Half Unit

PPE Interdisciplinary Research Seminar

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Callen 32L.3.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Governments serve several functions key to economic development, including correcting market failures, raising taxes, delivering services, and protecting property rights. Yet, particularly in poor countries, they often fail to do so effectively. In this course, we will explore the empirical body of evidence on what can be done to improve service delivery. We view this evidence through an analytical framework emphasizing the agency problems between citizens, politicians and bureaucrats. Correspondingly, the course is divided into four sections. We will first focus on how democratic institutions select and constrain politicians. Second, we will explore issues of bureaucratic selection and incentives affecting bureaucrats. Third, we will review evaluations of specific reforms aimed at strengthening institutions, promoting accountability, and improving service delivery. In a final section, we will explore the interactions between governance, development, and political conflict. This section emphasizes cases where subnational conflict reflects a violent competition for legitimate political control. This discussion also will relate modern efforts at state building to classical philosophical and political discussions on the creation of legitimate states. We will also focus extensively on empirical case studies of policies, reforms, and innovations that have proven effective.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT only (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term.

Formative coursework: weekly challenges and feedback will be given on two.

Indicative reading:

- Acemoglu, Daron and James Robinson, Why Nations Fail, Crown Books, 2012;
- Besley, Timothy and Torsten Persson, Pillars of Prosperity: The Political Economics of Development Clusters, Princeton University Press, 2011

Assessment: 10% - Class Participation
90% - Final Essay (2,000 Words)

EC2A0

Introductory Course in Microeconomic Principles

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Frank Cowell

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: EC2A0 is an introduction to the compulsory core microeconomics EC2A1 covered in the MT and LT of year 1 of the MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme).

The course aims to provide students with an understanding of the essential analysis of individual economic agents in a market setting, firms, consumers and workers. It is designed to deliver a solid basis for EC2A1 Microeconomics, taught in the MT and LT of the first year of the MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme).

The course starts with a brief overview of optimisation in economics: constraints, objectives and maximisation techniques. The two main topic areas then apply this optimisation analysis as follows:

The firm: Profit maximisation and cost minimisation. Demand for inputs and supply of output in competitive markets. Market equilibrium. Analysis of monopoly.

The consumer: Utility maximisation subject to budget constraints. Demand for commodities. Extensions to factor supply. Applications to intertemporal decision-making and labour-market decisions. Extension to decision-making under uncertainty.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of interactive classes, delivered in person over 2 weeks in early September

Formative coursework: Students will be required to complete daily sets of self-testing exercises during the course.

Indicative reading: Recommended readings and preparation materials will be provided over the summer.

Assessment:

At the end of the course, students will be assessed through a closed-book, timed examination on optimisation by competitive firms and households.

EC2A1

Microeconomics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michele Piccione 32L 4.07

Prof Timothy Besley 32L 3.37

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Microeconomics I (EC1A1) and either Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or Mathematical Methods (MA100).

Students on the MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) must have completed Introductory Course in Microeconomic Principles (EC2A0) and be taking either Mathematical Methods (MA100) or Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) alongside.

Course content: In this course, we build on the tools learnt in Microeconomics I (EC1A1) to provide an in-depth analysis of microeconomic theory, as well as applications of the tools of microeconomics to concrete economic problems.

The first part of the course explores game theory and considers a range of applications:

- Extensive Forms and Normal Form games.
- Pure and mixed strategy Nash Equilibria.
- Backward induction and Subgame Perfection.
- Applications: Cournot, Stackelberg, Bertrand with homogeneous and differentiated goods; entry games and limit capacity, bargaining.
- Repeated games – Application: cartel stability
- Games with incomplete information and belief refinements.
- Applications: Limit Pricing, Auctions, Signalling.

The second part of the course builds on the analysis of demand and supply side in EC1A1 to analyse general equilibrium, market failures and the role of government intervention:

- The Market System as a General Equilibrium – Efficiency and distribution.
- Living Interdependently – Public goods and externalities; private action and the role of government.
- Behavioural Economics – Markets with behavioural biases; the role of government.
- Political Economy – Effectiveness of government; preference aggregation; constraints on the power of the state.
- Asymmetric Information – Contracts and markets with moral hazard and adverse selection.
- Innovation – product and process innovation; the role of government in supporting innovation.

The course prepares students for third year optional courses.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Students will also benefit from online Q&A sessions.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures, classes or support sessions that week).

Student learning will be supported through the EC2A1 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 60 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete the weekly problem sets and any required reading before attending class and are encouraged to work in small study groups on unassessed work.

A minimum of two pieces of work will be assigned and marked each term with feedback provided.

Indicative reading: For the Michaelmas Term the set textbook is:

- Watson, Joel. "Strategy: An Introduction to Game Theory", WW Norton (2013), 3rd edition

For the Lent Term, there is no set textbook. Lecture material is complemented with required additional reading from journal articles, reports, and other sources.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (30%) in the MT and LT.

EC2A3 Half Unit

Microeconomics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Dimitra Petropoulou, 32L 4.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Finance, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students. Note, EC2A3 is mutually exclusive with EC201, EC202 and MG207.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics I (EC1A3) and Macroeconomics I (EC1B3), or equivalent.

Students must also have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or Mathematical Methods (MA100), or equivalent.

Course content: In this course, we use the tools you learned in Microeconomics I (EC1A3) to provide an in-depth analysis of microeconomic theory, as well as applications of the tools of microeconomics to concrete economic problems. We build on analysis of demand from EC1A1 and combine with the supply side, bringing the two sides of the market together in the analysis of general equilibrium. We then explore social welfare and consider issues of efficiency, distribution, and inequality, alongside an introduction to political economy and the effectiveness of government. We will also examine the effects of living interdependently, exploring public goods and externalities and the role of government intervention in correcting market failures. Finally, the study of asymmetric information in markets and implications for contract design, as well as analysis of insurance markets and adverse selection.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. Student learning will be supported through a series of online Q&A sessions, the EC2A3 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to complete the weekly problem sets and any required reading before attending classes and will be encouraged to work in small study groups. Two pieces of work will be marked and feedback provided.

Indicative reading: Lecture material will be complemented with required additional reading from journal articles or reports. There is no set textbook for this course, though chapters from suitable intermediate textbooks can be recommended for those who may wish to consult a text (though this is not required).

Students will be expected to discuss critically the theoretical ideas and models taught by engaging with the required reading alongside working through microeconomic problems.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the MT.

EC2A5 Half Unit

Microeconomics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Chiara Sotis

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Note, EC2A5 is mutually exclusive with EC230.

Pre-requisites: Students will have completed Microeconomics I (EC1A5) or equivalent.

Course content: In this course, we apply the knowledge acquired in Microeconomics I (EC1A5) to analyse economic problems and issues at a higher level. This course teaches microeconomic analysis to let you explore important contemporary questions and special emphasis is given to the question how public policy can change (economic) outcomes. You will learn how to understand economic problems by focusing on their key characteristics, choosing the relevant microeconomic mechanisms and developing a solid intuition. The use of mathematics is minimal (in particular, with no calculus) and the emphasis of instruction is on graphical analysis and economic intuition. Precise topics and readings will be announced and are selected to be of current interest, such as the impact of the pandemic and environmental concerns.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. Student learning will be supported through office hours and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on two pieces of formative work during MT. Students are expected to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: There is no set course textbook because of the topical nature of the applications chosen. A list of selected texts and readings will be provided at the start of term, given the topical nature of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

EC2B1

Macroeconomics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Wouter Den Haan, 32L.1.08A
Professor Benjamin Moll, 32L.1.19

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics I (EC1A1) and Macroeconomics I (EC1B1), or equivalent.

Students must also have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or Mathematical Methods (MA100), or equivalent.

MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) students can take Mathematical Methods (MA100) alongside EC2B1.

Course content: This is an intermediate course in macroeconomics that builds on the knowledge learned in Macroeconomics I (EC1B1). A set of important frameworks and approaches to model macroeconomic developments will be discussed. You will be challenged to apply the tools that we develop in the course to understand better historical and contemporary events. An important aspect of the course is that you will acquire a deeper understanding of the material through an assignment containing some programming and data analysis.

The MT part of the course focuses on long-term economic developments. We will explore possible explanations for the empirical observation that macroeconomic developments differ so widely across countries. We begin with conventional economic reasoning, but will also explore the role of political systems, (financial) institutions, and culture. In addition to long-term economic growth, we will also study why countries are susceptible to economic crises and what policies and/or institutions can be put in place to reduce this risk. We will not just focus on economic aggregates, but also analyse how economic growth affect different individuals. Specifically, we will look at the interaction between economic growth and social inclusion and in particular women's rights.

The LT part of the course provides a unified approach to study macroeconomics which is based on microfoundations and general equilibrium taking into account possible market imperfections. We will study economic choices that are key for macroeconomic developments, such as the consumption-savings decision, the labour-leisure decision, and the investment decisions. These are the building blocks for some models with which we can study the behaviour of aggregate variables as well as the role of economic policies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT, during which there will be no lectures or classes.

Student learning will be supported through the EC2B1 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: There are weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two per term.

Indicative reading:

- Weil, David. "Economic Growth, international student edition." (2014 or the 4th edition if it has become available).
- Kurlat, Pablo. "A Course in Modern Macroeconomics." (2020)

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Project (30%, 2500 words) in the LT.

The project comprises a programming component, some data analysis, and a description of the results.

EC2B3 Half Unit*Macroeconomics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kevin Sheedy, 32L.1.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Note: EC2B3 is mutually exclusive with EC210.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics I (EC1A3) and Macroeconomics I (EC1B3), or equivalent.

Students must also have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or Mathematical Methods (MA100), or equivalent.

Course content: This is an intermediate-level course in macroeconomics that builds on the material you covered in EC1B3. You will learn about money and inflation, and how central banks can use monetary policy to control inflation. You will study business cycles - booms and recessions - and the potential role for fiscal and monetary policy in stabilising the economy. You will learn about the interaction between the economy and financial markets and banks, especially in times of crisis. You will also study the international aspects of macroeconomics arising from trade in goods and financial assets with the rest of the world. We will apply the tools developed in the course to historical and contemporary events.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT, during which there will be no lectures or classes.

Student learning will be supported through the EC2B3 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to work on weekly problem sets ahead of classes, two of which will be marked and feedback provided.

Indicative reading: There is no set textbook for the course. Lecture material may occasionally be complemented by supplementary readings. Students wishing to complement their study should consult the following textbook:

- P. Kurlat, A Course in Modern Macroeconomics, 2020

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the LT.

EC2B5 Half Unit*Macroeconomics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mohan Bijapur 32L.1.31

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Note, EC2B5 is mutually exclusive with EC230.

Pre-requisites: Students will have completed Macroeconomics I (EC1B5), or equivalent.

Course content: This course builds on the knowledge acquired in Macroeconomics I (EC1B5). The use of mathematics is minimal (in particular, with no calculus) and the emphasis of instruction is on graphical analysis and economic intuition. Precise topics and readings will be announced and are selected to be of current interest, such as: is central bank independence a good thing?; what are the macroeconomic effects of the Covid-19 pandemic?; what caused the global financial crisis and how can policy prevent future crises?; how was global financial regulation reformed in the aftermath of the crisis?; what unconventional tools of monetary policy did central banks implement?; what causes currency crises, how can policy prevent them and what sparked the Trump trade war?; why has the US been a more successful currency union than the Eurozone?; what caused the European sovereign debt crisis and how is it related to Brexit?; how should governments deal with a debt crisis - did Greece make the right choice?; what drives convergence in income levels across countries, why do some countries stay poor and can policy change this?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures, classes or office hours in this week).

Student learning will be supported through office hours and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: There are weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two in the Lent Term. Students are expected to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: There is no set course textbook because of the topical nature of the applications chosen. A list of selected texts and readings will be provided at the start of term given the topical nature of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC2C1*Econometrics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marcia Schafgans, 32L.4.12

Professor Steve Pischke, 32L.2.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory I (ST109), Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or Mathematical Methods (MA100), and Econometrics I (EC1C1), or equivalent.

MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) students can take Mathematical Methods (MA100) alongside EC2C1.

Course content: This course builds on the knowledge learned in Econometrics I (EC1C1). In the MT part of the course, the focus is an introduction to the theory of econometrics. You will study in detail various estimators common in the literature: the least squares estimator, the instrumental variable estimator, and the maximum likelihood estimator. You will discuss how (and whether) these estimators can be used for inference purposes under a range of assumptions underlying the data generating process. Topics include the derivation of finite sample properties (unbiasedness, precision (standard error) and efficiency), asymptotic properties (consistency and asymptotic distribution), confidence intervals and hypothesis testing. Most discussions will pertain to the use of cross-sectional data and the linear model. We will consider the binary choice model as an example of a nonlinear model and will cover some aspects of time series data. Some discussions make use of matrix algebra.

In the LT part of the course, you will learn more econometric techniques, including difference-in-differences, and regression discontinuity designs that make use of panel data and you will revisit the instrumental variable technique. Teaching in LT will be based on empirical examples and you will find out how to conduct your own empirical investigation. As part of the course, you will work on an empirical project and write an individual report about your analysis and findings.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of help sessions in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT, during which there will be no lectures or classes.

Student learning will be supported through the EC2C1 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: During MT, there are weekly assignments and feedback will be given on two.

During LT, there will be three homework assignments. Students are expected to give a progress report on their individual project and are given feedback on this.

Indicative reading:

- J. Wooldridge Introductory Econometrics. A Modern Approach, Cengage
- J. D. Angrist and J. S. Pischke Mastering 'Metrics. The Path from Cause to Effect, Princeton University Press.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

Coursework (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.

EC2C3 Half Unit Econometrics I

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Gmeiner (32L.4.28)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Finance, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Note, EC2C3 is mutually exclusive with EC220, EC221 and MG205.

Pre-requisites: Students will have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) or Quantitative Methods (Statistics) (ST107), or equivalent.

Course content: This course is an applied introduction to econometrics. The focus is on regression-based techniques and interpreting results in applied settings. The course will centre on how statistical tools can be used to answer causal "what-if" questions (e.g., "What is the effect of years of education on income?"). You will work with statistical software to analyse actual data sets and will learn basic programming in Stata through dedicated workshops. Topics include: randomised experiments, programme evaluation, matching, simple and multiple regression analysis, inference, omitted variable bias, functional form specification, measurement error, missing data, reverse causality, and instrumental variables.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes, and 5 online Stata workshops in the MT.

Student learning will be supported through the EC2C3 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to engage with the problem sets each week. At least two of these will be marked and feedback provided.

Indicative reading: Lecture materials are complemented by reading of J. D. Angrist and J. S. Pischke, Mastering 'Metrics. The Path from Cause to Effect, Princeton University Press.

Lecture materials are self-contained with regards to econometric theory, so reading of econometrics textbooks is not required.

The following texts are recommended for students interested in consulting a textbook.

- J. Wooldridge, Introductory Econometrics. A Modern Approach, Cengage
- J. H. Stock and M. Watson, Introduction to Econometrics, Pearson

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the January exam period.

EC2C4 Half Unit Econometrics II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Ragvir Sabharwal and Dr Marcia Schafgans

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Finance, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Note, EC2C4 is mutually exclusive with EC220, EC221 and MG205.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Econometrics I (EC2C3), or equivalent.

Course content: This course builds on the material learned in EC2C3. The focus of the course is the underlying theory of empirical research in economics: estimation methods, properties of estimators (unbiasedness, standard error formula, sampling distribution, consistency) and hypothesis testing. Topics include: Bivariate and multiple regression (estimation, inference, asymptotic property); heteroskedasticity; endogeneity (omitted variables and simultaneity); instrumental variables and two-stage least squares; binary choice models; and time series analysis.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT, during which there will be no lectures or classes.

Student learning will be supported through the EC2C4 Support Lab and through a dedicated discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to engage with the weekly problem sets each week. Two of these will be marked and feedback provided.

Indicative reading:

- J. Wooldridge Introductory Econometrics. A Modern Approach, Cengage

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC301

Advanced Economic Analysis

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Sampson 32L.2.34

Dr L. Rachel Ngai 32L.1.15

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed level 2 microeconomics (EC201 or EC202 or EC2A1 or EC2A3) and macroeconomics (EC210 or EC2B1 or EC2B3 or FM201). The capacity to read and understand applied research methods as covered in EC220 or EC221 or EC2C1 or EC2C3 and EC2C4 is highly desirable.

Students who have thoroughly mastered mathematics at least to the level of MA107, with MA100 giving a better grounding.

Course content: This course is divided into two sections introducing recent developments in economic theory and policy analysis. The first half of the course covers economic policy in the global economy. We study the causes and consequences of international economic integration, focusing on how globalisation affects the trade-offs that shape policy. Both theoretical and empirical analyses will be considered. Key topics include: international trade, capital flows, migration, technology diffusion, taxation in the global economy, and the relationship between globalisation and national sovereignty.

In the second half of the course we focus on economic growth, considering questions like these: Why was GDP per capita in the UK 15 times higher than China in 1960? Why did the factor of 15 decrease to 5 in 2000? To gain an understanding of the “whys” we have to ask deeper questions: what drives economic growth? Why do some economies grow faster and other slower? Thus this part of the course studies the determinants of economic growth through capital accumulation, reallocation of resources from agriculture into manufacturing and services and, technology innovation.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will submit, and receive feedback on, two problem sets per term.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly based on lecture notes and journal articles. As an example of the level and content of the reading in economics articles, students may wish to look at the following:

Rodrik, D. 2011. “The Globalization Paradox”. Oxford University Press.

Harrison, A. and Scorse, J. 2010. “Multinationals and Anti-Sweatshop Activism” American Economic Review 100(1): 247-273.

Hall, R. and C. Jones. 1999. Why do Some Countries Produce So Much More Output per Worker than Others?”

Quarterly Journal of Economics, 114: 83-116

Jones, C. and D. Vollrath (2013), Introduction to Economic Growth. W. W. Norton & Co.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC302

Political Economy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ronny Razin 32L.4.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This course makes use of key concepts in economic theory as well as econometric analysis. We welcome all students with a strong background and proven record in quantitative courses, such as econometrics (EC220 or EC221 or EC2C1 or EC2C3 and EC2C4, or equivalent), statistics (ST107 or ST102, or ST109 combined with EC1C1, or equivalent) microeconomics (EC201 or EC202 or EC2A1 or EC2A3, or equivalent) and mathematics (MA107 or MA100).

Course content: The course seeks to introduce students to the major theoretical models of Political Economy and the available empirical evidence. Sample topics to be covered include: Social Choice theory and Preference aggregation; Comparative electoral systems; Political economy of income redistribution; Turnout in elections; Strategic and Sincere voting; Political Parties; Debates and Communication; Political Agency Models; Citizen-Candidate Models; and some Empirical Studies of Political institutions.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Four pieces of written work (two per term) will be handed in and assessed by class teachers.

Indicative reading: There is no text book covering all the material in the course. The following books are recommended as supplements to what is covered in the lectures:

- Analyzing Politics, Rationality, Behavior and Institutions, K.A. Shepsle and M.S. Bonchek. W. W. Norton & Company, New York, London.
- Liberalism Against Populism, W.H. Riker, Waveland Press, Prospect Heights, Illinois.

For additional readings see: <http://econ.lse.ac.uk/courses/ec302/>

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC307

Development Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oriana Bandiera 32L.3.02 and Prof Robin Burgess 32L.3.03

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This course makes use of key concepts in economic theory as well as econometric analysis. We welcome all students with a strong background and proven record in quantitative courses, such as econometrics (EC220 or EC221 or EC2C1 or EC2C3 and EC2C4, or equivalent), statistics (ST107 or ST102, or ST109 combined with EC1C1), microeconomics (EC201 or EC202 or EC2A1 or EC2A3, or equivalent) and mathematics (MA107 or MA100).

Course content: This course explores the microeconomic foundations of economic development. We will discuss economic growth, inequality, poverty traps, labour markets, capital markets, education, health, gender, service delivery, taxation, the role of the state, governance and accountability, conflict, access to finance, infrastructure, trade, firms and markets, energy, environment and climate change. In studying each of these topics, we will ask: what determines the decisions of households and firms in less developed countries? What constraints do they face? Is there scope to improve livelihoods and productivity through the actions of governments, international organizations, NGOs, or market participants? What policies have been tried? How have they fared? This course combines theory and empirics but maintains a strong applied focus. Under each theme, we will derive testable implications from the theory, subject these predictions to econometric testing, comment on the robustness of the results obtained, and seek to draw policy conclusions.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week)..

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Feedback is provided for four assignments (two in MT and 2 in LT)

Indicative reading: Teaching in the course will be done mainly from journal articles drawn from the forefront of theoretical and applied research in development economics. Background texts for the course are A. Banerjee and E. Duflo, Poor Economics, Public Affairs, 2011 and D. Ray, Development Economics, Princeton UP, 1998.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC309

Econometric Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Taisuke Otsu 32L.4.25
Prof Javier Hidalgo 32L.4.20

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Mathematics and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Econometrics (EC221).

A good knowledge of linear algebra, calculus and statistical theory is essential, so MA100 and either ST102 or ST109 in combination with EC1C1, or equivalent, are required. Students taking this course who are not on the BSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics or BSc Mathematics and Economics should consult with Prof Otsu before selecting this course

Course content: Introduction to asymptotic theory; Method of moments; Hypothesis testing and confidence intervals; Asymptotic theory for linear OLS, instrumental variables, and generalized method of moments (GMM) estimators; Nonparametric density estimation and regression; General large sample theory; Estimation and inference of nonlinear models (Maximum likelihood, Nonlinear Least Squares, GMM); General hypothesis testing and model specification; Systems of equations; Time series analysis and dynamic models.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis. Students are also expected to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: The main texts for the lectures are Bruce Hansen's lecture notes (downloadable at <https://www.ssc.wisc.edu/~bhansen/econometrics/>) for MT, and Davidson & MacKinnon (2004) Econometric Theory and Methods, Oxford University Press for LT. Other useful texts include Davidson (2000) Econometric Theory, Amemiya (1985) Advanced Econometrics, and Hayashi (2000) Econometrics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Behavioural Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L3.21

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Students taking the course as an outside option are required to meet the pre-requisites as detailed below.

Pre-requisites: Ideally, students must have completed EC202 or EC2A1. A highly motivated student who has done well in EC201 or EC2A3-- as a guideline 65 or better -- is welcome on the course, if handling economics mathematically comes naturally. If in doubt, students should consult with Dr Levy enrolling onto the course. Fluency in calculus is essential, and some knowledge of methods of mathematical proof, including those using sets, is necessary.

Course content: The course will expose students to a number of major topics in Behavioural Economics, and will link theory with empirical applications. The first half of the course will focus on departures from neoclassical preferences, while the latter half will cover departures from rational expectations. The particular topics to be covered include:

- Reference Dependent Preferences and Loss Aversion
- Social Preferences
- Hyperbolic Discounting
- Naiveté and Self-Control
- Projection Bias
- Happiness and Adaptation
- Heuristics and Biases
- Inattention and Shrouding
- Nudging and Framing
- Behavioural Welfare Analysis

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least four exercises or pieces of written work will be required and assessed by class teachers.

History of Economics: How Theories Change

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: to be confirmed

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the ways in which economics has developed from the Mercantilists of the 17th century to the Neoclassical thinking of the later 20th century. The course will explore how the theories, concepts and methods of economics have changed over the last 250 years, focusing on Europe and North America. We will use the original texts in order to understand how economists of the past approached perennial questions (about for example, the sources of growth or the role of money) and resolved them in the context of the economic conditions of their own time and place; and use theories about scientific change to understand the longer history of economics.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and

Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to discuss assigned texts and produce several pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: A reading list of original texts and secondary literature will be given at the beginning of the course. For an introduction, students may read R L Heilbroner's, The Worldly Philosophers; for general background, consult Roger E Backhouse's, The Penguin History of Economics or David Colander & Harry Landreth's, History of Economic Thought.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%) in the ST. The course will be assessed by a take-home exam (100%) in the Summer exam period.

Industrial Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L.4.19

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1). A highly motivated student who has done well in EC2A3– as a guideline 65 or better – is welcome on the course, if handling economics mathematically comes naturally. Also, students must have completed Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or Econometrics II (EC2C1) or Econometrics I (EC2C3) in combination with Econometrics II (EC2C4), or equivalent. Students who believe they have completed an equivalent course instead of one of these must receive permission from Prof. Pesendorfer before selecting the course.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide students with a working knowledge of theoretical and empirical methods for industry studies. Topics may include: monopoly, price discrimination, oligopoly theory, mergers, product differentiation, dynamic industry models, collusion, demand estimation, production function estimation, empirical techniques for oligopoly models, identification of conduct, advertising, search, auction markets, empirics of auction markets, winner's curse, collusion in auctions, matching markets, and moral hazard. The topics will be discussed with applications for selected industries and considering competition policy questions.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of lectures and classes totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Two marked assignments per term.

Indicative reading: The course will draw on a variety of texts, the main ones being:

1 Jeffrey R. Church and Roger Ware. Industrial Organization: A Strategic Approach.

2 Jean Tirole. Theory of Industrial Organization

3 Guillaume Haeringer. Market Design: Auctions and Matching
A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Some notes will be provided where textbook coverage is inadequate.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

International Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Justus Dainauskas 32L.1.26
Dr Isabela Manelici 32L.2.29.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1) or Microeconomics II (EC2A3), or equivalent. They must also have completed Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or Macroeconomics II (EC2B1) or Macroeconomics II (EC2B3) or Macro-Finance (FM201), or equivalent Course content: International Macroeconomics: This section of the course offers an introduction to international macroeconomic theory and develops the main tools for macroeconomic policy analysis. We start by studying the balance of payments and the causes and consequences of global imbalances, followed by an in-depth study of the determination of exchange rates, money, and prices in open economies. We discuss the costs and benefits of different nominal exchange rate regimes and their sustainability, as well as examine the causes and consequences of debt and default, speculative attacks and financial crises.

International Trade: This section of the course offers an introduction to international trade theory and develops the main tools for trade policy analysis. We start by studying the patterns of trade distinguishing between inter-industry and intra-industry trade flows. We then proceed to an in-depth analysis of the causes and the effects of those flows based on the concepts of absolute and comparative advantage, relative factor abundance and relative factor intensity, increasing returns to scale and imperfect competition. Finally we discuss the gains and losses from trade, their distribution among people and firms, and their implications for the debate on trade liberalization vs. protectionism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete a problem set weekly, and two of these each term will be collected at random for marking and feedback.

Indicative reading: Paul Krugman, Marc Melitz and Maurice Obstfeld; International Economics: Theory and Policy, 10th ed.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC317

Labour Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels 32L.2.10
Professor Stephen Machin 32L.2.06A

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1) or Microeconomics II (EC2A3), or equivalent. Also, students must have completed Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or Econometrics II (EC2C1) or Econometrics I (EC2C3) in combination with Econometrics II (EC2C4), or equivalent.

Course content: This course is an introduction to the economic analysis of behaviour and institutions in labour markets. Primarily microeconomic models are applied to labour market phenomena, such as labour supply and participation for individuals and households, labour demand by firms, wage determination, employment, and unemployment under different institutional settings. Specific topics to be studied will include: labour market inequalities and technological change; education and wage returns; alternative work arrangement; crime and the labour market; the labour market and Covid. Students will learn how to distinguish alternative theories empirically using real world data. The course explores how models and empirical analysis can be applied to evaluate labour market policies, such as the minimum wage, welfare programmes, and immigration restrictions. The goal of the course is to enable students to think critically and independently about labour market issues, drawing on the models and tools developed during the course.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Problems sets in the course involve hands-on statistical analysis of real world data.

Indicative reading: G Borjas, Labor Economics. Additional reading, drawn from journals, will be suggested during the course.

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Class participation (15%) in the MT and LT.

EC319

Games and Economic Behaviour

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Ellis 32L.3.15
Dr Christopher Sandmann 32L.4.24

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1) or Microeconomics II (EC2A3), or equivalent. Fluency in calculus is essential, and some knowledge of analysis, probability theory, linear algebra and set theory is advantageous.

Course content: This course reviews fundamental concepts in economic theory and presents some of its most successful applications. The first part of the course consists of an introduction to auction theory. Auctions have been widely used to allocate spectrum licenses, drilling rights or central bank lending against collateral; their design is therefore of immediate practical concern. The theory, drawing on mechanism design, allows us to analyse what makes auctions desirable, how different formats compare, and tackle issues such as strategic entry, collusive behaviour, or allocative externalities. Our treatment will be strictly theoretical and cover fundamental issues, most importantly the revenue equivalence theorem. From here we will embark on an eclectic tour, covering issues relating to competition policy and auction design, and exploring connections with competitive markets and nonlinear pricing. The second part of the course will survey concepts in non-cooperative game theory and will introduce students to game theoretic modeling in economics. After setting up the primitives of the game theory framework, different solution concepts will be analysed with an emphasis on economic applications including bargaining, voting, communication, and matching.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Solutions to the assigned problem sets are to be prepared before and will be discussed during classes. In addition, students are encouraged to submit up to four of the designated hand-in problem sets, two for each part, to receive feedback from class teachers.

Indicative reading: P. Klemperer, Why Every Economist Should Learn Some Auction Theory, Cambridge 2003. (available on the author's website <http://www.nuff.ox.ac.uk/users/klemperer/WhyEveryEconomist.pdf>)

V. Krishna, Auction Theory, Academic Press, 2009.

M. Osborne, An Introduction to Game Theory, Oxford University Press, 2003.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC321

Monetary Economics and Aggregate Fluctuations

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kevin Sheedy 32L1.09

Professor Sir Charles Bean 32L 1.18

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1) or Microeconomics II (EC2A3), or equivalent. Students must also have completed Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or Macroeconomics II (EC2B1) or Macroeconomics II (EC2B3) or Macro-Finance (FM201), or equivalent. In exceptional cases and only with permission, students may be allowed to take EC321 if they also take macroeconomics concurrently. Students must have mathematics and statistics to at least the level of Quantitative Methods (MA107 and ST107), while Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102), or else Elementary Statistical Theory I (ST109) in combination with Econometrics I (EC1C1), are strongly preferred. Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or Econometrics II (EC2C1) or Econometrics I (EC2C3) in combination with Econometrics II (EC2C4), or equivalent are desirable though not essential.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to monetary theory, to the effects of monetary variables on the macroeconomic system, the role of the central bank and the conduct of monetary policy. Subjects covered include: The nature and function of money; Asset prices and the term structure of interest rates; Classical monetary theory, neutrality and inflation; Interest-rate feedback rules; The interaction between monetary and fiscal policy; Theories of the demand for money; The market for reserves; Financial markets and financial intermediaries; The transmission mechanism of monetary policy and theories of the Phillips curve; The optimal rate of inflation and optimal stabilisation policy; The positive theory of inflation and the case for central bank independence; Policymaking in an uncertain environment; The role of banks in the transmission mechanism and the case for bank regulation; Financial crises and the role of the central bank as a lender of last resort; The 2007-8 financial crisis and unconventional monetary policies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit two essays or exercises in the MT and the LT. Feedback is provided on these by the class teacher. Students are expected to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: The most useful text books are M Lewis & P Mizen, Monetary Economics, and C Walsh, Monetary Theory and Policy 4th edn. Other useful texts include: C Goodhart, Money, Information and Uncertainty, 2nd edn; D Laidler, The Demand for Money, 4th edn; R Aliber and C Kindleberger, Manias, Panics and Crashes: A History of Financial Crises, 7th edn. The main source of assigned readings is, however, journal articles.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC325

Public Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kate Smith (Room TBC)

Prof Camille Landais 32L.3.23

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic

Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1) or Microeconomics II (EC2A3), or equivalent. The capacity to read and understand applied research methods as covered in EC220 or EC221 or EC2C1 or EC2C3 and EC2C4 is highly desirable.

Course content: The first part of the Michaelmas term content focus on the foundations of public economics. We begin by introducing classical theories concerning equity, efficiency, and the rationales for government intervention in the economy. We discuss market failure in the context of public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. We also discuss problems of public choice and political economics, and the implications of recent research in behavioural economics for policymaking. We also study modern empirical methods that are used to evaluate the causal effects of public policies. The second part of the Michaelmas term considers social insurance policies, including unemployment insurance, disability insurance, retirement pensions, and public health insurance. We study the economic rationale for government intervention in social insurance and the optimal type and extent of interventions, and we relate this to empirical evidence on the causal effects of changes in social insurance policies.

In the Lent Term the course is devoted to tax and transfer programs. We begin by examining the incentive effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply, and then go on to consider migration, tax avoidance, and tax evasion. As inequality is a key input to tax and transfer policy, we critically examine the measurement of and trends over time in income and wealth inequality in various countries. We look at the effect of taxation on economic efficiency and explore the optimal taxation of commodities and income. Finally, we consider questions of tax administration and apply them in a developing country context.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Feedback is provided for one problem set and one mock exam each term (Michaelmas and Lent).

Indicative reading: The recommended textbook for the course is Jonathan Gruber (2016) Public Finance and Public Policy, 5th edition, Worth Publishers. Many of the readings will be journal articles.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EC331

Quantitative Thesis

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L3.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or Econometrics II (EC2C1), or exceptionally Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Econometrics I (EC2C3) in combination with Econometrics II (EC2C4).

Course content: This course provides an opportunity to learn how to do independent quantitative economic research at an advanced level. Students are expected to pursue research on a question of their own choice under the supervision of a member of staff. They are expected to formulate an initial proposal near the start of MT in order to be matched with a supervisor, refining their choice into a manageable research question during that term. Following independent work during MT, a seminar in week 9 will review student progress. In the LT seminars, each student will present a preliminary outline of the results for comments by fellow students and teachers, and later a follow-up presentation on further, more final results and a draft thesis. Seminars in LT are formally timetabled as classes.

Teaching: 4 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

In week 11 of the MT and the LT students will work independently (with supervisory advice).

Formative coursework: Students are required to prepare material for their presentations in the seminar, but this is not formally graded. Students are additionally expected to participate in discussion on the presentations of other students' as this is part of the training of a research economist, but this is also not formally assessed.

Indicative reading: As each student chooses an individual research question, there is no common reading list for this course.

Assessment: Thesis (100%) in May.

A completed thesis (up to 10,000 words, not including abstract, footnotes, bibliography and tables) on an approved subject will be required to be submitted by 06 May 2022. There is no written examination. The thesis is weighted at 100% of the final assessment.

EC333

Problems of Applied Econometrics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mark Schankerman 32L.4.30

Dr Rachael Meager 32L.3.13

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or Microeconomics II (EC2A1) or Microeconomics II (EC2A3), or equivalent. Also, students must have completed introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or Econometrics II (EC2C1) or Econometrics I (EC2C3) in combination with Econometrics II (EC2C4), or equivalent. Students who have completed EC220 or EC2C3 in combination with EC2C4, rather than EC221 or EC2C1, should refer to Dr Meager for advice before starting the course regarding additional preparatory work for Lent term course material.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to provide a solid grounding in recent developments in applied micro-econometrics. A major feature of the course is the use of both analytical and computer-based (data) exercises for the classes, as well as reading applied economic papers from the journals which apply the techniques being taught. This mix will enable students to gain practical experience in analysing a wide variety of econometric problems. The topics covered in the Michaelmas term include analysis of matching methods, identification of average, local average and marginal treatment effects using instrumental variables, weak instrument problems, regression discontinuity and randomised control experiments. The Lent term will focus on topics in the analysis of cross section and panel data with static and dynamic models, including fixed and random effects, nonlinear models, issues of measurement error, selection and attrition in panel contexts, binary choice models, maximum likelihood estimation, and generalized method of moments.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of LT (no lectures or classes that week).

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Michaelmas term: Required weekly "referee reports" (3-4 pages) on assigned journal articles, with two graded. Feedback to be provided by the class teacher. Lent term: Two required problem sets, usually to include econometric questions and applications. Feedback to be provided by the class teacher.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of each term of the course. In parts of the Michaelmas we will use sections from the textbook Mostly Harmless Econometrics by Angrist and Pischke. There is no single text for the Lent term, but useful books include A Guide to Modern Econometrics by Marno Verbeek, Introduction to Econometrics by Stock and Watson (somewhat less advanced than the lectures) and Econometric Analyses of Cross Section and Panel Data by Wooldridge (somewhat more advanced than the lectures).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

EH101

The Internationalisation of Economic Growth, 1870 to the present day

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Neil Cummins SAR 5.13

Prof Sara Horrell SAR 6.03

Dr Timothy Leunig

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Politics and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the inter-relationships between the development of the international economy and the growth of national economies since the late nineteenth century. The course is designed to introduce students not only to a wide variety of topics and issues, but also to the wide variety of approaches used by historians. The course includes analyses of the original leading nation, Britain, and its replacement, the United States, as well as the catch-up of areas such as continental Europe, and the failure to catch-up of earlier well-placed areas such as Latin America. The effects of major events - such as wars and debt crises - are investigated, and we also consider the implications of changing global economic institutions, such as the Gold Standard and IMF, as well as the effects of sometimes rapid changes in product and process technology.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write an annotated bibliography, three very short essays and two longer essays during the year.

Indicative reading: The following are particularly useful:

- R C Allen, Global Economic History: A Very Short Introduction (2011).
- R Floud, J Humphries & P Johnson (Eds), The Cambridge Economic History of Modern Britain, Vol 2 (2014).
- B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital: A History of the International Monetary System (2008).
- K H O'Rourke and J G Williamson, Globalization and History: The Evolution of a Nineteenth-Century Atlantic Economy (1999).
- E Jones, L Frost & C White, Coming Full Circle. An Economic History of the Pacific Rim (1993).
- M S Blackford, The Rise of Modern Business in the USA, Britain and Japan (1998).

(A complete reading list and class topics will be given out at the first meeting.)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Pre-industrial Economic History

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oliver Volckart SAR 6.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This course surveys long-term processes of growth and development in late medieval and early modern Europe (eleventh to eighteenth centuries). It focuses on the transition from a hierarchical society of estates or corporate orders to a market society based on legal equality and freedom of contract. There are two core questions: First, why did this transition occur in an evolutionary way in England and the Netherlands, whereas it was severely delayed the rest of Europe? And second, how is it related to the 'small divergence' between the Dutch Republic and England on the one side and most of the Continent on the other, where the North-West enjoyed significantly higher living standards and per capita incomes than other countries long before the onset of industrialisation?

The course thus raises fundamental questions about societies and economies: Was pre-industrial economic growth transitory and regional? Or was it a recurrent, even normal phenomenon, which however could occasionally be reversed? Was Dutch and British success the result of their social and institutional features? Or was it a combination of geographical factors and good fortune? To what degree did early modern governments help or hinder economic development? Did Europe's political fragmentation hold back the continent's development, or did competition between states have beneficial consequences? In conclusion, can we define an optimal combination of social, political, and economic institutions that sustained growth in the past (and thus, perhaps, in the future)?

The course has a strong focus on skills training, in particular on essay writing.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

Students are expected to produce two pieces of formative written coursework in the MT. They will give formative presentations on topics that form part of the course content. They will receive structured feedback on their formative coursework.

Making Economic History Count

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eric Schneider SAR 5.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides students a brief, non-technical introduction to the quantitative methods that economic historians use to understand the past. It assumes no prior statistical knowledge or experience. It will teach students basic statistics (descriptive statistics and inferential statistics) and how to implement and visualise these statistics with Excel. These skills will be essential for the independent research projects conducted in the second and third year and are highly desired skills on the job market.

Teaching: 10 hours of workshops in the MT.

This course is delivered through a 5 2-hour workshops in Michaelmas Term.

This year, while we are planning for most classes and seminars to be delivered in person, it is possible that some or all of this teaching may have to be delivered virtually. Lectures will either be recorded or given in the form of live webinars

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: The formative coursework will consist of weekly exercises to give students practise with Excel and the methods being taught in the lecture. There will be a formative take home exam over the reading week in Michaelmas Term, to test students' knowledge of the material.

Indicative reading: Hudson, Pat and Mina Ishizu, History by Numbers (London, 2016).

Money and Finance: From the Middle Ages to Modernity

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oliver Volckart SAR 6.10 and Prof Albrecht Ritschl SAR 6.06

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course provides an overview of the main developments in monetary and financial history from 800 to the present day, taking the students from the simple beginnings of medieval European monetary history to the complex financial arrangements of the modern world. The first part of the course covers the emergence of money and finance from the medieval ages to the early modern period. The second part examines the main developments in the global financial system since the nineteenth century. Historical developments in major European and non-European countries (England, Spain, Italy, France, Germany, USA) will be discussed and compared. The course is designed to introduce students to the main concepts of money and finance (financial development, financial integration, monetary policy, banking crises etc.) and to provide a long run perspective to the current policy debate.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: The students will produce one formative essay in MT, and one outline of their summative essay in LT. The exercise will help them practice academic writing (structuring and presenting arguments, providing explanations, referencing etc.); a skill both necessary for the dissertation they are expected to write in year 3 and helpful for the exam of this course that will take place in summer term. The class presentation has a formative character, too. Students will practice presenting complex arguments to their peers and answering questions from the audience.

The Family Economy in History: 1260 to the present day

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sara Horrell SAR 6.03

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Introductory economics is not a strict pre-requisite for this course, but students may find a basic introduction to economics helpful in understanding some of the material.

Course content: In recent accounts the actions of individuals within families and the household have emerged as important explanations for pre-industrial and industrial economic growth. Female agency in marriage decisions resulted in a variant of household formation which allowed high living standards after the ravages of the Black Death. Later, the consumption desires of households prompted increased market participation of women and children, creating an early modern industrious revolution with the potential to evolve into industrial revolution. High wages and child labour have both emerged as contenders in determining the path to industrialisation, and shifts in the provision of education and health services have impacted women's duties within the household and their opportunities in the wider economy throughout the twentieth century. This course examines the role played by the family in determining the path of development. While the lectures largely relate to the British experience, the classes and assessment invite comparisons with experiences in Europe, Asia, and North America. Simple economic models of individual and household behaviour provide the theoretical basis for understanding outcomes, but the focus is on evidence, often quantitative, and critical evaluation of contending explanations.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the MT and 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.

Students are expected to write two essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Students are expected to participate in group presentations of specific readings to the rest of the class twice during the course.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines the economic history of Africa from the medieval period to the present. Its overall aim is to situate Africa within global economic history, illustrating how Africa and Africans contributed to global economic change as well as exploring the impact of those changes on African economies. Lectures provide a chronological introduction to significant periods in African economic history, from the trans-Saharan trade through the slave trade, colonial rule, and independence. The course ends by considering the significance of recent economic expansions and population growth. While lectures and classes focus on broader themes, assessed work includes a case study research project allowing students to learn about the diversity of experience around the continent.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. Lectures will either be recorded or given in the form of live webinars. This year, while we are planning for most classes and seminars to be delivered in-person, it is possible that some or all of this teaching may have to be delivered virtually.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students should expect to complete two formative assignments per term. This will include one essay or equivalent plus an assignment related to the summative case study project. Students will need to have the selection of their case study approved by the course convener by the end of MT, and prepare an outline and reading list by the middle of LT.

Indicative reading: For a general overview of African history over the period, see R.J. Reid, A History of Modern Africa (2009); J. Iliffe, Africans: The History of a Continent (1995). ### Boom and Bust: Macroeconomic History of the Modern World

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jason Lennard

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Business cycles have destabilised societies for centuries. These fluctuations are mini-disasters that are associated with drops in welfare and economic growth. Beyond the economic costs, business cycles have other adverse effects, such as on health and politics.

This course explores the short-run in a long-run perspective to understand the causes and consequences of business cycles. The first part of the course covers the basics: how to define and measure business cycles, the costs of business cycles, the key business cycle facts, and models of the business cycle. The second part investigates propagation mechanisms, such as sticky prices and wages. The third part of the course focuses on impulses, such as shocks to technology, economic policy, financial crises, expectations, and uncertainty.

The course studies advanced and developing economies from the Industrial Revolution to the present. This interval of modern economic history includes deep recessions, major financial panics, reversals of expectations, and episodes of nominal inertia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course explores the economic history of the Middle East and North Africa (MENA). Many, if not most, of MENA's contemporary problems cannot be understood without a deep understanding of its history, not only during the postcolonial period, but also during the precolonial and colonial periods. The course will first introduce students to the definition of the MENA region, and the broad trends in its history since antiquity. It will then examine specific themes that are of great importance for understanding the economic history of the region, such as: how most of MENA's population became Muslims in the Middle Ages? What do we know about MENA's economic performance vis-à-vis Europe in the long run? How did "Islamic" institutions emerge? What legal rights did people have over land and labor? We will also discuss state-led development, inequality, education, socioeconomic inequality across ethnoreligious groups, and the demographic transition. Throughout the course, we will focus on the view from below, examining the living conditions, preferences, and behavior of local populations, rather than taking a macroeconomic perspective that studies MENA only in comparison to Europe. We will also emphasize the recent developments in MENA economic history based on novel data sources, including MENA local archives, papyrology, medieval chronicles, literary sources, and archeology. In terms of methods, the course will draw upon both qualitative and quantitative approaches to history, employing economic theory, econometric methods, novel data sources, and solid historical evidence.

Due to its interdisciplinary nature, this course should be of interest to students in economic history, economics, international history, political science, and international development.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the MT and 1 presentation in the LT.

Latin America and the International Economy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alejandra Irigoin, SAR.6.15

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the development trajectory of Latin America and its relation with the international economy from the Early Modern period (c. 1700) to the present. It focuses on the political and economic factors that drove - and that resulted from- the region's engagement with the world attending to the environment, population and factor endowments, institutions and policies. The causes and outcomes of this 'engagement' will be explored in the following broad themes: the determinants of Latin American growth performance, the political economic legacy of European rule and of the formation of modern states and markets; the ambivalent relation with international markets and institutions, the continuous quest for development together with political and macroeconomic instability; the economic aspects of different political experiments and political culture - from authoritarian to democratic regimes and various generations of populism interspersed with military rule and direct democracy- and the short and long run impact on equality, poverty and the prospect for sustained intensive growth.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This year, while we are planning for teaching to be delivered in-person, it is possible that some or all may have to be delivered virtually.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write a short weekly report, to be presented verbally, either individually or in a team throughout the course.

Theories and Evidence in Economic History

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Patrick Wallis SAR 5.11

Prof Eric Schneider SAR 5.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course teaches students how to conduct, evaluate and interpret research in economic history. Taking a practical, applied approach, students will design and conduct three research projects drawing heavily upon the archival material available in the LSE Archives and Library. The course also introduces students to critical interpretation and analysis of primary sources and research methodologies, and the nature of historical knowledge. By the end of the course, students will have a good understanding of research design, historical sources and methods, which will leave them well-prepared for their dissertation in their final year. In addition, they will have a non-technical understanding of more complex quantitative methods such as regression so that they can engage critically with current scholarship in economic history.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes, workshops and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two formative essays and complete other shorter formative coursework for the course.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course explores the origins of modern economic growth through major themes such as life, love, death, place and inheritance. The focus is on the world's first breakthrough in Britain during the Industrial Revolution. Students will be exposed to frontier debates in economic history. Widespread use is made of intuitive econometrics, interdisciplinary insights and historical context.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: During the course students are expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Business and Economic Performance since 1945: Britain in International Context

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gerben Bakker SAR 6.04

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Management and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the successes and failures of British business and industry, with an emphasis on the post-World War II period. It assesses many of the hypotheses on why the UK economy grew more slowly than other OECD nations during this period. Explanations of relative economic decline are examined in the context of comparisons with other European nations and with the US, Japan and more recently China. The course is organised to combine major economic and political themes, such as de-industrialisation, globalisation, education and training, management organisation and practices, labour relations, and Britain's relationship with the EEC/EU, with case studies of industries as diverse as textiles, motors, banking, pharmaceuticals, and steel. By interacting themes and case studies, students get a sense of how national policies can affect business opportunities, and how governments can both aid and harm business. The impact of government policies such as nationalisation/privatisation, regional policy and competition are also examined in this context. The primary focus is on the post-World War II period, including current changes in performance, but the historical roots of Britain's recent performance are also considered.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: During the course students are expected to write three essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

The Economic History of South Asia, 1600-2000

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tirthankar Roy SAR 6.16

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: South Asia is one of the fastest growing economies of the world. The region is also home to nearly one-third of the world's poorest people. How did this paradoxical mix between the creation of wealth and persistence of poverty come into being? Does economic history suggest an answer? The course introduces the stylized facts and major debates in the economic history of modern South Asia. It considers the legacies of empires and developmental states, globalizations of the past and the present times, and the role of indigenous institutions and resource endowments. The course begins with a discussion of empires and markets before European colonial rule began, with special reference to maritime trade and craft production, in which the European East India companies were interested in. For the colonial period, the major theme is the transformation engendered by colonialism and international economic integration. In the sixty years since the end of colonial rule, developmental states tried to overcome the obstacles to growth as the economists interpreted them. The course considers how successful they were in meeting the aim, and why they were limitedly successful.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Historical Economic Geography: Cities, Markets and Regions in the 19th and 20th Centuries

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Juan Roses Vendoiro SAR 5.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History and Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course explores how and why the location of economic activities changes across time and space from industrialization up to the present. One goal for this course is to demonstrate the importance of history in the formation of the present-day economic landscape. An equally important goal is to demonstrate the applicability of the study of economic geography to the understanding of historical patterns of development and underdevelopment. The course is not organized chronologically but thematically. Particular attention focuses on four major issues: the development of cities, the creation of national markets, the historical basis for manufacturing agglomeration, and the historical evolution and sources of regional inequality.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is delivered via 2-hour seminars in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

The course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write one formative essay, or similar piece of work, and make one formative presentation that will not be used in the final assessment.

Knowledge, Technology and Economy from the Middle Ages to Modernity

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Max-Stephan Schulze SAR 6.14

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: How has technology changed the way we live? How have humans managed to raise levels of productivity under a range of different circumstances and in an array of environmental conditions? This course addresses these questions through an exploration of the production and diffusion of knowledge and how this has affected technical change and economic growth in the very long run, from the Middle Ages to modernity.

The course will explore, both theoretically and empirically, how economists and historians have accounted for technical change. Social scientists have for decades tried to parse the respective contributions of capital, technology and labour to economic development. To what extent do the differing roles ascribed to technical change account for divergent interpretations of the key factors in long-run economic development and productivity growth? How can we explain shifts in the locus of technological leadership and dynamism over time?

These themes will be expanded upon throughout the course with case studies drawn from across place and time. We will look closely at paradigm-changing innovations and their economic effects from, for example, the introduction of the heavy plough, the clock and the printing press in the Middle Ages to more recent technologies like steam, railways, telegraphs, electricity and shifts in production technology towards automation.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of seminars and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

The course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Students are also expected to give one presentation to class.

Economic History Lab: Cities, Economy and Society, 1550-1750

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Patrick Wallis SAR 5.11

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines the economic and social history of European cities and towns between 1550 and 1750, with a specific research focus on the history of London. During these two centuries, cities in north west Europe grew rapidly. London in particular experienced explosive growth, transforming from a minor industrial and commercial centre to the hub of a global trading network and the primary port of a global empire.

In this course, we explore the ways in which urban development contributed to wider changes in economy and society and how cities and towns were themselves transformed in the process. The taught section of the course covers a set of key issues in the economic and social history of cities and towns in the period, including the connection between cities and economic development; urban hierarchies and networks; the organisation of urban economies; cities and trade; urban-rural relations; urban institutions and economic development; towns and the state; social structure and social mobility; and standards of living. In the research section of the course students will participate in a research lab engaging in primary historical research into the economic and social history of London. The focus of the lab will be defined each year to engage students on work on one or more significant topics in current academic research. Students will work collectively with the course teacher to identify research questions, design research strategies, collect primary evidence, analyse this and write up their results. The findings of the lab's collective research will be disseminated through working papers, publications and a data depository.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures, 5 hours of classes, 10 hours of workshops and 5 hours of workshops in the MT. 5 hours of lectures, 5 hours of classes, 10 hours of workshops and 5 hours of workshops in the LT.

This course will be capped at 15 students.

The course begins in MT with 5 weeks devoted to lectures (1 hour) and classes (1 hour) to introduce core issues in the economic and social history of early modern cities. At the end of this cluster of teaching students will prepare a literature review essay on one of the themes, comparing London and one other European town or city.

During these weeks, students will be given additional instruction on how to read early modern handwriting, through an additional workshop in week 2 and online self-study.

We start the lab section in the second half of Michaelmas Term. The subject of the first lab period will be broadly defined by the course convenor, with students helping to define the exact focus of the sub-projects they will work on. During the lab, students will have one two-hour seminar each week. In addition, in week 8, we will have at least one additional archival research sessions of five hours held at the relevant site.

The Lent Term mirrors the first, except that we begin with the second research project in the first half of the term, in order to avoid a clash between the research paper and dissertations. The final sessions of the term will focus on developing comparative perspectives on the topic.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write one formative essay in MT and participate in two group presentations (MT and LT) to receive feedback on their projects and analysis before they write up their results.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (25%, 2500 words) and project (45%, 3000 words) in the LT.

Project (30%, 3000 words) in the MT.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course applies the theoretical toolkit of political economy to important questions in medieval and early modern economic history. The first term examines core issues of European history such as the character of feudalism (were feudal principalities states or was feudalism a type of market? what was the link between feudal rule and the structure of society?), state formation (how and why did political organisations invested with monopolies of force emerge?), interstate rivalries (war vs. competition for mobile factors of production - did competition between states contribute to growth?) and constitutional change (Absolutism vs. parliamentarism: How limited was Absolutist rule, and for which reasons? Which factors determined the power of parliaments?).

In the Lent term, we turn to core issues of economic policies: the expulsion of minorities (Why did rulers expel for example Jews and Huguenots?), trade and industrial policies (Mercantilism: Was this a result of interstate rivalries or of state formation?), monetary policies (what motivated debasements? why did premodern countries form currency unions?) and financial and fiscal policies (rent seeking, tax farming vs. bureaucratic taxation). Throughout, the focus is on the consequences these issues had for economic performance and growth.

The course strongly emphasises working with primary sources.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is taught as a seminar, with classes totalling 40 hours across the Michaelmas and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: One 500-words outline of an existing historical podcast. This is due shortly after the reading week of the MT.

One 1000-words outline of the historical podcast students will produce as part of their summative assessment. This is due early in the LT.

One 1000-words outline of the 4000-words summative essay. This is due later in the LT.

Atlantic World Slavery

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anne Ruderman

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This course will explore the way the transatlantic slave trade and subsequent systems of slavery in the Americas have shaped our modern world. In doing so, it will offer a broad look at questions of slavery, resistance, and abolition from the late seventeenth through the nineteenth centuries. Thoroughly international in focus, this course will look at slavery in Africa, Europe and the Americas, considering the formation of transatlantic slavery, similarities and differences in Caribbean and North American slaveries and potential explanations for slavery's demise. We will consider the workings of the slave trade, the plantation complex, crops such as sugar, slavery outside of plantation economies, the intersection of slavery and science, gender, rebellion, revolt, abolition and war. In 2022-23, this course will be organized around four main themes: 1) The transatlantic slave trade 2) Resistance and Abolition 3) Gender and Family and 4) Race and Legacies. The subject of Atlantic world slavery has prompted a wide range of creative approaches from historians, and we will examine the different types of sources that historians of slavery have used to try to understand the past. In doing so we will juxtapose economic history with other historical methods, and consider some of the economic, social, cultural and legal aspects of slavery, from the commercial organization of the transatlantic slave trade to the multiple forms of slave resistance. Additionally, this course will introduce students to the rapidly expanding world of digital history, by incorporating digital projects related to slavery into weekly readings.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: The podcast project will include several formative assessments, due throughout the Lent term. These formative assessments are: A review and outline of an existing historical podcast, a topic and outline for the students' podcast and audio reading responses for discussion section.

Disease, Health and History

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eric Schneider SAR 5.18

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Infectious disease has profoundly affected health, well-being and society in the past. Although we are currently primed to think first of mass pandemics such as the Black Death, the influence of disease is often more subtle, sapping a person's energy and well-being without causing death. However, humans have not simply been the pawns of various diseases over time. We have actively contributed to the spread of disease, for instance by transporting yellow fever to the New World, and we have sought to control the disease environment to make it more healthy for humans. This course explores the inter-relationship between infectious disease and humans' efforts to control it over the past five hundred years.

The course focuses on four questions:

1. How has infectious disease shaped population health, society and the economy over time?
2. What factors influenced infectious disease prevalence in the past?
3. How have social factors affected inequality in disease prevalence and health?
4. How have humans sought to exert control over infectious disease and how successful were these efforts?

The course is split into four units. The first unit provides a window into infectious disease in the premodern world by studying the Colombian Exchange, the exchange of pathogens following the integration of the New World into the global economy at the end of the fifteenth century. We will discuss the factors that made it possible for Old World pathogens such as smallpox and yellow fever to cross the Atlantic and also the factors that made these pathogens particularly virulent for populations in the New World. The second unit focuses on the epidemiologic transition, the vast improvements in health since the mid nineteenth century largely driven by the control of infectious disease. We will explore how societies were able to control infectious disease in ways that were impossible before, i.e. to what extent did improving nutrition, public health measures, medical interventions, individual behaviours and household decisions affect the reduction in infectious disease mortality? We will also discuss whether the improvements have been shared equally across all dimensions of health, focusing on changes in fetal health and morbidity.

The third unit explores inequalities in population health including inequalities due to class, race and gender. We will explore how these social factors influenced different groups' susceptibility to disease and the drivers that increased or reduced health inequalities in the long run.

The fourth unit focuses specifically on national and global efforts to eradicate specific infectious diseases throughout history. We will discuss why the smallpox eradication campaign was successful but the malaria eradication campaign of the postwar period was not. We will also consider whether eradicating these diseases had an influence on economic growth. Finally, we will evaluate what lessons historical disease eradication campaigns have for efforts to eradicate other diseases in the world today.

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

This course is taught as a seminar, with classes totalling 40 hours across the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. The two-hour seminar in ST will be a revision seminar.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST and 2 essays and 3 presentations in the MT and LT.

Students will write two formative essays during Michaelmas and Lent Terms. Students will also be responsible for group presentations throughout the course. The final formative assessment will be a mock take-home exam due at the beginning of Summer Term.

Innovation and its Finance in the 19th and 20th Centuries

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gerben Bakker SAR 5.09

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students taking the course as an outside option must have completed at least one other economic history course.

Course content: The course explores the relationship between innovation and the financing of it in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, the impact on economic growth and how policy makers managed (or failed) to encourage innovation investment and technology adoption.

Technological change and organizational innovation are critical determinants of the pace of economic growth. This course looks at the specific ways in which innovation transformed industries around the world in the modern era. The course has a global reach though it will concentrate on countries in Northern Europe and the United States. Particular attention focuses on links between innovation and finance: finance is a fundamental input for almost every type of productive activity. The course will explore issues such as; the relationship between market size and structure and technological progress; how firms developed the capabilities to profit from new technologies; and how policy makers attempted to nurture institutions to stimulate investment and technology adoption. The course will therefore cover themes such as the process of invention, innovation typologies, the history of R&D management, anti-trust policy, corporate governance, organisational change, incentives, intellectual property rights and the regulation of technology and its finance more broadly.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a series of seminars totalling 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of both terms.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write three essays or equivalent pieces of written work

The Politics and Policies of 'Brexit': The UK's changing relationship with the European Union

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kevin Featherstone CBG.5.04 and Prof Antony Travers CBG.5.28

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines the United Kingdom's departure from the European Union as an agenda of ongoing significance for both the UK and the EU27. With many on-going issues under review, it is an important focus for the UK and a continuing agenda for the EU. To reflect the complexity of BREXIT, the course examines its politics and its policy implications as an episode and in the longer term.

The course begins with consideration of how BREXIT occurred: the history of a troubled relationship; the issue of EU membership in domestic party and electoral politics; and the course of the BREXIT negotiations themselves. BREXIT requires much adjustment in terms of governance and policies. The course examines these across a set of major policy agendas and discusses the implications for both the UK and for the EU27. With unresolved issues even after the UK's final departure from transitional arrangements, the discussion highlights the continuing significance of the BREXIT agenda for London and Brussels. Note: the lectures are to be shared with MSc students. The seminar questions for the UG students differ from those for MSc students, taking account of the different stages of study and the intended learning outcomes.

Teaching: This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus lectures and classes in the Michaelmas term. This course will hold a Reading Week in Michaelmas Term Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The formative essay (1500 words), due by mid-term, will address a question relevant to the impact of BREXIT on the UK political system, drawing upon the readings and seminar discussion.

Financial Systems and Crises

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Dimitrios Vayanos

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course FM200 Financial Systems and Crises covers financial markets and institutions, and their interaction with the real economy. The course emphasizes particularly banks and credit markets, and their role in generating economic growth as well as financial crises. Basic economic theories and models developed to understand these phenomena are covered, and the theoretical analysis is complemented with a historical perspective. The first part of the course, taught over weeks 1-6 of Michaelmas Term, presents theories of debt and banks; reviews key historical developments pertaining to banks and financial crises until the middle of the 20th century; and presents theories of credit booms and busts in the macroeconomy.

The second part of the course, taught over weeks 7-10 of Michaelmas Term, reviews key historical developments pertaining to banks and financial crises from the middle of the 20th century until now; reviews how money markets work and how central banks conduct monetary policy; presents the theory and practice of bank regulation; and reviews the international monetary system.

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are “sessions” only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a number of problem sets in the MT.

Indicative reading: 1. Kindleberger, Charles, 2015, Manias, Panics and Crashes: A History of Financial Crises, 7th edition, Palgrave Macmillan.

2. Gorton, Gary, 2012, Misunderstanding Financial Crises: Why We Don’t See Them Coming, Oxford University Press.

3. Tirole, Jean, 2006, The Theory of Corporate Finance, Princeton University Press.

Principles of Finance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Clark

Dr Jojo Paul

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in International Social and Public Policy and Economics, BSc in Management and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students. This course cannot be combined with FM213.

Permission forms from the General Course admin office should be submitted to the Department of Finance by email at finance@lse.ac.uk with a copy of the transcript attached.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed: one level 1 Economics course, one level 1 Mathematics course and one level 1 Statistics course.

Course content: The course examines the theory of financial decision-making by firms and examines the behaviour of the capital markets in which these decisions are taken. The topics covered are the theory of capital budgeting under certainty in perfect and imperfect capital markets, portfolio theory, equity and bond markets, the capital asset pricing model, efficient markets, derivative pricing, sources of funds, basic theory of capital structure and the cost of capital, company dividend decisions and financial markets and institutions.

This course covers the same topics as FM213. Thus, both FM213 and FM212 are equivalent content-wise. However, compared to FM213, this course puts less emphasis on the underlying statistical theory and relies less on the use of mathematical methods. Nonetheless, the course is quantitative in nature, and familiarity with mathematical and statistical methods taught in first-year courses will be assumed.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will also be workshops in both MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussion.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include:

- Principles of Corporate Finance by Richard Brealey, Stewart Myers, and Franklin Allen, McGraw-Hill Inc.
- Corporate Finance by Jonathan Berk and Peter Demarzo, Pearson Global Edition.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Principles of Finance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cameron Peng and Dr Kim Fe Cramer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance and BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Data Science, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Students on the BSc in Management can only take this course if they have met the following programme-specific prerequisites: a 1st in MA107 and/or ST107 and email permission from their Senior Undergraduate Tutor.

This course cannot be combined with FM212. Students on the BSc in Accounting and Finance can only take this course if they have met the general course prerequisites as below.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed: one level 1 Microeconomics course (EC1A3 or EC1A5), MA100 and ST102. Alternatively, students can access the course by completing MA107, EC1A1, ST109 and EC1C1.

Course content: The course examines the theory of financial decision-making by firms and examines the behaviour of the capital markets in which these decisions are taken. The topics covered are the theory of capital budgeting under certainty in perfect and imperfect capital markets, portfolio theory, equity and bond markets, the capital asset pricing model, efficient markets, derivative pricing, sources of funds, basic theory of capital structure and the cost of capital, company dividend decisions and financial markets and institutions.

This course covers the same topics as FM212. Thus, both FM213 and FM212 are equivalent content-wise. However, compared to FM212, this course puts more emphasis on the underlying statistical theory and relies more on the use of mathematical methods.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussion.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Principles of Corporate Finance by Richard Brealey, Stewart Myers, and Franklin Allen, McGraw-Hill Inc.

FM300

Corporate Finance, Investments and Financial Markets

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Georgy Chabakauri and TBC

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Principles of Finance (FM212) or Principles of Finance (FM213)

Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and will be a broad-based follow-up to FM212/FM213 Principles of Finance. The goal is to broaden, and selectively deepen, students' understanding of finance, building on their existing knowledge of financial economics. The course will cover a broad range of topics, with both a theoretical and an empirical emphasis. These include topics in corporate finance, investments and performance evaluation and international finance. The course consists of two interchangeable ten-week components, one on investments and international finance, and the other on corporate finance.

The first component provides students with a way of thinking about investment decisions by examining the empirical behaviour of security prices. We first study the empirical evidence of the CAPM and other asset pricing models, and then analyse different tests of market efficiency focusing on event studies and investment anomalies. We also study the main empirical findings in behavioural finance. We then learn how to measure the performance of a portfolio manager and to attribute it to different types of skill. Finally, this section of the course introduces the foundations of international finance and explores issues related to international portfolio management.

The second component of the course examines theory and evidence concerning major corporate financial policy decisions. It builds on FM212/FM213 (Principles of Finance) and emphasises practical implementation, with some of the same topics covered in more depth, and some additional topics not covered before. This is achieved with a combination of lectures, problem sets, and case studies such that students can apply the concepts using real-life situations.

The goal of corporations is to take on the best possible projects (e.g. a plant expansion) and finance them in the best way possible (e.g. through profits, debt, or equity). The time and uncertainty of investment payoffs make these problems nontrivial and essential for long-term success. The course will focus on answering the following questions:

- Valuation: How can we value and choose projects? What is the value of a company? What should be the expected return for a project, division, and the whole firm?
- Capital Structure: How should corporations obtain financing? For what projects?

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Bodie, Kane & Marcus, Investments (Irwin) and Grinblatt & Titman, Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy (Irwin, McGraw-Hill).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

FM301 Half Unit

Market Anomalies and Asset Management

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cameron Peng

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed FM213 Principles of Finance.

Course content: This course will examine the extent to which financial markets are informationally efficient. Topics include notions of market efficiency, return predictability in bond, stock, and derivatives markets, limits to arbitrage and other theories of return predictability. It will also cover both behavioural and frictional theories of return predictability and other asset-pricing phenomena.

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Weekly homework assignments

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Shleifer, Inefficient Markets: An Introduction to Behavioral Finance (Oxford University Press).

Assessment: Continuous assessment (100%) in the MT.

FM302 Half Unit

Theories of Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Oehmke

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed FM213 Principles of Finance.

Course content: This course introduces concepts and theories to critically assess major corporate financial policy decisions. The course focuses in particular on a firm's capital structure and the impact of taxes, bankruptcy costs, agency conflicts, and asymmetric information on a firm's financing decisions. We will also discuss other major topics in corporate finance, such as the market for corporate control. In developing tools to analyze these issues, we will introduce the key concepts of corporate finance theory, including debt overhang, risk shifting, and the free-rider problem.

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 problem sets in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: "Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy" by Hillier, Grinblatt and Titman. "Corporate Finance" by Ivo Welch, and "The Theory of Corporate Finance" by Tirole.

Assessment: Continuous assessment (100%) in the LT.

FM304 Half Unit

Applied Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ashwini Agrawal

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed FM213 Principles of Finance

Course content: This course will focus on the applications of key concepts in corporate finance and implicitly extend the topics covered in "Principles of Corporate Finance". There will be three main topics covered in the course. The first topic is corporate investment. We will consider various methods used by firms to evaluate investment opportunities. The second topic is financing decisions. We will cover how firms finance their operations using debt and equity. The third topic is valuation. We will learn methods used to value companies and specific transactions such as mergers, acquisitions, and leveraged buyouts. Each topic will be addressed using both theoretical material provided by the professor and weekly case studies with questions and solutions.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Formative coursework: Weekly homework assignments.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be distributed that includes case studies as well as additional readings such as textbook chapters, and practitioner articles.

Assessment: Continuous assessment (100%) in the LT.

FM305 Half Unit

Advanced Financial Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Georgy Chabakauri and Prof Dimitri Vayanos

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed FM213 Principles of Finance.

Course content: This course will present modern theories of financial markets and asset valuation. The first part of the course will cover the principle of no arbitrage, state prices and the stochastic discount factor, utility functions and portfolio choice, and equilibrium pricing and risk-neutral pricing. The second part of the course will build on this material and develop additional tools to explore the effects of frictions in financial markets, such as asymmetric information, costs of search and market participation, leverage constraints and delegated portfolio management.

Teaching: 33 hours of seminars in the MT.

This course is taught in the interactive lecturing format. There is no distinction between lectures and classes/seminars; there are "sessions" only, and the pedagogical approach in each session is interactive.

Indicative reading: Teaching notes will be provided.

Assessment: Continuous assessment (100%) in the MT.

FM321 Half Unit

Risk Management and Modelling

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Linyan Zhu

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance and BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212 or FM213) and Statistical Methods (Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) or Econometrics II (EC2C1) or (Econometrics I (EC2C3) or Statistical Models and Data Analysis (ST201))). Mathematical Methods (MA100) is desirable but not required.

Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and builds upon FM212/FM213 Principles of Finance. The main topics covered are financial risk analysis and financial risk. The course provides students with a thorough understanding of market risk from both a practical and technical point of view. A representative list of topics covered includes:

- empirical properties of market prices (fat tails, volatility clusters) and forecasting of conditional volatility
- concepts of financial risk (volatility, Value-at-Risk)
- univariate and multivariate volatility models (ARCH, GARCH)
- implementation and evaluation of risk forecasts
- endogenous risk

Students apply the models to real financial data using Matlab/Python/R, a programming environment widely used in industry and academia. No prior knowledge of programming is assumed: students will learn-by-doing in class. Students will at times use data and software for classwork assignments.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussion

Indicative reading: J Danielsson, Financial Risk Forecasting: The Theory and Practice of Forecasting Market Risk will be the required textbook for the course. Additional readings may be assigned as needed.

Assessment: Coursework (100%) in the MT.

FM322 Half Unit

Derivatives

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rohit Rahi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Finance and BSc in Financial Mathematics and Statistics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics, Statistics and Business and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212 or FM213). Mathematical Methods (MA100) is desirable but not required.

Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and builds upon FM212/FM213 Principles of Finance. This course focuses on derivatives, with a particular emphasis on equity derivatives (standard call and put options, exotic options), futures and forward contracts, and interest rate derivatives (swaps, caps and floors, swaptions). It systematically addresses three basic questions: how do these products work, i.e. what are their payoffs? How can they be used, for hedging purposes or as part of trading strategies? And above all: how are they priced? The course emphasises a small number of powerful ideas: absence of arbitrage, replication, and risk-neutral pricing. These are typically introduced in the context of discrete-time models, but the course also covers some well-known continuous-time models, starting with a comprehensive treatment of the Black-Scholes model. The level of mathematics is appropriate for third-year students with a solid quantitative background.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussion.

Indicative reading: There is no required textbook, but the following is an excellent reference: J Hull, "Options, Futures, and Other Derivatives"

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the LT.

GV100

Introduction to Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Kelly

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: An introduction to political theory through the thought and texts of some of the most important political theorists. A study of the ideas of some of the major political theorists from the ancient Greeks to the 20th Century. Topics will include theories of human nature, the origin of government and law, man's relation to society and the state, the basis of political obligation, the idea of social contract, the idea of social progress, the critique of capitalism, and questions about race and gender. The thinkers discussed this year will include Plato, Aristotle, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Kant, The Federalist, J S Mill, Marx, Nietzsche, Arendt, Fanon.

Teaching: This course provides a combination of classes and lectures totalling no less than 29 hours in the Michaelmas term, and no less than 30 hours in the Lent term. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of both Michaelmas and Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: D. Boucher and P. Kelly, Political Thinkers: From Socrates to the Present (Oxford 2017); Plato, Republic; Aristotle, Politics; Machiavelli, The Prince; Hobbes, Leviathan; Locke, 2nd Treatise of Government; Rousseau, Discourse on the Origins of Inequality and The Social Contract; Kant, Perpetual Peace; The Federalist Papers; J S Mill, Utilitarianism, The Subjection of Women, and On Liberty; Marx, Selected Writings (Ed D McLellan); Nietzsche, The Genealogy of Morality; Arendt, The Origins of Totalitarianism; Fanon, Black Skins, White Masks.

Assessment: Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the MT.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) and essay (34%, 2000 words) in the LT.

The summative assessment will be 3 essays for whole course.

Effectively this means 1 summative assessment in MT and 2 for LT. However, in the event of the first, formative MT essay being 'best', students will be allowed to count that as one of their summative essays (so the best 3 out of 4 essays will form the summative assessment for this course).

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 80% class participation and 20% attendance.

GV101

Introduction to Political Science

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ryan Jablonski and Dr Melissa Sands

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Social and Public Policy, BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course is an introduction to politics in a globalised world, with a focus on how political science tries to understand and explain cross-country and cross-time differences. The course will begin by introducing students to some of the main empirical variations in political behaviour, political institutions, and outcomes across the world, focusing mainly on democratic and partially democratic countries (in both the developed and developing world), and introducing students to some of the basic theoretical ideas and research methods in political science. Each subsequent week will be devoted to a substantive topic, where a more detailed analysis of political behaviour, political institutions, or political outcomes will be presented and various theoretical explanations will be assessed. Most weeks will involve an interactive element.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. There will be reading week in Week 6 of both the MT and LT terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to undertake one problem set and a formative essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: W Clark, M Golder and S Nadenichek Golder, Foundations of Comparative Politics, Sage, 2019.

A Lijphart, Patterns of Government: Government Forms and Performance in Thirty-Six Countries, 2nd ed., Yale University Press, 2012.

G. Tsebelis, Veto Players: How Political Institutions Work, Princeton University Press, 2002.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) in the LT. Online assessment (50%) in the ST.

Online assessment duration: 7 days in the ST.

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 75% class participation (including attendance and contribution), and 25% formative essay.

The Exam Grade for General Course students will be 50% essay and 50% online exam.

GV225

Public Choice and Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Torun Dewan

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students will normally be expected to have taken GV101 Introduction to the Study of Politics, or equivalent, in a previous year. An introductory knowledge of economics would be useful.

Course content: This course is concerned with positive political economy and public choice theory applied to the study of political conflicts, democratic institutions and public policy. The course covers the main tools for the study of public choice (rational decision-making theory, game theory, social choice theory) and a number of both theoretical and applied topics, including the empirical study of institutions. This course will cover the main topics in positive political economy and institutional public choice. These include: the aggregation of preferences; voting paradoxes and cycles; electoral competition and voting behaviour; the problems of and solutions to collective action; welfare state and redistribution; the impact of information and mass media on voting behaviour and public policy; the theory of coalitions, the behaviour of committees and legislatures including agenda-setting and veto-player power; principal-agent problems in politics; models of bureaucracy.

Teaching: This course provides a combination of classes and lectures totalling 24 hours in the Michaelmas Term, 25 hours in the Lent Term and 2.5 hours in the Summer Term.

There will be reading week in Week 6 of both the MT and the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete at least one formative essay and at least one timed essay in each term to allow practise on problem sets and essay writing under exam conditions.

Indicative reading: P Dunleavy, Democracy, Bureaucracy and Public Choice; D Mueller, Public Choice III; K A Shepsle & M S Bonchek, Analyzing Politics; George Tsebelis, Veto Players. Major Works; A Downs, An Economic Theory of Democracy; M Olson, The Logic of Collective Action; W Niskanen, Bureaucracy and Representative Government.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Online assessment (50%) in the ST.

Online assessment duration: 7 days in the ST.

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 25% formative essay (best mark), 25% timed essay (best mark), 50% class participation (including presentations and attendance).

GV245 Not available in 2022/23

Democracy and Democratisation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr William Kissane CBG 3.39

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: The course is concerned with theories of democratisation and case studies of democratic transformations during the so-called "third wave" of democratisation from the 1970s to the present. It analyses processes of transition and consolidation of democracy and of democratic reversal in the context of globalisation. The first five weeks study the concept of democracy, theories of transition to democracy, democratic consolidation and hybrid regimes and the crisis of liberal democracy. The remainder of the course uses the conceptual tools of the first five weeks to study the condition of democracy in different regions of the world, including Eastern and Southern Europe, Latin America, South East Asia, Africa, India, the Middle East and Russia.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 51 and a half hours across the Michaelmas, Lent and Summer Terms. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus lectures and classes. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of both the MT and LT terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: The most useful introductory readings are: J. Grugel and M. L. Bishop (2016) Democratization: A Critical Introduction; L. Whitehead (2002) Democratization and the articles in Journal of Democracy, January 2015.

Other useful texts are: S. Levitsky and D. Ziblatt (2018) How Democracies Die; Y. Mounk (2018) The People Vs Democracy; A Przeworski, Democracy and the Market (1991); D. A. Rostow (1970) Transitions to Democracy: Towards a Dynamic Model; T. Carothers (2002) The End of the Transition Paradigm?; Donatella Della Porta (2013) Can Democracy be Saved?

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (40%, 2500 words) in the LT.

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 70% formative coursework, 20% class presentation, 10% class participation (including attendance and contribution).

GV248

Power and Politics in the Modern World: Comparative Perspectives

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Woodruff

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Other background in political science will be considered as a substitute for GV101 for students outside of Government.

Course content: This course will acquaint students with the contemporary study of comparative politics, focusing on theories susceptible to testing with narrative historical evidence. Students will learn to address the methodological challenges of developing and testing such theories. The course will treat a wide variety of themes, including the political impact of natural resources in developing countries, social movements and revolution, political and bureaucratic corruption, the political economy of distribution, and political ideologies. With respect to each theme, students will receive a grounding in theories of the topic and samples of application to empirical cases drawn from throughout the developed, developing, and post-Communist world.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across the Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. Classes are expected to run from Weeks 2-5 and 7-11 in MT and Weeks 1-5 and 7-11 in LT. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of both terms.

The Week 11 lecture in LT will be a revision lecture and there will be one revision class per group in Week 1 of ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

The highest-marked formative essay will count for assessment; see below.

Indicative reading: Skocpol, Theda. States and Social Revolutions. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1979

Assessment: Essay (40%, 1500 words) in the MT and LT.

Online assessment (60%) in the ST.

Students' summative essay mark will be the highest mark of those given for the three formative essays. Students who attempt all three (3 out of 3) will receive the highest mark achieved. Students who attempt two essays (2 out of 3) will receive the highest mark out of the two essays attempted. However, students who submit fewer than two essays (1 out of 3 or 0 out of 3) will be awarded a Zero Incomplete for the whole course and cannot be awarded the degree until they submit the work at resit (either the second of two essays if only 1 out of 3 was completed, or two essays if 0 out of 3 were completed). In such circumstances the student's resit course mark will be capped at the pass rate of 40%.

Online assessment duration: 7 days in the ST.

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be based on the average of the three formative essays (75%) and attendance (25%).

Research Design in Political Science

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Florian Foos

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course will introduce students to the design, conduct and analysis of research in empirical Political Science spanning different subfields. The first term covers the formulation of research questions, and the development of theory and empirically testable hypotheses. From there, we will discuss different types of data, measurement, the distinction between description and inference, as well as correlation and causation, and basic quantitative and qualitative data collection and analysis strategies. Moreover, students will learn about research ethics, and some of the major methodological challenges that we face as a discipline including p-hacking, the file-drawer problem, issues of statistical power, as well as potential solutions such as pre-registration and results-blind review. The second term introduces students to specific research designs including ethnographic research, comparative case studies, as well as experimental and quasi-experimental designs. Throughout the year, there is an emphasis on the importance of good research design, and a solid understanding of the assumptions underlying the design that have implications for data analysis. The ultimate goal of the course is to equip students with the knowledge and skills to conduct their own research projects such as their BA thesis, and to allow them to evaluate published and unpublished work, as well as scientific and journalistic claims, based on the quality of the underlying research design.

In MT, the course includes an introduction to the statistical programming language R, where students will learn practical skills of basic data management and analysis.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 51 and a half hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. Some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus lectures and classes. There will be a Week 6 reading week in both the MT and LT terms.

Formative coursework: Students will complete three formative problem sets throughout the course, two in MT and one in LT, that allow them to apply material from the course to concrete political science examples (e.g., identifying design elements of a published research paper; proposing strategies for answering a given research question, etc.). Some of these problem sets will involve applied problems in R.

Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (30%, 2000 words) in the MT.

Coursework (30%, 2000 words) in the LT.

The coursework in the Michaelmas Term will consist of a Summative Problem Set, and the coursework in the Lent Term will consist of a Research Design Proposal.

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 25% Problem Set 1, 25% Problem Set 2, 25% Problem Set 3, and 25% Problem Set 4.

Politics and Policy of Data Science

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Berliner

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: How do information technology, social media, and big data shape politics and public policy? How are they, in turn, shaped by politics and public policy? How are data science tools used in politics and public policy themselves? This course offers students a critical understanding of these key intersections between data science and politics.

Major topics include debates over how social media shapes politics, the global confrontations over rules governing data, how data are used in administrative and policymaking processes, the dangers of algorithmic bias in public services, and how politics shapes government innovation and openness. The course will devote particular attention to how big data and algorithms risk exacerbating social and political inequities. The course will also offer a conceptual, non-technical overview of key data science tools and how they are applied by policymakers in settings such as decision-making, campaigns, public participation, anti-corruption, and international conflict and development. This course is global in scope, as topics will draw on examples and applications from around the world, including both global "north" and "south."

Outline of weekly topics:

1. Introduction to information technology and politics

2. Social media and politics
3. Domestic and international governance of data and privacy
4. Review of data science tools and their applications
5. Big data in public policy and administration
6. Algorithmic bias and algorithmic accountability
7. Open data and data sharing
8. Civic tech and democratic innovations
9. Data in world politics
10. The politics of government innovation

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

GV262

Contemporary Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Apostolidis

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Introduction to Political Theory or equivalent.

Course content: This course engages the study of contemporary political theory by examining 20th and 21st century texts while also considering concrete, practical political and social problems. Throughout the MT, we highlight theoretical analyses of questions that concern politics and economic life. Such questions include normative issues about how to define a just distribution of social goods and the relation between economic justice and freedom, as well as critical-theoretical questions about how to understand oppression and popular mobilisation in historical contexts defined by capitalist, colonial, racial and gender power. During the LT, we explore various theoretical problems regarding immigration, environmental politics and global justice in the wake of colonisation. GV262 challenges students to consider a wide range of approaches to writing political theory and diverse perspectives on the basic question of what 'political theory' is. The course offers an LT option to participate in a public-oriented group research activity in partnership with an external organisation.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 50 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. There will be reading weeks in MT Week 6 and LT Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit one formative essay and one formative blog in MT.

The course requires students to organize their workloads, to complete readings in advance of lectures, and to prepare to participate actively in seminars. The course thus emphasizes the development of verbal and written communication abilities. Students also should expect to tackle basic questions about what it means to write political theory by exploring tensions and affinities between normative/ethical and critical-theoretical approaches.

Indicative reading: John Rawls, "A Theory of Justice"; Robert Nozick, "Anarchy, State, and Utopia"; Jacques Rancière, "Disagreement"; Joseph Carens, "The Ethics of Immigration"; Michel Foucault, "Two Lectures"; Mohandas K. Gandhi, "Hind Swaraj"; James Baldwin, "The Fire Next Time"; Rosa Luxemburg, "The Mass Strike"; V. I. Lenin, "What Is To Be Done?"; C. L. R. James, "The Black Jacobins"; Susan Moller Okin, "Justice, Gender, and the Family"; Friedrich A. von Hayek, "The Constitution of Liberty"; Herbert Marcuse, "One-Dimensional Man"; Ingolfur Blühdorn, "Sustainability - Post-Sustainability - Unsustainability".

Assessment: Essay (35%, 1500 words) and blog post (15%) in the LT.

Online assessment (50%) in the ST.

The online assessment comprises a take-home exam where 4 hours maximum effort is expected within a 7-day period.

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 15% class participation, 50% assessed coursework, 30% formative coursework (15% per assignment), and 5% attendance.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: GV101 Introduction to Political Science (or equivalent).

Course content: A systematic examination of the policy process in the context of developed nations. This course introduces key theories and models in the study of public policy and encourages a critical appreciation of the main trends in contemporary public policy-making. The course looks at the different stages of the 'policy cycle' (e.g. agenda-setting, implementation and evaluation), the determinants of public policy (for example, public opinion, political parties, technology) as well as central themes in the study and practice of public policy, such as corruption and policy learning.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across the Michaelmas, Lent and Summer Terms. There will be reading weeks in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Christoph Knill and Jale Tosun, Public Policy, Macmillan, 2020; Hal Colebatch and Robert Hoppe, Handbook

Politics and Institutions in Europe

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vesselin Dimitrov

Prof Michael Bruter and Dr Eiko Thielemann

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: The course aims to give students an understanding of the full range of leading topics and areas of debate and research relevant to the analysis of political institutions and politics in Europe. The course focuses on both traditional fields of comparative enquiry, such as the study of party competition and voting behaviour, and emerging fields of interest, such as national and European identities, and immigration. The course places particular emphasis on the diverse experiences of liberal democracy in different parts of Europe. The course covers not only long-established democracies in Western Europe, but also the relatively new democracies in Central and Eastern Europe. In the Lent Term, the course will study in depth a number of European countries, such as Britain, France and Germany, analysing the main developments in the country concerned in the last twenty years (elections, parties, governments), and then examining issues of particular interest related to that country. Course topics include: electoral behaviour; ideology and issues; political parties and party competition; government formation and coalitions; regionalism and federalism; national and European identities; and immigration.

Teaching: This course provides a combination of lectures and classes totalling a minimum of 50 and a half hours across the Michaelmas, Lent and Summer Terms.

There will be reading weeks in Week 6 of the MT and Week 6 of the LT for private study and essay and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 2 essays in the LT.

Indicative reading: T Bale, European Politics: A Comparative Introduction (4th edn) (2017); M Gallagher et al, Representative Government in Modern Europe (5th edn) (2011); P Heywood et al (Eds), Developments in European Politics (2006); S Hix and B Hoyland, The Political System of the European Union (3rd edn) (2011); V Dimitrov, K H Goetz & H Wollmann, Governing after Communism: Institutions and Policymaking (2006); A Lijphart, Patterns of Democracy (2nd edn) (2012).

Assessment: Online assessment (100%) in the ST.

Online (take home) exam (100%), in the summer exam period.

Estimated amount of effort required: 3 hours in a one-week period.

GENERAL COURSE STUDENTS ONLY:

The Class Summary Grade for General Course students will be calculated as follows: 15% general contribution to class discussions, 15% presentation(s) and, if applicable, essay outline(s), 60% grading of formative coursework (15% for each of the 4 essays), 10% attendance.

GV267

Global Political Thought

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leigh Jenco

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Introduction to Political Theory or equivalent.

Course content: This course examines normative and conceptual theories of politics from a global, transhistorical perspective. We go beyond current theories of "decolonization" to consider how conversations about political life can be and have been transformed on the basis of distinctive concerns that emerge from specific times and places, marked by different levels of affluence, historical connections (or the lack thereof), textual or oral heritages, as well as the experience of imperialism. The course will bring these diverse sources into a meaningful discussion about the political questions that they pose, both on their own and in comparison with others. We consider how context should matter in the investigation of political ideas. We ask how, but also whether, we should integrate these disparate perspectives into a shared conversation.

The course cannot aspire to comprehensiveness, but it aims for a certain integrity of themes and builds up a methodological toolbox for critical engagement with a diverse range of sources. All readings will be in English.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Lectures of 90 minutes; seminars of 60 minutes based on intensive student participation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 problem sets in the LT.

One formative essay of 1500 words (MT) and one "problem set" (a comparison grid requiring comparison of multiple texts on up to three different questions, LT).

Indicative reading: Ibn Tufayl, Muhammad ibn Abd al-Malik, Ibn Tufayl's Hayy Ibn Yaqzan: A Philosophical Tale. Trans. Lenn Evan Goodman. Updated edition. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 2009.

GV302*Key Themes in the History of Political Thought

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Katrin Flikschuh

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students. This course is capped at one group.

Pre-requisites: Students will normally be expected to have taken GV100, 'Introduction to Political Theory', or equivalent in a previous year.

Course content: This advanced course treats some of the major themes in the history of western European political thought as drawn from the writings of selected political philosophers of the ancient Greek, Roman, Medieval, renaissance, early modern and modern periods. The aim is to analyse and interpret in some depth a selected sub-set of thinkers and topics in order to explore continuities and discontinuities in ethical and political problems and their solutions over time and changing contexts.

Examples of possible themes include: different views on the nature of "man" and the consequences for political agency of different perspectives on human reason, will, desire; debates on the origins of law and the purpose of legislation; changing conceptions of justice; different views on government and the state's relation to the individual; the sources of public authority and the nature of legitimate sovereignty; the historical and socio-political presuppositions behind the different constitutional regimes: democracy, monarchy, republic; the role of religion in politics; changing perspectives on the relationship between life in the family and a life of active citizenship; theories of natural law and natural rights; social contract theories; idealist political theory; utilitarianism; nationalism; liberal, conservative and socialist traditions of thought; anarchism and feminism.

The themes, thinkers and primary texts will be selected each year to reflect the current debates in contemporary scholarly literature on them and the research interests of the lecturer. This year, we will focus on debates over the relation between reason, morality, and political authority in the works of Aristotle, Hobbes, Kant, and JS Mill. More specifically, we shall consider how these different thinkers' underlying conceptions of practical reasoning informed their views on personhood and citizenship. Throughout, we shall consider these thinkers' abiding influence on contemporary views about the relation between reason, morality, and politics.

Teaching: This course provides a combination of seminars and lectures totalling a minimum of 42 hours across the Michaelmas, Lent and Summer terms. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the Michaelmas and Lent terms.

Formative coursework: There will be 2 formative assignments over the year, with an essay of up to 1,500 words due & returned in the MT, and a second essay of up to 1,500 words due towards the end of the LT.

Indicative reading: Primary Sources: Aristotle, The Nicomachean Ethics; Aristotle, The Politics; Hobbes, Leviathan; Kant, Groundwork of the Metaphysics of Morals; Kant, The Metaphysics of Morals; JS Mill, On Liberty; JS Mill, Utilitarianism.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the LT. Essay (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.

GV307 Half Unit*Conflict and Cooperation: A Few Provocative Debates

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Omar Shahabudin McDoom

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. This course is capped at two groups.

Course content: (Q1) When is it permissible to kill civilians for a political cause? (Q2) Should governments be permitted to restrict civil liberties in the name of security? (Q3) Is cultural diversity more problematic than desirable in societies? (Q4) Should we preserve and promote multiculturalism? (Q5) Do grievances or ideologies matter more in explaining radicalization and terrorism? (Q6) How convincing are the arguments in favour of open borders? (Q7) What role, if any, does inequality play in the onset of political violence? (Q8) How skeptical should we be of apocalyptic claims regarding climate refugees and violent conflict? (Q9) When is it justifiable to use drones to kill? (Q10) What are the arguments for and against an international responsibility to protect civilians in cases of gross human rights violations?

This course is organized around these ten "big" empirical and normative questions which touch on issues in the public sphere relating to political and ethnic conflict and cooperation. The selection of debates and cases may vary year-to-year as the scholarly frontier of understanding and the world's catalogue of conflicts also evolve. The course is taught as a research seminar comprising ten weekly two-hour sessions. Given its research-oriented focus, the course is attentive to methodology and students will be taught to critically evaluate the more common approaches to empirical research in the field. Students will have the opportunity to undertake a single substantial research project on a course-related topic resulting in an assessed summative essay.

Teaching: This course is delivered through 20 hours of seminars in the Michaelmas Term. This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

Students will submit a 1000 word annotated bibliography, in which they summarize between 3 and 6 scholarly writings (articles or books) that they have carefully chosen themselves after conducting a comprehensive literature search on a course topic and research question approved by the course instructor.

Indicative reading: A statement from Al Qaeda regarding the mandates of the heroes and the legality of the operations in New York and Washington - Al Qaeda, 2002

The Lesser Evil - Michael Ignatieff, 2004

The 'Responsibility to Protect' and the Structural Problems of Preventive Humanitarian Intervention - Roland Paris, 2014-10-20

Assessment: Essay (80%, 3000 words).

Class participation (20%) in the MT.

The annotated bibliography will inform the final 3000 word summative long essay on the student's chosen course topic.

GV309 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Politics of Money and Finance in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Cheryl Schonhardt-Bailey

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group.

Pre-requisites: A background in political economy would be advantageous.

Course content: The course focuses on the role of institutions, ideas and interests in the process and formulation of both (a) monetary policy, and (b) financial stability & regulation. We examine in particular the causal influences of institutions, ideas and interests in independent central banking, financial stability and financial regulation (including times of financial crisis), and the oversight and accountability of independent financial agencies, as well as relevant aspects of Brexit. Focusing predominantly on OECD countries, we draw on theories from economics and political science to analyse both decision making and policy outcomes, using both contemporary and historical perspectives. The course adopts a comparative country perspective, rather than an international relations perspective.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 20 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

The seminars will be a combination of 3 x 1hr and 7 x 2.5hr sessions, and there will be three lectures featuring guest speakers during the term. There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT for private study and assessment preparation.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: The full reading list for this course is currently available on Moodle for GV309. This new course will take the readings from the introductory weeks, along with all the weeks covering issues of money and finance.

BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students. This course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to contemporary British government, notably the institutions involved and processes of policy-making. The first part of the course will explain the evolution of British government from the earliest times, including the philosophical ideas that have come to underpin contemporary politics. The key institutions of British government will be described and analysed, focusing on factors that explain the functioning of a complex modern State. By the end of the course, students will have a practical understanding of the entire system of British government and the influences that affect it.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 51 and a half hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of both the MT and LT terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit 2 unassessed essays in both the Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Empirical Research in Government

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Edward Page

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group.

Course content: The course introduces a variety of techniques and issues in the empirical study of political science and applies them to a practical research project in which students participate throughout the year. No prior knowledge of statistics or research methods is required. The focus of the course will be the practical research project. At the theoretical level the course will cover questions relating to the utilization of policy research, forms of research design, sampling, questionnaire construction, coding and converting non-quantitative to quantitative indicators, response rates, elite interviewing and research ethics. As the practical research project progresses classes will cover the development of practical skills such as, principles of research report writing and, where appropriate for the project, use of text processing programmes, and basic routines in the widely-used Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS), such as those used for compiling crosstabulations.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of seminars and workshops totalling a minimum of 40 hours across the Michaelmas, Lent and Summer Terms. Some or all of this teaching may be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus sessions. There will be reading weeks in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Sandra Halperin and Oliver Heath, Political Research. Methods and Political Skills 2nd edn (2016); Sage Research Methods database (online accessible through LSE Library); Floyd J. Fowler Survey Research Methods, 5th edn (2013); Claus Moser and Graham Kalton, Survey Methods in Social Investigation, 2nd edn (1985); Melanie Mauthner et al (eds), Ethics in Qualitative Research (2002).

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the LT.

Research paper (25%) in the ST.

Each student completes a 2500 word essay (25%) in the Lent Term and writes up a 3300 word report on the research project (25%) in the Summer Term. The mark for the research project report includes a small peer review element. There will also be a 2 hour exam (50%) in the Summer exam period.

Voting and Elections in Developing Democracies

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ryan Jablonski

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students. The course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: Government students should have completed GV101 Introduction to Political Science or equivalent.

Course content: Most governments in the developing world have adopted electoral institutions, many in the last few decades. However, these institutions vary considerably in their ability to hold politicians accountable. Emergent democracies are frequently plagued by violence, fraud, corruption, weak accountability, and clientelism. This seminar is a discussion of the nature of electoral institutions in developing democracies, with a particular focus on the causes and consequences of these ills. Among other things, we will seek answers to the following questions: Why do governments adopt electoral institutions, but then fail to permit free and fair voting? When and why do governments use fraud and violence to win elections? What has been the impact of development aid, election monitoring and democracy assistance on elections and democratization? To answer these questions we will draw on an emerging political science literature on these issues, as well as several case studies. Students are expected to be active participants in this course, and will participate in several class debates and writing exercises.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 25 hours in the Lent Term. There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay of 1,000 words in the LT. Students are also expected to participate in a policy simulation, and must prepare one written policy statement in LT.

Advanced Issues in Applied Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kai Spiekermann

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

This course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: A foundational course in contemporary political theory (such as GV262 or equivalent) is recommended.

Course content: An investigation of contemporary questions in applied political theory. Taking as a starting point a pressing social and political challenge, the course instructs students to systematically apply different political theories to approach the problem, to understand and critically discuss different normative viewpoints, and to develop and defend their own position in these debates.

Examples of such themes include environmental and climate change, free speech, multiculturalism and toleration, poverty and global justice, colonialism, or surveillance and privacy. The topics are selected each year to reflect current debates and the interests of the course convener. The course gives students the opportunity to experience research-led teaching, as the course convener will typically create a syllabus to reflect their current research projects. In 2022-23, the focus on the course will be political-philosophical questions in the context of environmental change, especially climate change. The approach will be interdisciplinary and exploratory. While the focus is on normative-philosophical issues, we will also make use of positive-analytical and empirical literature. Some of the possible questions to be discussed are: How should we balance the interests of current and future generations? How does climate change affect our obligations towards the global poor? How do we make policy decisions if the effects are uncertain but potentially severe? Are we individually or collectively responsible for causing climate change, and what follows from this? How do we relate to the environment and what precisely is valuable about preserving it?

Teaching: This course provides a combination of classes and lectures totalling 25 hours in the Lent Term. There will be a reading week in LT Week 6.

Formative coursework: One short formative essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: John Broome (2012) Climate Matters: Ethics in a Warming World, New York (W.W. Norton);

GV318 Half Unit

Building Democracies from Conflict? Violence, Power-Sharing and Institutional Design

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Mitchell

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students. This course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: Students may find it helpful to have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: How can we design, build and sustain 'democracies' in less than ideal circumstances? We will explore societies torn apart by political violence and ethnic conflict. The main purpose is to diagnose the central problems, and examine what political responses are most appropriate. The first part of the course mostly looks at the problems, in particular political violence. We consider the likely futures for Iraq, Kurdistan and Islamic State. What are the justifications for political violence? How much political violence is there and what are the main types and trends? We shall examine the strategies terrorism and suicide terrorism. Since the end of the cold war, almost all wars are 'civil wars' and we will consider what causes civil wars, what sustains them (why do some last much longer than others?), and how do they end? The second part of the course shifts the focus of attention to 'solutions' and policy responses to divided societies and failing states. Informed responses might include: intervention, mediation and peace agreements; power-sharing and constitutional design; territorial management of conflict; transitional justice; elections, party systems and institutions for governing divided societies.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 35 hours in the Michaelmas Term. There will be a Reading Week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in the MT.

Formative - one short project proposal - which should be a research design plan for the project. Students will receive written and verbal feedback on the viability and quality of their proposal, but it will not be graded. It is feedback and advice, not part of summative assessment. The deadline will be week 7, just after reading week in week 6. Length 1000 words. Pedagogically, preparation of the research proposal combined with advice and feedback will help improve the quality of the final project.

A full reading list will be available on Moodle.

Assessment: Project (80%, 4000 words) in January. Presentation (20%) in the MT.

As a final year course, the aim is to have a 'research output' as the main method of assessment in the form of a mini-project. This will be similar to the shorter 'research notes' sections of many academic journals and should not exceed 4,000 words. Students will also each make one seminar presentation, on which they will receive feedback and a grade.

Experimental Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Florian Foos

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Familiarity with basic research design and statistics as covered by Research Design in Political Science (GV249) or an equivalent course (such as ST102, ST107, ST108, GY140, SA201) is recommended.

Course content: This course will introduce students to the design, conduct and analysis of randomized field experiments (RCTs) in politics to evaluate theories, programmes and policies. The course will cover the science and methods of experimentation (weeks 1-3), debate the practicalities of collaborating with political actors such as parties, NGOs and governments, as well as the ethics of field experimentation (week 5). The second part of the course examines the findings of experimental research in five distinct political domains (weeks 7-11). Topics include:

1. Voter mobilisation
2. Social networks
3. Political persuasion
4. Social contact and prejudice reduction
5. Gender and politics

Teaching: This course will be delivered through a combination of seminars and lectures totalling a minimum of 25 hours across the Lent Term and Summer Term. Some or all of this teaching may be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus lectures and seminars. There will be no lecture during Week 6 (reading week) and no class during Weeks 1 and 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to solve 1 formative problem set, in LT.

Indicative reading: Required textbook:

Gerber, Alan and Donald P. Green. 2012. Field Experiments: Design, Analysis, and Interpretation, New York: W.W. Norton, 2012.

Suggested texts:

Gerber, Alan S., and Donald P. Green. 2017. "Field experiments on voter mobilization: An overview of a burgeoning literature." In Handbook of Economic Field Experiments, Vol. 1, pp. 395-438.

John, Peter. 2017. Field Experiments in Political Science and Public Policy: Practical Lessons in Design and Delivery, London: Routledge.

Karlan, Dean and Jacob Appel. Failing in the Field, Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2016.

Journal articles and other reading list texts, as assigned.

Students will have free choice on their experimental research design topic, so they should expect to find and read additional books and articles on the topic in consultation with the instructor and the library.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (50%) in the LT.

Research design (50%) in the ST.

The assessment for this module consists of one problem set (50%) and one research design essay (50%). The problem set combines short theoretical problems, and applied problems requiring basic data manipulation/analysis using R. In the experimental research design essay (3000 words) you are asked to write an experimental design outlining how you would address a causal research question of your choice in Political Science using a randomized field experiment. The research design should include a short literature review, hypotheses, research design, and pre-analysis plan. There is also a practice problem set, for which cohort feedback is provided. The two problem sets (formative and summative) will ensure that students have the skills necessary to propose a credible experimental design. One-on-one meetings after Reading Week will provide a checkpoint to obtain early feedback.

Populism

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Francisco Panizza

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is capped at two groups.

Course content: The course studies populism from a conceptual and comparative perspective. Given the highly contested nature of populism, the first weeks will look in depth to different theories of populism, including ideational, strategic and performative understandings of populism. It will then move to explore the socio cultural and economic conditions of emergence of populism, the relation between populism and democracy and the relations between populism, political systems and popular movements. The last three lectures will seek to apply the conceptual tools presented in the first part of the course to regional and country case studies. Among the topics to be explored are: what do we talk about when we talk about populism? Populism as a "thin ideology" and as a political strategy; populism as a mode of political identification; the cultural and socio-economic causes of populism; populism and democracy; populism and political systems; populism and grassroots movements; and varieties of populism across different regions of the world.

Teaching: This course provides a combination of classes and lectures totalling 25 hours in the Lent term. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus lectures and classes. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Formative coursework:

One essay to be submitted on week 7 of the LT. The formative essay will offer an outline of the final essay - including key indicative reading. The feedback will be used in two ways: 1) to guide students' critical thinking in line with course learning outcomes; 2) to guide students on the key aspect of formatting an academic argument using literature and critical debate. Students will also be encouraged to reflect upon their learning from the presentation and use this to refine their summative essay.

Indicative reading: Essential Readings

Assessment: Presentation (10%) in the LT.

Essay (90%, 3500 words) in the ST.

The essay will be marked in line with departmental guidance on assessed essays. This will allow for a scale of outcomes in line with different levels of academic outputs. It will be marked for command of the literature, theories and empirical findings, analytical sophistication, use of evidence, critical judgement and originality. The individual class presentations will take the form of a 15 minute presentation followed by 30 minutes of questioning from both the class and the teacher. Particular value will be placed on the ability to present contending arguments in a clear and balanced way, the use of empirical evidence to support arguments and the capacity to raise relevant questions for class discussion.

Concepts and Controversies in Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Lea Ypi

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students. This course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: Students will be expected to have some familiarity with political theory (e.g., having taken GV100 Introduction to Political Theory, or GV262 Contemporary Political Theory or some other, relevant module).

Course content: This course is devoted to the advanced study of key concepts and related controversies in political theory. In 2022-23, the course will look at the idea of socialism, the philosophy associated to it and the key political writings of the twentieth century. In the first half of the course we will cover some key issues in the study of Marxism such as the materialist conception of history, the idea of class and class struggle, the role of the state, the analysis of exploitation, the defence of revolution, the role of the party. In the second half we will cover historical developments of Marxism, consider how fundamental concepts examined in the first part are deployed in the course of Marxism's historical development, assess and compare approaches to each other and examine their contribution to the further development of Marxist studies as well as their contemporary relevance.

This course does not require any prior knowledge of socialist theories but we will move quickly through the different texts so interest in philosophy and in the history of political thought is strongly recommended. The only prerequisite is one prior course in political theory, such as GV100 or GV262.

At the end of the course students will be expected to be familiar with the key concepts in the study of socialism, engage critically with them, relate debates and authors with one another, evaluate their arguments and establish links with other key thinkers in the history of political thought.

Teaching: This course provides a combination of classes and lectures totalling 25 hours in the Michaelmas Term. There will be a reading week in MT Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a 1500 word formative essay by the end of week 6 (reading week).

Transparency and Accountability in Government

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Berliner

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations,

BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group.

Course content: Is “sunlight the best disinfectant”? Can information empower citizens to hold their government accountable? How have information technologies been used to enable civic engagement and participation? What are the relationships between transparency, secrecy, corruption, and accountability?

This course will familiarise students with the theory and practice of transparency and accountability in government, enabling them to critically address these questions and engage meaningfully in fast-moving contemporary policy debates.

The course will offer a grounding in theories of democracy, representation, and accountability, as well as debates over the merits of transparency in light of competing values like secrecy and privacy. The course will also enable students to evaluate the role played by different forms of information in political systems, as well as to critically assess the theories of change and assumptions behind information-based policy initiatives.

The course has a global scope, focusing on applications in both developed and developing countries, and on policy types including freedom of information, information-based regulation, participatory budgeting, crowdsourced policymaking, “civic tech,” open data, campaign finance and asset disclosures, and applications of transparency to sectors like extractive industries, the environment, and public health.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of workshops in the ST.

There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one formative essay of 1,000 words in the LT.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. This course will be freely available to students with the required background.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) and Quantitative Methods (Statistics) (ST107), or equivalent courses.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the most commonly used methods for causal inference in the social sciences using observational data. It covers simple and multiple regression (particularly focussing on the conditions for a causal interpretation of the coefficients), matching, panel data, diff-in-diff, instrumental variables, regression discontinuity. The course will prioritize the practical understanding and application of the methods rather than their statistical foundations. Applications will be selected from existing research literature.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of lectures and classes totalling a minimum of 30 hours in the Lent Term, with a reading week in LT Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem set and 1 case study in the LT.

Topics in Political Economy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephane Wolton

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students are expected to have taken GV225 Public Choice and Politics, or EC201 Microeconomic Principles I, or equivalent, in a previous year. An introductory knowledge of economics and econometrics would be useful.

Course content: This course provides an overview of recent research in political economy. The focus will be on the applications of game theoretical and empirical approaches to the understanding of contemporary political issues. During the lectures, we will cover some seminal and some most recent models to think critically about the topics studied. In addition, we will go over papers testing or related to the theories we cover. Students will learn to assess critically the usefulness and limitations of theories and empirics alike. As such, this course allows students to understand how the tools they acquired in GV225 – Public Choice (or equivalent course) and GV249 – Research Design (or equivalent course) can be combined to study important political questions.

Themes covered change every year as a function of current debates in the scholarly community and of pressing problems in the world at large. In recent years, the topics studied in the course have included, among others, populism, media and democracy, autocratic politics, terrorism. Questions covered during the lectures have included the sources of populists' success, the effect of biased media on political outcomes, the role of violence in securing autocratic regimes, or the evaluation of counter-terrorist policies, among many others.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours in the Michaelmas Term and 5 hours in the Summer Term, with a reading week in Week 6 of the MT. There will be a three-hour mock exam and a two-hour revision lecture in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete one problem set to further their understanding of the concepts covered in the course and prepare for the coursework. There will also be a timed exam in ST Week 1 to allow practice on problem sets solving under exam conditions.

Indicative reading: Canes-Wrone, Brandice, Michael C. Herron, and Kenneth W. Shotts. 2001. "Leadership and pandering: A theory of executive policymaking." American Journal of Political Science 45(3): 532-550.

Most of the reading is from journal articles; a complete list will be supplied at the start of the term. A useful overview of political economy topics in democracy is: T Besley, Principled Agents? Selection and Incentives in Politics, Oxford University Press, 2005.

Assessment: Exam (20%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Coursework (50%) in the LT.

Online assessment (30%) in the ST.

Online assessment duration: 7 days in the ST.

GV326

Conflict, War and Revolution - Approaches to Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Kelly CRB 4.18

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Theory (GV100).

Course content: The course explores some different approaches to the problem and challenge of politics through the careful reading of a number of important texts and thinkers from the Ancient Greeks to the present. It will build on and assume the overview of Political Theory in GV100 but go beyond a broad superficial reading to an in depth and critical engagement with complex texts from history, philosophy and theology to explore the methodologies of political thinking and critical reading in order to understand to challenge and problem of political action. The thinkers discussed comprise Thucydides, Augustine of Hippo, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Rousseau, Clausewitz, Lenin and Mao, Carl Schmitt. These paradigmatic thinkers challenge the presuppositions of contemporary liberal egalitarianism and state focused models of politics and distinguish the domain of the political from other ways of thinking about human practical modes of experience such as morality, society and the economy. Alongside ways of reading these texts the course will also explore a number of issues about the nature of politics including how the domain of politics is conceived, the sites of political engagement such as the polis, city, republic, empire, state, system of states, and multitude. We will focus on the nature, justification and legitimacy of violence, force and conflict. Finally the course will also examine the 'meta-narratives' or overarching contexts within which they argue the political takes place, such as the structure and meaning of history and whether history justifies political action or redeems human suffering and oppression.

Teaching: This course is delivered through seminars totalling a minimum of 40 hours across the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. This course includes reading weeks in Week 6 of both the MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Governance and Corruption

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarah Brierley CBG 4.37

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Comfort with basic statistics as covered by Research Design in Political Science (GV249) or an equivalent course in research design or introductory statistics (such as ST102, ST107, ST108, GY140, SA201) is recommended.

Course content: The design and implementation of government policies depends on the actions and capacity of politicians and bureaucrats. For policies to be effective, they must be implemented according to programmatic criteria, while avoiding leakage. This course will overview recent theoretical and empirical work on governance, corruption and state capacity. The cases we investigate will be focused on low and middle-income countries in South Asia, Latin America and Sub-Saharan Africa. During the course we will explore questions such as: why do politicians and bureaucrats engage in corruption? Do multi-party elections encourage graft? Are anti-corruption bodies effective? Can technological solutions improve the delivery of public services?

Teaching: This course is delivered through seminars totalling a minimum of 20 hours in the Lent Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in LT Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 formative essay of 1,000 words in Week 7.

Middle East Politics in Transnational Perspective

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Chalcraft

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students. This course is capped at one group. Priority will be given to students enrolling from the Department of Government.

Course content: This course offers an advanced introduction to the politics of the Middle East and North Africa in transnational perspective. It takes a critical, sociological, historically-informed, and qualitative approach. It focuses on cross-border forms of resistance and subaltern activism. We study such topics as transnational revolutionary movements, Third World national liberation, popular movements on the Arabian peninsula, feminism, Salafi-Wahhabism, human rights advocacy, and transnational Palestinian activism. Students will develop an advanced introductory understanding of the transnational politics of the region.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 26 hours in the Michaelmas Term. There is no teaching scheduled in reading week, but one of the seminars (of the total of 11) will be a (compulsory) essay writing workshop scheduled towards the end of Week 5 (most likely Thursday). In other words, there will be two seminars in Week 5.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Making Democracy Work

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Ofosu CBG 3.04

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Comfort with basic statistics as covered by Research Design in Political Science (GV249) or an equivalent course in research design or introductory statistics (such as ST102, ST107, ST108, GY140, SA201) is recommended but not required.

Course content: The extent to which electoral competition motivates elected officials to respond to the needs of citizens determines the quality of a democratic political system. This course examines the theoretical and practical challenges to how elections promote democratic responsiveness and accountability. The course will cover contemporary political science research on a series of topics. How do elections incentivize political responsiveness? How do politicians campaign and distribute state resources to win elections? Why do some voters support corrupt, underperforming politicians while others choose effective leaders? Why are some elections rigged while others are free and fair? Why do some elections spark violence while others are peaceful? Which interventions to promote the quality of democracy work? Readings will draw on empirical cases from many world regions, including Africa, Latin America, the post-Soviet countries, South Asia, and the historical United States. Students are expected to be active participants in this course, and will participate in several class debates and writing exercises.

Teaching: This course provides a minimum of 20 hours of seminars in the Michaelmas Term. There will be a reading week in MT Week 6.

Formative coursework: There are two pieces of formative coursework: 2 presentations in the MT and a short proposal (800 -1000 words) for a final project in week 7.

The first formative coursework involves two-class group presentations. The assignment will help students to connect empirical work in the field of electoral accountability to the theories introduced in the first part of the course.

The second formative assignment will help students prepare an outline for their final essay. The short essay will comprise a research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and an indicative reading list. Feedback will be provided via email and/or individual sessions with students.

Data Science Applications to Politics Research

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Melissa Sands

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Politics and Data Science. This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101) and Research Design in Political Science (GV249).

Course content: The goal of this course is to introduce students to the latest empirical research using big data in political science. This course will cover different applications of big data in political science. For each, students will be introduced to the type of questions that each type of data can help answer and learn to apply the methods needed to analyse each type of data.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. There will be a reading week in LT Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem set and 1 presentation in the LT.

Indicative reading: Brady, Henry E. "The challenge of big data and data science." Annual Review of Political Science 22 (2019): 297-323.

Assessment: Coursework (80%) in the ST.

Problem sets (20%) in the LT.

The coursework would comprise a replication exercise, where students would replicate and extend the analysis of one paper of their choice, discussed in class.

Capstone Data Science & Civic Engagement

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101), Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102), Programming for Data Science (ST101) and Research Design in Political Science (GV249).

Course content: The Data Science and Civic Engagement Capstone requires groups of students to carry out an applied research project in order to address a practical policy issue or problem relevant to a civic partner organisation. This allows students to extend their capabilities and apply methodological knowledge and skills they learned in the Politics and Data Science degree to address real-life social, political, or policy problems. Capstone partner organisations may include advocacy groups, NGOs, thinktanks, public sector bodies, local governments, international organisations, or private companies where projects involve the social good. The initial weeks of the course will introduce students to the requirements of their Capstone project, key research strategies and essential questions. At the same time, from week 1 students will begin to research in allocated teams. Students are also expected to work steadily throughout the term with members of their team and with their supervisors. The completed research will be presented by week 11, both in the form of a team presentation and a report.

Teaching: 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 6 hours of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of workshops in the ST.

2 hours of workshops in MT, 6 hours of workshops in LT, and 2 hours of presentations in ST.

These workshops are supplemented with regular help sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Capstone groups must produce 1 team presentation for the "check-in" session, usually in week 5 of LT.

Indicative reading: As a capstone project course, there will not be required readings. However, students will be directed towards potentially useful background resources including:

Cyd Harrell (2020). A Civic Technologist's Practice Guide. Five Seven Five Books.

Eugene Bardach and Eric M. Patashnik (2016). A Practical Guide for Policy Analysis. London: Sage.

Edward R. Tufte (2001). The Visual Display of Quantitative Information. 2nd edition. Cheshire, Conn.: Graphics Press.

Assessment: Project (80%, 8000 words) and presentation (20%) in the LT.

Group project (80%, 8000 words) and group presentation (20%) in the LT.

GV332 Half Unit

Big Data in Politics: A Few Provocative Debates

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Omar McDoom CBG 3.36

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course is organized around a set of discrete debates and illustrative case studies whose unifying theme is the examination of the political implications of Big Data. The course scope is purposely broad to enable the particular selection of debates and cases to evolve over time and to reflect our rapidly-expanding understanding of how Big Data are shaping the political realm. The debates may be normative, evaluative, or empirical in nature and thus aim to take advantage of the broad exposure to the study of politics that third year Government students at the LSE will have acquired.

Some of the debates that may be covered touch on the following areas:

Political communication: How should democracies respond to the information oligopolies created by Big Tech?

Civil liberties: What does the increasing use of Big Data by the intelligence industry imply for the debate between liberty and security in liberal democracies?

Governance: How are Big Data altering trust in and the accountability of governments?

Contentious Politics: What are the risks and benefits of using Big Data to predict and prevent protests, riots, and violence?

Inequality: In what ways could Big Data both amplify and reduce disparities in political participation and economic status between individuals and groups?

Public Good Provision: What does the increasing amount of personal data collected by local and central governments mean for the quality of public services?

Democracy: In what ways are Big Data changing the relationship between governments and corporations in democracies?

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Students will choose one of the questions posed in each weekly debate to answer in their summative essay and once chosen they will then write an annotated bibliography (1500 words) that evaluates between 3 and 6 sources relating to that debate they will use in the summative essay.

O'Neil, Cathy. Weapons of math destruction: How big data increases inequality and threatens democracy. Broadway Books, 2016

Assessment: Essay (80%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Class participation (20%) in the LT.

The summative assessment will comprise two components.

First, a student's overall contribution to the course (20%) will be assessed by way of oral participation in the classroom and written contribution to an online discussion forum where each of the debates examined in the course will be the subject of potential discussion. Second, students will choose one of the questions posed each week - or else adapt this question with the approval of the instructor - and write a long essay totalling 3000 words.

Comparative Perspectives on Inequality and Politics: Global North, Global South

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Boone

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

The course is available in the third year only and capped at one group of students.

Course content: Rising levels of social inequality have attracted enormous attention in public discourse and social science research. What political consequences should we expect to see, and will these differ across countries? This course considers the distribution and drivers of different forms of social-economic inequality (income, spatial, urban/rural, ethnic/racial), and asks whether and how they produce different forms of politics in different parts of the world. Weekly readings and lectures center on significant works in global and comparative political economy. The course considers the hypothesis that the political salience of different forms of inequality (a.) varies over time and space, and (b.) that political institutions play an important role in conditioning the ways in which social inequalities become politically salient and find expression in the political arena.

Over the course of the term, the analytic focus of the class moves from the global level, to the OECD (Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development) countries, to developing countries. We consider how socio-economic structure, levels of development, and modes of integration into the global economy shape domestic forms of inequality, and how domestic institutions condition the political expression thereof.

Teaching: This course is delivered through seminars totalling 25 hours in the Lent Term. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

This will be a class presentation outlining the proposed research question and theoretical framing of the 3,000 word summative paper.

The summative work consists of:

- one 3-page (1,000 word) paper summarizing and critiquing a week's reading, week 5-7 (20%), and
- a 12-page (3,000 word) final class paper assessing different arguments about inequality and whether and how it produces political effects in light of comparative case study or large-N evidence (80%)

GV335 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 African Political Economy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Ofosu

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Social and Public Policy with Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is capped at 1 group.

Course content: This class is an introduction to the study of contemporary African political economy. The goal is to set major questions of state and economy in historical, geographic, and international context. Course readings and lectures stress marked unevenness in national and subnational trajectories and in the political-economic character of different African countries, and introduce students to theories that aim to identify causes of similarity and difference across and within countries. Students will come away with a better understanding of the possibilities and limits of structured, focused comparisons in comparative politics, and with an introduction to political economy approaches to questions of late development. They will also develop substantive knowledge of the political economy of sub-Saharan Africa and analytic tools to describe and make sense of its diversity.

Teaching: This course provides a minimum of 20 hours of seminars in the Michaelmas Term. This year, some or all of this teaching may be delivered through a combination of online and on-campus seminars. There will be a reading week in MT Week 6.

Formative coursework: There will be one 1,200 formative assignment (short essay).

Indicative reading: Texts used may include all or part of the following:

Assessment: Essay (75%, 3000 words) in the LT.

In-class assessment (25%) in the MT.

For the in-class assessment: Students will be asked to serve as a seminar discussant during the term. On these weeks the discussant will write a two or three-page memo that discusses the readings in a comparative perspective. In the last class meeting, each student will give a 5-minute overview of his/her plans for the final course essay.

GV336 Half Unit

Latin America: Democracy and Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathias Poertner CBG 3.34

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and General Course students. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Latin America has long been the center of dynamic political, social, and economic change. The region has suffered some of the most repressive political regimes, highest degrees of economic inequality, and worst organized crime. Yet Latin America has also been the focus of some of the most innovative experiments in democratic participation and social mobilization.

This course examines the course of political and economic change in twentieth and twenty-first century Latin America. The bulk of the course will focus on the rise of industrialization and populism in the 1930s and 1940s to the collapse of democracy and establishment of military regimes in the 1960s and 1970s, the return to democracy in the 1980s, and more recent processes of democratic consolidation and economic liberalization. In addition to learning about the politics and contemporary history of Latin American countries, we will also explore the theoretical terrain underlying the causes and consequences of phenomena such as populism, industrialization, authoritarianism, democratization, neoliberalism, and popular representation. The course will provide a combination of empirical exploration of the region and a variety of explanations for the general processes of change across the region and the variation across countries.

Students will gain empirical knowledge on the region's politics, a deeper theoretical understanding of issues of democratic representation and economic development, as well as crucial analytical skills.

Tentative outline of weekly topics:

- 1 Overview & Introduction
- 2 Populism & the Growth of the Working Class
- 3 Democratic Breakdown & Authoritarian Regimes
- 4 Democratic Transitions
- 5 The Politics of Economic Reform
- 6 Civil Society and Social Movements
- 7 Political Parties
- 8 Ethnicity, Gender, and Class in Electoral Politics
- 9 Clientelism
- 10 The Inclusionary Turn and Participatory Institutions

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

This course is delivered through seminars totalling a minimum of 20 hours during Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

A detailed outline (500 words) on the policy issue to be explored in detail through the group project (including key readings to be used).

Indicative reading: Bulmer-Thomas, Victor. 2014. The Economic History of Latin America since Independence. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, Ch. 9-11.

Williamson, John. 1990. "What Washington Means by Policy Reform." In Williamson, ed., Latin American Adjustment: How Much Has Happened? Washington D.C.: Peterson Institute for International Economics.

Assessment: Presentation (20%) and group project (80%) in the LT.

• Classroom participation & country reporting (20%): Students should actively participate in class discussions, ask questions, listen to their fellow students, complete all required readings, and be attentive. Those who consistently demonstrate a sharp understanding of the readings and who use that understanding to move the discussion forward will earn an excellent participation grade. Participation does not only mean talking a lot; it means making comments and asking questions that reflect thought, e.g., about the readings. In addition to active participation in class, students are responsible for ongoing reporting about politics in one Latin American country, assigned in Week 1, throughout the course of the semester. Students will be responsible for following the news on "their" country every week. Once during the semester, each student will give a current event report on "their" country. This brief (5 minutes) presentation should describe one of the major political events that have affected "their" country within the last six months.

• Group project (50% for written policy brief; 30% for oral presentation): 160The group project is meant to challenge students to work effectively in teams while relating theory and evidence to policy. 160For the group project, students will be split up into small groups. Each group will select a policy issue to analyze using the theoretical tools covered in class. 160 Each group will then 1) write a policy brief (1,500 words); and 2) prepare a detailed presentation on the topic.

GV337 Half Unit

Politics, Crime, and Criminal Justice in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Nirvikar Jassal

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Familiarity with basic research design and statistics as covered by Research Design in Political Science (GV249) or an equivalent course (such as ST102, ST107, ST108, GY140, SA201) is helpful but not necessary.

Course content: Newspaper reports often discuss "police reform" or "criminal justice reform." Yet, these terms are likely to have different meanings across countries, and how states' political systems are organized may help or hinder change. This course explores the intersection between politics and criminal justice (law enforcement and the judiciary) in the advanced industrialized democracies such as the United States as well as in nations that emerged from colonialism in the 20th century. Questions that the course will cover include: do judges make biased decisions based on race or gender? Can community policing improve citizen perceptions of law enforcement? Do government-mandated hiring quotas for women and minority groups affect police legitimacy? Broadly, the course grapples with empirical social science scholarship – primarily from political science and economics – that uses a variety of analytical techniques to explore inequities in citizen interactions with the police and courts, how inequalities are perpetuated, and which governmental reforms have been shown to be more effective than others in reducing crime, making law-and-order institutions accountable, and mitigating bias.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: As a formative assessment, students will be expected to produce an outline for their final essay. This will enable them to gain feedback about their research question and methodology for their final or summative assessment.

Indicative reading: Blair, Robert A., Sabrina M. Karim, and Benjamin S. Morse. 2019. "Establishing the Rule of Law in Weak and War-Torn States: Evidence from a Field Experiment with the Liberian National Police." American Political Science Review 113 (3): 641–57.

McCrary, Justin. 2007. "The Effect of Court-Ordered Hiring Quotas on the Composition and Quality of Police." American Economic Review 97 (1): 318–53.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

The summative assessment comprises one final take-home essay on an original research question. Students will be able to answer their original research question using any social science methodology discussed in class, qualitative research, or any other technique discussed with the convener

Politics and Political Economy of India

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pavithra Suryanarayan

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: India is the world's largest democracy and its second most populous country. This course introduces core issues in the study of modern Indian politics. The class is organized around the following topics: we trace India's journey to Independence; the consolidation of democracy in the early decades; the relationship between the state and the economy; the state's institutional architecture; how political parties and electoral campaigns operate; the threats posed by corruption, criminality and dynastic politics; the role of caste and religion in shaping politics; the political and economic consequences of economic liberalization; elections; and the recent rise of right-wing hindutva in the country. The focus is on building knowledge and understanding of the Indian case. But we will also consider to what extent India's experience is reflective of more general theories of politics, and how they might change because of what India can teach us. Class sessions will be interactive, with plenty of opportunity for group discussion. The reading list is diverse and draws from political science, sociology, history, and anthropology.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be a reading week in MT Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The formative assessment comprises one 1000-word response essay written for the week that the students serve as discussant in class.

Indicative reading: 1) Washbrook, David. "India, 1818-1860: the two faces of colonialism." The Oxford History of the British Empire 3 (1999).

2) Paul Brass. 1994. The Politics of India since Independence, 1-63

3) Jha, S. (2004). "Representation and Its Epiphanies: A Reading of Constituent Assembly Debates." Economic and Political Weekly: 4357-4360.

4) Mehta, Uday S. 2010. "Indian Constitutionalism: The Social and Political Vision," in Jayal and Mehta (eds.) The Oxford Companion to Politics in India

Assessment: Essay (80%) in the period between MT and LT. Proposal (20%) in the MT.

The summative assessment will comprise:

1) One proposal and presentation for the final essay – in the last class meeting in MT, each student will give a 5-minute overview of their plan for the final essay to solicit feedback from the class. This will be marked based on how well students articulate the key themes of the paper within an abstract, and how well they use their 5 mins to explain their paper's key ideas. The teacher will use this as a way to also give students feedback on the scope of the proposed paper and whether it fits within the goals of the class.

2) One 3000-word final essay at the end of MT, based on a topic on India.

Philosophy, Politics and Economics: Research Project

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rafael Hortala-Vallve

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is exclusively for fourth year BSc PPE students.

Course content: The focus of the course is on the production of an individual academic paper and poster presentation. This is your chance to choose a topic of your interest and use what you've learnt in the last three years into what interests you most. You will be encouraged to develop an interdisciplinary research question. The initial weeks in Lent Term will be focused on outlining your research plans. Group feedback and individual feedback sessions will take place regularly throughout term. The aim of this course is not only to produce a written piece of research but to also summarise your research in a poster and be able to present it in an informal setting.

Teaching: 2 hour introductory session in week 11 MT. 2 hour introductory session on research methods in week 1 LT. 6 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of workshops in the ST.

The course is structured around an initial presentation and various group and individual feedback sessions. In week 11 of MT we'll have a two-hour introductory session. During this session we'll establish the goals of the course and you will then have the Christmas break to think about the topic you want to work on in the LT. There will be an initial introductory session in week 1 of the LT to give you some guidance on the different research methods that are at your disposal. There will be group feedback sessions in weeks 2, 5, 8 and 11. These seminars / workshops will be supplemented with regular individual feedback sessions.

Formative coursework: Students must prepare a draft outline synopsis for their individual project by Thursday of Week 1 Lent Term, and present on it in a seminar in Week 2. Students must then present a detailed account of their progress in weeks 5, 8 and 11.

Indicative reading: On writing:

- Stella Cottrell, Dissertations and Project Reports: A Step by Step Guide (Palgrave Study Skills, 2014);
- Diana Ridley, The Literature Review: A Step-by-Step Guide for Students (SAGE Study Skills Series, 2008);
- Christopher Hart, Doing a Literature Review (SAGE Study Skills Series, 2018);
- Sharon M. Ravitch and J. Matthew Riggan, Reason and Rigor: How Conceptual Frameworks Guide Research (2nd edition, Sage Publications, 2016).

On research:

- Catherine Hakim, Research Design: Successful Designs for Social Economics Research, 2nd ed. (Routledge, 2000);
- Joseph A. Maxwell, Qualitative Research Design (3rd edition, Sage, 2013);
- Alan Bryman, Social Research Methods, 5th ed. (Oxford University Press, 2015);
- David Partington, Essential Skills for Management Research (Sage Publications, 2002).

A list of readings will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Report (80%) and presentation (20%) in the ST Week 1.

There are two pieces of assessment. A final report (max 5,000 words) that counts towards 80% of the final mark, and a short video presentation on your key conclusions that counts towards 20% of the final mark. Both elements will have to be submitted by Week 1 of ST.

You will be invited to present your findings on a poster presentation during the GV342 Summer Capstone Showcase.

GV342M Half Unit

Philosophy, Politics and Economics: Capstone

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is exclusively for fourth year BSc PPE students.

Course content: The Capstone requires groups of students to carry out research and analysis in order to address a practical policy issue or problem relevant to a client organisation. This allows students to extend their capabilities and apply disciplinary and methodological knowledge and skills they learned in the PPE core courses to address real-life policy needs. Capstone clients may include public sector bodies, private companies, international organisations, think tanks and NGOs. The initial weeks of the course will introduce students to the requirements of Capstone projects, key research strategies and essential questions. At the same time, from week 1 students will begin to research in allocated teams. Students are also expected to work steadily throughout the term with members of their team and with their advisors. The completed research has to be presented by week 11 MT, both in the form of a team presentation and a research report. Further details: There will be a two-hour workshop in week 0 of MT to introduce the projects available and students will then be able to list their preferences, which will be taken into account in deciding allocations. This session will also explain key issues and demands on the students. The workshops in weeks 1 and 2 of MT will discuss key research and project skills. The workshop in week 5 of MT will be a "course correction" session for teams to get guidance on the planned final shape of their reports. In addition, students can access regular help sessions throughout the term. Capstone teams will present their project findings by week 11 of MT.

Teaching: 8 hours of workshops in the MT.

These workshops are supplemented with regular help sessions.

This course includes a reading week in week 6 of MT.

Formative coursework: Capstone groups must produce 1 team presentation for the "course correction" session, usually in week 5 of MT. They must also produce a poster or presentation from their final (assessed) presentation for a final showcase workshop, which is usually held in week 1 of ST.

Indicative reading:

- Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen. Useable Knowledge: Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979).
- Eugene Bardach and Eric M. Patashnik. A Practical Guide for Policy Analysis (Sage, 2016).
- Brian A. Griffith and Ethan B. Dunham. Working in Teams: Moving from High Potential to High Performance (Sage, 2015).
- Ray Pawson. The Science of Evaluation: A Realist Manifesto (Sage, 2013).

Assessment: Project (80%, 8000 words) and presentation (20%) in the MT.

GV366 Not available in 2022/23

Political Economy of the Developing World

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group. Deadline for enrolments is 12:00 noon on Friday 4 October 2019.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: This course introduces students to the broad theoretical traditions in the study of political economies outside of the OECD world, and provides an empirical overview of a number of concrete phenomena that shape the interplay of the politics and economics in different world regions. It will address puzzles like: Why did some developing countries grow much faster than others after WWII? Are some forms of corruption more compatible with development than others? Which impact do natural resource rents have on politics and development? Under which conditions can countries with a short history of independent statehood build efficient institutions?

GV366 will engage with broad theoretical traditions like modernization theory, dependency theory, and neo-patrimonialism, and with concrete empirical topics like state-business relations, the developmental state, corruption and clientelism, the politics of public enterprise, and the political economy of resource-rich countries.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One essay of 3,500 words to be submitted in the LT.

Indicative reading: Bardhan, Pradeep (1997). "Corruption and Development", Journal of Economic Literature, Vol. 35.
 Evans, Peter (1995). Embedded Autonomy: States and industrial transformation (Princeton: Princeton University Press).

Assessment: Exam (35%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (15%), essay (35%) and class participation (15%).

GV390

Government Dissertation Option

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bruter

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students. This course may be taken only in the third year. A BSc Government/Politics and History student cannot choose both HY300 and GV390; a BSc Politics and Philosophy student cannot choose both GV390 and PH399; and a BSc Politics and International Relations student cannot choose both GV390 and IR398.

Course content: A dissertation of not more than 10,000 words on a topic to be approved by a proposed dissertation supervisor and the Course Convener. The topic should be chosen from any area within the field covered by the degree course and supported by a member of the academic staff from the Department of Government willing to act as dissertation supervisor. Following the dissertation information session organised by the Department in the second year of the students' curriculum, candidates should approach their academic mentor during the Lent Term or Summer Term of their second year to discuss the possibility of a proposed dissertation topic. After also having received approval for a topic by a prospective supervisor, students must submit a dissertation form detailing the final title and synopsis/prospectus to the Course Convenor for approval. Dissertation approval forms must be submitted no later than the deadline. Please note that any change from what was approved in the dissertation form will require the approval of the dissertation supervisor.

In 2022/3 the deadline for submitting Dissertation Approval Forms will be Tuesday 4 October 2022, MT Week 2.

Students who fail to submit a proposal approved by an eligible supervisor by the deadline will be unenrolled from the course.

Note that there is no automatic right to change topics or supervisor after the form has been approved and submitted so students should complete it carefully.

Teaching: This course provides dissertation-focussed seminars totalling 9 hours over the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. There will be a reading week in Week 6 of each term.

The teaching involves separate streams for students writing an empirical dissertation and those writing a theory dissertation with students asked to choose which stream they feel will help them most. Four of the six sessions will be taught separately for the two streams whilst two will be common.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

GV398 Not available in 2022/23

Inside the Mind of a Voter: Research in Electoral Psychology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bruter CBG 3.03

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped) and priority will be given to students on the programmes named above. Students from other degrees are not normally accepted on the course except with the exceptional discretionary approval of the course teacher.

This course is capped at one group.

Course content: This final year undergraduate course has three important ambitions.

Substantively, it aims to introduce students to the study of electoral psychology and electoral ergonomics, which represent novel and dynamic approaches to the study citizens' electoral behaviour and the way voters' psychology interacts with the organisation of elections.

Methodologically, it introduces students to some of the key methods used in the field and enables them to practice fieldwork in one of them through an empirical group project. That project will change each year in terms of topic and method, and will be announced at the start of the academic year. It may include lab experiments, interviews, diaries, or any of the core methods used in the field.

Finally, it introduces students to the research process through the main assessment component, which is a supervised 7,000 word dissertation, and supports them through several research clinics whereby we discuss students' dissertation issues and problems collectively throughout the year.

Teaching: This course is taught using seminars only including 20 hours of seminars in the MT, 20 hours of seminars in the LT, and 4 hours of seminars in the ST. This year, some or all of this teaching may be delivered through a combination of online or on campus seminars. This course includes reading weeks in Week 6 of both MT and LT.

The seminars are divided into:

- 7 x 2 hour SUBSTANTIVE SEMINARS on key issues in electoral psychology
- 7 x 2 hour FIELDWORK SEMINARS focused on preparation and fieldwork for the group project (note: some fieldwork seminars may be rescheduled or combined into longer sessions depending on fieldwork needs)
- 6 x 2 hour RESEARCH CLINICS on the preparation and discussion of analytical, methodological, and ethical issues faced by students with regards to their dissertation
- 1 x 4 hour CONFERENCE WORKSHOP where students will briefly present their findings to one another.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment includes:

- draft research synopsis and design (end of MT)
- draft research methodology (early in LT)
- unassessed critiques of further readings (throughout MT/LT)

Indicative reading: Bruter, M. and Harrison, S. Inside the Mind of a Voter

Lipset, S., Lazarsfeld, P, et al. The psychology of voting

Sniderman, P. Personality and democratic politics

Bruter, M., and Lodge, M. Political Science research methods in action

Baddeley, A. The psychology of memory

Cammaerts, B. et al. Youth participation in democratic life

Harrison, S and Bruter, M. Mapping extreme right ideology

Assessment: Dissertation (70%, 7000 words) in the ST.

Group project (15%) in the MT.

Critical evaluation (15%) in the MT and LT.

The critical evaluation involves critiques of further readings work as follows: to make the reading list more manageable for the 7 substantive seminars, all students will only be expected to familiarise themselves with the core readings, and will divide the further readings between themselves. Each student will be expected to be responsible for a total of 5-6 further readings throughout the year, each from different weeks.

Students responsible for a further reading will be asked to write a short (1-2 page) critique of it following a set format (1) what is the research question and why is it interesting, 2) what methods are the authors using, 3) what are the main findings, 4) what are the main shortcomings or what do you wish the authors had done differently) and post it on moodle by the Sunday before the seminar so that students can quickly browse the week's 'menu' in advance. The students having each covered different further readings will bring them into the seminar discussion.

The critiques count for 15% of the final mark as follows: 5% for completing 5 quality critiques throughout the year, and 10% based on the average mark for what they choose as their two best critiques.

The group work mark (15%) is based on the satisfactory completion of the tasks assigned to small groups of students during the fieldwork (e.g. conducting interviews or experiments, etc depending on the topic of the year).

Analytical Approaches to British Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Torun Dewan

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students. Students from BSc in Economics may also take the course with permission.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Public Choice and Politics (GV225).

The course is designed primarily for students on the BSc Politics and Economics programme. Students from other BSc Politics programmes who have taken GV225 may also apply.

Course content: Strøm (2000) argues that the conceptual essence of Parliamentary government is a "historical evolution" – an accident of 19th century Britain that spread to other parts of the world. Recent analytical political science has shed light on Britain's political development and how its institutions function, using game theoretic modelling, rational choice narratives, and quantitative data. The course covers this literature and takes an analytical approach to topics such as: the historical development of British institutions and Imperial governance; the emergence and impact of Government-vs-Opposition; the historical development of the British party system; the causes and consequence of franchise extension; the Cabinet and its conventions; and the composition of the Executive and Parliament over time.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of seminars and lectures totalling a minimum of 36 hours across the Lent and Summer Terms. This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

1500 word essay to be completed by end of reading week

Indicative reading: Cox, G. (1987) The Efficient Secret, Cambridge University Press

Berlinski, S., Dewan, T, and Dowding K. (2012) Accounting for Ministers: Scandal and Survival in British Government 1945-2007, Cambridge University Press

GV3L2 Half Unit*The Politics and Policy of Climate Change and Sustainability

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Lerner CBG 4.21

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and Data Science, BSc in Politics and Economics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Prior coursework in public policy, comparative politics, or equivalent. A basic understanding of the physical science of climate change would be advantageous.

Course content: This course introduces students to the political dynamics underlying environmental governance and investigates the ways in which politics and policy shape the pace of sustainable transitions, attempts to mitigate climate change, and the struggle to adapt to a more uncertain climate.

The course provides a survey of core and emerging topics in environmental politics and policy, such as climate obstruction, environmental authoritarianism, and the governance of geoengineering. A unifying theme of the course will be its frequent attention to the political economy of climate (in)action. The course will also offer foundational instruction in the use of the comparative method to describe and explain variation in environmental politics. This course focuses primarily, but not exclusively, on domestic environmental politics in advanced industrialized democracies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. There will also be two supplementary recorded lectures on 1) the comparative method and 2) concepts and measurement in political science.

There will be a reading week in Week 6 of the Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Assessment: Blog post (20%) in the LT.

Research paper (80%) in the ST.

Students will write two blog posts (one in the first five weeks of the term, one in the last five weeks of the term, 9 opportunities total), of which one will be submitted for assessment (750 words).

The research paper will consist of a comparative case analysis of 2500 words.

GY100*Introduction to Geography

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: This course will be taught by Dr Jessie Speer, Dr Murray Low, Dr Meredith Whitten and Professor Riccardo Crescenzi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Note: As with all undergraduate courses, unless a course is core on a degree programme, allocation of places is done by School on a first come, first served basis and does not allow the Department to prioritise who is accepted

Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to Geography at LSE. In Michaelmas Term we will examine human geography's key concepts, including space, place, landscape, nature, globalization, mobility, society and city. In the Lent Term the course will move on to introductory sections on environmental geography and economic geography. The environmental section will trace how geography as a discipline has approached nature-society relationships, covering topics such as, the anthropocene, socio-materiality, wilderness, urban nature, and local and global environmental movements. The economic geography section will introduce students to the changing location of economic activity, inequalities within and between countries, regions and cities, and the rationale, objectives and tools of local and regional development policies in a globalizing world.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT and 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading-lists related to the different topics within the course will be provided at the start of the course. General useful texts include Clifford, N.J., S.L. Holloway, S.R. Rice and G. Valentine (eds) (2009) Key Concepts in Geography, 2nd Ed, Sage, London; Dicken, P. (2011) Global Shift: Mapping the Changing Contours of the World Economy 6th Edition Sage Publications; W.E. Murray, Geographies of globalization, 2006; Pike A., A. Rodriguez-Pose and J. Tomaney (2017) Local and regional development. London: Routledge; N. Castree (2014) Making Sense of Nature

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

GY101*Succeeding in your degree: Critical skills for Geography and Environment students

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: T.B.C.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students. This course is very strongly recommended for all first year Geography and Environment undergraduate students.

Course content: This course seeks to provide an introduction to key study skills that Geography and Environmental Social Science students will use throughout their three years of undergraduate study. It will teach students how to get the most out of lectures and classes and, furthermore, how to best prepare for them through effective reading strategies and skills. During the course, students also will learn what makes a good essay, and how to effectively research, write and deliver them. The course will additionally introduce students to how their work is assessed and, moreover, how to best make use of feedback to improve their grades. All first-year undergraduates are strongly encouraged to take this course which has been purposefully designed to maximise their potential.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through lectures in Michaelmas Term.

Contemporary Europe

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Neil Lee

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Politics and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course aims at: introducing students with little prior knowledge of European issues to some of the most important economic, social, and political challenges the European Union overcame in the past and currently faces; developing an understanding of the determinants and the historical evolution of these challenges, and the related public reactions and policies at different geographical levels; learning about strengths, weaknesses and lessons to be drawn from the most striking example of integration among nation states as a result of historical forces and in the context of a globalised world. The course covers critical issues such as different degrees of economic integration in theory and practice, historical bases for integration, competitiveness, cohesion, innovation and growth, enlargements, Euro crisis, Brexit, Europe in the world, social policy, employment trends, poverty, migration, ageing, and social exclusion and inequality. Particular emphasis is laid upon the geographical foundations of these themes, at various spatial scales in Europe: supranational, national and subnational (e.g. regional, local, urban) levels. The course is traditionally based on close interactions with the lecturers and class teachers, and extra curriculum events will be also organised.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and a reading week in Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two class essays during the year (worth 10% each) and will also be expected to give class presentations.

Indicative reading: Given the diversity of the subject, there is no one textbook that covers all of the topics. A mix of academic articles and chapters from textbooks is used in the course. Reading lists are provided electronically, and additional web sources will also be indicated during the lectures. Indicative textbooks are the following: R Baldwin and C Wyplosz, The Economics of the European Integration, 4th ed. 2012; S Senior Nello, The European Union. Economics, Policies and History, 3rd ed. 2012; J. McCormick, European Union Politics, Palgrave, 2nd ed. 2015.

Assessment: Essay (10%, 1000 words) in the MT.

Essay (10%, 1000 words) in the LT.

Take-home assessment (80%) in the ST.

GY120

Environmental Change: Past, Present and Future

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Smith S421C

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Many consider that 'Climate Change' is the greatest challenge currently facing human society, mainly because of the 'Environmental Changes' that it will cause. But what are 'Climate Change' and 'Environmental Change'? What causes these changes? How much have they changed in the past and how do we know? How much is human activity responsible for the recent changes identified and when did this influence begin? How is the climate going to change in the next century and what are the consequences going to be for extreme weather events, sea-level rise? What can we do about it? Should we adapt, mitigate, or begin to engineer our climate?

To answer these questions requires that the course focuses on developing an appreciation of the Planet Earth as the home of human societies. Through a combination of lectures, classes, practical work, and fieldwork, the course focuses on the physical nature of the 'natural' or biophysical systems and involves consideration of how the solid earth, the gaseous atmosphere, the hydrosphere and the biosphere, were formed, have evolved, interact and have changed over time due to both external (extra-terrestrial) and internal factors, including humans. From this, an appreciation of change and evolution over differing time-scales is developed, which will serve as an essential basis for students when evaluating the contemporary two-way interaction between humans and the environment in the 'anthropocene'. The relevant science will be taught as and when required.

The course consists of the following sections:

PART A: Introduction to environmental change

- A framework for environmental geography
- The nature and causes of environmental/climate change

PART B: Key components of environmental change: The Biosphere

- Formation of the biosphere and change over time
- Contemporary ecosystem processes and change
- The biodiversity crisis: extreme change in the anthropocene

PART C: Key components of environmental change: Atmosphere & Oceans

- Solar radiation, the atmosphere, and interactions
- Global and local energy budgets
- Circulation - atmosphere, oceans, and carbon

PART D: Key components of environmental change: The Hydrosphere

- Water in the atmosphere, clouds and rainfall
- Hydrological cascade, rivers and flooding

PART E: Long-term environmental change

- Geological-scale climate change and Earth's 'greenhouse' and 'icehouse' environments.
- Orbital-scale climate change and the great ice ages

- Millennial-scale climate change and deglaciation

PART F: Contemporary climate change: The emerging human influence

- The Holocene
- Contemporary climate change associated with fossil fuel emissions
- Contemporary climate change and extreme weather
- Land-use and land-cover change (deforestation)

PART G: Future climate change

- Modelling future climate change
- Fixing the future: Adaptation, mitigation, and geoengineering

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two assignments during the year, one in each term, and give class papers.

Sustainable Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Corwin S414

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Geography with Economics and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Studying sustainable development today means recognizing the urgency of social and environmental problems facing current and future generations across the world. Throughout the year, we explore the relationship between human lives and the environment, debate what human 'development' and 'sustainability' mean, and discuss how to understand these complex and flexible concepts together. The course begins with studying the origins of sustainable development discourse and programmes, and then explores the challenges of sustainable development by looking at major global environmental and social changes, including debates on resource and energy use, urban growth, technology, industrial agriculture, commodity use and disposal, and changes in the global economy. GY121 is split into two distinct terms with different disciplinary and methodological approaches: Michaelmas term is taught by a geographer and Lent term is taught by an environmental economist. Together, these two terms expose students to the diversity of ways that sustainable development is thought about and studied, in order to foster critical understanding about the connections between environmental and social problems.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and in Week 6 of Lent Term

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a number of small assignments throughout both terms.

Indicative reading: There are a variety of texts available for this course. A detailed reading list will be given at the beginning of each term but an indicative list includes:

J Hicke (2017) The Divide: A Brief Guide to Global Inequality and its Solutions. Windmill Books; R Patel and J Moore (2018) A History of the World in Seven Cheap Things. Verso Books; G Atkinson, S Dietz, E Neumayer and M Agarwala, eds. (2014) Handbook of Sustainable Development, 2nd edition, Edward Elgar Publishing; WM Adams (2009) Green Development: Environment and Sustainability in the Developing World, 3rd Edition, Routledge; JA Elliott (2012) An Introduction to Sustainable Development, 4th edition;

Assessment: Take-home assessment (40%) in the ST.

Take-home assessment (40%) in the period between MT and LT. Class participation (20%) in the MT and LT.

The assessments are separated by terms; one take-home assessment covers MT content and the other covers LT content.

The participation grade is based on student engagement with course material, and is assessed through a number of small assignments throughout both terms as well as participation in class discussions.

Introduction to Geographical Research

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Austin Zeiderman, Dr Murray Low, Dr Richard Perkins, Dr Ryan Centner, Prof Henry Overman, Ms Jessie Speer, Dr Marco Di Cataldo and Prof Claire Mercer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography and BSc in Economic History and Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The main objective of this course is to introduce students to the production of geographical and environmental knowledge and to prepare them to become producers of such knowledge themselves. It provides students with a sound understanding of both the conceptual foundations and real-world applications of a variety of methodological approaches for conducting research. To appreciate why, how, and to what ends geographers conduct research on the social and spatial dimensions of human activity, the research process is examined from beginning to end: selecting a topic, performing a literature review, designing a project, collecting and analysing data, and communicating results. The process of producing knowledge about geography and the environment is also examined from a number of different perspectives: examining case studies of written work, engaging with internationally-renowned researchers, discussing the rationale for choosing a methodological approach, practicing the application of individual methods, and designing and executing a piece of independent research. Both quantitative and qualitative research methods are discussed in detail and practical exercises give students the opportunity to apply various methods from the course in their own research.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. This course is delivered through a combination of lectures and classes across the Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be given the opportunity to complete two formative assignments during the course of the year: one in MT that draws on qualitative research methods and one in LT draws on quantitative research methods. Information on the formative assignments will be provided.

Indicative reading: Methods in human geography: a guide for students doing a research project (Flowerdew and Martin, 2005); Statistics: a tool for social research (Healey, 2012); Statistics in geography and environmental science (Harris and Jarvis, 2011); Geography and geographers: Anglo-American geography since 1945 (Johnston, 1997); International Encyclopedia of Human Geography (Kitchin and Thrift, 2009); Key methods in geography (Clifford, French, and Valentine, 2010); Qualitative research methods in human geography (Hay, 2010).

Assessment: Project (50%, 3500 words) in the LT. Project (40%, 2500 words) and problem sets (10%) in the ST. The first project (3500 words) will be due toward the end of Lent Term. The problem set (500 words) and second project (2500 words) will be due at the start of Summer Term.

Human Geography and the City

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alan Mace

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: How can we understand the human geography of London? How have people shaped the city and how does the city's landscape impact people? How is this differentiated by race, class, gender, sexuality and ethnicity? We address these questions using London as a lab. You will be encouraged to engage with the city in numerous ways including through walks, media and the use of archives. Themes include; landscapes of empire, suburbanism, migration & diaspora, social housing and gentrification. To capture the specificity of the relationship between people and place the themes are sometimes developed in relation to particular settings; for example, Finsbury (housing), Hackney (gentrification) and Westminster (empire).

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and in Week 6 of Lent Term

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two formative assignments and to participate actively in classes in the MT and the LT.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: An introduction to the relevance of a geographical perspective for explanation of contemporary political processes, and of a political perspective for explanation of contemporary geographies, at scales from the local to the global. Topics covered include: states; geopolitics; empires and national states; citizenship rights, migration and national 'closure'; nationalism, territory and identity; geographies of elections and representation; democratization; globalisation, neo-liberalism and governance.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online/in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of

Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit one formative essay per term of up to 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will include journal articles, but indicative texts include: J Agnew, Making Political Geography, 2002; C Barnett and M Low (eds.) Spaces of Democracy 2004; J Agnew & S Corbridge, Mastering Space, 1995; K Cox, M Low and J Robinson (eds) The Sage Handbook of Political Geography, 2008.

Urban Geography and Globalisation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ryan Centner STC601c

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course introduces students to the intersection of urban geography and the geography of globalisation, with the aim of understanding key references in academic debates, and their relevance for real-world social, economic, and political issues in our cities today. The course offers a critical, human-geographical perspective on 'global cities', how these manifest in different parts of the world, how they matter for distinct realms of urban life, and how we can study features of global urban geography. Themes include empires, development, and cities; 'global cities'; 'Third World cities' or 'cities of the global South'; urban spaces of neoliberalism; new geographies of urban theory; and planetary urbanisation. We examine cases related to migration, sexual minorities, the circulation of ideas, and gentrification. Examples come from both the 'global North' and the 'global South', with the aim of helping students understand when and how these categories may be useful.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: The formative work will be an essay plan that directly prepares students for the summative work.

Economy, Society and Place

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alan Mace

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Why do people choose to live in particular places? Is it simply a trade-off of affordability and housing space or are other factors at play? Through which other mechanisms is the choice of residential location influenced and how significant is the outcome? Employing the theory of Bourdieu throughout the half unit, we address these and other questions, examining the interrelatedness of economy, governance and society in influencing the choice of where we live. We focus on the role of culture in nuancing class-based explanations of the relationship between people and place. We consider how housing choices can confer social advantage or disadvantage on individual households. And we discuss the significance for policy makers of placing the social at the centre of our understanding of housing choices. We use a series of place-based typologies and phenomenon to relate theory to practice. Examples might include but are not limited to; suburbanisation, rural second homes and gentrification.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures in Lent Term. There is no teaching in week 11 due to the anticipated second year geography field trip.

GY209 Half Unit*The Economic Geography of Trade, Production and Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Davide Rigo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economics, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or Microeconomics I (EC1A1 or EC1A3 or EC1A5) in combination with Macroeconomics I (EC1B1 or EC1B3 or EC1B5), and ST107 (or equivalent course in statistics) strongly recommended.

Course content: This course is concerned with economic geography. In particular we use ideas from International Trade, International Economics, Development and Regional Economics to talk about the location of economic activity across space and the consequences of uneven location. This module is concerned with two fundamental questions: i) what determines the distribution of production and trade across countries and regions? ii) which are the implications for economic development and inequalities? To answer to these questions, this module provides students with an introduction of international trade theories, their mechanisms and implications for trade patterns. In parallel, this module provides students with a review of the main empirical studies testing for those theories and documenting the implications of trade liberalisation for economic development and income inequalities. Armed with these theories and empirical facts, the module critically evaluates current trade policy disputes.

The main topics covered during the module will be:

1. Introduction to trade
2. The Ricardian model of comparative advantage
3. Heckscher-Ohlin and factor endowments
4. Trade, globalisation and inequality
5. Krugman's New Trade Theories
6. Spatial Distribution of Trade and Production
7. Trade Policy
8. Gravity models
9. Heterogeneous firms and trade

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/ seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare for group discussion of the main readings and hand in a short essay for formative assessment.

GY210 Half Unit*The Economics of Cities

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Henry Overman

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economics, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is capped at 80 students.

Pre-requisites: Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or Microeconomics I (EC1A1 or EC1A3 or EC1A5) in combination with Macroeconomics I (EC1B1 or EC1B3 or EC1B5), and ST107 (or equivalent course in statistics) strongly recommended.

Course content: Urban economics is concerned with the spatial form of cities and the division of national economic activity into cities, both at a point in time and over time. Three fundamental questions are: (1) Why are economic activities within a country so unequally distributed across space? (2) Why do cities (and more broadly agglomeration of firms and workers) emerge and in what locations? (3) Why are economic activities within cities unequally distributed in general and between areas near the city centre and those near or in the suburbs?

The main topics covered in this course include:

- Why do cities exist and why do firms cluster?
- What determines equilibrium city size and features of the urban system?
- City growth and spatial transformation
- Diseconomies in cities: Urban location, land rents and land use patterns
- The role of local governments

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/ seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Lent Term.

Environment: Science and Society

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Smith STC.421C and Dr Jessica Templeton

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: An analysis of the debates concerning the nature, causes and effects of, and the alternative solutions to, the key natural environmental degradation and pollution problems faced by human societies. The purpose of this course is to provide essential information, first, about the scientific foundations for much environmental concern and, secondly, a social-science perspective on that science, identifying how it is communicated and employed in areas of environmental governance. The course provides both a grounded discussion of physical changes underlying some key environmental debates, and an introduction to approaches from social science concerning the governance implications of environmental science. Students will explore the role of science in environmental understanding and governance through a combination of lectures, classes, and practical environmental monitoring.

The course consists of three sections, although the specific content, order and relative proportion of teaching may change with staff availability:

Part A: Introduction and Themes: this introduces students to social scientific perspectives on scientific knowledge and environmentalism.

Part B: Environmental Science, Risk and Policy: this section examines the physical science basis of current regional and global environmental risks, including geohazards, wildfires, land-use change, and pollution.

Part C: Science and Environmental Governance: this final section of the course examines how environmental science is incorporated in global environmental governance (specific examples include climate change, ozone depletion, and biodiversity conservation). The course concludes with an examination of the notion of sustainability science.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 pieces of coursework in the MT and LT.

One essay/report in MT, one mock exam essay in LT

Indicative reading: No one book or small group of books adequately covers the themes considered in the course, and separate reading lists are provided for each distinct part of the syllabus. Basic reading material includes:

- T. Forsyth, Critical Political Ecology; The Politics of Environmental Science, 2003;
- A. Goudie (Ed), The Human Impact Reader, 6th edition, 2006;

- M. K. Hill, Understanding Environmental Pollution, 1997;
- J. Houghton, Global Warming: The Complete Briefing, 5th edition, 2015;
- M. Hulme, Why We Disagree About Climate Change, 2009;
- A.M. Mannion, Dynamic World: Land Cover and Land-Use Change, 2002;
- G. T. Miller (Ed), Living in the Environment, 2000;
- K. Smith, Environmental Hazards, 2001;
- United Nations Environment Programme, UNEP Yearbook 2015, 2015;
- M. Whitehead, Environmental Transformations, 2014.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the summer exam period.

Assignment (40%) in the LT.

Students may choose their assignment as either an environmental monitoring report (3000 words) or a summative essay (3000 words).

Applied Environmental Economics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eugenie Dugoua (course coordinator), Dr Sefi Roth, Dr Stephen Jarvis

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Geography with Economics and BSc in Psychological and Behavioural Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

The number of students that can be accommodated is limited. If the course is over-subscribed, places will be allocated at the Department's discretion and a waiting list may be created. For further details, please contact your relevant Programme Coordinator.

Course content: This course is an introduction to economic principles in the analysis of environmental change and natural resource use and in designing appropriate policy responses. The first part of the course primarily covers the concepts and tools of environmental and resource economics, such as the evaluation of regulatory and market-based instruments in controlling pollution; moral suasion and voluntary regulation; the economics of renewable resources (e.g. fisheries); the economics of non-renewable resources (e.g., fossil fuels and minerals). The second part applies these concepts and tools to provide an economic perspective on real-world policy issues. Topics covered include the following: cost-benefit analysis and environmental valuation; stated and revealed preferences methods (and some behavioural considerations); sustainable development; biodiversity; climate change; energy; directed technological change and green innovation; health and the environment.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce non-assessed coursework throughout the year that will include at least one essay and may be asked to give class presentations.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component.

For an overview and introduction to the main issues covered by the course, students may wish to consult the following: Field, B., & Field, M. K. (2016). Environmental economics. McGraw-Hill Education.

Quantitative Methods in Geography and GIS

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: GY140 Introduction to Geographical Research or a 1st year statistics course such as ST107 Quantitative Methods (Statistics)

Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to quantitative methods for geographical analysis, specifically regression analysis and Geographical Information Systems (GIS). An understanding of quantitative methods of this type is essential for those who wish to go on to do their own research and for those who will use GIS in their future undertakings. The first part of the course is devoted to the principles of regression analysis as applied to quantitative social science. The second part of the course introduces students to the use of GIS in research. Theoretical discussion in the lectures is accompanied by practical computer classes in which students learn how to apply these methods on real data sets. The practical classes develop a range of skills which lead on to an assessed practical project.

Topics covered:

- 1 Introduction to quantitative methods
- 2 Regression analysis: linear models; parameter estimation; regression output interpretation; dummy variables
- 3 Regression analysis: hypothesis tests
- 4 Regression analysis: classical assumptions; omitted variables; reverse causality; heteroscedasticity; multicollinearity
- 5 Regression: practical applications in project work
- 6 GIS: Introduction
- 7 GIS: Spatial representation; vector data; raster data; remote sensing; databases, joins
- 8 GIS: Queries, spatial joins, overlay and data management
- 9 GIS: Examples

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Formative work is based solely on the first part of the course on regression analysis. A dataset is provided alongside a specific set of questions.

Field Methods in Geography

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ryan Centner STC 6.01c

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course aims to prepare second-year students to undertake field research, focusing specifically on qualitative methods. It is linked to the BA Geography field course that takes place at the end of LT, and offers key preparation for third-year Independent Research Projects (IRP) that BA Geography students must conduct after this course.

Attendance and active participation is crucial for appropriate preparation for the field trip.

The course examines methodologies in field-based geographical research and evaluates their application to different kinds of research problems. It considers the choice of methods which may be used in the student's own IRP, and how to plan research.

It enables students to acquire familiarity with, and practice of, contemporary qualitative research techniques and to examine different ways of, and gain experience in, presenting research results. A further aim of the course is to enable students to evaluate critically the methodological validity of qualitative geographical research as distinct from quantitative approaches.

The course covers the following qualitative approaches to social science methodologies:

- (i) techniques for qualitative data analysis including structured and unstructured interviewing, participant observation, and transecting, including ethics when conducting fieldwork;
- (ii) application of qualitative research techniques in the field; and
- (iii) techniques for designing, carrying out, and presenting field research, including both the course's field report and the third-year IRP.

Topics covered:

1. Ethics, planning & qualitative methods in independent geography research projects
2. Observation & ethnography in human geography
3. Interviews & focus groups as qualitative methods
4. Transecting in field research
5. Field journals
6. Field-course location: History & context
7. Field-course location: Topics in the field A
8. Field-course location: Topics in the field B
9. Field-course location: Topics in the field C

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

Field-course: The course includes a one week-long field trip, normally in the final week of the Lent Term. In the past the field course has visited Havana, Cuba. The destination, duration and content of the field trip in 2020/21 is subject to change, depending on the global situation regarding coronavirus and restrictions on travel.

Students should be aware that, although the costs of this course are subsidised by the Department, they will be expected to make a substantial financial contribution themselves. There are bursaries available from the Department for students who can document financial need.

An alternative field exercise will be undertaken by students who are unable to participate in the above one-week residential field-course.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Short exercises conducted in preparation for class sessions throughout the Lent Term.

2. Observation & ethnography in human geography
3. Interviews & focus groups as qualitative methods
4. Transecting in field research
5. Field journals

6. Topics related to field trip research planning and poster preparation.

Field-course:

The field course offers an opportunity to apply the methods studied on the first part of the course to research on the economic geography of a specific location. Students will embark on a series of orientation and research activities during the trip. In the past, the field trip has visited the state of Kerala in south India, in the area around Kochi (formerly Cochin). Kerala provides a rich and fascinating introduction to South Asian landscapes and culture, both new and old. Kerala is often described as a success story of economic development – the so called 'Kerala model' - with high levels of literacy and life expectancy, despite its relatively low per capita income. In other years the field trip has run to L'Aquila in Italy, a site of recent earthquakes, to learn about local economic development policy in the context of disaster recovery. The destination, duration and content of the field trip is subject to change, depending on the global situation regarding coronavirus and restrictions on travel.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. Field-course: The course includes a residential field trip, normally in the final week of the Lent Term. In the past the field course has visited Kerala, India or L'Aquila, Italy. The destination, duration and content of the field trip is subject to change, depending on the global situation and restrictions on travel.

Students should be aware that, although the costs of this course are subsidised by the Department, they will be expected to make a substantial financial contribution themselves. There are bursaries available from the Department for students who can document financial need.

Assessment: Research proposal (20%) and poster (60%) in the ST. Class participation (20%) in the LT.

This course has three assessment components: 60% is for a poster describing field-work research carried out as part of the course field trip (approximately 1000 words, but with graphical elements and images); 20% is for participation in classes and field trip activities; and 20% is for a proposal for future research (1250 words) such as that you will do if you take GY350, the 3rd Year Independent Research Project.

Field Methods in Geography & Environment

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ryan Centner STC 6.01c, Prof Claire Mercer, Dr Thomas Smith 4.21c (field trip co-ordinator) and Dr Julia Corwin

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course aims to prepare second-year students to undertake individual research projects. It examines the methodologies used in field-based geographical and environmental research and evaluates their application to different kinds of research problems. It considers the choice of methodology which may be used in the student's own Independent Research Project (IRP) and how to plan research. It enables students to acquire familiarity with, and practice of, contemporary qualitative research techniques and to examine different ways of, and gain experience in, presenting research results. A further aim of the course is to enable students to evaluate critically the methodological validity of geographical literature.

The course covers the following approaches to social science methodologies:

- (i) techniques for qualitative data analysis including structured and unstructured interviewing, participant observation, and research ethics, including ethics when conducting fieldwork;
- (ii) application of field-specific qualitative and field-specific quantitative research techniques in the field; and
- (iii) techniques for designing, carrying out, and presenting an Independent Research Project.

Topics covered:

1. Planning an independent research project
2. Qualitative methodology in human geography: What can we know? What kind of knowledge can we gain about qualities of the social and spatial world? And how?
3. Interviews (plus questionnaires and focus groups): What people think, and are able/willing to tell us
4. Ethnography & observation: What people do, and maybe even how they feel about it
5. Transecting & comparing: Making sense of places
6. How to design a research project
7. Field-trip specific teaching
8. Field-trip specific teaching
9. Field-trip specific teaching

Field-course

The destination, duration and content of the field trip in 2020/21 is subject to change, depending on the global situation regarding coronavirus and restrictions on travel.

In previous years, our trip destination has been Kerala, India. The Kerala field course offers an excellent opportunity to experience a fascinating environment at first hand. The field trip visits the states of Kerala and Tamil Nadu in south India, and will transect a section of the Western Ghats from Munnar to Thekaddy, before heading to the Kerala Backwaters and Fort Cochin. Kerala provides a rich and fascinating introduction to South Asian landscapes and culture, both new and old. The Western Ghats Mountains separate Kerala from Tamil Nadu and are important for agro-forestry products such as tea, cardamom, and other spices. South of Kochi is the complex agro-ecological system of the 'backwaters' – a chain of lagoons, lakes and canals along the length of Kerala. Students will embark on a series of orientation and research activities during the trip.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. Students should be aware that, although the costs of this course are subsidised by the Department, they will be expected to make a substantial financial contribution themselves. There are bursaries available from the Department for students who can document financial need.

Regional Economic Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Storper STC 4.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economics, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: In 2016, politics were shaped by regional development. In Britain, certain regions voted to leave the European Union and others (Greater London, Scotland) to stay. In the American presidential election in November 2016, 473 counties voted for the Democratic Party candidate and about 2600 counties voted for the Republican. However, the 473 counties contain more than 2/3 of the country's economic output, a majority of its population, produce almost all of its technological innovations, have higher personal incomes, and are responsible for most of the country's exports. This pattern has continued into the 2020s. This is because economic development is uneven across regions, within countries and at a wider global scale, between countries and continents. Over the past 40 years, in the current cycle of economic development that is defined by globalization and new technologies, these differences have become sharper, leading to more sharply divided politics in many countries. In many countries, a limited set of Superstar metropolitan areas has detached its economic performance from the rest of the national territory. If we bring this down to the personal level, where one lives matters for their opportunities, economic welfare and lifestyle. But places do not have a secure position in the world: they can go up or down the economic hierarchy and, with them, alter the opportunities or lack thereof for the people in them, as well as define opportunities or obstacles to migration. In cycles of about 40 years, the hierarchies of incomes among places can undergo significant change. Formerly prosperous places can decline; formerly less wealthy places can, under some conditions, develop, but only under the right conditions. Those that survive the cycles do so by changing their economic base and many other features of the local economy and society. With such change, the ways we live in places also evolves.

In 2009, the Nobel Prize in economics was awarded to Paul Krugman for founding what is now known as the "New Economic Geography." Since then, researchers have assembled a powerful, unified vision of what causes cities, metropolitan areas, regions, and countries in the world to develop in a geographically uneven manner. This vision brings together theories of the location of firms and households, trade, local labor markets, transport and trade costs, and local development policies/politics, into a unified whole.

There are challenges today for both the "473" counties and the other 2600. Roughly speaking, the 473 have to keep doing things that have made them prosperous, but this is a moving target as technologies change, and patterns of competition change at a local and global scale. Moreover, even prosperous city-regions have internal challenges, such as poor neighborhoods or unequal opportunities for their people. The less prosperous "2600" counties have different challenges: they have been largely bypassed by the positive dimensions of globalization and technological change. Yet regional policies in the US and other countries have not been very successful in helping them adjust to the current world.

In this course, we will learn the theories, analytical tools and data that explain these issues and frame the challenges for development of both prosperous and less prosperous regions.

Teaching: This course will be delivered through live, in-classroom lectures, which will also be recorded and posted online for further consultation.

This course is delivered through weekly seminars in Michaelmas Term where the teacher actively invites student participation in the form of questions and debates, in addition to taught classes that involve readings, problem sets, debates and discussions, on a weekly basis

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: A variety of exercises including problems, reading analyses, use of examples that complement theoretical articles and so on. We draw these up as close as possible to the term, or even during the term, in order to enhance the student experience by making the examples relevant and contemporary.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%) in the LT.

The take home exam involves a combination of short responses (eg a paragraph or so); and essays. The essay questions consist of a list of essay questions that correspond to the topics covered in the lectures. These essays will be grouped into different sections on the exam, and students will choose one question from each group. There will be either two or three groups of questions from which students will select.

GY308 Half Unit

The Economic Geography of Growth and Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Olmo Silva STC 5.06a

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Economics, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course will introduce students to the framework and tools used by economists to study the processes of growth and development, and analyse its determinants. After a short discussion of the basic modelling framework, the course will focus on empirical aspects. First, it will discuss the drawbacks and failures of simple models in which technological change fully determines the rate of growth of a country or region. Then it will present a set of enriching ingredients, which will allow for a better understanding of why different countries and regions around the world are characterised by different stages of development. The presentation of the material will be structured around four main blocks: Human Capital, Education and Growth; Trade and Globalization; the Role of Geography and History; and the New Institutional Paradigm. The course will close with a discussion of how the original framework worked out by economists back in '60s, coupled with new insights, provides a flexible tool to derive policy implications for growth and development.

Topics covered:

1. Stylized facts and a general economic framework for studying growth
2. Physical and human capital accumulation
3. Trade and globalization: their effects on growth and inequality
4. The Role of Geography and History
5. Institutions and growth

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare for group discussion of some readings and hand in short essays. There is also a class debate (normally taking place after Reading Week during one of the students' assigned classes) where students are asked to work in small groups and deliver a presentation on an assigned debate topic.

GY309 Half Unit*The Political Geography of Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Camilla Royle

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course analyses the politics of contemporary development processes and the geopolitical interests that influence them. We will critically explore the assumption that peace leads to development and development leads to peace. The course considers development as both practical pursuit and as a series of discourses and representations. Topics addressed include: Critical Approaches to Development; Histories of Development and Geopolitics (Cold War through Neoliberal Contexts); 9/11 and the Security-Development Nexus; The Geopolitics of Climate Change; and New Geopolitical Landscapes (China and South-South Ties). The course will examine these themes using various case studies from the Global South and students are encouraged to develop their own research interests.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one formative essay plan in the Lent Term.

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low STC. S512

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course covers theories and processes of contemporary urban development from a variety of perspectives – it aims to introduce students to key concepts in, and approaches to, politics in cities, as these have emerged and developed over time. Themes include, but are not limited to, political and economic power in cities, the role of 'elites', urban government finance, the politics of local economic development policy, the multidimensional role of culture in urban change, and the emergence of forms of urban governance. Case studies are largely drawn from cities in the United States and the United Kingdom, reflecting the development of core ideas in mainstream urban politics largely in these contexts.

The Political Economy of Urbanisation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alicia Lazzarini

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course covers theories and processes of contemporary urban development from a critical political economy perspective, addressing urban problems and policy responses in our rapidly urbanizing world. The course examines what urbanisation means to the state, to (global/domestic) businesses, and ordinary citizens, focusing on a selected set of key themes that are pertinent to the understanding of urban injustice. Such themes include, but not limited to, the understanding of the (social) production of unequal urban space, global circulations of urbanism, gentrification, displacement and dispossession. Case studies are largely drawn from a diverse range of cities across the world, providing opportunities for students to contest urban theories that have largely been rooted in the experiences of the advanced economies.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

Firms and Economic Geography: Location, Technology and Innovation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Davide Rigo

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have normally taken Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or Microeconomics I (EC1A1 or EC1A3 or EC1A5) in combination with Macroeconomics I (EC1B1 or EC1B3 or EC1B5), and one or more of GY209, GY222, EC201, EC202, EC2A1, EC2A3 or EC2A5.

Course content: This course aims to develop theoretical and empirical understanding of spatial economic processes in order to study and evaluate a wide range of issues and policies. Particular emphasis will be put on regional economies, business and worker location decisions, focusing in particular on models of the location of economic and innovation activity with a particular emphasis on regional economies. We will analyse the New Economic Geography theories and the agglomeration of economic activity, with a particular focus on EU integration as a testing ground. We will also look at the global and local knowledge economy, focusing on core aspects of a society based on knowledge and technical progress and how this proceeds hand in hand with the enlargement of markets and the intensification of exchange. We will also explore the seeming contradiction that geographically localized knowledge may be increasingly significant just as so much of our world becomes more globalized.

Topics covered:

1. Core-periphery patterns and New Economic Geography theories
2. Formal tests of New Economic Geography models
3. Geographical clustering of firms
4. Spatial distribution of firms, skills and growth
5. Geographical clustering of innovative activities
6. Externalities: knowledge spillovers, networks and agglomeration
7. Relatedness, path dependency and resilience
8. Location strategies of multinational enterprises
9. The impact of foreign investment

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

The Economics of Housing Markets and Migration

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Olmo Silva STC.S506a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have normally taken Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or Microeconomics I (EC1A1 or EC1A3 or EC1A5) in combination with Macroeconomics I (EC1B1 or EC1B3 or EC1B5), and one or more of GY209, GY210, GY222, EC201, EC202, EC2A1, EC2A3 or EC2A5.

Course content: The main aim of this course is to analyse how decisions made by individuals influence the distribution of economic activities across space. The lectures will focus on how people sort across areas; on how they express their demand and preferences for specific locations and spatial attributes; and on how individual decisions carry important implications for the urban/regional economies and their labour markets. The emphasis will be on quantitative aspects and the lectures will cover both economic theories and related empirical methodology/applications. The course will be split into two interrelated blocks. One will concentrate on residential markets and study decisions made by individuals in relation to tenure choice and demand for housing space. Some time will be devoted to analysing how these processes affect the neighbourhoods where individuals live in terms of social stratification and externalities. The other part of the course will analyse the dynamics of local labour markets, geographical mobility, national and international migration and their effects on the local economy.

Topics covered:

1. Housing markets: the own vs. rent decision
2. Housing markets: the elasticity of supply and demand of space
3. Housing markets: real estate cycles and price fluctuations
4. Housing markets: hedonics to uncover “what people want”
5. Neighbourhood effects: do places matter?
6. The externalities of homeownership
7. Local labour markets and spatial mismatch

8. The economic determinants of migratory flows
9. The local economic effects of migration: labour markets
10. The local economic effects of migration: innovation and entrepreneurship

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities. ### Geographies of Race

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Austin Zeiderman STC 601D

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course will critically analyze the intimate relationship between race and geography in the modern world. Through a range of historical and contemporary cases, it will examine how interconnected forms of racial and spatial difference are produced, reproduced, and transformed. Focusing on the material and cultural formation of racialized geographies, students will learn to recognize how racially inflected discourses and practices shape the production of space and how geographical location matters to racial classification, identification, and discrimination. The course will be organized around a series of archetypal spaces: for example, the body, the nation, the colony, the city, the home, the prison, the plantation, the border, the school, or the street. In each case, students will examine the confluence of race and space within broader themes, such as colonialism, capitalism, urbanization, globalization, environmentalism, migration, and incarceration. Since race often intersects with other forms of difference, students will also learn to interrogate the influence of gender, class, religion, nationality, and sexuality on the production of space and place. Texts from human geography (particularly Black geographies), critical race theory, colonial and postcolonial studies, history, sociology, and anthropology in addition to other media, such as film, literature, journalism, and photography, will provide students with conceptual resources and methodological tools. The ultimate objective is to advance a comparative, critical analysis of the relationship between geography and race, past and present, and to explore the conditions of future possibility for anti-racism and spatial justice.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of lectures and classes in Michaelmas Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one formative essay outline in the Michaelmas Term.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course, including works such as: Stuart Hall, "Race, Articulation and Societies Structured in Dominance" (1980); Michael Omi and Howard Winant, "Racial Formation" (1986); Kimberlé Crenshaw, "Mapping the margins: Intersectionality, identity politics, and violence against women of color" (1991); Katherine McKittrick and Clyde Woods, Black Geographies and the Politics of Place (2007); Paul Gilroy, There Ain't No Black in the Union Jack: The Cultural Politics of Race and Nation (1987); Edward Said, Orientalism (1978); Frantz Fanon, The Wretched of the Earth (1961); Cedric Robinson, Black Marxism: The Making of the Black Radical Tradition (1982); Laura Pulido, "Rethinking Environmental Racism: White Privilege and Urban Development in Southern California" (2000); bell hooks, "Homeplace: A Site of Resistance" (1991); C. ### Gender, Space and Power

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jessie Speer

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Building on geographic approaches, this class will examine a range of spaces and processes through which gender is imagined and produced. These will include 1) empire and race; 2) nation and mobility; 3) city and property; 4) factory and labour; 5) market and consumption; 6) home and reproduction; 7) body and sexuality; 8) media and identity; and 9) nature and ecology. Through each topic, students will engage with feminist theory—as well as a range of contemporary case studies from across the globe—to better understand how power and resistance operate through the geographies of gender.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Lent Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: The formative coursework will consist of a paper outline and bibliography due mid-term, through which students begin designing their final essays. This assignment will be marked with written feedback attached before the end of LT in order to help students prepare for the essay.

Sustainable Business and Finance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Perkins

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This course seeks to explore and critically interrogate the governance of environmental sustainability by corporate and financial actors - commonly framed in terms of corporate social responsibility (CSR) and sustainable and responsible investment (SRI), respectively. Drawing on a range of theoretical ideas, the emphasis of the course is on providing students with an understanding of the motives, practices and outcomes of market actors' growing involvement in sustainability. Topics covered include business ethics, strategic CSR, self-regulation, ESG (environment, social and governance) in finance, green bonds, and greenwashing.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through weekly 2-hour interactive seminars across Michaelmas Term.

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a formative issue brief plan in the Michaelmas Term.

Global Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Mason PAN.10.01A

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines the issues, actors and processes that shape environmental governance at the transnational and global scales. Introductory lectures on the global environmental policy process introduce different scholarly perspectives informing recent and current research: these approaches are referred to as subsequent lectures address particular actor groups, processes and issues. Students are encouraged to think critically about the ways in which the regulation of global environmental risk is framed and politically negotiated.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography.

This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

For students required to, or choosing to, submit an independent research project ('IRP') as part of a Bachelor's degree within the programmes' listed above.

Pre-requisites: GY245, GY246, GY247 or GY248 are a pre-requisite.

Course content: Students plan their own independent research project from start to finish on a geography topic of their choice. Carrying out the project generally includes reviewing the literature in their chosen topic area, formulating a viable and geography-relevant research question, analysing primary or secondary evidence or other material appropriate to the investigation (often a case study, data set, archival source, fieldwork observation, survey results or interviews, but also other material), and drafting the findings from their investigation into a final, polished submission. Students are expected to deal with the many procedural and analytical decisions that arise in independent research themselves, with guidance from Academic Advisers and others.

Teaching: In the Department of Geography and Environment, teaching will be delivered through a combination of classes/seminars, pre-recorded lectures, live online lectures, in-person lectures and other supplementary interactive live activities.

This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures across Michaelmas Term as well as methods surgeries through MT and LT

This course includes a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas and Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are required to produce an extended proposal which they must submit during the MT. They will be expected to report regularly to their Academic Adviser on the progress they are making on their dissertation, at least during regular termly Advisee meetings, if not more frequently. Students may also choose to arrange additional oversight and update arrangements with either their Academic Adviser or PhD Adviser. Students are also required to deliver a presentation on their dissertation project as part of the GY350 conference during the LT.

Assessment: Research project (100%) in the ST.

Dissertations should not exceed 10,000 words, exclusive of appendices and other supportive material. Appendices may be used for supporting documentation and evidence, but not for discussion and analysis.

International Politics since 1914: Peace and War

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nigel Ashton SAR M.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course offers an overview of international politics since 1914, providing a factual grounding and surveying the main historiographical debates. Lectures and classes examine the origins, course, and aftermath of the First World War; the Great Depression, appeasement, the origins of the Second World War in East Asia and Europe; the course and aftermath of the Second World War and the global origins of the Cold War: and aspects of the Cold War world, including decolonization, European integration, the Arab-Israeli conflict, the 'American war' in Vietnam, and peaks and troughs of tension between the superpowers. The course also addresses the history of international organizations and of peace movements. It closes with the end of the Cold War and the origins of the Persian Gulf/Iraq wars of 1991 and 2003.

Teaching: Lectures will be pre-recorded and accessible online. The School aims to run in-person classes, subject to circumstances, with some online provision if and where necessary. There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write three 2,000-word essays during the course of the year, two in the MT and one in the LT, from topics chosen from a past examination paper or designated in the course reading list. Essays do not form part of the final course assessment. However, they are required components of the course.

Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, will be found in the HY116 Moodle site. The following works offer useful background: students should consider reading one of them in advance:

- A. Best, J. Hanhimäki, J. Maiolo, K. E. Schulze, International History of the Twentieth Century and Beyond (2015);
- W R Keylor, The Twentieth Century World and Beyond: an International History since 1900 (2011).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Faith, Power and Revolution: Europe and the Wider World, c.1500-c.1800

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ronald Po SAR 2.18

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics, BSc in Politics and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the international history of the early modern period by examining the complex political, religious, military and economic relationships between Europe and the wider world. The period between 1500 and 1800 enables the course to introduce students to a crucial period in international history. In political terms, it covers the rise of major dynastic states, with increasingly centralised institutions and concepts such as absolutism to promote the authority of the monarch, as well as the challenges to that authority and growing interest in political and social reform, culminating in the revolutions examined at the end of the course. Internationally, the period witnessed the gradual consolidation of leading European powers, as reflected in the Treaty of Westphalia (1648), with formerly peripheral states emerging to challenge their position by the early eighteenth century. At the same time, the rise of major Islamic empires in Eurasia and the growing contact between Europe and the wider world provide students with important points of comparison between European and non-European states. The intellectual, religious and cultural developments of this period provide an important context for these major political events. The course will discuss the influence of key movements, such as the Renaissance, the Scientific Revolution and the Enlightenment, which re-ignited an interest in the Classical past and fostered a culture of rational enquiry into the natural world. Yet religion remained a vital component in the world-view of contemporaries, whether Christian, Muslim, or Jewish. This world-view was subject to challenges throughout the period, as during the Reformation, and often sought to impose its own orthodoxy, whether through religiously-motivated conflicts or the persecution / conversion of certain groups. The course seeks to familiarise students with some of the most important issues and current debates on these aspects of this period. While its scope is necessarily broad in nature, the course will help students to deal with the dynamics of continuity and change over a long period of time.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Historical Approaches to the Modern World

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dina Gusejnova SAR M.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available on the BSc in History and Politics and BSc in Politics and History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides a foundation to allow first-year historians to come to grips with the many different ways in which historians pursue their craft. Historians have engaged in debates about the best way to approach the past since the earliest institutionalisation of the discipline in nineteenth-century universities, and even before. But the idea that there might be different, equally valid historical methods is relatively new. Some of the newer methods are often referred to as 'turns', such as the linguistic turn, or the postmodern turn, and their emergence is often accompanied by controversies within the discipline. It is worth noting that the emergence of a new approach does not signify that previously existing approaches become invalid. Rather, the course introduces students to a toolkit of approaches which equips future historians to develop independent approaches to their work.

The year begins with a critical discussion of the two institutions at the core of History: universities and archives. Students examine the power relations they sustain and the possibilities for change in the twenty-first century. Next students consider different case studies which shed light on scalar and spatial approaches to history, examining global, international and transnational history. In the second term, the course explores approaches to identity, culture, and society, including the history of commodities, sport and clothing. Finally students explore non-textual sources. As students encounter these different methodologies and sources, they maintain a critical approach to the work historians do and the archives they use for their research. While exploring these themes, the course also introduces students to key skills required of a historian: navigating a reading list; taking notes; composing reading summaries; identifying & using historiography; approaching essay questions; developing an argument; structuring essays; footnoting and evidence; avoiding plagiarism; and critically engaging with archival materials.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 5 short pieces of group coursework across the MT and LT.

Regular Moodle posts are a component of the coursework for this course.

The Rights of Man: the History of Human Rights Discourse from the Antigone to Amnesty International

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tim Hochstrasser SAR 2.14

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Human Rights are often assumed to have a precise twentieth-century origin in the 1948 Universal Declaration or in the succeeding decades of increasing activism. However, the history of human rights discourse and its practical impact emerged as only the latest stage of a sequence of intellectual debates and real-life struggles in specific historical settings over political, religious, economic rights, broadly defined. Different cultural milieus have produced a variety of contexts for working out tensions between claims by individuals or minorities for autonomy on the one hand and the rival demands of collective obligation and identity on the other.

This course will seek to explore an (inevitably selective) range of these historical contexts in order to demonstrate the continuity of perennial themes of conflict between the claims of individual actors and corporate institutions, whether states, churches, empires or other institutions, while also showing how and when key changes take place in the recognition of rights of political action, conscience, property ownership, gender identity and workers' rights etc. The growth of toleration and free speech, the abolition of slavery and torture, and the role of Declarations of Rights will all be examined, but less familiar subjects will also find their place. The contribution of the conceptual legacy and historical inspiration of Greece and Rome will be recognised as will the crucial role of the political thought of the High Middle Ages, and at the other end of the course specific connection will be made to the recent development of human rights organisations.

In each session a contrasted selection of contemporary writings will be studied to recover the intellectual framework of the discussion and the role of the dispositive political, social, and economic circumstances of the debate will also be considered.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the MT and the LT. Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly meeting, to participate fully in class discussions and offer an assessed presentation. Both presentations and participation will form part of summative assessment.

Formative coursework: There will be two essays of 2,000 words to be submitted in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

The International History of the Cold War, 1945-1989

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nicholas Ludlow SAR 2.16

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The Cold War dominated the second half of the 20th century, but until recently we had only an imperfect sense of what it was all about. Historians wrote about it, of necessity, from within the event they were seeking to describe, so that there was no way to know its outcome. And because only a few Western countries had begun to open their archives, these accounts could only reflect one side of the story. Cold War history, hence, was not normal history: it was both asymmetrical and incomplete. The end of the Cold War and the subsequent partial opening of Soviet, Eastern European, and Chinese archives have revolutionised the field. Everything we thought we knew is up for reconsideration, whether because of the new documents available to us, or as a consequence of being able to reflect on how it all came out in new ways - given that the historical discipline has evolved methodologically as well.

The course will provide an introduction to key topics in the new, international history of the Cold War. The selected topics vary from the study of specific Cold War crises to the exploration of broader themes such as the roles of ideology and technology.

Course objectives: (i) To equip students with comprehensive knowledge of the international politics of the Cold War; (ii) To offer a firm basis for more advanced historical work in this area; (iii) To provide some of the factual grounding and conceptual apparatus necessary to understand the contemporary world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Students are expected to keep up with readings for weekly meetings, and to participate in the class discussions.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The History of Russia, 1676-1825

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan SAR 2.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

May be taken by 3rd years, General Course students and as an outside option where regulations, timetabling constraints and teaching capacity permit.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to the history of the early Russian empire. The following topics are studied: late Muscovite Russia by the 1670s; the impact of the reign of Peter I on the internal development and international position of Russia; the social and political developments of the period 1725-1762; popular revolt during the eighteenth century; the domestic and foreign policies of Catherine II; the impact of the Enlightenment and the French Revolution on Russia; Russia and the Napoleonic Wars; the failure of constitutional and social reform in the first quarter of the nineteenth century; the policies towards non-Russians within the empire; the Decembrist Revolt of 1825. The course is taught chronologically but several main themes are addressed throughout the period. These themes include: tsarist rule as an instrument of both reform and reaction; the relationship between the ruler and the major social groups; the significance of serfdom for Russia's economic, institutional and legal development; the 'missing' middle class; the nature and impact of Western ideas on Russia; the role of the Orthodox Church within the Russian state; the growth of a disaffected elite in Russia; the relationship between Russia and other European powers; the development of Russia as a 'great power'; the policies towards the non-Russians in the multi-ethnic empire; the growth of a Russian national consciousness.

Teaching: Students will engage with lecture content through asynchronous recorded lectures and synchronous live Q&A sessions each week.

Students will be asked to work together to prepare in small groups in advance of each week's class, focussing on primary sources, then discuss their findings and their relation to the week's readings in the synchronous classes.

The recorded presentations will provide another resource for students in advance of the class and will help students to develop the requisite set of skills (which are similar but not the same as a regular presentation); it will also help to mitigate the challenges of presentations for students with, for example, social anxiety considerations.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write three essays, one of which will be done under examination conditions.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Useful introductory works include: E. Kimerling-Wirtschafter, Russia's Age of Serfdom; N. S. Kollman, The Russian Empire, 1450-1801; J. Hartley, A Social History of the Russian Empire 1650-1825; S. Dixon, The Modernization of Russia: 1676-1825; M. Course content: The course aims to explain the history of these regions as expressed and moulded by the peoples and their leaders during a particularly turbulent period in European History. Attention will be paid to two European wars and the Russian Revolution, all of which had a profound impact on these countries' freedom to determine their destiny. The study of the inter-war period will include a debate of the reasons for the collapse of democratic institutions, the emergence of patriotic and anti-Semitic movements, economic failures and responses to German and Italian aggression. The establishment, development and the collapse of Soviet domination of the region after the Second World War will be discussed on the background of ethnic and inter ethnic conflicts. In addition political, economic and cultural theories, which formed the background to the emergence of the independent states of Eastern and South Eastern Europe, will be considered. The course will develop these themes in the history of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Yugoslavia, Albania and the Baltic States. Final lectures will concentrate on the transition from Communism to democratic states. The break up of Yugoslavia and the wars in the Balkans will be considered in a separate lecture.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

May be taken by 3rd years where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is concerned with providing a comparative political history of the major East Asian countries, China, Japan and Korea, in the period from the Opium War to the 1990s. The course is concerned with providing a comparative political history of the major East Asian countries, China, Japan and Korea, in the period from the Opium War to the 1990s. It begins by looking at the impact of the arrival of Western imperialism in the mid-nineteenth century and the respective approaches taken by Japan, Korea and China in response to this encroachment. For Japan, it covers the rise of the Meiji state, the beginnings of constitutional government and the development of Japanese imperialism. This naturally is linked with the study of Korea's failed efforts to maintain its independence; in regard to China it deals with the attempts by the Qing state to introduce reforms and the final collapse of Imperial China. It then deals with the difficulties provoked by modernization and nationalism in the first-half of the twentieth century, taking in the rise and fall of Taisho democracy and the drift towards fascism in Japan and the Guomindang's revolution and state-building and the birth of the Chinese Communist Party in China. The course then concentrates on the aftermath of the Second World War for East Asia, studying the Chinese Civil War and the emergence of the People's Republic, the course and legacy of the US occupation of Japan and the formation of the two Koreas. The last part of the course covers the development of the People's Republic under Mao and Deng, the rise of Japan as an economic superpower and the emergence of South Korea and Taiwan as economic powers.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 9 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit three 2000 word essays in all and to sit a mock exam.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the start of the course, but the following survey texts are essential: W G Beasley, The Rise of Modern Japan; P Duus (Ed), The Cambridge History of Japan: The Twentieth Century; L Eastman (Ed), The Nationalist Era in China, 1927-1949; J L McLain, Japan: A Modern History; R MacFarquhar (Ed), The Politics of China, 1949-1989; A Buzo, The Making of Modern Korea; J Spence, The Search for Modern China.

People, Power and Protest in Latin America, c.1895 to the present day

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tanya Harmer SAR M.11

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: HY239 is designed to provide students with an introduction to the history of Latin America from the late nineteenth century to the present day. Its focus is predominantly on Latin Americans and what happened within the region. However, the course will also explore Latin Americans' interaction with the wider world, including their pivotal and expanding relationship with the United States during the twentieth century. Major themes covered on the course include identity, citizenship and nationalism; neo-colonialism and anti-imperialism; state-building and concepts of "development"; revolution and resistance; dictatorship and violence; democratization and the struggle for social justice. Among more specific topics covered in lectures and seminars are Cuba's War of Independence; the Mexican Revolution; migration and workers' movements; the Guatemalan Revolution and the US-sponsored 1954 coup against Jacobo Arbenz's government; the Cuban Revolution; the Catholic Church and Liberation Theology; Allende's Chile and the 1973 Chilean coup; military dictatorship and anticommunism in the Southern Cone; solidarity networks and Human Rights; Central American revolutionary movements and conflict; democratization and peace; transitional justice and memory wars; the rise and fall of Latin America's Pink Tide; neoliberalism; and the struggle for indigenous and LGBTQ+ rights. In addressing these themes and topics, we will be paying particular attention to histories of race, class and gender with students encouraged to consider how different Latin Americans experienced and influenced the course of history in the region.

Teaching: Lectures will be online. The School aims to run in-person seminars, subject to circumstances, with some online provision if and where necessary.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to do two presentations, to write one 2,000-word essay and one 1,000-1,500-word book review, and to contribute to weekly Moodle discussion forums. These assignments will not form part of the final assessment but they are a required component of the course, and students must complete them in order to be admitted to the course examination.

Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, will be provided at the first lecture and will also be available on Moodle and in the departmental public folders. However, the following works are useful introductions for the course:

- Appelbaum, Macpherson and Roseblatt (eds), Race and Nation in Modern Latin America;

- Brown, From Frontiers to Football: An Alternative History of Latin America since 1800;

From Empire to Commonwealth: war, race and imperialism in British History, 1780 to the present day

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Joanna Lewis SAR G.02

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The study of Empire has always been political. But with support for Brexit partly explained by pundits as imperial nostalgia, and the sweeping rise of the global Black Lives Matter movement, the imperative and importance of studying the British Empire and its legacy has gone stratospheric. This course will bring you back down to earth. It offers a unique and scholarly history of the complexity of the British Empire through its origins, rise, fall and legacy. No subject is off limit. Its primary focus is on understanding the experience of and the reasons for these processes including controversies and catastrophes. It includes histories of black women and men in Britain and the experience of what it was like being from the Empire and living in Britain. Many of the case studies are Africa focused. It is based on the premise that to understand the significant impact of Britain's empire and imperial experience you need to know your C19th. Within the context of Britain's wider political, social and cultural history, the course will examine from the late 1700s the following: the origins of the second empire; explorers; liberalism and racism; the expansion of colonies of white settlement; the role of missionaries; the scramble for Africa; the Victorians and popular imperialism; the contribution of empire to the First and Second World Wars; fast exit strategies; violent decolonisation; race and immigration; post-colonial dictators and the legacy of white settlers. Case studies include Britain and Zimbabwe; Idi Amin and Uganda; the Mau Mau insurgency in Kenya; plus British rule in Somaliland and the fallout of the Somali civil war. The thread of racism, the imperialism of industrial capitalism and the role of key individuals are recurring themes. This was an empire that I believe was uniquely polyphonic, ideological and Victorian, pushed along from above and pulled down from below.

Teaching: Lectures will be online. The School aims to run in-person classes, subject to circumstances, with some online provision if and where necessary.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

What is History? Methods and Debates

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tim Hochstrasser SAR 2.14

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

General Course students must seek prior permission from the teacher responsible to take this course.

Course content: What is history? How and for what purposes do we study the past? What kinds of debates and controversies result from historical study? The purpose of this course is to provide undergraduate students with an introduction to these important issues. We will discuss the history of history from ancient times to the present and how it has changed as an intellectual pursuit over the years. We will think about different types of history – for example, international history, intellectual history, social history, economic history, cultural history or the history of religion – and we will discern their different concerns and priorities. We will analyse some of the most important themes in modern historical study: empires and colonialism, war and conflict, nationalism. We will outline different ideological frameworks for conducting historical research, for example Marxism, postmodernism, and gender studies. We will debate some of the key philosophical questions surrounding historical research: for example, how historians determine facts, and whether or not historical study can ever be truly objective? Finally, we will look at different ways of presenting the past, from traditional history books to museums and TV history.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The first hour in each of the seminar sessions will be delivered as a lecture.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one formative essay in the MT and one formative essay in the LT. There will also be a mock exam.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course but will include the following introductory surveys: Berger, Feldner and Passmore, Writing History; D Cannadine (Ed), What is History now?; L Jordanova, History in Practice; R Evans, In Defence of History; J Tosh, The Pursuit of the Past; M Bloch, The Historian's Craft; R G Collingwood, The Idea of History; T. Garton Ash, The File.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Class participation (20%) in the MT and LT.

The class participation will be graded and averaged across the MT and the LT.

The Soviet Union: Domestic, International and Intellectual History

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Vladislav Zubok SAR 3.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course will cover the history of the Soviet Union, from its inception as a combination of the Russian Revolution and a Bolshevik dictatorship, through the Stalinist terror and World War II, its role as an international centre of the 'socialist camp' during the Cold War, to the failure of Gorbachev's reforms and a seemingly peaceful demise in 1991. Many courses on Soviet history deal separately with politics, social history, foreign policy, and intellectual/cultural developments. This course seeks to connect disparate threads into one historical and analytical narrative by focusing on major issues confronting the interpretation of the Soviet Union and its role in the international history of the twentieth century. The course takes advantage of the extraordinary wealth of new interpretations and sources about Soviet history that appeared in recent years. The following questions will be examined during this course. Was the Soviet Union a continuation or rejection of its Russian heritage? What were the sources of Soviet legitimacy, modernization, and expansionism? What was Stalinism about? Why and how did the Soviets win the war against the Nazis? Can Soviet history be better understood as a multinational, imperial, or transnational history? How did the outside world affect Soviet domestic evolution? Why did the militarily successful Soviet state that emerged strongly from the Second World War then collapse so suddenly only a few decades later? The course provides a background for understanding the revival of Russia's nationalism and use of force abroad.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Islamic Empires, 1400 - 1800

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gagandeep S. Sood. SAR 2.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in Economic History and Geography, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Following the transformations wrought by the Mongols in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, there rose the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires in the Near East, Iran and India. These 'Islamic' empires would go on to rank among the wealthiest and most powerful regimes of the early modern world. Supported by an array of provincial and local elites, they were at the zenith of their power in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, spanning a region which extended from the Mediterranean to the Bay of Bengal, from Yemen to the Crimea. Their populations were producers, consumers, importers and exporters of goods critical for global trade; their location accorded them a vital role in the flow of ideas and information; there was a remarkable flowering of the arts in the period; and conversion to the region's dominant religion, Islam, continued apace, breaching new frontiers. By the eighteenth century, however, the empires had been reduced to shadows of their former selves, with power monopolised by a kaleidoscope of smaller regimes vying with each other for supremacy. This struggle paved the way for the region's later subordination to Europe's global empires, and the emergence of today's Middle East and South Asia.

This course will examine the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal regimes, and the larger world to which they belonged, from their formation in the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries to the 'unscripted possibilities' of the eighteenth century. We will study the ways in which temporal power was institutionalised; the patterns of daily life in urban and rural settings, as well as on the frontier; Islam in theory and in practice, and its relationship to the region's other major religious traditions; diplomacy within and without the region; the prevailing techniques and technologies of warfare; inherited and collective knowledge of other lands, near and far, and the everyday movement of people, goods and news; the signal achievements in the literary, visual and architectural realms; secular changes to the region's societies and economies; early modern millenarianism, fundamentalism and reformism; the eighteenth-century demise of the Islamic empires; and the concomitant rise of successor regimes which shaped the paths to modernity embarked upon.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

The United States and the World since 1776

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elizabeth Ingleson

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This course explores how the United States has engaged with the world since 1776. After gaining independence from Britain, the United States looked westward, expanding its territory through indigenous dispossession and a pursuit of hemispheric dominance. By the end of the nineteenth century, the United States held overseas colonies. Soon thereafter, it became involved in one, and then a second, world war followed shortly by the Cold War and more recently the “forever wars.” Together we will think broadly about who has been involved in shaping U.S. foreign relations with the world. We will explore decisions made by diplomats and policymakers in Washington as well as the voices of a wide range of people who influenced and resisted U.S. power including missionaries, American Indians, businesspeople, women, workers, and immigrants. Over the course of the semester we ask three key questions: what is the U.S. empire and how did it develop and change over time? How has capitalism shaped and been shaped by U.S. engagement with the world? And how has the history of U.S. relations with American Indians influenced the development and projection of U.S. power?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Course content: The Caribbean, while geographically small, has played a major role in global history. Over the course of five-hundred-years the Caribbean has been at the centre of clashes and encounters between indigenous peoples, Europeans, Africans, and Asians all of which has led to momentous political, social, economic and cultural change. Far from simply being a tropical tourist paradise or tax haven, the Caribbean is widely recognised as a key site of modernity through the role the region has played in global historical processes of exploration, colonialism, transatlantic slavery, capitalism, revolution, wars, migrations and diasporas. Critical movements have emerged from the Caribbean ranging from pan-Africanism, Garveyism, Rastafarianism, and multiculturalism all of which impacted Africa, Asia, the United States, Europe and Latin America. The Caribbean has spawned foundational writers, artists, and intellectuals like José Martí, C L R James, Una Marson, Eric Williams, Nicolás Guillén, Sam Selvon, Jean Price-Mars, Aimé Césaire, Frantz Fanon, Fidel Castro, Claudia Jones, Walter Rodney, Bob Marley, Jamaica Kincaid, to name just a few who have provided critical commentary on the region and its links to the wider world.

This course presents an overview of Caribbean political, social and cultural history from the height of transatlantic slavery to the late twentieth century. It especially focuses on the three central themes of American and European colonialism, race and revolution and takes an expansive view of the Anglophone, Francophone, and Hispanic Caribbean. Wherever possible, comparisons and contrasts with Europe, the United States and Latin America are drawn upon. Weekly topics that will be explored in lectures and classes include: European Colonial Encounters; transatlantic slavery and the making of ‘race’; the structure of slave societies: plantations and Maroons; the Haitian Revolution; abolition, apprenticeship and emancipation in the British and French Caribbean; Asian indentureship and the continuation of slavery in the Hispanic Caribbean; Independence, Wars, and the rise of US imperialism in the Hispanic Caribbean; inter-regional labour migrations and radicalism; the First World War; extra-regional labour migrations, Black Internationalism and Negritude; the US Occupation of the Dominican Republic and Haiti; economic Depression and Labour Rebellions; the Second World War and Departmentalisation; the Cold War; the Cuban Revolution and Caribbean Federation; Decolonization; the Black Power Movement; neo-colonialism, tourism, violence, and the politics of reparations.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dina Gusejnova SAR M.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in History.

This course is available on the BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: A dissertation of not more than 10,000 words on a topic to be approved by the candidate's supervisor. It is designed to allow a detailed and thorough exploration of a topic of interest to the candidate. The topic should fall within the parameters of the degree course. It should include the examination of primary sources, in printed, manuscript and/or digital form.

Teaching: Workshops: 2 for second-year students in the Lent Term; 1 for third-year students in the Michaelmas Term.

Candidates should secure in the course of the LT of their second year the agreement of a member of academic staff in the Department of International History (who need not be their advisor or tutor) to supervise a suitable topic, and then submit a title to the Undergraduate Programmes Administrator by published deadline. Supervisors can be expected to offer advice on the scholarly literature, guidance on research and writing, and detailed comments on a sample of up to 3000 words.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

The dissertation must be submitted by the published deadline in Week 1 of the ST in the student's third year. It should be typewritten. Precise details on length, format, presentation and deadline will be issued by the Department through the workshops and Moodle. Candidates may be called for an oral examination if the Examiners wish to satisfy themselves that the dissertation is the candidate's own work.

Course content: The European Enlightenment of the eighteenth century is conventionally taken to be the period in which the disciplines of philosophy, history, economics and anthropology, and other social sciences began to emerge as discrete disciplines independent of state and church control. This course therefore sets out to explore the new ideas generated in these areas as a result of a fresh understanding of man's place in the physical world. But while the course aims to look at ideas and concepts in themselves it is also concerned with the way that they were applied in political practice and adapted to provide new understanding of social structures, or as contemporaries put it, a 'Science of Man'. The chronological context of the Enlightenment is taken to be Europe between the reign of Louis XIV and the end of the Directory in France in 1799. Within this broad framework the following large themes provide the subject matter of both lectures and classes in the Michaelmas Term: the impact of the Scientific Revolution upon institutionalised religion; the emergence of a 'Republic of Letters'; English and French critiques of absolutist monarchy; the creation of scientific approaches to the study of ethics and politics; the political theory of enlightened despotism; the intellectual origins of the French Revolution; intellectual encounters with the New World; the concept of a Counter-Enlightenment; and the move from a private to a public sphere of cultural inquiry. The contributions of Newton, Locke, Voltaire, Montesquieu, and Rousseau - among others - will be highlighted. In the Lent Term the focus will be more narrowly directed to the study of individual key authors and texts and on the impact of enlightened ideas in particular countries, notably England, France, Prussia, Russia and the Habsburg Monarchy. Space will also be found for an examination of the contribution of enlightened thought to the visual arts and music in the 18th century. The course gives students the chance to consider whether or not the Enlightenment was an era of European history that fostered the application of reason to political and social reform, an end to censorship, torture, and hierarchical social models, and a beginning to religious toleration and recognizably modern concepts of human rights, international law and social equality. The focus throughout will be on the writings of the philosophes themselves and their attempts to convert theoretical innovation into practical reform through the agency of bureaucracy and rulers.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

The first hour in each seminar session will be given as a lecture. There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Two pieces of formative assessment are required, the first a source-criticism exercise in the Michaelmas Term and the second a conventional essay in the Lent Term. In addition students will do a mock exam.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course. The following represent basic introductory reading only, and an indication of some primary sources: T C W Blanning, The culture of power and the power of culture (2002); D Outram, The Enlightenment (1995); T Munck, The Enlightenment (2000); R Porter, The Enlightenment (2001); Ritchie Robertson, The Enlightenment (2021); Anthologies: I Kramnik (Ed), The Portable Enlightenment Reader (1995); S Eliot & B Stern (Eds), The Age of Enlightenment (2 vols, 1979).

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

Presentation (15%) and class participation (15%) in the MT and LT. Students MUST give an assessed presentation in either the MT or the LT.

Class participation will be graded across both the MT and the LT.

Napoleon and Europe

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan SAR 2.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. HY319 is available to General Course students starting in the Michaelmas Term ONLY in 2020/21.

Course content: The Napoleonic Empire was crucial in the formation of modern Europe. Much of Europe was covered by the Napoleonic Empire and its impact was felt across large parts of the non-European world. The influence of the emperor and his policies was most obvious in relation to the European international system, particularly through his military campaigns and his territorial reorganisation of Europe in the wake of his successes. However, the Napoleonic era also saw major developments in the legal, constitutional, social, and economic order of many states, whether allied or opposed to the Napoleonic project. Likewise, in the aftermath of the French Revolution, much attention is paid to the impact of the Napoleonic era on the relationship between Church and State and the rise of national consciousness, whether in political or cultural terms. By studying how Napoleon's empire was created, challenged, and ultimately defeated, the course will focus on the nature of power and legitimacy in this era. An attempt will be made to place the Napoleonic empire in a broader context, in part by comparing it to other contemporary, rival states, including Russia, Austria, and the United Kingdom. Finally, the course will begin and end with an assessment of the Napoleonic myth, both in terms of his contemporaries and for subsequent generations of historians.

Teaching: Learning engagement activities will include preparatory small group work, presentations, and live discussion.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful introductory reading includes: M. Lyon, Napoleon Bonaparte and the Legacy of the French Revolution; G. Ellis, The Napoleonic Empire; C. Emsley, Napoleon: Conquest, Reform and Reorganisation; M. Broers, Europe under Napoleon, 1799-1815; C. Esdaile, Napoleon's Wars; S. J. Woolf, Napoleon's Integration of Europe; P. Dwyer (ed.), Napoleon and Europe; P. Geyl, Napoleon, For and Against.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 3500 words) in the ST.

Document analysis (20%) in the LT.

Presentation (20%) and class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.

HY320*The Cold War Endgame

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Kristina Spohr, SAR 2.17

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Based upon a variety of primary sources, this course will explore why and how in the second half of the 1980s the East-West conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union transformed itself so suddenly and peacefully into the collapse of (European) communism, German unification and the end of the USSR and her empire, while China took an entirely different exit from the Cold War era. In doing so, we will ask what was the correlation between "high" and "low politics" in these events and processes? Topics will include: the onset of détente and neue Ostpolitik; the impact of Helsinki (1975) and human rights; détente's death, Euromissiles and the war in Afghanistan; the second Cold War of the early 1980s, pacifism and transatlantic turmoil; the Pope and the Polish crisis of 1980-81; Gorbachev's new thinking and reforms in the USSR; Reagan and Gorbachev: superpower summitry; the Chinese crackdown and the eastern European revolutions; German unification: domestic and international aspects; Kohl, Mitterrand and the road to the European Union; the collapse of the Soviet 'empire'; the Baltic independence struggle, Yeltsin and the Moscow coup; Soviet disintegration and Yugoslavia's implosion; explanations and interpretations of the Cold War endgame. The discussion in each seminar will draw on a combination of primary and secondary material.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in the MT and the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to present one short class paper during MT or LT as well as to submit a practice essay (1,500 words) and one gobbet answer during MT. There will also be opportunity to do a 90min. timed written exercise consisting of an essay and gobbet answer in late LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, as well as a document pack will be available at the beginning of the course on Moodle. The following works are recommended as essential reading: K Spohr, Post Wall Post Square (2019); P Zelikow & C Rice, To Build a Better World (2019); V Zubok, Collapse (2021); S Dockrill, The End of the Cold War Era (2005); O A Westad et al (eds), The Cambridge History of the Cold War, vols 2-3 (2010); M E Sarotte, 1989 (2009); Hal Brands, The Unipolar Moment (2016); A Brown, The Gorbachev Factor (1996); R L Garthoff, The Great Transition (1994); Idem, Détente and confrontation (1985); J Levesque, The Enigma of 1989 (1997); C S Maier, Dissolution (1997); H Adomeit, Imperial Overstretch (1998); R Summy & M E Salla (eds), Why the Cold War Ended (1995). Also students should familiarise themselves with the Cold War International History Project homepage (<http://www.wilsoncentre.org>) and in particular: Bulletins No 5 'Cold War Crises', No 8-9 'The Cold War in the Third World and the Collapse of Detente in the 1970s', and No 12/13 'The End of the Cold War'.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the summer exam period.

HY322*Nazi Germany's War: Violence and Occupation in Europe, 1939-1945

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Artemis Photiadou

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The Second World War was the most destructive conflict in modern European history. At the height of the war, German soldiers occupied lands from the Channel Islands to the Caucasian mountains, from Scandinavia to Attica. Across the continent, societies were torn apart by war, occupation, and civil war. Drawing on key secondary texts and primary sources, this course examines Nazi Germany's war in Europe from a comparative perspective. It looks at the origins of the conflict; the course of the war, from the partition of Poland to the fall of Berlin; war crimes; Nazi occupation regimes; local collaboration and the recruitment of hundreds of thousands of non-Germans into Hitler's armies; resistance and partisan insurgency; ethnic cleansing and genocide; and the aftermath of the war. The focus is not only on political leaders, party functionaries, and generals, but also on ordinary people, such as soldiers, peasants, slave workers, and concentration camp inmates. Particular attention is given to the views and experiences of contemporary intellectuals, such as George Orwell, Raphael Lemkin, Marc Bloch, and Hannah Arendt. The course considers the Second World War as an amalgam of different forms of conflict, including wars between states, civil wars, and partisan wars, and it also addresses more general questions about conflict and violence in the modern age.

Teaching: The School aims to run in-person seminars, subject to circumstances, with some online provision if and where necessary. There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write one conventional essay of 2,000 words during LT and one timed mock exam. Students will also be required to prepare short summaries of the readings (bullet points) for the weekly meetings.

HY323*Travel, Pleasure and Politics: The European Grand Tour, 1670-1825

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Stock SAR 2.15

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Throughout the eighteenth century thousands of young British men and women embarked on extensive journeys to continental Europe – an activity known as the Grand Tour. 'Travel, Pleasure and Politics: The European Grand Tour 1670-1825' explores who these people were, where they went, and the reasons for their expeditions. For some, the Tour was the final stage of formal education; to others an opportunity for sexual adventures and pleasure-seeking. The course discusses the practical challenges of eighteenth-century travel, the political, religious, and cultural contexts of the Tour, as well as the key places to visit and the reasons for their popularity. It also considers what the Tourists brought back with them: from physical artefacts for public and private collections, to new ways of seeing and understanding the world. 'Travel, Pleasure and Politics' introduces students to the actual writings of the Tourists, showing how they experienced international travel and shaped the modern tourist industry.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT and 2 essays in the MT and LT. Specifically, the course's formative coursework will consist of two essays (MT and LT), one document analysis (LT). Students will also have an opportunity to sit a mock exam.

HY327*The Anglo-American Special Relationship, 1939-89

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nigel Ashton SAR M.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Primarily for 3rd year BA History, BSc International Relations and History, and BSc Government and History students, but may be taken by 2nd years where regulations permit. May also be taken as an outside option and by General Course students where regulations, timetabling constraints and capacity permit.

Course content: This course will analyse the changing nature of the Anglo-American "special" relationship from its creation against the backdrop of the Second World War through to the end of the 1980s. It will illuminate the foundations of the relationship in terms of culture and ideology, and also the threat posed by common enemies in the Second World War and Cold War. The competitive dimension of the Anglo-American relationship will also be highlighted as a means of explaining instances of discord such as the Suez Crisis of 1956. Topics addressed include: the creation of the Anglo-American alliance, 1939-41; competitive co-operation in war strategy and politics, 1941-45; the American "occupation" of Britain during the Second World War; the emergence of the Cold War in Europe and Asia, 1945-54; the Palestine question; the Suez Crisis; nuclear relations; the Cuban Missile Crisis; European integration; decolonisation; the impact of the Vietnam War; the cultural Cold War; intelligence co-operation; Anglo-American relations in the 1970s; the Falklands War of 1982; and the revival of the special relationship under Thatcher and Reagan in the 1980s.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

In common with other Level 3 History courses, this course will include the study and discussion of primary sources in each weekly seminar. Documents will be drawn from published collections, including the Foreign Relations of the United States series and the Documents on British Policy Overseas, the diaries of key politicians or officials, copies of documents from the UK National Archives, the US National Archives and the relevant US Presidential Libraries.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

Formative assessment will be through the submission of one essay in week 7 of the MT, and one essay in week 5 of the LT (each essay must be a maximum of 2000 words long and be drawn from a list supplied at the start of the course).

One 'gobbet' answer, consisting of commentaries on two extracts, must also be submitted in week 9 of the LT.

Indicative reading: K. Burk, Old World, New World: the Story of Britain and America (2007)

HY329*Independent India: Myths of Freedom and Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diva Gujral

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Focusing on the early decades after India gained independence in 1947, this course raises questions about the nature of freedom and the tasks of development and modernisation faced by postcolonial nations. The course begins with a brief study of Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first prime minister. Students will survey his philosophy and his style of leadership while exploring the myth of the strong male leader. The course will then cover India's foreign policy, asking students to probe the meaning of Nonalignment, and inspect the character of India's relations with Indians Overseas and with its neighbours, including China and Pakistan. Students will then turn to the nature of secularism in India by examining the treatment of Muslims who remained in India after the creation of Pakistan. This section also probes official attempts to reform Hinduism and improve the lives of Dalits (former untouchables) in India. Students then are asked to query how socialist India was by reading political theory from Communists, Socialists, Gandhians and others. Next, students interrogate the nature and extent of economic development achieved in this period by studying the strengths and weaknesses of international aid supplied to the country, as well as India's own development programmes. Students will then explore how Indians expressed their visions of modernity in the realms of science, art & architecture and the emancipation of women. Finally, the course concludes by scrutinising the Constitution and the conduct of India's first democratic elections. Using a variety of primary source materials, with a strong element of film and visual arts, this course asks students to see India and Indians in new ways.

Teaching: Learning engagement includes seminars, recorded content, small group meetings and asynchronous Moodle posts. There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay (2000 words) in the MT, and 1 gobbet exercise (600 words) in the MT.

HY330*From Tea to Opium: China and the Global Market in the Long Eighteenth Century

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chung Yam Po SAR.2.18

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Did China foster or resist the early wave of globalisation? How should we situate China within the global context prior to the First Opium War? Compared with the Dutch and the British, in what ways did the Chinese interact with the world that had been created by global trade? Had China already become the world factory in the eighteenth century? Using both primary and secondary sources, this seminar examines these questions by looking at the production, circulation and consumption of a variety of commodities that were exported from and imported to China. If we agree that a commodity has its own social life and history, then we can also examine its story in order to complicate our understanding of China's role and significance in the global market throughout the long eighteenth century. This seminar is divided into two parts. In Part I (the first five sessions) we will historicise the political, social and economic background of the Qing dynasty in the early modern period. From week to week, we will identify remarkable watersheds that changed or transformed the way that China engaged in or became disengaged from the global market, covering the China Seas, Indian Ocean, Atlantic and Pacific. We will also focus on port cities in China and Southeast Asia, so as to illustrate exactly how peoples and places facilitated the flow of commodities on a global scale. In Part II (the remaining sixteen sessions) we will study a series of commodities that each fits under different featured themes, such as 'When Silk was Gold', 'Pepper and Parley', 'Camphor and Taiwan' and 'Opium and Power'.

Course content: Henry Kissinger might be the most controversial American statesman of the twentieth century. More than forty years since he left office, he remains the focus of intense popular and scholarly debate concerning the uses of American power during the Cold War. This course offers an introduction to these controversies in the study of 'America and the World' in the 1970s. The course begins by examining how Kissinger's ideas about foreign policy evolved during his early life in wartime Germany and his career as a foreign policy intellectual at Harvard University. The majority of the course is then concerned with the central controversies of Kissinger's time in office as national security adviser and secretary of state between 1969 and 1976. Each week students will examine Kissinger's role in shaping and implementing American foreign policy in a particular theatre of the global Cold War, focusing on the major crises and conflicts of the decade. Students read and reflect on extracts from Kissinger's memoirs as a primary source, in conjunction with the latest historical research on that topic. They are asked to engage with ongoing historiographical debates about Kissinger's record and legacy and to form their own judgements, based on their reading of primary and secondary sources. Finally, students are asked to reflect on Kissinger's ideas about international relations in light of his praxis as a statesman by asking, is Henry Kissinger really a Realist?

Teaching: The School aims to run in-person classes and seminars, subject to circumstances, with some online provision if and where necessary.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Formative coursework: A 2,000-word essay in the Michaelmas Term.

Interwar worlds: the cultural consequences of the First World War

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dina Gusejnova room SAR M.14

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: A political catastrophe of global proportions, the First World War also had a transformative impact on cultural life worldwide throughout the interwar period. Trenchcoats, jazz, shellshock, avantgarde, aerial photography, radio news, spotlights – these wartime notions also represent a profound impact on cultural practices in the postwar era. This course will examine how technological, social, and political changes brought about cultural change in postwar societies, principally focusing on the transnational and global circulation of commodities, ideas, population groups, and cultural fashions between Europe and the world. Technological advancements spurred by military needs, such as radio, telephony, and photography, became available to postwar populations on a new scale. The representation of war atrocities and their impact on the human psyche created a need for new, hybrid, multilingual, and multimedia communication. Wartime disruption and change to education continued to have an impact on schools and universities in the postwar years, intensifying the global circulation of ideas. The increase in contact between previously disconnected communities, mediated as well as direct in places like prisoner of war camps, increased the exposure to different ideas, sights and sound, leading to the emergence of increasingly global cultural fashions such as jazz. Nonetheless, this globalisation of culture also went hand in hand with the growth of new forms of racist caricature and the drawing of new frontiers. The role of international and humanitarian organisations such as the Red Cross or YMCA in wartime changed the relationship between states and societies by introducing a transnational dimension to cultural provision, yet it is noteworthy that this new internationalism was neither disinterested nor did it lie 'beyond' ideology.

The course is organised around weekly themes which will discuss the war's "cultural consequences" through specific case studies and documents rather than a broader narrative of interwar cultural history. This will be supplemented by a systematic engagement with a range of methodological approaches to cultural and intellectual history in global and transnational perspective. By the end of MT, students will be encouraged to develop a research specialism in one of the thematic areas and concentrate on a local, national, or global dimension of this theme. In seminars and independent coursework, they will engage in the close reading and interpretation of key artefacts, ideas, or works of intellectual history, whose analysis will facilitate a nuanced understanding both of the scale and the depth of cultural change brought about by the war. Did the war act as a catalyst for a new, hybrid global culture, which had already been emerging in the age of steam and print? Did it increase the global hegemony of European culture or weaken it? How did America's entry into the war affect the place of American culture in the postwar period? To what extent did the war give greater resonance to previously marginal cultural movements? What was the relationship between cultural change and political radicalism? How did experiences and expectations of gender and sexuality change in this period? How did interwar culture correspond to the making of new worlds in urban and rural settings, in colonies and mandates, in national or diasporic communities? These are some of the questions we will be exploring throughout the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be a reading week in week 6 of the Michaelmas and the Lent Terms.

Learning engagement includes content recorded in audio or video in collaboration with other students, live sessions, small group meetings, asynchronous moodle posts, and informal short presentations. This work will culminate in two independently researched essays based on a curated set of book reviews chosen from the course bibliography and beyond, and an individually researched case study.

Course content: What role did West Africa and West African people play in the Atlantic world? In this module, we will investigate how African political communities formed and changed from the rise of the transatlantic trade in enslaved African people to the age of revolutions. Between c. 1550 and 1800, empires rose and fell, trading patterns were transformed, and social and cultural practices changed in the regions that became known as the Gold Coast, Bight of Benin, and West Central Africa. African empires that had expanded were threatened by revolutionary political rivals. Slaving, which had begun as a marginal enterprise, became the primary export activity, generating widespread warfare and demographic distortion. And ideas and practices regarding gods, gender, and land changed to make sense of problems such as inequality, the abuse of political power, and the interference of outsiders. We will discover how Africans participated in commerce, diplomacy, and cultural production on equal terms with Europeans between c. 1550 and 1700. We will trace how those relationships changed with growing commercial dependence on the transatlantic slave trade, along with its devastating effects on military conflict, spiritual beliefs, and political stability. Through various themes such as kinship, trade, spirituality, and political power, this course investigates how West Africans were participants in the Atlantic world, rather than its one-dimensional victims.

HY334*Communication Revolutions in Latin America, c.1539 to the Present

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anna Cant SAR 3.12

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: From the invention of the printing press to the explosion of social media, how and with whom we communicate has had powerful consequences throughout history. This course examines the idea of the communication revolution from two perspectives. First, how have changes in communications technology altered the speed and nature of communication between individuals and societies? We will look at how inventions such as the printing press, the camera and the radio helped connect Latin Americans to national and international networks and gave rise to new political and cultural identities. Second, how have individuals and groups used mass communication to both push for and resist revolutionary change? Examples include the role of print culture in the Atlantic Revolutions, printmaking in the Mexican Revolution and the pioneering use of radio education in the Andean countryside during the 1960s. The course is organised thematically around print, visual, electronic and digital communication revolutions, and extends from the colonial era to the present day. We will look at the disruptive effects of new communications technology and the struggle between different historical actors to gain control of that technology. Students will be introduced to an exciting range of primary sources spanning newspapers, photographs, posters, film and sound archives, alongside secondary literature from the fields of anthropology, history, art history, and cultural studies. This course will be of particular interest to those considering careers in advertising, marketing and journalism. It will enable students to reflect critically on the relationship between the media and social change, both in Latin America and beyond.

The course has three main objectives:

1. To examine changes in communication systems and their impact on Latin American societies, predominantly in the post-Independence era.
2. To engage with the main issues and historiographical debates concerning the history of communication and Latin America's place within that history.
3. To use a variety of primary sources (printed, visual and audiovisual) to explore the history of communication in Latin America.

History of Foreign Relations of the People's Republic of China, 1949-2008

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Qingfei Yin

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: China's reemergence as a global player raises important questions about the origins of the country's foreign policy and the impact of its international strategy on the Asia-Pacific region and the world. This course provides a comprehensive introduction to the history of foreign relations of the People's Republic of China (PRC) from 1949 to the early 21st century. In particular, students will assess competing explanations, such as historical experience, domestic politics, and the international system, for key events and policies.

The seminar combines a chronological and thematic approach. It begins with two important historical legacies of China's interactions with the outside world: the "tributary system" and the "century of humiliation." It then traces the foreign relations of the PRC from the Maoist era to the post-Maoist period, with special attention to the country's involvement in important regional conflicts, entanglement with the great powers, and relations with the Third World. The last part of the course introduces students to some new approaches to the studies of the history of PRC's foreign relations, such as historical memory, borderlands, migration, and global history.

The weekly readings will be drawn from both scholarly works and translated primary sources. Upon completion of the course, students should be able to critically examine how the past shapes China's relations with the world in present day.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of the MT and the LT.

The United States and nuclear weapons from the Manhattan project to the end of the Cold War

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Matthew Jones SAR 309

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BA in Social Anthropology, BSc in History and Politics, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and History and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This undergraduate level 3 course looks at the way nuclear weapons and the challenges they have posed have influenced the course of American foreign and defence policy, strategic thinking, and domestic politics, as well as wider trends in society and culture, from the instigation of the Manhattan project – the wartime US programme to develop an atomic bomb – to the end of the Cold War in the late 1980s. The course will examine the political and moral dilemmas raised by the possession and possible use of nuclear weapons, the role they have played in the way the United States pursued its policies during the years of Cold War confrontation with the Soviet Union and People's Republic of China, and the domestic political controversies that US nuclear policies engendered. In the latter area we will consider the rise of anti-nuclear grass roots activism in the United States, alongside the place of nuclear issues in presidential elections and Congressional politics. We will also necessarily study some of the major events and crises of the Cold War, including the Berlin crises of 1948, 1958/9 and 1961, the Korean War, Indochina crisis of 1954 and the Cuban missile crisis. Debates over a nuclear test ban, culminating in the Partial Test Ban Treaty of 1963 will also be featured. The last portion of the course features analysis of the international negotiations over arms control and non-proliferation that have featured since the late 1960s and the controversies they generated. Throughout the course students will engage with contemporary writings and study primary source documents which will accompany each topic.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly two hour seminar class, to deliver presentations, and to participate in seminar discussions.

There will be a reading week in the Michaelmas and the Lent terms, and also a revision seminar class in the first week of the Summer term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 piece of coursework in the LT. Students will be required to complete two pieces of formative work for this course - a 1,500 word essay for submission in week 7 of the MT, and a 1,000 word primary source analysis to be submitted in the week 7 of the LT.

This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Students who have this course as a compulsory course are guaranteed a place.

Course content: This course offers an introduction to the study of International Relations (IR). It surveys mainstream and critical theories to the subject. The course also places these theories into conversation with each other to highlight key concepts and debates in the study of IR. We will begin by exploring the history of the modern inter-state system and the formation of IR as an academic discipline. We will proceed with studying major theories that analyse and/or criticize the modern international order before engaging several key topics from various perspectives. Overall, this course asks whether IR has developed based on particular (Anglo-American/European) experiences and viewpoints and whether it can and should become more global in its representation of diverse histories, concepts and theories.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write two essays of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: A full course description and guide to reading will be provided. Relevant course texts include:

R Devetak, J George & S Percy (Eds) An Introduction to International Relations (Cambridge, 2017)

Contemporary Issues in International Relations

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luca Tardelli CBG 10.05

Prof. Peter Trubowitz CBG 10.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations. This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Students who have this course as a compulsory course are guaranteed a place.

Course content: This course provides an opportunity to gain an analytically deeper understanding and reflect critically upon some of the most topical issues that currently confront international relations and which shape the development of the contemporary international order. These include but are not limited to: the rise of China; the war in Ukraine and tensions between Russia and the West; violent conflict in the Middle East; US foreign policy under President Joe Biden; European security and the future of NATO; challenges to multilateral cooperation and liberal internationalism; China's growing involvement in Africa; the international protection of human rights; international financial crises; poverty and global inequality; climate change and environmental security; migration and refugee crises; and the global response to COVID. The course encourages students to engage in debating the nature of, and possible responses to, contemporary challenges and crises in international politics. The course complements IR100 with a more applied policy focus, while emphasising the need for critical analytical depth when reflecting on the origins, nature and implications of current affairs. Students will develop an awareness of the relationship between the discipline of International Relations as a field of knowledge and the practices of world politics.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 formative opinion piece in the MT. Students will then be expected to produce 1 formative policy memo in the LT and submit the outline of their summative policy memo in the LT. In addition, students will be expected to deliver short class presentations in both the MT and LT.

Indicative reading:

- John Baylis, Steve Smith and Patricia Owen (eds), The Globalization of World Politics 8th ed (OUP: 2020)
- Chris Brown, Understanding International Relations 5th ed (Palgrave: 2019)

Thinking Globally: Studying International Relations

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luca Tardelli CBG.10.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and Chinese. This course is available on the BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Students who have this course as a compulsory course are guaranteed a place.

Students for whom the course is optional must commit to the course when they choose it.

Course content: The aims of this short course are two-fold. First, to enable you to reflect on and share ideas with other students about why you chose to study international relations and what it means to study international relations. Second, to acquire and develop the key skills you need to study international relations, including analytical skills, communications skills (verbal and written), problem solving skills and team working skills. Students will work together on the skills required for reading for academic purposes and taking notes; conducting research; writing essays and exams; and succeeding as an IR scholar.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of workshops totalling 7 hours and 30 minutes across Michaelmas term.

Formative coursework: There is no formal 'formative assessment' for the course. A variety of 'formative exercises' will be used in the workshop setting aimed at developing and enhancing a range of study skills linked to the study of international relations.

Indicative reading: Chris Brown, Understanding International Relations 5th ed (Palgrave: 2019)

International Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Martin Bayly CBG 9.13

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Relations: Theories, Concepts and Debates (IR100).

Course content: This course offers an introduction to the history of international political theory (IPT). The course deals with debates and themes prompted by classical thinkers and considers their location within the existing IR canon including realism, liberalism, feminist, and postcolonial theory. The course also broadens this purview to consider how 'classical' international thought has been adopted, adapted, and critiqued by more recent thinkers, including those situated outside of the 'west'. Students will be encouraged to consider how international thought sits within global intellectual history, the impact of world political events on IPT, and its enduring relevance. Topics covered will include sovereignty, the state, and war; international government, empire, and decolonization; gender, race, and class.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totaling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write two essays of a maximum length of 1,500 words each to be set and marked by class teachers. They are also expected to give at least one class presentation.

Indicative reading: D. Armitage, Foundations of Modern International Thought; E. Keene, International Political Thought: A Historical Introduction; S. Burchill, Theories of International Relations; R. Shilliam, International Relations and Non-Western Thought; I. Kant, Kant's Political Writings; E. H. Carr, The Twenty Years' Crisis; B. K. Sarkar, The Futurism of Young Asia; R. Vitalis, White World Order, Black Power Politics: The Birth of American International Relations

IR202

Foreign Policy Analysis 1

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christopher Alden

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: The course analyses various theoretical perspectives on foreign policy, and the means of conduct of the main actors in the international system towards each other. It focuses mainly, but not entirely, on states. Foreign Policy Analysis as a sub-discipline of IR; the problem of formulating goals and choosing policy instruments; the role of leadership and psychological elements in policy making; the rational actor model; bureaucratic politics; the impact of history and identity on foreign policy; domestic sources of foreign policy including public opinion, pressure groups and constitutions; the motivations underpinning foreign policy; the role and influence of transnational actors in relation to foreign policy making; foreign policy crises. The discussion classes combine a discussion of these themes with their application to the foreign policies of major powers in the international system.

In the LT the course turns to an analysis of the foreign policies of a selected group of major states, with due regard to their respective national interests, external commitments, traditional values and other relevant factors. There will be lectures on Britain, China, the United States and the Soviet Union/Russia. Additional guest lecturer country case studies will be included for the remainder of the course. The guest lectures offer additional empirical material to help with answering theoretical questions.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent and Summer Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write two essays of about 1,500 words each for their class teachers during the course and to make presentations in the discussion classes.

Indicative reading: C Alden and A Aran, Foreign Policy Analysis – New Approaches, 2nd Edition, Routledge, 2017; S Smith, A Hadfield and T Dunne (Eds), Foreign Policies: Theories, Actors and Cases, 3rd Edition, Oxford University Press, 2016.

International Organisations

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ulrich Sedelmeier CBG 10.02

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Students should have a background in International Relations. Prior familiarity with international relations theory is an advantage, but not necessary.

Course content: International organizations abound, ranging from the World Trade Organization to the United Nations. These institutions are forums for international cooperation and global problem solving, and they often have profound effects on the everyday interactions of states, with ultimate consequences for the lives of people worldwide. At the same time, the contemporary liberal international institutional order is increasingly challenged domestically and internationally. This course draws on theories of international institutions to explain comparatively the role of International Organisations in international politics. These questions include why states create International Organisations, why states transfer certain powers to them, how decisions in International Organisations are made, what impact they have, why they have become increasingly contested, and how they have adapted to such challenges. The course explores these questions across a wide-range of issues, including international peace and security, international economic relations, global environmental politics, and human rights. International organisations to be discussed include the United Nations, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the World Trade Organization, NATO, the International Criminal Court and regional organisations like the European Union, the African Union, and ASEAN.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent and Summer Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT, 1 essay in the LT and 1 presentation in either MT or LT. Formative essays are 1,500 words. Class teachers will mark the essays and provide feedback on student presentations.

Indicative reading: Ian Hurd (2021): International Organizations: Politics, Law, Practice, 4th edition (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press);

Volker Rittberger, Bernhard Zangl and Andreas Kruck, and Hylke Dijkstra International Organization: Polity, Policy, Politics, 3rd ed. (Basingstoke: Palgrave, 2019).

Assessment: Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the MT.

Take-home assessment (70%) in the ST.

For the summative essay, students will choose one question from a fixed range of questions. The questions will be posted on Moodle before Week 9 of the MT and will focus on the theories and conceptual material covered in the first part of the course.

International Security

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anne Getmanski CBG.8.05

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: This course tackles questions of war, peace and security from an analytical perspective, by highlighting changes and continuities in international security. What are the causes and consequences of war? What explains the use of violence for the resolution of inter and intra-state disputes? Does the liberal order promote peace and stability? What are the implications of changes in the distribution of power and the world? What renders the threat of force credible? Can intervention in civil wars ever curb violence and bring about peace? Do nuclear weapons make the world less safe? We address these questions through a combination of theoretical discussions and contemporary policy debates. The first half of the course reviews the major theoretical frameworks that have been used to explain the causes of war on the world stage, as well as its character and duration in the international and domestic arenas. We use these theoretical frameworks as a lens through which to examine problems of war and peace, and threats to individual, national and international security in the contemporary era. The second half of the course turns to questions of security more generally. We examine political violence, terrorism, insurgency, humanitarian emergencies, climate change, and other threats to individual and collective security.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will submit one formative essay in MT and one formative essay in LT, each essay up to 1,500 words. Detailed explanations and requirements will be posted on Moodle at the beginning of the academic year.

International Political Economy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nikhil Kalyanpur CBG.8.04

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: The course examines the role of power and politics in international economic relations. Besides international structural factors, it emphasises the role of domestic political interests and their influence over foreign economic policies. Major approaches covered include historical views on international political economy, and contemporary systemic theories of international cooperation, interest groups politics, ideas and institutions. The course provides an overview and explanation of the international monetary and trade systems since 1944. It also discusses current debates on trade, monetary policy, the political roots of financial crises, globalisation and the retreat of the state, and environmental protection.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totaling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. This course includes a reading week in Week 6 in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT. Formative Essays 1,500 words.

Strategic Aspects of International Relations

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jürgen Haacke CBG 9.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: This course examines key topics in relation to contemporary strategy. The course begins by exploring its relationship to the field of strategic and security studies. This includes an introduction to the literature on strategic theory, and the meanings of a range of strategy-related concepts. The course will then explore the insights and contributions of some important strategic thinkers, such as Carl von Clausewitz and Sun Tzu. With regard to military strategy, the course offers a particular focus on maritime strategy and the uses of air power. In addition, the course covers strategy in relation to several further topics including: nuclear power and deterrence; irregular war, especially insurgency and counterinsurgency; technological change; as well as ethical constraints. Multiple contemporary empirical cases relating to the study of strategic aspects of international relations will be discussed, such as the failures of counterinsurgency strategies; Russian strategy and 'hybrid war'; geostrategies towards the North Atlantic and the Arctic region; US-China strategic competition; contemporary hedging strategies by smaller powers; as well as debates about recent UK strategic defence and security reviews.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write two essays (c. 2000 words each) in the course of the year, one in MT and one in LT.

IR312 Half Unit Genocide

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jens Meierhenrich CBG.10.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

This course cannot be taken in conjunction with S0309 Atrocity and Justice.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the study of genocide. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, it explores major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role(s) of genocidal campaigns in international politics, inter alia, their origins, development, and termination; the manner of their perpetration, progression, and diffusion; their impact on the maintenance of international peace and security; their consequences for the reconstruction and development of states and the building of nations; and their adjudication in domestic and international courts and tribunals. Empirical cases to be discussed include Australia, Cambodia, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, East Timor, Nazi Germany, Guatemala, Iraq, Northern Ireland, the Ottoman Empire, Rwanda, Uganda, the Soviet Union, Sudan, the former Yugoslavia, and Myanmar, among others. The course is designed to equip students with the analytic tools necessary for making sense of the evolution of the international system from the nineteenth century to the present - and for critically assessing the promise and limits of responding to collective violence.

Teaching: This course is delivered through ten 2-hour classes totalling a minimum of 20 hours in Michaelmas Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to research and write one formative essay (1,000 words) due in Week 7 of Michaelmas Term. Essays must be fully - and carefully - referenced using one of the major conventions consistently.

IR313 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Managing China's Rise in East Asia

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jürgen Haacke CBG.9.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: The main focus of this class-based half-course on the contemporary international relations of East Asia is the management of China's rise. The course begins by exploring China's re-emergence as a major regional power, in part by discussing the economic, political and military dimensions of Chinese power, China's evolving identity, as well as the major aspects of its declaratory and substantive foreign and security policy. It also examines from different theoretical and political perspectives the implications that China's rise has been posing for East Asia. As regards the management of China's growing capabilities, status and ambitions, the course explores what political and security strategies vis-à-vis China have in turn been adopted by the key states that are either resident in or have a significant presence in the wider East Asia, such as the United States, Japan, Russia and India. The course also explores the ways in which China's rise has impacted on conflicts in the South China Sea and on the Korean peninsula, and the nature of the management of China's rise by states from continental and maritime Southeast Asia. It moreover examines how regional arrangements and institutional frameworks for dialogue and cooperation led by lesser regional states have served the management of China's rise. Concepts and theories from International Relations will be drawn upon as appropriate.

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will write two essays with a maximum length of 2,000 words and present on class topics.

IR314 Half Unit

Southeast Asia: Intra-regional Politics and Security

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jürgen Haacke CBG.9.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: This class-only half unit course examines key aspects of the contemporary international relations of Southeast Asia, with the primary focus being on the intramural relations of the member states of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). In order to contextualise these intramural relations, the course first explores the different domestic political settings in which Southeast Asian decision-makers have operated, including ethnic politics and insurgencies. It also examines some of the past interstate tensions and disputes in Southeast Asia and more recent transnational security challenges. The course then, secondly, analyses the foreign and security policies of select ASEAN states. This will involve taking account of a range of additional factors, such as geography, leadership, state-society relations, and economic interests. Thirdly, the course explores how the domestic backdrops and foreign policy outlooks of Southeast Asian states have shaped the nature, effectiveness and limits of ASEAN as a vehicle for intramural political-security cooperation. Specifically, the course assesses the grouping's efforts to establish an ASEAN political-security community. Fourthly, the course focuses on defence modernisation amid wider regional security challenges that maritime Southeast Asian states in particular are facing in the contemporary period. Concepts and theories drawn from International Relations, and especially Foreign Policy Analysis and Security Studies, will be applied as appropriate.

Teaching: This course is delivered through classes totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Michaelmas Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will write one essay with a maximum length of 2,000 words and present on class topics.

The online assessment is a 2-hour online exam in the summer exam period.

International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200) or Foreign Policy Analysis (IR202) or an equivalent course.

Course content: The course applies the theories and conceptual tools of the discipline of International Relations to the study of the Middle East region. It uses the empirical material offered by the history, politics, political economy and international politics of the region to explore these concepts and theories.

More specifically, it provides an analysis of the regional politics of the Middle East since 1918, and of their interaction with problems of international security, global resources and great power/super power/hyperpower politics.

Topics covered include: The emergence of the state system in the Middle East during the inter-war period; the interplay of domestic politics, regional conflicts and international rivalries; the Cold War and post-Cold War significance of the Middle East in global politics; the importance of oil and other economic factors and interests; conflict in the Gulf and the Arab-Israeli conflict; the foreign policies of major Middle Eastern states and the Lebanese civil war; the role of ideologies and social movements: Arab nationalism, militarism, political Islam and global jihadism; state and non-state actors; democracy and human rights issues, the Arab Spring uprisings; and international relations theory and its significance for the study of Middle East politics.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totaling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Two essays of 1,500 words each and 2 presentations in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Students are strongly advised to read before the beginning of the course:

American Grand Strategy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz CBG.10.16

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course explores American foreign policy at the broadest level of analysis – the level known as grand strategy. The course showcases the main theoretical perspectives that inform the study of grand strategy and applies them to historical and contemporary cases of American statecraft. In this connection, we will assess the relevance of the U.S. experience for theorizing about power politics and the implications of alternative theories for thinking critically about American international behaviour. Emphasis is placed on the debates and controversies that animate the study of grand strategy, as well as of the unique challenges posed by making foreign policy in the American political, economic, and cultural context.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term (LT).

Formative coursework: Students will write short weekly blog posts on Moodle and provide an 800-word outline of their assessed essay by the end of Week 8. This will be returned by the end of LT.

Indicative reading: John Lewis Gaddis, Strategies of Containment (2005)

Visual International Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Callahan CBG.9.05

Darren Moon (Co-Teacher) KSW 4th floor

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: We live in a visual age. Images play an increasingly important role in shaping international political events and our understanding of them. The objective of this course is to examine how visual sources - maps, photographs, film, television, new media - influence international political phenomena, our perception of them, and public responses to them. The course has conceptual, empirical, and practical objectives.

At a conceptual level students will acquire knowledge of key theoretical and methodological debates necessary to study visual international politics. At an empirical level, students will gain a better understanding of several concrete instances where images helped to shape international political phenomena, from wars to humanitarian crises, from global social movements to alternative world orders. At a practical level, students will learn how to make a short documentary film.

Teaching: This course is delivered through lectures and classes totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Michaelmas Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay-diary and 1 project in the MT.

MT week 7: 750-word essay diary

MT week 8: Rough edit of film - approx. 2 minutes duration

Indicative reading: Bleiker, Roland, ed. (2018) Visual Global

Empire and Conflict in World Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tarak Barkawi CBG.9.03

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: This is a course about war and empire. Many peoples and places in the world have been shaped by imperialism. This course explores some of the violent dimensions of the imperial past and present. It imagines world politics as a space of co-constitution and war or violent conflict as a form of social interconnection. The course considers armed conflict in imperial context from colonial "small war" through to the War on Terror.

It looks at how warfare shapes (and is shaped by) the societies, cultures and polities that populate world politics. It also considers some of the intellectual traditions that have arisen out of the experience of, and inquiry into, colonial violence, from the thought of resistance leaders to subaltern and postcolonial studies. The premise of the course is that imperial warfare and violence have been generative forces in shaping world politics, well beyond the times and places of specific battles and killings.

This course familiarises students with some themes from scholarship on empire and conflict in the social sciences and humanities. This involves, first, understanding the limitations of the sovereign nation-state as the basic unit of world politics. For most people in most times and places, international relations have taken imperial form of one kind or another. What would it mean to take empire seriously in international thought and inquiry? The course approaches this question by looking at the relations between empire and globalisation in historical and theoretical context. Second, although much scholarship on empire concerns economy and culture, the history of empire is a history of continual warfare and armed resistance. Such "small wars" have shaped society and politics in both the core and periphery of the international system, and often continue to do so long after the guns fall silent (as for example in the case of the US and the Vietnam War). The course will cover the histories, strategies and theories associated with such wars and their effects. Third and finally, the course will explore the intersection between empire and knowledge in political theory and social inquiry. Not only did anti-colonial resistance produce its own theorists, such as Frantz Fanon and Mao Zedong, but in recent decades empire has been the site of new turns in social and political theory and inquiry, as for example in subaltern studies and post-colonialism. The course will introduce students to this work and its applications to understanding world politics.

Europe's Institutional Order

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM 4.09

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Organisations (IR203).

Course content: Europe is the region with the highest density of organisations in the world. This course will analyse the importance of European organisations for both their member states and international relations in general. It will review the development of Europe's institutional order in the post-war era and its evolution since the end of the Cold War. Much emphasis will be placed on the evolution of West European organisations such as the Council of Europe, the European Union and NATO, but attention will also be given to European organisations in the former communist bloc, trans-European organisations, and sub-regional organisations.

Lecture and class topics:

1. Europe in International Relations
2. Building Europe's Institutional Order I: NATO and the Warsaw Pact
3. Building Europe's Institutional Order II: economic integration in the European Community
4. Building Europe's Institutional Order III: economic cooperation in EFTA and COMECON
5. Europe's Institutional Order and the ending of the Cold War
6. Europe's security and defence institutions after the Cold War I: what is NATO for?
7. Enlarging Europe's institutional order after the Cold War I: NATO
8. Integration in Europe after the Cold War: the European Union since Maastricht
9. Enlarging Europe's institutional order after the Cold War II: the EU
10. Europe's security and defence institutions after the Cold War II: the case of the Ukraine crisis 2014

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the LT.

20 hours of classes in the LT.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Independent study based on the readings is required. Classes provide an opportunity to discuss issues in depth in a small group setting. Attendance at classes is mandatory, as is adequate preparation for participation in each class discussion. Students will be required to give at least one presentation on one of the topics on the class schedule. Each presenter should provide the class with a one-page outline of the presentation. Presentations should be a maximum of 15 minutes long.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

Students will produce one short 1,500 word formative essay due in week 6 of the Lent Term. The essay question is to be selected from a list provided to students in week 1. The purpose of the essay is to provide experience of summarising succinctly and engaging with complex empirical and theoretical material, develop research and writing skills necessary for the assessed essay, and to assist in the development of ideas and arguments for the assessed essay. Independent study, based on the readings indicated on the reading list, is required.

Students will also produce a 1.5-2 page outline of their summative essay in week 9. The outline will include the essay question/title, an overview of the argument, a draft of the structure, and an indicative reading list. The reading list must include primary sources.

Feedback will be given to students by the end of week 10.

Indicative reading: Brent Nelsen and Alexander Stubb, The European Union: Readings on the Theory and Practice of European Integration 4th ed (Palgrave, 2014)

Sovereignty, Rights and Justice: Issues in International Political Theory

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chris Brown

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Combines insights and concepts from political theory and international relations theory, and focuses on modern debates on sovereignty, the rights of states, individuals and peoples, and international justice.

Sovereignty and the norm of non-intervention; the contemporary international human rights regime; the ethics of war and violence; the politics of humanitarian intervention; the politics of international criminal law and the ICC; global social justice. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. (10 x 2 hr seminars.)

Week 6 is a reading week, in line with departmental policy

Formative coursework: Students will write one formative essay (1,500 words) due end of week 6; they can use this to develop ideas for the summative essay but students will not be allowed to 'cut and paste' their formative work into the summative essay. Students will produce a 2 page outline of the assessed essay in Week 10. This will set out the research question, an overview of the argument, a draft structure and indicative reading list. Students will receive approval of the research topic and feedback on the outline by the end of Week 11.

Indicative reading: A detailed list of references will be provided. Suitable introductions include: Chris Brown, International Society, Global Polity: An Introduction to International Political Theory (2015) and Anthony Lang, International Political Theory (2014);

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Students will write an essay of 4,000 words on a topic approved by the course convener due in Week 1 of the LT. Full details and guidance will be provided on Moodle and in the first seminar.

IR323 Half Unit

Gendered/ing and International Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katharine Millar CBG.8.13

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200).

Course content: The course examines the gendering of both the practices/events studies as international politics and the discipline/study of international relations. The course is grounded in feminist theory, and provides students with an introduction to feminist epistemologies and methods. Students will discover how 'gender matters' to the study and conduct of international politics through an examination of several substantive areas of international politics, including security, development, and NGOs and transnational social movements. These overarching topics are balanced with issue-specific case studies (e.g. sexual/sexualised violence in conflict; gendering of informal economy) to be discussed in class. Particular thematic attention will be paid to the on-going construction of global/transnational hierarchies that are gendered and gendering.

Indicative topics to be covered:

- 1 Where (and why) is gender in international politics?
- 2 Introduction to feminist theory and its relation to the 'international'
- 3 Gender, epistemology and the study of international politics
- 4 Gender, the economy, and hierarchy
- 5 Intersectionality: gender, race, empire
- 6 Queer theory and sexuality in IR
- 7 Femininity, masculinity and security
- 8 Gender and poverty/development
- 9 Gender, the Environment and Climate Change
- 10 Feminist activism, NGOs and transnational social movements

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: An essay question and outline due in LT

Indicative reading: C Enloe, Bananas, beaches and bases: making feminist sense of international politics, rev'd 2nd ed (University of California Press, 2014)

C Weber, Queer International Relations: sovereignty, sexuality and the will to knowledge (OUP, 2016)

The Practices of Transitional Justice

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jens Meierhenrich CLM.6.07

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Organisations (IR203) and International Political Theory (IR200).

Course content: This taught seminar introduces students to the theory and history of transitional justice. It explores the logic of amnesties, apologies, memorials, lustrations, reparations, trials, truth commission, and related responses to genocide, crimes against humanity, and other mass atrocities. Examining the whole array of historical and contemporary solutions to the problems of 'radical evil' (Immanuel Kant), the seminar assesses the conditions for - and limitations to - achieving order, truth, and justice in domestic politics and international affairs. Utilising insights from political science, law, history, sociology, and philosophy, the seminar will compare alternative institutional designs and divergent choices and consider their real, and imagined, social, political and economic consequences across space and time, from Athens to South Africa to Libya.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

In line with departmental policy, students on the course will have a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Students are required to research and write one essay (2,500 words). In addressing a given essay topic, students must seek to integrate, where applicable, theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen.

Essays must be fully—and carefully—referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Week 8 and must be made in hard copy. Feedback is provided by the course teacher, who is responsible for marking essays.

Several criteria are applied in the evaluation of student essays, notably: (1) Originality of argument: How unexpected is the advanced claim? (2) Use of literature: Has relevant scholarship been digested and put to good use? (3) Soundness of analysis: Is the inquiry comprehensive and logically consistent? (4) Organisation of evidence: Have argument and evidence been introduced and presented in a compelling manner? (5) Validity of findings: Does the argument remain valid when applied empirically? (6) Clarity of presentation: Are grammar, punctuation, and references flawless?

Indicative reading: Indicative reading list:

The Situations of the International Criminal Court

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jens Meierhenrich CBG.10.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: This taught seminar introduces students to the practices of the International Criminal Court (ICC). Focusing on the ICC's ongoing investigations and prosecutions - its so-called 'Situations' - the course exemplifies the politics of international law in the context of one of the most embattled international organisations in the international system. On the foundation of 'practice theory', it blends methodological approaches from law, the social sciences and the humanities. By adopting an evolutionary perspective to the ICC, the seminar raises - and answers - pertinent theoretical questions about institutional design and development of in international politics. Empirical cases to be discussed include the settings of the ICC's nine Situations (the DRC, Uganda, the Central African Republic, Sudan, Kenya, Libya, Cote d'Ivoire, and Mali) as well as the territories of the ICC's preliminary examinations (Afghanistan, Columbia, Georgia, Guinea, Iraq, Nigeria, Palestine, and Ukraine). Students will learn to work with both court documents and theoretical texts.

Teaching: This course is delivered through classes totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of in-person classes/classes delivered online. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

The Rule of Law: A Global History

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jens Meierhenrich CBG.10.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Course content: This taught seminar course introduces students to the theory and history of the rule of law, one of the most frequently invoked - and least understood - ideas of political theory and practice. What exactly is the rule of law? Is it still a harbinger of liberty or just the latest manifestation of neocolonial domination? Is it a moral ideal or merely a means to an end? Can it really facilitate democracy, development, and economic growth? And why is the rule of law compatible with authoritarianism? In answer to these and related questions debated in law and the social sciences as well as in international organizations, governments, think tanks, and NGOs the world over, this interdisciplinary course introduces students to important advocates of the rule of law (from A. V. Dicey to the World Bank) and also to notable critics (including Thomas Hobbes, Carl Schmitt, Judith Shklar, and Eric Posner). Through close readings of seminal texts and a global analysis of historical cases and trajectories, students will gain an innovative and in-depth understanding of the promise - and limits - of one of the most foundational concepts of the modern world.

Teaching: This course is delivered through classes totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term. This year, some or all of this teaching will be delivered through a combination of in-person classes/classes delivered online.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students are required to research and write one formative essay (1,000 words) on an assigned topic and due in Week 7 of Lent Term. This essay will be used to sketch out ideas for the summative essay. Essays must be fully - and carefully - referenced using one of the major conventions consistently.

Global Politics of China

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William A. Callahan CBG.9.05

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and Chinese. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: China has long been of interest to students of International Relations due to its historical role as the major power of East Asia, and its current status as a great power with influence in geopolitics, world trade, and global governance. The course lectures examine the development of China's relations with the world in terms of history, culture, and policy-making, and consider how power works in various ways: economic power, military power, soft power, hard power, sharp power, propaganda, and United Front Work. The remainder of the course analyses case studies on China's relations with the United States, Russia, Japan, Hong Kong and Taiwan, Southeast Asia, and on the topical issues of Chinese IR theory, grand strategy, the Belt and Road Initiative, the environment, global cyber-politics, and Chinese world orders (including analysing science fiction for China's futuristic 'galactic politics').

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of classes in the LT.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will complete two 1500-word essays during the course, and will make two presentations to the seminar. It is permissible for the presentations to be on the same topics as the essays.

Indicative reading:

- Economy, Elizabeth C., The World According to China, Oxford University Press, 2022.
- Breslin, Shaun. China Risen? Studying Chinese Global Power, Bristol University Press, 2021.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 2500 words) in the ST.

Presentation (25%) in the MT and LT.

During the course of the seminars students will participate in a group presentation (25%) and submit a 2500 word essay (75%) at the start of the ST.

It is permissible for the summative essays to be on the same topic(s) as the formative essays and presentations.

Conflict and Peacebuilding

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Rampton

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: A basic background knowledge of the subject themes or related areas would be an advantage.

Course content: This course is intended for those interested in theoretical and practical approaches to the question of peace, the problems of war, conflict and violence, and responses to these issues, particularly in the form of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The course is divided into three unequal but interconnected parts. The first part examines ideas and debates about the concepts, causes, contexts, dynamics and representations of conflict, violence and war. The second explores and problematises the concept of peace and the nature, meanings and goals of peace and peacebuilding. This leads into the third section which is concerned with a critical engagement with the range of international responses to conflict associated with the discourses and practices of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The classes explore the nexus between theory and practice. Although the course and its readings are mainly theoretical and conceptual rather than empirical, students are encouraged to apply the ideas to actual cases, past and present. The course reading list has been selected in order to explore the contentions between mainstream and critical (e.g. feminist, postcolonial and poststructural) perspectives.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas and Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

The course teaching includes film showings linked to some of the lecture themes, followed by a discussion session. These are normally delivered in-person but may occasionally involve online screening and discussion sessions

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Formative essays 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Mark Duffield Global Governance and the New Wars (Zed Books 2014).

Essay (60%, 3000 words) in the ST.

IR354 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Governing International Political Economy: Lessons from the Past for the Future

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Morrison 95 ALD 1.14

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided by IR204 'International Political Economy', will be useful for students taking this course.

Course content: Who governs the global economy? How do they do so? And to what ends do they govern it? This course examines these questions by examining the canonical theories of—and state approaches to—the challenges of global economic governance across the last several centuries. While this course takes history seriously, the primary objective is to use the history to tease out generalisable insights into those challenges we face today. More generally, this course of study will demonstrate the incomparable insights historical thinking offers in addressing contemporary challenges. History has always been central to the study and practice of international political economy. The most influential scholars and practitioners of international political economy have repeatedly turned to history both to explain, and to offer a fresh perspective on, the great challenges of their day. This course is designed to help students cultivate that invaluable skill and habit of mind.

Proceeding from the seventeenth century to the present, it examines:

- seminal theorists' particular treatments of international political economy
  - the ongoing, timeless debate between these theorists
  - the major shifts in the global economic order
  - the interaction between theories and policy in each shift
- The course begins with mercantilism and the 'age of empires.' It then explores the great critics of mercantilism—Adam Smith and David Hume—and the relationship between their critique and the revolutions in IPE that followed. It goes on to analyse the rise of so-called 'English' political economy and the 'First Era of Globalisation' in the 19th Century.
- The course then pivots to consider two major challenges to this hegemony of thought and practice. First, it traces the development of socialism from an internal critique through the writings of Marx & Engels to an instantiated alternative system in the early Soviet Union. Second, it considers the German Historical School's return to mercantilism and the ascent of the American Empire onto the global stage. These clash of empires then leads to the cataclysm of the First World War.
- In the interwar period, the course analyses the failed attempts to restore the global order. It analyses the radical challenge posed by fascist political economy. It also considers the variety of responses issued by different types of liberals. The course then transitions into a discussion of the several postwar orders, from Keynes's neoliberal institutionalism to Gandhi's rejection of Eurocentric political economy.
- Last, the course turns to the modern era. It analyses the trajectories of the postwar global trade and financial systems. It then turns to contemporary issues, such as the post-Cold War order, the 2008 Global Financial Crisis, and the rise of emerging markets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 2 presentations in the MT.

Indicative reading: Thomas Munn. England's Treasure by Forraign Trade.

IR355 Half Unit Economic Diplomacy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Boram Lee, CBG.8.09

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 'International Political Economy', will be useful to students taking this course.

Course content: The course introduces students to the theories and analytical frameworks relating to decision-making and negotiation in international economic relations and enables them to develop the skills needed to apply these to cases. It discusses the roles of the main actors, institutional settings and processes involved in domestic decision-making and international economic negotiations, and their interaction. The aim of the course is to provide participants with the ability to understand and analyse the factors shaping international negotiations in a range of policy issues from trade and investment, to the environment, economic summits and finance.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes including lectures and workshops totalling a minimum of 20 hours during Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy. The course is composed of two modules. The first module (Week 1-3) discusses analytical toolkits for understanding economic diplomacy. During these initial weeks, students will learn about four approaches to economic diplomacy: a) balance of power and coercive bargaining, b) negotiations within international institutions, c) the effect of domestic politics, and d) the role of ideas and issue framing.

The second module (Week 4-10) features specific negotiation tactics frequently adopted by policymakers and important challenges that negotiators face in policy processes.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading:

IR367 Half Unit Global Environmental Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joanna Flavell CBG 10.08

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites, though some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 International Political Economy, might be useful to students taking this course.

Course content: An introduction to concepts and issues in the study of global environmental politics, with special emphasis on the political economy of environmental protection. The course will explore environmentalism and the greening of society through different theoretical and ideological perspectives. Throughout the course, students will interrogate what it means to demonstrate 'environmental leadership' and examine different environmental actors from non-state actors (NGOs and business), environmental movements and traditional political environmental leaders. Students will expand their knowledge on different aspects of global environmental politics, engaging with concepts such as Sustainable Development; private environmental governance; trade and environment;; climate change; biodiversity; deforestation.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Indicative List of Topics:

- Introduction: The rise of global environmentalism in international politics
- Environmental Theories and Perspectives
- Global Environmental Governance
- Environmental Movements
- Environmental NGOs and non-state actors
- Global Finance, aid and Sustainable Development

IR368 Half Unit

The Political Economy of Trade

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marta Soprana CBG.8.10

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 International Political Economy, will be useful to students taking this course.

Course content: This course provides the basis for understanding the current trends in international trade, including the growth of unilateralism and protectionist pressures and the crisis of the world trading system. This understanding will be based on:

- the intellectual history of free trade and how this has shaped and continues to shape policy;
- an understanding of trade theory;
- background on changes in the nature of trade and investment in the 21st century;
- an analysis of the structural tensions in the trading system as well as the domestic economic and political factors shaping policy;
- knowledge of the underlying trends towards the use of preferential and plurilateral rather than multilateral cooperation in trade and investment
- the core issues in current trade negotiations;
- and thus an understanding of the current fundamental challenges facing the international trading system.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

The formative essay is 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Heydon, K and Woolcock, S (eds) (2012) The Ashgate Research Companion to International Trade Policy, HF 1379 A 82: e-book and hard copies available.

IR369 Half Unit

Politics of Money in the World Economy

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jeffrey Chwieroth CBG.10.12

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 International Political Economy, will be useful to students taking this course.

Course content: This course is designed as a component of the study of a global system in which the management and mismanagement of money and finance are matters of fundamental consequence for international relations. It is intended to be of particular relevance to students specialising in international political economy. This is a course in applied international political economy theory. It deals with the basic concepts regarding the creation, use and management of money and finance in the global system. Students are then introduced to the political foundations of international monetary governance. Issues covered include the use of national currencies as international money, the politics of exchange rate adjustment, the operations of banks and other institutions in international money and capital markets, the evolution of global financial markets, the relationship between states and markets in the arena of global finance, international monetary cooperation, and the choices of monetary and financial policies open to developed and developing countries. The course emphasises that contemporary issues, such as international financial crises, international financial regulation and the politics of IMF conditionality, are best understood in a broader theoretical and analytical context.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Michaelmas Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

The essay will be 1500 words. Students are also expected to make presentations on topics of their choice

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus, but the following general works provide a useful introduction:

- B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital (2019);
- T Porter, Globalization and Finance (2005);
- D Andrews (ed), International Monetary Power (2006);

Assessment: Take-home assessment (100%) in January.

IR372 Half Unit Not available in 2022/23 Nuclear Non-proliferation and World Politics (Special Topics in International Relations)

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Etel Solingen (Susan Strange Visting Professor during 2019/20)
Dr Ulrich Sedelmeier

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course will apply theories of international relations to explain why some states have pursued nuclear weapons whereas most others have abstained. What is the role of the nonproliferation regime, major powers, international norms, democracy, and globalization on decisions to acquire or renounce nuclear weapons? How do international institutions, major powers and other states respond to violations of international legal commitments not to develop nuclear weapons? What is the relative effectiveness of sanctions and positive inducements in persuading states to abandon nuclear weapons programs? Countries under focus will be North Korea, Iran, Japan, Taiwan, Iraq, Libya, South Korea, India, Pakistan, Israel, and Egypt, among others. There will be simulations of negotiations geared to dissuade actual or potential nuclear proliferators from pursuing such designs.

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: 1 x Essay (1,500 words) and 1 x Essay Plan (1 page) in the Lent Term.

IR373 Half Unit

China and the Global South

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Chris Alden 9th Floor IDEAS, PAN

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

This course has a limited number of places (it is capped).

Pre-requisites: Foreign Policy Analysis (IR202)

Course content: This course focuses on the substantive role that China plays in the Global South where its preponderance of material power and putative developing country status confers upon it a dominant position in bilateral and regional political economies. China's economic position, coupled to an astute use of finances flowing from its mercantilist policies, has enabled it to become the leading trading partner and a significant investor in the developing world. Moreover, the Global South is increasingly figuring in Beijing's expanding security interests and soft power provisions. Interpretations embedded in prevailing academic discourses like socialisation, threat and peaceful rise take on new meaning when studied through the lens of ties with developing countries. Understanding how dynamics in this relationship are impacting upon a host of global and contemporary issues (BRICs, multilateralism, peacekeeping, the environment) is crucial to the shape of the 21st century.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Michaelmas Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy. The course is delivered in cooperation with Dr. Alvaro Mendez (PAN 9.01C).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 book review in MT.

Indicative reading: Chris Alden & Lu Jiang. (2019). Brave new world: debt, industrialization and security in China–Africa relations. International Affairs, 95(3), 641-657. doi:<https://doi.org/10.1093/ia/iiz083>

Assessment: Presentation (25%) in the MT.

Online assessment (75%) in January.

During the course of the seminars students will participate in a group presentation (25%) and sit a 2-hour timed online examination.

IR377 Half Unit*The Politics of Peace & Security in Sub-Saharan Africa

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephanie Schwartz

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: This course explores the politics of peace, civil wars, and security in sub-Saharan Africa as it relates to the broader global context. Using post-independence sub-Saharan Africa as the background, we will explore the causes of civil war and determinants of peace, as well as the different political responses embraced by African leaders and politicians to other security challenges characteristic of the post-colonial period. We will study with a range of cases, including Rwanda, Burundi, Sudan and South Sudan, through which we will engage topics such as the relationship between identity and conflict, the origins of insurgency, conflict prevention, and post-conflict justice and reconciliation.

Teaching: This course is delivered through seminars totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Lent Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students should post 2 discussion questions each week to Moodle. They will also do a written response to a film assigned for viewing. Through the film response the students will practice applying theories learned in class to analyze the film in response to a guided prompt. This type of analysis will be central to their summative take-home assessment.

Critical War Studies

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tarak Barkawi CBG.9.03

Tarak Barkawi is Professor in the Department of International Relations at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He studies warfare between the West and the non-European world, past and present. He writes on the pivotal place of armed force in globalization, imperialism, and modernization, and on the neglected significance of war in social and political theory. He is author of Soldiers of Empire, Globalization and War and many scholarly articles.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: War transforms the social and political orders in which we live, just as it obliterates our precious certainties. Nowhere is this more obvious than in the fate of truths offered about war itself. War regularly undermines expectations, strategies and theories, and along with them the credibility of those in public life and the academy presumed to speak with authority about it. This course begins with the recognition that the unsettling character of war has been a profound opportunity for scholarship. For it is precisely in war's disordering and unsettling of politics and identities that the socially and historically generative powers of war are exposed. In bending, stretching and even breaking institutions and societies, war reveals them to us anew and offers perspectives obscured in times of peace. At the same time, these disruptions shape and inform the course and character of war. This violent but fecund juncture between war, society and politics is what this course seeks to understand.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Michaelmas Term. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy. This course consists of three elements all taught in Michaelmas: a lecture series, classes, and a film series. This course is an advanced undergraduate option. It is a text-based course and not a survey course. That means we will concentrate on a few required readings—read carefully and in-depth. Rather than being given a list of readings for you to select from, you will be given specific, required readings that everyone must read. For each class, you will be doing required reading of approximately half a book, sometimes more. For each lecture, you are given one recommended background reading. In planning your time, you should read first for the class and second for the lectures. It is essential that you do the required reading for each class before class. The lecture series provides concepts, ideas and histories—intellectual scaffolding—against which to read the course texts. It is an essential and helpful aid to your reading.

The film series, attendance at which is voluntary, provides an opportunity for sociability and the exploration of course themes in popular cultures.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Note: required texts change every year

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the LT.

The course will be 100% assessed by essay due after the end of term and based on a topic of the student's choice. Students will be given a list of questions to work from and may choose a question provided or develop their own question (based on course texts) in discussion with the course coordinator.

IR379 Half Unit

Russia in World Politics

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tomila Lankina CBG 10.13

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: None. If students have not taken Foreign Policy Analysis (IR202), they can consider attending the lecture of Foreign Policy Analysis (IR202) to enhance their knowledge and understanding.

Course content: The course offers an analysis of key issues in the development of Russian domestic, foreign and security policies and the role that it plays in global politics. The course covers the various factors shaping Russian domestic, foreign and security policy. It will explore both the domestic aspects of politics, political regime and protest; and foreign policy and security issues, such as Russia's recent military build-up, economic power projection, the geopolitics of oil and gas, as well as soft power and soft security aspects of Russia's foreign policy, including the role of the media and propaganda; hybrid warfare; the role of ideas and norms; we will also explore the historical legacies influencing Russian politics and political regime and how Russia sees the world and its neighbours. Each of the ten topics covered will speak to the major theoretical debates on the factors shaping domestic and foreign policy and students will be encouraged to evaluate the merits of the various theories based on available evidence. The background class focuses on the domestic and international context preceding Russia's emergence as a successor to the Soviet Union. The subsequent sessions analyse post-communist Russian domestic and foreign policy with a special focus on the President Putin era, including the consolidation of authoritarian rule, domestic civil society and protest, the military interventions in Georgia, the invasion of Ukraine, the securitisation of Russia's media and Russia's attempts to influence politics in the EU and beyond.

Some of the questions to be addressed in the course of the ten classes are: How have domestic institutions and political regime changed following the collapse of the USSR? What is the nature of Russia's political regime type and in what ways does it matter for Russia's socio-economic development? What are the impacts of domestic politics on foreign policy making and thinking? How has Russia sought to use traditional security mechanisms, hard power and soft power to influence the "near abroad"? Has Russia's war in Ukraine suggested that a new Iron Curtain has descended isolating Russia from the West? What are the key mechanisms of Western influence on Russia's foreign policy? What kind of a relationship has Russia forged with China and what are the factors shaping this relationship? What drives the nuances of Russia's policy in the Middle East? What role do energy politics play in Russia's relations with its neighbours and in Russia's foreign policy globally?

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the MT.

This course is delivered through classes totalling a minimum of 20 hours across Michaelmas Term. Students are expected to engage in independent study, using the reading list to deepen their knowledge and understanding of the subject.

Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT. The class presentation will be on the same topic as the topic covered that week and will help students better understand the subject of that seminar. Each student will write a review of one of the required readings in no more than 300 words.

IR380 Half Unit

The Politics of Inequality and Development

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Victoria Paniagua

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Economy (IR206).

Some background knowledge of international political economy, such as that provided in IR206 International Political Economy, will be useful to students taking this course.

Course content: This course examines the interaction between markets and states to understand the causes and consequences of economic development and inequality. We will explore these topics in light of contemporary theoretical, substantive, and methodological debates within the fields of international and comparative political economy. The empirical focus of this course is the developing world. We will cover case studies in a variety of regions, including Latin America, Africa, Middle East, Asia, and Eastern Europe. However, because the approach of this course is comparative, historical, and analytical, to disentangle patterns in these regions we will also discuss the trajectories of advanced economies such as the United States and England. The course is divided in two main parts. The first one is dedicated to exploring within country income and wealth inequalities. We will address the following questions:

What are the political (and market) forces behind inequality? What can be done to curb down inequality and what is the role of the state in this process? How do citizens' preferences affect and are affected by inequality? Furthermore, we will examine the political consequences associated with the growing spread of income and wealth inequalities, particularly, its effects on regime type, democratic backsliding, the political influence of the top 1%, and recent trends in political polarization. The second part of the course is devoted to addressing between countries economic inequality, in other words, why are some countries wealthier than others? To answer this question, we will study why some countries have developed earlier (and more) than others and why some have fell behind.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. There will be 10 weekly lectures of one hour each, shared with IR480. In addition, starting in Week 1, lectures will be followed by a weekly one hour class, where the required readings and lecture content will be discussed. Students are expected to read all required readings before attending the lectures and to actively engage during both the lecture and the seminar sessions.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework includes acting as a discussion leader; and submitting a discussion comment and question.

Discussion leader role:

Students will choose 1 (one) week in which they would like to perform as the discussion leader during the seminar session. The discussion leader will: (1) propose a set of 2 or 3 questions related to the required readings for discussion in class; (2) read in advance the pre-seminar comments posted on the Moodle forum (see below) and integrate these into our conversation; (3) moderate the discussion; (4) draw a brief summary/conclusion at the end of the discussion.

Students will choose 4 (four) weeks in which they will submit a brief comment, critique and/or question on the week readings (max. 100 words). It should be uploaded to the seminar group Moodle forum at least 24 hours before the seminar session. These brief comments will be used by the instructor and discussion leader as input for in-class discussion.

Assessment: Presentation (10%) in the LT.

Take-home assessment (90%) in the ST.

Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese, BSc in International Relations and History and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Priority will be given to students on the BSc in International Relations programme.

Course content: The number of forcibly displaced people has nearly doubled in the last decade. Amid this rise in forced migration, how are states, international organizations, and local communities responding? What is causing this increase in displacement and what are the political consequences - both in the Global North and the Global South? What are the everyday realities of being forcibly displaced? This course takes on these questions as we examine the politics of displacement and the evolution of the global asylum and refugee protection regime.

The course begins with an overview of the historical and legal origins of the asylum and refugee protection regime, including who qualifies as a refugee and asylum-seeker under international law and why. We then explore the disconnect between this foundation and the realities of displacement and mobility today. The course continues with an analysis of the causes and consequences of displacement, followed by an examination of the evolution of state, international and local responses to asylum-seeking. Throughout the course we pay particular attention to the politics of refugee and IDP hosting in the Global South, where the majority of displaced persons live, as well as refugees' and migrants' own perspectives on the experience and politics of displacement.

By the end of the course students will be able to articulate complex issues related to forced migration and global asylum governance; synthesize and critique scholarly work from a variety of disciplines - including political science, sociology, and anthropology; and analyze the causes of displacement and state responses to asylum-seeking.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 16 hours of classes in the MT. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6, in line with departmental policy.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study and 1 presentation in the MT.

Students will complete a 1-page case study proposal for feedback from the instructor by Week 4, and will also conduct a class presentation on the same topic. Both of these assessments will elicit feedback to aid the student in the preparation of the summative case study submission.

Case Study Proposal Memo: Students will submit a 1-page written case study proposal memo in Week 4 of the course, outlining their proposed case, the rationale for case selection, and a plan for its analysis, that aligns with course themes.

Class Presentations: students will do a seminar presentation on the topic of their case study. Students will present for a maximum of 8-10 minutes. This builds skills in summarising complex arguments, prioritising what is most important, and building oral and written arguments and presentation skills.

The rest of the class are required to engage critically with the presentation, and pose questions and offer feedback. They build skills in active listening to the oral presentation and responding to complex arguments in real-time. Students are provided with oral feedback on their presentations, so that other students can learn from this experience.

IR398

Dissertation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luca Tardelli CBG.10.05

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and Chinese and BSc in Politics and International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Candidates submit a dissertation of up to 10,000 words, excluding bibliography, but including notes and any appendices and tables, in the first week of Summer Term. The subject of the dissertation can be anything within the field of International Relations that the International Relations Faculty are able to supervise. Candidates submit the title of their dissertation for approval by the IR398 Course Co-ordinator before the end of the Michaelmas Term, and an outline of their project early in Lent Term. Students also receive written feedback from their supervisors on a 2,000-3,000 word dissertation sample as long as this is submitted by the end of the Lent Term.

Dissertations offer students the chance to enhance their knowledge through an in-depth analysis of a question in an area of particular interest to them. The dissertation assesses different skills from examinations. The aim is to develop the ability to make independent judgements and decisions about a promising and feasible research question, and on selecting and analysing the most important and relevant material. The outcome will be a coherent, sustained, systematically developed, and well supported argument on a topic, typically combining empirical material and theoretical insights, within the field of International Relations. The dissertation may draw entirely on secondary literature. There is no requirement for the use of primary sources and original material such as unpublished documents, archives, or personal interviews.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes, workshops, and lectures totalling a minimum of 10 hours and 30 minutes across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. In addition to formal teaching, students will see their dissertation supervisors regularly during both terms (usually twice per term, for a maximum of six times in total over the course of the year) for meetings of around 30 minutes each. The IR398 Course Co-ordinator will also run small group tutorials in the Lent Term and will be available for consultation throughout the year to help students address problems as and when they arise.

IR398 contains lectures on how to formulate a research question, how to structure a dissertation, and how to find and use evidence. Classes explore how questions are formed, how literature is used, and how evidence is deployed. Workshops and tutorials are a chance for students to discuss outlines, and receive guidance on issues of structure, research design and evidence. There may also be a chance for some students to present their work.

Advice and Assistance: The IR398 Course Co-ordinator will provide guidance on the nature and process of writing an IR dissertation, through the course lectures, classes and workshops, and office hours. They will also be available for consultation throughout the year to help students address problems as and when they arise.

While students will receive ample guidance and feedback on their work, the dissertation is an independent project. As such, although students will have a supervisor, and colleagues both in IR and other departments can be approached for informal advice, no Faculty member can read a full draft of the thesis.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

LL100

Foundational Legal Skills

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sonya Onwu NAB 5.07

Additional teacher TBA

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: A non-assessed course to help students develop their legal skills. By the end of this course, students will be able to:

1. actively read legal material, and produce comprehensive working notes.
2. engage in independent, self-directed research.
3. critically evaluate a range of legal materials.
4. present clear written arguments in a structured, logical and well-reasoned way, and supported by substantiating evidence.
5. identify and apply the relevant law to the facts of a problem scenario in a structured and methodical manner.
6. assess and reflect upon their own skills development, identify areas for improvement, and the appropriate mechanisms for doing so.

Teaching: An initial two lectures will take place during Induction Week, followed by 10 weekly 45 minute classes.

This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Each week, students will be asked to upload a sample of work. Students will receive feedback in-class on their work.

Indicative reading: Readings will be taken from the assigned weekly material for the LLB first year core courses to avoid students having to read additional pieces. A guide to readings will be provided at the start of the course.

LL104

Law of Obligations

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Emmanuel Voyiakis

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Introduction to the law of contract, including formation of contracts, express and implied terms, misrepresentation, exclusion clauses, remedies for breach of contract. Introduction to the principles of the law of restitution. Introduction to the law of torts: negligence and other specific torts, causation, defences, remedies for torts.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term in the form of a lecture (every week) and one hour class (week 2 onwards). This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

The lectures will be given by a number of different teachers. The basic work is done through the classes, and the lectures are designed to introduce the topics on the syllabus.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce up to 4 assignments through the year, set and marked by their class teacher.

Indicative reading: A general reading list will be issued at the commencement of each term. Students should follow the advice of their course convenor as to the textbooks to be read.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Course content: The course covers: the conceptual framework of public law; central government and the executive; parliament; multi-layered government (the European Union, devolution and local government); judicial review; and civil liberties and human rights.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term in the form of a lecture (every week) and one hour class (week 2 onwards). This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Other assignments will be set by the class teacher or the course convenor, as required.

Indicative reading: Basic texts: Martin Loughlin, The British Constitution: A Very Short Introduction (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2013); A. Le Sueur, M. Sunkin & J. Murkens, Public Law: Text, Cases, and Materials (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 4th edn, 2019).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL108*Criminal Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Abenaa Owusu-Bempah

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the 'general part' of criminal law and selected areas of the special part of criminal law in the context of theories of the aims and functions of criminalisation. The course will discuss the limits to criminalisation; the conceptual framework of criminal liability (conduct, responsibility, capacity, defences); homicide; sexual offences; non-fatal violence against the person; property offences (with particular reference theft, fraud, robbery and burglary); secondary participation in crime; attempts, conspiracy, encouragement; 'pre-inchoate' offences; regulatory offences.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term in the form of a lecture (every week) and class (week 2 onwards). This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: A minimum of two pieces of written work will be required (one per term), usually one essay and one problem.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed at the start of the course. A number of criminal law textbooks are available, and students will be expected to read the relevant parts of the most recent editions of one of these, e.g. Nicola Lacey, Oliver Quick & Celia Wells, Reconstructing Criminal Law; Andrew Ashworth and Jeremy Horder, Principles of Criminal Law; Jonathan Herring, Criminal Law: Text, Cases and Materials; M. Allen, Introduction to Criminal Law. They will also be expected to read all cases and materials marked as primary on the detailed reading lists provided.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL109 Half Unit*Introduction to the Legal System

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nicola Lacey and Prof Neil Duxbury Course Convenor - Nicola Lacey

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course is designed as a foundation course to familiarise law students with the basic characteristics and functioning of legal systems. While most LLB courses focus on particular areas of law, covering the main doctrinal rules and principles which govern them, this course is distinctive in equipping students with three further important tools for a rounded understanding of law, its practical operation, and its impact in society. These are, first a detailed study of the rules, protocols and conventions which govern the judicial interpretation and development of law in the English legal system; second a comparative and historical analysis of the very different way in which those rules and protocols have developed in both the civilian systems of the continent of Europe, and the common law system of the United States, implying key difference in the constitutions of these legal systems; third, an examination of the distinctive ways in which legal rules and processes are embedded in particular institutional structures and traditions, and of the ways in which these institutions have been changing over the last 30 years, with implications for the social impact of law and for the relationship between law and other social rules, conventions and regulatory systems.

The course will include the following topics (though the order of sessions 5-11 may change):

- 1 What is law? (NL)
- 2 Reading Law: Statutory interpretation (ND)
- 3 Reading Law: Common law and judicial precedent (ND)
- 4 The Civilian Tradition (JB)
- 5 Adjudication and Due Process: the role of the trial (NL)
- 6 Reading Week
- 7 The Judiciary: Does it matter who the judges are? 160 (NL)
- 8 Developments in Criminal Justice; Law and Legitimacy (NL)
- 9 Developments in Civil Justice; Alternative forms of Dispute Resolution (NL)
- 10 Social Ordering beyond Formal Law: Legal Pluralism (NL)
- 11 Legal Decision-making beyond Lawyers: Lay Participation 160 (NL)

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term in the form of a lecture (every week) and one hour class (week 2 onwards). This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: This is a Moodle course, with the course materials, lecture outlines, class reading and suggestions for further reading set out through links to relevant sites. Students who would like to do some introductory reading are encouraged to read Tom Bingham, The Rule of Law (2010: Penguin 2011); The Secret Barrister (Macmillan 2018: Pan Macmillan Paperback 2019); Alexandra Wilson, In Black and White (Hachette 2020).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL201*Law and State Power

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Thomas Poole

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: Outline:

The course provides an opportunity to take a deep dive into the modern state. We investigate how the state organises and exercises power, and how such power is legitimated and controlled. At all times we remain alert to the pathologies of state power - corruption, mismanagement, capture by elites - and what might be done to prevent them. Classic themes surrounding law and state power - such as tensions between technocracy and democracy, bureaucratic rationality and charismatic authority, agency autonomy and political accountability - are given contemporary resonance by studying topical themes of importance, such as populism and illiberal democracy, and the politics of pandemic management.

Syllabus:

Theories of power. The nature of the modern state. Law and government. Power and prerogative. Soft law: the role of policies and guidance in governance structures. Technocracy and democracy. Corruption and administration. The 'contracting state'. Risk and the regulatory state. Crisis management. The legal control of state power. Administrative justice.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, in the form of a two hour seminar. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative essay per term.

Indicative reading: C. Harlow & R. Rawlings, Law and Administration (4th ed., 2021).

Assessment: Online assessment (67%) in the ST Essay (33%, 4000 words) in the ST

LL202

Commercial Contracts

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Macmahon (Michaelmas Term) and Dr Joseph Spooner (Lent and Summer Terms)

Additional Teachers: Professor Hugh Collins

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Completion of LL104 - Law of Obligations is normally a prerequisite.

Course content: LL202 Commercial Contracts is a study of the general principles of English law governing commercial contracts. It approaches the topic in two parts. Part 1, 'Fundamentals of Commercial Contracting' is effectively a study of advanced contract law, and examines several important aspects of, or themes in, the law's regulation of commercial contracting. The topics are chosen because of their intrinsic interest, and because of the opportunity offered for an advanced contextualised examination of contract law. This part explores significant aspects of contract law such as contractual interpretation and the doctrines of mistake and frustration. Other topics include pre-contractual negotiations, multi-party transactions, and agreed remedies. Part 2, 'Fundamentals of Commercial Law' examines core topics in commercial law, offering students an overview of the most significant areas in this field, and applying contract law in commercial contexts. It focuses on sales contracts; banking contracts; credit and secured transactions; agency; assignment; commercial dispute resolution; and international commercial contracts.

Topics are likely to include:

Part 1 – Fundamentals of Commercial Contracting

- Agreed Remedies
- Precontractual negotiations
- The interpretation of contracts
- Mistakes in contracts
- Frustration of contracts
- Relational contracts and implied duties of good faith performance
- Multi-party projects (privity of contract)

Part 2 – Fundamentals of Commercial Law

- Agency
- Assignment
- Sale of goods contracts
- Credit and security
- Banking contracts
- Commercial dispute resolution
- International commercial contracting

Teaching: Two hours of lectures and one hour of class per week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes reading weeks in Week 6 of Michaelmas Term and Week 6 of Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Two formative (unassessed) essays in Michaelmas Term.

Indicative reading: For the advanced contract law portion of the course, students may choose as the main text either Chen-Wishart, Contract Law, (6th edn, OUP 2018) or McKendrick, Contract Law (14th edn, Red Globe Press 2021). Up-to-date casebooks include Burrows, A Casebook on Contract, (7th edn, Hart Publishing 2020) and McKendrick, Contract Law: Text, Cases and Materials (9th edn, OUP 2020).

For the commercial law topics, there is no main textbook but McKendrick (ed.), Goode and McKendrick on Commercial Law (6th edn, Penguin 2021) is used for some topics. For cases and materials, you might find useful Clarke, Hooley, Munday, Sealy, Tettenborn, and Turner, Commercial Law: Text, Cases, and Materials, (5th edn, OUP 2017). For topic overviews, you may also wish to try Burrows (ed.), English Private Law (3rd edn, OUP 2013), available online through the LSE Library website.

Assessment: Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the LT.

Online assessment (75%) in the ST.

LL203

Law of Business Associations (Company Law)

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eva Micheler

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Accounting and Finance and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Although this course is open to second and third year law students, experience suggests that third years are more successful.

Pre-requisites: It is helpful to have studied or be studying Property II, although this is not a formal pre-requisite.

Course content: This course examines the nature of the legal vehicles available for the carrying on of entrepreneurial activities, paying particular attention to the analysis of companies. It examines the core features of the company. These are: separate legal personality, limited liability, centralised management, the allocation of control rights, and free transferability of shares. The course analyses how the law implements these features and the policy trade-offs among them.

We analyse the relationship between various groups with an interest in the affairs of the company – shareholders, directors, managers, financiers, trade creditors, employees, consumers and regulators - and the balance of power between them. The course looks beyond purely technical legal issues and encourages a critical examination of the system and proposals for reform. Registered companies are creatures of statute and close attention to the Companies Act 2006 and related legislation is essential.

However, no attempt is made to deal with all, or even most, of the complex technical aspects of the legislation and non-statutory regulation. The course concentrates on the problems and policies underlying the legislation, with some more detailed consideration of selected provisions. The influence of European Directives and Regulations on UK company law is also reflected.

Despite the importance of statute, common law and equitable principles have played a major role in the development of company law by the courts. This has relied heavily on principles of agency and the equitable principles relating to fiduciaries. Case analysis is therefore a major element of the course. Excellent case books are available.

This subject covers a wide range of businesses - from the one-person firm (the local greengrocer or plumber) to family companies, to major multinational groups listed on the Stock Exchange. This wide coverage plus the policy emphasis means that this course should appeal to all students with an interest in the economic, social and political aspects of business organisations and not only to those wishing to practise commercial law.

Topics usually covered are:

- Introductory concepts and themes including limited liability and corporate personality.
- Capacity of companies & the powers of individuals acting for companies.
- Shares and share capital.
- Directors: powers, duties and corporate governance issues.
- The role of shareholders in companies: rights, decision-making and governance

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, either in the form of a two hour seminar or an online lecture and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: Detailed lists will be provided during the course. The primary recommended text is: Eva Micheler, Company Law - A Real Entity Theory (OUP 2021); Brenda Hannigan, Company Law (6th edition, 2021). We also recommend: Sealy and Worthington, Cases and Material on Company Law (12th edn, 2022).

Assessment: Open-book exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

LL204

Advanced Torts

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Emmanouil Voggiakis

Additional Teachers: Dr Charlie Webb and Dr Timothy Liau

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Law of Obligations (LL104).

Course content: If you liked Obligations, you are going to love this. Advanced Torts aims to broaden and deepen your knowledge of tort law in two ways. First, we look at a range of important torts that are not covered in the Obligations course. Second, we tackle the 'big' theoretical questions of tort law. You will emerge from the course not only with a better understanding of the rules and principles that govern specific torts, but also with the ability to engage critically with different views about the overall purpose and the moral and social function of tort law.

Here are some topics we usually cover:

- Theories of tort law: what is the aim of tort law, and do judges need a theory of it?
- Corrective justice vs economic theories of tort law
- Tort law, moral responsibility and luck
- Tort law and the 'compensation culture'
- The position of public authorities in negligence
- Tort actions for unwanted pregnancy/birth & children born with disabilities
- Strict liability regimes: liability for ultra-hazardous activities; liability for defective products; the justification of strict liability.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative essay per term

Indicative reading: If all goes according to plan, the depth we will attain in the course and the focused nature of our reading lists for each topic will make textbooks redundant, or at least useful only as a basic introduction to the issues we will be covering. This means that the tort textbook you may have purchased for the LL104

Law of Obligations course will probably be good enough for our purposes. Here are some other introductory or general texts that you might like to consult from time to time, just to get a different perspective on things, and some more advanced or specialized books from which we will be setting reading for certain topics:
General Texts: (try to consult their latest edition but earlier ones will probably do) W E Peel & J Goudkamp, Winfield & Jolowicz on Tort; N J McBride & R Bagshaw, Tort Law; B A Hepple et al., Hepple and Matthews' Tort Law: Cases and Materials; S Deakin, A Johnston & B Markesinis, Markesinis and Deakin's Tort Law.

Advanced/Specialised Texts: Arthur Ripstein, Private Wrongs (2016); Emmanuel Voyiakis, Private Law and the Value of Choice (2017); Ernest Weinrib, The Idea of Private Law (1995); David Owen (ed.), Philosophical Foundations of Tort Law (1997); Robert Stevens, Torts and Rights (2007); Jules Coleman, Risks and Wrongs (2002); Guido Calabresi, The Cost of Accidents: A Legal and Economic Analysis (1970); John Oberdiek, Philosophical Foundations of the Law of Torts (2014); Nicolette Priaux, The Harm Paradox: Tort Law and the Unwanted Child in an Era of Choice (2007).

Assessment: Open-book exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

LL205

Medical Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Emily Jackson

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Medical law is a rapidly developing and increasingly important subject. The unprecedented restrictions on liberty during the pandemic, and the very real possibility that the NHS might run out of ventilators became central political issues in 2020. New technologies, such as genome editing, egg freezing and face transplants, are invariably accompanied by demands for their regulation. In this course we examine the legal framework within which health services are provided, and we explore some of the difficult legal and ethical dilemmas that arise when determining the limits of medical innovation.

Subjects include resource allocation; public health; malpractice litigation; consent; mental capacity; mental health law; confidentiality; clinical research; the regulation of medicines; organ transplantation; embryo and stem cell research; abortion; assisted conception; preimplantation genetic diagnosis; surrogacy and assisted dying.

Teaching: This course is delivered through a combination of classes and lectures totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This year some or all of this teaching will be delivered through recorded online lectures and a mix of both in-person and online classes to accommodate students who are unable to physically be on campus. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: Jackson, Medical Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 5th edition (Oxford UP, 2019).

Assessment: Take-home assessment (50%) and take-home assessment (50%).

Two take-home assessments worth 50% each. The first will take place between MT and LT, and the second will take place between LT and ST. Assessment dates will be confirmed prior to the start of Michaelmas Term 2021.

LL207

Civil Liberties and Human Rights

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kai Moller

Additional Teachers: Professor Conor Gearty

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course provides a challenging introduction to human rights law and builds on the knowledge that students have acquired in Public Law in year one. The first term starts by focusing on the European Convention on Human Rights with an in depth analysis of the case law on several important rights, including but not limited to freedom of expression, freedom of association, freedom of religion, the right to respect for private life, and freedom from torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The first half of the second term deals with more theoretical issues and introduces the students to theories of rights, the debate about the justification of judicial review, and the culture of justification. In the second half of Lent Term, the focus shifts to the UK Human Rights Act, considering the common law approach to liberty and then analysing in depth how the Human Rights Act impacts on the protection of civil liberties and human rights in this area. The term ends with a review of the interrelationship between the Human Rights Act and the Strasbourg system, and also deals with the extra-territorial reach of the Act and its impact on UK national security/anti-terrorism law. Inevitably in the current political climate, the future of the Human Rights Act is also considered.

The goal of the course is to enable students to critically assess the European Court of Human Rights' and the U.K. Supreme Court's arguments about the compatibility of a policy or administrative decision with human rights and the particularities of human rights adjudication within the U.K. legal system. To this end, the course will focus on the necessary doctrinal and conceptual frameworks, theoretical aspects of human rights law, and in depth analysis of selected problems in human rights law.

This course does not touch upon strategic or policy issues (such as the most effective ways to promote human rights, NGO practices, etc.); rather it focuses on the controversial and often difficult moral and political issues that arise in human rights adjudication and on unravelling the implications of the particular way in which U.K. law has incorporated the ECHR.

The teaching of this course is mainly case based. To complete it successfully, students must prepare for each class by reading and thinking through the relevant cases; the classes will be conducted on the basis of the expectation that the students are familiar with the materials. There is no comprehensive textbook available for this course.

Syllabus:

The European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights; proportionality, the margin of appreciation, the living instrument doctrine, emerging consensus, negative and positive obligations. Freedom from torture and inhuman or degrading treatment; freedom of expression; freedom of association and 'militant democracy'; freedom of religion; the right to respect for private and family life. Theories of rights: rights as trumps and rights as principles. The debate about the justification of judicial review. The culture of justification and the right to justification. The Human Rights Act 1998; human rights and parliamentary sovereignty; human rights and standards of review; human rights and the common law; precedent and human rights law.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. There will be a revision class in Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: For the European Convention on Human Rights, interested students may want to take a look at Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 4th edn (OUP, 2018). For the more theoretical aspects of the course, see Kai Möller's The Global Model of Constitutional Rights (OUP, 2015). For the UK side, representative works include Conor Gearty, Civil Liberties (OUP, 2007) and (more recently) On Fantasy Island. Britain, Strasbourg and Human Rights (OUP, 2016), Tom Hickman, Public Law after the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010), Aileen Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (CUP, 2009).

Assessment: Open-book Exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

LL210

Information Technology and the Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Orla Lynskey

Additional teachers: Dr Giulia Gentile and Dr Martin Husovec

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Data Science and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This course does not require an in-depth understanding of contemporary computer technology – we are primarily interested in the implications of the use of information technology, and the intended and unintended consequences of regulating that use.

Course content: This survey course enables students to assess critically a selection of fundamental legal issues in the field of Information Technology (IT) Law. It begins by introducing students to key debates in technology and internet governance: do we need distinct legal rules to regulate technological systems? Who does, and should, enact these rules? Are technological systems like the Internet neutral, and should they be? Once students are equipped with this knowledge of technology governance and the challenges this poses for the law, we consider how the law has responded to the challenges brought about by technological systems and the extent to which legal issues have shaped the development of information society policy. The course does this by examining the key issues under three headings: data; digital platforms and current challenges.

The EU has taken the lead in proposing and adopting regulations to address the challenges of digitisation, ranging from its General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) to the more recent Digital Services and AI Acts. Our primary focus will therefore be on EU law, although we will examine relevant developments and divergences in UK law and significant developments in other jurisdictions where relevant.

Aims and Objectives:

At the end of the course, students should be able to:

- Critically evaluate ongoing developments in law relating to technological systems;
- Display an understanding of how these developments relate to one another;
- Examine areas of doctrinal and political debate surrounding rules and theories;
- Evaluate those rules and theories in terms of internal coherence and practical outcomes;
- Draw on the analysis and evaluation contained in primary and secondary sources.

Indicative Content:

Internet Governance and Infrastructure

- An Introduction to IT Law
- Who Regulates? Questions of Jurisdiction
- What we Regulate?
- Net Neutrality
- Case study: Governing Cloud Computing

Data

- Data Flows and Data Localisation
- The GDPR: Regulating Personal Data Processing
- AdTech and the Monetisation of Personal Data
- Legal Responses to Automated Decision-Making and Profiling
- State Surveillance and Facial Recognition Technology

Digital Platforms

- Intermediaries and Freedom of Expression
- Platforms: Global Models
- Copyright Law in the Digital Environment
- Online Safety Bill and Defamation
- Website Blocking

Current Challenges

- The Emergent Legal Issues of the Sharing Economy
- Children's rights in the Digital Environment
- Robotics, Risk and Ethics
- AI and Justice

This is an indicative programme.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Indicative reading: Murray: Information Technology Law: Law and Society 4th ed (Oxford: OUP, 2019) (Recommended for purchase). Lloyd: Information Technology Law 8th ed (Oxford: OUP, 2017). Lessig: Code and Other Laws of Cyberspace ver.2.0 (New York: Basic Books, 2006).

Suggested Initial Reading:

Murray: Information Technology Law: Law and Society 4th ed, Ch.1.

Assessment: Take-home assessment (60%) in the ST.

Continuous assessment (40%) in the LT.

A summative essay of 3,000 words worth 40% to be submitted during Lent Term.

The remaining 60% of the overall mark will consist of a single take-home assessment question in, or immediately preceding, the Summer Term. This question will take the form of an extended practical case study. Students will be provided with specific guidance on how to approach both the portfolio pieces and the take home assessment before completion of this work.

LL212 Not available in 2022/23

Conflict of Laws

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jacobus Bomhoff

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Interested students may wish to consider taking this course as an option in their third year. That said, over the past years many second year students have taken this course without any problems. The only required background understanding relates to (English) law of obligations. Basic issues of EU law relevant to the course will be covered in class.

It is also available as an outside option to third year students where regulations permit and with the permission of the course teacher.

Course content: Conflict of laws – also known as private international law – is the area of law concerned with private law cases that cross borders. Conflict of laws differs from public international law in that it deals with transactions between private individuals, rather than with those directly implicating States or international organizations.

What rules should an English court apply to a contract between companies from different countries, or to a tort claim arising out of an environmental disaster abroad? Should foreign celebrities be allowed to sue in the English courts when they feel they have been defamed in an article posted on an American website? Should the English courts recognize judgments from other countries, even when they conflict with English ideas of right and wrong? It is questions like these that make up the subject of the conflict of laws. The field's central technical questions are (1) jurisdiction (will an English court or a foreign court hear the case?), (2) choice of law (should the court apply its own law or that of a foreign country?), and (3) the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments. During the course, these three questions will frame reflection on a range of topics, including commercial/practical issues (how can companies structure their cross-border transactions?), but also questions of a more political nature (to what extent should States be able to regulate matters beyond their own borders?) or with a strong social/cultural dimension (how should foreign cultural values be accommodated in English law?).

Although conflict of laws has a long history within English law, for some areas many of the relevant rules have changed dramatically in recent years under the influence of EU legislation and case law. Some of these EU rules have been retained in English law after Brexit. Others have been replaced by either English law or by international treaties. In this course, we will look at English law, EU law, and international treaty regimes where relevant; and we will take a comparative look at selected topics in US and Canadian law. During the course, we will look at (1) jurisdiction in international commercial litigation, (2) choice of law in contract and tort, (3) recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments, and (4) comparative aspects and theoretical foundations of conflict of laws (looking at US and Canadian law in particular).

Most of the material for this course (cases, literature extracts, text, and further reading references) is contained in a Course Reader which is uploaded in instalments on the course Moodle page.

Syllabus:

- Jurisdiction of English courts under the traditional English rules for actions in personam: Service of a claim form within the jurisdiction & out of the jurisdiction, choice of court clauses, stay of proceedings, restraining foreign proceedings (anti-suit injunctions).
- Jurisdiction of courts in other EU Member States under European Union Council Regulation 1215/2012, and the parallel regime in the Lugano Convention 2007.
- Recognition & enforcement of foreign judgments at common law (in English courts), under European Union rules (in EU Member States), under the Lugano Convention 2007, and under the Hague Conventions.
- Choice of law relating to contracts under the retained rules of the EU Rome I Regulation: Interpreting choice of law clauses in contracts, applicable law in absence of choice, overriding mandatory rules, public policy, foreign illegality in English law.
- Choice of law relating to tort under the retained rules of the Rome II Regulation, older English approach, 'interest analysis' and other approaches of the 'US conflict of laws revolution'
- Comparative conflict of laws & Theoretical foundations

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, either in the form of a two hour seminar or an online lecture and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: One formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: Briggs, The Conflict of Laws (4th ed., Oxford University Press, 2019); Cheshire, North & Fawcett, Private International Law (15th ed., Oxford University Press, 2017) Resources: www.conflictolaws.net (Topical references, cases and reviews)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

LL221

Family Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarah Trotter

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: Family law is a hugely important area of law, not only because it is about the regulation of our most intimate relationships and about the effect of this regulation on those relationships, but also because it tells us a great deal about the society in which we live and the State. It is a fascinating time to be studying family law in this respect: in the past year alone there has been significant reform of divorce law and the law in relation to domestic abuse, key judgments have been handed down in areas ranging from child protection to financial provision, and the Law Commission has consulted on proposals to reform weddings law. And that is before we come to other significant developments, such as those in relation to assisted reproduction techniques, calls for greater recognition of siblings in law, and calls for a 'rights for grandparents' law. These developments offer a glimpse into just how fast-moving an area family law is; and it is in part this fast pace that makes family law such an exciting subject to study. At the same time, family law is a challenging area of law, and this is not least because it is in family law that we often encounter some of the most complex and multifaceted problems facing families and individuals. During the course, we explore such questions as: how has the COVID-19 pandemic affected family life and the family justice system? What is a 'family' in law? How should the family justice system support those who have no legal advice and representation as a consequence of cuts to legal aid? What is the point of divorce law? How should finances and property be distributed on relationship breakdown? Should cohabiting siblings be able to have a civil partnership? Who should be the legal parents where four friends decide to conceive a child who will be cared for equally by all four of them? In what circumstances can a local authority legally intervene to remove a child from his or her family? How should the State respond to domestic abuse? What should be done if a woman conceals her pregnancy and wants the baby to be taken into State care without the knowledge of the baby's genetic father? If you are interested in thinking through questions of this sort and in embarking on a broader inquiry into how and why law constructs a particular vision of 'the family' and indeed regulates family life at all, then this would be a good course for you!

The structure of the course is as follows:

Michaelmas Term:

1. Family life and family justice
2. Legal constructions of 'the family', 'family life', and 'families'
3. Gender and identity
4. The institutions of marriage and civil partnership and the rise of cohabitation
5. The law of marriage and civil partnership: sex, gender, and religion
6. Divorce and dissolution
7. Family finances on relationship breakdown
8. Domestic abuse: its nature and extent
9. Domestic abuse: legal measures and State obligations
10. Death in the family: inheritance, intestacy, and financial support

Lent Term:

1. Legal constructions of 'children' and 'childhood'
2. Legal parenthood and parental responsibility
3. Child welfare
4. Post-separation parenting and private disputes over children
5. Grandparents
6. Child protection
7. Adoption
8. Siblings
9. Children's rights
10. Family law in practice

Summer Term:

1. Revision

Teaching: In the Michaelmas and Lent Terms there will be a 1-hour class and 2-hour lecture every week (excluding reading week) and in Week 1 of the Summer Term there will be two revision sessions (a 1-hour class and a 2-hour lecture). Alongside the formal classes and lectures there will be an optional reading group (meeting every fortnight in termtime to discuss a piece of writing relating to family law) and an optional film group (meeting every month in termtime to view and discuss a film relating to family law).

Formative coursework: You will be expected to write at least 1 essay in the Michaelmas Term and 1 essay in the Lent Term. Additional optional essays will be set at the end of each term and there will be an optional mock exam towards the end of the Lent Term.

Indicative reading: A detailed syllabus and course guide will be provided at the start of the course and a reading list and handout with questions to think about will be provided for each topic. The essential reading for each class will be based on articles and cases.

To get a sense of the subject of family law prior to commencing the course, I would suggest reading Family Law and Personal Life (2nd edition) by John Eekelaar (2017, Oxford University Press) and In Your Defence: Stories of Life and Law by Sarah Langford (2018, Doubleday).

Assessment: Open-book exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

Law and Institutions of the European Union

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Floris De Witte

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

It is recommended that this course is taken in the second year of the LLB.

It is available to second and third year LLB and BA Anthropology and Law students. It is also available as an outside option to second and third year students where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is an introduction to European Union Law. The course considers a legal and political system which has become the most formidable system of transnational government in modern times. It is also a system that has become, in recent years, a source of continual political conflict: both over the content of its measures and the presence of its involvement in many spheres of activity. Discussions on the democratic nature of the EU, the relationship between the welfare state and EU law, and its very existence for example, will be covered in this course. Special attention will be given to the three major crisis that the EU is facing: the Euro-crisis, the refugee crisis, Russia's invasion of Ukraine and Brexit.

This course covers two aspects of EU law. First, it covers the institutional and constitutional structure of the European Union, including its political and judicial institutions. Second, it looks at the central policies of the European Union, notably the rights to free movement for goods, services, workers, and Union citizens.

At the end of the course you will be able to critically and independently assess both the legal structure of the EU as well as the political and social context within which it operates.

Topics include:

- History and Theory of European Integration
- Institutions and Law-Making of the European Union
- Democracy in the EU
- Sovereignty and EU Law
- Brexit and its consequences
- The Withdrawal Agreement and the UK-EU Trade and Cooperation Agreement
- Differentiated Integration and the Future of the EU
- Application of Union law in the Member States
- Judicial Review of EU law
- Fundamental Rights
- Internal Market and Free Movement
- Refugee Crisis and the AFSJ

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term in the form of a lecture (every week) and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. Essays will be set around reading week to allow students to dedicate time to writing skills.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Further peer-marked assessment is possible through the Moodle environment.

Indicative reading: Dawson & De Witte, EU Law and Government (CUP 2022). In addition, the course uses a broad range of online reading material (to be linked on Moodle).

Assessment: Take-home assessment (50%) in the period between MT and LT.

Take-home assessment (50%) in the period between LT and ST.

One will take place in Week 0 of LT, one will take place in Week 0 of ST.

Please take this into account when choosing outside modules that are assessed in Week 0 of LT or ST.

Law of Evidence

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Abenaa Owusu-Bempah and Dr Federico Picinali

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: If a person is suspected of committing a crime, how does the prosecution go about proving that she is guilty? Are there any restrictions on the type of evidence that the prosecution can use to prove its case? What protections does the law offer to defendants in order to safeguard them against false conviction? These are among the central questions in the law of criminal evidence, that is, the set of rules governing the production and the use of evidence in criminal trials.

This course concentrates on criminal, rather than civil, evidence. Emphasis is placed on matters of principle, conceptual issues and the most significant legal rules. The aims of the course are to teach students how to reason about evidence, and to encourage them to reflect critically on the modern law of criminal evidence. At a more detailed level, we consider how inferences are drawn from evidence, and how basic ideas of probability can give insights on this process. We study the standard of proof, asking whether a high standard such as 'proof beyond reasonable doubt' is justified. As far as pre-trial procedures are concerned, we examine – among other things – how the police gain confessions from suspects and produce eyewitness identification evidence; we also look at how the law regulates the admissibility of these types of evidence. A central theme on the course is the question as to what makes a trial fair. The European Convention on Human Rights is relevant to this question. In this context, we look – among other things – at whether courts should admit improperly obtained evidence, and we ask what the privilege against self-incrimination is and whether it can be justified. The study of trial fairness will also lead us to consider the roles that sexism and racism may play in the interpretation and application of the law of evidence. We will ask whether, beyond the veneer of neutrality, the law of evidence has been, and can be, used as an instrument of oppression of disadvantaged social groups. And we will discuss ways to prevent this from happening. As you will learn, much of the law of evidence consists of rules of admissibility. Among these we cover 'traditional' rules such as those regulating the admissibility of hearsay evidence (a topic that now has an important human rights angle) and of bad character evidence (can a defendant's previous convictions be introduced against her at trial?). We also look at particular problems relating to testimony, ranging from the protections afforded to vulnerable witnesses to the admissibility of evidence concerning the sexual history of complainants in trials for sexual offences.

Syllabus: While coverage may vary from year to year, we usually focus on the following themes and topics:

Reasoning with Evidence:

- Analysing Evidence: Relevance, Probative Value and Generalisations;
- The Standard of Proof;
- The Burden of Proof and the Presumption of Innocence;

Trial Fairness and the Gathering of the Evidence:

- Improperly Obtained Evidence;
- Eyewitness Identification;
- Confessions;
- Entrapment;

Traditional Rules of Admissibility:

- Hearsay;
- Confrontation;
- Bad Character Evidence;

Trial Fairness and Defendant Cooperation:

- The Privilege Against Self-Incrimination;
- Drawing Inferences from Silence;

- Disclosure;

Testimony:

- Examination of Witnesses
- Vulnerable Witnesses;
- Sexual History Evidence.

The course has a Moodle page. You are encouraged to consult it should you want more information on the themes, the topics, and the sort of material that we study.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, either in the form of a two hour seminar or a lecture and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: There is no set text for the course, but standard texts are useful on many topics. Consider, for instance, I. H. Dennis, The Law of Evidence (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 7th ed, 2020); A. Choo, Evidence (Oxford: OUP, 6th ed, 2021); L. Campbell, A. Ashworth and M. Redmayne, The Criminal Process (Oxford: OUP, 5th ed, 2019); R. Munday, Evidence (Oxford: OUP, 10th ed, 2019).

Assessment: Online assessment (100%) in the ST.

LL241

European Legal History

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umberto-Igor Stramignoni NAB 7.34

Course content: This course seeks to explore some of the relations and processes that gave origins to the law of Western Europe.

The course opens with the emergence of a certain kind of "law" in and around Rome circa 8th century BCE. It then turns to law's subsequent developments as they made the Roman world possible, but also as they related to each other over time. As the ancient world wanes, and is replaced by the extraordinary and expansive world of Christianity, Roman law takes on new and different configurations. Things will shift again during the Italian Renaissance, Northern Humanism, and European Enlightenment, and with the French Revolution of 1789, leading up to the first major codification of law to take place in modern Europe.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for this course. Instead, students will be required to familiarize themselves with the content of a mixture of visual aids (designed specifically for this course by Dr Stramignoni) and of written texts, including a selection of chapters from a range of different books and shorter articles from a variety of scientific journals suggesting different philosophical, historical, anthropological, cultural, and other approaches to the past of the law in Europe. Those thinking to take this course are encouraged to explore the course Moodle page for more information or contact the course convenor directly.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Open-book exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

Assessment path 2

Dissertation (100%, 12000 words) in the ST.

The essay will be on a topic to be agreed with Dr Stramignoni by the end of the Michaelmas Term. Please note: if you elect to be assessed by essay you are still expected to attend and actively participate to all lectures and seminars.

LL250 Law and The Environment

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Veerle Heyvaert

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The aim of this course is to study and understand how law can be used as a tool to pursue environmental goals and to think critically about law's contribution to local and global environmental protection.

Content:

I. General features of environmental law in the UK:

The introductory sessions examine how we understand 'the value of the environment' as an object of legal protection, and how environmental law evolved through time. We review international and EU law as important sources of environmental law in the UK, and consider the impacts of Brexit. We study the responsibilities of and the relationship between Parliament, the Government, the Court, environmental agencies and devolved administrations, and consider the 2021 Environment Act as a blueprint for the future of environmental protection in the UK.

II. Controlling space

This section reviews legal strategies for environmental protection through the management of the built environment, parks and nature. It covers planning law, environmental impact assessment, and nature conservation law.

III. Controlling climate change

Seminars on climate change examine international law and the politics of climate change, different regulatory strategies to respond to the climate change challenge, and climate change litigation.

IV. Controlling enterprise

Section IV looks at how environmental harm can be prevented or limited by regulating heavily polluting industries. We study mandatory permitting approaches, and also pay attention to the role of ESG and CSR in shaping the environmental performance of private actors. We examine the relationship between international trade law and environmental protection, both generally and in the context of climate change. Section IV also addresses the legacy of industrial exploitation and examines and examines the legal framework for the clean up of contaminated land.

V. The future of environmental law

The final section focuses on new and upcoming developments in environmental law, both at the UK level and beyond. It includes an examination of the role of human rights in the pursuit of environmental protection, and discusses the potential for animal and nature rights.

Teaching: This course is delivered through weekly 2-hour seminars totalling a minimum of 40 hours across Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write a formative essay; answer a problem set in writing; and participate in a mock exam.

Indicative reading: There is no set book that covers the entire course, however, several sessions use Bell, McGillivray, Pedersen et. al, Environmental Law (9th edition, Oxford University Press, 2017). A detailed reading list is provided for each seminar. Materials that are not sourced from Bell, McGillivray & Pedersen are made available on Moodle.

A good alternative source is Fisher, Lange & Scotford, Environmental Law. Text, Cases and Materials (2nd edition, OUP, 2019). Older but still useful introductory books include: Lazarus, The Making of Environmental Law, 2004; Holder & Lee, Environmental Protection, Law & Policy, 2007; R Carson, Silent Spring, 1962; R Eckersley, Environmentalism and Political Theory, 1992.

Assessment: Open-book Exam (50%, duration: 2.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

LL251 Intellectual Property Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sivaramjani Thambisetty Ramakrishna
Dr Luke MacDonagh

Course content: Intellectual Property Law consists in the rules determining when, and subject to what conditions, the production of information (broadly conceived) can generate rights to exclude others from access to that same information. Unlike the physical objects associated with real property rights, intangibles are non-rival and non-excludable. While the chair you may be sitting on accommodates only one person, many can whistle the same tune without depriving others of it. Yet while it often takes creativity, effort and investment to produce them, intangibles may be easily copied. To restrict this copying and thereby encourage the production of information, the law intervenes by establishing intellectual property rights around certain valuable intangibles – creative works like books, paintings and songs; inventions ranging from vaccines to the bag-less vacuum cleaner; and valuable brands like Coke ® or Google ®. Given that information is an increasingly important source of commercial value within the modern economy, it is not surprising that Intellectual Property Law is such a fast-growing field here and abroad. However, its apparently relentless growth is the focus of vigorous debate. Copyright already provides the legal foundation for the well-established film, music, TV and publishing industries, and its continuing expansion is said by some to be crucial given the trend towards media convergence in the 'digital future', and by others to be a threat to free speech and freedom of access to information. Patents sustain such key and diverse technologies as pharmaceuticals, biotechnology and computer implemented inventions; and the availability of these rights in rapidly developing sectors like synthetic biology or smart phone technologies can often raise complex ethical, political and innovation policy issues. Trade Marks are central to effective advertising and marketing but at the same time exemplify the tendency of more and more aspects of our cultural landscape to be 'commodified'.

The curriculum of LL251 reflects the fact that it will be examined by means of an 8000-word summative essay. Instead of expecting students to acquire a more detailed knowledge of the mechanics of each of the principal branches of intellectual property law (copyright, patents, and trade marks) the course is structured around a strong theme that runs persistently through all parts of IP law, which will also be the basis of the dissertation topic that will be assigned at the start of the year. The objective will be to develop the skills required to engage critically with the mechanics of each branch.

Indicative themes include 'the public domain' (which is often construed as the most basic principle of intellectual property law) 'knowledge sharing' (particularly crucial at a time of emergency), and 'the incentive effect' (one of the most essential strands in the justification of intellectual property law). We will use the chosen broad rubric both to introduce the basic elements of each branch of intellectual property and to focus on examples which illustrate contemporary intellectual property law: the constitution of the public domain in digital environments, the capture of public discourse by leading brands, the impact of incentives in the creation of software, the international dimension of incentives in the pharmaceutical sector. Students will be invited to use these and other case studies as resources for writing the final dissertation. Seminars will be based on informal lectures, class discussion, and a variety of exercises. Reading lists will include further readings to enable students to explore certain themes in depth.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, either in the form of a two hour seminar or an online lecture and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 formative essay in the MT and 1 formative essay in the LT. The word limit for each formative will be 2000 words. Feedback on the formative will feed forward to the summative.

Indicative reading:

- Karapapa and McDonagh, Intellectual Property Law (OUP, 2019).
- Bently and Sherman Intellectual Property Law (OUP, 2018).
- Boyle The Public Domain: Enclosing the Commons of the Mind (Yale University Press, 2008)
- McDonagh, Performing Copyright: Law, Theatre and Authorship (Hart, 2021)

The course is supported by Moodle, so reading lists will be linked there or accessible via library-based websites.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL253

The Law of Corporate Insolvency

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sarah Paterson

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course is concerned with English corporate insolvency law. Specifically, the course (1) examines the possible solutions for a company which is in financial distress and the legal procedures which are available to achieve them; and (2) examines important principles of English corporate insolvency law and how they impact not only financially distressed companies but also healthy companies contracting outside insolvency. In Michaelmas Term, and for the first two weeks of Lent Term, we analyse the principal insolvency procedures available in English law, with a view to evaluating the extent to which they meet their aims and objectives and the case for reform. For the rest of Lent Term, we analyse the legal rules affecting distressed and insolvent companies and those concerned with them (for example, creditors, directors, and employees) and the issues and principles underlying a corporate insolvency regime. This will lead us to consider how different goals are balanced in the corporate insolvency legislation, for example: ensuring that vulnerable stakeholders are protected while encouraging the rescue of financially distressed companies; giving companies a chance to recover while ensuring that companies cease to trade when failure is inevitable and losses must be stopped; and saving jobs while encouraging the purchase of financially distressed businesses. We will, of course, discuss the implications of the COVID-19 pandemic for corporate insolvency law.

(Corporate Insolvency Law bears a close relationship to the Law of Business Associations (BA) and students may find that taking BA as well as Corporate Insolvency will give them a broad understanding of major themes relating to corporate activity. Students who have studied, or are studying, Commercial Contracts also find that the courses complement each other in some respects.)

Syllabus:

Corporate Borrowing

- Outline of corporate borrowing and development and nature of security interests: fixed and floating charges; intercreditor issues.
- The test of insolvency.

Insolvency Procedures

- Out-of-court rescue in the era of the London Approach
- Receivership

- Administration (i) as a business rescue tool; and (ii) as a corporate rescue tool
- Part A1 moratorium
- Pre-packaged administration
- Company Voluntary Arrangements
- Schemes of Arrangement
- Part 26A restructuring plan procedure
- Liquidation

Principles of Corporate Insolvency Law

- Setting aside transactions
- The distributional order of priority
- Quasi-security devices for consumer creditors and commercial suppliers
- Liability of company directors
- Employees
- The regulation of insolvency practitioners

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course. The recommended book is V. Finch and D. Milman, Corporate Insolvency Law: Perspectives and Principles (3rd ed., 2017) (Cambridge University Press).

Assessment: Open-book Exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

LL257

Employment Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Astrid Sanders

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This subject builds on contract and tort, and to some extent public law and EU law, but introduces the distinctive legal regulation of employment relations, such as the law of dismissal and discrimination law, and the institutional arrangements of industrial relations, including trade unions and collective bargaining. Employment law is an important area of legal practice, with employment law disputes representing one of the largest topics of civil litigation.

Outline:

- Contract of Employment: the duties of employer and employee; the variety of work relations; vulnerable workers and the personal scope of employment law
- Regulation of the Employment Relation: minimum wage, working time
- Anti-Discrimination Law: implications of the Equality Act 2010
- Dismissal: wrongful and unfair dismissal, economic dismissals
- Human Rights in the Workplace: civil liberties of employees at work
- Membership of Trade Unions, Worker Representation, and Collective Bargaining: freedom of workers to associate with each other and to act in association with each other
- Industrial disputes: strikes, other industrial action and lockouts; rights and liabilities of individual workers who take industrial action; civil liabilities for organising industrial action – the economic torts, the ‘golden formula’ immunities and loss of immunity – industrial action ballots.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, either in the form of a two hour seminar or a lecture and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: At least one formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: For a concise overview of the subject a suggestion is:

- H. Collins, Employment Law (Oxford: OUP, 2nd ed, 2010).
- See also P. Davies and M. Freedland (eds), Kahn-Freund's Labour and the Law (London: Stevens and Son, 3rd ed, 1983) chapter 1. The leading textbooks are

- A.C. L. Davies, Perspectives on Labour Law, 2nd edn (Cambridge: CUP, 2009).

Assessment: Open-book Exam (50%, duration: 2.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the LT.

LL259 Not available in 2022/23

Legal and Social Change since 1750

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Lobban

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines developments in British legal history in the two centuries after 1750. Drawing on printed and electronic primary sources, as well as secondary literature, it explores the changing nature of law in a number of areas. The course begins with an exploration of the nature of eighteenth century criminal justice, and how this was transformed in the nineteenth century. It explores issues of political crime and the concept and practice of the 'rule of law'. In the first term, students are also given a grounding in the system of the courts and how they were reformed.

In the second term, the course explores topics relating to status, examining the attitude taken by the law to women, children, workers and slaves. A final set of topics will turn to explore the impact of law on economic change, looking at how the law facilitated the growth of a modern economy.

The course will be taught by a combination of lectures and seminars in the Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Lecture and Seminar Topics:

Michaelmas Term

The first term is devoted to an examination of the criminal and civil justice systems in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Topics covered in the first term include the prosecution of crime in the era of the 'Bloody Code', the nature of the criminal trial before and after the arrival of criminal barristers in the courtroom, the reform of criminal punishments and the rise of the prison and modern policing. In the second half of the term, the course looks at political crime and the rule of law, and the impact of war on the law. It also considers the system of the civil courts, the nature of civil litigation and the reform of the major courts.

Lent Term

The second term is devoted to exploring the impact of law on society and the economy. Topics explored include the law relating to married women and the custody of children, the law of slavery, and the law relating to workers and trade unions. The economic topics addressed include the law relating to the environment, the transformation of tort and contract law, and the law relating to business organisation

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, either in the form of a two hour seminar or an online lecture and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students who choose to be assessed by unseen examination must submit one essay each term. Those submitting a dissertation will produce outlines and drafts that will be used for formative coursework purposes.

Indicative reading: Reading will be suggested during the course.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the summer exam period.

Assessment path 2

Essay (100%, 12000 words) in the ST.

LL272 Half Unit

Outlines of Modern Criminology

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nicola Lacey

Additional teacher: Dr Richard Martin

Course content: This half-unit course is a general introduction to the study of modern criminology. The course is highly selective and every effort is made to hold the reading requirements within reasonable limits. It is suitable for General Course students, and a limited number may be admitted on application.

The main focus is on the classical and contemporary theories developed over the past two hundred years to explain and predict criminal behaviour in society. The propositions, assumptions, empirical validity, and policy implications of these criminological theories, as well as the social context in which they were developed, will be examined. Other significant issues in criminology – such as the measurement and extent of crime, the role of demographics (age, race, gender, social class) in the causation of and reaction to crime, the influence of the media and political regimes, and the changing boundaries of criminological research – will also be discussed.

Course content:

- The history of criminological theory.
- Trends in crime and crime statistics. How official statistics can be interpreted and the role of crime surveys
- 'Classical' criminology, rational choice, and crime prevention theories.
- Individual explanations of crime: biological, psychological and psychoanalytic theories.
- Sociological explanations of crime, including macro and micro approaches and recent critical theories
- Criminal justice policy and 'law and order' politics.
- Discrimination, Inequalities, crime and criminal justice
- Crime and the mass media
- Green Criminology
- 'Big Data', Technology and Criminology

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week, in the form of a two hour seminar. This course includes a reading week in Week 6.

Formative coursework: The formative coursework consists in one class presentation (in groups) and one formative essay. Feedback on that essay will help prepare students for the summative assessment.

Indicative reading: The texts for this course are:

- Criminology, 3rd ed. by T. Newburn (2017)
- The Oxford Handbook of Criminology. By Leibling, A; Meara, L. and Maruna, S (eds) 6th edition (2017) (or 7th edition, currently in production)
- Crime: The Mystery of the Common Sense Concept. By R. Reiner (2017)

Recommended Readings

Property II

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Neil Duxbury (MT and ST) and Prof Charles Webb (LT)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Property II examines principles of Land Law and the Law of Trusts. Land Law is taught in the first term and Trusts in the second term.

The Land Law component of Property II is designed to introduce students to the principles of the law of real property (i.e., land).

The course examines estates and interests in land, legal and equitable ownership, title registration, and trusts of land (including constructive trusts). It also considers the law governing specific third party interests – licences, proprietary estoppel claims, easements, freehold covenants and mortgages.

The Trusts component of the course focuses on general principles of trusts law and examines the circumstances in which trusts arise, the obligations of trustees, and the remedies available to beneficiaries when these obligations are breached. It also considers the nature and classification of trusts, including resulting and constructive trusts, and how the law of trusts relates to and impacts on the law of contract, wrongs and unjust enrichment.

Teaching: The course has at least two hours of teaching content each week in the Michaelmas and Lent terms. In both terms, Week 6 is a reading week.

Formative coursework: Two formative (unassessed) essays per term.

Indicative reading: Advice on reading, including textbook recommendations, will be provided at the beginning of the first and second terms. An essay which students might profitably read before the commencement of the course is Peter Birks, 'Before We Begin: Five Keys to Land Law', in Land Law: Themes and Perspectives, ed. S. Bright & J. Dewar (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998), 457-86.

Assessment: Open-book Exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

Students are required to answer questions on both the Land Law and Trusts components of Property II.

LL278

Public International Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys

Additional Teachers: Professor Gerry Simpson, Dr Margot Salomon, Dr Mona Pinchis-Paulson, Dr Yusra Suedi

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the concepts, principles, institutions and debates that define public international law today. We begin with an overview of the international legal system, considering the sources of international law, the scope of responsibility for its breach, and its role in the creation and empowerment of states. In this connection we examine the work of the International Court of Justice, the WTO Appellate Body, various human rights courts and committees, the International Criminal Court, along with judgments of national courts invoking international law. We will take up a range of topical issues of global concern, studying their international legal dimensions. The issues to be discussed are likely to include war, trade and investment, human rights, climate change, and international crime. We also investigate aspects of the history of international law and its relation to the establishment and retreat of European empires, as well as approaches to international law that focus on gender, and the problem of fragmentation. Overall, our aim is to lay the basis for an informed assessment of the contribution and limits of international law as a force in world affairs.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, in the form of a two hour seminar. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: One formative (unassessed) essay per term.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each topic on Moodle. You are asked to buy M. Evans (ed.), International Law (Oxford: OUP, 5th ed, 2018) and Blackstone's International Law Documents.

Some other works to which you may wish to refer include the most recent editions of: D. Harris, International Law: Cases and Materials; H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law; M. Shaw, International Law; M. Koskeniemi, From Apology to Utopia; V. Lowe, International Law; and J. Crawford, Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law.

Assessment: Open-book Exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

LL284 Half Unit

Topics in Sentencing and Criminal Justice

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Martin

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: The criminal justice system is comprised of legal actors wielding significant power and discretion, the operation of which can have profound impact on the lives of suspects, defendants and complainants. In this course, we are interested in how state sanctioned power to control, coerce and punish those suspected (or proven) to have committed criminal offences is routinely exercised by legal actors students have only encountered briefly in their study of law thus far. Together, we will examine the laws, policies and regulatory schemes that purport to govern how actors perform their specific roles in the criminal process. By preparing fully for seminars and actively contributing to our discussions, the course will equip you with the knowledge and tools necessary to critically assess contemporary criminal justice issues. In the first five weeks, we track the construction of cases through the criminal process. This requires us to closely analyse the work of police, prosecutors and judges: How do they exercise their discretion? What kinds of dynamics, sub-cultures and formal (and informal) rules affect their decision-making? And how does this impact on the rights and interests of suspects, defendants, offenders and victims? In the second five weeks, we enter the realm of sentencing law and practice. We focus on how judges perform their role as sentencers, the principles and legal guidelines they rely upon and the types of sentences they can (or must) hand down in different types of cases. We use the sentencing of rioters and community sentences as case studies to apply the general principles of sentencing, then conclude the course by assessing the impact that Covid-19 has had on the criminal justice system.

Course aims:

- To explore with students the substance and modes of legal regulation, including human rights principles, that have come to govern the criminal justice system in the recent decades.160
- To examine in detail the routine practices and decision-making that animates how power is wielded by key decision-makers in the criminal justice system, specifically police, prosecutors, and judges.160
- To familiarise students with contemporary theories and principles that are used by scholars to critically analyse the criminal process and specific practices within it.160
- To critically engage with empirical studies of the law-in-action, in addition to the case law analysis students will likely be familiar with from their LLB.

Topics by Week

1. The Criminal Justice System in England and Wales
2. In the Community: What Do Police Do and Why Do They Do It?
3. In the Station: Police Practices and Case Construction
4. Bringing the Case: Prosecutorial Discretion and Victims' Rights
5. In Court: The Criminal Courts and Legal Representation
6. Reading Week
7. Sentencing Rationales: Aims, Principles and Policies
8. Sentencing Practices: Discretion and Guidelines
9. Sentencing in Turbulent Times: Rioters
10. Community Sentences
11. The Impact of Covid-19 on the Criminal Justice System

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week, in the form of a two hour seminar. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of term. Seminars include small group discussion and full class discussions, as well as practical exercises in which you are tasked with advising fictional clients or performing the role of sentencing judges. I will begin the seminar with some introductory remarks, usually outlining the topic or setting out its legal or political context. There are PowerPoint slides which will be uploaded on the Course's Moodle webpage in advance of each seminar, as well as lectures slides and recordings from previous years. We will work in and out of these slides during the seminar.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a 1500-word literature review.

Indicative reading: There is textbook reading, the material and topics assigned are designed to be as contemporary and engaging as possible, so the course supplements these texts with more recent articles or chapters that are particularly helpful or insightful. Sanders, Young and Burton's Criminal Justice is a leading text: it is informative and offers sharp, critical analysis but can be a bit too basic in places. The 5th edition of Campbell, Ashworth and Redmayne's The Criminal Process (2019) is very good and can be accessed via OUP's Law Trove. The standard sentencing text for England and Wales is: Ashworth and Kelly (2022) Sentencing and Criminal Justice (7th ed., Hart) and S. Easton and C. Piper (2016) Sentencing and Punishment: The Quest for Justice (4th ed., Oxford: OUP) is also good. Most of our readings are articles in journal e.g. British Journal of Criminology (BJ Crim), the Criminal Law Review (Crim LR) and the Journal of Law and Society (J. Law & Soc) and chapters in edited collection (various readings come from the sixth edition of the Oxford Handbook of Criminology). The course is designed to give students the time, support and intellectual freedom to read and research issues for themselves. The Summative Assessments, will after all, be testing students ability to read broadly, but purposefully, in order to critically evaluate a topic and advance a clear argument.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

LL293

Tax and Tax Avoidance

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Blackwell

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Accounting and Finance and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Taxation is a topic that has throughout history pervaded political debate and is encountered in every area of life. Taxation was one of the very first subjects to be taught at LSE. The teaching of tax law as an academic subject started at LSE, where it was introduced by Professor GSA Wheatcroft in 1957.

The syllabus is set out below, although there is some variation of topics selected from year to year, depending on the focus of current debate, and in the order of topics.

- The first term of the course begins by looking at the tax administration system in the UK. The remainder of the first term focuses on a technical legal approach to tax. Using a mixture of legislation and case law we assess liability to UK tax on (i) employment income; (ii) business income; and (iii) capital gains. The term concludes by looking at 'international tax', ie the liability to tax where an individual or company is potentially subject to the tax laws of several jurisdictions.
- The second term of the course focuses on tax avoidance looking at questions such as: What is tax avoidance and how does it differ from tax planning? What strategies do individuals and companies adopt to avoid tax? How do judges respond to tax avoidance through anti-avoidance doctrines and rules of interpretation and to what extent is that compatible with the judicial role? How effective can legislative responses to tax avoidance be and what are the limitations on such responses? How can companies be fairly taxed in the digital economy? How have public attitudes to tax avoidance changed over time? Should corporations behave 'responsibly' and pay their fair share of taxes, or are they obliged to do whatever they can to maximize shareholder returns? To what extent does professional ethics inform accountants and lawyers who advise on tax avoidance? On the course the approach to the subject includes a strong policy perspective. However, legal issues are still important. The UK tax code is long and complex. There are also many relevant cases that are required reading too. This course requires students to understand and apply difficult concepts and legislation. By taking this course you should develop the following skills and attributes (i) working with and analysing legislation; (ii) working with and analysing case law; (iii) research skills; (iv) communication skills; (v) professionalism.

Students taking this course should be prepared to use a variety of sources ranging from statute and case law to literature on public policy. The precise balance of materials used varies from topic to topic. All the readings set will be accessible and non-mathematical. NO COMPUTATION is required and no knowledge of any discipline other than law is required. The course is open to second and third year law students, and experience suggests that it is equally suitable for both years.

Teaching: This course will have two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. There will be a Reading Week in Week 6 of each term.

A variety of methods will be used within the weekly classes/seminars. This system is not suitable for students who favor passive lecture learning and regurgitation of facts. Student participation will be central. Assistance will be given with methods for statute-based work. Substantial preparation by students will form an integral part of the course.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce at least 2 formative assignments over the academic year.

Indicative reading: M.C. Blackwell 'The April 2019 loan charge' [2019] British Tax Review 240-257. https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract\_id=3434951

Assessment: Open-book Exam (100%, duration: 3.5 hours) in the summer exam period.

Selected 'Legislation' may be taken into the examination, with non-verbal markings only.

LL295

Media Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines freedom of speech and the legal and administrative regulation of the mainstream and social media. It centres on law and regulation in the UK, as influenced by European and international law.

The course opens with introductory lectures that introduce themes such as the 'media landscape', the sources and forms of media law (ethical, cultural and technological constraints, self-regulation, common law, statute, EC law and international law), and the rights and values that frame this area of law (free speech; privacy; impartiality; the protection of rights to a fair trial).

Thereafter, the course moves through three 'blocks' of study.

These blocks of study focus on (a) regulating content in defence of private interests (misuse of private information, data protection, confidentiality, copyright and defamation), (b) regulating content in defence of public interests (contempt and the integrity of justice; political diversity and impartiality; disinformation, fabrication and 'fake news'; offensive content; terrorism and national security), and (c) the control of journalistic newsgathering practices (risks to and protection of sources; technological circumvention of source protection; access to state information (Fol, and official secrets); open justice and access to courts and court documents; the regulation of the journalistic 'dark arts' (misrepresentation and subterfuge).

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Teaching will be conducted primarily through weekly two hour seminars and a recorded introductory lecture. Students will also receive supervision in respect of two short, assessed research papers. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit two formative essays or essay plans, one in MT one in LT, in support of the development of their summative coursework.

Indicative reading: Supporting texts for the course include Millar and Scott, Newsgathering: Law, Regulation and the Public Interest (Oxford University Press, 2016); Parkes and Mullis (eds) Gatley on Libel and Slander (13th edn, Sweet & Maxwell, 2021), Moreham and Warby (eds), Tugendhat and Christie: The Law of Privacy and the Media (3rd edn, Oxford University Press, 2016), and Barendt et al, Media Law: Texts, Cases and Materials (Pearson, 2013); Leveson, An Inquiry Into the Culture, Practices and Ethics of the Press: Report, HC 780, 2012. These and other materials relevant to the course are generally made available via the BLPES electronic resources or online.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the LT.

During the year, students must complete two 4,000 word research essays on themes set by or agreed with the course convenor. The grades achieved for these papers will each comprise 50% of the overall grade for the course.

Competition Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pablo Ibanez Colomo

Additional teachers: Dr Stavros Makris

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Competition is widely understood to be the best means to deliver better goods and services at lower prices. The point of competition law is to preserve the process of rivalry between firms, and, by doing so, to benefit consumers and society at large. A broad range of corporate strategies are subject to this field of law. For instance, competition authorities enforce the law against large multinational firms (such as Microsoft, Google, or Intel) that have the ability to influence market conditions and exclude smaller rivals. Competition authorities also have the power to block mergers and acquisitions that are capable of harming consumers (think of a merger creating a monopoly). Attempts by firms to avoid competing by means of secret arrangements (the so-called 'cartels') are another key area of enforcement. Competition law regimes have progressively become a major feature of legal systems around the world. They have long been applied in the US and Europe – including the UK – but have now been adopted (and/or are actively enforced), inter alia, in jurisdictions like Brazil, Chile, China, Hong Kong, India, Malaysia, Singapore and South Africa. Unlike other legal disciplines, the relevant provisions in all of these regimes are virtually identical in their form and substance. This is, in other words, a truly cosmopolitan field. After this module, you will be equipped to understand and practice competition law almost anywhere in the world.

After an introduction in which competition law is put in its economic and institutional context, this module will address the main substantive and procedural aspects of the discipline. Topics covered include the following:

- Anticompetitive agreements between firms (including cartels and distribution agreements).
- Abusive practices by dominant firms.
- Mergers and acquisitions, including both mergers between competitors and vertical and conglomerate transactions.

Teaching: This course will have three hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce at least two formative essays per term

Indicative reading: N. Dunne, A. Jones and B. Sufrin, EU Competition Law (Oxford: OUP, 7th ed, 2019); and H. Hovenkamp, The Antitrust Enterprise (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 2005).

Assessment: Online assessment (100%) in the ST.

LL301

Global Commodities Law

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

The course is historical and theoretical in nature. It deals in the main with events from the colonial period (c.1510-1960) as they relate to the history of international and transnational law.

It does not aim to prepare students to work in commodity trading nor to equip them with expertise in the contemporary law of commodity markets. (For topics in these areas, see LL202, LL203, LL253, or LL300). While this class is complementary to LL278, it is not necessary to have studied LL278 to take this class.

Course content: This course provides a critical introduction to the history of international law, with a focus on the colonial histories of Asia, Africa and the Americas. We will track the development of the production and consumption of raw materials, from their domestic origins to their marketization and circulation in global trade today. The histories of some principal commodities—spices, silver, sugar, coffee, rubber, oil—tell the story of today's global economy in microcosm. Their evolving regulation and exchange has provided the base for central elements of the contemporary international and transnational legal architecture. In exploring this history, we will touch on cross-cutting issues relating to some or all of the following: slavery, the law of the sea, human rights, trade law, environmental law, the laws of war, labour law, climate change and animal welfare law. We will also be looking at theories of consumption and production more generally, adopting a broad definition of 'commodity', drawn from Marxian and post-Marxist thought, to enrich our understanding and discussion of these topics. Our examination of emerging commodity markets will remain cognizant of the state-formation processes, international law developments, and trans-global networking entailed in their consolidation. We will also read and discuss theoretical and historical texts.

Summative assessment is through class presentation and dissertation work. Students will be expected to contribute regularly and often throughout the year and special emphasis is placed on producing a quality dissertation, critical in nature, extending into the theoretical and historical dimensions of contemporary international law problems. Lent Term in particular focuses on presentation and dissertation-writing with considerable time given over to individual feedback.

Following completion of the course, students can expect to have a broad understanding of the historical evolution of global law, with specific knowledge of how certain commodities have contributed to and shaped the most important international law challenges of our time. Through individual presentations and research projects students are expected to develop critical perspectives on aspects of the topics covered throughout the year as well as hone presentation skills.

On completion students should be able to demonstrate:

- A broad understanding of the historical rise in trade of global commodities and of its contribution to the development of international law, especially during colonial times.
- An awareness of intersecting legal issues relating to, for example: human rights, trade disputes, law of the sea, laws of war, environmental law, labour, animal welfare and illegal trade.
- An understanding of the impact that historical patterns of production and consumption of commodities around the world have had on contemporary international law structures.
- An appreciation of the critical theories that inform scholarly analysis of the global economy.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, in the form of a two hour seminar. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit one 2,000-word essay

Indicative reading: Fernand Braudel, The Perspective of the World (Civilization and Capitalism), 3 vols. trans. Sian Reynolds (Collins, 1984); Sarah Rose, For All the Tea in China (Arrow Books, 2010); Jean Baudrillard, The Consumer Society (Sage, 1998 [1970]); Duncan Kennedy (1985) 'The Role of Law in Economic Thought: Essays on the Fetishism of Commodities' 34 The American University Law Review 939-1001; Hugo Grotius, The Freedom of the Seas, or the Right Which Belongs to the Dutch to take part in the East Indian Trade [Mare Liberum], trans. Assessment: Essay (85%, 8000 words) in the LT and ST.

Project (15%) in the MT and LT.

Summative assessment will be in two parts:

- 85% for an 8,000 word long essay (proposal to be submitted in LT)
- 15% for participation in, and presentation of, a research project.

LL305

Jurisprudence

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Wilkinson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the LLB in Laws. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Philosophy, Politics and Economics and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: The aims of the course are: To introduce students to philosophical thinking about the law. To familiarise students with the main methodological, conceptual, and normative issues in the study of law and its legitimacy. To provide students with knowledge of some of the most influential legal and political philosophers and their theories of the state and law. To encourage and enable students to think about doctrinal legal questions from a philosophical and critical perspective. To help students to develop legal reasoning skills by training them in abstract, philosophical arguments. Some of the themes that the course covers are: the social contract tradition (Hobbes, Kant, Rawls, Rousseau); the democratic legitimacy of the state and its law; Marxism and critical theory; Arendt's political theory and its implications for law; methodology in jurisprudence; natural law; legal positivism; the rule of law and legality; the use and significance of principles in adjudication and legal reasoning.

Teaching: This course will have a minimum of two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term in the form of a lecture (every week) and one hour class. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write at least one essay per term.

Indicative reading: Students are provided with outlines and readings for topics discussed in the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. For some introductory and background reading see: S. Veitch, E. Christodoulidis, and M. Goldoni, Jurisprudence: Themes and Concepts (3rd. ed), Routledge 2018; J.E. Penner and E. ## LL342

International Protection of Human Rights

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Theodora Christou

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course should be taken in the third year (see prerequisites). It is capped at 25 students.

Pre-requisites: Students need to have already taken and done well in a course in Public International Law or in Civil Liberties Law.

Course content: This course aims to provide a comprehensive and analytical account of the application of human rights standards in international law, and the operation of the existing international machinery for the protection of human rights. The course engages with both the theory and practice of human rights law and, in that process, some of the most vexing issues facing us today will be considered. What is the scope of the right to privacy in a digital age? What's the geographical scope of a state's human rights obligations? How does human rights law apply in war? What are the human rights obligations of corporations in a globalized landscape? How do human rights inform responses to modern slavery? What rights do asylum seekers have when they are fleeing conflict? Does existing law adequately protect women's rights or indigenous peoples? What is the role of human rights law in achieving the sustainable development goals?

The law of human rights reflects attempts made internationally to articulate basic legal standards for the protection of individuals and groups in their relations with the state, and to use the authority of international law, institutions, and procedures, to secure compliance with such standards. Human rights law is a modern phenomenon; but it has an ancient lineage. Some account of its evolution is given, from natural rights, civil liberties, the history of minorities protection, and the progressive development of human rights in public international law since 1945.

However, the major part of the course relates to post-1945 events concerning the protection of human rights. A section of the course deals with the role and reform of the United Nations to promote and secure the observance, on a universal basis, of international standards of human rights. The development of important legal standards (such as those of non-discrimination) is traced; and the work of various UN bodies in applying and promoting human rights is analyzed.

Comparisons are also drawn with regional attempts to promote and protect human rights, with the European system, the Inter-American system and the African system receiving special attention as regards their treaties, their institutions, procedure, and case-law.

By the end of the course students should have a good understanding of the substantive content of contemporary human rights and of the existing and alternative means available for protecting these rights and fundamental freedoms.

Extensive use is made of relevant case law, of the Civil and Political Covenant, the European Convention, the American Convention, the African Charter, and the International Court of Justice; and particular rights (such as those of persons belonging to minorities or indigenous peoples, the right to life, the prohibition of torture, the right to a fair trial, family life, and the fundamental freedoms) are studied in considerable detail.

Teaching: This course will have two hours of teaching content each week in Michaelmas Term and Lent Term, in the form of a two hour seminar. This course includes a reading week in Weeks 6 of Michaelmas Term and Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: R. Smith, International Human Rights; Ilias Bantekas and Lutz Oette, International Human Rights Law and Practice.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL398 Half Unit

Half-Unit Dissertation on an approved legal topic

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is available to students in Year 3. It may be taken in Year 2 in exceptional circumstances with permission of the Departmental Tutor. This course cannot be taken in the same year as LL399.

Course content: The half-unit dissertation should be taken in Year 3 but in exceptional circumstances permission may be sought to take it in Year 2.

Students wishing to do either a full or half-unit dissertation should first consult their Academic Mentor in the preceding Summer Term about:

- 1 whether a dissertation is a suitable option for the student;
- 2 the particular dissertation topic;
- 3 who might be an appropriate dissertation supervisor.

Because this option requires considerable independent study, it is generally not advisable to opt to write a full-unit dissertation unless the student has been achieving marks of an upper second class standard. The dissertation subject must be of a suitable academic character that has not already or will not have been explored in depth in any taught course taken by the student but is related to subjects taught in the School.

In light of discussions with their Academic Mentor, a student wishing to pursue this option should approach a potential supervisor for approval. Once they have their supervisor's approval, students should select the relevant dissertation course on LFY.

They will then need to complete the 'Dissertation topic approval form' (available on LLB Dissertation Moodle page) which needs to be signed off by the student's proposed Dissertation Supervisor, Academic Mentor and the Chair of Examinations. This should be submitted to the LLB Admin Team by the end of Week 4 of Michaelmas Term, 16.00.

Including the initial meeting, students will have four support meetings with their supervisor to guide them through the research process as follows:

- 1 One initial meeting to establish the broad topic.
- 2 A second meeting to agree a title, review an outline and see an initial bibliography.
- 3 A third meeting to discuss progress and difficulties (optional for half-unit essays).
- 4 A fourth meeting to give feedback on progress to date, to take place before the end of the Lent Term.

In order for this feedback meeting to be of use, students will need to have made substantial progress with the preparation of a draft dissertation by the middle of the Lent Term. It is the student's responsibility to arrange these meetings with the supervisor.

Dissertations are normally submitted on the first day of the Summer Term of the academic session in which the dissertation is being written. There is discretion for an additional oral examination on the subject-matter of an essay which "may extend to cover the wider background aspects of the essay".

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT.

Beyond the one-to-one sessions held with the dissertation supervisor there is no formal teaching. However, there is a one hour session held in the Michaelmas term for all half-unit and full-unit dissertation students to orient them to the requirements of writing a dissertation.

Indicative reading: There is no essential reading as such, but there is a dedicated moodle site for the LLB dissertation options.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL399

Full-unit Dissertation on an approved legal topic

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students. This course is available to students in Year 3 only. It cannot be taken in the same year as LL398.

Course content: The full-unit dissertation can only be taken in the third year when students are better prepared for it.

Students wishing to do either a full or half-unit dissertation should first consult their Academic Mentor in the preceding Summer Term about:

- 1 whether a dissertation is a suitable option for the student;
- 2 the particular dissertation topic;
- 3 who might be an appropriate dissertation supervisor.

Because this option requires considerable independent study, it is generally not advisable to opt to write a full-unit dissertation unless the student has been achieving marks of an upper second class standard. The dissertation subject must be of a suitable academic character that has not already or will not have been explored in depth in any taught course taken by the student but is related to subjects taught in the School.

In light of discussions with their Academic Mentor, a student wishing to pursue this option should approach a potential supervisor for approval. Once they have their supervisor's approval, students should select the relevant dissertation course on LFY. They will then need to complete the 'Dissertation topic approval form' (available on LLB Dissertation Moodle page) which needs to be signed off by the student's proposed Dissertation Supervisor, Academic Mentor and the Chair of Examinations. This should be submitted to the LLLB Admin Team by the end of Week 4 of Michaelmas Term, 16.00.

Including the initial meeting, students will have four support meetings with their supervisor to guide them through the research process as follows:

- 1 One initial meeting to establish the broad topic.
- 2 A second meeting to agree a title, review an outline and see an initial bibliography.
- 3 A third meeting to discuss progress and difficulties (optional for half-unit essays).
- 4 A fourth meeting to give feedback on progress to date, to take place before the end of the Lent Term. In order for this feedback meeting to be of use, students will need to have made substantial progress with the preparation of a draft dissertation by the middle of the Lent Term. It is the student's responsibility to arrange these meetings with the supervisor.

Dissertations are normally submitted on the first day of the Summer Term of the academic session in which the dissertation is being written. There is discretion for an additional oral examination on the subject-matter of an essay which "may extend to cover the wider background aspects of the essay".

Teaching: 1 hour of lectures in the MT.

Beyond the one-to-one supervision sessions held with the student's dissertation supervisor there is no formal teaching as such. However, a one hour session will be held in the Michaelmas term for all full-unit and half-unit dissertation students to orient them to the dissertation requirements.

Indicative reading: There is no essential reading as such. There is a moodle site dedicated to the LLB half and full-unit dissertations.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 15000 words) in the ST.

Students can take this course in any year of their studies.

Pre-requisites: Although an A-level pass or equivalent in Literature is useful, it is not an absolute requirement (especially for General Course students).

Course content: a) Literary treatment/projection of the aspects of ethics, focusing on the classical ideas of Aristotle and Kant, Schopenhauer, and Nietzsche, developed in modern times by Sartre, Lacan, Bernard Williams and Michel Foucault. The course will draw on a range of themes arising from the interface between literary and philosophical studies and will explore such issues as the objectivity of moral reasoning (the question whether the practices that are traditionally and factually legitimated by religion, law or politics are indeed worthy of recognition); the spiritual crisis of the modern world (desire, guilt and innocence); technological omnipotence versus determinism; and the illusion of liberty in a tolerant democracy based on consensus. It will also be concerned with such questions as whether philosophy and literature, when combined, can achieve more than the sum of the two parts.
b) The course is based on a carefully chosen range of short stories from world literature (including such authors as Kafka, Murakami, Kundera, Borges, Bessie Head, Isabel Allende etc.) where there is either a direct allusion to or a strong parallel with the key ethical issues.
c) Related trips to galleries and theatre productions during the year.
d) Use of archive recordings of authors, and video.
e) Students encouraged to draw upon background in their main discipline, and to read widely.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Structured activities during the reading week in the MT and LT.

Revision workshops and tutorials in the ST.

This course has reading weeks in week 6 of Michaelmas and Lent terms.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Literary texts: Bashevis Singer The Spinoza of Market Street; Franz Kafka In The Penal Colony; Isabel Allende The Schoolteacher's Guest; Thomas Mann Death in Venice; Jorge-Luis Borges Blue Tigers; Haruki Murakami The Ice Man; Jean-Paul Sartre The Wall; Guy de Maupassant The Model; Heinrich Böll To Work or not to Work; Bessie Head A Power Struggle.

Society and Language: Linguistics for Social Scientists

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Skrandies PEL.6.01f

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Course content: The course will introduce students to key (socio) linguistic concepts (semantic and pragmatic meaning, discourse, register, genre, dialect, idiolect, sociolect) employed in the analysis of language use as a social process. Students will explore the reciprocal relationship between language and specific social contexts and structures (class, gender, ethnicity), and study the role that language plays in the creation, maintenance and change of social relations and institutions. Important themes are changing attitudes to language and the prestige afforded to particular languages and language varieties. The use of language for academic purposes will be analysed, as will be situations of language contact, multilingualism and the role of translation in intercultural and international communication. The implications and consequences for less widely used languages of the emergence of English (and other widely spoken languages) as global lingua francas will be outlined and discussed.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of seminars and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Two hours per week, featuring: (a) Presentations on a range of concepts and themes; (b) classes including students' presentations; (c) revision workshops. Students on this course will have a reading week in Week 6 of MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Short essays, linguistic analyses, presentations.

Indicative reading:

- Edwards, John (2013). Sociolinguistics: A Very Short Introduction. Oxford: Oxford University Press
- Mesthrie, Rajend (ed) (2011). The Cambridge Handbook of Sociolinguistics, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press

Language Studies Dissertation

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olga Sobolev and Dr Neil Mclean

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Language, Culture and Society. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: The dissertation builds on first and second year linguistics or literature options offered by the Language Centre. These options require students to complete research tasks and projects as part of their coursework. Students' dissertation topics will be expected to reflect their study of appropriate options in intercultural communication, sociolinguistics or literature in their first and second years.

Course content: The dissertation will have two elements. These are the dissertation text of 7,000 words in the target language and a viva in English. Students' research questions will explore an area of linguistic or literary study or theory introduced during students first two years on the BSc in Papers 4 and 8. In addition to these courses, students will have completed SO201 and research projects written in their target language as part of their LS4 coursework. The dissertation will build on these learning experiences.

The dissertation will provide the opportunity to carry out an extended independent research project in the target language, and to present the findings of this study in two formats. The first is the text of 7,000 words written in the target language and following academic conventions in that language. The dissertation will contain the following core elements:

Literature review demonstrating the student's ability to work with a variety of sources in the target language, and justifying their research interest / niche.

Methodological framework, based on their first and second year grounding in systematic analysis within linguistic research or literary theory, and the research methods training offered in the Department of Sociology.

Original analysis of primary or secondary data specific to the topic.

The second format is the viva, during which the student will present and discuss their work with their main language teacher and a second member of the Language Centre who teaches either linguistics or literature.

Teaching: 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 8 hours of workshops in the LT.

Students will attend fortnightly dissertation workshops. In Michaelmas term, these will focus on the design of their project and data collection and analysis, in Lent term they will focus on presenting their findings. Students will also have two individual supervision meetings each term.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 2 essays and 1 presentation in the LT.

Indicative reading: This will depend on the dissertation topic. Students will be guided by their supervisor.

Assessment: Dissertation (70%, 7000 words) and presentation (30%) in the ST.

Mandarin in the Global Workplace

This information is for the 2022/23 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hua Xiang PEL.6.01B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations and Chinese. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: The students should have completed their third year abroad in China.

Course content: The linguistic focus will continue to advance students' receptive and productive skills, as well as to develop their mediation skills (translation and interpretation skills) in order to expand students' coherent and detailed subject knowledge into vocabulary, syntactic (semantic) structures and pragmatic usages associated with International Relations discourse.

The course will also target improving students' analytical and critical thinking abilities to evaluate one or more aspect of culture, history, geography, politics, social and economic structures in Chinese societies, using and improving intercultural and transferable skills. This will ultimately ensure students' autonomous problem solving ability and key/generic skills within a structured environment. The ultimate aim of this course is to help students to establish the effective communication between English and Chinese in international relations contexts, both orally and in writing, and therefore to improve their professional competence employability.

COMMUNICATIVE CONTENT:

The course is focused on the following communicative functions:

- Providing critical reasoning.
- Giving coherent description and logical comment.
- Participating constructively in discussion or debate.
- Exchanging specific information in international relations contexts: international law (such as human rights), international conventions and international organisations.
- Assessing the relevance and importance of the ideas of others.
- Reading and summarising texts from newspapers, journals, TV news and radio broadcasting.
- Competitive translation and interpretation skills on international relation topics.
- Writing essays to discuss issues with International Relations elements.
- Fostering intercultural awareness and understanding.
- Adopting a non-Eurocentric perspective.

Teaching: 22 hours of classes in the MT. 22 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.
